Others like Phelps have also commented on the diabolical role of the Vatican as well as the ultimate religious henchmen, the Jesuits, include:

"No political event or circumstance can be evaluated without the knowledge of the Vatican's part in it. And no significant world situation exists in which the Vatican does not play an important explicit or implicit role," said Avro Manhattan, Protestant Knight of Malta and English historian in a 1960 book, "The Vatican And World Politics."

"The Jesuits offer the world at large a system of theology by which every law, Divine and human, may be broken with impunity, and by which the very Bulls of Popes may be defied. It is a ghastly religion; it is a religion to be abhorred by all honest and honorable men," said M. F. Cusack, "Converted Nun of Kenmare,

The Black Pope".

"The Jesuits laugh at us; and during their hilarity, the rattlesnake is coiled at our feet, climbing to strike us in the heart," said Edwin A. Sherman, American Shriner/ Freemason in "The Engineer Corps Of Hell".

Texas City British Petroleum Employee Heard "Strange Abort Signal" on Local Radio Station The Morning Army Intel Officer Predicted Nuclear Strike At Plant BP employee also said "other strange events" occurred, leaving her "nervous and on edge." Galveston Daily News follows up with story, finding WMD military support team was conducting a training session at a location near Texas City.

3 Feb 2006

By Greg Szymanski

An employee at the British Petroleum (BP) plant in Texas City, Texas, said she's "nervous and on edge" since reports surfaced last week by a former Army Intelligence officer that the plant was targeted for a nuclear attack by the "enemy within" the U.S. government.

Although the threat never materialized on its anticipated date of Jan. 31, the employee who wished to remain anonymous for fear of losing her job, said other "suspicious and strange events" occurred on the target date and in the days that followed, making her believe the "attack may have been subverted" due to public attention drawn by the initial reports.

"We originally had a plant evacuation scheduled for Monday and Tuesday on the 30th and 31st, but it was strangely cancelled after the first reports surfaced about the possible explosion," said the anonymous BP worker, who also said at least 400 plant workers were recently moved to another office location in Texas City.

"OSHA is now at the plant and there is a sign at the plant saying the evacuation drill has been rescheduled between Feb. 1 and Feb. 8. Yes, I am nervous and no I don't believe recent reports from the government which say not to worry and no threats have been reported."

The employee said another "very strange" occurrence took place at 6:30 am on the morning of Jan. 31 when she was listening to 103.7 FM on her car radio as she drove to work.

"I swear to God this happened," said the worker, whose voice still shaking as she told the story days later. "I was listening to a news report on the FM station and the newscaster was reading a story about the incredible Exxon/Mobil oil profits. While he was reading the numbers, there was a strange sound of a siren coming from the background of the broadcast with a lady saying 'abort, abort, abort.' Now what was that all about? Was it sometime of code to tell other people what was going on?"

The Galveston radio station where the broadcast emanated was unavailable for comment, regarding the strange sequence of events during the 103.7 FM reported by the BP worker.

However, according to Capt. May, the broadcast may have been a signal to others involved in the nuclear attack that it was being aborted.

"We caught them putting out an abort code by using the media. This is how the Illuminati works," said Capt. May, who is convinced the enemy within our government communicates by using a complex Illuminati number system, the most common being combinations of 1, 3, 9.

"We may very well have stopped a nuclear attack by the Bush Boys by sounding the red alert. And that morning the abort code may have been given out as everything in the broadcast, including the numbers used for the Exxon profits, the radio station call numbers and even the time of the broadcast point to the Illuminati number code."

Regarding the complex number system, Capt. May is referring to 103.7 FM adding up to 11, as well 6:30 am, the time of the broadcast, adding up to nine and the numbers used in the Exxon profits during the newscast suspiciously adding up to nine as well.

"They use the media and if you know what to listen for, they really are telling the world what they plan to do next," said Capt. May, adding he feels he has "pretty well broken their code" giving him a leg up in the info war going on between the Illuminati and the patriots who consider them America's No. 1 enemy.

"Information I have uncovered with my other cyber-warriors called the Ghost Troop has already averted two other attacks at Texas City, the most recent being July 28, 2005. And I think we may have just stopped another one on Jan. 31."

Last week, the Arctic Beacon first reported the Jan. 31 threat of a nuclear explosion, after Capt. May alerted media outlets of the impending threat, a threat ignored or thought by many to be nothing more than wild conspiracy theories.

Capt. May, however strongly disagrees. Pointing the nuclear finger directly at factions within the U.S government, he believes these same factions also were behind 911 and the Oklahoma City bombing.

"People have to wake-up, put their egos aside and realize these guys play for keeps," added Capt. May. "The same people that criticize my methods for predicting dates are the very same people who agree with me about everything else, including the government causing 911 and Oklahoma City as well as 7/7. Just remember, the Madrid bombings occurred exactly 911 days after 911."

In recently targeting Texas City as the next target, Capt May said it's imperative to try and "warn people were the enemy is striking next" instead of passively waiting for the "next shoe to fall."

And Texas City resident, minister Jon Watkins, took Capt. May's warnings seriously from the outset, saying he immediately notified local authorities, the local Texas City branch of Homeland Security and the FBI, taking a "better be safe than sorry" position.

"Last week, I did notice at least 11 different types of law enforcement vehicles in the Texas City police parking lot, something that is very strange here," said Watkins. "I alerted everybody, including the Galveston City Daily News."

And Feb. 2 TJ Aulds of the Galveston paper followed up with a story, citing the initial Arctic Beacon article, as well as checking FBI, Homeland Security and local who all reported the threats were a false alarm.

In the story, Shauna Dunlap, a spokesman for the FBI, said that there are "no credible or corroborated threats to the area."

Although authorities dismissed Capt. May's "red alert," the Galveston paper reported people driving down the Galveston Seawall Boulevard noticed "unmarked black trucks and sport utility vehicles bearing government license plates near crews setting up what appeared to be satellite or radar gear on the beach.

"The crews were wearing shirts," the article continued "embossed with the words, 'Weapons of Mass Destruction Civil Support Team,' a branch of the U.S. Defense Department."

Coincidentally one day prior to the Galveston article, the New York Times for the first time revealed the use and establishment of the WMD Support Team in an unrelated article, saying the military unit had been recently formed to combat terrorist activity throughout the country.

But the Galveston story was quick to point out Texas City homeland security officials, including local Director Bruce Clawson, said the Arctic Beacon story and the arrival of the Weapons of Mass Destruction team were "little more the coincidental training exercises that may have been blown out of proportion."

"It's more than coincidence," said Capt. May Thursday on Greg Szymanski's radio show called Nightly Edition of the Investigative Journal. "We're trying to alert the American people of the next 911 and my intentions have always been to save and protect innocent lives by trying to head off the Bush Boys before they strike next."

Besides the WMD training exercise taking place on the Galveston beach, members of the military unit said they were participating in a series of seminars at the nearby Galveston San Luis Hotel & Conference Center, located near to where the unit had set up its radar equipment.

Blood Money Part IV: The Illegal Government Arms Trade. When You Try To Take Away 'The Toys of the Big Boys,' They Play For Keeps

Two key figures who knew too much about arms sales to Iran and Iraq were most likely targets of government hit squads. While politicians illegally profit, people who get too close to their 'cash cow' die trying to tell the truth.

2 Feb 2006

By Greg Szymanski
Part IV

Although 13 years apart, two key figures about to blow the lid off the illegal arms sales to Iran and Iraq both turned up dead, one a reported suicide and the other shot three times to the back of the head outside his Brussels apartment.

Both deaths have drawn media attention, but none of the reports have ever led to a serious investigation.

The closest any brave prosecutor ever got to getting at the truth was a 2003 report that a Belgium prosecutor was considering reopening a probe into the March 22, 1990, murder of Canadian born Dr. Gerald Bull, founder of Space Research Corporation (SRC).

But after reports surfaced that there had been Mossad/CIA/MI6 involvement in Bull's murder, the Belgium prosecutor's never went any farther amid speculations that he was about to be killed himself if he pursued the investigation.

Before the investigation was quashed, the following is English translation of what appeared in a Belgium magazine about the initial report.

"On Friday, the Belgian daily Derniere Heure published a report saying Belgian police and the State Prosecutor have information from a "reliable source" that identified a Mossad agent, a member of an "elite unit," as one of Bull's assassins. The report said the source of the information is in a Central American country "previously controlled by Britain" the country is most likely Belize. The information source said a piece of jewelry or a bracelet was taken from Bull and kept by the suspect.

"Members of Bull's family and investigative reporters suggested that Bull was in contact with members of Israel's intelligence services, and provided them with inside information about the Iraqi super-gun project.

"One theory held that the Mossad killed him for failing to provide accurate information about the Iraqi program to extend the range of Scud missiles and improve their accuracy."

Other theories floated around that Bull was killed on the direction of UK and U.S. officials concerned he was ready to "spill the beans" about the illegal arms trade, pinning high-level politicians with receiving millions in illegal kickbacks on the arms contracts.

Whatever the case, it was obvious Bull knew too much and had to be eliminated, his murder sending a clear message to others like him either shut up or expect the same fate.

Although Bull was a "hot government item," how deep did he really go into the murky waters of the worldwide arms trade?

From the outset, Bull's involvement of the Iraqi arms dealing was directly responsible in the late 1970s for the development of advanced guns as well as full-bore and base-bleed ammunition technologies within South Africa.

Years after, in the mid 1980's, he brought more advanced expertise to Iraq. A key product of Bull's endeavors, the G-5 155mm self-propelled howitzer has surfaced in original form or similar weapons within Chile, Austria, Germany, Belgium and Iraq.

A 1987 report about Bull in a Canadian Defense Weekly publication had this to say about the gunned-down arms whistle blower:

"In 1980 on June 16, Bull was convicted on criminal charges in a Rutland, Vermont court for smuggling gun barrels and ammunition to South Africa. He later pleaded guilty in Montreal, on August 14 of the same year, to violating U.N. arms sanctions also against South Africa. The Quebec court fined SRC $55,000.

"The Canadian convictions involved "shipments of howitzer parts" both directly and indirectly to South Africa. On the U.S. charges, Bull eventually served a short prison sentence in the United States and paid several thousands of dollars in fines."

And after he was murdered in his Brussels apartment, a series of revelations tied him and his company, SRC, to voluminous arms dealings with Iraq, including development of the fabled Iraqi 600 kilometer-range, forty-meter-barrel "Supergun".

Evidence of the monstrous gun surfaced, but British officials quickly tried to distance themselves from involvement with Bull, who was depicted as a renegade when in fact he was acting on behalf both the UK and U.S. governments.

The Canadian Defense magazine provided further details of the weaponry sold to Iraq, but what the publication failed to mention was that all the sales were done with UK and U.S. government complicity in blatant violation of UN embargoes.

Here is the Canadian report:

It was later found that SRC's technology development ties with the Iraqis included the Scud B, extensive 155mm gun and ammunition development, as well as 210mm self-propelled howitzers manufactured in facilities north of Baghdad, and the overall 155mm GC-45 artillery system.

"Other developments that Bull is believed to have been helping Iraq with included the amazing 1000/405mm (1000mm smooth bore sabot down to 405mm) Ultra Long Range (ULR) gun with a 2.32 meter long shell having a mass of around 1,800 kilograms. (See The Wednesday Report, April 18 and August 15.)

"Iraq first acquired the G-5 155mm artillery piece in the early 1980s from South Africa. Later in 1986-87, a time when Bull's influence increased in Baghdad, Saddam Hussein, who was at the time angry with South Africa, switched to Austria as a principal supplier. The first of Iraq's G-5s were built by South African firm Lyttelton Engineering Works of Verwoerdberg and sold through Pretoria's roguish export firm, Armscor.

"The original gun barrels were built by Krykor while Summerset Chemicals (both of South Africa) built the explosive charges for the gun. With technology transfers from South Africa and later Austria, coupled with Gerry Bull's direct assistance, the Iraqis now have the complete manufacturing capacity for powder, shells and barrels. It is estimated that Iraq can manufacture 1,000 replacement barrels per year.

"Today (1987) more than two hundred G-5 155mm howitzers exist within the arsenals of Iraq. The gun is capable of firing a shell some 40 kilometers, greater than any modern artillery of its type. The G-5 and its ammunition employ one of Bull's favorite techniques. The accuracy of the gun is greatly enhanced by firing base-bleed ammunition. Extra powder is burned at the base of the projectile as it exits the barrel, thus stabilizing the shell. The technology of the gun is brilliant."

So Bull was erased from the picture and depicted as an outlaw arms dealer at a time when investigations were heating up regarding the illegal deals brokered with Iran and Iraq by the UK and U.S. governments.

But what about microbiologist and weapon's inspector, Dr David Kelley, who was said to have committed suicide in 2003? In regards to Dr. Kelley, two serious questions need to be asked and whether the answers have any serious bearing on his untimely death?

What did Dr. Kelley know about the supply by the UK of biological and chemical materials and defense equipment to Iraq before the start of the first Gulf War?

And what did he know in relation to whether Iraq possessed WMD's in 2003 at the time the present government asserted that such a threat justified their invasion of Iraq?

It must be remembered that Dr. Kelly was the senior microbiologist at Porton Down at the time the sale of biological cultures to Iraq was authorized in 1985-6. Over the period 1985-7, Porton Down supplied Iraq with bacterial cultures, including C. botulinum and B. anthracis and a formal admission of the role of Porton Down was also published in 1992.

These bacterial cultures were then used to mass produce biological weapons which were deployed by Iraq on Iran whose civilian population suffered massive casualties from the deployment of chemical weapons.

At the end of the first Gulf War in 1991, Dr Kelly joined the UN Weapons Inspector's team and over a period of seven years, he made a total of 37 trips to Iraq until the inspections ceased.

He was instrumental on every aspect of reporting and reported on the weapons arsenal and manufacture of biological weapons, including those financed by the United Kingdom and manufactured using UK expertise, cultures and equipment.

Being ideally placed to know of the existence of the weapons, and who supplied them, it might be thought these matters might have had some bearing on Dr Kelly's death. But, strangely, they were never investigated or even considered in any formal hearings held, most notably the Hutton enquiry.

In a notable report written in 2004 by Sir William Jaffray and another in 2003 by John Drewe, both men commented how important aspects known by Dr. Kelley may have led to his death, especially aspects concerning radioactive material sent to Iraq with UK and U.S. approval.

Drewe wrote:

"In addition to biological weapons, chemical precursors to anticholinesterase inhibitors and ammunition, it has been established that at least one contract entailed supplying Iraq with radioactive material. The listed material is not plutonium or a fissile isotope of uranium, but consists of radiocaesium (Cs-137) in significant quantities. The documentation indicates that the shipment was stored at the Astra Defence Systems depot at Faldingworth and then air freighted to Iraq (Ref: 9).

"The contracts for the supply of radiocaesium from the UK to Iraq by companies such as Allivane International Limited are on record. Such contracts demonstrate the huge quantities of prohibited material, including nerve-gas precursors, bacteria and culture media sold by the UK to Iraq over the period 1982-88 (Ref: 10).

"A deposition from a former employee of Allivane has appended to its contracts and shipping records indicating that hundreds of curies of substances such as radiocaesium (Cs-137) and radioiodine (I-131) were shipped from the UK to Iraq (Ref: 11).

"A former employee of the Ministry of Defense who dealt with Allivane International (1983-86) has given a statement confirming that during this time the Ministry of Defense specifically authorized companies such as Allivane International to supply munitions to Iran and Iraq. Huge quantities of conventional ammunition, such as 155mm artillery shells, were delivered to Allivane from the depots of Royal Ordnance (Ref: 12).

"It must have been apparent to the government that this ammunition would be deployed by Iraq against Iran. It must also have been clear that the chemical weapons would also be used against Iran. For example, Iraq used nerve gas to kill thousands of Iranians in 1986 at the Shatt-al-Arab waterway. More than 5000 Kurds were killed in 1987 when Iraq deployed chemical weapons against the Kurds at Halabja. It must be asked what the UK officials who authorized the sale to Iraq of radioactive material thought it would be used for?"

Still today details about the deaths Dr. Kelley and Bull remain a guarded government secret, as do the secrets behind the larger issue of the UK and U.S. involvement in illegal weaponry sold to Iraq and Iran.

However, Sir William Jaffray's put a tidy but yet unsolved seal on the entire arms scandal and cover-up when he said in 2004:

"I am one of a group of persons who believe that the Thatcher government acted unlawfully by supplying large quantities of conventional, chemical and biological weapons to Iraq and by granting export credits to Iraq for the purchase of these weapons, as well as taking commissions from UK companies which participated in the business.

"Documents available include a set of memoranda from the Intelligence Service, internal correspondence between the Ministry of Defense and Foreign Office and commercial papers of the companies involved in supplying Iraq and records of export credits granted by the DTI.

"The UK Attorney General should prosecute the officials responsible for supplying weapons to Iraq. Foremost is Lord Levene of Portsoken who as Peter Levene and in his capacity as Director of Defense Procurement approved much of this unlawful trade."

Blood Money Part III: MI6 secret documents and Astra Commission Documents Reveal How Politicians Reaped Huge Profits Off Illegal Middle East Arms Sales

MI6 agent Sephan Kock fronts as a Midland Bank consultant to keep the arms deal to Iran and Iraq secret from the UK and U.S. public. Documents reveal high level British politicians guilty of selling illegal weapons eventually used against U.S. and British troops

1 Feb 2006

By Greg Szymanski
Part III

MI6 and CIA infiltration of the government's illegal arms trade is vital so plans go off without a hitch.

In the case of the shipments to Iraq and Iran starting in the early 1980's, Western politicians used numerous agents, but none were more important than MI6 agent Stephan Kock.

Former Astra Holdings PLC Chairman, Gerald Reaveley James, the head of a company used by Western politicians to bypass UN embargoes to get illegal arms to Iraq and Iran, exposed Kock's MI6 cover as a consultant working in Midland Bank's secret arms department, Midland and Industrial Trade Services (MITS), overseeing the financial operations for one of the main lending institutions.

James also had firsthand knowledge that the MITS office was staffed by numerous ex-intelligence officers, MI5 and MI6 agents and government-compromised bankers. At the time of the arms shipments to Iran, Midland and the Bank of Boston were Astra's main bankers and dominated by MI6 and CIA agents.

"Kock was also said to be head of Group 13, the government's assassination and dirty tricks squad according to Richard John Rainey Unwin, a close associate of Kock himself who was a contract MI6 agent and Consultant to Astra. Kock and Unwin, with Martin Laing Construction, negotiated the 2 billion Pound Malaysian defense deal before George Younger, the Defense Secretary even knew about of it," said James about his knowledge of Kock's shady dealings.

Besides James, several other arms whistle blowers called attention to Kock's undercover activities, alleging they also had firsthand knowledge during the 1980's he was representing himself as a consultant for Midland Bank.

Although hearsay evidence even from credible sources is often doubted, the following hard evidence should lay to rest any doubts to Kock's role and his assignment to make sure the arms deals went of "quietly and without a hitch," as well as making sure large "kickback commissions" got back to politicians in London and Washington unnoticed.

In a letter dated June 16, 1989, on Midland Bank stationery, sent from Kock to Mohammed Hashemi, a representative of the Iranian Defense Ministry and of Tagell UK Limited, a major company working with

Astra in the arms trade to Iraq and Iran, consultant Kock reassures Hashemi high level British officials, including Lord Peter Levene, were "making sure" the CATIC arms contract to the Middle East would "proceed smoothly."

"I am writing to thank you and your colleague, Mr. Dastjerdi, for the splendid hospitality last Tuesday, and to let you know the results of the enquiries I have made on your behalf. Let me assure you that the UK government at the highest possible level regards the contract with CATIC as important and has taken steps to endure that matters proceed smoothly to completion," wrote Kock in the business letter, a copy of which sent to the Arctic Beacon.

"The export license with CATIC as the consignee, reference 1/730.5790/89 will be returned to Tagell UK. My Defense Equipment Finance Department has received the financial documents and the two separate Tagell UK contracts (with CATIC and IMS) from Mr. Dastjerdi. I am in close contact with Peter Levene, who is charge of procurement at the Ministry of Defense. His advice is that the contract for the initial purchase of the PGS should be with IMS and not the manufacturer, ISC-Ferranti. It appears they will not continue trading.

"I will be on London on Monday 26 June to meet officers from the Defense Export Sales Organization. This should provide an excellent opportunity to discuss some of the other matters you raised on Tuesday and I would be glad if you would join us for lunch. We could meet at my London office at 1pm."

Kock signed the letter as a consultant, citing Lord Levene's sanction of the PGS to China and then to Iran. In a statement by Sir William Jaffray in 2004, he alleged firsthand knowledge that in 1991, Lord Levene authorized the supply of 1500 units of the Precision Guidance System (PGS) to CATIC of the People's Republic of China through a UK company, ISC-Ferranti, which collapsed in 1989.

The PGS was an inertial guidance system, which can be fitted to a missile to guide it accurately to its target. These units were ex-Ferranti stock and Hashemi, the representative of the Iranian Defense Industries (IDI), arranged with the MOD in London the onward supply to the P.R. China, and thence to Iran. The entire transaction has been fully documented, according to Jaffray, including the identities of the officials of IDI, and the sums of money paid via Iranian banks.

Further in a April 28, 1987 letter from Kock of Midland Bank PLC to the Secretary of State for Defense, George Younger, showing his key role in negotiating a top secret defense deal with Malaysia, arms which would eventually end up in Iran and Iraq.

Kock writes:

"I have for some months now been in close discussions with the Malaysian Ministry of Defense regarding a major project as yet classified as secret.

"The time has now come where we feel it very necessary to give you details of this major project which in our view hold significant importance, not only for British defense equipment manufacturer's, but strategically and politically to.

"In view of the official visit by the Malaysian Premier and is defense chiefs in June we would ask for a meeting as soon as convenient...

"We are in fact meeting the Chief of staff in London unofficially on the 12th of May as part of an ongoing dialogue. I have personally briefed the Director S.A.S. and he is as yet the only other person informed on the project."

Besides the correspondence explaining Kock's role in the Middle East arms deals, copies of an MI6 internal memo, tracking Kock's every move after his duties were completed, show just how concerned British intelligence was in the early 1990's to keep Kock silent and from talking to the press.

This secret intelligence service memo, obtained by the Arctic Beacon depicts, Kock as a longtime reliable agent, but at the time of the writing MI6 officials were concerned that he turned into somewhat of a loose canon.

"Kock has been an enthusiastic and effective agent. But in the last few years or so pressure of work seems to have affected him and he has developed a growing obsession about his personal security. He now seems to clamor for simultaneous contact with SIS and MI5 and his Special Branch and has become somewhat of an intelligence nuisance.

"His main role was a provider of (blacked out) but he also reported on the Defense industry. In addition he was used by the Joint section for Chinese targeting...

"Between September 1987 and January 1990 we met Kock periodically in London. For the most part, this contact was instigated by Kock and entailed him reporting on various arms-related matters...In October 1989 he volunteered information on the involvement of the Belgium company PRB, recently bought by Astra, in the supply of propellants for the Iraqi supergun project.

"This involvement antedated Astra's purchase of the company but we believe it relevant to the DTI inquiry into Astra which is referred to in the press. Elements of Kock's reporting were included in material about the "supergun circulated to government departments at the time by SIS.

"According to his account, Kock's role in relation to the Astra Holdings/PRB business was creditable...

"In January 1990 Kock was involved in a shooting incident outside his home in Scotland. Since that time we have not initiated contact with him, but we have from time to time seen him, at his insistence, because we seek to keep his goodwill and to preempt any other more damaging approaches, for example, to the press. While, for obvious reasons, we regard his judgment as unsound, we believe we need to keep his goodwill..."

It is obvious from the MI6 internal report that UK policy was to keep a lid on the illegal Iraqi and Iranian arms deals, as well as to conceal millions of hidden commissions on contracts which eventually funneled back into the pockets of high-level politicians on both sides of the Atlantic.

UK policy, as evidenced in a 1995 internal memorandum written by Hugh Savell close to the arms investigation, also outlined a concerted legal strategy to keep the contents of the Astra papers concealed from Parliament and the press, a strategy that to date has proved successful.

Below is a detailed list of some of the commissions from Astra Holdings PLC, referring to Tagell UK Ltd. And the offshore companies which UK and U.S. politicians have interests and connections. It should be noted that the payee-companies would then secretly funnel some of the money to greedy politicians whose tracks were completely covered by the complexity and location of the overseas companies accepting payment.

The following is a partial list, showing the enormous profits made by the illegal sale of weapons to Iran and Iraq, weapons eventually used against U.S. and UK soldiers. Also it should be noted that serious investigations need to take place, tracing the payee-companies listed in the documents below to the actual unscrupulous politicians and businessmen who illegally profited.

Editor's Note: Read the final part of the series tomorrow as the strange deaths of Dr. David Kelly and arms-businessman, Gerald Bull, are analyzed. The stunning conclusion reveals we are no closer today than we were in the 1980's of getting at the real culprits - The UK and U.S. governments - both guilty as sin for selling illegal weapons to Iran and Iraq.

Blood Money Part II: The Devil Is in The Details But Crooked Politicians Are Devious At Hiding Their Dirty Work in the Illegal Arms Sales To Iran And Iraq. The trail to find the "masters of evil" leads to Washington and London, as hundreds of thousands of innocents have died while killer Western politicians profit from the illegal arms trade.

Part II

The body count in the Middle East since the UK and U.S. supplied the area with illegal arms in the 1980's is staggering. The exact number is unknown, as official counts have been manipulated. But it's safe to say hundreds of thousands, mostly innocent men, women, children and elderly, have been needlessly slaughtered in barbaric fashion.

The battle in the Arab sand is, in fact, the ultimate testament of man's inhumanity to man.

It is also the ultimate testament of how UK and U.S. foreign policy has not facilitated peace, but instead provoked war by providing the very weapons that have kept the bloody conflict going on for decades.

But hard evidence to nail the "masters of evil" in the arms trade has always been hidden.

In fact, solid proof that high level U.S. and UK officials illegally profited from massive sales of biological, chemical and WMD weaponry to Iran and Iraq has always been conveniently swept under the rug by corrupt courts and a compliant media.

And these public servants acting without a conscience, serving evil not good, have given crooked Western politicians like Thatcher, Reagan, Bush, Blair, Rumsfeld and their many loyal minions a free ride to collect handsome commissions through "front companies" as well as a free ride to continue to do the devil's dirty work - to this very day - by selling illegal arms throughout the world.

Although flimsy evidence has surfaced in the past to nail the scoundrels, most of the incriminating evidence has been successfully buried by the White House and 10 Downing St., buried in the form of people "who knew too much and were about to talk" or through using MI6 and CIA muscle to hide or destroy incriminating documentation.

As the war against Iraq rages on today and politicians try to justify the Western attack, one significant factor is being kept secret - the Scott Report - a factor which known could put all the "masters of evil" behind bars.

In fact, several whistle blowers - two who may have been murdered - say "the smoking gun" that could blow the lid off the entire arms scandal relates directly to the Scott Report on the "Arms to Iraq" affair of the mid-90's and to those aspects that Sir Richard Scott omitted from his report submitted in the UK.

The report kept secret also was referred to as "proof positive" by both microbiologist Dr. David Kelley and Gerald Bull, two whistle blowers suspiciously killed for trying to go public about the details of how governments on both sides of the Atlantic provided Iraq and Iran with illegal weaponry.

And both the UK and U.S governments are still hiding these explosive documents in hopes the affair is ultimately forgotten with the passage of time. In fact, observers suggest that is why Kelley and Bull were killed, as they were getting too close to the ticking time bomb buried in the details of the Scott Report.

Further, savvy politicians realized if the details were ever made public it would mean the end to their scam and immediately expose how the Western public paid for the arms enabling Iraq to fight Iran during their long war of the 1980's, as well as showing how politicians profited handsomely.

Although much of the Scott Report is under lock and key, it was revealed how the UK in complicity with the U.S. was breaching UN embargo guideline regarding weapons supplied to Iraq. However, what remained hidden according to several whistle blowers, was the massive size of the breach and the financial trails implicating high level politicians.

However, according to whistle blower John Drewe, some of the "telling clues" to the secrets in the Scott Report have already entered the public domain.

"Some telling clues did enter the public domain. These were such events as the prosecution in 1992 of the directors of Matrix Churchill for breaching the UK arms embargo on supplying arms to Iraq, as described above," said Drewe. "After government lawyers connived to withhold evidence in several fabricated prosecutions which barely reached the public domain, directors were convicted and imprisoned. All later had their convictions quashed.

"The reports showing that they were acting on government instructions, and that what they had supplied was not in fact embargoed, were withheld from the defense. After these men and women had been convicted and served prison sentences, secret government memoranda came to light showing how their convictions had been secured by fabricating evidence - with the knowledge of prosecuting lawyers, including Alan Moses and Andrew Collins. It may be significant that lawyers such as Sir Alan Moses and Sir Andrew Collins, who were involved in these trials, were made judges and selected to preside over the trials of those with knowledge of the export of weapons to Iraq and Iran. Moses judged David Shayler (2003). Collins judged Mohammed Hashemi (1999), who organized the supply of Iran with munitions from America and the UK over the period 1979-91."

"Another skirmish which reached public awareness was the "Supergun" affair, as referred to above. Gerald Bull, a weapons scientist, founded the Space Research Corporation (SRC), which by 1985 was making a significant contribution to Iraqi weaponry, such as new types of gun and extended-range ammunition. In 1988 SRC started Project 839 ("Project Babylon"), the construction of a 1000mm artillery piece with a range of 700 km. The public became aware of this when executives of Walter Somers and Sheffield Forgemasters, companies involved in the manufacture of the gun barrels, were arrested in 1990. The aspect of the "Supergun" affair which attracted rather less media attention was what happened to Bull. He was murdered in Belgium in 1990."

Was Gerald Bull Killed For Giving This Sworn Statement, Among Other Sensitive Inside Information He Was To Reveal

Further, a sworn affidavit signed by Bull on Jan. 17, 1990, before his death in a bloody fashion, his body found with two or three bullet wounds to the back of the head, revealed how payments were made from the Iranian Defense Dept. to Sir Gordon Reese on behalf of former Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher with U.S. government complicity.

"In March, 1987, I had two meetings with John Cuckney, one of the advisors to Margaret Thatcher on the Iraqi contracts, personally arranged for the Midland International Trade Services (Defense Equipment Finance Department) to advance the loans for the project...Cuckney told me he had been authorized by the Prime Minister, to whom he reported directly.

"I should explain I was left in no doubt that Thatcher was also being briefed by Gordon Reese, who was advising her on the contracts with both Iran and Iraq...

"Cuckney arranged for Midland to advance SRC, via NM Rothschild and Galverston Securities, 60 percent of the cost of the first stage of Project 839. In November 1988, Midland entered into a contract with Amir Saadi to completely underwrite the purchase of the propellant from PRB for the said project. Herve de Carmoy having personally initiated negotiations. In 1988, de Carmoy moved from his post as Director of the International Banking Division to the Midland Bank to SGB and became Managing Director of Gechem owners of PRB. I was given assurance by de Carmoy in January 1989 that SGB would allow SRC to purchase PRB. (Details of Midland Bank and Amir Saadi negotiations contained in exhibit marked GVB 12).

"On Aug. 14, 1989, I was informed that Peter Levine, the director of defense, had personally intervened to prevent this acquisition by SRC. I telephoned Cuckney and explained the position. Cuckney assured me that the instructions came from Margaret Thatcher personally, after the United States government had made strong representations. I had advised Cuckney that he and the Thatcher family had received some of the largest payments from the Iraq contracts in order to secure future success of the projects. Cuckney then advised me there was a policy reappraisal. He said he would make sure the points I had raised were brought to the attention of the right people and that in the meantime I should avoid discussing these matters with anyone if I was not to prejudice my opinion."

Lord Peter Levene, Former British Defense Secretary made Lloyd's of London Chairman in 2002, Pivotal Role in the Illegal Arms Trade

According to credible UK sources, Peter Levene, now Lord Levene of Portspoken, made Lloyd's of London chairman in 2002, performed a top level and pivotal role in the illegal supply of weaponry to UN embargoed destinations from 1985 until after the first Gulf War. Observers note one unfortunate consequence of these illegal and clandestine arrangements was that the American and British soldiers sent to Gulf War I found themselves being attacked by weaponry made in Birmingham UK and plants across the U.S.

Levene denies the allegations like the other crooked politicians involved in the scheme. However, Sir William Jaffray of London in February of 2004 provided the following documentation, proving there is a reason to believe otherwise.

Jaffray's explosive comments point a strong finger at Lord Levene's role in the illegal arms trade, as well as his role in Lloyd's of London, in turn, protected against a massive investor fraud suit regarding withholding the devastating outcome of asbestos litigation about bankrupt the huge insurance carrier without proper investor disclosure.

Here is a portion of Jaffray's statements which have received little or no press attention or official investigation follow-up:

"In 1991, Levene authorized the supply of 1500 units of the Precision Guidance System (PGS) to CATIC of the People's Republic of China. A UK company, ISC-Ferranti, collapsed in 1989. The PGS was an inertial guidance system, which can be fitted to a missile to guide it accurately to its target. These units were ex-Ferranti stock and Mohammed Hashemi, the representative of the Iranian Defense Industries (IDI), arranged with the MOD in London the onward supply to the P.R. China, and thence to Iran. The entire transaction has been fully documented, including the identities of the officials of IDI, and the sums of money paid via Iranian banks. This state-of-the-art missile delivery system was secretly delivered to one of the world's most brutal theocracies. In 1991, Chinese and North Korean technicians modified the Iranian Scud II missiles to carry a warhead of 1000 Kg over a distance of 1500 Km with accurate guidance from the PGS supplied by the UK. A proportion of these units was shipped to N. Korea as part of the joint project. The Iranian Shooting Star missile, carrying a much larger warhead and with an increased range, also incorporates this PGS. It is the UK which is responsible for the ability of Iranian missiles to reach Israel and Saudi Arabia.

"The evidence that the UK supplied China and Iran with the PGS, and that this transaction was authorized by Peter Levene, has been concealed from the public. There is overwhelming evidence, running to hundreds of pages of documents, which demonstrates how effectively the facts have been hidden. This is exemplified by the Savill memorandum of 22 June 1995, stating that the MOD and DTI agreed on a policy that no information would be supplied to Parliament on the subject of weapons sold to foreign customers by Astra Defense Systems.

"Gerald Bull and Terence Byrne have both filed statements specifically alleging that the officials and politicians pocketed large sums of money, listed as 'commissions', on the sale of weapons to Iran and Iraq. One of the named officials is Peter Levene. One named politician is Margaret Thatcher. The allegations are very specific, and are echoed by the Iranians and Iraqis who paid the money into the offshore companies set up by relations of Levene and Thatcher.

"In autumn 2002, Peter Levene was put in charge of Lloyd's, a government appointment. He came equipped with deep knowledge of the arms business, if not the insurance business. After the catastrophe of the black hole arising from the export credit defaults on arms exports, the UK government needed an alternative source of credit to maintain its arms export business.

"It became evident that the government needed Lloyd's for political purposes. By 1995/96 the Treasury & Civil Service Committee had quietly dropped its inquiry into the losses incurred by Lloyd's. At this time, all 51 Conservative MPs with debts to Lloyd's had been written off, thus rescuing the Major government from collapse. Lloyd's had siphoned off some 34 million from other Names or investors. Fifteen MPs were saved from imminent bankruptcy. This matter was brought to the attention of Parliament in a letter written by opposition MP, Peter Hain (now Leader of the House of Commons), to John Major. Hain pointed out that the MPs had benefited from retrospective stop loss policies. This is of course embezzlement. Also implicated was Thatcher's Attorney-General, Sir Nicholas Lyell.

"Further, Lloyd's received reassurance from the government that it would be protected from charges of fraud. In this, the judiciary was enlisted. Those judges who were members of Lloyd's received special terms in the wording of their settlement agreements, though the nature and extent of any similar financial pay-off is not yet known. Thus Judge Cresswell produced a judgment in November 2000 acquitting Lloyd's of all charges of impropriety. It is likely that Cresswell's ruling reflected the position at a higher level, probably the Privy Council, where a fraud judgment on Lloyd's would certainly not be viewed as 'in the national interest'. Indeed, as John Mays (a Lloyd's man in charge of the Equitas reserving project) observed to a Name in 1998, litigation in the British and European courts would be futile.

"In his role as arms procurer during the mass illegal supply of UK weaponry to embargoed countries alone, Peter Levene is indictable for crimes (along with many others). His bringing into the Lloyd's fold, as an individual with no particular insurance expertise, arouses suspicions as to the exploitation of the expertise he does bring."

More Proof of High-Level Corruption

In March 2005, a Netherlands prosecutor reported that a man by the name of Frans van Anraat was a middle man with high-level British and American connections, alleged to have supplied thousands of tons of agents for poison gas to the former Iraqi government in the 1980-88 war with Iran and against its own Kurdish people.

Van Anraat is suspected of having had direct contact with Iraqi authorities and using front companies of British and American origin, working through a Panamanian company based in Lugano, Switzerland, according to the international probe which led to his arrest.

UN weapons inspection agencies have described Van Anraat as one of the most important middlemen in Iraq's acquisition of chemical weapons raw materials.

An article by Richard Norton-Taylor in the Guardian (1999) reports on purchases made by Tagell UK Ltd on behalf of the Islamic Republic of Iran.

Mohammed Hashemi (aka Jamsid Naini) was a director of a UK registered company, located at 12, Roebuck House, Stag Place, London S.W.1. This company, according to Norton-Taylor's article, was set up with the knowledge and consent of the Ministry of Defense to enable the UK to supply covertly defense equipment to Iran with total complicity with the U.S. government.

The report refers to the purchase by the UK of false end-user certificates, and the construction of motor gun-boats for the Naval Division of the Iranian revolutionary guard. Hashemi has provided evidence of how the motor gun-boats were tested at Portsmouth by the Royal Navy and how the procurement department at the Ministry of Defense supervised the project.

Regarding the role of high-level officials in London and Washington, the use of MI6 and CIA undercover agents and Lord Levene's role, Jaffray added:

"It was the U.K. which supplied Iran with WMDs and the missile guidance systems to deliver these weapons. Tagell UK Ltd was the vehicle set up to implement this policy. Kock, a serving member of the SIS, refers specifically to the role of the UK government at the highest possible level. Indeed the memoranda disclosed by the SIS demonstrates Kock's importance to them, and his role in acting for the SIS in the Supergun supplied to Iraq, and as a director of the arms manufacturer, Astra Holdings and Astra Defence Systems (BIMARC). The claim that Peter Levene tendered advice regarding the contracts negotiated by Tagell UK Ltd is contained in a body of documentation which includes the trading records of this company.

"It should be noted that these records refer to commission payments to U.K. politicians and officials. Typically, the money was paid to members of their families for 'consultancy fees.' Although it has been admitted that politicians in France, Germany, and Italy accepted bribes through members of their families, the gagging orders imposed by judges such as Andrew Collins, prevent the information about Tagell UK Ltd from reaching the public domain in the U.K.

"Finally, Hashemi has noted that large quantities of munitions were supplied to Iraq via Saudi Arabia under the Al-Yamamah contract with the United Kingdom. According to Phillip Sales, senior Treasury Counsel, all the details of this contract will remain known to only two people. The intention of officials to deceive the British people is contained in document no 7 which speaks for itself.

"It should never be forgotten that corrupt politicians and officials lined their pockets with commissions on weapons exported to embargoed countries in breach of international law. And the British taxpayer continues to be punished with extortionate stealth taxes to make up a loss of between 73 Billion and 120 Billion of U.K. overseas assets dissipated in support of this illegal trade."

Editor's Note: Read Part III Wednesday as MI6 internal documents are revealed, confirming government corruption at the highest levels concerning weapons sold to Iran and Iraq. Also, see internal Astra Holdings PLC documents, listing millions of commissions paid, a handsome portion then funneled down to the crooked politicians on both sides of the Atlantic who originally put the devious arms-sales plan together.

Blood Money Part I: The Big 'Allivane-Astra' Picture. The Trail of Illegal Weapons Sold To Iran And Iraq Starts In Washington And London.

High-level officials on both sides of the Atlantic hide their 'dirty scheme' to profit from illegal Middle East weapons sales. MI6 and CIA infiltrate overseas 'front companies' to make sure illegal sales goes off without a hitch.

30 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski
Part I

The devil's playground in the Arab sand over the last 25 years has provided crooked politicians on both sides of the Atlantic a handsome profit. While hundreds of thousands of innocents have died a bloody death, the "masters of evil" in the illegal arms trade continue to sell their "dirty toys" under the cover of darkness and through a system of secret companies hidden from public scrutiny.

Many have died trying to expose their wicked game, including microbiologist Dr. David Kelly (2003) and Gerald Bull (1990), the former chairman of the Space Research Corporation.

Although both deaths remain suspicious and never thoroughly investigated, Dr. Kelly and Bull were extremely close and casting a dark light on the clandestine, illegal money-raising deals by U.S. and UK politicians in arming Iraq in Iran.

And in the specific case of Bull, he was in the midst of revealing when he turned up dead, the beneficiaries of "commissions," many of the recipients being high level politicians in Washington and London.

Even though observers close to Dr. Kelly and Bull have so solid evidence they were killed, it's interesting to note that most of the pair's damaging information has been redacted from official records, silenced by corrupted courts or kept from public view through a compliant press.

But whatever the sad case may be, it's obvious these "dirty politicians," doing the devil's handy work are hiding "something big and play for keeps."

And it's obvious from the results of the "killing fields" in Iraq, Afghanistan and elsewhere, they function only for power and profit with absolutely no conscience, not only killing innocents on the battlefield but killing-off those who get too close to exposing their "dirty games," as these killer-crooks live under the devilish credo of "what's one more drop of blood matter when the whole world is painted a bloody red anyway."

However, for the public record and for the world to know, there is a bulk of evidence showing these "masters of evil" not only include those Middle East leaders in collusion with the West, but those in power in Washington and London. Although some evidence has come forward, much of the incriminating files and documentation have been fiercely protected to this day, as these devilish politicians know all too well that the rancid odor of warm blood and rotting body parts from the illegal arms trade follows curious path right into 10 Downing Street and 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

The Arming of Iraq and Iran

As Saddam Hussein sits rotting in a Baghdad jail awaiting a hangman's noose, the last thing Prime Minister Tony Blair and President George W. Bush wants is for Hussein to spill the beans, tell the truth and talk.

They want him out of the picture since he could add even more damaging information to the solid body of evidence that over the period of 1982-90 Iraq and Iran were supplied by the U.S. and UK with WMD, including biological cultures and chemical precursors of nerve gases and radioactive material, including caesium-137.

John J. Drewe in 2003, noted the UK and U.S. were the major suppliers of these weapons and that details of the underlying contracts with overseas companies like Allivane International Limited and Astra Holdings PLC, pinning officials to the illegal sales, were beginning to surface in the 1980's, but have since been forgotten, as politicians have been mostly successful in quieting whistleblowers, bribing the courts and controlling the media.

One example Drewe calls attention to, saying it reveals only the tip of the iceberg of how UK/U.S. politicians profited, points to the fact how UK officials denied in 1992 awarding Iraq billions of Pounds of export credits to purchase weapons. But in February 2003 the government was caught lying when certain relevant paper, perhaps inadvertently declassified, disclosed some of the truth behind the illegal arms deals with Iran and Iraq.

An important aside also surfaced in 1999 in the UK saying that Drewe had spent over 18 months in custody awaiting trial. He was later sentenced to six years in prison for art fraud after having his assets frozen and deprived sufficient access to counsel, according to legal observers.

Back then, sketchy reports surfaced and it was alleged that there was an arms scandal behind the art fraud case, which eventually silenced Drewe. Throughout the case, Drewe claimed that he had been set up as fall guy for a widespread conspiracy that included Scotland Yard, the Ministry of Defense and the governments of at least seven nations he helped broker between British weapons manufacturers and Iran, Iraq

As is usual in such cases, the news media jumped to the defense of the State, presenting Drewe in a bad light. However, despite the bad press, he had his vocal supporters.

Gerald James, former Astra chairman, who avoided a long prison sentence in the Matrix Churchill arms-related case by showing that he had acted with the approval of the Ministry of Defense, offered evidence for three hours in Drewe's defense. Geoffrey Scriven also offered to give evidence that the Lord Chancellor secretly briefed judges and the courts have been corrupted regarding the Drewe matter.

And while the legal tensions mounted, the government back then quickly denied Drewe and other whistleblower allegations that Allivane International Limited ever existed, although records clearly showed it was formed in 1982 and traded until 1988.

Drewe also presented documentary evidence proving the existence and that Allivane was a front for British Special Intelligence Services, exporting arms to both Iraq and Iran. The company was also mentioned in the Scott report, most of which suppressed by the government.

Why Did UK and U.S. Partner-Up?

Behind the legal wrangling and government whitewashing, the motive behind selling weapons to the Middle East is simple: war is a profitable game. And the means to distribute, of course, is to then create a system complex, undetectable companies to first manufacture the weapons, then get them safely to the Middle East without UN detection and then, of course, repay politicians through handsome "commissions" with laundered money transferred secretly under the financial radar screen.

But how and why did the U.S. and UK partner-up to make this happen back in the early 1980's?

The plan, according to Drewe and others, originated in Washington as a joint UK/U.S. venture. On Dec. 17, 1983, information surfaced that Donald Rumsfeld delivered a letter from President Ronald Reagan to Saddam Hussein in Baghdad, as an agreement was reached between the two countries whereby Iraq would be supplied with munitions, including biological chemical and WMD, as well as being provided with loans from a U.S. bank.

To verify this trip, Howard Teicher, advisor to the U.S. National Security Council on the Middle East (1982-87), accompanied Rumsfeld and filed a subsequent 1995 affidavit swearing to the trip and the American deal to sell weapons to Iraq.

However, Rumsfeld and Reagan, two of the alleged private beneficiaries of the illegal weapon sales, had a problem. They had a big problem since UN arms embargoes were rigorously being enforced in the U.S., unlike in Europe.

So to avoid public scrutiny, they had to figure out a way to provide an alternative route for the illegal export of American munitions. To reach this diabolical end, the U.S. then set up a number of "front companies" in Europe, in coordination with the CIA, MI6 and the UK's DTI and Foreign Office.

One such "front company," according to financial researchers silenced by the compliant press, crooked courts and bogus national security claims, was Allivane International Limited, which in 1983 received start-up money in the form of a grant from the British government. Contracts were then awarded to Allivane that in turn supplied Iraq with vast quantities of ammunition and weaponry conveniently manufactured in the U. S.

Drewe and several other financial researchers pointed out around this time a British arms company, Astra Holdings plc, grew as it was awarded lucrative contracts by the American government through the British embassy in Washington.

He added that between 1985 and 1990 Astra was the subcontractor to Allivane for the supply of GB Pounds billions-worth of munitions to both Iraq and Iran.

"Astra was then one of the UK arms companies targeted for destruction as the Iran-Iraq war ended," wrote Drewe in a report that has never surfaced in the mainstream press or in official proceedings concerning the illegal arms sales. Astra records also show its board was compromised by Stefan Kock, a support agent for both the Security and Intelligence Services (MI6), in his capacity as consultant for the Midland Bank. He orchestrated the supply of armaments through "front" companies in deals of which the board remained ignorant, and which did not appear on the Astra books.

Drewe continued:

"The existing paper trail demonstrates that consignments of munitions, chemicals and radioactive material were sent from America to the Faldingworth depot of Astra Defence Systems, and then on to destinations such as the Al Fao organisation in Baghdad. Gerald James, the former chairman of Astra Holdings, obtained the labels marked Al Fao, with evidence of instructions from REXON that they should be removed before the shipment left Faldingworth.

"All the Astra files, appropriated in seventeen raids by the Ministry of Defense Police and DTI personnel on the offices of the former chairman, Gerald James, are held secret by the DTI. They show huge "commissions" paid on these off-balance-sheet deals, their amounts and their recipients.

"These files are among a body of documentation which is being fiercely protected by government officials, to this day, from every attempt to bring them into public scrutiny. The government is succeeding in its efforts only because it has the benefit of collusion by the courts. This did emerge in the Scott report.

Although the courts were aware that those being prosecuted of breaching the arms embargo were doing so on the instructions of the government, they allowed this information to be withheld "in the public interest".

Former Astra Chairman Speaks Out Backing Drewe: Why Is Nobody Listening?

Before dissecting the complex interrelationships among the "front companies," the many political and private players on both sides of the Atlantic, including the Bush family, Rumsfeld, Reagan, former Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, her many level officials, Kock's vital role as MI6 infiltrator and overseer, the suppression of the infamous but little known Scott Report, the role of Peter Levine as former British defense official made chairman of Lloyd's of London, it's wise to look at the public statement made by former Astra Holdings PLC Chairman from 1980-90, Gerald Reaveley James, head of the company which became a leading ammunition and weapons manufacture and supplier to Iraq and Iran.

Much of James' statements regarding the Scott Report and the corrupt British legal system have never been adequately reported by the compliant press or followed up by investigators, as it appears to have fallen into the same "deep black hole" where Dr. Kelly and Bull's illegal arms sales information has also been laid to rest.

Before reading James's lengthy comments, remember the Scott Report he refers to has for the most part been suppressed from the public record, as well as the MI6 and CIA role in overseeing the illegal arms deals and the money trail leading back to the U.S. and UK politicians who put the whole devious plan together.

Although James's statements, made as an invited guest and speaker at a UK conference of the Environmental Law Center, are lengthy and only one man's recollection and experience, they are left with only a few insignificant deletions for clarity due to the past suppression of information on this aspect of the sale of arms to Iran and Iraq and his role as Chairman of the company in the middle of the illegal deals.

A more in depth look story of Astra can be found in James' little known book, published in the UK by Little Brown, called "In the Public Interest."

Here are his statements:

"I am reminded of the very appropriate quote from Edmund Burke (1729-97) "It is necessary only for the good man to do nothing for evil to triumph."

"The Astra case and my case reflect much that has been to the fore in recent years in not only scandals around arms companies like Astra, Matrix Churchill, Ordtec, Forgemasters, Walter Somers, Ferranti and other companies like Polly Peck, BCCI and Maxwell but also in the Scott Inquiry, the BSE Inquiry and the Lloyds of London affair and other scandals. The underlying problem is secret unaccountable government which bypasses Parliament and how the law is administered in the UK, gives aid and succor to such a state of affairs. The most common device is the concealment of evidence and manipulation of cases. There is a tendency when challenged for those in authority to talk of conspiracy theories. My experience is that those who do so are usually part of the conspiracy.

"My company Astra gave rise to much of the circumstances which created the Scott Inquiry, the Supergun revelations (we reported it first), the Aitken affair, the murder of Gerald Bull in Brussels in March 1990 and much else.

"Until March 1990 and between 1980 and 1990 I was chairman of Astra Holdings PLC ("Astra") which became a leading ammunition and weapons manufacturer. By the late 1980's Astra had factories in the United States (9), Canada (2), Belgium (5), United Kingdom (5) and administrative headquarters in Washington Dc, Brussels and London and employed 4,000 personnel.

"Astra became involved in covert weapons and ammunitions operations organised by MI5 and MI6 and the CIA, the MOD, DOD, FCO and the State Department and the DTI. To such an extent was Astra involved with its principal subsidiaries, Walters, Accudyne, Kilgore USA PRB Belgium, BMARC UK; in the covert trade manipulations of Foreign Policy. In 1989/90, following a reappraisal of Foreign Policy in the light of the demise of the Cold War and changing circumstances in the Middle East, where it became apparent the US, UK and EEC had transferred Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical weapons technology as well as conventional weapons to countries like Iran and Iraq, and the discovery Pakistan had the atomic bomb, the whole covert network was reorganized.

"This involved the collapsing of companies like Astra, Ferranti/ISC, Polly Peck, BCCI, Maxwell Group etc and the prosecution of lesser fry Companies and their directors ~ companies like Matrix Churchill, BNJ, Ordtec, Euromac, SRC, Forgemasters, Walter Somers are examples. The directors of Astra were to a large extent ignorant of the full range of covert activities carried out in their name but aware of some of these activities and the likely destination of their goods. As however all operations were sanctioned by the DTI, MOD, FCO, and in the U.S. by the DOD and the State Department and in Belgium by the Belgian Government, not too many questions were raised initially.

"However, in late 1988 and 1989 it became clear to me as Chairmen that the clandestine operations far exceeded anything remotely sanctioned by the full Board and I set out to investigate in depth. I became aware that certain plants were used to secretly store and ship goods; that monies were being transferred to other operations without book records or board approval in secret commission payments; that our paper work and parallel bank accounts were being used to process arms shipments from major UK defense companies like British Aerospace, Royal Ordnance, GEC Marconi, Thorn EMI etc. A leading British Defence Journalist wrote a report which was largely kept secret which indicated 100m was stolen from the Export Credit Guarantee Department ("ECGD") in a fictitious subcontract for propellant which BMARC, an Astra subsidiary, had secretly obtained in 1998 from Royal Ordnance.

"I also became concerned about payments to and business with MI6/CIA front company Allivane which had occurred between 1983 and 1988 via Astra. It also became clear that all our main operations were involved in covert operations in the USA, Belgium and the UK, and that Astra, when it acquired these companies, had inherited a hard core of MI6, MI5, DIA agents who operated behind the back of the original directors and who treated them as "useful idiots".

"All our main companies were involved with Space Research Corporation ("SRC") and the late Dr Gerald Bull who was behind the Supergun and other secret projects which Astra companies were also involved in. In 1989 I realized we had a hugely dangerous individual on our main Board and the BMARC Board who was an MI6 agent.

"This individual, Stephanus Adolphus Kock had high level political connections to Thatcher, Heseltine, Younger, Hanley, etc as well as MI5 and MI6 connections. It is now clear to me that he was involved in the murder of Dr Gerald Bull in Brussels on 22nd March 1990 and Jonathan Moyle in Santiago, Chile on 31st March 1990. BMARC was the only company outside the Atomic Weapons research Establishment and Government Arms depots with the capability to store nuclear bombs like Redbeard and WE177.

"By early 1990 my probing had become a major problem and a plot was hatched to remove me as Chairman shortly before the Supergun and other revelations and Bull's murder. A new dummy board was formed in reality by Kock with two MI6/MI5 stooges ran the company into the ground over the next two years. In order to explain away the destruction of the company with a 350m order book and a market capitalization of 120m desperate attempts were made to find evidence of malpractice by the original directors. Gumbley, my Managing Director, who had been with Bull until an hour before he was shot had discussed with Bull suing UK Government and senior civil servants using Bull's extensive knowledge of high level corruption and illegal operations.

"It had been agreed I would return with Gumbley to agree with lawyers how to proceed a week later. I had discussed such matters with Bull some six months previous but no further action had been taken. Gumbley was immediately framed up for corrupting an MOD official and jailed for 9 months and after desperately trying to find something on me and failing, Kock and MI6/MI5 decided to institute through Peter Lilley and the DTI a DTI Inquiry. Lilley was Secretary of state at the DTI at the time.

"The DTI Inquiry lasted three years and cost 2.5m plus (as much as the Scott Inquiry). The announcement of the Inquiry and the misleading press statements issued by the DTI and Government ensured the downfall of Astra. Crooks and MI5, MI6, agents or informers were put in charge of Astra, including Kock, Roy Barber FCA and Tony McCann. Barber and McCann whose managerial and industrial competence and experience were negligible paid themselves 330,000 and 280,000 respectively. Barber took 100,000 in the first month. Barber's annual payment was more than I received in salary and expenses as Chairman over ten years while I built the company. PRB was sold off immediately for 3m to avoid embarrassing revelations. MI5, MI6 and MOD police and Customs launched 17 raids on Astra premises in order to steal any sales and other documentation incriminating Government.

"No new orders were obtained in spite of the Gulf War and the company ran on the 350m order book we had left for two years, before it was put into receivership on 2nd February 1992 on the eve of me giving evidence to the House of Commons Trade and Industry Select Committee re Supergun, Project Babylon and arms to Iraq (and Iran etc). Press coverage was hue and adverse. This facilitated, as clearly city interests like Banks and Astra's main shareholders 3i, Prudential and Clerical and medical cooperated with Government for their own interest and purposes against the interests of smaller shareholders (a parallel with Lloyds techniques).

"Kock had a cover as a consultant in Midland Bank's secret arms department, Midland and Industrial Trade Services ("MITS"). This was staffed by ex service officers, MI5, MI6, agents and intelligence affiliated bankers. Midland with the Bank of Boston were Astra's main bankers and dominated by MI6 CIA agents. Kock was also said to be head of Group 13, the Government's assassination and dirty tricks squad according to Richard John Rainey Unwin, a close associate of Knock himself who was a contract MI6 agent and Consultant to Astra. Kock and Unwin, with Martin Laing Construction, negotiated the 2bn Malaysian defence deal before George Younger, the Defense Secretary even knew of it.

"The MOD police arrested several of my colleagues, framed Grumbley up. I was subjected to harassment, burglaries; I was arrested by Customs, investigated by the Inland Revenue, subjected to surveillance, threats, bugging, telephone tapping (all documented), a DTI Inquiry which lasted 3 years and a DTI prosecution which lasted 4 years. In addition I had to give copious evidence to the Scott Inquiry over 4 years, 2 DTI Select Committees, Foreign Affairs Select Committee, Defense Select Committee, Public Accounts Select Committee, Public Services Select committee, Police (SOI), a huge law suit in the United States (Dooley case). My family suffered considerably, my two eldest sons army careers suffered, my youngest son's education because of adverse publicity, my brother was killed in an accident never satisfactory explained which could have been intended for me.

In the course of my own experiences I took considerable note and interest in parallel cases like Matrix Churchill, Ordtec, Euromac, Atlantic Commercial, BNJ, SRC, Forgemasters, Walter Somers, Polly Peck, Foxley Ferranti/ISC, BCCI, Maxwell etc. All these cases and others and the Astra case involved the gross abuse of power by Government and its agencies and servants, concealment of key evidence, intimidation, threats, false and selective prosecutions, manipulation of evidence, perversion of the course of justice. It has also been clearly demonstrated that there is no separation of powers within the United Kingdom. Key legal appointments like Lord Chancellor and attorney General, Solicitor General are wholly political.

"It has also been clearly demonstrated that Parliament has no control of knowledge of events and that a vast apparatus of permanent unelected Government exists. This permanent Government consists of senior civil servants, intelligence and security officers, key figures in certain city and financial institutions (including Lloyds of London), key industrialists and directors of major monopolistic companies, senior politicians. The Lord Chancellors Office which is responsible for the appointment of Judges, Clerks of the House of Commons select Committees and approval of Chairmen of such committees and the approval of the Queen's Counsel, holds a total control of the legal administrative framework and has strong connections to the security and intelligence services.

"We have seen from the arms to Iran, Iraq affairs, the Sandline affair and other scandals that politicians and Parliament have little or no control and are more like players in a pantomime put on for the general public and gullible public.

"Secrecy breeds corruption, secrecy is power, information is power particularly confidential information. There is no accountability and the calibre of MP deteriorates with each Parliament. The young politician with no experience outside is naive and powerless and many now have a blind loyalty to their party. Ironically the hereditary peers of the House of Lords provided one of the last vestiges of honesty and independence now largely destroyed by self-important and self-deluding figures like Blair and Baroness Jay.

"It has never been more vital for people to challenge the views of politicians and opinion formers. We live in an age where much if not most of the media is controlled. The legal mechanism and Judges and the court system need to be beyond reproach. Sadly they are not and the chronicle of abuse and manipulation of cases is appalling. Judges are not independent in most government related cases and are no different to salaried and pensioned civil servants. The independence of the Judiciary is an illusion fostered by the Judiciary. Too often a Judicial Inquiry is a system for cover up and concealment. Too often the courts are influenced by political considerations as in the Scott Inquiry and the recent Lloyds of London case. Perhaps with pressure this can be changed."

Editor's Note: Read part II Tuesday how Gerald Bull's sworn statement before his death, never investigated, nails high level politicians with setting up an intricate scheme to get away with huge commissions while selling illegal weapons to Iran and Iraq. Also, see how Lord Peter Levene, former British Defense Secretary and made Lloyd's of London chairman in 2002, plays a pivotal role in the weapons sales. And there is much, much more.

Israel Wants To Slam Vanunu Behind Bars Again For Talking To Foreign Press

In an impromptu Jerusalem meeting, former President Carter said he'd help the former whistle blower gain his freedom and would like to see him come to America. Vanunu is on trial again for state secret's violations, charges he says are trumped-up and make no sense. Released in 2004, he originally was jailed for trying to tell the world about Israel's 1986 nuclear stockpile of 200.

29 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

Israeli authorities want Mordechai Vanunu back in jail again for talking openly to the foreign press after the nuclear whistle blower already spent 18 years behind bars - 11 in solitary confinement - for trumped-up crimes he says he never committed.

Vanunu, 51, was hauled before an Israeli court last week on charges he violated his release agreement, including violations of speaking to the press and leaving occupied Israel.

The state last Wednesday began introducing evidence of video recordings, printed articles and radio audio recordings where Vanunu granted interviews to the foreign press in what prosecutors are alleging is in a blatant violation of his release terms.

If found guilty, Vanunu could be sentenced to six months in jail and/or fined. The trial was continued until Feb. 9.

"I have done nothing wrong and I will not let the Israeli government take away my God-given freedom of speech rights," said Vanunu last Friday on Greg Szymanski's Radio show, The Investigative Journal, making his comments from Israel where he stays in a Christian halfway house.

Vanunu added that Israel's nuclear stockpile has at least doubled in size from 200 nuclear war heads in 1986 to more than 400.

"All I ever wanted to do was stop nuclear proliferation for the betterment of mankind. Now they are trying to unjustly punish me again for things said more than 20 years ago and are on the public record," he said.

For talking openly since his release, Israel wants to again punish Vanunu for what authorities claim is another violation of divulging national security secrets regarding Israel's nuclear weapons program.

However, Vanunu and other observers in Israel, including former President Jimmy Carter, who met him in an impromptu meeting in Jerusalem last week, hope the former whistle blower beats the charges and can leave Israel once and for all.

"It was good surprise to find myself in the restaurant eating dinnerwhile Jimmy Carter came to have his dinner in the American Colony restaurant, where I was invited by a friend Tom Hopkin," said Vanunu about the short meeting with the former President in the Jerusalem restaurant. "While Carter and his wife were leaving his wife recognized me and came to say hello. She introduced me to Mr. Carter and they said they will be very happy to see me in U.S.

"Mrs. Carter and the former President took me aside and privately told me they hope and pray for my freedom. He said he when he returned to the states he would try and help me. I also ask anybody else listening in America to try and lend assistance to my cause, as the American government and Israel are behind trying to keep me silenced."

After serving 18 years for trying to tell the world about Israel's nuclear capability in the mid 1980's, he was released from an Israeli prison near Tel Aviv in 2004 for divulging information regarding Israel's nuclear weapons program and its nuclear reactor in Dimona, where he worked for nine years as a technician/scientist.

The Sunday Times of London finally published a full account of Vanunu's story, calling the attention to the world in 1986 that Israel had already constructed 200 nuclear atomic bombs. He verified his claim with photographs of the Dimona site, verified by experts who eventually confirmed that Israel had nuclear weapons.

But Vanunu was arrested in Rome before the article was published by what he called a combination Mossad and CIA undercover kidnapping. Once back in Israel, Vanunu claimed he was not given a fair trial and quickly sentenced to a maximum term for treason as well as being termed a foreign spy.

Since being released, Vanunu claims he has been closely watched by authorities, as his activities have been illegally monitored and his movement traced by Mossad agents assigned to his case in order to make sure he keeps quiet and doesn't leave Israel.

"Although I have been released, I still feel like a prisoner unable to freely move and speak," added Vanunu on last week's radio show broadcast in America.

Last November, Vanunu was held in an Israeli jail for 36 hours before being released after authorities held him on suspicion of breaking his parole agreement. Vanun was picked up by police at a border checkpoint after he visited a Christian church in the small town of Aram, near Jerusalem.

He was later released after lawyers convinced an Israeli judge the arrest was contrived and Vanunu had no intentions of leaving Israel.

After being released, Vanunu said his return to jail brought back a terrible reminder of his long jail term, including 11 years in solitary confinement.

"It was the first time I sat alone in prison since being released and it was very difficult as it brought back terrible memories," said Vanunu. "I think they are looking for any reason to put me back in jail.

"After being held in isolation for 36 hours, when I finally saw the judge, the prosecution wanted to detain me under house arrest for two weeks and give me a stiff fine. But my lawyer successfully argued that where I was detained was not in an unoccupied territory and that the terms of my parole are vague.

Regarding his recent court case and trial, Vanunu last week had harsh words for the authorities who he says are wrongfully again trying to put him in jail.

"The original trial date was for the 15th Jan., but the SHABAK moved it to the 25th, today on Palestinian election day so no foreign media arrived and only three local journalists were in the court," said Vanunu from Jerusalem.

"The state prosecution presented the court with copies of interviews with foreign media. Most of this evidence was in the form of text or sound downloads from the internet. Other evidence was video and disc copies of interviews by me with foreign television network. Among the media bodies listed: BBC World, David Frost BBC, ABC Australia-Late Night with Tony Jones, Radio KPFA in the US, Greg Szymanski U. S. Investigative Journal radio show, Le Figaro from France and Asahi Shimbun from Japan. Other interviews were from internet websites and also included as an item, internet chats.

"Avigdor Feldman, my lawyer, argued that most of the evidence was not the original copies but downloads from the internet. Also he said that the foreign identity of the interviewers is not proved by the state and that many names such as Amy Goodman, Tony Jones and Greg Szymanski could be easily found in the Israeli Resident Registry. Avigdor argued that State should have made some efforts to prove the foreign identity of those who were supposed to have interviewed me.

"This evidence was accompanied by a testimony given by a police officer who interrogated me last year in a police station. This police interrogation was recorded by secret video camera without my knowledge. Also they brought the policeman who arrested me on my way to Bethlehem in Christmas Eve 2004.

"This was the first session and it took some four hours, and the following session will be on the 9th of February so more witnesses for the police can testify.

"So this is "the unfair trial" that Israel wants, at the same time they are hiding the fact that this is a trial not about 'state security', as they have said in the past 20 years, but about the fact of me speaking to the press! No nuclear secrets are involved and I have no more secrets now than I had in 1986.!

"Never in all my court cases over the years have I found the Israeli looking for the truth and seeking justice and I doubt they will now. We don't know what will be the outcome, verdict or sentence will be, but my lawyer said no matter what I say I will be found guilty."

Texas City British Petroleum Claims No Foul Play In 2005 Explosion Killing 15; BP Sets Aside $1 Billion For Upgrades Amid Rumors Neocons Plan To Nuke Plant In Upcoming Days

Some Texas City citizens taking nuke warning seriously as local law enforcement build-up seen and at least 400 employees moved out of BP to different office building.

By Greg Szymanski

British Petroleum (BP) Products North America Inc. issued its final corporate report last month, saying the March 23, 2005, fatal explosion killing 15 at its Texas City plant was the result of "management system failures and employee mistakes."

The company report, issued from its headquarters in Warrenville, Ill., said management is accepting "total responsibility" for the massive explosion, adding plans are to modernize the plant to the tune of $1 billion over the next five years.

While BP admits liability, federal authorities are threatening civil and criminal lawsuits, as well as levying a record-setting fine that would make the $11 million fine levied by OSHA in 2005 look like chump change.

BP spokesman Ronnie Chappell said today the company is withholding comment about pending federal investigations but is cooperating thoroughly with authorities about BP wrongdoing in the explosion, leading to the 15 deaths and more than 180 injuries.

Chappell also would not comment about the possibility of stiff fines being levied for the massive release of 30,000 pounds of toxic pollution related to the explosions.

The BP plant in Texas City also surfaced in the news recently as a former Army Intel Capt., Eric May, of Houston claims the March 23 explosion may have been a rehearsal for an upcoming terrorist attack at the plant.

Plant officials said they were not aware of any threats or suspicious activity in or around the Texas City plant but several residents noticed a larger than usual law enforcement build-up as well as a relocation of hundreds of employees during the last two months.

As suspicions mount in Texas City, Capt. May said he has collected data indicating the "enemy within our government" - The Bush Cabal - may be targeting the Texas City plant with a nuclear explosion on or around Jan. 31.

"I think the Bush Boys may be targeting Texas City and I am warning people to be very careful in the upcoming days," said Capt May, a former Army Intel officer, who has now gone on a personal info-war attack on the Bush administration after coming to the conclusion elements within the government orchestrated and caused 911.

Regarding the possibility of an attack at the BP plant, local law enforcement and plant management were unaware of any stepped up security or strange activities going on in or around Texas City.

However, one employee working at the plant who wanted to remain anonymous, said he was aware of at least 400 people being moved out of the plant two months ago and relocated to a new office building.

"I just wanted to let you know what's going on at BP. When they moved 400+ people out of the plant and into the new office building a couple of months ago, they appointed me and some others as building monitors," said the BP employee.

"We had our first meeting this afternoon all of a sudden. We are supposed to be in charge of our appointed groups during an emergency evacuation, fire, explosion, etc. At our meeting today, they told us that there will be a practice drill for the building next week sometime (our first).

"Before we left the meeting, they told us to get our ducks in a row before we leave work this week. It sounded to me like it might take place Monday morning."

After reading Capt. May's warning of a possible nuclear attack, the employee added:

"I'm starting to wonder if this drill and your date of Monday for the attack is a coincidence. They are supposed to start up some units next week, but I can't get a definite day out of anybody."

Jon Watkins, another Texas City resident, also was taken the attack warning seriously, as he alerted local law enforcement.

"I think I opened up a hornet's nest when I went into the police station," said Watkins from his home in Texas City. "When I walked out in the police parking lot, I noticed at least 10 different cars from 10 different law enforcement agencies and that is strange around here."

Another Houston resident after hearing Capt. May's warning said she noticed Wednesday on the History Channel, the network running a show about the huge explosion that occurred at the BP plant in 1947.

"Could they be psychologically preparing the public for what's going to happen there," added Capt. May after he was alerted about what he called "the more than coincidental programming of the old 1947 blast."

Jim Black of Houston, who is also following the story, had a more practical way and an eight step approach of determining if the people in Houston or Texas City were in harms way in the upcoming days.

"If you want to know what the chances of this attack are, just watch George and Barbara. If they are home in Houston, no attack will occur. However, if they're going to be out of town, the chances increase greatly. Then you have to ask yourself:

1. Where are they going?
2. How long do they plan to be gone?
3. How much did they pack and take with them?
4. Did they put anything in storage or have it moved to Maine before leaving?
5. Were there any large banking transactions before they left?
6. Are there any signs of preparations or unusual activity at the Maine house?
7. Are there any aircraft being chartered to "stand by and be available at a moments notice" in the Houston area?
8. Are there any CEO's who support Bush that have scheduled to be out of town around the 31st?

In the final BP explosion report, the investigation team found no evidence of foul play, but admitted "many areas where procedures, policies and expected behaviors were not met."

Besides accepting responsibility for the March explosion, BP has set aside $700 million to compensate victims of the disaster and has entered into a settlement with OSHA resolving more than 300 safety regulation violations. Officials added that settlements have been worked out with the families of most of the victims who died or were seriously injured.

Details of Sexual Perversion At Detention Centers More Serious Than Media Reports; Pentagon In Possession Of Videos Of Boys Being Sodomized And Detainee Statement Verifies This Fact.

Although lower level military are taking the rap for Abu Ghraib abuse, critics contend Rumsfeld authorized the rape of Iraqi children.

By Greg Szymanski

Although the U.S. government is in possession of video tapes of boys being sodomized at Abu Ghraib and other detention centers, the evidence and public clamor to end the torture and killing has done little to change the mindset of the Bush administration.

Lawyers for President Bush, including U.S. Attorney Gen. Alberto Gonzales, have tried to neatly package and justify skirting international law regarding the illegal detention of prisoners.

But when it comes to torture, sexual perversion and murder while holding prisoners captive, it would seem obvious there is no legal justification.

But not according to a team of Bush's crooked lawyers who concluded in a legal memorandum that President Bush was not bound by either an international treaty prohibiting torture or by a federal anti-torture law because he had the authority as commander in chief to approve any technique needed to protect the nation's security.

Besides this bogus legal finding, the administration has also taken the untenable position, according to legal observers, the reported acts of torture and sexual abuse at Abu Ghraib and other detention centers are only isolated incidents of abuse, not officially military policy handed down from Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld.

However, critics contend the mounting number of abuse cases and evidence compiled is more than just coincidence or isolated acts of aggression, but indicate an official policy handed down from top to bottom.

Human rights groups, international legal observers and journalists contend Rumsfeld and top Pentagon brass have personally ordered the "torture policy," including authorizing the rape of Iraqi children in prisons in order to humiliate their parents into providing information about the so-called anti-American insurgency.

If there were only several cases of abuse, the Bush administration's point should be considered. But when the cases of abuse are widespread, then something definitely stinks inside the Pentagon.

Take for example journalist Seymour Hersh's quote to the ACLU in 2004 after calling attention to the numerous torture videotapes kept secret by the Pentagon.

"The worst is the soundtrack of the boys shrieking," said Hersh. "There is a massive amount of criminal wrongdoing that was covered up at the highest command out there, and higher."

Next listen to the words of Ed Cone, an observer of the military abuse, as he summarizes evidence uncovered, indicating widespread torture and sexual abuse:

"Some of the worse that happened you still don't know about. There are women there and some of you may have read they were passing letters, communications out to their men. This is at Abu Ghraib which is 30 miles from Baghdad.

"The women were passing messages saying 'Please come and kill me, because of what's happened'. Basically what happened is that those women who were arrested with young boys/children in cases that have been recorded. The boys were sodomized with the cameras rolling. The worst about all of them is the soundtrack of the boys shrieking that your government has... They are in total terror it's going to come out."

And the next shocking piece of "torture evidence" is a clear example of just how bad conditions still are at Abu Ghraib and how the abuse complaints are more than just isolated incidents.

It should be noted American jurists and the U.S. legal system has done little or nothing to bring Bush and his cronies to justice for obvious violations of international law, leaving the international community stunned by this lack of humanitarian concern.

The following are portions of a translation of a sworn statement made by Abu Ghraib detainee Kasim Mehaddi Hilas, detainee No. 15551108, revealing just how deep and widespread the torture policies had become. The Hilas statement was also used against Spc. Charles Grainer for an August 2004 Article 39a hearing

The details of the Hilas statement have been watered down by the mainstream media as the acts committed against detainees are far more perverse than just leading them around on a dog leash, as previously reported. After listening, it's also hard to believe Spc. Grainer's acts were a so-called isolated incident, as the Pentagon insists, since the torture and abuse, according to Hilas, seemed to encompass every area of the detention center he witnessed.

Here is his statement:

"In the name of God, I swear that everything I witnesses, everything I witnesses and everything I am talking about is the truth and I am not saying this to gain any material thing and I was not pressured to do this by any forces.

"First, I am going to talk about what happened to me at Abu Ghraib jail. I will not talk about when I was in jail before...but it was very bad.

"They stripped me of all my clothes, even my underwear. They gave me women's underwear, that were rose-colored with flowers in it and they put a bag over my face. One of them whispered in my ear, "today I am going to f... you.

"When they took me to the cell, the translator, Abu Hamid, came with an American soldier, his rank was sergeant. And he called me a "faggot" because I was wearing women's underwear...

"The transfer from Camp B to isolation was full of beatings, but the bags were over our heads, so we couldn't see their faces. And they forced me to wear this underwear all the time - for 51 days - and most days I was wearing nothing else.

"I faced more harsh punishment and had my hands cuffed with irons behind my back to the metal of the window, to the point where my feet were off the ground and I was hanging there for about 5 hours...And then they took off all my clothes and they took the female underwear and put it over my head. After being released from the window, they tied me to my bed until dawn...Grainer and the other two soldiers were taking pictures of everything they did to me. I don't know if they took a picture of me because they beat me so bad I lost consciousness after an hour or so...They didn't give us food for a whole day and night and finally gave us one package of emergency food.

"Now I will talk about what I saw.

"They brought three prisoners completely naked and they tied them together with cuffs and they stuck one to other. I saw the American soldiers hitting them with a football and they were taking pictures. I saw Grainer punching one of the prisoners right in his face very hard when he refuse to take off his underwear and I heard them begging for help. And also the American soldiers told them to do like homosexuals (f...ing). Also female soldiers were taking pictures...And they were ordering them to crawl while they were cuffed together.

"I saw (name deleted) f...ing a kid, his age would be about 15-18 years old. The kid was hurting very bad and they covered all the doors with sheets. Then when I heard the screaming I climbed the door because on top it wasn't covered and I saw (name deleted), who was wearing the military uniform putting his penis into the little kid's ass.

"I couldn't see the face of the kid because his face wasn't in front of the door. And the female soldier was taking pictures...

"In the cell on the north side and I was right across from it on the other side. They put the sheets again on the doors. Grainer and his helper cuffed one prisoner in Room No. 1 and he was an Iraqi citizen. They tied him to the bed and they were inserting the phosphoric light in his ass and he was yelling for God's help. This one prisoner used to get punished a lot because I heard him screaming and they prohibited us from standing near the door when they do that.

"That was Ramadan, around 12 midnight when I saw them doing that to the prisoner and the female soldier taking pictures. I saw them more than once standing on the water bucket that was upside down and they were totally naked. And carrying chairs over their heads standing under the fan of the hallway behind the wooden partition and also in the shower."

Regarding the prosecution of lower level military for torture and abuse, the ACLU recently criticized the Justice Department's double standard used for torture and abuse crimes.

Legislative Counsel of the ACLU, Christopher E. Anders, said while lower ranks of the military are being convicted for crimes, upper level officers, Pentagon officials and CIA agents working along side the soldiers are being held to a much lower standard.

"Justice should be blind, but it is now clear that enlisted men and women in a soldier's uniform are being convicted while CIA agents and civilian contractors who allegedly participated in the same crimes remain free," said Anders. "The military has already investigated and prosecuted many of its rank and file members and yet it seems that the Justice Department is incapable, or unwilling, to do the same for CIA agents. CIA agents should not be getting a free pass from the Justice Department.

"What is particularly troubling is that all but one of twenty referrals of alleged torture by civilians were sent to the U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia, Paul McNulty. McNulty's team has yet to indict any civilians. In its now typical system of rewarding top torture officials, the White House has nominated McNulty to be Deputy Attorney General, the number two position at the Justice Department. If confirmed, McNulty will oversee all law enforcement at the Justice Department, directly supervising the FBI director, the head of the Criminal Division and all U.S. Attorneys."

Houston PD Running Nuclear Disaster Drills As Build-Up Of Numerous Law Enforcement Agencies Seen In Nearby Texas City

Army Intel Capt. Eric May warns Bush cabal days away from a nuclear strike. Texas City resident "opens up a hornet's nest" as he warns local law enforcement about the possibility of nuclear strike.

By Greg Szymanski

Sources inside the Houston Police Department (HPD) have confirmed officers in recent weeks have been taking part in nuclear disaster drills, adding more fuel to the fire that the city is being targeted by the "enemies within" the Bush administration for a nuclear attack.

"In the last week I have multi-checked with sources of mine in the Houston Police Department and confirmed that HPD has been running nuclear disaster drills," said former Army Intel Capt. Eric May, who is trying to alert Americans of a possible nuclear strike in the upcoming days, possibly to take place in the Texas City or Houston metro area.

"Accordingly, I've been calling my personal contacts, among them HPD CID Sergeant John Karshner and HPD Internal Affairs Lt. Felix Garcia, to let them know that the set-up is on."

Capt. May, who once backed the government's position while serving his country, became disillusioned after 911, saying facts surfaced making it "crystal clear" the enemy wasn't Al Qaeda but an "enemy within," or the Bush-New World Order Cabal.

Since realizing 911 was an inside government job, Capt. May has used every ounce of his military training, energy and intelligence to try and stop the Bush administration and what he calls its "phony war on terror." His info-war on terror can be better understood by a Google search of Ghost Troop Bibliography, taken from the name of his cyber-unit called Ghost Troop.

Capt. May said the Al Qaeda scare has been contrived and manufactured by the Bush Cabal in an effort to cover-up the real criminals and culprits in the White House. Saying every so-called terrorist attack escalates in size and body count, he is warning Americans that the next one will involve a nuclear blast on American soil.

"There is a very good chance the next attack could occur within the next 9 days and the target being the British Petroleum plant at Texas City, Texas," said Capt. May, adding that he believes he has broken the Bush Cabal-Illuminati "embedded code," a secret code using numbers and symbols.

Capt. May also feels the "breaking of the Illuminist number code, using variations 1, 3 and 9 to name a few, may have halted a previously planned nuclear attack bacon on July 28 at a petroleum plant in Texas City.

"They like to communicate with this Illuminist number code and the media is actually passing the information on to the many levels of members, alerting them of the potential dates and times of planned acts of terror," said Capt. May. "They are also using the repetitive name game, another way of feeling superior. Just think about it: Oklahoma City, Okla., New York, N.Y. and now maybe Texas City, Texas."

And Capt. May's dire prediction raised some eye-brows in Texas City as resident Jon Watkins recently alerted law Texas City law enforcement officials about May's inside information.

"I think I have stirred up a hornet's nest here in town after going to the police department with the information," said Watkins today from his Texas City home, as other reports have come in from local citizens that there are ongoing "SWAT" exercises going on in the area, involving numerous police and government agencies, including the HPD, the Pasadena Police Department and Homeland Security.

"After Leaving the Texas City police station, I noticed one thing really strange, as I counted at least 11 different type of official police and government vehicles parked in the police lot. I have never seen this before and it has me a little worried. What are they planning?"

Watkins said he is passing the information about the possible nuclear threat to hundreds of locals, saying it is "better to be safe then sorry." He added that some people have listened, including several police officers, but others have brushed him off as nothing more than a "conspiracy nut."

"I have taken the taped interview of Capt. May's warnings broadcast on Greg Szymanski's Investigative Journal and have passed it on to the proper authorities," added Watkins.

When Capt. May was told of Watkins actions in Texas City, he added:

"Pray for Mr. Watkins to preserver, and for Sergeant John Karshner and Lt. Felix Garcia (of the HPD) to do the right thing and challenge the official co-conspirators of this pending mass murder."

Besides the suspicious mounting of police activity in the Houston metro-Texas City areas, credible reports have surfaced from Bank of America branch managers in Houston and the Los Angeles area that Homeland Security agents have been holding instructional meetings in the last two weeks, advising employees how to deal with customers in the case of a "pending national disaster."

Employees have been instructed to remain silent about the orders coming down from Homeland Security, saying it is for national security reasons. Employees in both the LA and Houston areas have come forward saying they have been instructed to remain silent and not to distribute valuables from safety deposit boxes, including gold, silver and firearms in the case of a national emergency.

Wolf Blitzer Is Nothing But A NeoCon Shill As His So-Called News Set, Called The Situation Room, Looks More Like A Bush Cabal War Room

Last week Blitzer showed his true neocon colors when he tried to discredit Harry Belafonte on the CNN national stage with some tricky Nazi-Jewish references. Belafonte, however, stood his ground, calling Bush the "biggest terrorist on the planet."

26 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

For all intents and purposes, somebody should take Wolf 'Neocon' Blitzer's microphone cord and wrap him up in it around the nearest tree.

First off, Blitzer belongs writing Bush cabal propaganda behind a Pentagon desk since his CNN news room looks more like a war room anyway.

Second, Blitzer's show, called The Situation Room, doesn't really cover the news, but only a bastardized version of it, scripted by his bosses who are pushing the neocon agenda like there "ain't no tomorrow."

Finally, his latest interview with Harry Belafonte confirms Blitzer to be nothing more than a neocon shill placed in a high position to propagandize the New World Order/Illuminati game plan.

For example, listen to Blitzer's arrogant and "all-trusting government" position taken when trying to set up Belafonte for a on-air fall in the Jan. 23 interview, an interview where he tries desperately but fails in discrediting Belafonte for recently calling Bush "the biggest terrorist" on the planet:

BLITZER: Mr. Belafonte, thanks very much. Welcome to THE SITUATION ROOM.

Doesn't this sound more like a journalistic torture chamber than a place where free and open thought is encouraged..

BLITZER: The new Gestapo. You know, those are powerful words, calling an agency of the U.S. government, the Department of Homeland Security with, what, about 300,000 federal employees, the new Gestapo. Do you want to take that back?

Why does Blitzer encourage Belafonte to take back his words instead of asking him why he called Homeland Security a Gestapo force? Further Blitzer draws a reference to 300,000 Americans when it is obvious Belafonte was referring to the leadership of the Homeland Security not the thousands of innocent paper pushers just drawing a paycheck.

After the obviously slanted question geared at angering average working folk against Belafonte, the activist-entertainer stood his ground, explaining he was standing by what he previously stated, adding:

BELAFONTE: We've taken citizens from this country without the right to be charged, without being told what they're taken for, we've spirited them out of this country, taken them to far away places and reports come back with some consistency that they are being tortured, that they're not being told what they've done. And even some who have been released have come back and testified to this fact.

Now listen closely to Blitzer's next question. Instead of following up and encouraging Belafonte to expound on his reasoning or asking for further examples or proof of Homeland Security abuses, Blitzer immediately draws the "Jew Card" out of his neocon bag of tricks, trying to pin Belafonte's Gestapo reference as somehow being anti-semitic

BLITZER: But let me interrupt for a second. Are you familiar -- and I'm sure you are, because you're an intelligent man -- what the Gestapo did to the Jews in World War II?

Now, who isn't familiar with that, Mr. 'Nazi' Blitzer. In fact, at this point Blitzer could gain more respect as a person, instead of acting like a slimy weasel, if he just came out and said: "Look, Harry, we have to make you look bad because no one is allowed around here to call President Bush a terrorist even if he is one."

But for the sake of seeing just how far down the "Jew path" Blitzer takes Belafonte for no good reason, let's listen to the next portion of the interview.

BLITZER: And you think that what the Department of Homeland Security is doing to, you know, some U.S. citizens suspected of terrorism is similar to what the Nazis did to the Jew?

BELAFONTE: Well, if you're taking people out of a country and spiriting them someplace else, and they're being tortured, and they're being charged without -- or not being charged, so they don't know what it is they've done.

It may not have been directly inside the Department of Homeland Security, but the pattern, the system, it's what the system does. It's what all these different divisions have begun to reveal in their collective.

My phones are tapped. OK? My mail can be opened. They don't even need a court warrant to come and do that as we once were required to do.

BLITZER: But no one has taken you or anyone else, as far as I can tell, to an extermination camp and by the tens of thousands, or hundreds of thousands, even millions decided to kill them, which is what the Nazis did.

BELAFONTE: Well, Mr. Blitzer, let me say this to you, perhaps, just perhaps had the Jews of Germany and people spoken out much earlier and had resisted the tyranny that was on the horizon, perhaps we would never have had...

BLITZER: Well, wait a minute, wait a minute, are you blaming the Jews of Germany for what Hitler did to them?

BELAFONTE: No, no. What I'm saying is that if it an awakened citizenry, begins to oppose the first inkling of the subversion of government, of the subversion of our democracy, then perhaps an early warning would have saved the world a lot of what we all experienced. I'm not accusing the Jews at all.

BLITZER: Well, I just heard you say perhaps if the Jews of Germany had done something earlier then that might not have happened. That's what I thought you were getting at.

BELAFONTE: Well, what I was getting at really is that if all citizens, the Jewish community, the Christian community and all else had taken a very early aggressive stand rather than somehow suggesting or thinking or feeling that this would have gone away, we might have found that Germany would have been in a far different place than it wound up in.

At this point, Blitzer finally tried to address Belafonte's statement, calling Bush the greatest terrorist ad tyrant in the world when the singer recently visited with Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez.

Again, instead of simply asking his reasons why, Blitzer tries to unfairly corner Belafonte by bringing up a comparison of Osama bin Laden. Further, he trifles with the meaning of the word "greatest" as well as asking the singer if he feels the Bush administration is the same, if not worse than Al Qaeda.

Before listening to this segment of the interview, somebody please inform Blitzer facts exist leading to a conclusion that beyond a reasonable doubt bin Laden and Al Qaeda are on the CIA payroll and have been a creation of the Bush administration, designed to take the blame for our own government's terrorist actions.

Further, inform Blitzer in reference to his statements blaming Al Qaeda for 911 that substantial evidence exists leading to the conclusion that beyond a reasonable doubt 911 was an inside job put together by the Bush administration, not Al Qaeda

Here is Blitzer at his best trying to slip-up Belafonte while misleading America by assuming bin Laden and Al Qaeda are the real enemy.

BLITZER: When you were in Venezuela with Hugo Chavez, you said that Bush is the greatest terrorist, the greatest tyrant. Are you saying that President Bush is worse than Osama bin Laden?

BELAFONTE: I'm saying that he's no better. You know, it's hard to make a hyperbole stick. I obviously haven't had a chance to meet all the terrorists in the world, so I have no reason to throw around the words like the greatest or make some qualitative statement. I do believe he is a terrorist.

I do believe that what our government does has terror in the center of its agenda. When you lie to the American people, when you've misled them and you've taken our sons and daughters to foreign lands to be destroyed, and you look at tens of thousands of Arab women and children and innocent people being destroyed each day, under the title of collateral damage, I think there's something very wrong with the leadership.

BLITZER: What you did say in Venezuela was that President Bush was, and I'm quoting now, the greatest tyrant in the world and the greatest terrorist in the world.

BELAFONTE: Yes, I did say that.

BLITZER: So you did use the word, the greatest.

Here's what you were quoted as saying in "The Raleigh News and Observer" on January 16th. And I'll let you amend or clarify your remarks.

"When you have a president that has led us into a dishonorable war, who has killed tens of thousands, many of them our own sons and daughters, what is the difference between those who would fly airplanes into buildings killing 3,000 innocent Americans? What is the difference between that terror and other terrors?"

Now that raises the issue of moral equivalency. Are you saying what the Bush administration, what the president is doing is the moral equivalent of what al Qaeda and Osama bin Laden ordered on 9/11?

BELAFONTE: I think President George W. Bush, I think Cheney, I think Rumsfeld, I think all of these people have lost any moral integrity. I find what we are doing is hugely immoral to the American people and to others in the world.

BLITZER: And the same, or if not worse than al Qaeda? Is that what you're saying?

BELAFONTE: Well, I don't want to make those kind of comparisons. I'm not too sure all of what al Qaeda has done. Al Qaeda tortures. We torture. Al Qaeda's killed innocent people. We kill innocent people. Where do the lines get blurred here?

BLITZER: Well, I think the argument is, and correct me if I'm wrong, that al Qaeda deliberately wanted to kill as many people as possible in the World Trade Center and those two buildings. They didn't care if they were executives or janitors or crooks or anybody else. They just wanted to kill as many Americans as possible.

The U.S., when it goes after terrorists, there may be what's called collateral damage, but they're trying to kill enemies of the United States, those who have engaged in terror or similar actions. Do you understand the difference?

BELAFONTE: I understand the difference. What I don't want to get stuck with, or be guided by, is what you call collateral damage. That does not cleanse us morally. All of a sudden, it's beyond our capacity or our means to have made a difference in what we've done to thousands and thousands of Arabs.

I'm quite sure if you went through each and every body, you would find that somebody was a baker, somebody was a store keeper, somebody was a cab driver, somebody was a student. I don't know, you know, murder is murder. And just because you may do it under different guises does not remove the moral imperative.

We are in this war immorally and illegally. And we have no business doing what we do.

Editor's Note: Blitzer is the son of a Polish Jew, who started his career in Tel Aviv bureau for Reuters in 1972. It should be noted while studying international relations at John Hopkins University, he was good buddies with neocon shill Robert Novak. It also should be noted, a person is part and parcel of who he associates with, making it clear Blitzer's strong ties and allegiance to the New World Order, not getting the facts and truth out to the American people.

All Signposts Lead To Imminent Nuclear Attack In America: Intel Army Capt. Eric May Issues 'Red Alert' For Next 9 Days For Texas City-Houston Area
Capt. May claims to have broken the Illuminati and Bush Cabal's "embedded code" in an effort to beat the neocons at their own nasty game. Capt. May may have thwarted one attempted nuclear attack last July, but says the Bush Cabal is coming back again for a second try.

By Greg Szymanski

The January air is again filled with rumblings about an imminent nuclear attack on American soil, as ominous signs are popping up all over the place indicating the "dropping of the real potato" is right around the corner.

Sources inside the military and close to the action this week warned areas of "nuclear concern" within the next 10 to 90 days include Texas City, Tex., the Houston metro area, Charleston, S.C., Los Angeles, Ca., and Kansas City, Ka.

"I am worried," said Jon Watkins of Texas City. "My family is right in the middle of it. I have asked two police officers to keep an eye out for any suspicious activity during the next 10 days.

"I also am sending a copy to the FBI of the interview I heard today on Greg Szymanski's, Investigative Journal, where his guest, Army Capt. Eric May, presented compelling evidence that a nuclear attack, created by the Bush Cabal, could very well take place on or near Jan. 31, 2006, right here in Texas City."

And From east coast to west, people like Watkins from all walks of life, including military and civilian, are coming forward with stories about "an impending disaster," most of them linking the insidious Bush Cabal pushing the "nuke buttons," not the fictitious and Illuminati-created Al Qaeda terrorists.

Going back to last August, the signs were already obvious that the Bush administration, through Cheney's direct orders to Strategic Command (STRATCOM), had specific plans to nuke Iran "if a nuclear blast occurred on American soil."

At that time, sources in the military stationed at Ft. Monroe, VA, warned how a planned nuclear test exercise scheduled for the waters around Charleston, S.C., "may go live," the leak in the military saying this probably led to the strange firing of Gen. Kevin P. Byrnes, who may have gotten wind of the backdoor military nuclear plan.

Other sources since have come forward, saying Gen. Byrnes, head of the United States Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC), was actually fired for not keeping "a better lid" on the nuclear plans, since the leaked information circulated heavily on the internet and other places drew too much attention for the Bush administration plans to go ahead with scheduled plans to "nuke its own country.

Gen. Byrnes, one of the few military four star generals ever to be fired, was replaced Oct. 13, 2005, with Gen. William S. Wallace, now heading TRADOC and any future nuclear exercises at FT. Monroe.

Regarding the Gen. Byrnes firing and the nuclear training exercises, still more sources during July and August were saying the east coast training session was not the key target area, but only a diversion for the actual nuclear attack to be carried out at the British Petroleum plant in Texas City located about 40 miles from Houston.

Although the attacks never occurred, Capt. May, who claims to have broken the Bush Cabal's complicated Illuminati "embedded code" said his infowars cyber-fighters actually may have put the "clamps" on the Texas City attack, scheduled for last July 28, due to "some quick thinking" and media alerts put out by the group he heads to take called the Ghost Troop.

"By breaking their embedded code, which uses numbers as signposts going back to 911, we predicted the timing of such a nuclear attacks to take place last year at Texas City " said Capt. May on Szymanski's Tuesday morning edition of The Investigative Journal, adding he felt the Bush administration was scared-off from pushing "the nuke button" by successfully alerting media groups, federal agencies and others in places of interest.

"I believe we thwarted the attack but they are now coming back again. The next nine days are going to be very important and Texas City could be the target and look for a Jan. 31 as the target date."

Although the breaking of the Illuminati's embedded code is rather complex, it centers around the importance of numbers 1, 3 and 9 as well as inversions and other uses of certain symbols and other number combinations and variations only known by the Illuminists themselves.

"These people in our government communicate this way and through my training as a military intelligence officer I feel I have broken their code. We have to fight back and stop them from the next nuclear attack and this is one way to beat them at their own game," said Capt. May, who once believed hook, line and sinker in the government's war on terrorism but changed his mind several years ago after events around the world, including the Spain and London bombings, convinced him they were actually being orchestrated by "the enemy within," the Bush Cabal.

"Then there was the all-important contact I had with a 911 witness, USMC Captain Jeff Cross, who opened my mind enough that I had my epiphany upon the 3/11/2004 Madrid "911," and almost overnight cracked the "embedded code."

"I'll give examples to any American who wants to learn. All they have to do is Google "Ghost Troop Bibliography" to find out just how the Bush Cabal is telling us when the next event will occur. They like to play with people's minds, feel superior when doing so and they are going to hit America with a nuclear attack. That's certain.

"The only question is when and where and if my calculations are correct, the event is not too far away. But, without question, I am prepared to die for my country in an effort to stop them and will do everything in my power to do so."

And what adds to the suspense and credibility of Capt. May's warning is another nuclear training exercise is now being planned by the Department of Defense between Jan. 31 and Feb. 2 in the Charleston, S.C. area.

The military's Joint Task Force-Civil Support, headquartered at Ft. Monroe, Va., the same unit headed by Gen. Byrnes who was fired in August, will hold a three-day drill involved in managing the consequences of a 10-megaton nuclear blast, enough to inflict mass casualties and devastation on an American city.

And just like the last August exercise, this drill focuses on a hypothetical blast that affects nearly half a million people across a 900-square mile section of tidewater South Carolina. The scenario assumes 10,000 fatalities and more than 30,000 injuries. As officials from the Department of Homeland Security, including the Federal Emergency Management Agency and senior Coast Guard brass will be in attendance.

Besides Capt. May who is sounding the "red alert" for the next 10 days for the Charleston and Texas City areas, the war drums in Iran are again pounding, as STRATCOM is still under Cheney's orders to "nuke Iran" in the event of a "terrorist attack" at home.

Not only is the nuclear attack here imminent, according to Capt. May and others, the recent Osama bin Laden tape, threatening a huge American attack, considered by many to be a fraud and orchestrated by the Bush Cabal, is another sign the American people are being psychologically prepped for a nuclear strike.

"Remember how the Bush Cabal works," added Capt. May. "Every attack has to be greater than first like sequels in a horror movie. Also remember the way they use names. First Oklahoma City, Okla., next New York City, N.Y. and what's next Texas City, Tex.?"

Besides Capt. May, the military source from Charleston, who talked last August anonymously, again when contacted this week, said "to watch out for something big in the weeks to come in the Houston, LA or Charleston area."

One other more obscure sign of an "impending disaster" is the alarming notice being put out by Bank of America officials, who in recent weeks have been secretly instructing bank managers and employees how to deal with customers in the case of a "national emergency."

And to verify this claim as well as LA being a feasible target, a Bank of America manager from Irvine, Ca., reported two weeks ago that her bank held a "workshop" where the last two days were dedicated to discussing new security measures.

According to the branch manager, the workshop included members from the Homeland Security Office who instructed employees how to field calls from customers and what they are to tell them in the event of a national disaster.

Apparently, the manager was told how only agents from Homeland Security, during such a disaster, would be in charge of opening safe deposit boxes and determining what items would be given to bank customers.

The manager then reported that she was instructed that no weapons, cash, gold, or silver will be allowed to leave the bank and only various paperwork will be given to its owners. After discussing the matter with them at length, she and the other employees were then told "not to discuss the subject with anyone."

Since speaking anonymously for fear of Homeland Security reprisals, the bank manager has recently given notice she is leaving Bank of America.

And to verify this claim, another Houston resident alerted about the California case, decided to recently question a local bank employee about any Homeland Security visits in Houston.

"I found the news alarming and decided to find out more myself," said the Houston resident wishing to remain anonymous. "On a trip to my bank here in Houston, I remarked to a young bank employee "well I guess you've been told all that stuff by the manager and the Homeland Security about what to tell your customers."

"And to my amazement, the young woman came right out and said yes she'd been through all that, then whispered to me across the counter, "But we're not supposed to talk about - I could lose my job."

International Jurists from 14 Countries Trying To Nail Bush and His Killer Cronies For Illegal Murder And Torture

The Bush killing machine is no secret overseas, as a coalition of legal experts based in Canada want to put Bush and his band of renegades behind bars. Too bad American jurists don't have the guts to do the same!

By Greg Szymanski

If a group of prominent international jurists get their way, a little known Canadian lawsuit could finally spell the end to President Bush and his killer cronies.

It is no secret the Bush administration has libeled and defamed the American people's good name, flaunting international law while torturing and slaughtering millions of innocents worldwide.

In fact, the Bush administration's "arrogance and bully-like swagger" when it comes to ignoring long-recognized, established principles of international law has become an utter embarrassment, changing America's longstanding motto of the Land of the Free to a country wrapped tightly in chains called the "Home of the Neocons."

Adding even more embarrassment is the sad fact that any serious legal battle to stop Bush in his tracks from ripping apart the country has not come from American jurists and lawyers, but from legal minds living abroad.

And in response to Bush's illegal torture and killing, ask the insane question why Americans have to look abroad for any legal help?

But that is exactly what is happening when looking at an obscure Canadian lawsuit where a group of international jurists are trying to come to the rescue of American citizens by mounting an attack on Bush and his band of killers, the foreign group of lawyers trying to stop Bush in his tracks while others in America have failed to even try for fear of retaliation.

The group of highly-respected jurists, called Lawyers Against the War (LAW), is a committee of international legal minds from 14 different countries, a group who banded together in 2001 to oppose the illegalities of the Bush administration's so-called "War on Terror."

And this week in Vancouver, Canada, the Canadian-based legal group filed appeal papers, challenging what they call "the corrupt ruling" and recent dismissal of torture charges filed against Bush in a previous lower court case dismissed in Canada.

The appeal, filed this week, is set to be heard later in the year in a British Columbia Court of Appeals.

Although the American mainstream media gives little attention to foreign cases and legal groups critical of Bush, LAW's spokesman said this week the American people need to be apprised of the "overwhelming worldwide consensus" among legal scholars and practicing jurists that Bush and the American leadership should be jailed for international criminal law violations, including murder and torture.

LAW co-chairperson Gail Davidson said the recent lower court ruling, dismissing Bush of any wrongdoing since he is a head of state, was improperly interpreted by the lower court while the immunity issue concerning Bush needs to be revisited.

"This is an important stage of the case, which most Americans have no idea about," said Davidson after filing court documents last week. "LAW is seeking to have Canadian laws properly interpreted and applied and the two lower courts have not allowed a proper hearing of the immunity issue."

Davidson added that "the Notice of Appeal lists numerous legal and factual errors committed by two lower courts that have so far heard only preliminary arguments in the case."

The errors she cites includes the December 6, 2004, ruling by Judge William Kitchen that Bush is immune from prosecution because he is a sitting head of state, as well as the December 19, 2005, ruling by the Supreme Court of B.C. that the prosecution was "an abuse of process," the real intention of which was "to use the criminal procedure as a forum to express political views."

However, in response to the lower court's interpretation on the grounds of abuse of process, LAW co-chair Michael Mandel categorically denied the case has been filed for "strictly political reasons."

"Canada is obligated under Canadian and international law to act effectively to prevent and punish torture, including the torture occurring at Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo Bay, and LAW has taken legal steps to enforce Canadian law," said Mandel.

The White House has refused to comment on the Canadian case and the filing of the recent appeal, stating only numerous times that Bush has always been acting in the best interest of America and its fight against the "War on Terror."

Supreme Court Justice To Get 'Taste Of His Own Eminent Domain Medicine'
East Coast activists want to build the 'Lost Liberty Inn' on the property of U.S. Supreme Court Justice David Souter. The measure is on the March 14 ballot in the small town of Weare NH, where Souter resides. This Sunday activists staged rally in Weare to 'turn the eminent domain tables' on Souter.

By Greg Szymanski

One of the more amusing stories making the rounds is how a little known activist group is trying to "turn the tables" on a Supreme Court Justice who corruptly ruled on extending government's power to take away private land under eminent domain.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice David Souter is getting a "taste of his own medicine" from a New Hampshire group called the Committee for the Preservation of Natural Rights and another California human rights group, both trying to make a loud public statement by getting Souter's home in the small town of Weare, New Hampshire, seized under eminent domain.

Both activist groups have been angered and are leading the charge against a recent high court ruling, making it virtually "a walk in the park" for local, state and federal entities to seize people's homes and property for economic development under what has become a watered down version of the eminent domain laws.

Keith La Casse, one of the leaders of the New Hampshire group, said Sunday the wheels are in motion for the city of Weare to vote on the matter in a March 14 election.

"We went to Weare today and decided to march outside of Souter's home in order to draw attention on the inequities of the recent eminent domain ruling," La Casse told the Arctic Beacon as the group was beginning its protest march Sunday in Souter's home town of Weare, population 8,500.

La Casse said more than enough of the 25 signatures needed to bring the matter on the March ballot were gathered in order to make way for the building of a hotel on Souter's property, appropriately called "The Lost Liberty Inn."

Although organizers admitted taking Souter's is an uphill battle, one of the main reason for pursuing the hotel idea, using his property, is to draw national attention to the unfairness of the recent eminent domain ruling.

Prior to the recent Supreme court ruling, eminent domain was usually considered "a last resort" where people's interests and property took major precedent over state interests. Now, under the ruling, propriety interests in land essentially shifts from private ownership to "public takeover," as the high court relaxed many of the legal protections against government land grabs.

A perfect example of the indiscriminate use of eminent domain is now taking place in New Orleans, as a federal judge last week cleared the way for the bulldozing of 44,000 homes in the 9th Ward where many homes are still salvageable by using eminent domain.

Under the judge's corrupt ruling, he is allowing the city to bulldoze down privately strictly with "notice to residents" but without due process or a proper hearing in order to determine if many of the displaced citizens object to the city's land grab.

"We are losing the battle and need help as many good homes are being destroyed and property seized," said Brandon Darby in a conversation from New Orleans. "There is so much corruption down here. Many homes are simply being stolen away as people have been purposely kept out of the city or when they return, authorities are making them jump through hoops."

While Darby is fighting the real street battle, back in New Hampshire the Natural Rights activists are trying to win the public relations battle. Besides LaCasse, Logan Clements of California has also been instrumental in bringing the unfairness of the Supreme Court ruling before the eyes of America.

"All we're trying to do is put an end to eminent domain abuse," Clements said, adding Souter deserves a taste of his own medicine. "Perhaps by having those who advocate or facilitate the unfairness feel what it's really like to be threatened with losing your property, then maybe they will understand why it needs to end."

La Casse and Clements said they have never personally spoken to Souter, but Kathy Arberg, a Supreme Court spokeswoman, issued a statement that Souter was not commenting on the petition filed by the group and the Lost Liberty Hotel idea.

Clements added the Sunday rally in Weare, a protest starting in the city and then making its way to Souter's 200-year-old brown renovated farmhouse, is being held in the spirit of the famous Pine Tree Riot which took place in 1771.

During that year, feisty Weare colonists physically overtook officials appointed by King George III who fined them for longing white pines without government approval.

The petition to take Souter's home goes to a vote March 14, but La Casse and Clements said they were still gathering more signatures on Sunday, gathering 10 in less than an hour with only one resident approached refusing to sign.

Activists were also distributing copies during the protest of the Supreme Court's corrupt eminent domain ruling, titled Kelo v. City of New London, the case which lowered the legal standards concerning government land grabs.

The court ruled in the Kelo case that the city could seize homeowners' property to develop a hotel, convention center, office space and condominiums next to Pfizer Inc.'s new research headquarters.

In the case, the city successfully argued that tax revenues and new jobs from the development would benefit the public. The Pfizer complex was built, but seven homeowners challenged the rest of the development in court. The Supreme Court's ruling against them prompted many states, including New Hampshire, to examine their eminent domain laws.

The Sunday rally not only brought out activists, but also several residents who lost their property in the Kelo case were on hand to voice their support for the Lost Liberty Hotel idea.

Also at the rally, supporting the city, State Rep. Neal Kurk of Weare, who is also sponsoring two pieces of eminent domain legislation in New Hampshire, said the group's idea is preposterous and will be soundly defeated.

"You don't go after a judge personally because you disagree with his judgments. Most people see this as an act of revenge and an improper attack on the judicial system," said Kurk, who added that the protestors will not be allowed to enter Souter's property located on the outskirts of town."

Former Washington Insider, Once Asked To Be President Carter's Campaign Finance Chairman, Said The Next 90 Days Could Bring Nuclear War And A U. S. Financial Collapse

Goerge Green, who once rubbed shoulders with the neocon 'movers and shakers,' has now changed teams, trying to spread the truth in order to stop the New World Order.

22 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

George Green sat next to Sen. Ted Kennedy, sipping cocktails.

On a table nearby, he noticed a bowl of white powder as Kennedy kept shooting the breeze and playing the part of a loudmouth big shot, something politicians are exceptionally good at after a few drinks and a snort of coke.

Green, a former Washington insider and financial whiz-kid, knew he was smack in the middle of a "den of wolves," when Kennedy, out of nowhere, made a ridiculous comment about his 14-year-old daughter who had just entered the room.

"Par for the course," some might say, considering the source.

But Green didn't brush it off so easily, taking offense at the time and 40 years later still wanting to pop Kennedy square in the nose for his rude comments about his young daughter.

"Even after I told him it was my daughter, he didn't care," said Green in an extended conversation from his Coeur d' Alene, Idaho, home, where he says he has taken refuge from the neo-con power brokers he once rubbed shoulders and walked with arm-in-arm.

The meeting where Kennedy disrespected his daughter took place two years before Jimmy Carter became President at an Aspen ski lodge, where Green was invited by the "movers and shakers" to talk over money strategy and how to fill the coffers of the corrupt Democratic Party.

Back then Green, who has since gone on the attack against government corruption, was just like the people who invited him to the affluent Aspen ski lodge: rich, egotistical, power-hungry and liable to do anything for money.

In fact, Green became so good at making money, besides the blood sucking politicians who invited him to Aspen, even the most powerful U.S. bankers wined and dined him, trying to get him to play ball on their "money team."

In the money circles, Green was considered a "cash cow." He was considered one of the big time players who knew how to raise money - lots of money -- something politicians are attracted to like bees on honey or, more appropriately like "flies on you know what."

So, two years before Carter was elected, he found himself sitting in a lounge at an Aspen ski lodge with the big shots like Kennedy and Paul A. Volcker, former chairman of the Board of Governors of the U.S. Federal Reserve System and North American chairman of The Trilateral Commission.

"I remember being flown to Aspen in a private jet and then being asked to be the Democratic Finance Chairman for the Carter election," said Green last week on Greg Szymanski's radio show, The Investigative Journal. "I remember then saying I was a Republican and then Paul Volcker, leaned over and said "That's OK, kid. It doesn't matter, we control them both."

But besides the political talk, Green said he was privy to listening to initial chatter about the infamous Armageddon plan called Global Report 2000, a mass genocidal plan to drastically reduce to the world's population, eventually endorsed as official U.S. policy during the Carter administration.

And the Aspen global rumblings, overheard by Green, turned out to be more than just idle parlor talk by a group of drunken politicians. It turned out, according to Green, to be "the God-awful truth."

"Kissinger loved to refer to the American public as 'useless eaters' and back then all the men in that room in Aspen, including Kennedy, Volcker and the others were endorsing this Armageddon-type plan, which is now being played out right before our very eyes in Iraq and soon in Iran," warned Green, adding the next 90 days may prove to be the beginning of the end of America as we know it.

"I worry about the next 90 days. All the signs are leading to nuclear war and an economic collapse."

Since the Aspen meeting, Green's made a complete about-face, snubbing his nose on the neo-cons and trying in the 1980's to expose their genocidal plans. Although his efforts to use his millions never materialized in a corrupt, neocon controlled Hollywood, he began publishing anti-establishment books in what he considered to be "the only viable outlet left to get out the truth" in a country headed in the direction of fascism and martial law.

"They even tried to end my publishing house after putting out Gerald Carroll's book, Project Seek, about the Onassis connection to the Kennedy assassination," said Green who still is fighting back against his old neo-con buddies on his informative web site at www.nohoax.com.

Asked why the power brokers and war mongers haven't tried to stamp out him or his anti-neocon message, he added:

"They really don't care any more because I think the powers that be feel they have already won."

And Green's ominous message of a devastating financial collapse in America in the next 90 days has been verified by reports circulating that the neocon's long plan of world domination and collapsing the U.S. economy are imminent.

Other financial analysts, along with Green, have been sounding the "red warning signal," saying 2006 will spell the end for America based on five major signs as listed on the Italian web site BellaCiao:

"Sign 1: The U.S., Great Britain and Israel are preparing to attack Iran. As it appears the main reason for invading Iraq was to stop it from selling oil in Euros, likewise Iran has plans to dump the dollar come March 2006.

"Sign 2: U.S. Treasury Secretary John Snow issued a warning recently that the U.S. Government is on the verge of collapse - as the statutory debt limit imposed by Congress of $8.184 trillion dollars would be reached in mid-February - the government would then be unable to continue its normal operations. Considering the current total U.S. debt stands at $8.162 trillion dollars, once the official debt ceiling ($8.184 trillion) is reached, the U.S. government's credit abroad (its borrowing power) is gone. Those countries (mainly China) who presently keep America afloat by holding U.S. Treasury Notes, will most likely no longer continue doing so.

"Sign 3: Bank Of America and Compass Bank managers (probably all other U.S. banks too) have been instructing their employees in the last few weeks on how to respond to customer demands in the event of a collapse of the U.S. economy - specifically telling the employees that only agents from the Department Of Homeland Security will have authority to decide what belongings customers may have from their safe deposit boxes - and that precious metals and other valuables will not be released to U.S. citizens. The bank employees have been strictly prohibited from revealing the banks' new "guidelines" to anyone. (however, employees have been talking to friends and family)

"Sign 4: FEMA has activated and is currently staffing its vast network of empty internment camps with armed military personnel - unknown to most Americans, these large federal facilities are strategically positioned across the U.S. landscape to "manage" the population in the event of a "terrorist" attack, a civilian uprising, large-scale dissent ,or an insurrection against the government. Some of these razor-wired facilities have the capacity of detaining a million people.

"Sign 5: The Patriot Act and the US Senate's vote to ban habeas corpus (Nov 14th) - along with George W. Bush having signed executive orders giving him sole authority to impose martial law, suspend habeas corpus and ignore the Posse Comitatus Act, have together pretty much destroyed any notions of freedom and justice for Americans."

To back up the gloomy forecast and the fact the destruction of America has been on the neocon agenda for years, Green has outlined a quick history of Global Report 2000 on his web site, complete with statistics and quotes from American politicians, going all the way back to former Secretary of State, Edmund Muskie, calling for the elimination of 2 billion people by the year 2000.

"I might add," said Green. "There's a lot to worry about because the neocons are actually behind schedule."

On his web site the following points regarding Global Report 2000 should be seriously considered when looking at the present situation around the world, the devaluation of the dollar and the declining condition of the U.S. economy.

"In July of 1980, Secretary of State endorsed as official Carter administration policy the Global 2000 report, which according to then Secretary of State Edmund Muskie's own words "THE ELIMINATION OF 2 billion human beings by the year...2000. The Office of Population Affairs of the U.S. State Department from the National Security Council's Ad Hoc Group on Population policy, U.S. Foreign Polity is being planned and implemented on the basis of its effectiveness in murdering human beings.

"Unprecedented Population growth as spelled out in the ECO summit Meeting in 1992 in Brazil has required the examination of the statistics provided in the studies of "Human Environment" (1972), "Population" (1974), "Human Settlements" (1976), "Water" (1977) and others has shown the MOST growth of Human species in the last 40 years. The first Billion of population occurred on the planet around 1800, the next century ended with about two Billion, the 3rd Billion around 1960, the 4th Billion in approximately 1974 and reach 5 Billion in 1987. We currently exceed 6 Billion on the Planet and the Technicians of Genocide are now stepping up their programs.

"Thomas Ferguson was the head of the Latin America desk at the U.S. State Department's Office of Population Affairs. "Every hot spot in the Third World is in fact a result of failed population policy. There is a single theme behind all of our work - we must reduce population levels. Either governments do it our way, through nice clean methods, or they will get the kinds of mess that we have in Iran or Beirut. Population is a political problem. Once population is out of control, it requires authoritarian government, even FASCISM, to reduce it. To really reduce population quickly, you have to put all the males into fighting and you have to kill significant numbers of fertile females.

"At present 250 million Africans are threatened with death by starvation and AIDS, nearly twenty million in the coming months. The immediate cause is a collapse in food production in most areas of the continent. In truth, the collapse of African agriculture is due to the 'Global 2000' policies of the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, and like agencies of the NWO.

"The lending policies of the World Bank, under Global 2000 supporter, Robert McNamara, have been designed to force African nations NOT to develop irrigation or any advance farming techniques but to rely on labor intensive low technologies."

According to Green's analysis, the following is a country-by-country of the devastating effects Global Report 2000 has had on the world:

"ETHIOPIA: Some 5 million people are in danger of starvation. Ethiopia-Somalia warfare largely provoked by Henry Kissinger.

"SOMALIA: 1.5 million refugees and many more nomadic people wait for death. Government is seeking $2 billion in reconstruction aid. United Nations actions are a preparation for the understanding and use of the NEW WORLD ORDER Police Force to control the world and put us all under the dictums of the United Nations.

"KENYA: Acute hunger and starvation are occurring in the Karamoja and West Nile regions. 9000 women and children died over a two month period. Food relief is nonexistent.

"According to Rep. Richard Ottinger, Democratic congressman from New York's Westchester County area, sponsor of the Population Policy Act of 1981, "Overpopulation is a national security question." We have much greater demand on our food stocks, and WE WILL MAKE GOD-LIKE decisions on WHO LIVES and WHO DOES NOT.

"William Paddock, advisor to the U.S. State Department under three administrations. In 1980 he was an unofficial advisor to the State Department Office of Population. In an interview, "We're going to see a rollback of the population. It will happen somehow. One of the four horseman, and the FIFTH ONE, WHICH IS "THE BOMB."

"Rep. Paul McClosky, "Population is worse than Nuclear Proliferation." When you are trying to dispense contraceptives and advice, as AIDS tried to spread condoms all over the world, you have to question if that is a valid program."

"Henry Kissinger, National Security Memorandum #200, "Reduction of the rate of population in these States is a matter of vital U.S. national security. The U.S. economy will require large and increasing amounts of mineral from abroad, especially from less-developed countries. That fact gives US enhanced interests in the political, economic and social stability of the supplying countries. Wherever a lessening of population can increase the prospects for such stability, population policy becomes relevant to resources, supplies and to economic interests of the United States." "

"President George Bush: "Out of these troubled times, our fifth objective - a new world order - can emerge. We are now in sight of a United Nations that performs as envisioned by its founders." September 11, 1990.

More Bush quotes:

"(The Gulf Crisis) has to do with a new world order. And that world order is only going to be enhanced if this newly activated peacekeeping function of the United Nations proves to be effective." January 9, 1991.

"When we are successful, and WE WILL BE, we have real chance at this new world order, an order in which a credible United Nations can use its peacekeeping role to fulfill the promise and vision of the UN's founders." January 16, 1991.

Is George H.W. Bush Really Prescott Bush's Son? Or Is He The Son Of Inventor Nikola Tesla's German-Born Accountant, George H. Scherff, Sr.?
Eric Orion in his yet to be published book, The Bush Connection, claims SS Nazi, Otto Skorzeny, told him in a death bed confession that Bush has been lying all along about his identity and was born in Germany, the son of Tesla's accountant.

By Greg Szymanski

The history books say Hitler's personal body guard and henchman Otto Skorzeny died in 1975.

Eric Orion of Florida says the former Nazi killer was alive and well only a few years ago, living under a fake CIA alias as a south Florida carpenter.

According to Orion, Skorzeny died several years ago at the ripe old age of 95 but not before he spilled out his guts to him in a death bed confession.

And after hearing Skorzeny's story -- a story so bizarre and incredible -- it simply leaves mouths hanging wide open, wondering how in the world this could happen in America.

"I was dating this girl in south Florida and her father turned out to be the feared Nazi SS body guard to Hitler, Otto Skorzeny," said Orion in an extended conversation from his Florida home, adding Skorzeny spilled the beans himself, not his x-girlfriend who remains tight lipped about her father's past. "When I met him, he was 90 but looked a lot younger. He was 6'4" with the biggest hand I ever shook in my life."

Recently, Orion also was a guest on Greg Szymanski's radio show, The Investigative Journal, where he claimed, based on Skorzeny's allegations, the American government has been lying since 1945 about the identities and whereabouts of thousands of former Nazis given safe haven and living in America today.

Orion also said Skorzeny gave him "a shoebox full" of never before published pictures, linking many high-ranking American officials to Nazi war criminals, as well as information that George H. Bush has been lying about his true identity and was really the adopted son of Prescott Bush.

He also claims that Hitler was given safe haven in America and Nazi criminals, Dr. Josef Mengele, nicknamed the Angel of Death, and Nazi SS killer, Reinhard Gehlen, were still alive and walking the streets of America as of three years ago.

"I met with Skorzeny on three separate occasions for roughly five hours and he said that George H.W. Bush was and is a SS Nazi spy born in Germany as George H. Scherff, Jr.," said Orion. "He told me that Bush was really the son of Dr. Nikola Tesla's German born, illegal immigrant accountant, George H. Scherff, Sr., being later adopted by Prescott Bush.

"Apparently, according to Skorzeny, in 1938, Hitler sent 14-year-old George Jr. to befriend, spy and kill Tesla, who later on Jan. 6, 1943, was actually killed by Skorzeny and SS Nazi Reinhard Gehlen. Bush, however, later forged a birth certificate while Prescott Bush, a known Nazi, adopted him, covered his real identity and later helped him join the Navy under false pretenses."

Asked if he thought Skorzeny had any reason to lie and why he was chosen to hear his deathbed confession, Orion added:

"No, I believe he is for real. His pictures matched up with the history books and he told me he was coming forward with this information because the Bush family had cheated him out of a lot of money over the years. In the end, I think he wanted to get even and there were so many specifics that later I verified, leading me to believe he was telling me the truth.

"I also spent five years researching this information and have written a book, called The Bush Connection, yet to be published. Like I said my book took five years of painstaking research to complete and my motivation was to show Americans how our government illegally brought over 50,000 Nazis to America to create a New World Order and Fourth Reich in America under the guidance of George H. Bush.

"I also want to say that I've learned throughout the course of my research that our government is still protecting these Nazis, like they did Skorzeny up until his death."

After learning about the damaging Bush information and the underground network to hide Nazis, Orion went to the Justice Department for help but instead received nothing but harassment and death threats.

"They came after me big time," he said. "Right after I told them I was at my girlfriend's house and her mother went white as a ghost after receiving a phone call. I think she was informed that I was on to her husband's identity.

"That night after I left Skorzeny's house, I was followed, run off the road and it looked like one of the men in the car had a handgun. They are also tracking my mail, as well as hacking into my computer and keeping a close eye on my activities."

Besides the Bush allegations, Skorzeny laid several other bombshells on Orion, including the truth about Adolph Hitler's death and that Bush's role as a war hero was intentionally fabricated.

"Skorzeny told me he helped fake Hitler's suicide in 1945 and actually shot Hitler's double between the eyes, leaving him there in place of Adolph," said Orion. "He then said that he flew off with Hitler and SS Nazi pilot Hanna Reitsch to safety in Austria. Skorzeny then told me he turned himself in to Americans and later helped co-found the American CIA with Nazi George H. Scherff, Jr., aka George H. Bush."

Orion also said that Skorzeny confirmed reports that already surfaced in the New York Post made by an old war buddy of Bush, Chester Mierzejewski, who questioned Bush's account of how his plane went down during World War II, leading to his so-called "hero status."

In the article, Mierzejewski, who was a recipient of The Distinguished Flying Cross, claimed he had a bird's eye view of the Bush cockpit when he saw Bush abandon his crew and bail out, leaving his two crew members to die.

Robert Flood, a former B-17 bombardier, also claimed Bush was "no war hero," saying he violated the primary rule for a captain of a multi-crew aircraft.

"The pilot never leaves the airplane with anybody in it," said Flood.

Orion said that Skorzeny told him the CIA is really Hitler's "Third Reich" in America, the agency being created to manipulate intelligence and lie to the American people.

Going back to the stolen Tesla technology and the CIA's role, he added:

"The CIA uses stolen Tesla technology, according to Skorzeny, to spy on Americans and manipulate the weather. There are thousands of satellites orbiting the earth that project high intensity positively charged laser beams to certain areas on the earth. These positively charged laser beams enable the New World Order Nazis/C.I.A. to use their stolen Tesla Technology to manipulate the weather & to transmit extremely low frequency "elf" waves with subliminal messages for mind control purposes.

"When HAARP is active, giant space based lasers simultaneously aim their beams to a central "spot" on earth. That "spot" will then experience severe droughts, hurricanes, tornados or earthquakes. Spontaneous Human Combustion or "SHC" occurs when these lasers are pointed directly at human beings.

"Hurricane Katrina was allegedly a man-made disaster. Bush was quick to mention that it was a "natural disaster." It was created to distract America's attention away from Bush's latest unqualified fascist neo-con, Supreme Court of Injustice appointees.

"Eyewitnesses allegedly saw the levees in New Orleans being blown up by US soldiers after they had survived the storm intact. Katrina was a low, Category 3 storm. Not a CAT 4 or 5 as initially claimed! The levees were intentionally blown up to help Bush's neo-con insurance company cronies. Most homes are covered by wind damage insurance only. Not flooding. If the houses were damaged by flooding instead of wind damage then the insurance companies do not have to pay out any claims.

"This man-made diversion allowed Bush & OPEC the opportunity to "rape" the American tax payers once again by increasing the price of gas for no legitimate reason other than to make billions of dollars of profit at their expense!"

New Mexico Begins Legislative Process To Ban Aspartame

Fifteen state senators sponsored a bill to rid New Mexico of what some have called "Rumsfeld's Disease."

By Greg Szymanski

A senate bill to rid New Mexico of what has been called "Rumsfeld's Disease" was introduced Thursday by Sen. Gerald Ortiz y Pino, D-Albuquerque, as 15 other senators from both sides of isle also signed on, supporting legislation to ban the deadly artificial sweetener, aspartame.

Linked to Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld for his efforts in the 1970s for putting the sweetener on the market, New Mexico is the first state to consider banning the artificial additive linked to numerous ill-health affects, including cancer.

If passed, no food containing any amount of the sweetener could be manufactured, sold or delivered in New Mexico, beginning July 1.

After the bill was introduced Thursday morning, Sen. Ortiz y Pino, appearing on Greg Szymanski's radio show, The Investigative Journal, said he needs support from six more senators for passage if the anti-aspartame legislation makes its way for a vote during the short 30-day legislative session.

The Albuquerque democrat also said the bill needs to be put on the "governor's call list" in order for it to be heard, remaining optimistic since Gov. Bill Richardson has expressed strong concern about the health hazards of aspartame in the past.

"I decided to introduce this bill, despite strong opposition by lobbyists because it is the right thing to do and many of my constituents feel the artificial sweetener is dangerous," said Sen. Ortiz y Pino while appearing on The Investigative Journal.

"I am very optimistic that the banning of aspartame will be passed into law since 15 senators signed on with me to support the bill. I know of one other who has said he join us, leaving only six more votes to get it passed in the senate if it comes to a vote this session."

Besides the senate bill, New Mexico's House of Representatives has also introduced a similar bill, House Bill 202, calling for the same ban on aspartame.

The House version of the bill was introduced by Gallup democrat, Irvin Harrison, who claims the measure, if passed, "means a vital national and international precedent would be set, one which could precipitate a new era of consumer protection in the United States and other nations."

New Mexico resident and Santa Fe art gallery owner Stephen Fox has been one of the main activists pushing to raise public awareness and outlaw the use of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA)- approved additive.

Fox and many others trying to ban aspartame have for years been trying to warn unsuspecting users of the dangers, saying aspartame contains "poisonous and deadly toxins."

Before legislation was introduced, Fox tried to get aspartame banned through the state's Environmental Improvement Board (EIB), but after pressure from aspartame lobbyists, postponed any action on Fox's request until July.

The New Mexico Legislature established the EIB in 1978 to handle rules on the state's food and water supply, liquid waste, air quality and radiation control. However, any action by the legislature to ban aspartame would supersede an EIB ruling.

Although the EIB said in October that it had the necessary power to handle Fox's petition, on Nov. 9, the board backtracked, asking in writing for Attorney General Patricia Madrid's opinion on whether state law gives it the authority to regulate aspartame and whether the board could carry out Fox's request to outlaw or put warning labels on products that contain the sweetener. The board has not received an answer from Madrid.

Regarding the adverse health affects from aspartame, a recent report from a highly respected international medical team has now linked the toxins in aspartame to lymphomas and leukemias.

The report by Morando Soffritti "Aspartame induces lymphomas and leukemias in rats" is in the European Journal of Oncology for July, 2005. Dr. Soffritti is a member of the European Ramazzini Foundation of Oncology and Environmental Sciences Cancer Research Centre in Bologna, Italy.

As reported, Dr. Soffritti and his team carefully set the conditions whereby genetically-uniform test rats were treated equally with the exception of being divided into groups given varying levels of the toxic chemical sweetener.

According to health experts, rats are deemed appropriate subjects for testing aspartame on humans because both humans and rats metabolize the methyl ester in aspartame into methyl alcohol, then formaldehyde then formic acid - all deadly poisons.

Neurosurgeon Russell Blaylock, MD, one of the world's leading authorities on aspartame neuro toxicity, extensively reviewed the Soffritti report.

"This study confirmed the previous study by Dr. Trocho and co-workers (1998), which also found the formaldehyde breakdown product of aspartame to be damaging to cellular DNA and that this damage was cumulative," said Dr. Blaylock. "The type of damage was a duplicate of that associated with cancers. These two studies strongly indicate that drinking a single diet cola sweetened with aspartame every day could significantly increase one's risk of developing a lymphoma or leukemia.

"This study should terrify mothers and all those consuming aspartame sweetened products. This was a carefully done study which clearly demonstrated a statistically significant increase in several types of lymphomas and leukemias in rats. Both of these malignancies have increased significantly in this country since the widespread use of aspartame.

"They also found an increased incidence of malignant brain tumors, even though it was not statistically significant. This does not mean there is no association to brain tumors, since ONLY the animals exposed to aspartame developed the tumors. With children and pregnant women drinking the largest amount of diet colas, this puts their children at the greatest risk of developing one of these horrible diseases. Their found that even lower doses of aspartame could cause these malignancies, yet, the higher the dose, the more cancers that were seen.

"Since aspartame can increase obesity and may even cause the metabolic syndrome that affects 48 million Americans, there is no reason to ever consume this product. At the least, it should be immediately banned from all schools."

Deep Within The Bowels Of The Vatican And Illuminati: The Small Public Chapter of Svali's Life Coming To An End

Svali says no more interviews but will still try and spread the word of truth through her Christian fellowship group called 'The Lion and the Lamb Ministries.'

19 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski
Part IV

The final curtain on this public chapter of Svali's life is coming to a close.

One radio interview and a series of print articles about her involvement in the feared Illuminati and then back to private life, a life of spreading truth in a Christian fellowship group she founded called Lion and Lamb Ministries.

"I was up all night before the radio interview today. It is very difficult to talk about this because of what I experienced as a child. It is also very dangerous, as people in the this group can be very dangerous and ruthless" said Svali, 48, after a making a one-time appearance Wednesday on Greg Szymanski's radio show, The Investigative Journal, on both the Republic Broadcasting(RBN) and Genesis Communications (GCN) Radio Networks.

On the talk shows, Svali gasped for breadth several times and was emotionally shaken when recalling how she was brainwashed as a young child and then how she was subjected to watching a young child being sacrificed at her Illuminati induction ceremony at the Vatican at age 12. Her graphic description of the evil Vatican ceremony is contained in Part II of this series.

"I hope what I am trying to tell people will help save the lives of other children, as well as show people how organized and dangerous these people in the Illuminati really are," said Svali, who was born into what insiders call the "Family or Order," running from the group's evil clutches 10 years ago.

"Growing up in the secret organization, I was one of the most loyal followers, rising fast in the group's power structure. By 22, I became a head programmer and trainer of others in the secret group. But as I grew up, I began to see the lies. I finally risked everything and left, understanding that the Illuminati ends to not justify the means."

Although Illuminati mind control programs are numerous and diverse, Svali became an expert in the group's brainwashing techniques, as a head trainer overseeing the work of at least 60 others in the San Diego area.

Recalling a typical day in the life of a mind control programmer working on other Illuminati members, Svali wrote down an hour by hour summary of one of her days which didn't end to the early hours of the next morning.

Note how Svali admits to changing her personality from day to night like Dr. Jekyll And Mr. Hyde, a result of years of Illuminati brainwashing. Her story is picked up 9:30pm in the evening after a full day and just before going to bed:

"9:30: I get ready to go to bed. I have to get ten to twelve hours of sleep a night, or I am completely exhausted. Many times, I fall asleep reading to my two children. Just before falling asleep, I say to my husband, "Remember" and give him the code that lets us know we have to wake up later. He replies in German that he remembers.

"1:00 am.: My husband wakes me up. He and I take turns being the one to wake up the others. We don't need an alarm, because our internal body clocks wake us up. I am in my sweats, I fell asleep dressed to make it easier when I rise in the middle of the night. I am finally me, I can come out now and see the outside world, not locked inside as I am during the day. "Get the kids," he says in a low tone. I go upstairs and tell them, "Get ready, now." They are up instantly, completely obedient which is very different from during the day. Quickly, silently they put their shoes on and I take them down to the car.

"My husband drives, I am in the passenger seat. He drives with the headlights off until we are on the road so we won't wake our neighbors up. We live in the country on a dirt lane and there are few houses to worry about. My job is to keep alert, looking for anyone following us, to alert him if anyone is coming.

"Once we are down the road and turn onto the paved road, he turns the headlights on and we go to the meeting. "I didn't finish my homework," my son says. My husband and I turn briefly to him, enraged. "We don't talk about day at night, EVER!" we remind him." Do you want to be beaten?" He looks hurt, then the rest of the drive is in silence, the children looking out the windows of the car as we glide silently to our destination.

"1:20 am: We are at the first checkpoint at the military base. We drove in the back entrance and are waved through, the lookouts recognize our car and our license plates. They would stop anyone who wasn't familiar or authorized to be there. We will pass two more checkpoints before coming to the meeting area. It is at a large field on a major marine base that includes hundreds of acres. Small tents are erected, and temporary bases set up for the night's exercises. We come either here, or to one of three different meeting places, three times a week.

"People are chatting and drinking coffee. There are a lot of friendships here, because everyone is working towards the same goal. The work is intense and the friendships are just as intense. I join a group of trainers, who I know well. "Looks like Chrysa is missing," I say. "I bet the lazy b--- couldn't get out of bed." I am very different at night. I use words that would horrify me during the day, and I am very catty and mean. The others laugh. "She was late two weeks ago, too," says another. "Maybe we will need to REPORT her." He is joking, but partly serious. No one is allowed to be late, or sick. Or too early, either. There is a ten minute window of time when all members are supposed to report to meetings. If not, then they are punished if there isn't a good excuse. High fevers, surgery, or an auto accident are considered excuses. PMS, fatigue, or the car not working aren't.

"We drink coffee to stay awake, since even our dissociated state doesn't stop the body's protest at being awake in the middle of the night after a full day's activities. I go to the tent to change into my uniform. We all wear uniforms at night, and we all have ranks too, based on how high we are in the group and how well we do.

"1:45 am: We start going to our assigned tasks. I have brought the log books with me, the "item" that I was asked to remember. I keep them hidden in a closet at home, locked in a steel box. These books contain data about different "subjects" that we have been working on.

"I go to the head trainer's room inside a nearby building. I work with him, since I am the second trainer under him. He and I despise each other, and I suspect he would love to undermine me since I have made many cruel jokes at his expense. I am supposed to be afraid of him, and I am, but I also cannot respect him, and he knows it. I point out his mistakes to him, in front of others, and he often tries to get back at me.

"1:50 am: The room inside the warehouse-like building is set up to work on the subjects. It has a table, a light, and equipment. The room is apart from the activities going on outside, so that others will not be distracted by what we do here.

"The subject is there, ready to be worked on. Another, younger trainer is there to help, and I tell her to administer the medication. We are working on medications to help induce hypnotic states, and are studying the effects of these medications, combined with hypnosis and trauma. The medication is injected subcutaneously, and then we wait. Within ten minutes, the subject is drowsy and his breathing is slower and heavier, but his eyes are open which is what we want. (I will not describe the rest of the session here, it is too painful for me to describe at this time. I believe that human experimentation is cruel and should be stopped, but the group that I was in did it on a continuous basis). We record information in the logbook throughout the session, and I have a laptop computer into which I am putting the information as well. We are profiling not just the medication, but also this person's individual response.

"We have profiles that are very complete and thorough on this person, started when he was an infant. I can pull up a special profile that tells me everything about him: his favorite colors, foods, sexual preferences, soothing techniques, and a list of all the codes that will elicit a response from him. There is also a diagram of his internal world that has been created over the years. This subject is easy to work with and things go quickly. I correct the young trainer at one point, when she starts to do something too soon. "You have to learn patience," I chide her in German. At night, we all talk German, it and English are the two lingua francas in this group. "I'm sorry, I thought it was time," she says. I then teach her the signs to look for when the subject is ready. This is why I am a head trainer. I train the younger ones, because after years and years, I know human anatomy, physiology, and psychology inside out. Luckily, I caught this young trainer before she made the mistake; if she had made one, I would have had to punish her.

"At night, mistakes aren't accepted, ever. Once a child is two or three, they are expected to perform correctly, or they are brutalized. This continues into adulthood.

"2: 35: The session is almost over and the subject is recovering. The medication is quick acting and he will recover in time to drive home. I leave him in the care of the younger trainer and go to the coffee room to take a break. There I smoke a cigarette and having coffee with the other trainers. During the day, I have never smoked and coffee makes me ill, but here, at night, it is completely different.

"How's your night going?" Jamie, a friend, asks. I only know her as Jamie, it isn't her real name, but we all go by our nicknames at night. She is also one of the teachers at the school during the day, but we aren't friends there. "Slow. I had to correct another stupid kid," I say. I am not kind at night, because no one has ever been kind to me. It is a very dog- eat-dog and political atmosphere where the cruel win.

"How about you?" I ask. She grimaces. "I had to march some brats around", she says, referring to military exercises with children ages 8 to 10. Every night there are military exercises, because the group is preparing for the eventual takeover. The children are divided into groups by age, and different adults take turns teaching. We chat for a few minutes, and then go back to our "jobs".

"2: 45: This is a short session. It is a "tune up" for a member who is one of the military leaders. I take his profile out and review it before starting. The head trainer and one other trainer are working with me. The hypnotic induction goes quickly, and he remembers his programming. It is reinforced with shock, and we check through all parameters. They are all active and in place. I sigh with relief. This was an easy one, and he doesn't fight us. Afterwards, I am soothing and kind. "You did well, " I tell him. Inside a little trickle in my stomach revolts at the use of brutality to teach. He nods, still slightly dazed from the session. "You can be proud of yourself," I tell him, and pat his hand. He is given his reward afterwards, and spends time with a child. He is a pedophile and this is how he is comforted after his session.

"3:30: We have changed out of our uniforms, which are placed in a special hamper to be cleaned. My clothes, which were neatly folded on a shelf are back on, and we are all in the car on the way home. My daughter speaks. "I get promoted next week," she says, her voice proud. "They said I did really well in the exercises tonight."

She knows that I and the other adults will be at the ceremony to honor the promotions. "I'm glad," I tell her. I am weary for some reason. Usually, I would be glad, but tonight, although it was a routine night, was hard. I have been feeling little cold trickles inside me lately, twinges of terror. Sometimes, I hear a child inside, deep inside, screaming, and I sweat as I work on children or adults. And I wonder how long I can keep doing this. I have heard of trainers who broke down or couldn't do their job, and I also heard whispered stories of what happened to them. It was the essence of nightmares, and I shove down my own anxiety.

"4:00 am: We are home and collapse into bed, instantly asleep. The children fell asleep before we got home, and my husband and I carried them to bed. We all sleep dreamlessly and deeply.

"7:00 am: I wake up to the alarm, tired. It seems I am always tired, and this morning I have a slight headache. I hurry to get the kids up and get ready to teach another day. I wonder if there is something wrong with me, since I seem to need more and more sleep and still wake up tired. I have no idea that the night before, I was up and living my other life."

Days like Svali detailed above happened often. For years she essentially led a dual existence, somehow balancing the day and night life through sophisticated programming techniques embedded in her psyche from childhood.

Now, 10 years later after finally being united with her two children after the Illuminati left her penniless, Svali still fears repercussions but believes it's important to warn Americans that Illuminati is stepping up efforts to destroy America.

"I was told in my lifetime or my children's lifetime, America would be completely taken over," said Svali. "The group believes they are 'The Chosen Ones. They believe they can become God if they follow the Illuminati agenda.

"America was once viewed as a missionary ground by the 12 European Fathers or heads of the Illuminati. But now they have infiltrated every aspect of government, finance and the media, preparing the population for drastic changes.

"The spiritual center of the Illuminati here is in Pittsburgh. Yes, George W. Bush went to Pittsburgh right after he was elected to speak at a Masonic Lodge for that reason. The group and its members use signs and symbols and they are all over America if you take the time to look.

Svali daid the Illuminati's display of arrogance as well as its members being programmed to feel they are invincible and above the law are now visible to all Americans if they closely watch the actions of their government leaders, a group Svali readily admits "are card-carrying Illuminati members."

"Wars. A military state. A loss of civil rights. An upcoming financial collapse that will make the "Great Depression" look like a Sunday picnic," said Svali who still holds out hope that the Illuminati can be stopped before America is destroyed. "It all goes back to the Vatican and all of our leaders take their marching orders from Rome. This is not fiction. I know because I lived it for many years."

Although many researchers of the Illuminati feel that America is doomed, Svali feels differently:

"The Illuminati and other groups that are organizing to create a world order based on the occult are hoping that this won't happen. But history is against them. They base their principles and spirituality on the occultism of ancient Rome, Crete, and Babylon. But look what happened to the original practitioners! Their rules ended, and God brought those rulers filled with pride to dust. I know that this is the end of the Illuminati and any other occult groups as well; God has given us a wonderful glimpse in Daniel of their eventual fate.

"There is only one rule, one kingdom that will last forever, and that is the reign of Jesus. His reign has already begun in His church, and this gives me hope and joy, and takes away the fear of what the occult "planners" can do. I've placed my bet on the winning side, and moved from darkness to His kingdom."

Fed Up With Lies And Deceit, Svali Turns Tail And Runs From The Feared Illuminati

After being brainwashed and heavily schooled in the "12 Disciplines" of the Illuminati, Svali is now trying to base her life on a foundation of truth not lies.

18 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski
Part III

Svali wised up. At age 38, she turned tail and ran from the clutches of the Illuminati in San Diego.

No more secret meetings in nearby Escondido guarded with heavy Illuminati security.
No more pushing "The Family" agenda as a head mind control trainer.

She was simply fed up with the lies, deceit, torture, bribery and killing, deciding 10 years ago to call it quits on her wealthy parents and the members of the insidious Illuminati.

Brainwashed as a child, she finally saw through the lies, the evil and decided to start all over again, landing in northern Texas where she has now began a Christian ministry with a foundation in truth, not Illuminati lies.

If Svali was in the mafia, she'd probably be at the bottom of the Pacific with her feet in cement. But the Illuminati chose to try and bury her in a more subtle way, choosing to leave her penniless, separating her from her two children and claiming she was bi-polar or psychotic.

It's a simple method: If the "turncoat messenger" is high-level, high-profile or extremely dangerous to the Illuminati cause, kill them and make it look like an accident or a death from natural causes.

But if they're like Svali, knowledgeable but in middle management of the Illuminati pack, they usually let them die a slow death from isolation, fear and poverty. Further, the Illuminati strategy is to deny, deny, deny and discredit, discredit, discredit until hell freezes over if need be.

Think about it. Is it better to create an ugly scene, drawing attention with violence? Or is it more effective to depict Svali as a psychotic, delusional woman who talks off the top of her head without any basis in fact?

But through all the tough times since leaving her wealthy past, Svali said her main reason for calling it quits after being schooled religiously in the "12 Steps of Discipline" most of her life, was her growing awareness that the "Illuminati ends to not justify the means."

"I wrote Breaking the Chain, my book that is yet to be published, several years ago, when my children were being held hostage by the cult. At that time, my husband was still active, and to punish me for leaving, and in an attempt to bring me back, literally held them hostage," said Svali in a written statement, adding she felt obligated to inform Americans about the Illuminati's devious future plans.

"We would go into court hearings, in which he and his lawyer attempted to make me appear foolish for stating that he was cult active. He would then turn around, and after the hearing, come to me and say, "You can have them back if you will come back..."

"I swore to write a chapter a week, exposing the group that held my children and my husband hostage, and this book was born. After four painful years, through a miracle of God's goodness, I regained full custody of my children. As a result, my (now ex-husband) left the cult as well and is currently pursuing his own wholeness in therapy."

During her many years of loyal service to the Illuminati, she became aware of the intricate details in many of the criminal activities initiated by the cult, citing the main money-making schemes in the opening chapter of her book not yet published. The following is a partial list of some of the criminal activities, designed to raise enormous sums of cash while destroying innocent lives, sponsored by the Illuminati:

Illuminati Money-Making Schemes

"Drug running: The Illuminati linked up with the Mafia and the Columbians, years ago, to help each other out with bringing drugs into the United States. They also provide couriers for taking drugs and money out of the States. The Illuminists are generally wealthy businessmen, who have 4 layers of people underneath them. The fourth layer down actually has contact with the people in the drug industry. They never identify themselves as Illuminists; only as people interested in investing, with a guaranteed profit, and are highly secretive. In return, the local groups supply people willing to be couriers of money or drugs, or people willing to help cover for the local operations.

"Pornography: The Illuminati are linked in many cities with pornography, prostitution, child prostitution and white slavery sales. Again, several layers are present, as a buffer, between the true "management" and those either engaged in the activities, or in paying for/funding and eventually being paid for the activities.

"Children are often supplied from the local cult groups, and taught to be child prostitutes (and later, adult prostitutes); are photographed and filmed in every type of pornography available, including "snuff films" and violent films.

"Gun running: The Illuminati and other groups are also involved in international gun sales and shipments. The Illuminists have well trained couriers who will cross international and state lines. These couriers are highly secretive, and will not reveal their sources, on pain of suicide or assassination. These people are accountable to others above them, with two more "buffer layers" of people above these, before the person in the Illuminati with money, who helps fund this, is found.

"Buying access codes for military computers: The Illuminati will have people from all strata of civilian life trained to go and make pickups near or on military bases. A typical person used might be the innocent looking wife of a military person, a local businessman, or even a college student. There is a contact inside the base, also a dissociative Illuminist, who brings the information to the outside contact. Occasionally, the contact person is paid with money, information, or goods. The military computer codes are changed on random schedules; the Illuminati have at least 5 or 6 contacts on each major base, who alert them when the codes are getting ready to change, on pain of death. The Illuminists like having access to military computers, because that will gain them entrance to closed files the world over.

"Hiring and selling assassinations: this is done worldwide, more in Europe than in the States. These people are paid big money to do either a private or political assassination. The money is paid either to the assassin, or to the trainer; usually they both divide the fee. The assassin is offered protection in another country for awhile, until the trail runs cold. If the kill is done in Europe they may be sent to the far east or the U.S., and vice versa if the kill is done in the U.S. The Illuminati have a wide arena of places and false identities to hide these people, unless for some reason they want the assassin disposed of as well. Then, he/she is caught and immediately executed.

"Mercenaries/military trainers: guess who gets paid money to come in and train paramilitary groups? Who has training camps all over the states of Montana, Nevada, and North Dakota ? Who occasionally will offer their expertise in return for a large financial reward? They never advertise themselves as Illuminati, unless the group is known to be sympathetic to their cause. Instead, these are tough, cold, brutal military trainers, who offer to teach these groups in return for money, or even better, a promise to affiliate with their group in return (loyalty in return for knowledge). More and more paramilitary groups have been brought into the Illuminati this way, without their full knowledge of who and what the group really is. This gives the Illuminists a way to monitor these groups (their trainers report on them, and their activities), and it can be useful to have trained military groups that they can call on someday.

"Banking: The original Illuminists were bankers, and they have highly trained financiers to organize their money, and funnel the above illicit funds into more "respectable" front groups/organizations. They will also start benevolent charities, community organizations, etc., as fronts, and funnel the money from a broad base into these groups. The Illuminati particularly pride themselves on their money making and manipulation skills, and their ability to cover their paper trails expertly, through layer after layer.

"All banking trails eventually will lead to Belgium, the Illuminati financial center for the world. These are some of the major money making enterprises that the Illuminati are engaged in. They have a lot of financial resources, backing their enterprises, which means that in reality they can engage the best lawyers, accountants, etc. to help cover their trail as well."

One of the more amazing aspects of the American Illuminati is there efficiently organized and almost corporate-like structure. Being one day groomed for a top level position, Svali learned the highly-detailed U.S. structure, including how the hierarchy are chosen and organized.

From top to bottom with incredible detail, this is what Svali had to say:

"The Illuminati have 3 main branches: the Germanic branch, which oversees the others, the British branch, which handles finances, and the French/Russian branch. All three branches are represented in both the United States and Canada, as well as every country in the world.

"The Illuminati have groups in every major city of the United States. They originally entered the U.S. through Pittsburgh, Pa., and from there, spread across the U.S. There are 18 cities across the U.S., which are considered major "power centers" for Illuminati power and/or influence. These include: Washington, DC and the surrounding areas; Albany, New York; Pittsburgh, Pa; the "golden triangle" of the Winston Salem, Raleigh, NC area; Minneapolis, Minn; Ann Arbor, Mich; Wichita, Kan.; Phoenix, Az.; Portland, Or.; Flagstaff, Az.; Seattle, Wash.; Houston, TX; Los Angeles, CA. and surrounding areas; Atlanta, Ga.; New Orleans, La., Springfield, Miss. Other cities are important to the Illuminati, as well, but these cities funnel money for them, conduct research, and often regional councils sit within them.

"The Illuminati have organized their society along extremely hierarchical, or stratified, levels. In fact, the top levels are known as the hierarchical and anarchical levels.

"The Illuminati have divided the United States into seven geographical regions; each region has its own regional council, composed of 13 members, with an advisory board of three elders to each one. These regions interact for purposes of finances; personnel; teaching, etc. Beneath each regional council, is a local council. This is a council of 13 members, the head of whom sits on the regional council, and gives it information about the local groups underneath his leadership. The local council will also have an advisory council of 3.

"A local leadership council in a large metropolitan area might look like this:

- Head of local council (reports to regional council)
- Two intermediaries (report all activities under leader to him)
- Four administrators (oversee finances, administer, set up group activities)
- Six head trainers (over trainers in local groups, teach other trainers)

"Underneath the above leadership council, will be six people designated as informers or intermediaries, who go to the local group meetings, interact with local group leaders, and report to the leadership council.

"The Anarchical level: the levels below the leadership council are known as the anarchical levels. Underneath the intermediate level, is the local group level. It will look like this: Local "Sister groups" (will vary in number, according to the size of the city, or cities, in the area). A large metropolitan area may have anywhere from ten to twenty seven groups.

"And each sister group will be headed up by: A high priest and priestess: this job is rotated every 3 years, to allow different people within the group to take on leadership roles. Each group will also have different members, with specific roles/jobs within the group.

"One thing that I would like to emphasize is the fact that the Illuminati today are generational. There members are born into the group, which is highly organized, as described above. The set up discussed above is representative, with minor variations, of most major metropolitan regions of the United States. Smaller population centers will be organized under similar guidelines, but will be tied together with several cities within the region to create the local leadership council."

As a head trainer and programmer in the San Diego area Savali is very familiar with the techniques and equipment employed by the Illuminati. The following are some of the tools of her former trade taken from the appendix of her book:

"Training room: the average training room is a neutral colored room, with walls painted either a dull gray, white, or beige. Some may be painted in various colors, as part of color coding. They are often located in secret underground rooms, or basements of large private residences, and will be entered from the main building through a covered doorway. Impromptu training rooms may be set up during military exercises outdoors, in covered canvas tents.

"Trainers: the Illuminati have a rule: there must always be a minimum of two trainers working with a person. This prevents a trainer from being either too severe, or permissive, or developing too close a bond with the subject; the watchful eye of the other trainer prevents this. Younger trainers are paired with older, more experienced trainers. The older trainer will teach the younger, who does most of the actual work. If the younger is unable to finish a task, or loses heart, the older one will step in.

"Head trainers: will teach, they will also work with the council leaders and hierarchy. All members are required to come in for a "tune up" (reinforcing programming), even top leaders, from time to time.

"EEG machine: will often have abbreviated hookups for quick use. Used extensively with brain wave programming; also to verify that a certain alter is out when called up. May be used to verify deep trance state before initiating deep programming. Trainers are taught to read these readouts.

"Trainer's table: a large table, frequently steel covered with plastic, or easily cleaned material. On the sides at intervals are restraints for arms, legs, neck to prevent movement.

"Trainer's chair: large chair with arm rests. Will have restraints as above at intervals to restrain movement while person sits in chair.

Shock equipment: models and types are quite varied, depending on age and company. Most have a set of rubber covered wires, with electrodes that may be connected with Velcro, rubber (steel tips imbedded under finger and toe nail beds), or gel pads (larger body areas such as chest, arms, legs). Some are tiny electrodes, which can be taped next to eyes, or placed within genitalia. These are connected to the "shock box", which has controls that can determine amount of electricity, and frequency, if interval shocks are desired.

"Drugs: any number of opiates, barbiturates, hypnotics, sedatives, anesthetic agents. Resuscitative drugs, antidotes are also kept, clearly labeled and indexed. Many drugs, especially experimental ones, are only known by code names, such as "alphin 1".

CPR equipment: in case person has adverse reaction to drugs or programming. At times, a child alter will come out inadvertently during a programming sequence, and will be overdosed with the drugs meant for adult alters. The trainers must give it the antidote, and resuscitate it, just as if a real child is out. They are well aware of this fact, and will severely punish child alters, to teach them to come out only when called out.

"Virtually reality headsets: the keystone in recent years. Many programming sequences utilize holographic images, and virtual reality set ups, including assassination programs, where the person realistically "kills" another humanbeing. These virtual disks are far more advanced than those in video arcades.

"Steel instruments: used to insert into orifices, cause pain

"Stretch machine: used as punishment, "stretches " person without breaking bones. Extremely painful.

"Trainer's grids and projectors: used to project grids on wall or ceiling.

"Movie projector: to show movies, although new VR disks are replacing these computer: collect and analyze data; keep computer grid on person's system. Current military computer access codes will be used to download into governmental computers.

Trainer's journals: contain indexed copies of subject's systems, including key alters, command codes, etc.

"Comfort objects: used to comfort subject afterwards. May be toy or candy for child alters, or oils for massage. Warm towels, or beverages may be given, as the trainer "bonds with" and comforts person they worked with. This is probably the most important part of the training process, as the trainer explains calmly, kindly how well the person did, how proud they are of them."

Editor's Note: Next read Part IV where Svali discusses the many different types of mind altering programming methods used by the Illuminati, as well as human experimentation programs still going on today. Also, why did George W. Bush travel to Pittsburgh right after he was elected to speak at a Masonic Lodge? Read as Svali provides answers to the significance of Pittsburgh in the Illuminati plans.

Judge Clears Way For New Orleans "Land Grab"

Hearing cancelled to hear 9th Ward residents complaints to stop the bulldozing of 44,000 homes. Judge says all the city needs to do is "notify owners."

By Greg Szymanski

A New Orleans federal judge last Friday quashed all hopes for 9th Ward residents "to get their day in court," as he indiscriminately cancelled a January 17 hearing to hear evidence why the city has no right to demolish homes under eminent domain laws.

Two weeks ago activists and some local residents filed suit to stop what they say is the "needless bulldozing" of 44,000 homes in the 9th Ward, getting a temporary restraining order until further evidence could be presented at this week's hearing.

But Brandon Darby, one of the activists instrumental in fighting the city's redevelopment plans, said the judge Friday cancelled the hearing after forcing lawyers on both sides to accept his arbitrary settlement terms.

Darby said Tuesday the judge called lawyers into his chambers late Friday, before the long three day Martin Luther King holiday weekend, saying he was suspending the upcoming hearing on the eminent domain issue and ordering that the "demolition could continue as planned" as long as the city gave adequate notice to all residents.

"I couldn't believe what I heard," said Darby of regarding the judge's ruling. "He basically said all the city has to do was notify each homeowner by telephone or mail, but it didn't matter whether they objected or not.

"This is just ridiculous. Our attorneys are checking exactly what the notice requirements are, but I am pretty sure it doesn't matter whether home owners object or not."

Darby said this doesn't end the fight, though, as he will continue along with activists of a citizen group formed to help save property, called Common Ground Relief, to try and stop the city's land grab of mainly low income housing in the 9th Ward and the east side.

"If I have to go to jail that's what will happen as I will not let them take these people's property unfairly," said Darby. "We are going to continue putting our bodies in between the wrecking ball and the homes until justice is served."

Darby also wanted to emphasize that a majority of the homes scheduled for demolition are structurally sound, saying many of the owners have been purposely kept out of state by FEMA and hoodwinked into believing their property is worthless setting the stage for the one of the biggest government land grabs in the history of the United States.

"What has our country come to when eminent domain laws and fascist government intimidation is used to steal property away from thousands of Americans," said Darby.

"In the background and behind the political scenes, everybody has to know that from Mayor Nagin right on up to the White House, they are all supporting the rich developers.

"They are also planning a multi-billion dollar redevelopment plan to build expensive hotels, casinos and high rise housing and the bulldozers now being seen in the 9th ward are the first step to achieving their rotten goals."

Besides the 14,000 homes in the 9th Ward scheduled for demolition, 88,000 are expected be next in line for bulldozing in the city's poorer east side, hard hit when the levies exploded, possibly on purpose.

Secret Vatican Catacombs, Child Sacrifices, Mind Control: Svali, Involved In U. S. Illuminati For 30 years, Talks Openly About Devious Plans To Topple America

Born into the Illuminati, Svali says her Vatican initiation ceremony at the age of 12 involved child sacrificing and a promise to serve "The Family or Order" for life.

17 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski
Part II

She looked into the eyes of the "French Father" while a man looking like a priest in scarlet robes put a golden knife into the heart of sandy-haired little boy about three or four years old.

The boy, drugged and glassy-eyed, had been placed like a sacrificial lamb on a large black table in the center of the room located deep within the belly of the beast -- the Vatican.

And the room, dark and foreboding with the scent of evil dripping from the walls, was only accessible through a hidden passageway camouflaged by a large painting.

Once inside the secret chamber, 13 distinct passageways were visible, each leading to a separate catacomb with every one of the 13 doorways blocked by the horrific site of a mummified body.

"After the boy was sacrificed, I had to bow and kiss the ring of the priest in scarlet robes and swear to serve the New World Order for the rest of my life," recalls Svali, 48, about the senseless sacrifice of what looked like "a drugged little boy" during her 1970 induction ceremony into the feared Illuminati.

"I also had to swear to serve he who is to come as the 'great leader.' Looking back, it was just horrific and terror rushes into my mind every time I think about what happened.

"I remember counting the 13 mummified figurers in front of the catacombs and a voice saying 'the spirits of the Father are watching over you' and that is when the little boy was sacrificed. A priest did that in scarlet robes and terror still goes through my mind when I think about it."

At the age of 12, Svali remembers being flown to Rome, taken to the Vatican and then meeting with two of the Illuminati fathers, one the French leader and the other from Germany.

Prior to leaving the U.S., she remembers being briefed by her multi-millionaire American parents about the importance of the ceremony, but told very little else about what to expect concerning the details and the gruesome child sacrifice.

Once in the Vatican, she also remembers the two fathers, as they were called, meeting with high ranking members of the clergy before being escorted through a hidden doorway to the secret underground room.

"There were two other children my age also present and after the ceremony outside in the Vatican courtyard, I remember the German father saying I did very well and would rise to greatness in the Order," said Svali who now lives in northern Texas and wants to remain anonymous after leaving the San Diego ranks of the Illuminati four years ago. She added there are 12 ruling Illuminati "Fathers" in Europe and a ruling council of 13 in the U.S. which is divided into separate regional bodies.

"I have never granted an interview like this before, but feel it is necessary to warn Americans how dangerous these people really are and how deeply embedded they are in all aspects of our business and government.

"Although I know it is dangerous to be talking like this, perhaps my words can save the lives of other children before it's too late. After rising to be a head trainer in the sciences division of the Illuminati, or the Enlightened Ones, I finally couldn't live with my self any longer and had to get out.

"When I was a child, I was taught we were chosen to rule over and make the world a better place. But as I got older, I saw the real intention of the "Chosen Ones," understanding it was nothing more than a ruthless plan to obtain money and power by any means possible, including torture and killing."

Like many others born into the Illuminati, from her birth in Germany Svali had no choice in her future, as her wealthy, rich and powerful parents charted her course as a "Chosen Child" from an early age.

Told she was "special and born to rule over the masses" to make a better world, Svali recalls going to regular Illuminati meetings with other "chosen children" at least three times a week after moving from Germany to Virginia and then finally to San Diego.

"I was born into it and long before the induction ceremony when I was 12, intensive training began to instill into me that I was special and the New World Order was good for the world," said Svali.

"When you grow up with wealthy parents like this, always being told you are special, it takes a long time to figure out the truth and a way out. I worked my way up the Illuminati ladder to the rank of head trainer, overseeing 60 other trainers. People have a hard time believing or understanding just how organized the Illuminati really are here in America, comprising about 1-2 percent of the total population.

"Yes, Bush, Rumsfeld, Cheney, Kerry, the Clintons and the others in power are all a part of it and they are in the governmental division of the Illuminati. However, I do not want to mention other members not in public office for fear of getting sued.

Saying that the Illuminati's main goal is to depopulate the world and create a unified, one world government, Svali said to fully understand Illuminati cult programming it's first important to comprehend the structure and philosophy of the worldwide organization as she learned it as a child growing up in the ranks.

In a manuscript from a book she is trying to publish, written after she ran from the Illuminati in San Diego, Svali explains:

"The Illuminati are a group of people who follow a philosophy known as "Illuminism" or "enlightenment". The Illuminati were named several hundred years ago, but trace their roots and history to the ancient mystery religions of Egypt, ancient Babylon, and even Mesopotamia. Out of these ancient religions, which were practiced secretly over hundreds and hundreds of years, there arose esoteric groups which continued to practice the rites, traditions, and enculturation brought in from the original groups.

"Over the centuries, these groups practiced openly in some countries, and covertly in countries where Christianity or other religions opposed their practices. Some of the groups which came out of these ancient roots included the order of the Knights Templar, Rosicrucian's, Baphetomism, and Druidic cults. These groups were the forerunners, or roots, of modern day Illuminism. The original Illuministic leaders chose to take what they felt were the best practices of each root religion, combine them into principles, then organized these principles according to specific guidelines.

"Modern day Illuminism is a philosophy funded by the wealthy, but practiced in all social strata. It is a philosophy whose tenets have spread across the world. It started with the German branch of Rosicrucian's, spread to England, then came to the United states with the first settlers."

Svali said during her 30 years with the Illuminati she witnessed a lot of violence from programs stemming from the CIA's MK ULTRA, as well as other mind control programs utilized by the cult.

Working a steady job in the day and then attending heavily guarded, secret meetings three times a week during the evening near San Diego, Svali said she learned "from the inside" the Illuminati plan to rule the world, also known as Novus Ordem Seclorum, is very real, very dangerous and being played out right before the eyes of Americans, as the cult's stepped up plans to take over the U.S. is underway and in full-throttle.

What better way to learn about the plan than to listen from an insider, trying to make amends with herself and the world. The following is from Chapter 3 of her yet to be published manuscript:

"All groups have goals, and the Illuminists are no exception. Money making is not their final goal - it is a means to an end. This end point, or goal, is no less than to rule the world. The Illuminati has a set plan similar to the Soviet Union's previous "5- year" and "10- year " plans. This is what the Illuminists themselves believe and teach their followers as gospel truth.

"Whether they will actually succeed is another matter altogether. The following is the Illuminist agenda at ALL levels of the Illuminati. As with any goal, the Illuminati has specific steps which it plans to implement to reach its objectives. Briefly, each region of the United States has "nerve centers" or power bases for regional activity. The United States has been divided up into seven major geographical regions. Each region has localities within it that contain military compounds and bases that are hidden in remote, isolated areas or on large private estates.

"These bases are used intermittently to teach and train generational Illuminati in military techniques, hand-to-hand combat, crowd control, use of arms, and all aspects of military warfare. Why? Because the Illuminists believe that our government, as we know it, as well as the governments of most nations around the world, are destined to collapse. These will be planned collapses, and they will occur in the following ways:

"The Illuminati has planned first for a financial collapse that will make the great depression look like a picnic. This will occur through the maneuvering of the great banks and financial institutions of the world, through stock manipulation, and interest rate changes. Most people will be indebted to the federal government through bank and credit card debt, etc. The governments will recall all debts immediately, but most people will be unable to pay and will be bankrupted. This will cause generalized financial panic which will occur simultaneously worldwide, as the Illuminists firmly believe in controlling people through finances.

"Next there will be a military takeover, region by region, as the government declares a state of emergency and martial law. People will have panicked, there will be an anarchical state in most localities, and the government will justify its move as being necessary to control panicked citizens. The cult trained military leaders and people under their direction will use arms as well as crowd control techniques to implement this new state of affairs. This is why so many survivors under 36 years of age report having military programming. People who are not Illuminists or who are not sympathetic to their cause, will resist.

"The Illuminists expect this and will be (and are BEING) trained in how to deal with this eventuality. They are training their people in hand-to-hand combat, crowd control, and, if necessary, will kill to control crowds. The Illuminati is training their people to be prepared for every possible reaction to the takeover. Many mind control victims will also be called into duty with preset command codes. These codes are meant to call out a new, completely cult loyal presenting system. Shatter codes programmed under trauma will be used to destroy or bury non-cult loyal alters.

"Military bases will be set up, in each locality (actually, they are already here, but are covert). In the next few years, they will go above ground and be revealed. Each locality will have regional bases and leaders to which they are accountable. The hierarchy will closely reflect the current covert hierarchy.

"About five years ago, when I left the Illuminati, approximately 1% of the US population was either part of the Illuminati, sympathetic to it, or a victim of Mind Control (and therefore considered useable). While this may not sound like many, imagine 1% of the population highly trained in the use of armaments, crowd control, psychological and behavioral techniques, armed with weapons and linked to paramilitary groups.

"These people will also be completely dedicated to their cause. The Illuminati firmly believes that it can easily overcome the other 99% of the population, most of whom are untrained, or poorly trained, such as "weekend hunters." Even the local military will be overcome as the Illuminati will have regional cell groups with highly trained leaders. They also count on the element of surprise helping them during their takeover. Many of the highest leaders in the militia branch of the Illuminati are or have been officers in the military, and so already have a good knowledge of which techniques will work best to overcome a region's or locality's defenses.

"After the military takeover, the general population will be given a chance to either espouse the Illuminati's cause, or reject it (with imprisonment, pain, even death being possible punishments). These people very much believe that the intelligent, or "enlightened" or Illuminated, were born to rule. They are arrogant, and consider the general population as "dumb sheep" who will be easily led if offered strong leadership, financial help in an unstable world economy, and dire consequences if the person rebels. Their utter ruthlessness, and ability to implement this agenda, should not be minimized.

"The Illuminati banking leaders, such as the Rothschilds, the VanderBilts, the Rockefellers, the Carnegies, and the Mellons, as examples, will reveal themselves, and offer to "save" the floundering world economy. A new system of monetary exchange, based on an international monetary system, and based between Cairo, Egypt, and Brussels, Belgium, will be set up. A true "one world economy", creating the longed for "one world order", will become reality."

Svali said this is the tip of the iceberg of the Illuminati agenda in America and she has been disowned by her family for leaving. Although recently offered $15,000 to return home, Svali has refused, saying her ministry to awaken the American people is her first priority.

Through years of special training, she learned members of the Illuminati are willing to give up their lives for their cause, as they believe their children are their legacy.

"I was told that my children's generation would see this takeover, sometime in the 21st century. At present, the Illuminati have quietly and covertly fostered their takeover plan by their goals of the infiltration of the media, the banking system, the education system, the government at all levels, the sciences and the churches," said Svali.

Editor's Note: In Part III, learn how Svali functioned as a head trainer, as well the orderly set of jobs and duties of the American Illuminati. Also learn from Svali why the cult spends so much time and energy training people, how the Illuminati makes money, how they program people and the different equipment used by trainers in their complex jobs of controlling the masses.

Searching For the Illuminati Deep Within The Bowels Of The Vatican

All roads lead to Piazza San Pietro when it comes to power, leadership and initiation into the devious and diabolical Illuminati. In the 1980's, the Vatican Bank Scandal brought to light the connections between the Freemasons/Illuminati, the Vatican and the mafia. Secret initiations are said to take place in the catacombs of the Vatican and was Pope John Paul I killed after 39 days in office for wanting to expose the truth about Vatican finances and the Illuminati?

By Greg Szymanski
Part I

While Mass is being said in the Sistine Chapel and tourists are being shown the works of Michelangelo, deep within the bowels of the Vatican sits a large, circular room with 13 separate chambers, each leading to a distinct catacomb.

When a mummified body is placed in front of each doorway, a young child is then brutally sacrificed with a long, golden knife during what is said to be a secret induction ceremony for new members of the Illuminati, better known as the New World Order.

As a young freelance reporter in Rome during the early 1980s, I heard many rumors of these secret ceremonies from local shop owners, several drunken priests and a couple of local clairvoyants or fortune-telling card readers, one who apparently advised and guided the film career of the famous Italian film director, Federico Fellini.

Although a product of a Catholic education and graduate of Notre Dame High School before going on to college, I still couldn't help but wonder if the stories about the brutal child sacrifices were actually true.

While on a story assignment or covering the weekly Papal address, I remember sneaking around the Vatican, on one occasion taking a flight of stairs down to the basement level in search of the secret room and the catacombs.

Of course, I never found the secret room or a hidden doorway leading to the tombs, my secret Indiana Jones hunt for the Satan's Den interrupted by a Vatican security guard who escorted me to the top of the stairs after showing my press card and saying I was lost.

"One night alone in this place and I know I could break the biggest story in my lifetime," I thought to myself, as I walked through St. Peter's Square and looked up at the sculptures of the 12 Apostles staring down at me from the Vatican roof.

Rome is like a huge small town with many neighborhoods, functioning like dozens of little villages within the city proper, each having its own distinct feel and flavor.

That particular day after trying to uncover the exact location of the Illuminati's secret induction ceremonies, I stopped for cheese and a glass of white wine on the first narrow, cobblestone street next the Vatican, known in English as the "Street of the Whores."

According to the locals, the street received this rather unusual name since for hundreds of years it housed many of the whores whose primary clientele were the Vatican cardinals, bishops and priests, as well as any visiting members of the clergy.

After World War II, the prostitution on the street eventually moved to a more secretive location, making way now for stores engaged in the lucrative business of selling religious paraphernalia like rosaries, pictures of the Pope's and holy water.

As I sat having a glass of wine and going through the Italian papers, the main headline read how Cardinal Paul Marcinkus, head of the Vatican Bank from 1971 to 1989, was indicted by Italian authorities (in 1982) as an accessory in the $3.5 billion collapse of Banco Ambrosiano, an Italian financial institution with close ties to the Vatican Bank.

Although I tried many times without success to interview Marcinkus, since he was from my hometown of Chicago, the case never came to trial in Italy, as courts corruptly ruled that as a "Vatican employee he was immune from prosecution." The Vatican Bank also refused to admit legal responsibility for the Bank of Ambrosiano's downfall but did acknowledge "moral involvement", paying $241m (£169m) to creditors.

Little did I know that this story, the 1978 death of Pope John Paul I, the murder of the bank's president, Robert Calvi, found dangling under the Blackfriars Bridge in London, a little known mafia figure named Mario Cuomo (not the former mayor of New York) and a mysterious woman named Maria would all help in putting the pieces together of a larger more sinister puzzle.

Although still incomplete, the small pieces of the puzzle I uncovered in the 1980s all lead to direct involvement of members of the Illuminati/Freemasons, through groups like "P Due", the Priore du Sion and others, as well as the deep involvement of the Vatican, the hub and centerpiece of this secret worldwide organization known to the public as the Illuminati but known by members as "The Family or The Order."

After writing several stories about the Vatican Bank Scandal and traveling to London on the Calvi story, finding very little new evidence, I didn't give much thought to the Illuminati and child sacrificing until about a year later when I was sitting on Via Veneto, having coffee for a brief hour or two with the rich and famous. As a quick aside, no one ever really believes me anyway when I mention I once sat on Sophia Loren's lap, so I will leave that story for happier times.

Mysterious Maria

As I mentioned, I put the gruesome picture of a child sacrificing out of my mind until a strikingly beautiful, black-haired Italian woman in her late 20s, named Maria, asked if she could join me at my Via Veneto outdoor table.

Rome is a small town, like I mentioned, later learning Maria desperately wanted an outlet to tell her incredible story, finding out through street talk that I was an American journalist researching stories about secret societies and the Vatican's involvement.

Maria prefaced her story by saying she could never reveal her full name, saying it meant an immediate death sentence for both of us if her identity hit newsstands, linking her to what she called "The Chosen Ones" or the Illuminati.

I, on the other hand, remember feeling like I might be dealing with a quack or a mental patient, especially after she graphically explained how involvement with the Illuminati caused her to attempt suicide on three separate occasions, twice by poisoning and once by slitting her wrists, but each attempt played out in a bathub surrounded by candles and bouquets of colored roses.

I spoke to Maria on three occasions taking copious notes for total of about five hours at the same outside cafe during a three-week time span before learning through a mutual acquaintance about a month after our last meeting, she finally succeeded in committing suicide.

This time, however, she didn't sit in her bathtub with flowers, deciding instead to make a public display, jumping from the roof of the Vatican in the early morning hours after hurling her body to the concrete of St. Peter's Square (Piazza San Pietro) after standing beside the statue of St. Peter.

Although I tried in vain to get her real identity, stories of the strange suicide were verified but, at the same time, covered up as her identity mysteriously disappeared from the face of the earth as did any possibility of selling my story.

More than twenty years have passed but I can still hear her words and see Maria's distraught face, sitting across from me at the Via Veneto cafe like it was yesterday. To the best of my recollection, these are the most important parts of her story of being recruited from birth by the Illuminati, a story that essentially died when Maria hurled herself off the Vatican roof.

"I can never tell you my name and only come to you as a last resort," were Maria's first words, as she appeared agitated and uncertain she was doing the right thing. In Italian she then said something like "May I rot in hell if I violated her trust" and I remember feeling as if someone just pointed a gun at my head.

Coming from an aristocratic northern Italian background, she continued as I was able to understand most of what she said, save the complex and educated Italian verb and tense forms as I essentially learned to speak the language in the streets of Rome with the common-folk.

In our first meeting, she delved heavily into her involvement with the "Family" or the "Chosen Ones," saying her aristocratic background left her no choice in the matter. She said she was born into the ranks of the Illuminati, taught as a child she was one of the "divine chosen ones" to rule over the masses and initiated into the "Order" at a secret Vatican underground ceremony in a room very similar to the type I previously heard about on the street.

And when I finally got up enough courage to ask her about the child sacrifices, she couldn't talk about it, only burying her head in her hands as tears rolled out from between her fingers.

The remainder of our discussions centered on the Illuminati origins, its leadership centered in the Vatican, its worldwide reach, its operations in Europe, its branches in America and its eventual goals of population control and world dominance. I remember how AIDS was not mentioned overseas and how she confused me with saying the Illuminati or the "Chosen Fathers" had purposely inflicted the disease on the masses.

Besides being convinced she was telling the truth, Maria also said the Illuminati, referring to them in Italian swear words as "pig gods", had been entrenched for years in America, with many of its leaders among the loyal followers of the "Order."

Our last conversation became quite personal, straying away from the names of powerful church and political figures, instead centering on how the Illuminati personally devastated Maria's life. To this day, as she said her final words, I wish I would have said or done something more to save her life, but I had no inkling whatsoever it would come to a shocking end at the Vatican in less than a month.

"They killed Pope John Paul I and he didn't die of natural causes. I cannot live like this any longer but there is now way out. I am a trapped soul, destined to burn in the depths of hell for all the wrongs I have witnessed and have done nothing in my life to stop," said Maria, as she stood up from table and began walking away.

As she left, I still remember her final words: "I have had all the riches in the world, but I feel so empty and alone. Dio have mercy on me."

After Maria died, I began searching harder and harder to connect the dots of the Vatican's involvement in the Illuminati, as well as the bank scandal, the Pope's 1978 mysterious death and other stories related to Marcinkus, Calvi, financier Licio Gelli known as the head of the P-2 lodge.

Although I could never pinpoint or verify the secret Vatican ceremonies, enough information surfaced to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the Vatican functioned as the nerve center of the Illuminati, as the appointment of John Paul II revealed he never followed through on his predecessors final orders to investigate the operations of the Vatican Bank, Marcinkus and ties to the mafia and the Illuminati.

Instead, John Paul II protected Marcinkus, quashed any investigations to be carried out by John Paul I's secretary of state Cardinal Jean Villot and buried all the people on Villot's list to be relieved of Church duties or transferred, all the people on the list suspected of being members of the Freemason's P-2 group and the Illuminati.

Gangster Mario Cuomo

Although I didn't know it at the time, a Naples "Camorra" mafia figure, named Mario Cuomo, who lived in near me in a small town outside of Rome and who eventually was killed in a gangland shooting, was instrumental in saving my life on several occasions.

Cuomo, who drove a Mazzerati, lived in a huge villa, dressed to the 9's and who I knew as a land investor, made it a habit every time he saw me to practice his English, buy me coffee or dinner while, at the same time, telling me "when I was playing with fire" regarding the Calvi murder and its ties to the mafia and the Vatican.

His sound advice perhaps frightened me away from some doors I never walked through, but looking back, they were probably dangerous doors better left closed as I probably would have never walked out of them or seen the light of day ever again.

Story Updates, Notes and Important Timeline:

Cardinal Marcinkus

He is still alive, saying Mass and living in Phoenix, Arizona. Marcinkus carries a Vatican passport and still is the recipient of diplomatic immunity.

Among those linked to the Calvi murder and who Italian authorities are still seeking to question, Marcinkus was originally ordained in Chicago. Being a mover and shaker in the Church, he was quickly elevated to the Holy See in Rome, and served in the Vatican Secretariat of State.

He rapidly moved up the Vatican chain of command from personal papal bodyguard to head of the Vatican Bank, a position he held from 1971 to 1989. There he worked closely with international financier, Michael Sindona, to expand the Vatican's portfolio of international holdings, transforming the Institute for Religious Works into a quiet but reliable shelter for questionable and what many have said was "dirty money."

The Vatican Bank, through Sindona, was suspected of laundering money from associates in organized crime, funneled huge sums of money through Banco Ambrosiano and the Vatican.

The Vatican Bank also has worked closely with the U.S. government as a cover money conduit to groups like the Solidarity Trade Union in Poland and other sordid CIA affairs. With the help of Marcinkus, Sindona was to become a "inside man of confidence" within the Vatican who enjoyed unique access to officials of the Holy See, even the pope.

A 1982 story in the foreign edition of Time magazine had this to say about the relation between Sindona, Calvi and Marcinkus:

"In 1971, Sindona introduced Calvi to Marcinkus. Sindona and Calvi hoped to use Marcinkus for their own purposes, and the bankers and the churchman obviously found it advantageous to do business together. Although the Vatican bank denies it had much to do with either Sindona or Calvi, the I. O. R. di Religione (I.O.R. or Vatican Bank) eventually became Banco Ambrosiano's fourth-largest stockholder, acquiring over the years at least 794,390 shares, or 1.589% of the bank's stock.

"A few months after Sindona and Calvi set up the Bahamian bank in 1971, a "Mr. Paul Marcinkus" was listed as a director. "We used his name a lot in business deals," Sindona said. "I told him clearly that I put him in because it helps me get money."

The Calvi Murder Trial

In April, 2005, a Sicilian mobster, a Roman crime boss and two others were indicted in connection with the 1982 hanging of Roberto Calvi, a financier dubbed "God's banker" for his close ties to the Vatican.

A Reuters story added:

"Calvi, once thought to have committed suicide, was found hanging from scaffolding under London's Blackfriars Bridge in June 1982 with bricks in his pockets and $15,000 (8,000 pounds) on his person.

"But in the latest twist to the saga, prosecutors now say the Mafia killed Calvi for stealing from them and from Italian financier Licio Gelli. Gelli was the head of the P2 lodge -- a shadowy Masonic organization whose members once included prominent politicians, businessmen and military officers.

"The judge said the trial will start on Oct 6 and will involve the convicted Cosa Nostra treasurer Pippo Calo, Roman crime boss Ernesto Diotallevi, Sardinian financier Flavio Carboni and his ex-girlfriend Manuela Kleinszig.

"The prosecutors' inquiry has focused on millions of dollars that flowed through the bank's offshore accounts in the weeks preceding Calvi's death.

"Shortly before Calvi's hanging, the bank he headed at the time, Banco Ambrosiano, had gone bankrupt. It was then Italy's largest private banking group and worked with the Vatican."

Without question, one of the strangest characters in the Calvi saga, with ties to Marcinkus and Sindona, was Licio Gelli. A former member of the fascist Black Shirts Battalion and connected to the Mussolini regime and the Herman Goring SS Division in World War II, Gelli survived the conflict and amassed tremendous amounts of money and influence.

Considered the head of the P-2 Masonic Lodge, he was also privy to sensitive information on hundreds of key political, military and financial figures not only in Italy but throughout Europe, Latin America and elsewhere due to his access of files from the Italian secret service (OVRA) and possibly British Intelligence.

It was common knowledge in Italy that Gelli helped to smuggle Klaus Barbie, the infamous "Butcher of Lyon" to safe haven in Argentina, and even managed to work for and sell his services to the CIA and NATO.

Important Timeline (Reprinted from The Financial Post, Victor Gollancz Ltd. 1983.)

Early September 1978: Pope John Paul I asks his secretary of state, Cardinal Jean Villot, to initiate an investigation into Vatican bank operations.

September 28, 1978: John Paul I presents Cardinal Villot with a list of people who are to be transferred, asked for their resignations, or reassigned. All the people on the list are suspected to be members of the Freemason's group "P2." The reshuffle of power will have major implications for the existing Vatican power structure and its financial dealings.

September 29, 1978: John Paul I found dead in his bed. Villot issues false statements to the press about the circumstances surrounding the death, removes key evidence from John Paul's room, and orders the body to be embalmed immediately without an autopsy.

October 1978: John Paul II to replace John Paul I. None of John Paul I's instructions to Villot before his death are carried out.

January 21, 1979: Murder of Judge Emilio Alessandrini, the Milan magistrate investigating the activities of Banco Ambrosiano, whose director, Roberto Calvi, has close ties with Michele Sindona and the Vatican.

March 20, 1979: Murder of Mino Pecorelli, an investigative journalist in the process of publishing articles exposing the membership and dealings of "P2" -- a powerful group of Freemasons whose membership was involved in Vatican financial dealings, and whose founder, Lucio Gelli, was deeply connected with Roberto Calvi.

March 25, 1979: Arrests on false charges of Mario Sarcinelli and Paolo Baffi of the Bank of Italy. The two men were pressing for action on the investigation of the financial dealings of Roberto Calvi and Banco Ambrosiano.

July 11, 1979: Murder of Giorgio Ambrosioli following his testimony concerning Michele Sindona's financial dealings with Calvi and other Vatican interests, the activities of P2 and its members among powerful government and business circles, and the connections between Calvi, Sindona, and Bishop Paul Marcinkus of the Vatican Bank.

July 13, 1979: Murder of Lt. Col. Antonio Varisco, head of the Rome security service, who was investigating the activities and membership of P2 and had spoken with Giorgio Ambrosioli two days before Ambrosioli's death.

July 21, 1979: Murder of Boris Guilano, the Palermo police deputy superintendent and head of Palermo CID. Guilano had spoken with Giorgio Ambrosioli two days before Ambrosioli's death concerning Sindona's laundering of Mafia money through the Vatican Bank into Switzerland.

October 1979: Bomb explosion at the apartment of Enrico Cuccia, managing director of Mediobanca and witness to Sindona's threat to the life of Giorgio Ambrosioli.

February 2, 1980: The Vatican withdraws at the last moment its agreement that Cardinals Guiseppe Caprio and Sergio Guerri and Bishop Paul Marcinkus will provide videotaped depositions on behalf of Michele Sindona in his trial in the US on charges of fraud, conspiracy and misappropriation of funds in connection with the collapse of Franklin National Bank.

May 13, 1980: Michele Sindona attempts suicide in jail.

June 13, 1980: Michele Sindona sentenced to 25 years.

July 8, 1980: Roberto Calvi attempts suicide while in jail on charges of fraud, etc. Later released on bail and reconfirmed as chairman of Banco Ambrosiano.

September 1, 1981: The Vatican Bank, apparently at the request of Roberto Calvi, issues "letters of comfort" acknowledging its controlling interest in, and assuming responsibility for, a more than 1 billion dollar debt of a number of banks controlled by Calvi.

January 12, 1981: A group of shareholders in Banco Ambrosiano send a letter to John Paul II outlining the connections between the Vatican Bank, Roberto Calvi and the P2 and the Mafia. The letter is never acknowledged.

April 27, 1982: Attempted murder of Roberto Rosone, general manager and deputy chairman of Banco Ambrosiano, who was trying to "clean up" the bank's operation.

June 17, 1982: Roberto Calvi found hanged to death from a bridge in London. A few days later, a 1.3 billion dollar "hole" is discovered in Banco Ambrosiano, Milan.

October 2, 1982: Guiseppe Dellacha, executive at Banco Ambrosiano, dead of a fall from a window of Banco Ambrosiano, in Milan.

March 23, 1986: Michele Sindona found dead of poisoning in the Italian jail to which he had been extradited on charges of ordering the murder of Giorgio Ambrosioli. Albino Luciano, Pope John Paul I

New Orleans Evacuee "Sticks It Big Time" To City Hall, Telling FEMA To Put Its Programs To Racially Cleanse The City "Where The Sun Don't Shine"
Clothilde Mack, 85, left to die for 10 days in her attic, finally took a hot shower in her FEMA trailer Saturday after returning home with the help of good samaritans despite government programs designed to keep people away from New Orleans.

By Greg Szymanski

One elderly New Orleans evacuee has 'stuck it to city hall big time' this week after being left for dead and spending 10 days in the attic of her flooded 9th Ward home.

Clothilde Mack, 85, defying authority returned home Jan. 1 on her own with the help of good Samaritans all over the country, despite FEMA programs designed to racially cleanse and keep people away from the Crescent City.

Saturday Ms Mack received her belated "Christmas wish," moving into her temporary FEMA trailer near her home, something authorities finally were forced into doing after her incredibly sad story was gaining national attention.

Three weeks ago Ms Mack was penniless and left alone in the Mountain Pointe living facility near Greeneville, Tenn., told by FEMA to stay there - against her will -- since no other assistance was available.

Although once promised a temporary trailer, months passed as the empty promises never materialized.

"All I ever wanted to do was go home and FEMA was not helping but making it impossible," said Ms Mack several months ago, as she felt alone, depressed and helpless in her small room hundreds of miles from New Orleans.

Her story was then picked up by the Arctic Beacon and after appearing on Greg Szymanski's radio show, The Investigative Journal, the talk show host donated the use of his motor home in order to facilitate in getting Ms Mack home for the holidays, a desire she made known to the listeners on the show.

The story then grew wings, as Republic Broadcasting Radio listeners responded generously with more than $1,500 in gas money, as well as Joe Tittiger, a Florida listener, providing his time and energy to travel from Florida to Idaho to pick up the motor home, then traveling more than 3,600 miles to get Ms Mack back to New Orleans.

"She was becoming so depressed and despondent, I really thought she was going to wither away and die if she stayed in the living facility any longer," said Wendy Owens, one of the good Samaritans who came to Ms Mack's rescue. "The government didn't care and right to the end they tried to keep her away from going home."

Deciding to thumb her nose at FEMA orders to stay away, Ms Mack wouldn't have anything to do with slick FEMA administrators wanting her to sign papers in exchange for money with the caveat she remain away from home for at least one year.

Instead, Ms Mack graciously accepted the help of good Samaritans, who essentially told FEMA to put their programs "where the sun don't shine," as Tittiger in the donated motor home picked up Ms Mack several days after Christmas even though authorities tried to thwart the efforts of the good Samaritans at the last minute.

"When I arrived, they harassed me, tried to get me arrested, checked my identification like I was a criminal and even tried to issue tickets for the motor home's tag being expired," said Tittiger, adding he wasn't allowed to park on the living facility property and eventually was surrounded by police and Homeland Security in a Wal Mart parking lot.

"They backed off on everything after Ms Mack put up a big stink. But here we are trying to help somebody get back home and they are treating us like criminals. Finally, after Ms Mack wouldn't have any part of what they were doing, they backed off after she made it clear she was leaving with me in the motor home."

Tittiger, who probably should receive the "humanitarian of the year" award, kept his cool with authorities and has been with Ms Mack every step of the way since the pair safely returned to her New Orleans Jan 1.

"You should have seen the joy in Ms Mack's eyes when she returned home, even to a house with no electricity and what needs a thorough gutting-out from the accumulated mold from the flood waters," said Tittiger from New Orleans Saturday as Ms Mack was finally moving into her FEMA trailer placed near her 9th Ward home.

"It will feel good to get a hot shower today and then after Ms Mack settles into her trailer and now has a car to drive around in, I think I will return to Ft. Myers to check on my motor home and dog and then eventually return around Mardi Gras time.

"I really don't thin people fully comprehend what is going on down here, There are neighborhoods with houses in good shape that the city wants to tear down to make way for the its land grab. They don't want people to come back and are making it hard for them when they do return. They won't turn the electric on in certain neighborhoods and then there is a moratorium on repairs and building, which is idiotic.

Tittiger said Ms Mack's home is typical of many of the 9th Ward homes set for needless demolition since most homes are in good enough shape to repair. However, he added if "people are told lies" and kept away from New Orleans, it makes the city's demolition plan under eminent domain laws entirely possible.

"Just think if all the other evacuees had someone to help them like Ms Mack did, the government wouldn't have a prayer at stealing all these homes," added Tittiger. "But I tell you what, Ms Mack's return signifies a small victory against this tyrannical government. Her house is one that won't be hit by the wrecking ball.

Ms Mack's return home on Jan. 1, despite a last minute effort by Homeland Security to keep her away, has resulted in the government finally "getting off their fat behind" as Saturday she moved into her new FEMA trailer until her home is eventually repaired.

Further, feeling pressured and under the public microscope, politicians also pushed FEMA to issue Ms. Mack $26,000 to begin repairs on her home, as well as providing a generator at her house in order that workers can begin gutting the walls and removing mold.

"I am just so happy words can't even describe my feelings for everyone who helped me get back home," said Ms Mack from New Orleans Saturday, as she was moving into the trailer. "Most of the homes in my neighborhood can be repaired and just yesterday I got a chance to talk with one my neighbors who returned to fix his house. All I can say is that there is no place like home and I want to thank all the people from across the country who helped make it possible."

And hopefully Ms Mack's story will send a strong message to government as well as resonate throughout America, inspiring other evacuees to return home and claim their property before it's too late.

Last week, 44,000 homes in the 9th Ward were scheduled for demolition, many needlessly, but the city's plans were abruptly stopped at the last minute by activists and several residents who placed their bodies between the wrecking ball and the houses scheduled for demolition.

The residents were also successful in getting a temporary restraining order from a New Orleans judge last week, stopping the city's plans at least until Jan.16 when another hearing is scheduled in the lawsuit filed by some 9th Ward residents, challenging the city's eminent domain rights.

Besides the homes in the 9th Ward, the city has another 88,000 homes on the east side also scheduled for demolition, as activists in the area are complaining that many residents are unaware of the plans and have not been given ample opportunity to return home.

Editor's Note: The Arctic Beacon would like to thank the generosity of all those kind souls across the country who helped Ms Mack get home for the holidays. If everyone would just help one another, the NWO and its tightly-knit American Illuminati members at all levels, with headquarters in Pittsburgh, can be defeated.

It's time to stop watching television and help your fellow citizens, as we are in a war to save our country and our lives against an insidious enemy deeply penetrated deeply within our financial institution, religious organizations, media outlets and the halls of our government.

New Orleans Carpenter Talks About How He Heard Guardsmen talk about "military buddies" ordered to blow levees

Several residents have come forward using their names while talking about hearing a huge explosion at the Industrial Canal. Others coming forward want to remain anonymous, fearing repercussions from Big Brother

People are coming forward faster than the flood waters engulfed New Orleans, as more eye witness accounts are surfacing about the levees being blown-up by the dirty hands of government agents or military operatives.

This time eye witnesses are talking about how they overheard several military enlisted men at a New Orleans check-point, talking about how several of "their military buddies" were being reprimanded for blowing the levees even though acting on direct orders.

Although several New Orleans residents have already given their names and told about hearing a huge explosion at the Industrial Canal just before it gave-way, others like the person hearing the military chatter are asking to remain anonymous, frightened of being intimidated and harassed by Homeland Security.

And with the obvious "hush-hush" attitude pervading the minds of many Americans, the Gestapo-like neo-con stranglehold on Washington is now seeping into the heartland, moving America closer and closer to becoming a full-blown fascist state.

Listen as Bruce, who wants to leave out his last name, explains how he heard second-hand information concerning a military demolition of the levees and how his source wants to also remain anonymous fearing repercussions.

"My carpenter friend came back from the Katrina area to tell about going through one of the check-points down there that was manned by some National Guardsmen. He said they were having an angry conversation about their friend who was being court-martialed for blowing the levee," said Bruce. "They were particularly angry because they said he had been ordered to do it in the first place. This was the first time that my buddy had even heard anyone say anything about the levee having been blown.

"I talked him into calling you but he wants to remain anonymous. He doesn't remember names he just remembers the conversation. He says the guys were saying 'it's a good thing they didn't send us or we'd be the ones getting hassled' sort of stuff. He had a buddy with him who may remember more than he did."

Besides the information surfacing regarding explosions being heard at the levees and government complicity, former U.S. Senator Max Cleland has called attention to a number of bodies that turned up in the Charity Hospital trauma center several days after the hurricane, obviously assassinated with bullets in the back of their heads.

Although there has been no official explanation as to the cause of death, the question has to be asked whether the assassinated bodies recovered in the flood waters had been witnesses to the levee sabotage?

Last October, Cleland commented:

"I think New Orleans has a real challenge on its hands, not just in recovering from the disaster, the natural disaster, but what has happened to the police department there...And then, of course, in the Charity Hospital there, the trauma center a few days after the hurricane went through, a number of bodies wound up there, assassinated with bullets in the back of their head.

"Those corpses are over in a warehouse now, and nobody's really seen them but the pathologist who told a friend of mine, who told me. So we have a massive cover-up here, I think, that has to be investigated independently."

The cover-up Cleland is referring to may also involve the real cause behind the levee failures, as recently Terry Adams, a lower 9th Ward resident living a block away from the Industrial Canal, reported hearing a huge explosion just before the levee gave-way and he floated downstream to safety on his rooftop.

Besides Adams, New Orleans bus driver, Ryan Washington, recently said he has heard numerous other stories just like the Adams account, recalling a massive explosion prior to a "three football field long hole" in the Industrial Canal caused massive flooding, resulting in death and destruction throughout New Orleans.

Washington said another local resident, Michael Night, heard the same explosion but was unavailable for comment.

"I've talked to many people hearing the same massive explosions by the Industrial Canal," said Washington in a telephone conversation from his home in nearby Slidell. "I will get busy compiling the names as we need to get at the truth behind what really happened as rich land developers and the government have been trying to get their hands on the 9th Ward property ever since the same thing happened during Hurricane Betsy in 1965."

Not only do Adams, Washington and Night think the levees were purposely blown, but long time New Orleans activist known as Mama D testified to the same in Congress recently but received a cool reception from legislators, who appeared to want to ignore the accusations and eye witness accounts.

Besides Mama D, Capital Hill discussions about the levee failure have recently included comments from New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin, testifying before the Senate only three weeks ago.

According to a Capital Hill insider who wants to remain anonymous, Nagin's comments outside the hearing room were far more interesting than what he officially told Senators.

"Listen to Mayor Nagin's testimony at the Senate hearings in Washington a few weeks ago. Very interesting," said the anonymous source closely following the New Orleans levee story. "Apparently he told some media people that the levees may have been blown and that the military was gunning down unarmed civilians and one Senator called him on it. Of course, Nagin backed down in the end."

New York Mother Who Lost Daughter On 9/11 Still Searching For Truth And Accountability From Bush And His Cronies

Donna Marsh O'Connor has been shunned by CNN and other large networks since her views are critical of the Bush administration's handling and cover-up of 9/11.

13 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

Donna Marsh O'Connor lost her daughter at the WTC South Tower and is one of the many grieving family members still fighting against insurmountable odds to get at the truth behind 9/11.

It's been a long, hard battle, fighting a fascist mindset imbedded in the U.S. government and unwilling every step of the way to mount a fair investigation.

"What is the Bush administration hiding and why haven't they even answered or addressed major questions about 9/11," asked O'Connor while he interviewed Thursday on Greg Szymanski's radio show, The Investigative Journal, on the Republic Broadcasting Network.

Thrust into the role of an activist, something she never counted on until her 29-year-old daughter's death, O'Connor holds President Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney personally accountable.

On the radio show she essentially re-emphasized what she said last September 11 at a New York rally where she called for the impeachment of Bush and his cronies.

"Look in the crowd," she said at the rally near in a park near the United Nations building. "We need more suits out there. We simply need more awareness if we ever want to get anywhere.

"I don't know if we will ever get these guys. I hold Bush and Cheney responsible 9/11 and for blocking any type of meaningful investigation. I would like to see the truth come out in my lifetime, but I just don't know.

"Bush, Cheney and Karl Rove, at his demonic best, have blocked all chance at getting at the truth. When a crime is committed, you look to who benefits for motive. Bush and Cheney had the most to benefit. All I ever wanted was the questions to be answered. Where was NORAD? Eighteen minutes is a lifetime in air traffic control and if they would have acted, my daughter would be alive today."

For those like O'Connor fighting the "good fight" in the trenches, one of the biggest obstacles to getting at the 9/11 truth has been a corrupted media, refusing to allow voices like O'Connor's to be heard.

"I never wanted to be an activist and it's interesting that there was a CNN reporter who heard my views, telling me she wanted to bring out a camera crew and do a full-blown interview," recalled O'Connor. "It never happened and later I found out she wasn't allowed to do it. So what does that tell you about our media?"

Besides her personal experience with CNN, Marsh was also critical about the recent slanted reporting and on-air whitewashing of a 9/11 related issue by conservative media personality, Tucker Carlson.

"Carlson basically made BYU physics professor Steven Jones look like a quack for saying the WTC most likely was brought down by a controlled demolition," said O'Connor about the professor who went public criticizing the government's official 9/11 story.

"He didn't even bother to play the video of Building 7 being demolished like Jones wanted, showing how critics of the government are being portrayed as quacks by the biased media."

Besides the media bias, O'Connor also emphasized the crooked nature of the 9/11 Commission, saying they were nothing more than a hand-picked group of government hacks never intending from the get-go at searching for the truth.

Some of the questions she personally wanted answered included why were the Saudis allowed to leave the country right after 9/11 when all other flights were cancelled? Others included why were those in the South Tower not told to evacuate right after the North Tower was hit and why, in general, does Bush think he has the right to refuse answering questions about the discrepancies in the official government story when millions in America don't believe it?

"When my daughter, Vanessa, was running for her life, why was George W. Bush reading to second graders?" she asked, adding Bush, the person, is even more frightening than Bush the politician. "I have a knack at reading people and Bush is a nasty little brat.

"He is belligerent, narcissistic and insecure. His entire life is spent covering up and it is painful to watch him talk with his constant pausing and groping for words and sentences."

Saying that Bush and his cronies are dangerous, O'Connor puts nothing past this gang of criminals in the White House, saying she is prepared to speak out anytime, anyplace or anywhere in order to wake-up America to the reality that the enemy of America lies within.

"Bush scares me," she added, "because he and his friends are willing to do anything to get what they want. We have to start preparing ourselves for a biological attack. There are just so many things he has done since 9/11."

Besides losing her daughter, O'Connor also lost the opportunity of being a grandmother, as Vanessa was found to be pregnant after her body was one of only 289 bodies recovered in tact at Ground Zero out of the approximately 3,000 who perished.

Also last July 25, O'Connor's family suffered another 9/11 related tragedy when Vanessa's husband, Timothy, died from what was determined to be alcohol poisoning.

"He starting drinking after 9/11 and never stopped. He loved her very much and never was the same after she died. I think he died for Vanessa," said O'Connor.

More Stories Rolling In About Levees Being Blown In New Orleans
Army Corps of Engineers reportedly told resident to evacuate as levees were "going to be blown." Popular New Orleans radio talk show host dismisses callers who heard explosions as quacks or disinformation artists.

More information and stories are rolling in, ignored by the media and scoffed at by conservative radio hosts, suggesting U.S. government operatives purposely detonated and blew the New Orleans levees to racially cleanse the city making way for a huge land grab by rich developers.

Since the levees gave-way well after Hurricane Katrina passed over the Crescent City, major media outlets have ignored numerous eye witness accounts, accounts telling about huge explosions heard prior to levees breaking at the Industrial Canal, as well as at the 17th St. Canal.

However, in light of the numerous reports of explosions, the media has turned a deaf ear.

For example, conservative and biased commentators like MSNBC's Tucker Carlson and other neo con shills posing as reporters, have categorically dismissed the possibility of government involvement, broadcasting their one-sided, biased views to an audience of millions while dismissing the eye witnesses as quacks or spreading disinformation.

Despite the obvious "out of sight and out of mind theory" used by the corporate media regarding evidence of a designed government effort to blow the levees, recently Terry Adams, a lower 9th Ward resident living a block away from the Industrial Canal, reported hearing a huge explosion just before the levee gave-way and he floated downstream to safety on his rooftop.

Besides Adams, New Orleans bus driver, Ryan Washington, recently said he has heard numerous other stories just like the Adams account, recalling a massive explosion prior to a "three football field long hole" in the Industrial Canal caused massive flooding, resulting in death and destruction throughout New Orleans.

Washington said another local resident, Michael Night, heard the same explosion but was unavailable for comment.

"I've talked to many people hearing the same massive explosions by the Industrial Canal," said Washington in a telephone conversation from his home in nearby Slidell. "I will get busy compiling the names as we need to get at the truth behind what really happened as rich land developers and the government have been trying to get their hands on the 9th Ward property ever since the same thing happened during Hurricane Betsy in 1965."

Not only do Adams, Washington and Night think the levees were purposely blown, but long time New Orleans activist known as Mama D testified to the same in Congress recently but received a cool reception from legislators, who appeared to want to ignore the accusations and eye witness accounts.

And also coming forward is Andrew W. Griffin, a former Louisiana based newspaper reporter for a Gannet-owned paper now at another paper in Norman, Oklahoma, said he talked to a number of people right after the Hurricane, claiming to hear explosions at the levees.

"I am convinced the 17th Street Canal wall was deliberately destroyed. I even talked to some evacuees in the weeks following Katrina who said they heard explosions or knew people who had heard them," said Griffin in a recent email.

Besides Mama D, Capital Hill discussions about the levee failure have recently included comments from New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin, testifying before the Senate only three weeks ago.

According to a Capital Hill insider who wants to remain anonymous, Nagin's comments outside the hearing room were far more interesting than what he officially told Senators.

"Listen to Mayor Nagin's testimony at the Senate hearings in Washington a few weeks ago. Very interesting," said the anonymous source closely following the New Orleans levee story. "Apparently he told some media people that the levees may have been blown and that the military was gunning down unarmed civilians and one Senator called him on it. Of course, Nagin backed down in the end."

With all the official posturing and the blatant, inexcusable lack of media interest in the eye witness accounts, what is even more disturbing was the handling of several people who heard explosions at the 17th St. and Industrial Canal breaks, wanting to tell their stories on the popular Spud McConnell New Orleans radio talk show.

Although McConnell encouraged people to call in with their accounts of the Hurricane tragedy, when confronted with callers saying they heard explosions, a long time local listener said Mc Connell immediately became irate, screaming "stop spreading disinformation."

"After the 17th street levee broke, a lady who lives near there phoned in saying that she heard a giant explosion just before it broke. Without listening any further, like he had listened to and interrogated other callers, he became irate and screamed 'stop spreading disinformation! The levees were not blown up and you didn't hear any explosions,'" said Chuck from New Orleans, who would rather not mention his last name.

"How could he be so sure? He didn't ask her one single question, like he did with other callers. You might be able to go and get a transcript of the Spud McConnell show on that day. I tried but have had no success."

McConnell was unavailable for comment and the Arctic Beacon has requested a copy of the show referenced above by the upset listener.

Besides providing information about McConnell's show, Chuck, the long time New Orleans resident, added some very information background information as well as further accounts about the levee breaks from other New Orleans citizens.

"One more thing. I passed by the 17th Street levee everyday before the storm. As far back as 9 months before Katrina hit, I saw Homeland Security vehicles riding up and down the street alongside the levee," he said.

"I knew that they were Homeland Security vehicles because they were all white with tinted windows and had 'Government DHS' on their license plates. I couldn't figure out what they were doing there but now I think I know. Again, difficult to prove, but they were probably wiring the levee.

"Something else of interest, I recently met a young nurse on an airplane to Houston who is from here (New Orleans) and is married to an engineer in Odessa, Tx.

"She told me her husband conducted a job interview with a guy who lived right on the 17th Street canal. The guy he interviewed told him that the day after the storm someone from the Corps of Engineers knocked on his door and told him he had to leave because they were going to blow the levee. I personally believe that the London Ave. and the 17th Street levees were blown. It's hard to prove, though."

Were U.S. Government Saboteurs Involved In A Fatal Shootout With New Orleans Police Officers On Sept. 4 At The Danziger Bridge?
Conflicting news and police reports leave a host of questions to be answered about what really happened between police and suspected U.S. government agents.

11 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

The Sept. 4 gun battle, first killing five and now two on the Danziger Bridge between what was first reported as New Orleans police and U.S. military agents, has turned into a hodge-podge of conflicting reports, misstatements or outright official lies.

An initial report by the Associated Press (AP) claimed five Department of Defense (DOD) personnel were killed by officers at the bridge located on the 5800 block of Chef Menteur Highway near Downman Rd.

The original AP report, however, has since been sanitized with the only copies of the original story kept for posterity at a United Kingdom paper at <http://www.guardian.co.uk/worldlate> and a foreign internet service, La Voz de Aztlan, at http://www.aztlan.net/police_kill_f.

But a quick check of both sites reveals The Guardian link has been deleted and Lo Voz had to provide through email today the original AP story after their link was also inaccessible.

The original AP story since taken down reads in part:

"NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Police shot eight people carrying guns on a New Orleans bridge Sunday, killing five or six, a deputy chief said. A spokesman for the Army Corps of Engineers said the victims were contractors on their way to repair a canal.

"The contractors were walking across a bridge on their way to launch barges into Lake Pontchartrain to fix the 17th Street Canal, said John Hall, a spokesman for the Corps.

"Earlier Sunday, New Orleans Deputy Police Chief W.J. Riley said police shot at eight people, killing five or six.

"The shootings took place on the Danziger Bridge, which spans a canal connecting Lake Pontchartrain and the Mississippi River."

But what now exists from AP is a changed version of the story, either indicating reporter error or more likely an intentional switch since no reference to the original story or even a correction remains.

Notice the huge difference of how the sanitized version of the AP story now reads, saying none of the contractors were killed:

"NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Police shot and killed at least five people Sunday after gunmen opened fire on a group of contractors traveling across a bridge on their way to make repairs, authorities said.

"Deputy Police Chief W.J. Riley said police shot at eight people carrying guns, killing five or six.

"Fourteen contractors were traveling across the Danziger Bridge under police escort when they came under fire, said John Hall, a spokesman for the Army Corps of Engineers.

"They were on their way to launch barges into Lake Pontchartrain to help plug the breach in the 17th Street Canal, Hall said.

"None of the contractors was injured, Mike Rogers, a disaster relief coordinator with the Army Corps of Engineers, told reporters in Baton Rouge."

And before looking at the official New Orleans police report and public release of the incident, released Tuesday to the Arctic Beacon, serious questions have to be asked regarding what has turned out to be huge discrepancies in all the existing reports or fabrications of the incident.

First, who were the "military agents" originally reported killed while making their way to the 17th Street Canal levee break? What were they doing there and why did police open fire on federal personnel, as originally reported?

And even more sinister questions have been asked by La Voz after covering the story last September:

"No one is saying anything and it appears that the news story has now been swept under the rug. Were these US Department of Defense personnel a Special Forces group or Navy Seals with top secret orders to sabotage the levee? There are verifiable reports that at least 100 New Orleans police officers have disappeared from the face of the earth and that two have committed suicide. Could these be policemen that died defending the levee against sabotage by "federal contractors?"

Further, why was it reported that it was necessary to shoot and kill five or six DOD personnel when now the following official report released by the New Orleans police indicates only two civilians were killed and no defense contractors injured.

What makes this even stranger is that for at least two months after the story was released no one was talking about the incident, as it was swept under the rug by AP and not followed up by any major news outlets.

Although reporters make errors, it is hard to believe professionals can make this big an error, as they first report five to six government personnel killed, which has now been reduced to only two civilians.

The following is the most up-to-date release by the New Orleans Police Department's Public Affairs Office, telling a completely different story than reported in the initial days of the shoot-out:

"New Orleans, La. --This morning members of the New Orleans Police Department issued an update regarding the attempted murder of a Deputy Sheriff with the St. Landry Parish Sheriff's Office, as well as seven members of the New Orleans Police Dept. The incident culminated into the shooting of six people, two of which were fatal. The ordeal occurred September 4, 2001, at approximately 9:00 a.m., on the Danziger Bridge, located in the 5800 block of Chef Menteur Highway near Downman Road.

"New Orleans Police Officers, Sergeant Robert Gisevius and Kenneth Bowen, along with Officers Robert Faulcon, Robert Barrios, Anthony Villavaso, Michael Hunter and Ignatius Hills, all responded to a call for assistance, two officers "down" under the Danziger Bridge.

"Simultaneously, Deputy Sheriff David Ryder of the St. Landry Parish Sheriff's Office requested immediate help from the New Orleans Police Department because he and volunteer rescue personnel (with boats) were receiving gunfire from several persons on the same bridge.

"As the officers drove into the area they were met with gunfire from, at least four suspects at the base of the bridge. The officers positioned themselves and began an exchange of gunfire. The gunmen, along with three other persons, totaling seven, jumped over the side of the concrete barrier onto a walkway, approximately three feet high, and continued the exchange of gunfire, when five persons were shot by officers.

"They are believed to be New Orleans residents and identified as: an unidentified gunman who sustained a gunshot wound to his body and died on the scene; 19 year-old gunman Jose Holmes who sustained gunshot wounds to his body and is listed in stable condition at nearby hospital; 44-year-old Leonard Bartholomew sustained gunshot wounds to his heel and head and has been released from the hospital; 39-year-old Susan Bartholomew sustained * gunshot wound to her right arm and leg and has been released from the hospital; 17-year-old Leisha Bartholomew was wounded in the abdomen and leg and was treated and released from the hospital.

"Forty-nine-year-old Lance Madison was one of the suspects who ran across the Danziger Bridge along with a second unidentified gunman Madison was seen discarding his handgun into the Industrial Canal. The second suspect continued running to a nearby motel and was confronted by a New Orleans Police Officer. The suspect reached into his waist and turned toward the officer who fired one shot fatally wounding him. Lance Madison was apprehended a short time later in the same area by the Louisiana State Police.

"When Jose Holmes is released from the hospital, he will be arrested on eight counts of attempted murder of police officers, along with Lance Madison, Leonard Bartholomew, Susan Bartholomew and Leisha Bartholomew were not arrested pending further review as to their involvement; however, the District Attorney is being consulted.

"There is no confirmation that the families of the two deceased suspects were notified. Orleans Parish Coroner's chief investigator John Gagliano will release their names once the families are notified.

"There were separate reports to the police department of sniper fire in the same area. Members of the Louisiana State Police were assisting and were in the process of responding to those reports when the exchange of gunfire began."

Editor's Note: CORRECTION. In the Jan 9, 2006, article about the possibility of the levees being blown, we inadvertently put in the 17th St. Canal levee when we meant the Industrial Canal. The change has been made and we apologize for the error.

Government Use of Microwave Weaponry Is Zapping People To Death
Nancy Taormina, 53, of Spokane, adds her name to the growing list of people being electronically harassed. Unable to sleep, she claims to be imprisoned in her own house.
10 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

The stories about innocent Americans being harassed, spied on and even zapped with microwave weaponry continues to mount, as the list is beginning to look as long as the New York City phone book.

Now comes forward Nancy Taormina of Spokane, Washington, who claims to have been targeted by the military after complaining years ago about low flying jets and chem-trails, an every day occurrence near her home.

"They never let me sleep at night, as they are using a combination of high frequencies and other electronic weaponry to not only keep me awake but that actually cause physical pain," said Taormina, 53, who now sleeps in a hidden portion of her basement away from any windows.

"Years ago I kept complaining to the military base nearby about their airplanes and weaponry programs and after that they began targeting me with electronic weaponry."

Prior to the harassment, Taormina led a normal life but ever since the military began its insidious use of electronic weapons, drastic changes to her sleeping patterns have left her sleeping days and pacing the floor at nights.

As another defense mechanism, she limits all use of electronics, including computers, radios, televisions and any other means the government may use to invade her privacy through electronic means.

"I have been singled out and targeted. Once they start, they never stop," said Taormina, adding that her house has been turned into a prison by the military ever since the harassment began. "I can't remember the last night I slept well. Sometimes they use a very high pitch ringing that keeps you awake and then there are other frequencies which actually penetrate the body, causing pain.

"It doesn't matter where I go, they usually find me. So I am thinking perhaps I need to leave the country to somewhere like Indonesia."

However, while here in the states, Taormina has become a voracious reader on the subject of electronic weaponry and government mind control programs, compiling a virtual library in her house on the subject.

"People just don't realize how whole neighborhoods are being targeted and the vast number of people who are being subjected to this type of mind and body manipulation," said Taormina. "When it first happened to me, I couldn't believe it either, but after talking to a number of people I am convinced this is going on all over the country."

Besides Taormina, at least 40 people across the country have contacted the Arctic Beacon with similar accounts, documenting the same type intrusive occurrences, including sleep disruption and other more serious attacks.

For example, John Mecca of New York has come forward, saying he was actually operated on in his sleep and an implant chip placed behind his ears.

To fight back, Mecca has started a web site where he educates the public on the government programs that authorize use of such microwave weaponry, the types of sophisticated weaponry used and methods and ways for people targeted to fight back.

"Many of you have deep instinctual subconscious gnawing in your gut that something is just not right. Like Deja Vu you have a suspicion things are going on around you, but they are not in focus and you forget all about the numerous strange things that keep happening," said Mecca, an inventor, author and investigator into mind control and microwave attacks who was targeted after trying to market a revolutionary product, upsetting the established, old money financial applectart.

"Some of you have been putting the pieces of the puzzle together a little at a time getting just a glimpse of the true reality all around you. It's your loyalty to the system that generates the denial and therefore blindness of the truth that the system could be so bad, this has you frozen from believing that's it really true. You're surrounded by the administrative workings of a world gone mad. Welcome to your worst nightmare: microwave weaponry."

His web site can be found at www.us-government-torture.com and is one of the more comprehensive places to search out the destructive use of this modern technology in order to basically numb the American public into submission

One of the more astonishing accounts of the use of microwave weaponry recently came from a person and place least expected, Dan Nelson, 45, a simple carpenter from the small town of Livingston, Montana, who said he was zapped severely in the head and abdomen by a portable microwave unit outside his home after going public about some sensitive 9/11 information.

"Ever since I tried to let people know about what I found out about 9/11, I have had many things happen. Within 12 hours of leaving a message on the phone of a popular radio host, I had a light green helicopter follow me where ever I went," said Livingston about two months ago on Greg Szymanski's radio show, The Investigative Journal. "The next day, after it first appeared, it showed up again at my friend's house and he will verify the incident. Two days after the helicopter incident, two men in a car tried very hard to run me and my daughter off the road while we were on my motorcycle.

"And the harassment just never seemed to stop after I saw that first helicopter. For example, I had a man come up to me when I was trying to get into my house and, for no good reason, poke me in the stomach with something which made me very sick, later causing a staff infection. He ran away before I could catch him and as a result I had to take heavy duty drugs. But the most painful was when I felt my insides bubbling, and I was getting very hot as I was washing dishes. The next thing I know I can hear the fluid in my head bubbling and got a massive head ache."

Since the radio show appearance two months ago, Livingston this week said the harassment never stopped, adding he has been followed and even confronted by what he thinks were government agents in his local, small town grocery store.

"I still have not been left alone although things are not as bad as this summer. After being on the radio show, I was followed all over town by a lady in a Suburban," said Nelson from his home in Livingston

"We have been being sprayed by jets everyday for at least three weeks and everybody is getting very sick and all of us are getting migraines and nose bleeds which we never had before. Many more antennas are going up none stop and lots of military equipment is being transported on West I-90. This has been going on for six months and is all being transported by private companies not the military."

Eye Witnesses Living Near Industrial Canal Levee Say Loud Explosion Heard Just Prior To Raging Waters Flooded 9th Ward

New Orleans resident, Terry Adams, heard "bomb-like explosion" right before he was forced to his rooftop and it floated away downstream. City Bus driver, Ryan Washington, adds hundreds more people with the exact same experience are being ignored by the mainstream media.

9 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

Eye witnesses are starting to come forward, some only a block away from the Industrial Canal levee break, saying they heard a loud, powerful explosion right before water starting gushing in, as they ended up in a matter of minutes floating downstream on their rooftops.

Terry Adams, who lives one block away from the Industrial Canal break, remembers hearing what sounded "like a bomb going off" from where the levee gave-way before rushing water forced him to his rooftop.

"Everything was calm, it was late at night and the storm had passed. I thought we had dodged a bullet and there was no water in my house and I was only a block away from the Industrial Canal break," said Adams, a lower 9 th Ward resident, in an extended conversation this week from New Orleans.

"Then I heard what sounded like a bomb go off from the direction of where the levee gave-way and within a matter of minutes I was forced up on my roof where I floated for about a mile into town before somehow getting to safety."

Asked if he was sure he heard an explosion, he added: "Water breaking a levee isn't going to make the noise I heard and besides, the levee should have broke before or during the storm, not afterward.

"I heard an explosion and so did a lot of other people. It came right from where the levee broke. What else could it have been but somebody blowing up the levee?"

The question of how the levee burst in one gigantic place at the 17th St. and London Ave. drainage canals, estimated by some to be a gaping hole three football fields long, as well as a number of other locations, has been on the minds of other local residents from the lower 9th Ward besides Adams, many hearing the same explosions but being ignored by the mainstream media, putting their accounts in the realm of conspiracy theorists.

For example, whenever the subject of the levees being intentionally detonated comes up, most mainstream commentators like ABC's Michel Martin, dismiss even the slightest possibility of foul play, appeasing Black listeners with comments such as this:

"Anybody with any knowledge of history can understand why a lot of people can feel this way, but any real possibility that the levies were intentionally exploded must be dismissed."

However, according to Ryan Washington, a long time New Orleans bus driver and former resident of the lower 9th Ward who grew up playing football on top the levee, said the possibility of government dirty work and foul play isn't so far fetched.

Now living in nearby Slidell, also hard hit by the hurricane, he has talked to numerous eye witnesses who say the exact same thing as Adams, insisting the levee was blown up and didn't give-way by natural means.

Washington also said the media should not concentrate on testimony from experts, new commentators and government officials, who have biased opinions, but emphasis should be placed on interviewed the hundreds if not thousands of people who heard or saw something the night the levees blew.

"Why don't they talk to the people who were there? Why are they relying on government experts who have a reason to hide the truth? I personally am gathering a list of people, a long list, who saw and heard what really happened that night," said Washington, in a telephone conversation this week from New Orleans.

He added that government officials have been wanted to get hold of the valuable lower 9th Ward property ever since 1965 when Hurricane Betsy flooded the area and the same suspicions of foul play circulated through his neighborhood.

"I even have talked to many reporters on the scene and tell them to get the story from the horse's mouth and talk to the people," said Washington, adding it's easier to hear and learn the real truth on a city bus than behind the veil of city hall and the corrupted television cameras.

"The stories about people hearing and seeing explosions, as well as stories about bomb residue being found at the scene, never see the light of day or get in the papers or on television.

"And if they do, these stories are always dismissed as being crazy or discredited by experts or government officials, who I personally don't believe one bit."

According to Washington, several important factors convince him beyond a reasonable doubt that the levees were blown intentionally to racially cleanse the city, as well as the first step in a redevelopment plan to put up high rise casinos and hotels in the lower 9th Ward.

"First, they always say that explosion was a power generator. But the power was off when the levees blew and the power station they were talking about was not in the vicinity of where the explosions were heard," said Washington. "Next, they say the barge in the canal broke the levees. I never once saw a barge in the canal in all the years I lived there.

"Also, if it did plow through the levee, it never would have made such a noise or cause an immediate break three football fields long. Further, why were immediately on the scene to fence off the levees so no one could see what happened when it took them more than 10 days in some cases to rescue people. What are they hiding?"

"Please someone from the media come down here and get the real story as I have talked to so many people who feel the same way I do. The government has been trying to get our land since 1965 and they are still trying today."

Besides numerous residents suspecting foul play, New York filmmaker Spike Lee in October Lee said on Friday night's Real Time with Bill Maher on HBO, that he believes Louis Farakhan's allegation that a levee was blown up to flood the nearly all-Black 9th Ward.

Lee added that "a choice had to be made, one neighborhood got to save another neighborhood and flood another 'hood, flood another neighborhood." He then engaged in a heated battle of words with neo con shill and MSNBC reporter, bow tied Tucker Carlson, who dismissed Lee as conspiracy theorist spreading paranoia and fear.

At this point the short exchange between the two shows Carlson's true colors as a government propagandist and as far from being a journalist as George W. Bush himself:

Lee: "Presidents have been assassinated. So why is that so far-fetched? Do you think that election in 2000 was fair? You don't think that was rigged. If they can rig an election, they can do anything!"

Carlson: "I was in New Orleans right after the hurricane in the ninth ward. And while I didn't hear anybody say the levee was blown up by the federal government, I did interview a bunch of people who were stuck there who said they believed this was part of the conspiracy to rid New Orleans of black people. They honestly believed that. I didn't argue with them, I just listened to what they said and I felt bad for them. So as you sit here -- who is someone who is rich and has option -- and are watched by people who are poor and have no options, it seems to me it's your responsibility, your obligation to tell them the truth and you know the truth, which is the federal government did not blow up the levees so don't feed the paranoia and the crazies."

Lee: "First of all, how's that feeding the paranoia?"

Carlson: "Because you're saying it's entirely possible when you know perfectly well it's not possible."

Lee: "How's it not possible?"

Although numerous questions remain unanswered about the reason behind the levee controversy, one question never posed was how could a man like Carlson ever call himself a fair-minded journalist after comments made on Real Time?

"I know why," said Washington. "These journalists are as corrupt as the government folks they write about. I'm only a bus driver but I know the difference between right and wrong and the media is dead wrong by not covering this story fairly."

One of the biggest controversies still brewing is the preliminary results of the three main investigatory groups looking at why the levees erupted. The groups, all tied to government interests, include the National Science Foundation in conjunction with the American Society of Civil Engineers; the United States Army Corps of Engineers; and the third group being funded by the State of Louisiana, led by scientists at the Louisiana State University hurricane center.

Although each investigation is independent of the other, scientists claim to be sharing data, coming to some surprising preliminary conclusions, one of which could have enormous consequences.

In a recent article by John M. Barry analyzing the data from the three groups, he looks at some of the suspicious preliminary questions, raising even more questions of how could the 17th St. levee break with such a small storm surge emanating from Lake Pontchartrain not the Gulf of Mexico.

"We know that Hurricane Katrina made landfall with enormous power, devastating the Gulf Coast, and that the levee on the Industrial Canal in New Orleans was overtopped by a storm surge coming directly from the Gulf of Mexico. When a levee is overtopped, there is basically nothing that can be done. Water pouring over a levee long enough will, in effect, wash part of the levee away. That's what happened on the Industrial Canal, resulting in the flooding of part of the Ninth Ward, along with much of St. Bernard and Plaquemines Parishes.

"But most of New Orleans was not flooded by water coming directly from the Gulf. It was flooded from the north and rear by Lake Pontchartrain, when levees failed along the 17th Street and London Avenue drainage canals. Initially, the Corps of Engineers said that the storm was so great that it overtopped these levees also.

"But after inspecting the levees and reviewing storm data, all three investigating teams agree: Hurricane Katrina hit Lake Pontchartrain with far less strength than it did the Gulf Coast, and the storm surge fell well short of the tops of the levees. In fact, a design or construction flaw caused them to collapse in the face of a force they were designed to hold. In other words, if the levies had performed as they were supposed to, the deaths in New Orleans proper, the scenes in the Superdome and the city's devastation would never have taken place."

Left Penniless In A Tennessee Living Facility, Feds Finally Got Off Their 'Fat Behinds' To Assist Elderly Evacuee Once She Returned To New Orleans

Clothilde Mack, 85, is now getting a FEMA trailer for temporary housing and $26,000 for house repairs, as citizens who got her home without FEMA assistance made it happen.

8 Jan. 2006

By Greg Szymanski

The feds back door plan to keep poorer Black folk out of New Orleans and away from their homes has backfired in the case one elderly female evacuee who found a way to get back home by herself, defying draconian FEMA orders.

The old saying the "squeaky wheel gets the grease" worked for Clothilde Mack, 85, who thumbed her nose at authority at every level all the way up to the White House, refusing to stay in an expensive Tennessee facility, instead returning to her damaged Orleans Parish home Jan. 2 despite FEMA and Homeland Security resistance.

"She was becoming despondent, depressed and I was worried Ms Mack was going to wither away and die, as she pined away in her room at the Mountain Pointe living facility," said friend and good Samaritan, Wendy Owens, one of the many citizens across the country who helped Ms Mack return to New Orleans.

"Now she's home, much happier and I am so glad her Christmas wish came true."

After good Samaritans all over America got wind of Ms Mack's tragedy sending her home with over $1,500 in gas money donations and the use of radio talk show host, Greg Szymanski's Winnebago motor home, the feds this weekend finally got off "their fat behinds," getting the elderly Ms Mack needed assistance.

"I think the squeaky wheel theory worked here and they realized they were starting to look bad, as the story went public. How does it look leaving an 85-year-old woman in the lurch once she returned home," said Joe Tittiger of Ft. Myers, Florida, who donated his time and efforts, flying at his own expense from Florida to Idaho to pick up Szymanski's motor home and get Ms Mack back to New Orleans for the holidays.

Although Ms Mack only two weeks ago was penniless and sitting in a one room Tennessee living facility while FEMA dropped her case and didn't pay her temporary care bill, through her persistence, refusal to sign FEMA papers to stay away from New Orleans for a year and the efforts of the good Samaritans, the federal government has now issued Ms Mack two checks, one for $5,000 and one for $21,000 to repair her damaged home.

The feds are also in the process of providing Ms Mack with a high powered generator at her Orleans Parrish home while repairs are taking place and are hauling over a fully functional temporary living trailer to be placed at a location within her neighborhood, four blocks away and within walking distance.

"The checks have been sent to Greene County and the mayor there has told us he is taking care of getting the money into Ms Mack's hands," said Tittiger, who has remained with Ms Mack every step of the way since picking her up in Tennessee Dec. 30 despite Homeland Security resistance up until the final minutes before leaving Greene County at Ms Mack's insistence.

"The generator is going to be brought over in the next couple of days, as well as the FEMA trailer that they are setting up for Ms Mack several blocks away. Once this is done and I am sure she will be taken care of, I am planning to take a Greyhound bus back to Florida and then return back to New Orleans to find work and help out the best I can."

Tittiger said he is going to make sure the FEMA money doesn't come attached with any strings, wanting to make sure the money is designated to repair Ms Mack's property and not a crooked deal to take away title.

"We are going to read the fine print of the FEMA paperwork which is being sent from Tennessee. When it arrives, I am going to make sure there are no strings attached and Ms Mack's property is protected," added Tittiger.

In a related New Orleans story, a judge Friday blocked city efforts to begin demolishing 14,000 homes in the 9th Ward, as activists and mostly low income homeowners were prevailed in getting a temporary restraining order to stop the bulldozing at least until Jan. 16 when attorneys for both sides will present arguments.

Although much of the poorer neighborhoods in the 9th Ward and on the city's east side remain a virtual ghost town, those few people on the scene are reporting many of the homes do not need to be demolished but have been abandoned due to FEMA programs that first displaced, relocated and separated families all across the country, making it difficult, if not impossible, to protect their property interests.

In the meantime, city, state and federal officials are advancing a multi-billion dollar rich man's redevelopment project, the first step being to level 14,000 homes in the 9th Ward and then moving to an east side location where another 88,000 homes are slated for demolition.

A court order, however, has stopped the bulldozing plans at least for another 9 days until the next court hearing. And last week a judge threatened to throw a New Orleans city attorney in jail if they again attempted to violate the restraining order.

City wrecking balls on Thursday tried to begin demolishing homes in the 9th Ward but were stopped by activists and homeowners who refused to leave their property.

City officials tried to bypass the restraining order issued a day earlier, saying it only prohibited use of a bulldozer not a crane and wrecking ball, but were unsuccessful in advancing their arguments in the Friday court hearing.

Federal Judge Threatens To Throw New Orleans City Attorney In Jail "If One More Home is Bulldozed Down" In The 9th Ward

Activists and lower income homeowners have been successful in temporarily stopping the needless destruction of many of the 14,000 homes in the 9th Ward scheduled for demolition by the government's crooked use of the eminent domain laws. A federal judge scolded city attorneys for attempting to violate the temporary restraining order in effect until an upcoming January 16 hearing. Although activists were pleased with the ruling, they remain suspicious of the future outcome.

By Greg Szymanski

A federal judge Friday threatened to throw the New Orleans City Attorney in jail if "one home was bulldozed down" in violation of temporary restraining order obtained by activists and lower income homeowners, trying to save their property from what is playing out to be an illegal government land grab.

While the legal wrangling continues, sinister government programs to racially cleanse and steal property from lower income homeowners in New Orleans is playing out on the streets of the poorer neighborhoods with bulldozers and wrecking balls inching closer and closer to 14,000 homes in the 9th ward.

And the only thing stopping the illegal government land grab, orchestrated by the feds, the state of Louisiana and New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin's office, is a group of feisty activists from Common Ground Relief, headed by Brandon Darby of Austin, Texas, who are literally putting their bodies between the wrecking ball and homes to stop the destruction.

Besides the strong activist stand taken this week, Darby said the group has filed a lawsuit on behalf of a number of lower income residents and Wednesday received a temporary 24 hour restraining order to stop the bulldozing after the case was removed from state to federal court.

And a federal court judge at the last minute stopped the bulldozing at least temporarily until the next hearing on January 16, threatening to throw the New Orleans City Attorney in jail if the restraining order was again violated.

"It was nice to hear that," said Darby in a conversation Friday night from his car parked in the 9th Ward, as he was keeping a watchful for any government shenanigans. "At least for the time being we have stopped this illegal land grab, but we will have to wait and see, as anytime there is a lot of money at stake, I do not trust these guys.

"Also, today I was contacted by federal agents, leaving a message and saying they wanted to talk with me and I have noticed being followed by Homeland security ever since we had the stand-off in the 9th Ward.

The stand-off Darby is talking about occurred Thursday morning when he and other activists from Common Ground Relief, a private organization formed by Darby, put their bodies in between the wrecking ball and a man's home scheduled for demolition.

"We rushed to help one 9th Ward resident who called and said the wrecking ball was at his house Thursday morning in clear violation of the restraining order," said Darby about this highly important story that should be on the six o'clock news but has been suspiciously kept from the American public by a complicit mainstream press.

"So we rushed to help the man in the 9th Ward's home, calmly convincing the operator of the wrecking ball to stop the demolition job. We were successful but the government's argument for defying the court order was crazy, as officials said the order only prohibited use of a bulldozer not a wrecking ball."

Darby also wanted to emphasize that a majority of the homes scheduled for demolition are structurally sound, saying many of the owners have been purposely kept out of state by FEMA and hoodwinked into believing their property is worthless setting the stage for the one of the biggest government land grabs in the history of the United States.

"What has our country come to when eminent domain laws and fascist government intimidation is used to steal property away from thousands of Americans," said Darby.

"In the background and behind the political scenes, everybody has to know that from Mayor Nagin right on up to the White House, they are all supporting the rich developers.

"They are also planning a multi-billion dollar redevelopment plan to build expensive hotels, casinos and high rise housing and the bulldozers now being seen in the 9th ward are the first step to achieving their rotten goals."

Besides the 14,000 homes in the 9th Ward scheduled for demolition, 88,000 are expected be next in line for bulldozing in the city's poorer east side, hard hit when the levies exploded, possibly on purpose.

Although no one in the mainstream media or in city hall has the guts to even propose such a possibility as the levies being blown up by government operatives, the same thing happened after 9/11 when everyone was frightened to openly say anything that the terrorist attack may have been a government inside job.

However, four years later many people in high places and even former Reagan and Bush Cabinet members are pointing a finger at government involvement in 9/11, saying it was the lynchpin needed to further the neo con war machine now killing hundreds of thousands of innocents in the Middle East.

Even though proof of the levies being blown on purpose has not yet surfaced, proof positive of FEMA's plans to keep New Orleans evacuees out of state is well-documented.

To prove this point, former New Orleans residents, Clothilde Mack, 85, who recently returned to her Orleans Parrish home on her own accord, said FEMA basically tried to bribe her to stay out-of-state by telling her case would be dropped unless she signed a paper stating she'd remain away from the Crescent City for one year.

Other residents are also reporting similar horror stories, saying they have been offered small amounts of money for their New Orleans property without having any opportunity to inspect the extent of damage.

"One man called me from out-of-state saying he was offered $5,000 for his home," said Darby. "He was told it was demolished when in fact it was still structurally sound and worth much more. And that is the problem. Government programs should be encouraging people to come back and take care of their land instead of being paid to stay away."

New Orleans Residents All Over The Country Should Be Put On Red Alert: The Neo Cons Are Trying To Illegally Bulldoze Away Your Homes and Steal Your Property

Brandon Darby, the founder of Common Grund Relief In New Orleans, is sounding the alarm and involved in a lawsuit to stop the government from illegally taking property by lying to the people and using phony eminent domain laws.

6 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

Brandon Darby of Austin, Texas, had only one thing in mind when Hurricane Katrina hit.

He had to rescue his best buddy, Robert King Wilkerson, as he was trapped and dying in the attic of his New Orleans home.

The race to save Wilkerson's life started in Texas with a frenetic, high-speed life and death drive, ending with Darby up to his neck in scummy New Orleans water and resisting arrest from uncooperative federal authorities.

And after authorities arrogantly refused to go after Wilkerson or let Darby go it alone, he jumped out of the Army Ranger jet boat, defying the law and forcing them into action.

Let there be no doubt or the slightest question Darby saved his friend's life with his heroic, in your face stand-off with cops and FBI agents. And it was Darby who refused to take no for an answer, which finally led to officials getting off their "fat behinds" to pull Wilkerson out of his home.

Wilkerson, an aging Black man who had already spent 29 years in maximum security prison for a crime he didn't commit, lasted 11 long hard days without much food and water before Darby's efforts finally got him pulled out of the high waters that flooded his home.

"I knew I had to save King's life and I wasn't going to let federal authorities or the New Orleans Police force stop me," said Darby, who has now left his Austin, Texas, business behind to stay permanently in the Crescent City to help others in need.

"I couldn't leave when I saw the misery and I saw how many people really needed help. We formed a group called "Common Ground Relief" of all political ideologies to help people save their property from government programs designed to take it away illegally."

And so after saving Wilkerson, the articulate activist immediately went to work helping others, filling a need left by FEMA and its programs filled with red tape and basically designed to keep the poor from returning home while helping the rich get on with New Orleans high society life.

"You have to say these programs are designed to racially cleanse the city," said Darby who appeared this week on Greg Szymanski's radio show, The Investigative Journal on the Republic Broadcasting Network at www.rbnlive.com. "I see it firsthand every day and the media is just ignoring what is really happening here.

"Simply, the city, state and federal government are using their illegal eminent domain powers to take away personal property. There are 14,000 homes in the 9th Ward ready to be bulldozed and most of the people have been systematically kept away from the city and don't even know what's going on.

Darby said after assessing many of the thousands of homes in the 9th Ward and other poorer neighborhoods, it is his opinion and the opinion of many others that most of the homes are in good enough shape to be repaired, not demolished.

"The media is not telling this side of the story as they all are working together, including New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin and others all the way up to the White House, who are intent on paving the way with billions of dollars of redevelopment money to first level the homes and then replace them with casinos, hotels and other expensive type housing," said Darby.

Darby added that Mayor Nagin has been "his worst nightmare" since he has not only catering to rich developers but also allowing federal agencies on the front lines to keep utilities purposely turned off in the poorer neighborhoods, discouraging people from going home.

"Think about it. Whole neighborhoods in the 9th Ward and elsewhere completely empty even though the houses can be repaired with a little hard work and effort," added Darby, who has been busy in the last four months gutting homes with other private relief workers in order to get people back in their homes.

"We have to get the word out to everyone across the country about exactly what is going on here. The government is lying and telling people to stay away in order to take their property out from under them. It's criminal, unconstitutional and we have filed a lawsuit trying to block the bulldozing which is starting as we speak."

And the sinister nature of this complete government rip-off is not being played out the evening news, but is being fought behind the veil of secrecy, as Darby and his band freedom fighters today stood between cranes and a man's house in the 9th Ward set for demolition.

"Our attorney who filed the lawsuit to block the demolitions, received a 24 hour temporary restraining order to stop bulldozing the homes," said Darby. "Guess what happens then? We get a phone call this morning from a man who said the city was now using cranes instead of bulldozers. What nonsense. So we rushed over to his 9th Ward house, stood between the crane and the house and stopped the demolition.

"At least we stopped it for the time being as I think we will have to do the same thing tomorrow if they return. We are down here to help the thousands of people who need it and who have been deceived by the government intent on taking their property, making way for the rich developers to make millions. For example, I know this for a fact, they are offering people in far away places like Minnesota or Alaska $5,000 for their house, saying it's worthless when, in fact, it's in good condition. Worth much more and can be repaired."

And the real tragedy behind what happened before, during and after Katrina is that the tragic scene as it is playing out now catches the feds, state and local authorities red-handed at a systematic racial cleaning and land grab program of enormous proportions.

Before Katrina, Mayor Nagin was given more than $17 million after Hurricane Ivan hit, to put together an evacuation plan to get the poor out of the city quickly if another hurricane hit.

But instead of using the money wisely, no evacuation plan was ever created, according to Darby's research, as thousands of poor unable to get out were left to die during Katrina in the same manner that occurred a year earlier when Ivan struck.

"What did he do with the money? I have problems with that as I was here during Ivan and nothing changed when Katrina hit," said Darby. "After being left to die in their homes, they were left to die at the Superdome and the Convention Center, left with no water and food like animals.

"Then after that thousands of families were separated and sent to hundreds of different faraway places. Ask yourself why? Isn't it easier to bulldoze away houses when no one is around. That's why.

"But we must put up a fight and that's why I am appealing to everybody listening not to let this happen as If we let them take our fellow brothers' property here in New Orleans, the government will do it all over the country. It's a land grab, pure and simple, an illegal land grab designed to steal property and change the complexion of this wonderful city."

Darby said the problems surfacing in New Orleans go very deep, but that he has decided he's "in it for the long haul" no matter what happens, making a last stand against the government land grab.

"I have leased a home in one the areas scheduled to be demolished and they are not forcing me to leave," said Darby, adding he's hoping his story gets out to the people since the mainstream media is on the side of the rich developers.

"If you read these words, send this story all across America as we need all the help we can get. Political and ideological differences shouldn't stand in the way of helping all these people.

"Think about it. If it can happen to the good folks of New Orleans, it can happen to you next!"

It's Deja Vu All Over Again: Nuclear Attack On Iran Imminent
A check of U.S. Military Readiness at three major installations shows they "call you Sir" a lot but no new information

5 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski
Arctic Beacon Columnist

If you ever feel like you're not getting any respect like Rodney Dangerfield said, try calling various military installations across the country, asking politely for their Public Affairs or Media Relations office.

I don't do this very often or expect to get any important, earth shattering information, as loose lips sink ships.

But occasionally I dial up my friendly war machine representative to get a quick ego boost since everybody on the other end of the military line is always saying "Yes, Sir, of course, Sir, I will Sir, wait Sir, No Sir."

And finally when I get a word in edgewise they say: "Just hold the line, Sir, and I'll direct your question, Sir, to my commanding officer, Sir."

Over the years I've called hundreds of military bases, flown on choppers, played war games with the 'Big Boys' off the coast of Sicily and dined with the troops on Navy battle ships on several occasions.

The troops used to like me back then because I always snuck on a bottle of good whiskey on board, pouring them shots out of my secret flask I carried in my boots under the table in the ship's mess hall.

But lately I've limited my contact with the military to only calling their PR people before impending nuclear attacks, which now occurs about three or four times a year or about once every season.

And I think the last time I checked in with the military brass across the country was when we were supposed to nuke Iran last August in the Fall of the year.

As you may recall, reports back then were circulating that Cheney, heir to the American thrown, was giving top level orders to U.S. Strategic Command (STRATCOM) to bomb the living hell out of Iran since it was then being leaked through the lackeys in the Washington press that Iran was supporting bin Laden and Al Queda.

Following what was called the "Global Lightning" mission, STRATCOM declared it was in an advanced state of readiness to essentially blow up the world. While calling Iran "a threat to world peace," even some Arab states are silently backing the U.S./Israeli propaganda lies advanced by a crooked media essentially selling the world a "bag of rotten apples."

So, with all that going on last Fall, I called around to several military bases likely to be involved in the aerial assault as well as the Pentagon, calling primarily to boost my ego and get called Sir a hundred more times.

The story went nowhere. No nukes flew over Tehran. No nothing. All that happened was a lot of talk and military readiness, as they say in the war business.

But now, since its a new season, the same headlines are flying all over the internet and elsewhere, reporting Cheney and his nuclear thugs are once again celebrating Winter and gearing up for another nuclear strike against Iran.

Stories on the internet by Michel Chossudovsky, Wayne Madsen and others are again sounding the Iranian war drums, saying that using nuclear warheads against Iran is in the final planning stages.

And James Petras, another Global Research writer, said Israeli Prime Minister. Ariel Sharon, has given the attack signal to launch attacks by the end of March, writing in December, adding:

"All top Israeli officials have pronounced the end of March, 2006, as the deadline for launching a military assault on Iran.... The end of March date also coincides with the IAEA report to the UN on Iran's nuclear energy program. Israeli policymakers believe that their threats may influence the report, or at least force the kind of ambiguities, which can be exploited by its overseas supporters to promote Security Council sanctions or justify Israeli military action."

Further, Madsen, a former National Security Agency (NSA) worker turned reporter, has been saying secret sources in the Pentagon are leaking the nuke war is right around the proverbial corner

"Primary target: Bushehr nuclear reactor and hundreds of Russian technicians

Other first targets would be Shahab-I, II, and III missile launch sites, air bases (including the large Mehrabad air base/international airport near Tehran), naval installations on the Persian Gulf and Caspian Sea, command, control, communications and intelligence facilities. Secondary targets would include civilian airports, radio and TV installations, telecommunications centers, government buildings, conventional power plants, highways and bridges, and rail lines. Oil installations and commercial port facilities would likely be relatively untouched by U.S. forces in order to preserve them for U.S. oil and business interests."

Reports were also circulating that three major military installations were involved in a new rapid increase in training, readiness and manpower with 50,000 to 60,000 trainees being readied to deploy to Iran after the nuclear strike. The installations included Fort Rucker in Alabama, Hurlburt Field in Florida and Twentynine Palms in California.

Sound familiar like military Autumn again in Winter!

And it's like Deja Vu all over again, as Yogi would say, as here I go again called into action like clockwork, once every season, calling the three above-mentioned military installations, going to get called Sir a hundred times and then asking the same perfunctory questions expecting no answers.

This time, however, besides the ego boost, I got lucky and got to talk to Second Lt. Amy Gonzales, who had a very sexy voice when she said Sir and who also was the PR nuke spokesperson for Hurlburt Field in Florida, the home of the U.S. Air Force Special Operations Command.

I asked Lt. Gonzales if I could call her Amy and she said "no problem," but I stopped short of asking if she was married, thinking this may be a little too much.

But she never disappointed me one bit throughout our conversation, as she called me Sir at least 10 times and even gave me a quote about whether they were preparing to bomb Iran again.

"I am sorry Sir," keep going Amy sounding good. "It is military policy not to respond to ongoing operations. Thank you, Sir, you will have to contact the Pentagon public affairs office, Sir."

That made 12 Sirs and her voice was so sweet, with a touch of a southern accent, I really didn't pay attention to what she said.

But looking at my notes, taken literally it very well could have been construed upon close examination that Amy was actually affirming an overseas attack imminent with her simple non response.

I thought.

"Was she trying to tell me something? Did she like my voice, too?"

Instead, I took what she said on face value, letting the whole thing go and giving her the sweet benefit of the doubt, especially considering that beautiful southern accent.

Moving on to bigger and better things and not to be denied a few more chances of being called Sir, I called Fort Rucker, Twentynine Palms and the Pentagon, almost forgetting about the impending nuclear war and thinking if it happens, I'll call Amy back for protection, as she popped back into my mind, thinking I could spend a few safe nights there at Fort Rucker in case the you know what hits the fan.

Of course, I would have to pop the question about whether she was married, but during a nuclear war, who really cares.

So with that thought lingering and finally getting Amy out of the way, remembering journalism and the truth were calling, I proceeded telephoning all three installations, finding out nothing, getting called Sir 39 times from stiff-shirted sergeants and then deciding to pack it in fore the day, thinking my god, this is tedious work.

Thinking please, Fort Rucker, Amy and all of you just nuke my house, as I do not want to have to go through the same story all over again in the Spring.

On second thought, wait. There's Amy and there's all those other people calling me Sir.

So, if you don't mind, don't drop the nukes just yet.

Former Congressional Candidate, Catholic Seminarian And Federal Prisoner Now Exposing Big Brother's Evil Ways As a Novelist

Mike Palecek spent time behind bars for protesting against nuclear weapons in the 1980's. Released in 1989, he's now writing novels using his religious beliefs as guideposts in searching for the truth in a country corrupted from top top bottom. His latest book, Looking for Bigfoot, is well worth reading.

4 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

Mike Palecek knows what it's like to be harassed, convicted and thrown in the slammer for doing what's right. He knows the pain of having to look at life from behind bars, thinking night after night how he was wrongfully accused.

Palecek, a country boy from a small town in Iowa who writes for a living now, has had Big Brother breathing down your neck since the 1980's when all he did was openly protest nuclear proliferation at a military base, a First Amendment right protected by the Constitution.

But a small thing like freedom of speech never has stopped the state before when it decides to shut somebody up, especially when it involves trying to take away its biggest toys - nuclear weapons.

"Bad boy, Mike," said Big Brother, finding Palecek guilty of trespassing several times, meriting in the state's eyes two separate six month terms and a couple other shorter stints.

Time after time the state kept finding legal technicalities and trespassing violations, using heavy-handed legal tactics and tons of taxpayer money to teach Palecek and others like him a sad lesson in life that "it doesn't pay to fight city hall even if you're right."

Although Palecek learned the hard way, his spirit never was broken and he is still alive, kicking and fighting corruption in any way he can.

But instead of protesting on the picket line, he's channeled his outspoken contempt for Big Brother through his writing, first as a journalist and now as a novelist with the completion of his sixth book called "Looking for Bigfoot."

"It's a novel about an alternative radio broadcaster who travels the country looking for the truth," said Palecek this week on Greg Szymanski's radio show, "The Investigative Journal on the Republic Broadcasting Network as www.rbnlive.com.

Even though the title is a bit deceiving, "Looking for Bigfoot," as described by some book critics is about fighting back and making important life choices, hinging on good or evil and right or wrong.

The book, written in a free-flowing style with each of its many small chapters beginning with an important quote from either well-known or obscure figures, delves into current events, attempting to bring out in the open the massive corruption and rampant lying within the policies of the U.S. government.

Weaving a tale of a man traveling the heartland searching for truth, Palecek asks the important question: "How can we make a difference in the face of incredible corrupt power?"

"There are those in America who know that this is not "the home of the free and the brave" long before Abu Ghraib," said Palecek. "Those people are the poor, the prisoner, the activist, the immigrant, anyone who has found himself face to face with the real, ugly face of America: the judge, the prison guard, the soldier, the policeman. And Mike Palecek, Federal Prisoner No. 11936-047.

"After that I went 'insane' in jail - "or maybe it was just a very, very deep depression or post traumatic stress disorder from previous prison experiences forcing me to retire from civil disobedience, so to speak, deciding then to go into journalism and then to novel writing."

And it's been a long, long and winding road for Palecek ever since growing up Norfolk, Nebraska, the town where the famous talk show host Johnny Carson was born.

Before settling into writing novels, Palecek's varied experiences also depict a man searching for truth in his own special way as he has tried it all, as they say, from high school football star, going into the seminary as well as taking a shot at politics, running for Congress as an Iowa Democratic Party nominee.

He also ran as a write-in candidate in 1998, and announced his candidacy by walking from the Air National Guard Base in Sioux City to the base in Fort Dodge to protest the bombing of Yugoslavia by then-President Bill Clinton.

"Right now I am trying to balance raising a family with what is going on in the corrupt government and it's not easy," said Palecek, who has also began working on his next novel from his Iowa home.

From the beginning, Palecek who was a former Catholic seminarian in St. Paul Minnesota, bases his dissident actions on his strong religious beliefs, saying that money used for the mighty U.S. war machine should instead be channeled to the poor, health care and education.

"Because I have been there, walked down small-town Nebraska and Iowa and Minnesota main streets and huddled in the dungeon intake cave of Leavenworth Penitentiary, I have survived to tell the unfortunate tale that the birds on our lawn are chirping out of tune," said Palecek.

"The world is not as we think it is. Our Presidents and congressional yes-men are not heroes. The real heroes in our military are those who refuse to kill, who go to Canada. The poor are not poor because they are lazy. Our prisons do not protect us.

"Voting for the Democratic Party is not nearly enough, as their succession of candidates lay down and play dead under the thumb of a terrorist political machines. We are keeping ourselves free by killing people around the world. Remember, evil men will do anything to gain power, riches, glory and fame."

"There is good news. Now we know. Freedom is not slavery and daily deception does not make us free. We can truly be free only when we have the truth. These freedom fries they have been selling us have only made us sick.

"But we can get well now and live as God truly intended us to live, not under the whip of the American rich and powerful, but with the enlightened wonder of this great creation called earth."

Looking at Palecek's latest book with an eye on the crooked federal justice system, another federal political prisoner, David Van Thournout of Dubuque, Iowa, has d this to say after reading "Looking for Bigfoot:"

"Mike's most recent work is nothing short of a worldview shattering slice of reality. It will enrage and embolden you to come forth and play your part in the unfolding of the future in America.

"Mike succeeds in showing us small town America in an objective light revealing justice inverted as it often is. People who should be in prison are not and those fighting in the name of justice become the recipients of this inverted justice.

"A more accurate picture of the for profit nature of the criminal justice system is not often found in today's literature. Being a former federal prisoner for my own political view I find this book a particularly refreshing light into the dark direction this country is currently moving."

Former Conservative Wall Street Journal Writer And Reagan Cabinet Member Calls Bush Hitler And 911 His Reichstag Fire

Paul Craig Roberts is starting the New Year off with his 'pen blazing,' asking whether neo-cons are planning another terrorist attack in 2006.

3 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

A former conservative Wall Street Journal columnist and Reagan Cabinet member is again on the warpath against President Bush and his gang of thugs, calling Bush's actions for spying on Americans treasonous and one more reason for a 2006 impeachment of "Hitler in the Oval Office."

A feisty Paul Craig Roberts, a former Asst. Sec. of the Treasury during the Reagan years, is starting off the New Year with his "pen blazing," comparing the Bush administration to the Nazi regime while ending his latest column, called "A Criminal Administration," with the ominous possibility of another huge terrorist attack in 2006 orchestrated by the neo-cons"

"September 11, 2001, played into neoconservative hands exactly as the 1933 Reichstag fire played into Hitler's hands. Fear, hysteria, and national emergency are proven tools of political power grabs. Now that the federal courts are beginning to show some resistance to Bush's claims of power, will another terrorist attack allow the Bush administration to complete its coup?"

And those are mighty harsh words, seemingly coming from the likes of a 1960's radical.

But what makes even more disturbing are the words are coming from the voice of the heartland of America and from a man who, for years, was considered a calming conservative voice, well-respected on Capital Hill and in the right wing media.

So what has happened to America when influential conservatives like Roberts are sounding the alarm and openly calling Bush Hitler? The answer is fascism. And as he points out in his latest Bush critique, all the signposts clearly show we are not far away from that gloomy prediction.

One clear sign, says Roberts, is Bush's reaction and the media's complicity in the recent NSA spying story, where Bush exonerates himself from any wrongdoing by branding the person who leaked the information as "giving aid and comfort to the enemy,"

Adding that this was a similar tactic used by Hitler in Nazi Germany, Roberts made these comparisons in his recent article:

"...the Bush administration has defended its illegal activity and set the Justice Department on the trail of the person or persons who informed the New York Times of Bush's violation of law. Note the astounding paradox: The Bush administration is caught red-handed in blatant illegality and responds by trying to arrest the patriot who exposed the administration's illegal behavior.

"Bush has actually declared it treasonous to reveal his illegal behavior! His propagandists, who masquerade as news organizations, have taken up the line: To reveal wrong-doing by the Bush administration is to give aid and comfort to the enemy.

"Compared to Spygate, Watergate was a kindergarten picnic. The Bush administration's lies, felonies, and illegalities have revealed it to be a criminal administration with a police state mentality and police state methods. Now Bush and his attorney general have gone the final step and declared Bush to be above the law. Bush aggressively mimics Hitler's claim that defense of the realm entitles him to ignore the rule of law."

Besides Roberts' harsh words, what hurts even more than Bush's flaunting of the law, is the mainstream media's willingness to give him a free ride, allowing obvious criminality to be swept under the journalistic rug, covering the NSA spying story like a second-rate dog and pony show.

Roberts then goes on to logically point out how Bush's actions resemble Hitler since there was no real necessity for him to bypass the established internal mechanisms for obtaining sensitive and secretive national security warrants under the Foreign Intelligence Service Act (FISA).

Under FISA and its secret FISA court, Bush already has the power to spy on suspected terrorist suspects without doing it under the table through the Pentagon or the NSA. The act also permits Bush and his cronies to even spy first and obtain a warrant later if time is of the essence.

So Roberts then asks the provocative question: Why would Bush totally ignore the law and the FISA court?

"It is certainly not because the court in its three decades of existence was uncooperative. According to attorney Martin Garbus (New York Observer, 12-28-05), the secret court has issued more warrants than all federal district judges combined, only once denying a warrant," said Roberts.

"Why, then, has the administration created another scandal for itself on top of the WMD, torture, hurricane, and illegal detention scandals?

He then goes on to further illustrate two possible reasons:

"One reason is that the Bush administration is being used to concentrate power in the executive. The old conservative movement, which honors the separation of powers, has been swept away. Its place has been taken by a neoconservative movement that worships executive power.

"The other reason is that the Bush administration could not go to the FISA secret court for warrants because it was not spying for legitimate reasons and, therefore, had to keep the court in the dark about its activities."

"What might these illegitimate reasons be? Could it be that the Bush administration used the spy apparatus of the U.S. government in order to influence the outcome of the presidential election?"

In closing, Roberts draws some chilling analogies among Nixon, Clinton and Bush, saying the former Presidents wrongdoings bringing impeachment hearings, pale in comparison.

Asking why the federal courts and Congress haven't properly addressed the Bush Administration crimes, he fears the system may already have been so corrupted that democracy, freedom and the American system of checks and balances are already a thing of the past.

"Why is the Justice Department investigating the leak of Bush's illegal activity instead of the illegal activity committed by Bush? Is the purpose to stonewall Congress' investigation of Bush's illegal spying?" said Roberts. By announcing a Justice Department investigation, the Bush administration positions itself to decline to respond to Congress on the grounds that it would compromise its own investigation into national security matters.

"What will the federal courts do? When Hitler challenged the German judicial system, it collapsed and accepted that Hitler was the law. Hitler's claims were based on nothing but his claims, just as the claim for extra-legal power for Bush is based on nothing but memos written by his political appointees.

"The Bush administration, backed by the neoconservative Federalist Society, has brought the separation of powers, the foundation of our political system, to crisis. The Federalist Society, an organization of Republican lawyers, favors more "energy in the executive." Distrustful of Congress and the American people, the Federalist Society never fails to support rulings that concentrate power in the executive branch of government. It is a paradox that conservative foundations and individuals have poured money for 23 years into an organization that is inimical to the separation of powers, the foundation of our constitutional system."

Big Brother Through Homeland Security Shows True Colors Trying To Keep New Orleans Resident From Going Home

Citizens across the country ban together to get one of their own home for holidays despite FEMA's draconian programs leading to racial cleansing and a property takeover in the Crescent City. Clothilde Mack, 85, who miraculously survived Katrina after 10 days in her attic, said she's glad to be home and looking forward to dancing at Mardi Gras

2 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

An 85-year-old New Orleans Katrina survivor, on the wings of a white dove and an old 1985 Winnebago Chieftan motor home, will be rolling into New Orleans today, ending a 3,200 mile odyssey to get her back home for the holidays to reclaim her house and property.

Despite FEMA programs designed to racially cleanse and keep people away from the Crescent City, this time average Americans banded together to help one of their own get home, essentially popping the New Year's champagne cork "right up Big Brother's you know what."

"The whole episode is the feel-good story of the year and nobody in the big mainstream media is even bothering to cover it. Where is Oprah when we need her?" said Wendy Owens from Greene County Tennessee, one of the many good Samaritans who helped finally get the Katrina survivor back home.

Clothilde Mack, who spent 10 days in her attic up to her neck in water after the levees broke, has become the unlikely "New Orleans poster child," returning home with the help of citizens across the country who took matters in their own hands after government programs designed to keep evacuees out of New Orleans left Ms Mack housed in a Greene County living facility against her will.

"All I ever wanted to do was go home and now it is finally happening after four long months of being away. I couldn't be happier," said Ms Mack while having a New Year's day dinner with friends and distant relatives in Mississippi about 90 miles away from her final leg of her long journey back home.

"FEMA never helped me, never got me the temporary trailer to put on my property to live and even dropped my case after I refused to sign a documents saying I wouldn't return to New Orleans for a year. That was just crazy. Why couldn't they help me in New Orleans or somewhere nearby?"

Despite FEMA's lame efforts to get people back home, Ms Mack's Christmas wish finally came true after good Samaritans from east coast to west essentially told government officials "to put their draconian programs were the sun don't shine."

And with that "government be damned" attitude, the story of Ms Mack unfolded like a modern day "It's a Wonderful Life" Christmas story, creating the same feel-good story watched year after year in the famous holiday movie starring Jimmy Stewart.

Although no angels appeared from heaven like in "It's a Wonderful Life," the miracles this time appeared in human form through private donations and tons of support from average Americans, wanting to help one of its fellow citizens this time fight city hall and win.

But along the way getting Ms Mack home wasn't easy, as Big Brother through Homeland Security tried to put "a stupid monkey wrench" into the story at the last minute, trying to intimidate the driver and block the motor home from leaving as she was being picked up at the Tennessee living facility.

"They tried to intimidate me, harass me and wouldn't let me even park in the living facility parking lot to pick her up. It was Big Brother at his finest, but I wasn't going to lose my cool and get arrested like they wanted," said Joe Tittiger, 48, the driver who first flew from Florida to Idaho to pick up the donated motor home.

"They then were going to ticket me for tags that were several months expired, but they backed off when I said why don't you ticket Ms Mack, it's her motor home? They then told me to go to the Wal Mart parking lot and I was surrounded by squad cars and officials who wanted to inspect the motor home.

"I heard they were trying to convince Ms Mack up to the last minute not to leave, but she wouldn't have any part of it. She told them she wanted to go home as planned in the motor home and we finally left."

The adventure, bucking stupid government policy to get Ms Mack home for the holiday's, began months ago when the Arctic Beacon picked up on Ms Mack's miracle story of surviving 10 days in her attic on two cans of greens and several small bottles of water.

Besides surviving against insurmountable odds after calling 911 on the first day of the flood, Ms Mack's story became even more disheartening after being treated "worse than a dog" by FEMA, being ignored, deprived of medication and placed in an expensive living facility without the government paying "one dime" for her care.

In fact, the Arctic Beacon learned FEMA has still not reimbursed the Mountain Pointe living facility for her extended stay, leaving the stark possibility of the facility attaching a lien on Ms Mack property in order to be reimbursed.

"Ms Mack always wanted to go home and it was incredible that FEMA just didn't put a trailer on her property, even after the lights in her community were turned back on," said Owens. "It would have been a lot cheaper than the expensive living facility, but FEMA wasn't paying anyway and we were afraid they might take Ms Mack's home if she kept staying here.

"After the Greeneville paper covered the story and printed the liberal views of the people helping her with the motor home, I think they tried to stop Ms Mack from leaving any way they could so they didn't look bad. You have to understand this is Bush country and a very Republican county."

As Ms Mack pulls into New Orleans today, she intends to stay in the motor home until her house is repaired or FEMA comes up with the promised temporary trailer. Tittiger also plans to stay in New Orleans to assist Ms Mack, as he is also awaiting the help of an Idaho group called Seeds of Peace, who are also traveling to New Orleans in January to assist Ms Mack with food and other necessities.

Also, Louisiana Senator Mary Landrieu said she would have representatives of her office present to help Ms Mack when she arrives home, also saying they would help facilitate trying to get Ms Mack the needed FEMA temporary trailer.

The efforts to get Ms Mack home started when radio talk show host, Greg Szymanski, promised to donate his motor home to Ms Mack, requesting a driver and donations for gas money.

Raising the needed gas money, generous listeners and readers, including Tittiger, came through with time, money and other donations to give Ms Mack her wish of getting home for the holidays.

"I think the motor home is great for the time being and the first thing I am going to do is look to see if I can find my cats," said Ms Mack. "Also I want to thank all you wonderful people, including Joe, who has been just great and you too, Greg, as you are a man of your word and I wouldn't have gotten home without all you have done."

North Carolina Mystery Man Has 'Secret Answers' Behind The Collapse of the World Trade Center

Are the neo-cons going to destroy world in 2006? Mystery man, dying of lung cancer, doesn't want to take 911 secrets to his grave. He also has plans for an underground cultural and food respository to save some American treasures in case of an impending neo-con calamity of worldwide proportions

1 Jan 2006

By Greg Szymanski

The New Year is starting off with a mystery of sorts, concerning the strange collapse of the WTC, thought by some to be a controlled demolition.

The mystery revolves around how the culprits pulled it off and what type of explosives, if any, were used?

Most people think somebody pulled the plug, but think again. Now comes what may be the real answer to how the WTC crashed to the ground. Although, in all honesty, who knows?

The answer will come "in due time this year," said the mysterious 60-year-old man in Trenton, North Carolina, claiming he doesn't want to take the explosive WTC questions and answers to his grave since he is dying of lung cancer.

But for now let's listen to his provocative opening statement, never before released, coming from an unknown location and leaving his name out of the story for obvious security reasons.

And either he's sane as a Philadelphia lawyer or crazy as a loon, but there is a fine line between and genius and insanity, as we already know.

In the spirit of presenting all views whether crazy or not, let's listen to the North Carolina gent, since what's crazier than the neo-cons plans for the world in 2006. Also, in the future we will desperately try to pry out the hidden secrets behind the real fall of the WTC supposedly held by this mysterious 911 researcher.

Here we go, believe it or not:

"Please pass this on to anyone interested with an open mind, but perhaps they already know that there may be a very simple answer to what happened on 911," said the WTC mystery man.

"I have a slight problem, though. I have the answers as to why the Twin Towers fell on 9-11-2001. These answers also explain all the anomalies that took place that day. The story isn't very exciting, because it doesn't involve a huge conspiracy of any type, just scientific facts that can be verified by any chemist with an ounce of Grey matter between his ears.

"This chemical reaction that I speak of is what made it look as if thermite and other bombs brought the complex down. No!, there were no little enemy agents planting their little thermite, or cutter charges on that day.

"They didn't have to, for "Mother Nature", and the designers of the complex did the job for them!. The terrorist only killed a few hundred people, and the reaction that I speak of killed the others. The ingredients were already on site, and just waiting for a catalyst to arrive. The catalyst could have been a simple fire starting at the right time and place, and the whole complex would have been doomed. Nature created two types of bombs on that fateful day, and the terrorists only lit the fuse!

"If there is a conspiracy then it involved covering up the real cause, the one of which I speak of.

"The slight problem that I opened this communication with is also that this information is worth a small fortune to the right people that might want to make a movie, or write a book on the "True Cause" of the collapse.

"This is one of the reasons that I haven't posted this information on the net; The other is "plagiarism". Some "Cyber Slickly Boy" will grab my story, change the wording slightly, and claim my work as his own. While it's true that I would like to profit from my work, it's not for personal gain, but for a public relief program that we are working on.

"The survivors of the victims that lost their loved ones that day need a closure in this dark chapter in their life, and free of any charge. The big corps that stand to profit from the new avenue of legal actions that my findings will open, well that's a different side of the coin, for they stand to gain billions of dollars from my knowledge. I can't go into much detail about the reaction that I speak of, for it would give part of the answer away.

"I think the first part of this reaction is known to a few, but sealed up in the Silverstein court case. The second part I feel that perhaps I'm the only one that has answer to that, and that wouldn't have come to me if I hadn't have lived through it twice in my life. The second time left me with life-long disabilities.

"I can also show you another building that met its demise in a similar fashion a few years back. So I can assure you that I know what I speak is true, so please help me if you can. Not only my-self, and the project that I'm working with need some help, but the survivors of that sad day need it also. I hope you can guide me to someone that can be of some assistance in this problem, for there may be more than just the truth riding on this venture.

"The project that I spoke of is an underground cultural, and food repository located in the middle part of NC. This will help some of those affected, should there be a world-wide disaster such as the one that just occurred in the Indian Ocean, but on a much larger scale.

"As I think you may well know, most of our relief efforts are an 'After The Fact Effort', and the unaffected ones come to the aid of the victims. But Sir, if the disaster is world-wide, and everyone is affected, then who will help?

"I feel it would be every person and nation for itself, and even civilization itself would be in danger of being lost. That's the reason for the "Cultural Repository", to keep some of our learning intact to be passed on to our children, for survival may be a full-time job, and much of our achievements will be lost.

"Just sit back and count the threats to our civilization on your fingers, and soon you will run out of fingers. Our civilization is like a complex machine, and the more complex the machine is, the more subject it is to failure. To repair this machine may prove to be impossible, and we may have to start from scratch!

"Well if you have any doubt of my intentions then view the ABC live coverage taken that morning, and you will plainly see for yourself that the South Tower was already burning before the second impact even occurred. This footage was pulled from the air a couple of days after Sept 11, and has not been shown since. It has several "Smoking Guns" that will back up my story, and will point the finger of guilt in the right direction!.

"I've taken up too much of your time already, so let me close with this. I am 60 years old, and hope to have won a bout with lung cancer, but if I've lost, I don't want to take this secret to my grave. So if by chance you know of someone that can help, then please contact me again."

Outspoken North Carolina Supreme Court Nominee Says Bush Reminds her of Julius Caesar

Attorney Rachel Lea Hunter is Again Making Political Waves, saying the way to get rid of a dictator like Bush, who said the Constitution was just a "god damned" piece of paper, is by using the power of impeachment.

31 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A North Carolina Supreme Court nominee is again making political waves and raising her voice this week, slamming President Bush and saying he is no better than the old Roman dictator, Julius Caesar.

Attorney Rachel Lea Hunter is the type of candidate who doesn't hold back her feelings, doesn't mince words and is genuinely "one breath of fresh air" in an otherwise stinky field of politicians and judicial candidates.

Several months ago, Hunter gained national attention when she likened Bush to Hitler, causing neo-con talk show host Bill O'Reilly and others to "scream bloody murder" as they tried to discredit her motives.

Hunter, disillusioned with the administration's lack of respect for the Constitution and Bill of Rights, shrugged of the O'Reilly attacks while stepping up her efforts to expose the corruption in the Washington and sweeping across the country.

"When Julius Caesar became Dictator of Rome, he aggregated all power in himself to accomplish his own ends. He believed it to be justified, for the Romans' own good, whether they wanted it or not. What we have in this administration is not any different," said Hunter this week from her North Carolina campaign headquarters as state polls have her in the lead for one of the open State Supreme court slots in the next election.

"This administration thinks it is okay to spy on individuals. This administration thinks that it is permissible to lock someone up indefinitely without charging them with a crime. This administration takes the position that it is fine to engage in a preemptive war without justification. This administration believes that if the facts don't fit, it will make them do so either by selectively choosing them, or by lying. This administration thinks that the murder of a panic-stricken US citizen by air marshals is acceptable. This administration thinks that manipulation of the media to obtain positive stories is warranted.

"Is it any wonder that this administration tramples on our civil liberties and shreds the Constitution? After all, the Constitution is "outdated" and just a "god-damned" piece of paper, (as Bush said in private to White House aides). What is next? Martial law? Suspension of the elections? It is not unthinkable.

Running on the Democratic ticket after defecting from the Republican party, Hunter is one of the few candidates for an important state or federal office who openly has tried to buck the neo-con stranglehold on Washington.

Hunter's views are openly posted on her web site at www.rachelforjustice.com where the outspoken judicial candidate blogs questions and answers and opens up her heart and soul to readers on both side of the political fence.

"We can continue to let our modern day Caesar become stronger. The war in Iraq will go on; more lives will be needlessly lost and we can keep paying billions to prop up the country, said Hunter. "Or we can put a stop to "the end justifies the means" and American world-domination analysis of the neo-cons and use the tools at our disposal to rid ourselves of this tyrant.

"We have a remedy; its called impeachment. Some are afraid to use this remedy, as they believe that the vice president will become president or that whom ever takes over will somehow have become the "incumbent." These are unwarranted fears.

"I already commented that if nothing changes, this war will continue. I believe that this administration has no intent of pulling out, no matter how they try and manipulate troop strength to make it appear that they are doing so."

Hunter also took time to strongly criticize corporate consolidation of major oil companies, causing high spikes in gas prices and having a negative ripple effect on the economy going into the New Year.

"I noticed too that gas prices declined last month, but that they had risen by a quarter in the past few weeks," said Hunter. "Am I the only person who has noticed that the major oil companies are BP-Amoco, Conoco-Phillips, Shell, Chevron-Texaco and Exxon-Mobile?"

"One commentator said that these companies were forced to merge. Yeah, right. Like some guy with a hood held a gun on them and said "merge or die!" They were not "forced" to merge. They merged out of a business decision, to become bigger and more powerful. And with the merger, there is less competition.

"Tell me again how there is no collusion amongst them and that it really is the hurricanes which have led to the increased prices. I am all for free-enterprise and competition. I understand increased demand and no more refining capacity. But I do not believe that there is absolutely no manipulation by the big, now-merged, oil companies.

"The increased price for gas will have ripple effects through the economy. In fact, the effect has started. The increased cost has led to car sales, particularly for SUVs, to be down. It costs more to transport food and other items. The housing bubble is about to burst, if it has not already done so. Taxes are on the rise too. And we, the consumer, are left paying for all of this. We cannot continue spending for all these inflated goods. We cannot keep paying for a war that is unnecessary, unconstitutional and unjustified. Something has to give and that something is inflation."

Experts Bash U.S. Government For Using 'Green Gas' to Extinguish Amazon People; Critics Also Claim U.S. Imperialism Together With Israel Trying To Manipulate Palestinians.

Two-day December conference in Brazil discussing the Palestinian-Israeli conflict, not covered by U.S. press due to heavy criticism leveled against U.S. and Israel for their imperialistic manner in handling situation.

By Greg Szymanski

A Brazilian professor of international journalism last week hit Washington right square in the teeth, saying the U.S. military's use of 'green gas' on the Amazon people is another clear-cut sign of "imperialism gone wild" to further exploit the precious resources of the world.

Jose Arbex, Jr., a journalist and professor at the Catholic University of Sao Paola, made his inflammatory statements about U.S. criminal aggression at the recent United Nations Latin American and Caribbean conference regarding solutions about the conflict between Israel and Palestine.

The two-day December meeting was sponsored by the Committee to Exercise the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, a conference hearing both sides of the delicate Palestinian issue but primarily ignored by the American press.

Arbex, Jr. strongly chastised America's imperialistic and heavy-handed foreign policy tactics on the Palestinian people, as well as bringing up the sensitive issue of toxic chemicals being unleashed on the indigenous people of the Amazon, pointing out the green gas was used to "expel the people" in order to exploit and essentially steal important natural resources.

The U.S. government has not denied using "green gas", but claims it is spread throughout the region in order to reduce drug trafficking and not intended to harm the people of the Amazon.

"This is simply not true," said Arbex Jr., adding "the United States was also trying to control the resources of Paraguay and had tried to militarily occupy the Amazon region."

Besides criticizing the U.S. for exploiting third world countries, he joined in with other speakers, strongly criticizing the U.S. and Israel for cooperating in thwarting Palestinian efforts in becoming a free and independent people.

He said the Palestinian people were "a perfect example" of the struggle against the Universal enemy - U.S. and Israeli imperialism.

"In the Middle East as in Central Asia, it was a quest for control of natural oil reserves that was behind

United States policy," Arbex Jr. continued. "Israel's loyal cooperation was key to that policy. The struggle of the Palestinian people constituted a major challenge. It was a symbol of tireless heroism and an example for all those struggling against imperialism. The fight of the Palestinians mirrored their struggle and the Palestinian destiny was their destiny.

"In the Middle East, there was no war between the Jews and Palestinians. They were both the victims of imperialism. The challenges confronted by the Palestinian Authority were the very challenges confronted by the world community.

Arbex Jr. and other speakers critical of U.S. and Israel, asked whether the United Nations, the body holding the conference, was turning into "just a fiction" or would it be able to put restrictions on the U.S. empire?

As far as reaching any viable two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, Jef Halper, a coordinator of the UN/Israeli Committee against House Demolitions, said it was no longer feasible in light of Prime Minister's Ariel Sharon's hard line stance, limiting Palestinian autonomy.

"Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon wants a Palestinian State that would have no industry, no economy, no control of borders, resources or airspace, and no control over cultural and historical sites," he said. "Israel's unilateral moves created an illusion of a Palestinian State that would leave Israel in control."

Edward Peck, president of Foreign Service International in Washington, D.C., also leveled heavy criticism against the Palestinian situation and Prime Minister Sharon's real intentions, adding that "an important obstacle to ending the Israeli occupation was Israeli democracy.

"As in every democracy, decisions did not always reflect the views of the majority but rather those of an active committed minority," he said. "If a small group wanted something and the rest of the country did not care that much, the minority would control the debate."

He added that he did not believe Sharon ever had any intention of seeking a viable Palestinian State, but would prefer small Palestinian communities with sovereignty but no authority.

"There is a sharp difference between sovereignty which is symbolized by a flag, and authority which is symbolized by a gun, Peck said, commenting that he found it interesting that the majority of the speakers in the opening session did not use the word occupation.

"Yet the basic issue was ending the occupation. There was a tendency to use euphemisms. It was not a conflict, he said, it was an occupation. The Palestinians never had a tank, an airplane, or an army. There were no negotiations. Negotiations were between two parties. The occupied could not negotiate with the occupiers.

"The Gaza Strip today was the largest fresh air prison in the world. There was no disengagement. The so-called disengagement had been negotiated between the Israelis themselves. In the United States, one did not read about the things that went on in the West Bank. One could ignore the situation, but at a price."

Besides focusing on the issues concerning the turmoil, other speakers criticized the bias, one-sided press coverage, favoring Israel.

"The immense majority of Latin American journalists covered the Palestinian conflict from Israel, said Pedro Brieger, another journalism professor from the Catholic University in Sao Paulo. "Seeing was not understanding, because it was important where you were looking from. Important Latin American newspapers with journalists in the area based them in Israel.

"The largest paper in Argentina had one correspondent, an Israeli Jew, covering the issue. He and others, like the correspondent for CNN, looked at the situation from the point of view of the Israelis.

"Moreover, the Holocaust was used as a kind of blackmail with the media. Any criticism of Israel was considered anti-Semitism. An Internet site called "Bad News" listed how the media service defamed Israel. Last year it had given a prize to the most anti-Israeli journalist in Latin America."

Adding the outright manipulation of language leads favoring of Israel by most of the world's press coverage, leads any average to believe Palestinians were the provocateurs while the Israeli's were only acting in defense of the "terrorist aggression."

"Language used disdainfully about Palestinians would never be used in reference to Jews," said Brieger. "The perception prevails that the Palestinians attack and the Israelis just respond to provocation. The Israeli bombardments were never called terrorist bombings and there should be a debate in the media about the definition of terrorist acts."

Chicago's Barroom Political Pundit Tells America What's Around the Corner in 2006

A New Year's Toast and a Tall Glass of Beer To Salute Slats Grobnik. Now the Ace from the Windy City said he talked to a Marine who said Daddy Bush liked to knock down a six pack or two in the Presidential chopper during midnight excursions.

29 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski
Arctic Beacon Columnist

The Beer Barrel Polka by Frankie Yankovic plays at least three or four times during any given night during the holiday week at Sam's Tavern in Chicago, a local saloon where the boys hang out in the Windy City.

It's one of those local hangouts with a big horseshoe bar, tables all around, good Italian, Polish and Irish food, Old Style and Hamm's beer flowing freely and lots of dancing and singing going on, even in the hallway leading up to the bathrooms.

There's no pool table in Sam's Place because it takes up too much space, but there's one of those long, saw dusty shuffleboard tables wedged in the corner and a dart board on the wall.

So, every year between Christmas and New Year's, a week in Sam' Tavern is like a week in heaven. And every year I go to Sam's in order to hear what Slats Grobnik has to say about what's in store for America in the New Year.

Slats ain't no psychic, but he's just like one when he's had a few shots and beers. And most often, except for the time in 1992 when he predicted the Cubs would win the World Series, he's been right on the money, especially when it comes to politics and world affairs, his two favorite subjects.

Slats doesn't have any fancy degrees, still drinks beer from a can and while on the subject of drinking, he wishes pop tops were never invented. He doesn't eat health food, isn't a religious fanatic and doesn't own a computer.

He still reads three newspapers every day, drinks black coffee with sugar, hates Nazis and while on the subject of World War II, Slats fought at Normandy, giving him what he calls the unconditional right to blast politicians whenever he feels like it.

This year I saw Slats sitting in his usual bar stool, having a shot, beer, pretzels and watching a Bulls basketball game. I knew one question would open up the flood gates, so I ordered a beer and asked:

"What about that Bush Son of a B?"

I knew that would raise the room temperature. So I sat back and started drinking, as I am a perfect example of how some people get their holiday kicks in strange ways.

"Where do you want me to start, kid, where?...that good for nothin' son of a son of a Nazi," said Slats.

"Start anywhere. Whatta bout his being on the wagon?"

"I don't trust any good for nothin' President who doesn't drink, plain and simple. When I was a kid, they all drank: Roosevelt, Truman and the country was in good shape! At least his old man, Daddy Bush, drank a few down and used to have a six pack waitin' for him under the seat of the Air Force One chopper when he went for his secret midnight runs. That something, I guess?"

"How do yah know that?" I asked, knowing Slats knows everybody and everything anyway.

"I used to sell RV's with one of the Marines who was the head mechanic on Daddy Bush's chopper. He said it was cushy Washington job. He told me George H. liked his beer and always had a cold six pack or two ready for him and Barbara when they went out on their midnight runs to God who knows where.

"The Marine said they swore him to secrecy, but we gotta a little drunk over a few cold ones ourselves and he told me all about it, told me how he'd have to hold Bush up by the arm when they' got back to the White House lawn early in the morning before the press corp got up."

"Where'd they go that late with the chopper?"

"How da hell do I know, but the Marine said they went to these secret hideaways in the middle of nowhere. They'd let the President and Barbara out of the chopper with their beer and then they'd come back a couple hours later sauced to the gills. Now, him, I might trust, but that's me and the booze talkin', but the kid, forget it.

"I don't know why the kid Bush can't hold his liquor? I heard he sniffed glue or cocaine when he was a kid. That's probably why. He's one of those hippie drug addicts from the 60's.

"Now how da hell is he gonna hold his own with all the world heavyweights, drinkin' ice tea ? When I found out he couldn't hold his liquor and was an alchy, I didn't vote for 'em. That's why we're in trouble. We gotta a dry drunk running the show, shaking all over the place and not knowin' what the hell he's doin' or saying!"

"It's a little more complicated, don't you think, Slats."

"You think so. Let me tell yah what I think is gonna happen in the New Year."

"What?"

"Why you in such a hurry, kid. Have another Bud. Sam, get the kid a Bud. You wanna hear what's gonna happen next year. I'll tell you and it all starts with that lame brain kid President not being able to hold his liquor. If he could drink normal, we wouldn't be going in the tank as a country.

"You see, if this guy would have got in with the right drinking crowd when he was a kid in school, we wouldn't be looking over our shoulder for another terrorists attack every other day.

"When things don't go right for the kid President, he starts getting the cold sweats and then starts having everybody blow up things. He's just in with the wrong crowd up there in the White House.

"Whatever you wanna call 'em, neo-cons or shmeacons. They'll all a bunch of bum cowards who don't have the guts to sit down and talk turkey. They grow up in these fancy ivy league schools, playing with their Daddy's money and runnin' around in their satanic skull and crossbones cults.

"If they'd just sit down and have a beer with people like us, they'd be OK. But, no, they play those games with the devil, get into trouble and then get mixed up with the Rothchilds and Rockefellers in the 33rd level of the Mason Scottish Right or what ever the hell they do at night and then its all over for 'em.

"They get juiced on power, killing and sex and now are bringing the world right down on top of everybody. They're all nuts, plain and simple. But they can do a lot of damage."

"So how do we stop em from blowin' up the world next year, Slats?"

"Simple. Get em all drunk, every last one of them. If they're all like the kid, then it should be a breeze. All we have to do is sneak in the White House, put whiskey in the punch bowls and watch em all jump into the Potomac.

"After a few beers, Bush and his gang won't know what the hell they're doin'. Then we can rush the place, put the Seal of the People on the wall in the Oval Office and take back our government before its too late."

Now, that's a plan, Slats. That's a plan.

Editor's Note: Greg Szymanski's columns used to appear regularly in the heartland, but now only surface once in a blue moon, usually a couple of times a year when he gets homesick for his old buddies in Chicago. Greg revived the life and times of Slats Grobnik, a close friend of former Chicago Daily News and Sun Times columnist, Mike Royko, a one of a kind journalist who made Slats famous in many of his columns. Mike died a number of years ago and Greg still writes about Slats in Royko's honor.

Secret Societies, Satanic Sects, The Priere du Sion, The Knights Templars, Freemasons? What's Their Purpose and Are They At Core of New World Order?

Secret societies like Priere du Sion have tried to unravel Christianity, saying Jesus survived the Crucifixion and raised a family with Mary Magdalena. Are the documents proving this hypothesis real, as revealed in the 1982 book, Holy Blood, Holy Grail. Although many condemned the book, it spawned a whole new cult of readers still looking for answers and now tying these secret societies to the NWO. Also, why does the symbolism of skull and crossbones keep popping up throughout history?

By Greg Szymanski

The subject of secret societies and satanic sects is usually left for parlor talk or after midnight bull sessions and drinking parties.

But as a young free lance reporter working in Rome near the Vatican, I became familiar with a group called Priere du Sion, a secret society still in existence and supposedly dating back to 1090 when a conclave of Calabrian monks left from the Belgium Abbey of Orval to help secure the election of Godfroi de Bouillion as de facto king of Jerusalem during the First Crusade.

The secret sect came to my attention while having a double espresso and after noticing an article in the back pages of the Il Paese Sera, an Italian newspaper, mentioning the name of Sion's alleged Grand Master, Pierre Plantard.

Plantard, professing to be related to Jesus, said he was going to prove his point with the release of sensitive documents, proving Jesus survived the Crucifixion and that he was, in fact, one of his direct descendants.

The story struck me as odd, but I kept a copy of it since the controversial and highly acclaimed 1982 book, Holy Blood, Holy Grail had recently hit bookstands as a bestseller, striking my interest with the same hypothesis that Jesus together with Mary Magdalena founded a new bloodline.

The book's central hypothesis was that this bloodline later became the Merovingians in France, protected by the Knights Templar with the Sion and later by the Freemasons, in what amounted to a stunning religious re-write of Western Biblical history.

Banned in many Catholic-stronghold countries including the Phillipines, the book nevertheless spawned a new cult of readers who subsequently studied the scholarly work of Robert Eisenman, Barbara Thiering and the Dead Sea Scrolls researchers, revealing the suppression of early schisms within Christianity.

For example, as written by Michael Baigent, Richard Leigh and Henry Lincoln in the Grail as well as a subsequent book called The Messianic Legacy, the authors present documentation showing how in 1885

Abbe Berenger Sauniere discovered a collection of parchments beneath a church in Rennes-le-Chateau, revealing the new bloodline of Christ.

And one of the complex ciphers and codes in the document supposedly read: 'To Dagobert II King And To Sion Belongs This Treasure And He Is There Dead.'

After the find, Sauniere is said to have quickly become a part of the Parisian esoteric underground, making a fortune from the Church, which subsequently spent inordinate amounts of money on unusual interior designs that prominently featured dark interpretations of Christ's crucifixion, revealing how Satanic influences were deeply rooted within factions of the Church.

Alex Burns, who in 2000 wrote a belated review of the Holy Grail, has this to say about the religiously explosive Sauniere find:

"The solutions to this enigma involve a twilight world where modern intelligence agencies and...a secret society (the Priore du Notre Dame du Sion) and the royal family claims of the House of David.

"Historical analysis covers Pythagorean and Egyptian sacred geometry and mathematics (symptomatic of post-industrial society hyper-specialization); the hidden cultural legacies of the Cathars and the Knights Templar; mythopoeic themes in Nicolas Poussin's painting 'Et In Arcadia Ego' and anything from Satanic Bloodlines and Richard Hoagland's 'Face On Mars' to Chaos Theory and DNA phylogenetic memories.

"Embarking on the 'Holy Blood, Holy Grail' mystery means exploring where Pop Culture and the Sacred intersect in an infinite regressing nest of quantum combinations. The original book spawned several television documentaries and brought contemporary occult subcultures into the mainstream (even influencing conspiracy theorists like Robert Anton Wilson), foreshadowing the impact of the 'X-Files' television series with a combination of foreboding and wonder that entranced audiences worldwide.

"If many early conspiriologists feel that armchair conspiracy theorizing has become too popular and too mainstream, then the 'Holy Blood, Holy Grail' phenomena may be seen in retrospect as the critical turning point where a Culture exploded beyond previous thresholds and began to devour itself."

After the Holy Grail created a huge controversy among theologians over its assertions that Christ had children and didn't die on the cross, the trio of authors embarked on the sequel, called the Messianic Legacy, further detailing early Christian heresy about the true life of Christ.

Steven Mizrach, a researcher into the Priore du Sion mystery, had this to say about the second book:

"This book goes into further detail about early Christian heresy, and suggests that the true 'heretics' (that is, those who deviated from the original message or mission) may have actually been the 'orthodox' and 'catholic' Church Fathers like Iraneus, whereas the people who held the actual truth of Christ's life were the persecuted Gnostics, Ebionites, and 'Desposyni'.

"In the second section, it examines the Messianic ideal throughout history, and some of its negative and positive impacts, especially in European history. The third section examines some of the PoS' curious entanglements with modern crypto-political forces, such as the Knights of Malta, P2 Masonic lodge, Kreisau Circle, Swiss Grand Loge Alpina, and various advocates of Pan-European Union."

In fact, much of what has been written and researched about the Ordre de Sion, or Priore du Sion, its relationship with the Knights Templars and Sauniere 1885 discovery has been scattered hearsay, but according to another esteemed researcher of the sect, only two things are for sure after 1000 years of its supposed existence:

"It has been seven years since I wrote my first article on the Priory of Sion/Rennes-les-Chateau mystery. At the time, I was heavily under the influence of the books Holy Blood, Holy Grail and Lionel Fanthorpe's work. Since then, there have been a number of books released, some better, some worse, than these original influences. I have revised some of my theories, challenged some of my own assumptions, learned some new things, and encountered a great deal of contrary data.

"Now, I am no longer sure that the hypothesis presented at the end of Holy Blood, Holy Grail is the best for explaining the data, nor am I sure that a Priory of Sion with the characteristics ascribed to it (an 800-year uninterrupted history, 9000 members internationally today) really exists. I also am not sure that what is presented as "orthodox" with regard to the Sauniere saga can really be trusted. Still, although I have encountered the work of the debunkers, I am sure of two and only two things:

"First, the Sauniere saga cannot be explained away simply by a mass-trafficking pyramid scheme and a bad taste in (Church) décor and;

"Second, something called the Order de Sion existed in the Middle Ages up until, at the latest, the 17th Century; something called the Priure du Sion existed from at least 1956 to 1984; whether these two things have any actual relationship to each other, I am still trying to figure out."

Although many scholarly articles and books have been written about the idea of some type of mysterious bloodline of Christ with genes from G-d/aliens/angels /Nephilim /Merovech, as well as lost artifacts like the Shroud of Turin, the Ark of the Covenant, the Holy Grail and the head of John the Baptist, I will limit what I learned about the Priure du Sion to the simple facts I uncovered when I visited the sect's Paris office.

Even though this short jaunt into the ancient order's secret world is rather anti-climatic, it does prove it existed in some form or another as late as 1984, but for what purpose or eventual end remains a guarded mystery.

Besides the group's Paris existence, while researching the subject at various Rome libraries, religious bookstores and Italian newspaper archives, the most interesting topics surrounding the mystery of the Priure du Sion included the authenticity of the Shroud of Turin, the origins of early Christianity, the involvement of Satanic groups, the question of whether order of Sion had a New World or branch operating in the U.S., the exact location of the Ark of the Covenant and the Holy Grail.

However, throughout my research which continues as time permits even today, one mysterious piece of symbolism that has somehow survived for centuries is the notorious skull and crossbones.

Mizrack also concurs about the mysterious survival of the skull and crossbones symbolism, saying this about its origins and usage today:

"The skull and crossbones seems to have been used as an emblem first and foremost by esoteric and heretical groups as a symbol of rebirth. It later became the battle flag of the Knights Templar (and a nasty rumor about the Templars claimed they chose it because of a horrific necromantic ritual) and, in the 17th century, the "Jolly Roger" flag of British and French pirates.

"Most mysteriously, it is the emblem of the secret society Scull N' Bones at Yale, which George Bush and so many other members of the American elite have been initiated into. (Yale's graduating classes, according to some authors, seem to have provided the rich white young men of distinction which formed the early OSS and, later, the CIA.)

"What are the connections here? Did some of the post-dissolution Templars eventually turn their naval skills toward the service of pirate fleets? (We know many in Portugal eventually joined the Knights of Christ who, with Prince Henry the Navigator, circumnavigated the world's oceans.)

"Why does the secret society S & B use a skull in its ceremonies which supposedly belongs to, of all people, the Native American Geronimo? Is it to commemorate, in some sinister ritualistic way, the "piracy" and plunder of Native lands in the U.S.? Is there a link between Scull N' Bones and the (less secretive) academic honor society Phi Beta Kappa?"

The Priore du Sion Paris Office

Although my contribution to the sect's purpose and origins is minimal, it's worth mentioning since I located its purported Paris office location. After traveling from Rome to Paris by train, with the intent to interview Plantard, the group's leader at the time, I remember pinpointing the office and spending at least five days knocking on its door without any answer.

I also remember calling the phone number listed, receiving no answer. But as fortune would have it, on my last and final day in Paris, the door mysteriously opened with a rather attractive lady with glasses standing in the doorway blocking any quick entrance.

After getting confirmation the group existed as a "religious research organization," I asked to speak with Plantard. At first, I received a blank stare and no answer. But when I begin asking again, she interrupted, saying: "I now no one by that name, sir, thank you."

The door closed before I could think of something quick in French and that was the last I ever saw of the Priore du Sion. Although the story ended in a dead end after repeated calls to the office went unanswered, to this day I always wondered what was behind that door and why the lady denied knowing Plantard when earlier he publicly connected himself with the same group.

Although many of these mysterious questions may never be answered, I will continue to search out the truth while Mizrack points out some helpful directions for future researchers to take regarding the mysteries surrounding the Priore du Sion:

"For people interested in pursuing further leads on the Priore du Sion/ Rennes-le-Chateau mystery, I think there are several directions that could use more research. There seems to have been a veritable explosion of neo-Templar organizations within the last decade - one of the most famous may have been the Order of the Solar Temple, whose members committed mass suicide shortly before the Heaven's Gate sect did (promptly attracting far more media attention.) As one list member put it, Templar organizations are "popping up out of the woodwork." While there have been chivalric societies claiming (however falsely) Templar pedigrees in the past 500 years, they seem to be sprouting up like mushrooms now. One of the notions that is alluded to in Messianic Legacy is that there may some sort of conflict between the Priory of Sion and the Knights of Malta - a conflict thought to originate from the original rivalry between the Hospitallers and the Templars during the Crusades. Conspiracy watchers will note that the Knights have a number of interesting honorary American members, such as Alexander Haig.

"Another interesting question is whether or not the Templars and/or Sion and/or the Sinclair family of Rosslyn may have established some sort of presence in the New World prior to Columbus. Does Sion's grasp extend to the New World? Bradley thinks they may have sequestered the Grail - or something else of value - in the famous "Money Pit" of Oak Island near Nova Scotia... whereas Fanthorpe thinks there is some sort of mysterious link between the Cajuns of Louisiana and "Arcadia" (as opposed to Accadia). (There is a curious Cajun folk song about Good King Dagobert... sort of an unusual ballad.) 'Fastcat' thinks that some of Mormon doctrine (although, he suggested, the majority is erroneous) arose out of 'Templar Masonry'. And of course there are the curious hints of Masonic influence in both the creation of the American government as well as even the layout of the streets of its Capitol. Is it possible the more "left wing" of Sion may have committed itself to republicanism (as opposed to the monarchist goals of the other wing) and sought to realize it through the American experiment?

"There is the curious question as to whether Chris Carter's mysterious Millennium Group from his TV show Millennium is based on the Priory of Sion. In one episode, it was revealed that the group controlled (or protected) a 'bloodline' which according to 'DNA schematics' was 'proven' to be the offspring of Jesus and Mary Magdalene. There seems to be some hints that if Sion has some sort of 'plan' for European unification under Merovingian rulership, that it is about to pass one of its major milestones around the turn of the millennium. There are hints that one or more republican countries in Europe may be restoring their monarchies soon (although only for ceremonial purposes, as Spain did with King Juan Carlos I) - with 'Merovingians' at the throne? Of course, the riddle of Sion already had Christian eschatologists going apeshit, since they see the whole scenario as coming straight out of the Book of Revelations (although others think it more closely follows the prophecies of Nostradamus, who may have been a Priory agent.) If the group exists, and it has connections to the existing power structure in the French government, some of the things going on in connection with France's Millennial plans (which include highlighting the Paris Meridian, something Lincoln and Byrne find highly significant) may need to be examined more closely.

"If the Prieure du Sion is a hoax, it is one of the best orchestrated ones of all time. If it really exists, it may be one of the most powerful secret societies of all time. Sion's goals may include a reunification of the world's major monotheistic faiths and/or a unification of all of Europe. On the other hand, this all-powerful secret society - according to its own documents - never once managed, through the course of several centuries, to topple a single French king and put one of their 'bloodline' on the throne. So we should be cautious. "Members" of Sion such as Pierre Plantard and the Marquis de Cherisey have already admitted that they rely on disinformation to accomplish their objectives. Any strategy of that kind always tries first and foremost to make a group appear more all-powerful than it really is. Also, there is the possibility that the PoS is a fraud exploiting a nonetheless genuine mystery at Rennes-le-Chateau. Whichever the case may be, the mystery deserves closer scrutiny by people of a Fortean persuasion, for as far as I can see, it remains "case not closed."

Congressmen Request WMD Intelligence Info; Bush Arrogantly Ignores FOIA Demand

The White House and DOD have failed to turn over WMD evidence after 500,000 Americans signed a petition delivered to Bush six months ago. He also has failed to answer questions or turn over documents requested by 52 Congressmen after the Downing Street Memo also surfaced in May. Many observers feel Bush thinks he's above the law, acting like Hitler in Nazi Germany.

By Greg Szymanski

The White House is again demonstrating how it feels above the law, as it arrogantly has refused to comply with a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request made six months ago by 52 Congressmen.

The Democratic lawmakers are seeking information on whether President Bush doctored WMD intelligence data to justify the Iraqi War, a hotbed issue for millions of Americans with over 500,000 officially writing Bush, asking for immediate answers.

However, Bush has ignored both the FOIA request and the public outcry, hiding behind what some call a cloak of arrogance, phony national security reasons and a Republican majority in Congress, openly furthering a neo-con war agenda destructive to American interests.

Although Rep. John Conyers (D-Mi) and the other band of 50 Democrats are fighting the good fight and working within the system, critics suggest they are just "beating their heads against a neo-con brick wall" since Bush and his protective Republican allies have no intention of leaking the truth to the American people, knowing it will lead to impeachment.

In the interim, many critics suggest Rep. Conyers and the others are fighting a losing battle, both on Capitol Hill and in the public relations arena, where much of middle class America has been sheltered from the facts behind Bush's real motives for going into Iraq by a cooperative and partisan press, also protecting secret White House interests.

It's common knowledge Bush's public approval ratings have fallen below the political Mendoza Line, but administration operatives and Bush himself appear to care less.

Although support is fading, the administration appears anxious to further its war agenda, displaying outright arrogance while knowing the President is insulated from serious impeachment action due to what many critics feel is "a one-party dictatorship created after a 30 year neo-con power grab has now fully cast its dark shadow over the Washington D.C. landscape."

It's no secret American is trouble going into 2006. But the question remains how can the people fight back? Or the bigger question looms: Do enough Americans really care?

“Americans have been played for suckers and now all hell will break loose in the years to come,” said one neo-con critic, adding any corrections to America’s dilemma cannot be made from within a corrupt political system gone “mad with power” and beyond the point of return.

“We need to remove the cancer from within, save the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, and then begin again. I just hope it’s not too late.”

While some in America are calling for outright revolution like fashioned by America’s forefathers against the British, Rep. Conyers is embroiled in a political battle within the halls of Congress against the administration over the release of vital documents concerning the strong possibility Bush lied to the American people about his real motives behind the Iraqi War.

Although Bush’s foot has been put in the fire over a number of other issues meriting impeachment inquiries, the fixing of WMD intelligence data to fit a pre-established war policy remains his Achilles Heel if Democrats can ever break through the barrier of suppression and protection provided by neo-con minions in all three branches of government.

To illustrate how uncooperative the administration has become with FOIA requests, it took the Department of Defense (DOD) almost five months to respond to Rep Conyers initial request when On Nov. 30 DOD officials told Conyers in part:

“The request would take considerable time to process,” asking Conyers his willingness to pay fees for the WMD documentation, estimated by the DOD to be $110,000.

This callous response, boarding on outright refusal to turn over anything, came after Rep. Conyers wrote the DOD on June 30 and then follow-up with an Aug 11 letter to the Office of Counsel to the President, saying:

“On June 30, 2005, I and 51 other Members of Congress requested access to 'all agency records, including but not limited to handwritten notes, formal correspondence, electronic mail messages, intelligence reports and other memoranda,' as described in five enumerated paragraphs. A copy of the request letter is enclosed.

“The Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requires your office to respond to a FOIA request within twenty business days from the date of receipt of such a request. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(6)(A)(i). The deadline has now elapsed without any response from your office. Because the leaked memoranda from Great Britain raise serious questions over when important war-related decisions were made, time is of the essence.

“I and the other Members of Congress do not wish to resort to litigation because, at this point, a cooperative approach is better suited to resolving the situation. I am available to assist your office in any way possible to facilitate the prompt release of the requested documents. If you need clarification of the request or have any questions, please contact Stacey Dansky of the House Judiciary staff at 202-225-6906.”

Since Rep. Conyers has not received an adequate response from the administration, last week he has introduced bills to censure Bush and Cheney for their refusal to respond, the Resolutions to be voted on by the House when it again convenes in January 2006.

“I have introduced a Resolution creating a Select Committee with subpoena authority to investigate the misconduct of the Bush Administration with regard to the Iraq war and report on possible impeachable offenses, as well as Resolutions proposing both President Bush and Vice-President Cheney should be censured by Congress based on the uncontroverted evidence of their abuse of power,” said Rep. Conyers.

As We Look To The New World Order's 2006 Agenda, It's Best To Review The Research And Writings of William Cooper

William Cooper, a former military intelligence officer and world-reknown lecturer and writer, was killed in a suspicious 2001 police shootout in his Arizona home. Author of the best selling underground book of all time, Behold A Pale Horse, his top secret intelligence document discoveries provide proof positive the Illuminati intends mass destruction of half the world's population, reaching its diabolical goal in what the author terms 'the age of deception.'

By Greg Szymanski

To better understand what the New World Order has planned for 2006 and the years to come, it's wise to review the life and works of writer and lecturer, William Cooper, killed in a Nov. 6, 2001, police shootout in his Arizona home.

Cooper, 58, author of more than 20 books including "Behold A Pale Horse," the best selling underground book of all time, was also a highly popular worldwide radio talk show host, his show, "The Hour of the Time," appearing on shortwave and the internet on the Worldwide Christian Radio station out of Nashville.

After Cooper's untimely and suspicious death, Mills Crenshaw, a KTALK radio host out of Salt Lake City, put the sad event into perspective:

"William Cooper may be one of America's greatest heroes and this story may be the biggest story in the history of the world."

This week in the minds of many people, starting a new year is like wiping life's slate clean, starting anew, with fresh ideas, with important new goals and renewed interests in becoming useful each and every day of the year.

So, with the New World Order gathering momentum, it's useful to remember a page out of Cooper's life by embracing in the final days of 2005 the efforts of one lone, brave man who dedicated his entire existence to exposing the Illuminati's diabolical plans to destroy America, as well as the rest of the world.

In one of his 1997 writings entitled "Majestytwelve," Cooper draws this conclusion:

"If you wish to remain Free you will have to fight for it... not because we want to fight, or you want to fight, but because the traitors (within our government) will give us no choice in the matter. There will be either a revolution (the Marxist's choice) or there will be a serious attempt to restore Constitutional Republican government under Law (the Patriots choice). In any event there WILL BE WAR between the Citizens of the United States of America and the Marxist minions of the subversive corporate United States' new world order."

In Cooper's final years, he worked alone in his Arizona home with his two dogs, rooster and chicken, sending his family out of the U.S. in 1999 for their security. Prior to several years of Arizona desert solitude, Copper became known as a world class lecturer, appearing at Wembley Hall in London as well as lecturing in every state of the Union during a 10 year period.

Known as a consummate researcher, backing his New World Order theories with hard data from his days in U.S. Navy Intelligence, Cooper always struck fear in the eyes of Presidents, including Clinton, who mounted an FBI attack to silence Cooper's views.

Shortly after the Oklahoma City bombing, Rush Limbaugh read a White House memo on the air during his broadcast, calling William Cooper, "...the most dangerous radio host in America". Cooper was later quoted as saying Clinton's pronouncement was "the greatest compliment that he has ever received."

Further, Cooper's FBI file which included references to his security clearances while in military service, was one of those unlawfully in possession of the White House in what has become known as, "Filegate". Shortly after this discovery, President Clinton ordered all federal agencies to begin investigation, persecution, and prosecution of Mr. Cooper to shut him up.

While engaged in ongoing federal battles with the FBI over free speech issues and the IRS who tried to put a financial stranglehold on his affairs, Cooper went to work full steam, creating several documentaries about the JFK assassination and the government's UFO hoax in order to strike fear in Americans.

Cooper also believed in empowering Americans with free thought through newspapers and the airwaves, starting the CAJI News Service, VERITAS national full size newspaper, The Intelligence Service, Harvest Publications, and has helped over 700 low power FM affiliate stations get equipped and on the air, including the station he managed as Trustee for the Independence Foundation Trust, 101.1 FM Eagar, Arizona, broadcasting to 7,000 people.

Under his leadership, his company also ventured into the publishing trade. The first book published being Oklahoma City: Day One by Michele Marie Moore... the definitive classic on the Oklahoma City bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building on April 19, 1995.

But to really understand Cooper's philosophy and where he obtained much of his secret information to be used in his later works, it's necessary to understand his military background, the place he became all too familiar with the real intentions of the New World Order

Cooper first served with the Strategic Air Command, United States Air Force, holding a secret clearance working on B-52 bombers, KC-135 refueling aircraft, and Minuteman missiles.

After the Air Force, he joined the United States Navy fulfilling a dream previously frustrated by chronic motion sickness. He served aboard the submarine USS Tiru (SS-416), USS Tombigbee (AOG-11), Naval Support Activity Danang RVN, Naval Security and Intelligence Camp Carter RVN, Danang Harbor Patrol RVN, Dong Ha River Security Group RVN, USS Charles Berry (DE-1035), Headquarters Commander in Chief Pacific Fleet, USS Oriskany (CVA-34).

Cooper was a member of the Office of Naval Security and Intelligence serving as a Harbor and River Patrol Boat Captain at Danang and the Dong Ha River Security Group, Cua Viet, Republic of Vietnam, being awarded several medals for heroism during combat.

He also served on the Intelligence Briefing Team for the Commander In Chief of the Pacific Fleet, designated KL-47 SPECAT operator in the CINCPACFLT Command Center at Makalapa Hawaii where he held a Top Secret, Q, SI, security clearance.

Being privy to top secret information for many years, Cooper later would call on his military background and expertise as a centerpiece for much of his writing, deciding to tell the truth and be a man of conscience instead of selling his own soul to the New World Order thugs.

Although Cooper's works are immense, covering almost every possible element of what is amounting to a global takeover by the Illuminati, anyone reading the following excerpts from a top secret documents uncovered by Cooper will conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that America's destruction is underway from within and the only way to get back the country starting in 2006 is by a revolution of the people.

In the article referenced above, entitled Majestytwelve, Cooper's words make the hair on anyone's head stand up:

"The following is fact. It is not a theory it is a genuine conspiracy. I witnessed the Top Secret/Magic documents from which this information is excerpted while a member of the United States Navy attached to the Intelligence Briefing Team of Admiral Bernard Clarey, Commander in Chief of the United States Pacific Fleet.

"I certify that the following information is true and correct to the best of my memory and the research that I have accomplished. I will swear to it in any court of Law.

"I can produce the names of approximately 38 U.S. Navy officers and enlisted men who witnessed these documents while in the service of their country...I can produce the names of approximately 80 others whom I suspect have witnessed these same documents. I will not reveal the names except in a court of Law that is willing to prosecute the People and organizations involved in the conspiracy to overthrow the government of the United States of America to bring about a socialist totalitarian world government."

After Cooper went to great lengths to add authenticity and credibility to his discovery while in the military, he went on to delineate the intentions of the diabolical forces behind the secret military documents.

"Many years ago I had access to a set of documents that I eventually realized was the plan for the destruction of the United States of America and the formation of a socialist totalitarian world government. The plan was contained within a set of Top Secret documents with the title "MAJESTYTWELVE". There was no space between majesty and twelve. The term honored the planned placement of ultimate power in a body of wise men who are destined to rule the world as the disciples of a Messiah front man. This "Messiah will serve as a buffer between the wise men and the sheeple. I discovered these documents between 1970 and 1973 while I was a member of the Intelligence Briefing Team of the Commander in Chief of the United States Pacific Fleet.

"MAJESTYTWELVE was in a tall thin font style...imagine the title squeezed together between the M and E with all of the letters stretched vertically. The key to access was a Top Secret (Q) (SCI) security clearance with the compartmentalization of "MAJIC" (not magic). I cannot remember the exact font except that it is a tall thin version of San Serif... the exact name escapes me after all these years... but it is a key to access.

"The plan outlined the formation of a world totalitarian socialist government. It is to be ruled by a behind-the-scenes council of wise men. A so-called benevolent dictator, will be presented as the Messiah.

"The Constitution for the United States of America and its Bill of Rights will be scrapped. A parliamentary form of government will take its place. All military forces and individuals are to be disarmed except for an internal police force which will carry only the minimum weapons needed to maintain internal order."

Although Cooper only lived to see a little more than a year of the Bush Presidency, he was a firm advocate that President Clinton, although posing as a man of the people, was in fact one of the biggest and most diabolical front men for the New World Order.

And to prove his point, the following two Clinton quotes illustrates his true intentions:

"When we got organized as a country and we wrote a fairly radical Constitution with a radical Bill of Rights, giving a radical amount of individual freedom to Americans... And so a lot of people say there's too much personal freedom. When personal freedom's being abused, you have to move to limit it. That's what we did in the announcement I made last weekend on the public housing projects, about how we're going to have weapon sweeps and more things like that to try to make people safer in their communities." Said President Bill Clinton on MTV on March 3, 1994.

He further stated on several days later in a USA Today interview: "We can't be so fixated on our desire to preserve the rights of ordinary Americans..."

Besides pointing the finger at Clinton, Cooper claimed the true source of the global conspiracy based in fact was to be found in a body known as the Illuminati, a group made up of the highest level of the so-called secret orders and secret societies. Explaining their origin and purpose, Cooper wrote:

They are bound together by blood oaths, a secret religion, and the promise of an elite status within regional government, or the world supra government. Their religion is based upon the Kabbalah, the Luciferian Philosophy, and the worship of the Sun. They are not bound by any oath or allegiance save their own. They are loyal to no government or People save their own. And they are Citizens of no country save their already in place secret world government. In their own words, "If you are not one of us you are nothing." To garner some sense of "feel" for the concept see the movie "They Live."

"It is a largely 'open' conspiracy, in that much of its membership, structure, methods, and operations, are matters of public record, however scattered and obscure. Its manner of coordination is atypical. Two nuclei - the elite core of the Wall Street clique (orbiting the House of Rockefeller) and the elite core of the European financial clique (orbiting the House of Rothschild) - coordinate this global conspiracy by waging psychological warfare on the rest of the conspirators, telling each no more than is necessary for him to fulfill his designated role, often with explicit recognition neither of his role, nor of the unarticulated rules that govern him.

"Thus, the overwhelming bulk of the conspirators do not know, but only suspect, that they are part of and in service to 'a power somewhere so organized, so subtle, so watchful, so interlocked, so complete, so pervasive, that they had better not speak above their breath when they speak in condemnation of it."

In his article about the secret military documents, he delves into the inner workings of the Illuminati, showing how some candidates rise to the top, hand picked for progress beyond the 13th Degree (York Rite) or 32nd Degree (Scottish Rite). Cooper claims those 'chosen few' disappear behind the veil and become one of the "Thousand Points of Light," are more properly known as the "Magi."

Looking back at history, Cooper adds:

"The process of initiation and blood oaths have always been the protection of the Illuminati in a Christian world that has had a tendency to "burn at the stake" those who differed in belief or philosophy. The "burning alive" of Jacques DeMolay, the persecution of men like Gallileo and Giordano Bruno by the Catholic Church, and the persecution of their Orders has resulted in the "Brotherhoods" hatred of Christianity and the goal of the extermination of all religions save theirs.

"You may verify the goal of the Illuminati by visiting the home page of Freemasonry's Grand Lodge of Scotland (if that link does not work click here). You will notice the flag of the Grand Lodge of Scotland and the "Universal" flag of Freemasonry is displayed. The "Universal" flag of Freemasonry is the United Nations Flag. (We thank those of you who responded with affidavits confirming this paragraph.) Since this paragraph has become well known the Grand Lodge of Scotland has replaced the United Nations Flag (Universal Flag of Freemasonry) on their WebPages with a graphic of the earth."

And buried deep in the documents uncovered by Cooper, which he vigorously tried to expose until his untimely death, was the call for a mass extermination in what he termed the "goal in the age of deception."

If anyone ever wonders on the dawn of this new year where the U.S. is headed after Oklahoma City and 9/11, listens to Cooper's predictions based on what he learned from years working in the military intelligence field:

"This is the age of deception. The world is on the razor. One half is scheduled to be exterminated if these people have their way, and the other half is scheduled to be enslaved when the mystical union between the moon IS (Isis or Church) and the sun RA (Osiris or Doctrine) greets the Son of the morning EL (Horus or full body of Adepts) on the horizon (Horus risen) in the New Dawn (ISRAEL or realization of the New World Order).

"When the process is complete a new worldwide Soviet Union will emerge to thin the herd, shear the sheople, and march them off to enslavement or slaughter depending upon their individual ability to accept and adhere to their reeducation.

As Cooper ponders the fate of America and the world, his 1997 words appear to be coming true as we enter 2006.

"There will be no individual Rights only privileges. These will be granted or denied at will by the world supra government. All property is to be owned by the State. There will be a redistribution of wealth. They plan to eliminate class differences and reduce the standard of living to a lower level in the advanced nations, such as the United States, and to a higher standard of living in the so-called third world nations.

"This leveling of the standard of living will be accomplished through a global economic collapse which is in its beginning stages. The economic collapse will fulfill the goal of Marx and Engles' Communist Manifesto mandating the elimination of the middle class. The graduated income tax was the first implementation of this process and is one of the planks of the Communist Manifesto. NAFTA and GATT are a part of this process encouraging industry to move into third-world nations in order to exploit cheap labor.

"All existing religions will disappear. The only religion will be the state religion (humanism or illuminism).

"All County and State governments will be eliminated and replaced with regional government. These regional governments (Home Rule) are already in place. Regionalism is gradually taking control throughout America.

"There will be no more cash. Trade will be accomplished by a system of computer credits with accounts accessed through debit cards or computer chip implants. The cards or implants will also serve as personal identification, drivers license, and etc. When this is completed the human race will be shackled to a computer in a never ending cycle of debt. No action or movement will ever again be private."

Further delving into the age of new world order deception, Cooper points to the UFO and alien hoax thrust on America, finding within the Majestytwelve secret documents the entire plan for the creation of a socialist world government is protected by an artificial extraterrestrial threat from space. He adds the entire UFO phenomenon and the uFOOLogy movement has been created to further the protection and activation of the plan, outing Coast to Coast talk show host Art Bell, as one of the main Illuminati spokesman.

"Within MAJESTYTWELVE is Operation Majority justifying the plan by presenting an extraterrestrial threat as the reason for the necessity for world government ala "Who speaks for planet Earth... Argentina?" Exactly the manner in which Stanton T. Friedman ends his UFOs Are Real lectures," said Cooper.

"When I saw Operation Majority while serving in the Navy I believed the alien threat was real just like everyone else. It was not until I had performed many years of research that I was able to fully understand exactly what it was that I had seen. It was extremely difficult for me to believe that my government and the United States Navy had used me, especially since I had dedicated my life to government and military service. Most government and military personnel cannot and will not believe such and idea.

"The plan is real. The extraterrestrial threat is artificial. The threat is presented through the use of secret technology originally developed by the Germans in their secret weapons programs during WW-II, by geniuses like Nikola Tesla, and many others."

Concerning Bell's role in the New World Order agenda, Cooper again relies on the "age of deception" theory, as well as decoding Illuminati signs and symbols in order to find out the real truth among the many messages of deception. Referring to Bell's well-known logo of a gold pyramid in a deep blue sea with his name at the top of the pyramid, Cooper illustrates his point about Bell's role:

"I have long recognized that Art Bell is a shill for the New World Order. It is confirmed in his book . World government is, in fact, the theme of the book.

"Did you know that the sea (mare or Mary) is a symbol of vast numbers of People, the masses in Marxist symbology? Did you notice that the pyramid rises from the sea (People) and dominates the scene as a promise, or savior? Did you know the pyramid missing the capstone represents the Great (unfinished) Work of the Mystery School? Did you know that the Great Work represents social engineering (socialism) working toward the apotheosis of the race (perfected man, sixth root race) as promised to Adam and Eve by Satan, and a New World Order?

"Did you notice that the name Art Bell straddles the capstone signifying that he is the Light Worker, or Illuminated Man, or Master Mason, or Horus, or perfected god-Man, or Savior, who completes the Great Work? Did you notice the Bright Star fallen from heaven just above the capstone? Do you know who or what it represents? Do you see the Thousand Points of Light working in silence behind the veil (clouds) in the heavens. Illuminism is Marxism. It is a false promise that the human race will be perfected bringing a perfect utopian society through social engineering. This is a brainwashing mechanism whereby an ignorant slave race may be created to be ruled by a totalitarian socialist world government.

"Art Bell is a Freemason. He is a member of the Illuminati. Art Bell's book 'The Quickening' is one of the most blatant, in your face, pieces of new world order propaganda that I have ever seen. In it Art Bell, claiming to be a patriotic American, shamelessly advocates the formation of a world totalitarian socialist government."

With most people heading into the new year with the thought of another terrorist attack on the horizon, Cooper claims these attacks are a new world order strategy to tell Americans any opposition will be met with brute force.

"Ruby Ridge, the Waco Massacre, the attack against Patriots and Militias, and other acts of aggression against the American People who might combat this fraud are acts of war. These acts are designed to demonize fundamentalist Christians, Jews, Moslems, the lawful Militia, and anyone else who might fight in defense of the Constitution or Freedom.

"These terrorist acts deliver a message to the American People that any opposition to the new world supra government will be met with overwhelming force and the complete genocide of the enemies of socialism."

And as everybody has a New Year's Eve toast, while wondering where the next terrorist "shoe will drop," listen to Cooper's concluding analysis and ominous 1997 predictions, making anyone reading immediately want to pour another stiff drink.

"MAJESTYTWELVE stated that the first terrorist attack in the United States would occur in a large city such as New York or Los Angeles. Based upon that statement I accurately predicted that it would occur in New York, and it did when the World Trade Center was bombed.

"MAJESTYTWELVE stated that terrorism would continue until the American People consented to be completely and thoroughly disarmed. The document stated that the second major target would be, "somewhere in the heartland such as Oklahoma City". The actual target was not named. Since the document was not specific as to the actual target and its location I did not predict Oklahoma City... but my prediction of continued terrorist attacks including major attacks upon the "heartland" of America was accurate."

Writing before 9/11, he further predicted the following:

"If these acts of terror do not succeed there will be more bombings, chemical, or biological attacks. They will escalate in the destruction, maiming and killing of men women and especially children. More shootings at shopping centers, restaurants, and schools will occur. As a last resort, if all else fails, the Illuminati are prepared to detonate an atomic weapon in a large American city such as New York, Chicago, or Los Angeles."

Year Ends With NSA Snooping Issue while Reader Questions New York Times Censorship And Biased Reporting, Relating It To Protecting And Favoring Israeli Interests Over U.S. And The Rest Of The World

Dr. Mohamed Khodr writes letter to New York Times that hasn't been published, raising questions as to fair and honest coverage. Is the Times protecting Israeli interests to the detriment of America, leading to censorship of important stories like the motives behind the Iraqi War, 9/11, the Patriot Act and NSA snooping on Americans.

By Greg Szymanski

The year is ending with a flurry of concern over President Bush's direct order to spy on Americans, using the Pentagon and National Security Agency (NSA) spooks to ration out the government's dirty work on mostly innocent and unsuspecting Americans.

The story recently broke in the mainstream press as the heated debate to renew the highly controversial Patriot Act took center stage in the Senate, ending last Friday as lawmakers agreed to a Feb 3, 2006, extension before any real action is taken.

For years, critics of the Patriot Act have been screaming about its direct infringement on cherished constitutional privacy and speech rights, but without much luck in getting any significant changes.

In fact, the NSA snooping story is directly related to the Patriot Act's illegality since it gives spooks an unbridled power to wiretap and eavesdrop on "suspected domestic terrorists," using mere suspicion, without a warrant, as the legal thresh hold instead of showing probable cause a crime is being committed.

Relaxing the legal standard from probable cause to mere suspicion has most fair-minded legal scholars up in arms. But academia provides little consolation for the millions of Americans now living under the umbrella of a fascist state, since newspaper follow-up reports recently pointed out the 18,000 people on the Bush spy list in the recent NSA story is only the "tip of the iceberg."

The extent and sheer numbers of those being spied on by the NSA without court-approved warrants based on probable cause - not mere suspicion - is now thought to be much, much larger.

And even The New York Times, who sat on the story for 18 months as a favor to the Bush administration, reported this fact in a Saturday follow-up to the original NBC story.

However, media critics complain both new agencies are out to lunch and "a day late and a dollar short" with their reporting efforts since widespread NSA and Pentagon abuse, with White House acknowledgement, has been documented by the alternative press and civil rights activists as early as 2002.

In fact, after the Times was caught red-handed in suppressing the NSA snooping story for more than 18 months, it provided just another example of the many stories, including 9/11 and the motives behind the war in Iraq, suppressed by Times management.

The year-end question arises: Why?

Many critics contend the Times is protecting the Bush administration and its neo-con world order agenda. Others also contend its policies favor and protect Israeli interests while turning a blind-eye to the U.S. and the rest of the world.

But knowing the Bush administration will step up efforts in 2006 to spy on more Americans and the Times will continue to censor even more important stories, let's end this year with a letter sent to the New York Times, sent by Mohamed Khodr, MD, which never was published but illustrated what Dr. Khodr feels is a "deep Israeli bias" resulting in the censorship of many important stories, including the truth behind the war in Iraq, 9/11, the Patriot Act, the NSA snooping story and many others.

In an effort to hear all views, the following is the unedited letter sent by Dr. Khodr to the publisher of the Times, Arthur Sulzberger, but not yet published:

Dear Mr. Sulzberger:

Happy Hanukah:

"Just a brief note to reiterate what I've written you on several occasions, written your editors including your letter editor, that your paper is unable to shake the influence and hold whether ideological, financial, political or just pure fear of confrontation of a Pro-Israel bias that has severely damaged the credibility of your paper. The once glorious paper of record has now become a timid infotainment paper that knows where its bread is buttered, and its not from any sense of justice or fairness it once embodied.

"Your paper's scandals, Pro-Israel and Pro-Iraq War will continue to bleed your credibility as the wars have bled the blood of the innocent youth of America, Iraq, Palestine, and Israel. Your support of Israel in the long run is a losing proposition and will only further alienate Americans and the world not only from Israel but from the future peace and stability of Jewish grandchildren who may pay a burdensome price for what you and the Zionist cabals have done to destroy this nation and the future of peace in the MidEast. "Never Again" should be the standard for the suffering of all humans not just for Jews who suffered expulsions from every European country and principality, an Inquisition, pogroms, hate, persecution, murders, and finally a Holocaust at the hands of Europe, not in Muslim countries and certainly not in Palestine. It was Islam that took Jewish refugees in and protected them, in fact placed them in honorable government positions, as was the case of RamBam (for your letter editor's sake: that's Moses Maimonides).

"Unfortunately your editor is of a lightweight intellect doing his "kosher" duty rather than seeking enlightenment on Zionism and Israel's history. I'm sure he's not read any part of the Babylonian Talmud nor of any United Nations report on Israel's terrorism --The Bunche Report to better understand why most Europeans think Israel is the main threat to world peace. Keeping such knowledge out of your paper will only further allow the Internet to exponentially expose the machinations of the media's silence when non-kosher blood is spilled as was the case when your front page plastered a huge photo of a suicide bomber's aftermath of an exploding bus with a young Israeli girl dead at the window.

"I've lived through the hell of Sharon's cluster bombs, napalm, and white phosphorus bombs along with asphyxiating unknown chemical gas in 1982 Beirut, his raiding of hospitals to take the wounded out and kill them, his destruction of entire buildings based on a "rumor" that Arafat maybe in it, his cutting off of water, food, and medicines from entire cities and villages, his supportive massacre for 3 days of 2000 Palestinian civilians in two refugee camps-----I don't see Bill Keller clamoring for the paper to publish a photo of such murders today for a historical context of Palestinian dead.

"Incidentally, the United Nations Security Council (with U.S. support) passed several Resolutions just during the summer of 1982 "urging" Israel to withdraw, stop the massacred, and allow food, water, and medicines into Beirut, but as usual Israel can tell the world to go to hell for all it cares. Compare that with one U.N. Security Council Resolution against Syria to withdraw from Lebanon which it did, thus it seems the U.N. implements Israel's wishes but is impotent to even tell Israel "NO".

"I see your paper took issue with the Congress cutting $40 Billion of spending from America's poor over the next five years. Given that's about $8 Billion a year from America's children, your paper "forgot" to mention that this amount is what Israel receives almost annually from the American taxpayer when all funding from so many hidden "amendments" in the federal budget is accounted for. So Congress and your paper obviously support starving America's children but more than willing to pay for Israel's illegal squatters to leave their U.S. subsidized homes from Gaza.

"Thus the question here is: Who decides America's priorities? It's obviously not the silent majority of Americans who are kept in the dark by the media, such as yours, as to who's alienating this grand nation from the world and why are its children paying for the benefit of a rich nation, Israel, the 16th richest nations in the world and a nation who takes America's taxes and gives loans to other governments and entities, thus reaping aid and interest from the American taxpayer who can't pay for his or her drugs.

"Perhaps your editors can answer this simple question: what conference was held in 1949 in Europe on the Palestinian issue and what was its result?

"It's tragic that you as the publisher worry more about your bottom line than about the foundation of peace for Israel. Your hiring of such a biased editor who publishes TWO letters supporting Israel---to be fair he doesn't dare deny an Israeli counsel or an Abe Foxman letter which are published on an auto-pilot basis---and only ONE letter supporting Palestinian democracy is an outrage and a slap to the face of the editorial page, especially a page that helped launch a war based on known lies. America was pushed into war by your paper and others, by MILLER, LIBBY, PERLE, WOLFOWITZ, FEITH, ZAKHEIM, ABRAMS et. al---none of whom are Arabs or Muslims.

"Do remove the "all the news that FIT to print". It's hypocritical and unbecoming given that men like your letter editor decide what's "FIT" to print. Obviously your public editor whom I've written on several occasions is unable to deal with this issue or is supportive of the letter editor's bias.

"Human beings are dying overseas while you and your staff enjoy your peaceful and well paid life. As I've told you previously, your Grandfather was an "Anti-Zionist" who loathed the pressure placed on him by the Zionists."

Happy Hanukah and Merry Christmas to your Editors and Staff.
Mohamed Khodr M.D.

Post 9/11 Patriot Gifts Are Found Under Trees All Across The Country
Truth-telling patriots are celebrating in their own special ways, as radiation suits and Dick Cheney look-a-like masks are popular gifts this year.

25 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Under most Christmas trees in America, the usual gifts like sweaters, erector sets and bicycles are found.

But for the post 9/11 American patriot, trying to buck the system, Santa usually leaves strange things. A random sampling of patriots from east coast to west, uncovered these rather unusual gifts under the tree:

In New York, one patriot said he unwrapped a fully functional Hazmat radiation suit, complete with matching mask and boots. Attached was a lovely card saying:

"Have a wonderful Christmas, drink hardy on the New Year and then protect yourself next year for a dirty bomb attack in the New York subway system left unguarded during the recent transit strike."

Moving south, to Virginia Beach, known for its military installations, one patriot received a "look-alike Dick Cheney face mask with matching suit" to be worn in public during the next nuclear attack in order that he be whisked away to a safe underground bunker when the "you know what hits the fan next year."

Continuing on to lovely Miami Beach, one patriot said:

"This Christmas was extra-special. I received my first authentic CIA Identity Switch Kit. This one was the top of the line Israeli model, complete with a real Mossad ID card, matching Jewish passport with the name Abe Silverman stamped on it, an open-ended United Airlines flight one-way ticket to Israel and other assorted clandestine tools, designed to make a quick get-away during the upcoming American holocaust.

Now moving east to soggy New Orleans, one patriot there, still waiting to be rescued from his attic, said he finally received a FEMA Christmas wrapped care package, but was told he couldn't open it unless he left the state of Louisiana for good, promising he'd never return.

Heading to the great state of Texas, where President Bush is said to be drunk in his barn refusing to come out to Cindy Sheehan leaves Crawford, patriots here reportedly feel very safe anytime Bush is near.

But one popular patriot gift in Texas this year is a personal Presidential implant chip blow gun, with the Presidential Seal on it, designed to plant a micro-chip in Bush from 1,000 yards in order to know the President's exact location and when it's safe to be in Texas.

And usually forgotten but not to be left out this Christmas are the great patriots of the Southwest, who understand America's dilemma, but who are hopelessly caught up in the UFO Christmas gift market.

This year one patriot is reporting tourism down in places like White Sands Air Force Base in New Mexico, Nellis in Nevada and, of course, Roswell.

But nevertheless one hot item under the alien silver-radiated Christmas tree this year is the "Complete UFO Fake It" instructional guide, written for the amateur but designed to fool any 'UFO pro' that his alien sighting was actually real.

Although it's exceptionally hard to leave Area 51, let's move west and see what's under the trees of our phony Hollywood stars, who publicly won't mention a word that 9/11 was a government inside job with Israeli help since they know their Jewish bosses in the film industry would never let them work again.

But one courageous star, who wanted to be only known by her B movie film name, Fancy Pants, said she received her first 'George Bush giving the finger 9/11 is a lie bumper sticker,' planning to put it on her new $200,000 Hummer as a display of protest.

However, Fancy Pants qualified her statement with the following remark:

"Honey, if I win an Oscar or an Emmy, I will have to take it off and I don't mean my pants!"

Besides the thousands of other post 9/11 patriot gifts given out across the country, like boring truth videos made by the disinformation agents, tee shirts, bumper stickers, truth books and countless occult fascination gifts, the question is probably being asked why has the Washington D.C. post 9/11 truth patriot being left out?

The answer: None of them live there and if they do, they're too busy writing nonsensical, highbrow dribble to open gifts, too busy writing foolishness that nobody in the rest of the country understands anyway.

Editor's Note: The Arctic Beacon would like to thank everybody for reading this year, as our meager web site with no glitter but only stories has grown to over 200,000 readers monthly. If you feel the urge next year, check out our new and revised site and don't forget, to support us through paypal, by check or money order, as words alone do not pay the bills. Go to www.arcticbeacon.com and let the truth be told.

Also, if you heard about or received any other unusual patriot Christmas gifts, let us know. And, remember, next year don't take yourself too seriously, as sometimes its good to laugh in the face of danger.

Democratic Congressman Releases Potentially 'Le'thal Document' That Could Lead To Bush Impeachment Next Year

Rep. John Conyers (D-Mi) is tired of the Bush arrogance and flaunting of federal law concerning the Iraq War and other matters. Friday he released a document called "The Constitution in Crisis," seeking a Congressional Resolution to again investigate Bush's possible impeachment.

24 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Rep. John Conyers (D-Mi) released a potentially lethal document Friday, focusing on the numerous federal violations of the Bush administration, including evidence of WMD intelligence cover-ups, deception, manipulation, retribution and torture concerning the Iraqi War.

The document, entitled "The Constitution in Crisis," finds more than probable cause and substantial evidence for many federal law violations by top administration officials, including the President and Vice President, based on their blatant and arrogant abuse of power.

"I have introduced a resolution creating a Select Committee with subpoena authority to investigate the misconduct of the Bush Administration with regard to the Iraq war and report on possible impeachable offenses, as well as Resolutions proposing both President Bush and Vice-President Cheney should be censured by Congress based on the uncontroverted evidence of their abuse of power," said Rep. Conyers in a statement released this week regarding action to be taken when Congress returns after the Christmas break.

Besides specifically detailing the many Bush administration federal violations concerning Iraq, Rep.. Conyers severely scolds and attacks the administration for its "arrogance, hubris and wrongheadedness," highlighting the dangers of a one party rule in Congress and a lack of check and balances on President Bush who is acting more like a dictator than a President of the people.

"It is important that we as a nation say "never again" to going to war under false pretenses, and covering up official wrongdoing," added Rep. Conyers, who has been a strong advocate for getting to the truth of allegations President Bush doctored intelligence reports to justify an illegal Iraqi invasion.

In the lengthy report submitted to Congress and being distributed widely across America for citizens signatures, Sen. Conyers said he took this drastic action to "save the country" after President Bush arrogantly refused to respond to a letter submitted by 122 members of Congress and more than 500,000 Americans last July, asking him whether information in the infamous Downing Street Memo, alleging doctoring of WMD intelligence, was accurate.

Since Bush failed to acknowledge the letter, Conyers staff prepared the legal document released this week, finding substantial evidence that Bush and Cheney misled Congress and the American people regarding decisions to go to war with Iraq, misstated and manipulated intelligence information regarding the justification for entering into the war, mandated torture and cruel inhumane treatment in the execution of the war, as well as permitted inappropriate retaliation against critics of the administration.

In the Executive Summary of the document which will seek a Resolution for Congress to seek impeachment, Rep. Conyers through his legal staff added:

“There is prima facie case that these actions by the President, Vice President and other members of the Bush administration violated a number of federal laws, including committing a fraud against the U.S.; making false statements to Congress; violating the War Powers Resolution; misuse of government funds; violating international treaties prohibiting torture; violating federal laws concerning retaliating against witnesses and other individuals and violating federal laws concerning leaking and other misuse of intelligence.”

While the document raises charges meriting Bush’s impeachment, it notes that special investigative powers be established by Congressional Resolution since the Republican controlled Legislative and Executive branches has systematically and illegally blocked off a fair and honest search for the truth, using its power to protect a corrupt and out-of-control President and Vice President.

“As a result, we recommend that Congress establish a select committee with subpoena authority to investigate the misconduct of the Bush administration with regard to the Iraq War and report to the Committee on the Judiciary on possible impeachable offenses,” added Rep. Conyers.

Last Minute Gas Money Needed To Get New Orleans Katrina Survivor Back Home For Christmas

Private citizens trying to make 85-year-old, Clothilde Mack's, Christmas wish of 'going back home' come true. Good samaritans asking for last minute gas money help, since FEMA has hindered more than helped Ms Mack get home.

23 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The saga of Hurricane Katrina survivor Clothilde Mack continues, as the private efforts to get her home for Christmas may get bogged down in St. Louis if needed gas money isn't raised quickly.

After FEMA failed for months to provide a temporary mobile trailer so she could return to her Orleans Parrish home, private citizens throughout the country united to try and make the 85-year-old New Orleans resident's Christmas wish come true.

Through the efforts of the Republic Broadcast Network, www.rbnlive.com, its talk show host, Greg Szymanski and the Arctic Beacon, an internet magazine site at www.arcticbeacon.com, a motor home was provided to get Ms. Mack home near the Christmas deadline.

Despite FEMA's lackluster efforts and failure to help those who need it most, citizens of Greene County, Tenn., where Ms. Mack is temporarily housed, have rallied together to raise gas money for the 2,200 mile trip from Spirit lake, Idaho, to Tennessee, where the Winnebago motor home left Wednesday to pick up Ms Mack with the intent to eventually get her home for Christmas.

However, according to the driver, Joe Tittiger of Ft. Meyers, Florida, who donated his time and efforts to fly across the country and then drive the motor home to New Orleans, the $800 raised in gas money will only get him as far as St.Louis due to excess winds in Montana and exceptionally high gas prices well-over $2.00 a gallon.

"If gas prices were normal, we'd have no problem making it all the way to New Orleans. But as the oil companies are soaking us, it's only the people like us who suffer and have to pay these high prices," said Tittiger, adding he was only getting 5 miles per gallon through the Rocky. Mountains. "Once I get to Highway 70, it should be clear sailing but the $800 isn't going to be enough. We need help now to get Ms Mack home."

In response to Tittiger's plea, Joe Gillis, an Arctic Beacon reader and RBN listener, is wiring $100 through Walmart's money gram program, which Tittiger says is the easiest way to get the money to him while driving to Tennessee.

"I already spent $500 of my own money to fly to Idaho and I am tapped out so please send some help," said Tittiger.

Others who have helped thus far to get Ms Mack home include Mayor Roger Jones of Greene County, who donated $400; Wendy Owens of Greene County, who raised $250; Julie Herrill of Albany, New York, who sent $100; and talk show host, Greg Szymanski, who gave $100 and the use of his Winnebago motor home. Ms. Mack also is in possession of $300 in last minute emergency funds, sent by unknown California good Samaritan who heard the RBN radio broadcast.

Ms Mack's story and her desire to go home for Christmas is starting to get last minute nationwide media attention as the Greeneville Sun of Tennessee is featuring the story in its Saturday edition and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch indicated it might be covering the events when the Winnebago comes through St. Louis.

Recently NBC ran a feature news item, documenting how many New Orleans residents are facing the sad reality of not being home for Christmas, citing the fact how thousands of residents have displaced across the country.

However, the case of Ms Mack may provide a glimmer of Christmas hope for others survivors wishing to be home, if enough money can raised in the next two days to get the needed gas money for the motor home.

Besides private efforts to raise the needed money, Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-LA) has been notified of the last minute gas money crisis, a Washington aide saying the office will try help but wasn't making any promises.

Asked if Sen. Landrieu could lend the extra gas money needed out of her own pocket, the Washington aide said: "This is going to sound bureaucratic, but it's difficult to help everyone and there are procedures that must be followed but I will do my best. We are still working on getting the FEMA trailer and are aware of the private efforts to help"

But thus far Sen. Landrieu and FEMA's efforts to get Ms Mack the promised trailer and get her back home have been anything but quick and reassuring, as the elderly survivor has been waiting months for help but recently found out FEMA actually dropped her case.

"They wanted me to sign a paper saying I wouldn't go home for a year and then they would help me. But When I wouldn't sign it, they dropped my case," said Ms. Mack this week from Greene County, where she is temporarily housed in an expensive living facility that has not been paid yet by FEMA, who is supposed to allocate emergency funds.

"The lights are back on in my neighborhood and all I ever wanted to do is go home. I can't wait till Joe gets here and then the first thing I am going to do is see if I can find my cats."

And Ms Mack is lucky to be alive as she spent 10 initial days weathering the high waters in her upstairs attic, living on two cans of greens and three small bottles of water before being rescued.

The harrowing story of Ms. Mack's ordeal is one for the survival record books. It's a story about an elderly woman, having the strength of 100 men, who miraculously lived for 10 days cramped-up in her tiny attic like a human sardine as she almost was baked alive in the sweltering New Orleans summer heat.

"I broke a window to get some air when the water was still very high for the first couple of days," said Ms. Mack in an extended telephone conversation from her room in a half-way house in Greene County, Tenn. about 500 miles from New Orleans. "I didn't have anything to eat up in the attic or any water. After calling 911 until my cell phone gave out and nobody coming to rescue me, I never thought I was going to make it. I made peace with everyone and everything, really thinking I was going to die up there in the attic.

"But by the grace of God I made it through those first couple of days and then the water started going down. I kept calling for my cats but they didn't come as they didn't make it up to the attic. I haven't seen them for three months and really don't see how they could have survived. They were really the only family I had left and I miss them more and more each passing day."

After the water receded and still no rescue workers in sight, on the third day Ms. Mack literally floated on furniture to her kitchen where she found two cans of string beans and seven small water bottles in what turned out to be the extent of her rations for the remaining eight days.

The question remains why no help for 10 long days?

"I'll tell you why. The only answer I have is that the government delayed things on purpose," said Wendy Owens of Greene County, Tenn., a local resident who has taken on the private responsibility of trying to help Ms. Mack return to New Orleans despite no help from FEMA. "First, it was a disgrace and outrage that it took our military and government so long to get into New Orleans, leaving many people like Ms. Mack to die.

"If our military can get to Baghdad in one day, why did it take them so long to help people in a major American city? Why? Maybe the delay was orchestrated."

Besides Ms. Mack's ordeal, which Owens claims could have been avoided, she said her treatment in the last three months by FEMA and other federal agencies is even a worse disgrace and public embarrassment.

After her rescue and being treated at a local New Orleans emergency center, Ms. Mack was whisked away by airplane to Tennessee without being told her destination, something she says still makes her angry almost as much as FEMA's continued lack of proper care and its unwillingness to help her get back home.

"I have been deprived of my medication and nobody has really helped me get home even though the water is gone and my house needs repair. I have been lied to by my case worker so many times I can't even count them all," said Ms. Mack, adding on top of the insensitivity of her case worker, the FEMA program actually encourages evacuees to stay out of New Orleans, not return home even in areas that are habitable.

"All I ever wanted to do was go back home but they have been giving me the run-around. My caseworker even lied to me now and said she never worked on my case. I've gone weeks without my medication and kept telling them to just send me home."

Editor's Note: If you can help in any way with gas money, contact Joe Tittiger on the road at 239-297-4189 for money transfer instructions or email at arcticbeacon@earthlink.net for a way to reach Joe. With all of our efforts, we can at least make sure one New Orleans resident has a Merry Christmas.

Gander Crash in 1985 Remains a Huge Cover-Up; Families Get a Bunch of Lies From U.S. and Canadian Governments

Crash killing 248 passengers, mostly military, possibly tied to Iran-Contra covert affairs. Families of victims illegally wiretapped to keep truth from coming forward.

22 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Zona Phillips remembers the Gander crash like it was yesterday.

But December 12, 2005, marked 20 years since she lost her son aboard an ill-fated DC-8 charter carrying 248 passengers when it crashed just after takeoff from Gander International Airport in Newfoundland, Canada.

Most of the passengers, like Phillips son, were members of the 101st Airborne Division, who were assigned as a peace-keeping force in the Sinai Peninsula, enforcing the Camp David accords of 1978.

And the official story of the crash was a build-up of ice on the wings. But from the outset Phillips questioned the findings, saying the U.S. government, with complicity of Canadian officials, have been keeping the real truth from family members.

"From the beginning, the U.S. government blocked an investigation and cordoned off the crime scene and that was just the beginning of the incredible cover-up, leading me to believe they were involved," said Phillips this week in an extended phone conversation, as well as making her feelings known on Greg Szymanski's radio show, 'The Investigative Journal,' on the Republic Broadcasting Network at www.rbnlive.com.

Others who have also tried to get to the bottom of what really happened at Gander said the crash may not have been caused by ice, but by some type of sophisticated incendiary device placed on the airplane.

Although both the U.S. and Canadian governments have never wavered from the ice theory, critics contend all signs point to an explosion onboard the plane, a conclusion reached by the many unusual events taking place before takeoff as well as suspicious toxicology reports indicating officials are hiding the real cause to protect high level involvement.

"We have been given information that the government wants to keep the true cause of the crash unknown, because of the relationship between the military unit and covert operations taking place related to the Iran-Contra affair," said Phillips, who was the leader in forming coalition of family trying to get at the truth.

"What is our government really hiding? They have sealed all records and information concerning the flight for 70 years. I have been the victim of government surveillance and even have had my phone wiretapped."

Besides Phillips, Hank and Phyllis Gerdes, who also lost their son in the 1985 crash, suspect foul play, claiming the government cover-up indicates something other than ice on the wings caused their son's death.

"I have had to live with this tragedy every day for 20 years and when you realize you are being lied to, it makes it even more difficult," said Mrs. Gerdes.

Although family members still remain hopeful in getting at the truth, they are realistic that the "truth may never be told" since the trail of evidence and support for a renewed investigation has nearly faded out after 20 years.

"We are up against a giant bureaucracy with lots of money, resources and clout to keep the truth from being told," said Mr. Gerdes, adding larger events of misery, like 9/11, Oklahoma City and Hurricane Katrina have pushed the Gander crash to the back burner if not completely off the stove.

"Most Americans don't even know or remember what happened at Gander. And if they did, they feel as if they are helpless at doing anything about it anyway."

Although the truth about Gander may never be known, the evidence pointing to a government cover-up is another example in a long line of suspicious airplane accidents and other suspected terrorist events where the U.S. government frustrates an honest and forthright investigation into the causes, hiding behind what family members say is a false veil of national security.

Some of the more notable tragedies to occur during the same time frame of Gander include the 1983 bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut and the hijacking of TWA flight 847 in June of 1985.

In February of 1984, the Multinational Force and Observer director, Leamon "Ray" Hunt was gunned down in his car in the streets of Rome, Italy. The official stories regarding all the incidents have also been seriously questioned similar to the Gander crash, critics pointing out covert U.S. military operations always seeming to be at the real underlying cause of the tragedies.

What led to suspicions about the Gander crash started after information surfaced that normal flight boarding procedures were seriously disregarded by U.S. officials prior to the DC-8 departure.

In a close look at the Gander crash by Jamie Sandford, he details some of the more important pre-flight oddities:

"The unusual events begin to unfold further here, when the pilot of the plane noticed that the Egyptian guard stationed on the ground outside the aircraft would 'disappear from his post several times, sometimes for as long as an hour.'

"Captain Arthur Schoppaul also noted that the baggage workers got into a fist fight outside the aircraft, which struck him strangely since Arabs rarely touch one another due to religious beliefs. There was a time when there was no light around the aircraft due to a power cord that had been pulled out on the tarmac. During the loading, there were no U.S. personnel in the cargo holds supervising the contracted Egyptian workers, none of whom had been screened by the U.S. officials.

"When the cargo bays of the DC-8 were full, an interesting situation arose; there were still 41 of the soldiers' duffel bags that could not be loaded. Many of the bags were bumped off the plane due to several "large, wooden crates" that were loaded onto the plane first. An Arrow Air manager recalled that Lieut. Colonel Marvin Jeffcoat, the battalion commander, insisted that the boxes be loaded first, and if necessary, that duffel bags be removed to accommodate the boxes, as they contained 'very important, military material.'

"This struck many of the crew members oddly since it is 'unusual to separate a soldier from his equipment.' One of the 10 to 20 of these crates had not been transported on the baggage truck with the other baggage and boxes, but had been flown in the belly of one of the 737s to Cairo. Where was this box kept while the other baggage in the trucks was being guarded? Despite attempts to identify the contents of these boxes through Army records, no official records of the boxes, or their contents, have been found."

Sandford also calls attention to the many oddities of the post-crash investigation, as well as toxicology reports being hidden by the government. He also points out, as do family members including Phillips and Mr. and Mrs. Gerdes, the most disturbing part of the entire investigation is the complicity between the Canadian and U.S. government to keep the investigation a well-guarded secret.

In his detailed look at the crash investigation Sandford writes:

"The Arrow Air DC-8 departed from the terminal at 6:40 a.m. Gander local time, crashing six minutes later less than a half-mile from the end of runway 22. Army Major Gen. John Crosby arrived in Gander at 3:00 p. m. local time, along with Army personnel to assist the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) in their investigative efforts.

"However, the Army's only role was to assist, and not investigate, at the scene of the accident; this would be done solely by the RCMP. Representatives from the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) and the FBI were also dispatched to the site within hours of the crash.

"Many of the officials sent to the crash site were told that they had no jurisdiction there, as the crash did not take place on U.S. territory. In most accidents that involve U.S. citizens, officials probe further to uncover details. In this case, however, many of the officials accepted whatever theories were laid before them by the Canadian officials.

"The FBI officials were put up in a hotel room for several days, at which time they were informed about the RCMP's findings and told to go home. Information in hand, they departed, leaving a possible crime scene with only the information they were provided -- unprecedented for the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Two separate eyewitnesses remember General Crosby ordering the "immediate bulldozing of the crash site.' Although General Crosby denies mentioning the bulldozing operation in December, records show that less than 10 days following the accident, Crosby was in touch with officials in Gander and Ottawa regarding the site cleanup, which was to be performed with 'a representative of the Army present at all times.'"

Sandford and other investigators added the immediate bulldozing of a crash site removed all traces of possible wrongdoing, adding more fuel to the fire of a government cover-up.

Although speculation exists as to the real cause for the cover-up, Sandford offered these following theories:

--The mysterious wooden boxes were the bodies of Special Forces soldiers killed in a hostage rescue attempt.

--A bomb, or some other incendiary device, was placed into the "B" cargo hold of the plane at one of its two stops before heading back to the U.S. The lax security would allow such an act to take place.

--The explosion onboard the aircraft did not cause it to explode in mid-air, but rather rendered it uncontrollable and caused a massive system failure before crashing.

--The Special Forces units on the aircraft were sent to rescue the hostages held in the Middle East. Oliver North realized that the hostages would probably be killed in retaliation for the bad shipment of HAWK missiles sent to Iran. He knew that he could face serious consequences for his actions if the hostages were harmed. The peace keeping agenda in the Sinai would provide an innocent platform from which to launch such an operation.

Dylan Going Public Again But This Time As DJ on XM Radio; Will He Bash Neo-Cons or Take the Easy Way Out?

Americans from deep within the heartland starting to push out anti-neo-con music. Spike Michael lets his words and music be heard nationwide.

21 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Bob Dylan is coming to the airwaves as a DJ next March on XM Radio, perhaps with an anti-neo-con message. Vic Sadot, the 'Broadside Balladeer,' has been writing 9/11 truth and anti-Iraq war songs for a long time, songs played regularly on Air America Radio and other truth stations across the country.

And now comes peace and love advocate Michael Spike Michael on the anti-Neo-con music scene to join Sadot and others with his first public offering, as he sends a scathing message to the illegally installed occupant and resident of the Oval Office with a song entitled "The Burning Bush," a song played with a driving Rap sound and hard beat.

Usually truth, social change and political corruptness are first talked about in coffee shops among artists, as it seems their pure messages of love and peace are finally captured - if ever - by the masses in an agonizingly slow fashion.

But nonetheless, they keep singing, writing and painting, as it all too often seems the world spins one way and the artists spin another. As America appears to be spinning out of control, one reader said:

"Our only hope lies in our artists and writers to hopefully hit the right note and wake-up America before it's too late."

And that is precisely the reason why Spike Michael penned his anti-Bush song, in hopes of hitting the right note, while helping the rest of America "wake-up out of the funk, bringing this country down."

"Over the last few years, I have been reading articles, as I continue to re-educated myself about the sorry state of the human race," said rapper Spike Michael. I am quite sure people will enjoy the message within.

"Please consider this song as an anthem for the people. I would like to make it available to anyone who would like to hear it, maybe it will help others to see the light, so we can stomp the "Burning Bushes" right out of America!"

Besides wanting to wake up a sleeping public, Spike Michael had personal reasons for wanting to write the song.

"As I watched the first of the twin towers fall, I turned to a friend who was watching with me, and said right there and then, 'This looks very suspicious, it resembles what it looks like when they demolish a sports stadium'

"Since that day, it has been one lie after another coming out of the Bush White House. WMD's, Saddam Hussein and Iraq's involvement, the Coalition of the (un)willing, The 911 Commission, the use of depleted uranium, the fake anthrax attacks, pretty much everything has been devious manipulation of the truth, chewed on by the Bush Crime Syndicate, and vomited out all over the sheeple. So, I sat down, and wrote everything I felt about the situation.

"But you asked why did I write this song? The reason why, is because it needs to be said, and heard. If we, the people, don't stand up to these (put in your own vile description here), then we deserve whatever comes from that silence and lack of action.

"My hope is that we will collectively enjoy that experience of truth, and find a way to heal from the wounds we have inflicted on each other, and one day we will live together in peace. Our choice is that, or extinction. So, what will it be?"

Although Spike Michael doesn't have a web site, he will make his song available if you email him at allnaturalspike@hotmail.com.

Here's a portion of his lyrics from the Burning Bush song:

"You don't seem to understand respect for your fellow man
Don't think that you can disguise the hate that's burning from your eyes

"Your evil actions we despise, too late to hide from all your lies
We've come together across this land, to take back our future from your hands

"From first to last word, you lying b....rd
Grand wizard of deceit and disaster
A tainted victor, carbon based hell raiser
The empire falls on this comical Kaiser

"You stole the election, now you spread your infection
You show no affection, you are a lethal injection
You can't stand rejection, and you have no reflection
A distorted collection of negative projections."

Editor's Note: The Arctic Beacon from the outset has featured truth musicians and other artists trying to alert the masses to the destructive neo-con agenda. If you have any songs, poems or critiques, don't hesitate to send them to "The Last Frontier of Truth."

Microwave Weaponry and Covert Government Harassment Used on Many Average Americans; Too Many People Coming Forward To Be Dismissed As Paranoia

Susan Elmes of Seattle is one such victim of most every type of illegal government tactic used to silence critics, including gang stalking, mind-control and sophisticated electronic weaponry.

19 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The number of people claiming to be illegally zapped by microwave weaponry and harassed by undercover government thugs is shocking, as America's march toward a complete military takeover and martial law is getting closer and closer.

In the last month alone, at least 30 people have come forward, citing outrageous civil rights abuses, after Dan Nelson, a small town Montana carpenter, went public with how covert operatives tried killing him several times for spreading 9/11 truth information.

After Nelson's story and radio interview, people literally started crawling out of the wood work with similar abuses, indicating the problem with illegal government surveillance goes deeper than most onlookers imagine.

If only a few people surfaced, the natural inclination is to suspect paranoia as the reason. But when scores of people from as far north as Canada and as far south as Florida step to the plate telling their stories, something much more alarming is going on.

It is common knowledge that whistle blowers are harassed, thrown to the dogs and spit out like shark bait by government operatives. But when common 'Everyday Joe's' start getting punched around like a punching bag for simply advancing their freedom of speech and assembly rights, it's time to start fighting back.

At least that's what Andrew Suda of San Diego recently said after being raked over the coals for years by covert agents after he was put on a watch list for his "radical views," views that simply don't fit into the neo-con agenda. Suda feels communism and Al Queda are "good theatre," falsely created by corrupt factions in the U.S., Eastern Europe and Middle East to bring about fascist state by the New World Order.

"I feel cornered like an animal with nothing left to do but fight back," said Suda, an outspoken former Polish university art student, after almost being killed from a ricin poisoning incident administered by a female covert operative that cunningly infiltrated his personal life.

Besides Nelson and Suda, the 30 people coming forward claiming to have been zapped by illegal electronic weaponry and subjected to government mind control programs and brainwashing techniques is probably just the tip of the ice berg.

However, the common thread running through all the recently reported cases is not only are they being harassed by covert operatives in the traditional street-type manner with illegal break-ins, privacy invasions and wiretapping, but now the government appears to be using a sophisticated electronic weaponry programs geared at zapping the life out of people in their own homes.

Susan Elmes, an activist from Seattle trying to spread the truth about 9/11, is one such victim, who for the past several years has been the target of government surveillance in every possible manner, including gang stalking, mind control techniques, electronic surveillance, as well as the typical barnyard breaking and entering dirty tricks.

For years, Elmes has been extremely vocal in Seattle's activist community, holding public meetings and displaying her web site at www.astarheart.com, where she strongly says the government caused 9/11 and is responsible for the murder of more than 3,000 people.

"They have put me through a living hell ever since I went public about 9/11," said Elmes in an extended phone conversation from her Seattle apartment that has been broken into on several occasions.

"They usually leave these strange calling cards and do things to make you think you are going crazy. But they also poisoned my cat on one of their illegal visits. Luckily he survived, but he has never been the same.

"I know of many others like me who have been victims of the gang-stalking, mind control, and surveillance activities that have been used for threat, intimidation, manipulation, harassment, etc. Unfortunately we need an avenue to pursue damages against people that are currently attacking those trying to spread the truth, but there is just nowhere to go."

On Elmes' web site, where she has a picture of her car draped with numerous anti-Bush and neo-con bumper, she poses a difficult question facing millions of Americans who are in the same boat, maybe not under surveillance yet, but realizing they have been duped and played for stooges by a deceitful neo-con U. S. government bent on destroying the country from within.

Elmes asks: "What happens when the things you believed about the world, the government and the people working for the government, turn out to be lies and you are really living in a fascist state? And what happens when you become their target?"

"Our government used 9/11 as shock and awe to manipulate Americans and now it's time to educate everyone about the real terrorists in our country. I am a victim. I live everyday with the possibility of having my house broken into and live every day under the fear of gang stalking and psychological violence. Who will be next?"

In an effort to stop the harassment, Elmes has tried everything possible, including asking help from the ACLU in a well-documented written report, as well as seeking help from alternative clairvoyant sources.

Although the ACLU refused to take her case, Elmes said this "supposed civil rights group" has also been corrupted from within, staying away from the CIA mind-control cases involving programs like MKULTRA and Bluebird.

"It should be obvious, that we are dealing with, globally, the lowest form of mentality, spiritual and social corruption that can present itself in human form on the earth, and we are seeing evidence of the truest form of evil that humans and spiritual abominations are capable of manifesting on earth," said Elmes regarding the hundreds of thousands of people being killed around the world by the neo-con agenda.

In her plea for help to the ACLU, she added:

"I have believed since I first saw the attack on the World Trade Center that the origin and planning of it involved Americans, working inside the operation of our government. I am also convinced now that the Pseudo "Patriot Act" and "Homeland Security" was actually created to do the opposite ?

"It was created to protect the traitors who are operating within our government and committing treasonous acts against the American people, including orchestrating 9-11 and the passage of unconstitutional laws against Americans. It is also my belief that the Department of Homeland Security is being used on targeted individuals in order to protect those involved in political corruption and treason in the highest levels of our government, and it has also led to me becoming a targeted individual for recognizing and publicly exposing corruption and criminal activities.

"My awareness of surveillance and harassment/psychological violence activities began shortly after the passage of the "Patriot Act" (during the winter of 2001), while working for Virginia Mason. On one occasion at the Port Angeles clinic, a supervisor came out to the Winnebago, which a coworker (Jud Bailey) and I worked in, and warned us to be careful what we say that "the walls had ears".

"I also became aware of changes in the computer operation, modem transmissions, which indicated there was some alteration in its operational functioning. I became clearly aware that I was a target for harassment and psychological violence from some of the people working at the clinics and some of the patients sent in for bone density scans (some of whom were also Virginia Mason employees).

"There were some people, at some of the clinic sites, who clearly indicated they had access or information from my medical records and personal life, by the comments they made to each other directly in my presence (what is known as "mobbing" activities, and is described in books, with information available on the internet and research documented).

"I was also told, from a personal information source, that new technology was used on me for research, without my knowledge or consent, while I was employed with Virginia Mason. And after seeing the GNN. tv documentary about mind control (The Most Dangerous Game), I believe that the operation at Virginia Mason involved a component of Homeland Security and most likely the CIA."

Besides Elmes, others like Eleanor White of Toronto, Nancy Taormina of Spokane, Susan Fox and Jim Mecca of New York, to name a few, have all experienced what they claim is a sophisticated form of electronic weaponry, geared at interrupting normal sleeping and living patterns and having dire consequences over an accumulated period of time.

"I haven't been able to sleep normally for over a year since I have been subjected to this type of government harassment," said Toarmina from her Spokane home in an extended telephone conversation. "They started harassing me after I continued complaining to the military about their fly-over programs and other abuses on the public like chem trails, which were occurring all hours of the day and night."

To verify the claims of these victims, a 2004 Montreal case recently uncovered CIA mind-control abuses involving a 1953 program and a Scottish physician on the government payroll. The court found the abuses were compensable, allowing 250 patients the right to seek compensation for unwillingly taking part in the sinister mind-control programs.

Evidence in the landmark federal Montreal case uncovered the use of LSD, other experimental drugs and sleep deprivation techniques were illegally administered by Scottish doctor, Ewan Cameron, recruited by the CIA while working at McGill University in Montreal.

Critics of CIA involvement in torture and mind-control experimentation are pointing to this case as proof-positive that illegal brainwashing programs are still being carried out in America, the mild-altering techniques being used on unknowing and unwilling Americans for many different types of covert activities.

And dating back to the 1950's the CIA has a long and storied involvement with mind control techniques, essentially being documented by more than 18,000 declassified pages of CIA documents on mind-control.

Most of the declassified documents were used as a basis for three books that can be considered the best references for trying to get to the bottom of the devious CIA activity.

The three books are Bluebird by Colin A. Ross MD, a leading Canadian psychiatrist; Dr. Armen Vitorian's Mind Controllers; and A Nation Betrayed by recovered mind control victim Carol Rutz.

NBC Given 'OK' to Run Pentagon Snooping Story, Hoping an Uninformed Public Will Believe Bush is 'Strong on Terror' to Sway Last Minute Passage of Illegal Patriot Act Stalled in Senate Insider at New York Times says Bush is trying to turn the Pentagon story into trump card in getting Patriot Act through Senate. Source says administration gave go-ahead to run story as corrupt media continues to work hand-in-hand with neo-cons to trick sleeping public.

18 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The screws aren't coming loose in the corrupt Bush administration with the release of the Pentagon snooping story, but only a clear-cut sign they are be tightened down even harder on innocent Americans not falling in step with the neo-con party line.

The writing is already on the wall that the National Security Agency (NSA) and the Department of Defense (DOD) will not stop invading individual privacy rights, as in 2006 expect more and more innocents being labeled 'domestic terrorists' for no good reason.

The main issue surrounding the release of the NBC story, finding Bush directly ordered the NSA and DOD to use its data base to spy on citizens is not the substance of the story but its timing.

The question must be asked why the story was released by NBC News during the important Patriot Act debate in Congress when the New York Times actually knew about it over 18 months ago, never running the story as a favor to the Bush administration.

"The answer is the Bush administration put its 'rubber stamp' of approval on the release of the story during the hot Patriot Act debates in order to launch a counter-attack against opposition lawmakers and civil rights groups, depicting them as anti-American and weak on terror protection," said an insider working for the New York Times who wishes to remain anonymous to protect his private interests.

"I know the story has been widely talked about amongst journalists all over town for years. I remember a couple of bar room discussions with some guys having the information but no outlet to print the NSA story.

"It's really a joke what has happened to the manipulated press since I know for a fact the NBC story was only allowed to air after the powers that be outside of the media gave their stamp of approval."

In fact, the Times source went on to say the timing of the story was an orchestrated effort between media big shots and the Bush administration to give the 'illegally installed President' another 'bully-pulpit' to play his terror card in the middle of America's heartland, where many uninformed citizens have already been brainwashed into believing the phony war on terror and the necessity of surrendering civil rights for a false sense of protection and security.

"The timing of the release is geared to make Bush look strong, not weak, and to force into submission those supporting the repeal of the Patriot Act by making them appear weak in the eyes of Americans, many of whom are uninformed ironically due to the media's lack of coverage regarding other wrongdoings of the Bush administration..

"The Bush strategy along with the help of NBC and other large news outlets is to bank on the uninformed masses to support the President's position that it's better to sacrifice certain civil rights measures in order to protect against another terrorist attack."

And to verify the credibility of the Times source, President Bush immediately started his counter-attack, using his Saturday radio address to strongly criticize lawmakers and others who leaked the NSA/Pentagon snooping story, using the terror card and saying they were compromising the safety of the American people by exposing the secret surveillance geared at rooting out domestic terrorists.

Besides Bush, other administration attack dogs, like attorney General Alberto Gonzales, also were quick to use the same strategy.

Immediately after the NBC story surfaced, Gonzales told reporters:

"Let me just say that winning the war on terror requires winning the war of information. And so we will be aggressive in obtaining that information, but we will always do so in a manner that's consistent with our legal obligations."

And just when the Pentagon snooping story was released the U.S. House of Representative voted to extend the illegal Patriot Act while also adding even more restrictive measures sought by the Bush administration, making it even easier for the government to snoop on Americans without the concern of previous Constitutional protections.

However, the Senate for time being has blocked passage of the act but under complicated rules of order, the discussion is not closed and Bush and Republicans still are trying to somehow push the legislation passed in the House through the Senate before the deadline.

Using Live TV Saturday prior to his weekly radio address, Bush again strongly criticized those opposed to his views:

"The terrorists want to attack America again and kill the innocent and inflict even greater damage than they did on September 11th and the Congress has a responsibility not to take away this vital tool that law enforcement and intelligence officials have used to protect the American people," Bush said.

Bush also used national TV to publicly scold the Senate, something not normally done before his weekly radio address, again using the "terror and fear card," saying the Senate's decision to block quick passage of the Patriot Act was "irresponsible and endangers the lives of Americans."

Although the Senate rules and technicalities are complicated, for all practical purposes, the fate of the Patriot Act is still up in the air.

Neo-cons essentially wanted a quick four-year extension of the Patriot Act's chief provisions, including modifications drafted during weeks of congressional negotiations, adding even more restrictive provisions on civil rights.

The House approved the bill Wednesday. But in the Senate four Senate Republicans -- Chuck Hagel of Nebraska, Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, John Sununu of New Hampshire and Larry Craig of Idaho joined Friday's Democrat-led filibuster, leaving proponents well short of the 60 votes needed to end debate and force a yes-or-no vote on the legislation in the 100-member chamber.

Fifty-three senators initially voted to end the filibuster, seven shy of the required number. Majority Leader Bill Frist, (R-Tenn.), switched his vote from yes to no at the last minute, a parliamentary move allowing him to seek another roll call later, opening the door for more debate and more political pressure to be applied to those Senators resisting the Patriot act's approval.

"You see, all the press, the NBC story, Bush on TV and all the attention is geared at pressuring the Senate hold-outs. The administration and the corrupt media knew this and that is why the story was released now and not years ago," said the source within the Times.

Don't Trust NBC or Investigative Unit; Pentagon Snooping Story Designed to Backfire On Those Who Pursue It

Bush and Pentagon will counter NBC story with the 'terror card,' a move that will play well in the heartland. It's all 'good theatre' as the Patriot Act and real civil rights abuses on the streets get lost in the shuffle.

17 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The story that the Pentagon, through a Bush Executive Order, is spying on Americans comes as no big surprise. And the fact that the New York Times sat on the story for over a year as a favor to Bush is typical in this day an age.

But sadly Bush, the Pentagon and the Times won't stop doing what they are doing due to a little bad press. The truth is they won't stop until they are tarred, feathered and run out of town on a rail.

In the meantime, the American people are being treated to "good theatre" as news reports now have surfaced that more than 1,500 suspicious incidents of Pentagon snooping on innocents have occurred during the last year, detailed in a Department of Defense "secret document" obtained by NBC News.

However, the story written by the NBC investigative unit, including Lisa Meyers and Douglas Pasternak, was basically considered in some journalistic circles as merely "a fluff piece," since the story was designed to create a lot of smoke and no fire.

In fact, the Pentagon illegal data base story is really nothing more than a big smokescreen designed to narrow attention on the critical passage of the Patriot Act before the Dec. 31 sunset deadline. It is also a story designed to backfire on those who pursue it since already Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez, President Bush and the Pentagon brass are countering with the terrorism card.

Listen to Gonzalez's words as he counters the NBC story, a calculated response that will play exceptionally well in the heartland, which is known all too well by the White House and the gutless bunch at NBC posing as real investigators.

"Let me just say that winning the war on terror requires winning the war of information," Attorney General Alberto R. Gonzales told reporters. "And so we will be aggressive in obtaining that information, but we will always do so in a manner that's consistent with our legal obligations."

Critics point out the NBC story is nothing but "good theatre" where Bush takes his lumps from fake liberals on Capitol Hill, but in the end uses the terrorist card to justify his illegal action among the uninformed public, a misinformed public wanting to feel protected from the phony war on terror.

And this story is another clear-cut example of how large news organizations can no longer be trusted or their words taken on face value.

It's also an example of how honest readers and viewers must quickly become hyper-sophisticated "in reading one way and looking another." In other words, when the big outlets cover a story like this about the Pentagon spying on innocents, one can be sure the real spying or wrongdoings are going on elsewhere.

For example, instead of the Pentagon, here the focus of attention should be on the streets where Homeland Security has been given a free rein to run roughshod over the American people through the relaxation of constitutional privacy protections by the illegal Patriot Act.

Moreover, the focus of attention should be on repealing the Patriot Act and the Gestapo like tactics it promotes, tactics used on innocents by hundreds of agents now being told "it's OK to spy on your brother if your brother doesn't follow the party line."

And, lastly, the focus should be on the countless innocents being harassed daily, being victimized by wiretapping, illegal electronic weaponry, brainwashing programs and other intrusive counter-intelligence methods designed to quiet dissent in Bush's totalitarian America.

"Don't be fooled by the terrorism justification. This government is out to get you. Lock you up and throw away the key," said an insider working at the New York Times who acts as a spy for the alternative press.

And this whole scenario of propaganda, counter-propaganda, spying and counter-spying is nothing new in other parts of the world where people through years of suppression have become efficient at sorting out disinformation and disinformation agents

But here it's a different story as Americans need a quick refresher course in how to detect the real enemy.

So, for starters, instead of taking the NBC story on face value, forget about it and look elsewhere. Instead of nodding yes to NBC, say no. And, most importantly, always remember this company is out to mislead, distract and turn viewers away from the real issues, the distinctive characteristic of disinformation artists working at their best.

Also, it's always important to remember stories like the Pentagon snooping case are allowed to appear by direct orders from the big shots or media mafia bosses, who are getting their direct orders from the neo-con war lords.

"Sound's like were in Nazi Germany or the old Soviet Union. I wouldn't trust anything that comes out of the NBC investigative unit of the New York Times anymore. There is always another motive than strictly helping the American people" said the spy working inside the Times.

And the fact is readers shouldn't trust one word or one second of film with the name Pasternak on it, even though he is only a shill taking orders.

The reason Pasternak and the NBC investigative unit should be watched closely and not trusted is they are the same unit who filmed 9/11 hero William Rodriguez in 2004 after the 9/11 Commission hearings, but never ran a second of film on this very important story, a story revealing the WTC was most likely brought down by a controlled demolition not jet fuel like the government contends.

Rodriguez heard basement explosions in the North Tower before the airplane hit above, compelling testimony corroborated by numerous and at least 30 other North Tower survivors.

And a compelling story like this just isn't ignored, but that's exactly what the 9/11 Commission did in its final report, as well as Pasternak's NBC investigative unit after rolling 8 hours of film and interviewing Rodriguez at his home, but afterwards never airing one word of his story.

And last year when he was asked by the Arctic Beacon and the American Free Press over the telephone why he didn't run the story, he skirted the issue, saying simply "the explosions weren't the focus of his story," implying it lacked importance.

Also, when Pasternak's corporate boss was asked the same question, she said adding more evidence of an orchestrated media cover-up: "NBC makes it a point not to explain its news gathering techniques."

Simply put, if NBC bosses and Pasternak can't give a straight answer about the censorship of the Rodriguez 9/11 story, the investigative unit simply can't be trusted about anything else.

"It should be noted that mistakes and unawareness are acceptable - even forgiven - but in Paternak's case it appears to be more of an overt perpetuation of a criminal cover-up, something that is unacceptable in a business involving the public trust," commented The New York Times worker who wished to remain anonymous.

Polish Immigrant Harassed by Covert Operatives and Says America Headed Down Path of Suppression Just Like Behind the Old Iron Curtain

American citizen, Andrew Suda of Poland, has been poisoned and almost killed by his girlfriend, working as an undercover operative with apparent assistance from Homeland Security and the U.S. government

16 Dec 2005

Andrew Suda feels like a cornered animal with nothing left to do but fight back.

Suda, 46, a 1985 Polish immigrant, is another in the long line of citizens being hounded, harassed and raked over the coals by thugs operating under the radar screen with the assistance of the U.S. government.

"I have been poisoned," said Suda in an extended telephone conversation from his San Diego home, adding it came from doses of ricin administered by his girlfriend who turned out to be a covert operative. "Attacks have been made against my financial well-being, isolating me socially, sabotage at work and of my car, ringing in ears, super vivid dreams that drain you and keep you asleep for many, many hours - these are all tricks constantly used on me."

The Polish native and now American citizen said he has been targeted by authorities since he is considered an "annoying fly or loose end" in what has become a shocking attempt at a total lockdown of the truth being played out on the streets of America.

Although Suda came here looking for peace and freedom, he might as well be walking down the streets of Moscow, since literally his every move has been monitored by what has turned out to be Polish and Russian communist intelligence operatives given free rein to operate with the help of certain factions inside the U.S. government.

"What's going on here, reminds me of what went on in Poland when I was a boy," recalls Suda.

In fact, when Suda was a young student in a Polish university, one the equivalent to an American Ivy League school, he was extremely vocal about the fall of communism being a charade or "good theatre," as he calls it.

He considered the sudden fall of communism and the Polish freedom movement to be contrived for strategic deception purposes, considering it nothing more than a plan of deception orchestrated by the communists and certain factions of the American government.

"Otherwise," he says, "why would the communist 'Old Guard' remain in Eastern European command positions and why would some former KGB officials now be allowed to operate freely in America and actually be on the Homeland Security payroll?"

Not surprisingly, the horror stories coming out of the Homeland Security Department related to the abuses allowed under the Patriot Act are at the heart of Suda's problems, since both the agency and the laws it is operating under are geared at taking away liberties previously protected by the Constitution. And this Polish immigrant, who is all too familiar with communist oppression, said the same thing is happening here in America that went on behind the veil of the Iron Curtain when he was growing up in Poland.

"The symptoms are the same as occurred in Poland and the USSR," said Suda, adding Americans better wake-up quick before it's too late. "Why are people afraid to talk and speak their minds? Why is it when you speak the truth or have opinions contrary to the government, people on the streets even look at you like your crazy or like you are an idiot.

"This is what it was like under communist suppression, but it may even be worse because nobody is even thinking about it. In fact, I think it will now even be easier for them to take away freedom here than it was in Eastern Europe since most people aren't even arguing."

Feeling restricted under communism, Suda naturally brought his outspoken views to America, thinking life would be sweet. But instead his "politically incorrect" opinions landed him in big trouble. Although he's not locked away in a gulag, the 21st century American equivalent is perhaps even more dark and sinister if not just as confining as a cold and dank jail cell.

"I literally cannot sleep in my home anymore and I feel as if I am being cornered like an animal just for my political views," said Suda, adding he feels the 'powers that be' pulling the worldwide strings have decided it would be easier to manipulate people under a capitalistic system rather than communism.

"You see, there always needs to be an enemy even though it's not real. This is how people are controlled, rounded up like cattle and eventually slaughtered. The world powers who come from all countries have now decided it is easy to control the masses under the guise of capitalism and that is why communism fell so quickly.

"Now, you are seeing here in America what happened in Russia and Poland. In fact, it is my opinion that certain U.S. officials, determined to destroy America, all along have been cooperating with the Communist enemy instead of fighting them? Whistle blowers being harassed and terrorized by the U.S. government? Did we really have an enemy in the form of IVAN? Or was IVAN an older, cruder OSAMA? This would explain the "enemy of my enemy is my enemy paradox."

"I think Americans need to wake-up. I lived under suppression and see the same thing happening here. Now the fake enemy is Osama and without a doubt this is an orchestrated government effort to place the population under fear so that takeover becomes an easy matter.

"Like I said and I want to emphasize that the 'powers that be' may actually have an easier time of takeover here since there has been an orchestrated effort in America to disrupt strong family values and a decaying of the school system, eventually leading to the utter lack of free and independent thinking."

Whatever Suda's views are, it appears what's playing out in Eastern Europe backs up what he is saying. Although democracy has been touted in Poland and other places previously behind the Iron Curtain, it's a fact that same old communist leaders have again taken control.

In fact, in 2000 Polish headlines reported that the famous anti-communist Solidarity leader and former Polish President, Lech Walesa, was actually a communist agent recruited by the Russians in the 1970's under the code name of Bolek.

Although Walesa has denied the charges, the question must still be asked if Walesa was a KGB agent, were the communists actually orchestrating the fake freedom movement from the beginning in order to work hand in hand with devilish forces in the American government for an eventual takeover here?

And could this also be a reason why covert operatives have gone to great lengths at silencing Suda? Could this be why they enlisted the services of a Polish female operative who entered into a romantic affair and eventually tried to kill him through poisoning?

Could this also be why the FBI and other federal authorities have backed off the investigation even though clear evidence exists Suda's life is in danger by something or someone more than a psychotic girlfriend?

"I was tested by doctors in California who found numerous poisons in my system," said Suda. "One day I realized that my Polish girlfriend was a spy and I was so well manipulated and brainwashed by people surrounding me that I couldn't see, or rather understand, things happening just in front of me.

"Since I 'woke up' it was pretty easy to collect enough evidence and go to FBI. I knew that I had a big case. Between other things there was evidence that local Congressman, then chief of armed forces committee, gave my girlfriend a Green Card with no questions asked after Department of State attempted to deport her.

"Guess what - her old INS file where the reason for deportation was presented strangely disappeared after that and it wasn't available even for the Office of Inspector General of U.S. Dept. of Justice. I then approached the Office of Inspector General after an incident where the FBI exposed me to the Polish network.

"O.I.G. did a good job and we were able to get a hard evidence of FBI wrongdoing. Unfortunately, Washington forced O.I.G. to stop. My investigator from O.I.G. was then quickly transferred to San Francisco and doesn't want to talk to me any more.

"And where is the mind control issue in my case? Well, after all the experiences I realized that there is something bigger than the Cold War. I knew that one of my girlfriend's supervisors or handlers was a Polish representative to the UN, who became a professor at Harvard. I knew that local (San Diego) ABC station was personally stopped by Peter Jennings from investigating my case even though they aired a program about similar KGB operatives earlier."

At a time when Suda was near death from poisoning, everyone who could help backed away, leaving him in financial ruin after losing his house and being subjected to an unfair IRS audit even though his work involved a simple painting business.

Asked about the congressman involved with his girlfriend, Suda added: "If you are a protected spy or agent like my girlfriend you can use military technology, federal agents and you can use politicians. I don't know how successful she was with our local congressman but the fact is without any questions he got her a green card when she was about to be deported. That speaks volumes."

"I might add two weeks after I stopped living with my girlfriend, my health improved. Also ricin is a protein and it leaves no residual in the human body and it isn't a poison you get easily off the street and only a few countries in the world are making it."

And when the entire Suda story is evaluated, his conclusions appear logical since covert mind control, espionage and economic sabotage are extremely difficult crimes to prove. Also, looking back at Suda's story, most likely his problems began with his outspoken nature in Poland since contacts he made there, like a bad nightmare, have now appeared to surface on the streets of San Diego.

"I came here 20 years ago wanting a better life but perhaps my outspoken ways have been my downfall," recalls Suda. "Unfortunately, I used my college contacts to stay in America. I used the sister of a friend from college. I didn't think they were involved in UB, the Polish KGB, though.

"And it was through her I met my girlfriend, who I found out was simply a spy. I then found out she was involved with federal agents and military contractors, finding love letters written to DEA agents. I showed these letters to a military expert and he said they were recognized as 'trap letters' used by the KGB since the Korean War.

"These letters use sophisticated psychological hooks and are used as a method to recruit spies called 'honey traps.'"

Although Suda's story is complex involving the FBI, DEA and the Office of the Inspector General, there exists numerous facts beyond mere suspicion which takes his story out of the realm of human paranoia into the world of covert harassment through the use of a wide range of tactics employed by the KGB and CIA.

U.S. House Approves New Patriot Act Measures; Filibuster Now Threatened in Senate to Block Civil Rights Takeover

At least 12 Senators are asking for a three-month delay before passing the draconian Bush Patriot Act amendments which would further erode civil liberties.

15 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The future of the U.S. Constitution and civil rights hang in the balance, hinging on an important vote in Congress this week, as the Bush administration tries to ramrod into law a new more draconian version of the U.S. Patriot Act.

The Republican majority is trying to push the administration's wishes through the Senate, as the White House's new version of the Patriot Act gives even more government flexibility to take away privacy and free speech rights under the guise of terrorism.

Although critics say the passage of the new version of the Patriot Act is "a done deal," a bipartisan group of senators have to fight back on the Senate floor by filibuster if necessary.

"This is a huge moment. Senators from both parties are standing together to protect freedom and liberty -- and they're ready to fight. Go to moveon.org and sign a petition to show them and the rest of the Senate that you support filibustering this bad bill? The Patriot Act has to be stopped," said activist John Leahy in a last ditch effort to gather forces to stop passage of the act.

Civil rights activists for years have jumped on the anti-Patriot Act bandwagon, after the law was pushed through Congress 45 days after 9/11 without most if not all the Senators not even bothering to read the legislation.

Since passage of the act government powers to spy on Americans without a legal warrant or probable cause has been drastically expanded, causing cherished constitutional protections to be ignored under the guise of "domestic terrorism."

But instead of repealing intrusive provisions, President Bush is determined to expand the "draconian measures under the act," as this week he has sent his top law enforcement guns to Capital Hill to demand that Congress ass a House-Senate accord that would renew more than a dozen provisions of the act before expiring on Dec. 31.

Bush's disrespect for civil rights and the U.S. Constitution has long been a hallmark of his Presidency as recently he was quoted by at least three Oval Office sources as saying the Constitution was nothing more than "a goddamn piece of paper."

First reported by Doug Thompson of the oldest-running political site on the internet, Capital Hills Blues, the story sent shockwaves through America, getting headlines worldwide.

Although the House is expected to pass Bush's version of the Patriot Act this week, success in the Senate now seems unclear due to the threat of a Democratic filibuster.

Proponents of using this delay tactics say even some Republicans have joined in to suggest a three month delay is needed in order to carefully sort out the ramifications of the Bush agenda, which has already proven to take away many cherished constitutional rights.

Reports inside Capital Hill report that about 12 Senators are opposed to quick passage of the bill, including leader of the filibuster initiative, Democratic Senator Russ Feingold of Wisconsin and Senate Minority leader, Harry Reid, a democrat from Nevada.

"There's no reason to compromise right to due process, the right to a judicial review, fair and reasonable standards of evidence in the pursuit of our security," said Senator John E. Sununu, Republican of New Hampshire, who is urging Congress to move the expiration date of the new provisions within the Patriot Act back to March 31.

The new legal tools added to the new provisions sought by President Bush would give the government expanded authority to investigate American citizens like the government now uses to investigate organized crime.

Editor's note: As this story was being posted, the U.S. House of Representatives passed the Bush administration new Patriot Act initiatives. It is now up to the Senate.

9/11 Evidence Ignored by Apathetic American Public Exercising Their Constitutional Right to Remain 'Uninformed'

From the ignored recovery of the black boxes at Ground Zero, the eye-witness testimony about basement explosions in the WTC and the scientific evidence of a controlled demolition, the American people have demonstrated over and over again they "just don't care."

13 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Four years after 9/11, numerous people have come forward with damaging evidence but the government has never even blinked an eye.

Worse yet, the state sponsored media and the American people have turned a blind eye and a deaf ear, a sign of cover-up by the media and apathy on the part of the people.

But let's not forget the media is a private enterprise, able to violate the public trust without losing too much sleep, while the majority of people in America are showing their true colors by using their constitutional right to simply remain uninformed.

Probably, if cornered, most Americans would try to wiggle their way out of that accusation, but the sad fact remains most of them just don't care.

In fact, Eric Hufschmid, a long time 9/11 truth activist and first to put together strong evidence of a WTC controlled demolition in his book Painful Questions, recently hit the nail on the head when he said:

"It's time for people to wake-up! The evidence is there, folks."

Hufschmid is right. The evidence is there and the American people are ashamedly asleep at the wheel. They're sound asleep, as Hufschmid points out, because every time solid evidence is presented, making a case for a government 9/11 inside job, it goes in one ear and out the other.

And to make matters worse, the evidence goes by way of "file 69" while politicians, without even as much as blinking a sorry eye, stroll hand-in-hand by the Potomac, smoking cigars and laughing all the way to the bank.

But this scene is too easy to visualize as "Fatso" sprawls on the couch watching reruns of God only knows what while the other "Politician Fatsos" feed out of the government money trough like a bunch of dirty fat pigs.

However, the truth is that Americans have the right under the Constitution to get fat, stay apathetic and remain uninformed, a situation ruthless power-grabbers in high places feed on like sharks in blood infested waters.

And as President Baby Bush so aptly put it the other day, "The Constitution is only a piece of paper" not worth wiping one's rear-end on. But from the mouth of a foolish President in this case comes the sad truth since the Constitution is only a "piece of paper" when the majority of people choose to remain uninformed.

For example, concerning 9/11, more than a year ago the Arctic Beacon interviewed Michael Bellone, a former honorary New York fireman working at Ground Zero who, along with fireman, Vincent DiMasi, uncovered three of the four airplane black boxes in the WTC wreckage.

Bellone insisted he found the black boxes, was told to "shut up" about it after the FBI confiscated the evidence and then after a few press clippings, nothing was ever heard about it again, the 9/11 Commission and the government and the majority of Americans just ignoring the evidence.

A year ago, Bellone had this to say from his New York home:

"They confronted me and told me to not to say anything," recalls Bellone, referring to one of three reddish-orange boxes with two white stripes he saw in the back of DeMasi's ATV. "I said give me a good reason? When they couldn't, I told them I wouldn't shut up about it.

"Why should I? I have nothing to hide and nothing to gain. It's the truth and Nick and I are sticking to our story as we always have."

In fact, a year ago Bellone said he and DeMasi were not the only 911 rescue workers to see the black boxes, adding there were several other witnesses and knowing first hand they had also been silenced by federal agents.

"I know two or three others saw what went down, but they are not talking," added Bellone. "They got to those guys after they talked to me. The only reason I can figure they are trying to hide the truth is that the government knows it screwed up and the recorders would prove it.

"I can tell you this, though, it was all very strange. I worked on the spaceship Columbia clean-up and you know when something important is found and when something is not" he recalled, saying the day the 'black boxes' were secretly carted away agents acted like "something big was going down."

So, four years ago something big went down. The FBI confiscated evidence showing the airplanes hitting the WTC were not jetliners but most likely military cargo drones. One would think in light of this discovery the next logical step would be to force the government to turn over the boxes, leading to case closed since if they turned the boxes over, the evidence demonstrates the lies and, if they don't turn them over, it demonstrates a cover-up which is equally as bad.

But instead what happens. The black boxes remain hidden and the reason they have never been made public is because most of the American people really don't care, unfortunately deciding once again to exercise their constitutional right to remain plunked down on the couch in front of the television remaining "happily uninformed."

And the list of 9/11 evidence ignored doesn't stop here. The long list of compelling evidence shoved under the rug by the government, left hidden there by an apathetic populace is astounding. It's so astounding, as they say, it really "blows one's mind."

There is, of course, the eye-witness testimony of not less than 30 people and, probably many more, who witnessed explosions in the WTC basement prior to the airplanes hitting the towers.

Then there is the Pentagon evidence and concealment of evidence that provides enough incriminating facts to put Bush and the gang away for a hundred lifetimes.

And, of course, there is the recent BYU physics professor, to name one of a hundred experts, who all concur that the laws of physics demonstrate without question the WTC collapsed from a controlled demolition not jet fuel like the government contends.

"The list of compelling evidence is endless and you don't need experts to show that the government is lying about 9/11," said Phil Jayhan, one of the few Americans who chooses to be informed.

In fact, the list of 9/11 evidence showing a government complicity before, during and after is so strong - so legally sound - even a third rate ambulance chasing lawyer could convince a jury.

However, since the case is still open and in the court of public opinion, more evidence is still being gathered as if investigators really needed to put more legal icing on the 9/11 cake.

And it will be interesting to see whether the next piece of 9/11 cake will be again ignored by the American people.

For example, this Friday on the Power Hour radio show, Dave von Kleist and Joyce Riley will interview former Pentagon insider working there on 9/11 who will present damaging evidence that the military brass lied about what type of aircraft actually struck the Pentagon.

Although Flowers was unavailable for comment, he is going to tell Riley and von Kleist on Friday that he was one of "many who were given prepared written statements to say that a commercial airliner hit the Pentagon" when in fact they had no knowledge of the fact or knew it was false.

"Under those chaotic conditions, Paul thought his prescribed protocol was acting in national security's best interests. Well, today he sees the big mistake he had made by not telling the immediate truth," said a promotion on the Power Hour web site for the Friday interview.

By following orders from the Pentagon brass, Flowers provides even more evidence that the government was involved in causing 9/11 and the resulting deaths of more than 3,000 people.

However, the real story more interesting than the evidence itself, will be whether the American people once again will choose to remain plunked on the couch, exercising their inalienable right to remain uninformed while another piece of vital 9/11 evidence goes in one ear and out the other like so many times before.

Elderly 85-year-old New Orleans Woman Could Lose Her House Over FEMA's Lack of Assistance

Clothilde Mack of Orleans Parrish provides a stark example of how levies probably were wired and detonated, leading to a catastrophe of racial cleansing and property takeover.

11 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The nightmare in New Orleans isn't over by a long shot and the on-going tragedy of 85-year-old Clothilde Mack is a stark example of the misery still blowing in the wind after Hurricane Katrina.

It is well-known Washington dragged its feet in responding to Katrina and FEMA's initial recovery efforts made the Keystone Cops look efficient. In fact, FEMA is still causing more harm than good, according to many victims seeking relief.

But it's Ms Mack's personal story that really gets to the heart of the government's folly concerning Katrina, highlighting in human terms - with facts and real human emotions - what's really going on behind the political curtain of silence draped over the Crescent City.

Although it's rarely questioned in the media, there's an awfully good chance the levies were blown up, the disaster response time pathetic and the recovery effort abysmal as a planned scheme in order to maximize damage, leading to racial cleansing and a gambling haven with Las Vegas like hotels and casinos.

However, the ability to prove such charges is going to take a Herculean effort similar to the effort going on in the 9/11 truth movement. But, in the meantime, Ms Mack's story provides a solid legal foundation, as she makes a credible and strong character witness, that the above accusations leveled against the government are true beyond a reasonable doubt.

A sudden surge of water after the storm: Ms Mack is left up to her neck in water when she least expected it and when expert meteorologists least expected it, adding more circumstantial evidence that the levies were wired and detonated.

Ms Mack is an elderly Black woman who lived in New Orleans for almost 50 years, living in the same Orleans Parish house for 47 years and owning the modest single family dwelling free and clear of any lien or mortgage.

After the night of the hurricane, her home weathered the storm with minor damage and she remembered going out onto her porch the next morning, finding a few trees down in the front yard and thinking she was out of harm's way.

In Ms Mack's mind, the skies were clearing and the storm was over.

And as she surveyed her neighborhood, the storm had taken its toll with downed trees and power lines, but she thought "nothing several weeks of cleanup and little hard work couldn't fix" until life returned to normal.

But that was before the levies exploded in more than a half-dozen places at the same time, raising two important questions:

If a levy truly erupted at one particular weakened point from a storm surge, wouldn't it have relieved the pressure from the other points of eruption, causing those sections of the levy to remain strong?

And if the levies erupted from a storm surge, wouldn't they have erupted just prior to the storm when the surge is the strongest, since expert meteorologists will testify there is no storm surge after a hurricane?

As an aside, it must also be asked who would benefit the most from relocating the poor and rebuilding the poorer neighborhoods like Orleans Parish? Of course, the answer is the government and its partners in rebuilding, the rich financiers.

With these questions leading to a reasonable person concluding that there exists reasonable doubt as to the actual cause of the levies breaking "at once" in numerous places, as well as providing a financial motive for the perpetrators, it is also logical to draw the following conclusion:

A conclusion that Navy Seals or covert operatives, trained in demolition, were used to place underwater detonations at strategic locations to wipe-out the poorer, mostly Black New Orleans' neighborhoods. Although this conclusion is couched in a simple sentence, once proven, it is the beginning step of sinister plan that sets out to change the face, complexion and financial base of one of America's greatest cities.

And now listen to Ms Mack's testimony, laying further credibility to the above conclusion and the levy blast theory, as she explains a sudden 'Niagra Falls' like surge of water when it was least expected - after Katrina had already passed.

"I walked outside the next morning and I thought I was safe. The sky was clearing, the wind was low and there were some trees down, but I really thought I had weathered the storm. My house was in good shape and there wasn't a speck of water on the floor.

"My car was still in one piece and the neighborhood looked like it could be put back into shape in no time. I stayed because I didn't have anywhere to go and I didn't want to leave my house.

"I remember it was still morning the day after the storm and I walked back into my kitchen. Then all of a sudden out of nowhere the water rushed in like Niagra Falls broke loose. It was up to my waist in a matter of minutes and if I didn't hold on to the furniture for dear life, I would have never made it.

"The water just kept rising and before long, I was forced into my attic with the water up to my neck. I remained there for 10 days and by the grace of God I survived on two cans of green beans and several small water bottles."

Besides Ms Mack's compelling testimony of an unusually strong surge of water after the storm when expert meteorologists will also testify that a storm surge doesn't exist, it is interesting to note only the poorer communities were flooded and wiped-out, the systematic breaks in the levies suspiciously leaving the more affluent communities, certain business districts and the French Quarter relatively high and dry.

Ms Mack is left 10 days in a major American city without help and without even a means of communication. Why? Did the government purposely delay to maximize casualties and damage for a "racial and ethnic cleansing" of New Orleans?

The government's foot-dragging is well-documented, reminiscent of an old Keystone Cops movie or a scene out of a Charlie Chaplain comedy. The fact is, though, Ms Mack's story is all too real, all too revealing.

It documents on a day-by-day basis how the slow response of the government nearly caused Ms Mack's death, as well as killing many others who weren't as lucky.

Before hearing Ms Mack's testimony, let's hear from Wendy Owens, a social worker in the Tennessee County of Greene, where Ms Mack is now residing. It is worth mentioning, Ms Mack is residing against her will without adequate FEMA assistance.

Regarding the government's late response, leaving Ms Mack stranded for 10 days, Owens said:

"The only answer I have is that the government delayed things on purpose. First, it was a disgrace and outrage that it took our military and government so long to get into New Orleans, leaving many people like Ms. Mack to die.

"If our military can get to Baghdad in one day, why did it take them so long to help people in a major American city? Why? Maybe the delay was orchestrated."

It is also well-documented the Bush administration and military brass provided lame and inadequate excuses for their late arrival in New Orleans, as America's response in the past to disasters on foreign soil were orchestrated in a much more efficient manner.

And Ms Mack 10 day life or death ordeal demonstrates the inexcusable rescue effort mounted by the mightiest military and government in the world, quick to the trigger in Iraq and Afghanistan but slow to mount a serious rescue when it comes to its own citizens.

It should also be noted that a failure to act in a manner so grossly negligent as displayed the Hurricane Katrina response is another clear indication that the slow response was orchestrated to again benefit the culprits whose mission was to maximize damage and wipe-out the poorer neighborhoods in New Orleans in order to pave the way for profit and capital gain.

Although Ms Mack is only alive today by the grace of God, her 10 day ordeal illustrates the unnecessary suffering caused on one individual, which of course can be multiplied by thousands more who have not been able or allowed to tell their stories.

"I broke a window to get some air when the water was still very high for the first couple of days," said Ms. Mack in an extended telephone conversation from her room in a living facility in Greene County, Tenn. about 500 miles from New Orleans. "I didn't have anything to eat up in the attic or any water. After calling 911 until my cell phone gave out and nobody coming to rescue me, I never thought I was going to make it. I made peace with everyone and everything, really thinking I was going to die up there in the attic.

"But by the grace of God I made it through those first couple of days and then the water started going down. I kept calling for my cats but they didn't come as they didn't make it up to the attic. I haven't seen them for three months and really don't see how they could have survived. They were really the only family I had left and I miss them more and more each passing day."

FEMA's lack of assistance may cost Ms Mack her house. The living facility where she is staying is about to attach a lien on her property since FEMA has not picked up the tab. This is nothing less than disgraceful!

Since Ms Mack was rescued, her follow-up story is even more agonizing than her 10 days fighting for her life in her attic. After surviving against incredible odds, she now claims FEMA has been more of a thorn in her side than anything else, refusing to honor her wishes of returning home and even refusing to provide her with needed medication.

Ms. Mack has repeatedly asked to be returned home, asking for a small FEMA travel trailer to live in beside her house while she tends to needed repairs. But instead of moving her quickly out of Tennessee, FEMA and other agencies have not given her a trailer and, in fact, have encouraged her to remain in an expensive living facility called Morning Pointe located in Greene County.

Instead of giving her a travel trailer or letting her stay in a free Red Cross Skills Shelter, something never even mentioned as an option, Ms Mack has been literally forced into an expensive living facility that is now seeking payment.

And to add inexcusable insult to injury to this sad state of affairs, Ms Mack never wanted to stay there in her first place, always being under the impression FEMA was picking up the tab on Morning Point.

But according to Wendy Owens, who is assisting the elderly Ms Mack, this may not be the case.

"One thing which has concerned some of us trying to help Ms. Mack is, since Sept. 29 she has been living at Morning Pointe which is an assisted living facility," said Owens in an extended conversation from Tennessee. "Red Cross stated FEMA would pay for this while FEMA says the Red Cross will pay. So far no one has paid. Ms. Mack does not know this. Another evacuee couple who owned a home was sent to Durham Hensley Nursing Home while all the evacuees who rented or lived with some else were sent to the Days Inn on the 30 day Red Cross voucher.

"Call us distrustful, but we fear the government may let these facilities attach Ms. Mack's and the other couple's homes for payment. If you talk again with the Mayor, would you please get a clarification on this issue so it is matter of record?"

Owens reference is to Mayor Roger Jones of Greene County, Tennessee, who in the past has promised to help Ms Mack with getting her FEMA trailer and, in fact, promised to have her home by Christmas, as Ms Mack requested.

Besides Mayor Jones, Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-La) has been notified about assisting Ms Mack, but to date has not been able to free up a FEMA trailer so she can return home.

Although both politicians have promised to help, Mayor Jones has repeatedly not returned phone calls from the media and Owens, phone calls trying to clarify the trailer issue and also the issue regarding the lien being attached on Ms Mack's house.

A sad state of affairs. But hopefully a happy ending if Ms Mack keeps her house and finally gets home for Christmas.

It is easy to see the sad story going full circle here if somebody doesn't come to Ms Mack's immediate assistance, ending in her never returning to Orleans Parrish and eventually losing her house once Mount Pointe attaches a lien on her property in the absence of FEMA's payment.

And it all started with the levies most likely being sabotaged, causing Ms Mack to spend 10 days up to her neck with water. At this point, Ms Mack's statements help to back up the solid evidence previously mentioned that the flooding was manipulated by a controlled underwater detonation.

Further, Ms Mack's 10 ordeal demonstrates how the government for its own benefit and the benefit of its financial partners maximized the property damage, as well as increasing the number of those killed and those forced to evacuate.

Next, Ms Mack's statements illustrate how FEMA has manipulated and encouraged evacuees to remain outside of New Orleans, again increasing the possibility they will never return home and increasing the risk of losing their property.

Finally, the refusal of FEMA to pay Ms Mack's living facility bill could bring this sad full circle, causing Ms Mack to be nearly killed, evacuated and kept out of New Orleans against her will and finally left facing the fact she may lose her home on top of everything else.

Although the outcome is unthinkable and criminal, it isn't the first time and it won't be the last time the present Bush administration, with its many tentacles of evil, have destroyed the lives of good American people.

Hopefully, Ms Mack won't be the next one.

Editor's Note:

As of today, Ms Mack is becoming more depressed and despondent over the fact she is not going home. FEMA and every other agency of assistance have dropped the ball, leaving Ms Mack without any viable recourse but to remain trapped in Tennessee, amassing huge bills without any government assistance or payment thus far.

Ms Mack's wish is to get home by Christmas. To date her only chance is a Motor Home being offered by the Arctic Beacon. However, since the Beacon's funds are limited in comparison to the New York Times and other corporate news services, we are in need of gas money from Idaho to New Orleans as well as a driver who can transport the Motor Home to New Orleans.

If you can help or know someone who can make Ms Mack's wish come true in any other viable way, please contact us at arcticbeacon@earthlink.net.

Attendance 'Dismal' as 9/11 Truth Conference Goes to Miami

After 600 attended the opening night of philanthropist Jimmy Walter's 9/11 truth-out, the numbers have sharply dropped for the following two nights, indicating the movement is still taking one step forward and two steps back.

10 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

After 600 attended opening night in Tampa for Jimmy Walter's 9/11 truth conference, the crowds Thursday and Friday dwindled to only about 100 to 200 each night, showing the 9/11 movement after four years continues to take one step forward and two steps back.

"The crowd is dismal tonight," said 9/11 activist Phil Jayhan who traveled from Chicago to be in Miami Friday night for the last night of the three-day speaking event that opened at the Tampa Theatre for the first two nights.

Several others in attendance blamed the low turn out in theatre venues that seat well over a 1,000 squarely on a lack of an effective publicity campaign, a media black-out on anything related to 9/11 truth activities and a general apathy among the American people.

"It's time for the people to take action and realize they must do something since the evidence is right out in the open that the government was involved in bringing about 9/11," said Eric Hufschmid one of the events main speaker's while being interviewed on the Republic Broadcasting Network prior to opening night in Tampa.

Walter, a truth-seeking philanthropist who has spent millions on trying to wake-up America about the U.S. government's involvement in 9/11, organized the event that ends Sunday in St. Pete Beach on Sunday with a video presentation.

Earlier in the week Walter said he received a "last minute notice" from the Asolo Theatre in Sarasota, canceling a pre-arranged Sunday video presentation like the one in St. Pete, saying it appeared to be an act of censorship since "no good reason" was given why management called off the event.

Besides censorship by private parties, Walter and others in the 9/11 truth movement have also had to deal with major news outlets, a majority ignoring their message despite hard evidence dispelling the official 9/11 government story.

For example, Walter appeared on one major radio show in Tampa, his five-day event has literally been ignored by major Florida newspapers and television outlets. Even though thousands across the country have been calling for a more balanced coverage of the 9/11 story, it appears ignoring Walter's event is another clear sign that the clamp-down on a free press is still alive and well in America.

Although the numbers were low the last two days of the conference, it is well-known among activists that movements like 9/11 are slow in catching on, especially when Americans have been lulled into believing the government's illusion of 9/11 simply by being bombarded with disinformation.

Critics contend a corrupt media can be fingered for instilling false impressions and wrong perceptions of 9/11 by playing the same video clips and sound bites over and over again, showing airplanes and fireballs bringing down the twin towers and blaming the event repeatedly on 19 Arab terrorists when solid evidence exists to the contrary.

Many critics of the official story have fingered the media and government for covering-up and blatantly lying about what really happened on 9/11, but remain miffed why a majority of Americans haven't yet taken to streets, demanding accountability.

Although no clear answers have been given, a new car bumper sticker recently being distributed may have tapped the hidden answer by saying "Americans also have the right to be uninformed."

And what this means is that in the long run the 9/11 movement will live or die as each person in America decides for himself whether he wants to learn about the facts and the evidence existing about 9/11 or whether he chooses to remain uninformed, opting instead to believe superficial sound bites and misleading headlines.

"It's a game of numbers," said one political observer who wanted to keep his name out of the public eye. "The powers that be know that most of the people will follow and believe what they see on television. And they also know that they have to silence the opposition movements before they grow to that 5 percent critical mass number since that's all it takes to get the other 95 percent of the people to follow right along, explaining why the covert operatives are coming down hard on activists trying to spread the truth."

Although the attendance at Walter's event was disappointing after opening night, organizers said they are still looking at other cities to continue trying to spread the word.

The three-day 9/11 truth-out, called "The New Pearl Harbor – Confronting the Evidence" featured a number of experts, including Morgan Reynolds, William Rodriguez, David von Kleist, Joyce Riley and Hufschmid.

'Spooks' Out In Force This Holiday Season; Even Caught Harassing People At 'Friendly Confines' of Wrigley Field

Former federal Border Patrol Agent, Frank Tremmel, says his life is in danger over spreading the truth about 9/11 and the downing of Syrian Migs by Israel three days after the WTC tragedy

9 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The 'spooks' are out in force this holiday season and getting downright nasty with average Americans, getting 'down and dirty' with the common-folk working 9-to-5, paying their fair share and wanting nothing more than to express their views whenever they choose.

But, like 'Scrooge' at a holiday party, the list of those being silenced under the neo-con takeover is as long as Kareem Abdul-Jabbar's arm.

In fact, one of the first to report ill-will during this season of joy was Dan Nelson, a small town Montana carpenter like Joseph, the father of Jesus, who recently reported being run-off the road and being attacked by microwave weaponry for simply trying to get at the truth behind 9/11.

And now comes Frank Tremmel of Chicago, a former badge and gun-carrying federal border patrol agent, who reports being 'tailed and harassed' by federal agents at a Chicago Cubs baseball game, a place made for hot dogs, beer and family fun, not CIA spying and undercover work.

But that's exactly what happened to Tremmel, 35, who claims his advocacy and penchant for getting at the truth behind 9/11, as well as his harsh criticism of Israel, has led to "getting followed, photographed and harassed" even at the friendly confines of Wrigley Field.

How could an 'average Joe' like Tremmel, who now drives a truck, be the target of sophisticated government harassment when obviously the first thought is 'there must be bigger fish to fry'?

"I asked that myself," said Tremmel in an extended telephone conversation this week from his Chicago home, adding the orchestrated attempt at silencing his first amendment rights goes much deeper than a bad experience at a Cubs game.

Although Tremmel had difficulty answering the question 'why me,' he said it relates to three different avenues of communication, including numerous 9/11 truth postings made on the highly popular Craig's List web site, postings about 9/11 and Israeli connections on a Border Patrol (union) federal web site and an April 2005 letter sent to Sen. Barack Obama (D-III), giving him a July 2005 deadline to re-open the 9/11 investigation.

"My harassment really started when I heard a radio report that Israel shot down a Syrian Mig on Sept 14, 2004. I checked out the Drudge Report and he had it in the old headline sections. There was a correction, though, it stated the date the planes were shot down was actually three days after 9/11,” said Tremmel.

“I posted this link and I wrote an editorial that Israel did this to try to get the U.S. to invade Syria first. I think Israel really want to go into Syria. And it is this story that made massive waves, but you won’t find it anywhere now.”

Although the story was difficult to find and not credited to AP, an article was found about Israel downing two Syrian Migs on World Tribune.com dated February 2005, the opening two paragraphs stating:

“Diplomatic sources said Israel Air Force F-16 multi-role fighters intercepted and downed two Syrian MiG-29 fighter-jets in 2001. The sources said the dogfight took place in September 2001 over the eastern Mediterranean Sea.

“This was the first engagement between Israeli and Syrian fighter-jets since the 1980s. The sources said the air battle took place when Israel Air Force fighter-jets buzzed the Syrian city of Latakia, a port used by Iran for the shipment of weapons to Hizbullah.”

Besides checking the Syrian Mig story, a check of Tremmel, showed him posting on the internet blog ratdog.org on May 11, 2005, the following message, indicating he felt he was the target of government harassment:

“My 9/11 posts are the cold hard facts. I am being followed and my life is on the line. My name is Frank Tremmel. I live in Chicago and I am a former U.S. Border Patrol agent and if I am found dead, I did not commit suicide. I was murdered.”

In fact, Tremmel said harassment for his internet activity on the border patrol web site and other places led a death threat during a mysterious late-night phone call, as well as low-level helicopter and vehicle surveillance at his home and work.

“I was sleeping and I got a late-night call, saying that I wouldn’t make it alive to work the next morning,” recalled Tremmel. “That shook me up and when I left the house, I was constantly looking over my shoulder.

“And they have done a lot of other things besides that call. Just as recently as a few weeks ago, I was working in Gurnee and a helicopter flew at me at a very low level. It came down to about 100 feet off the ground in an open area in a residential neighborhood, hovering near my truck and facing me directly..

“Then there has been the constant tracking of my activities, like at the Cubs game and the trucks outside my house, checking my every move. It is ongoing as we speak, but they are not going to keep me quiet. We are losing our freedoms but what’s the sense of living if we can’t express ourselves or get at the truth about the corruption in our government?”

Besides his passionate internet activities on the federal web site calling attention to many government wrongs, Tremmel now feels the letter to Sen. Obama may have also triggered the spooky surveillance invading his privacy.

“I sent him the Pentagon strike flash video,” said Tremmel. “I also noticed part of the email I saved is missing. There is a portion missing where Obama stated that he looked at the video, closely and that he still believed the official 9/11 Commission. Somehow that is now missing from the email, which has sat in my inbox for months now.

“I thought Obama may be able to help since he was new to the Senate and decided to see, giving him a deadline of July 4, 2005 to reopen the investigation. The date passed but nothing happened but me being tailed all July 4th weekend.

“We are all very right about 9/11 being pre-planned. We have their backs against the wall and I have used craigslist to get the word out, as one method of helping spread the word.”

And a check with one of Obama's office staff said they would research and verify Tremmel's letter, but in the interim, Tremmel forwarded a copy of Obama's response, saying:

"Thank you for contacting me regarding your concerns that all available footage of the 9/11 attack on the Pentagon may not have been released.

"I agree that the government should be as transparent as possible in releasing information about events that affect our country, but I recognize that in some instances the need for transparency is trumped by national security interests. I am sure you are familiar with the report issued by the 9/11 Commission. It provides the public with a strong compendium of information about the tragic events of 9/11.

"Again, Frank, thank you for writing. Please feel free to contact me in the future with issues of concern."

Even though Tremmel said the harassment is ongoing, he plans to continue trying to influence people to open up their eyes about the truth behind 9/11, emphasizing:

"I am not afraid of these guys, not afraid of them one bit. But if something happens to me, you know why! It won't be a suicide. It will be murder!"

9/11 Truth Conference Opens in Tampa to Crowd of 600; Mainstream Media Again Ignores Event as Censorship Spreads Across Land Like Existed In Nazi Germany

The Asolo Theatre in Sarasoto 'at the last minute' backed out of its deal with 9/11 truth organizers to rent out theatre for Sunday night's scheduled performance. Organizer Jimmy Walter said it looks like an act of outright censorship.

8 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Jimmy Walter, the millionaire philanthropist pushing the 9/11 truth movement to the streets, said Wednesday the Asolo Theatre in Sarasota, Florida, at “the last minute” backed out of its pre-arranged deal to host a video presentation set for Sunday, the last day of a five-day 9/11 truth conference starting in Tampa.

“They told us today they couldn’t host our event, pulling out at the last minute saying there existed technical difficulties,” said Walter in a phone conversation from his Tampa hotel, where he is kicking-off the first night of his 9/11 truth conference called “The New Pearl Harbor – Confronting the Evidence” at the downtown Tampa Theatre.

“I found out another group is staging a play on the same day so it looks to me like it’s another case of outright censorship. We are going to look into the matter thoroughly to find out what really happened, but still will holding our Sunday video presentation at the Beach Theatre in St. Pete Beach.”

Walter, known for spending millions on trying to get out the “true 9/11 story” appeared on Greg Szymanski’s radio show, “The Investigative Journal” Wednesday, just hours prior to the opening night of his truth conference, saying he was “shocked and appalled” by the last minute cancellation of the Sunday night portion of his five-day truth tour.

“I decided on Tampa because it is my hometown and it’s harder for the media and others to ignore me here,” said Walter. “It’s is also where Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf lives, a person who I have openly called a traitor for his statements about Iraq. I have openly challenged him to a face to face meeting, but I know he never will do that.”

Walter’s truth conference, presenting compelling evidence 9/11 was an inside government job, opened to a crowd of more than 500 to 600 Wednesday night in a theatre that seats 1,400, a good turn-out considering the mainstream media blackout across the country and the disinformation campaign spread by the Bush administration, essentially keeping the American people in the dark about the real 9/11 facts.

And the media was again strangely absent from the opening night 9/11 event, as several in attendance reported no major newspapers or television stations covered the event.

One of the Wednesday night speaker's, Eric Hufschmid, known for his book "Painful Questions" an Analysis of the September 11th Attack, said prior to the conference he was hoping events like the one being staged at the Tampa Theatre would "finally wake up a sleeping public."

"I think it's time for everyone to do their part and at least listen and confront the evidence," said Hufschmid, who was one of the first to call the American public's attention to the technical impossibility of the WTC collapsing from only solely jet fuel as the government contends.

"There is just so much disinformation out there, spread by the media and those actually trying to disrupt the 9/11 truth movement. It's time for everyone to unite and look at the real evidence and hold those involved in the 9/11 conspiracy accountable."

Besides Hufschmid, Walter assembled a group of speakers who at times held the audience spellbound, leading some to tears, especially when WTC janitor and national hero, William Rodriguez, spoke about how he heard explosions in the North Tower basement prior to the airplane strike.

Rodriguez, who saved at least 15 lives before being the last man out of the North Tower, reminded the audience how his statements about WTC basement explosions "have been censored by the mainstream media" as well as being completely omitted in the 9/11 Commission's final report.

The silencing of Rodriguez's testimony, as well as the testimony of at least 20 other people who heard the same North Tower explosions, is just another clear-cut example of how massive the 9/11 cover-up has spread, leaving America essentially to hear only a bogus government story lacking any semblance of credibility when, as Walter says, "confronted with the real 9/11 evidence."

Also speaking at the five-day Florida event is Morgan Reynolds, the former chief economist in the Bush I administration, who has publicly called for a new 9/11 investigation, adding the evidence points to a controlled demolition of the WTC.

Reynolds is the author of numerous books, primarily in economics, taxes and labor issues, but last year shocked America, as being the first high-level Bush official to publicly claim 9/11 appeared to be tied to elements within the U.S. government.

Besides Reynolds, popular radio hosts Dave von Kleist and Joyce Riley, rounded out the speaking panel, von Kleist known for his video "In Plane Site," which proved that the damage incurred at the Pentagon could not have been caused by a 757.

Riley, on the other hand, has focused her research attention on the illegal use of depleted uranium, producing a recent video called "Beyond Treason," the story behind the cover-up and illegal weaponry being used in the Iraq War.

Heather LaMela, a Tampa resident in the audience, said she always had her doubts about the 9/11 government story from the beginning, but had been kept in the dark by the one-sided media coverage.

"After listening to the speakers, this confirmed my belief that there must have been some government knowledge and involvement," said LaMela. "I just wished I would have hears all this a lot sooner. I guess you can thank the media for that."

And regarding the purpose of the five-day 9/11 truth-out, Walter, the event's organizer said:

"When Vice President Dick Cheney and twenty four Bush officials and friends signed a call in 2000 for a "New Pearl Harbor," as an excuse to invade Iraq; they said it would take "some catastrophic and catalyzing event, like a new Pearl Harbor, to convince the American People that we must invade Iraq to project American military power. Time Magazine called for "a unified Pearl Harbor, sort of purple American fury."

He added that he intends to use Tampa as a first-stop in his 9/11 truth tour, planning in the future to organize other similar events in cities across the country, emphasizing the following points:

1. Why the Bush administration ignored warning signs about terrorist attacks.
2. Why they leaked classified information to the media.
3. Why members of the administration lied under oath and obstructed justice in an investigation about national security violations.
4. Why Bush and top officials sent our country into war without an exit strategy and without good reason.
5. Why the Republican administration has created massive deficits, while cutting spending on social programs and veteran benefits, and giving tax cuts to the richest Americans.
6. Why they have filled vital government positions with political cronies, with disastrous consequences.

Commercial Pilot and Aeronautical Engineer Explains Why Official 9/11 Story About Pentagon Is Bogus

Nila Sagadevan sets the record straight about Pentagon crash while 9/11 fringe movement meets Dec. 7 in Tampa for beginning of five-day rally.

6 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

It's impossible to fit a square peg in a round hole. It's equally as impossible to fit a large 757 airliner through a small hole like left in the Pentagon wall after 9/11.

And this is just one of the many examples that the official 9/11 story makes no sense. In fact, it makes about as much sense as trying to keep jamming that square peg into that proverbial round hole.

However, while the feds fiddle with pegs that don't fit, the 9/11 debate rages on across the country, mainly among the fringe truth movement groups whose numbers are small.

And this is precisely where politicians want the debate to remain, away from the public's ear, since so far they have been dealt a winning 9/11 hand, knowing any serious measure to bring justice has been effectively cut-off.

So this week the fringe 9/11 movement takes its "forces and soldiers of truth" to Tampa and Miami, Florida, staging a five day assembly starting Dec 7 with the intent to spark a larger public debate and bring the "enemy within" to justice.

Millionaire Jimmy Walter is footing the bill and hosting the event with speakers to include Dave von Kleist, Joyce Riley, Morgan Reynolds, Eric Hufschmid, William Rodriguez and others. There is an $11 entry fee and it will be interesting to see the turn-out, including the media coverage which in the past has been sporadic at best for 9/11 truth events.

Although the speakers bring to the table interesting facts discounting the official story, Rodriguez will be the most compelling, telling his tale of hearing explosions in the basement prior to the airplane hitting the North Tower.

But one person in attendance not on the speaker's list is commercial pilot and aeronautical engineer, Nila Sagedevan. And the reason he should be speaking, at least about the Pentagon crash, is because once he gives his technical rendition of why the government story is bogus, it's like someone finally held up, for the whole world to see, the round peg fitting perfectly into the round hole.

In the past, many pilots and other experts have tried to communicate the impossibility of the flight pattern taken by an inexperienced Arab terrorist in the cockpit, but none have done a better job than Sagedevan, telling the story from an expert's pint of view but communicating so the layman has no trouble understanding.

Recently, Sagadevan spent two hours on Greg Szymanski's radio show, The Investigative Journal, on the Republic Broadcast Network at www.rbnlive.com, leaving the audience nodding their heads in agreement that the Pentagon crash couldn't have happened the way the government contends.

"Let's look at it plain and simple," said Sagadevan in an extended telephone conference this week from his home near San Diego. "The government wants us to believe that a person who couldn't even solo a small Cessna took over the controls of a Boeing 757 jetliner and performed complicated maneuvers even myself or other experienced pilots could have never performed.

"It's just not going to happen and, from my point of view, is impossible. If this was fabricated by the government so was the rest of the 9/11 story."

But staying on point, Sagadevan wanted to further illustrate the absurdity of a small, inexperienced 5'8" Arab terrorist, taking over the controls of the jetliner from a burly, well-trained former military pilot.

"You mean to tell me, the supposed terrorist overpowered the pilot, who weighed more than 185 lbs and trained in the military. And then after that overpowered the co-pilot in the same manner, a person who also weighed upwards of 185 lbs," said Sagadevan, emphasizing experts aren't needed to explain the absurdity of this portion of the government story.

"I am not sure if anyone has been in the cockpit of one of these big jets, but I will tell you there isn't much space. How in the world would one man pull out two big pilots in cramped quarters while, at the same time, maintaining control of the airliner. Again, it's just not going to happen.

"In the beginning right after 9/11, like most people, I believed most of what I heard about 9/11, not really giving much thought to a government conspiracy. However, about a year ago when I began gathering information related to my expertise as an aeronautical engineer and pilot, I began to see clearly how the government story regarding the four flights, their paths and their pilots didn't make sense.

"Now I am firmly convinced after looking at an enormous amount of evidence, as well as using well-establishing aviation principles, that something else crashed into the Pentagon since it couldn't have been a commercial jetliner."

Besides calling attention to the impossibility of a untrained pilot performing complex flight maneuvers and navigation, Sagadevan said the flight path taken near the Pentagon was also impossible for a large jetliner to perform without crashing before reaching the Pentagon.

"First of all, the supposed pilot would have been overwhelmed just looking at the complexity of the cockpit controls," said Sagadevan. "He would have had no idea what to do, but we are led to believe that he was able to turn the jet around, head back to Washington D.C. and then bank at high speeds and at a low altitude, hitting a target which would have looked as small as thimble from the air. Again, it's impossible and you don't really need an expert to make this final determination."

Sagadevan was quick to point out one of the main problems with the government story is the low trajectory of the airplane, flying at high speeds and roughly only 20 feet off the ground for a long distance, another impossibility defying the standard principles of aviation.

"The evidence indicates that the airplane was flying low before it reached the Pentagon lawn since several light poles were sheared off several hundred yards away from the building," explained Sagadevan. "With that in mind, the plane was traveling at about 400 knots at about 20 feet off the ground for a long distance prior to hitting the Pentagon.

"This in itself is an impossibility since the airplane would have been kept from hitting the ground by a cushion of air termed 'ground effect.' No pilot in the world would have been able to control the plane while maintained that air speed at 20 feet off the ground for that long a distance. Again, it's just impossible but here I will admit that an expert is needed in order to explain the standards of lift and drag associated with flying a large airliner.

From the beginning of the supposed hijacking of Flight 77 and to its eventual crash into the Pentagon wall, Sagadevan presents a compelling case, essentially crushing the official story. He also mentioned the what's also overlooked is the 'jet wash' from the airplane would have caused tremendous ground damage on the approach, something not evident in the aftermath of the Pentagon crash.

Sagadevan is referring to the tiny circumference of the hole left in the Pentagon wall, illustrated on pictures taken right after the crash scene, but immediately taken out of circulation and never widely distributed by the news media to the American people.

“I think if someone just looks at the hole left and then looks at the size of 757, experts aren’t needed to determine it was an impossibility that a big jet hit the Pentagon wall, especially when there was very little wreckage visible after the crash,” added Sagadevan.

Regarding the Pentagon crash, as Sagadevan aptly points out, there are “so many holes in the story” that it becomes, as the English say, rather a laughing matter, making one believe even the bungling Inspector Clouseau, made famous by Peter Sellers, could crack the case wide open if given half a chance.

But the problem is Inspector Clouseau, Sagadevan and every other independent investigator haven’t been given the chance, leaving the case to be investigated and tried in the court of public opinion, a place where politicians like it and know they are safe from prosecution.

Oklahoma City Bombing Remembered Through the Eyes of a Survivor
Calvin Moser was working on the 8th floor and several feet away from dying that morning back in 1995. Admitting the full truth has not been told about what really happened, he says the emotional scars may never heal.

5 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The Oklahoma City bombing seems like light years away, especially after 9/11 has cast its ugly shadow over the American landscape.

But for survivor, Calvin Moser, it seems like only yesterday.

A long time HUD employee working on the 8th floor of the federal building, he was one of the lucky ones who walked away from the 1995 bombing, killing 168.

He somehow miraculously walked away, walking away bruised and battered after being precisely in the right place at the right time when the bombs exploded all around his office at 9:02am.

It was an explosion heard around the world, but Moser knows that all too well. He knows that first hand because when the bombs went off, it seemed like the walls of hell were caving in, feeling as if he was smack dab in the middle of the "end of the world."

Why some people live and some die in tragedies like 9/11 and Oklahoma City is a question for a higher power. But in Moser's case, like a short movie clip playing over and over in his head, he knows exactly why he is here today to tell his story.

"It was a matter of seconds, a matter of literally feet and I wouldn't be here talking today," said Moser in an extended telephone conversation this week from his five acre home on the outskirts of Oklahoma City. "I was sitting at my desk when all of a sudden, without thinking, I slid my chair across the room to get to the computer right by the window. I was only about eight inches from the when it happened.

"All of a sudden I felt a tremendous explosion all around me, ringing from below and up above. The windows blew in and threw me across the room, but since I was so close to them, they didn't hit me with any kind of deadly force, which I believe they would have if I was still sitting at my desk. That one quick move over to the windows probably saved my life and, like a movie, every time I think about it, I can see myself sliding across the room on my chair."

Although 10 years have gone by since that awful morning, it is evident in Moser's voice he still recalls the life changing event like it was yesterday since once someone comes so close to death, life is never the same after.

"I remember looking over the ledge at the devastation. The windows were blown out, nothing was there and I remember people screaming,” recalls the 36 year veteran at HUD, adding his first thought after the explosion wasn’t of himself but for many of his co-workers and friends who weren’t so lucky.

“After something like this happens, for the first couple of hours you are running on pure adrenalin and emotions are very high. I knew some of the people that I had just talked to at my coffee break moments before the bombing didn’t make it because everything in the middle of the office was gutted out. I was on the north side of the building and there was no way to even go in the other parts of my office as it was completely devastated. After the explosion, I was basically looking out over a ledge wondering how I survived.

“My first real thoughts were of my best friend, Dave Walker. We were friends from college and worked together. In fact, we had just had coffee together that morning in the office before the explosion. I looked over in his direction and I knew there was trouble as the whole building had dropped, making it impossible to even go over and try to help him.

“I later found out he didn’t make it like some of the others I just said hello to on the way back to my desk. The pain of losing Dave and the others is something that never went away and probably never will. I experienced some pretty close calls in Korea when I was in the military, but nothing like what happened on that bright and sunny morning in Oklahoma City.

And after a tragedy of this magnitude, it’s easy to forget about people like Moser, easy to forget about the human side of the story.

All too often as the years pass, recollections of tragedies like OC and 9/11 become devoid of human emotion, the events becoming like a video on a Hollywood movie screen.

But stories like Moser’s bring us all back to reality, bringing us back to the painful reality that the importance of finding the truth about what really happened on 9/11 and at OC should be done purely for the honor and memory of those who paid the ultimate price, nothing else.

But, in reality, what happens is just the opposite. What happens is egos take over, special interests take charge and the truth becomes hidden from the victim’s families, slapping them in the face with lies after they already have been knocked to the canvass with tragedy.

“I was really not happy with the government trial and I don’t think the full truth is known about really happened at Oklahoma City,” said Moser, adding his involvement with a nationwide victim’s outreach group, including 9/11 survivors and family members, has given him a unique prospective into how people react to tragedies of the magnitude of 9/11 and OC.

“One thing, as a group, we do not accept easy explanations and are very aware who may or may not be telling truth. I think when the bombing first occurred, I was naïve, thinking the government would conduct a fair and honest investigation, but over the years I’ve learned this was not the case.

“This year when I traveled to New York to be with the 9/11 families on the fourth anniversary of that tragic event, I found many survivors and family members felt like they were not getting the truth or a proper investigation by the government into why and how their loved one’s were killed.

“Besides the emotional scars that will never heal, we as a group are less tolerant of being lied to and even what are considered little white lies are very upsetting. If you lost your loved one or in my case my best friend and many colleagues, it is important to expect the truth and nothing but the truth.

“There are always going to be questions about what took place at 9/11 and in Oklahoma City, but I know in our case, I don’t have all the facts that lead to a conspiracy, but I do know there were at least six or seven people involved, people the government investigation is covering up for some reason. Where that will lead, who knows? But after thinking about it, I really don’t think our judicial system looks at getting at the truth and I don’t think someone can fully understand that until you go through something like I did.”

Asked about how the bombing changed his life, Moser added:

"I guess the biggest change is that I no longer have a fear of dying. If I died this minute, I wouldn't be afraid.

Strange Suicide of a Flight 11 Passenger's Wife Raises More Doubt as to What Really Happened on the Four 9/11 Flights

Prasanna Kalahasthi, 25, a USC dental student and married to Pendyala Vamsikrishna, a Flight 11 passenger, killed herself five weeks after 9/11 in her Los Angeles apartment even though friends say she was 'in good spirits and determined to finish dental school.'

3 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A friend of an alleged Flight 11 passenger said he was "shocked and amazed" after learning five weeks after 9/11 his friend's wife committed suicide in her Los Angeles apartment in an apparent act of despair.

But others were quick to point out that foul play has never been ruled out, according to several sources close to the suicide investigation.

Not only was this 9/11 suicide shocking and difficult to understand, but the alleged victim's husband, Pendyala Vamsikrishna of India, was never even listed on the original Flight 11 manifest, only appearing later as a passenger on a couple of conflicting unofficial lists.

Due to the numerous inconsistencies and irregularities on all four 9/11 flight manifests, critics of the official government story contend many of the passengers probably never existed at all or were concocted as the result of carefully constructed aliases, essentially faking their deaths.

Further, critics contend if the passenger lists were suspect then so were the planes, calling the 9/11 jetliners 'phantom flights,' paving the way for military drones to be used to attack the WTC and Pentagon.

Others who disagree with the official story for the most part buy into the drone theory, but theorize the unlucky passengers actually were killed by being transferred onto a single airliner and then either dumped into the Atlantic or taken to one of the many hidden underground government bases.

Of course, both theories have their skeptics, but the irregularity of the passenger lists, the evidence refuting the existence of the flights, eye-witness accounts of seeing a cargo plane without windows slam into the towers and the strange silence among the airline family members makes it imperative to pursue a full scale investigation into the whereabouts and real identities of each and every passenger listed by the government as dead.

And the case of Vamsikrishna, a 30 year old engineer from India, and his wife who committed suicide, called unlikely or very strange by those in the Hindu community, is just another example of the many mysteries surrounding the 9/11 passengers and their families.

Going back to a month after 9/11, Prasanna Kalahasthi, 25, a USC dental student from India and Vamsikrishna's wife, was found dead in her Catalina St. apartment in Los Angeles on Oct. 19, 2001.

Investigators noted there was no suicide note and the only thing found next to her body was a letter from then New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani inviting her to an upcoming memorial service at Ground Zero to mourn 9/11 victims.

After the apparent suicide, several school friends and even family members said Kalashasthi was, of course, devastated by her loss, being married for only a short time, but was determined to move forward and complete her dental studies.

Further, friends pointed out she was devout Hindu who believed in reincarnation, making suicide an even more unlikely choice since a return to earth is inevitable according to Kalashasthi's Hindu beliefs.

"I knew Vamsi, that's what we called him at school in India, and I was shocked when he died on 9/11," said school friend Anupendra Sharma in a telephone conversation this week from his home on the east coast. "What was very strange, though, was his wife's suicide. They were only married for a year and she had recently just come to America to go to USC.

"Vamsi's parents also are back in India and came to the United States for the funerals. I know Vamsi's wife was very upset and there were some accounts of her suicide in the local papers.

"Also, I should say I wasn't a personal friend of his but knew of him at the Birla Institute of Technology and Science in Pilani, India, where we both went to school in 1992. They did tell me, though, that his loved ones were notified that they found some of Vamsi's remains in the wreckage, but I am not sure of specifics."

Although it's unlikely to recover of any remains in a towering inferno like the WTC, the Arctic Beacon has uncovered a strange trail of suspicious evidence emanating from passengers at both the Pentagon and WTC, indicating the FBI may have been busy planting phony evidence at all locations on 9/11.

For example, two California ID cards of Flight 77 passenger, Susanne Calley, were miraculously uncovered in the Pentagon wreckage by a first responder, Capt. Jim Ingledue of the Virginia Beach Fire Department two days after 9/11.

Although Capt. Ingledue believes the official account of 9/11, he admitted it was "very strange and highly unusual" to find unblemished paper-thin evidence in a meltdown like the Pentagon.

And even more miraculously than Calley's ID's a year after 9/11, four unscathed credit cards were returned to the parents of Waleed Iskandar, a suspicious Flight 11 passenger also not on the original passenger list but included a year later on unofficial flight lists.

Strangely, in light of the miraculous discoveries, both Iskandar and Calley's loved one's did not question the return or authenticity of the items returned, adding they were in perfect agreement with the government's official version of 9/11.

Although Vamsikrishna's parents could not be reached in India to discuss their son's case, Sharma's recollection of his friend isn't the only one commenting about the strange nature of Kalashasthi's suicide.

Anuradha Gupta, another friend from India who attended the same technical school, wrote a tribute shortly after the suicide, saying:

"On October 20th, a friend called me, overcome with emotion and told me that Prasanna, studying to be a dental student had committed suicide the previous day. When newspaper reports came in, we all were shocked and almost defensive.

"We told people that Hindus do not believe in suicide, that they believe in reincarnation and that their journey towards learning and evolution does not end with death...except that sometimes one can't handle despair beyond a point..."

"We heard that Prasanna, a USC graduate student in the International Student Program for Foreign-Trained Dentists since April 2001 had moved to US only a year back, and was found in her Catalina Street apartment on Friday, October 19th. She was 25 years old. Near her body, they found a letter from New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani dated Oct. 12th inviting her to a memorial service scheduled for Oct. 28th to mourn the death of her husband.

"And from her friends, I learnt that though she was devastated, she was determined to move on and complete her dental course. However, a few questions haunted her..."

In the tribute, Gupta also commented that Kalashasthi refused counseling, all of friends saying she was recovering "fine" from the tragedy.

"The University Director of Student Counseling Service, Bradford King had referred her to Nadadur S. Kumar, associate director of the Office of International Services," wrote Gupta. "In their regular chats, Kumar reminded Prasanna that counselors, even Indian ones were available to help her. Bradford even offered to walk her across to the counseling center. But it was her choice to not go in for professional counseling, not because of the stigma attached but because she felt she was doing fine, as did everybody else.

"Prasanna did reassure her families that L.A. was her home and that she would move on. Her brother was moving into the apartment she and her husband had shared near the USC campus to be with her, and she also had a new, extended family that included her friends, her classmates, and people at the University."

The strange suicide and Vamsikrishna's questionable passenger status is just another example of the many oddities coming forward about the passengers on board all four 9/11 flights.

In the past, the Arctic Beacon has found most of the families of the doomed flights have remained silent or a few that have returned phone calls agree with the official 9/11 story word for word.

This, however, is in stark contrast to the families of victims at Ground Zero who readily come forward, many openly disagreeing vehemently with the official story.

Microwave Weaponry Used on Montana Carpenter and 9/11 Researcher for 'Getting Too Close to Who Knows What'

Dan Nelson says he's not sure exactly what piece 9/11 evidence he uncovered triggered the government assaults, but says once he tried to go public, 'all hell broke loose.'

1 Dec 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Dan Nelson has lost faith in his country, lost faith in most everything.

Disillusioned, he's had a bitter taste of what it's like to buck city hall, a bitter taste of getting pushed around by government thugs.

For most of his life, Nelson, 45, lived peacefully as a carpenter in Livingston, Montana, a place where the biggest excitement comes from inside the bowling alley and bingo parlor

Then six months ago, "all hell broke loose" after he stumbled across some sensitive 9/11 evidence.

And, looking back, he should have stuck to bowling or bingo because ever since taking on 9/11, his life has turned into nothing but "a living hell," including death threats as well as being zapped by high-powered microwave weaponry.

Simple Montana Carpenter Targeted by Microwave Weaponry

Although it sounds clandestine and complicated, Nelson's misadventures unraveled in a relatively straightforward manner. All he did was peruse 9/11 information from every source on the planet and then take a magnifying glass to the video tapes, a technique not used by many people but one that ingeniously turned up some rather unusual results.

Whatever Nelson uncovered, it definitely "struck a government nerve" as only hours after he tried to publicize his information on radio and television, government helicopters and agents were swarming down on Livingston, something Nelson admits never happened before in his small hometown.

In order to finally go public and protect his life, Nelson recently appeared on Greg Szymanski's radio show, The Investigative Journal, on the Republic Broadcast Network at www.rbnlive.com (see archives), telling this incredible story about the treatment he received after trying to go public about 9/11.

In his own words, he recalls what sounds like a Hollywood CIA spook movie:

"Ever since I tried to let people know about what I found out about 9/11, I have had many things happen. Within 12 hours of leaving a message on the phone of a popular radio host, I had a light green helicopter follow me where ever I went. The next day, after it first appeared, it showed up again at my friend's house and he will verify the incident. Two days after the helicopter incident, two men in a car tried very hard to run me and my daughter off the road while we were on my motorcycle.

"Then the next week another man was killed one evening on that same corner where I was driving, his body not uncovered till the next morning. What was strange that he was riding a bike the same color as mine and we have the only two like it in town. Since that first incident, three more times cars have tried to force me into wreck within miles of the same spot, one of the times again with my daughter on back of the motorcycle, forcing me to speed away at 120 miles per hour just to save our lives.

"Further, I've even had the sheriff's car try to hit me in town, and then just drove off. I also had a semi try to rear end us. My daughter was also run off the road once when she was driving my car alone and there is a police report of this one.

"And the harassment just never seemed to stop after I saw that first helicopter. For example, I had a man come up to me when I was trying to get into my house and, for no good reason, poke me in the stomach with something which made me very sick, later causing a staff infection. He ran away before I could catch him and as a result I had to take heavy duty drugs. But the most painful was when I felt my insides bubbling, and I was getting very hot as I was washing dishes. The next thing I know I can hear the fluid in my head bubbling and got a massive head ache.

"I was so disoriented I did not know how to wash dishes any more. I ran out of my home and there were two guys by a pick-up parked right next to my house. One man was holding an antenna right against my window. The other guy saw me and yelled at him. They threw the antenna in back of the truck along with some other piece of equipment and covered it up very fast and left. I tried to remember the plate number, but I am losing my memory each day that passes and my insides are still so raw I cannot work.

"My legs give out sometimes and my back is killing me. Because of what happen to me I started checking into none microwave weapons. Its amazing what they can do to people, I just didn't know they were portable but I know I would have been fried if I didn't run out of my house.

"The thing is all of us have been getting smaller doses to where you don't notice it. But it slowly causes cancer in many different parts of the body as well as memory loss and loss of bodily control. Although I am not religious I believe God's hand is around me and I have to do this for the future of all good people. Our whole American history is a lie and I now understand how they keep us in check. It's a huge realization to swallow but my own opinion is we are in very deep trouble."

This type of retaliation is usually not associated with a simple carpenter from a small Montana town, but sometimes those who dig too deeply "know not what they find." In Nelson's case, he amassed numerous videos, research documents, seismic studies and other 9/11 facts, many of which may have contained messages or information the government wants hidden away.

FOX Employee on 9/11 Says He Clearly Saw Cargo Plane With No Windows Hit the Tower. What happened to this video clip?

Although Nelson couldn't pinpoint the exact 9/11 discovery that triggered the life-threatening retaliation, he tried to make some sense out of what had happened by putting the entire ugly experience into perspective.

"About three years ago, I started spending hours upon hours dissecting the 9/11 video tapes and other information," said Nelson this week in a telephone conversation from his Montana home. "I slowed down the videos frame by frame and used a magnifying glass and what I saw was incredible. I've kept a copy of everything, but I know they have gotten into my computer after I tried to send everything to the media with my explanation."

One of the videos Nelson wanted to emphasize, which has somehow been forgotten, is the FOX News clip on the morning of 9/11, where eye-witness Marc Bernbach, a FOX employee, told reporters he was positive what hit the tower was not a commercial airliner, saying it positively looked like a military cargo plane without windows.

Also, in the background of the news clip, people are screaming and one lady repeatedly is yelling, "That's not an American Airlines plane! That's not an American Airlines plane!"
(See a copy of this video clip on the new Arctic Beacon web site coming soon.)

Further, the question remains what happened to Bernbach, what happened to his testimony, what happened to the FOX news clip and why has it been hushed up for all these years, except for a brief mention on a 9/11 truth website and now Nelson's revival of the video clip.

However, Nelson wasn't content with the on-air version, so he slowed it down frame by frame while using a magnifying glass to uncover other strange things in the background of the clip. This is what Nelson thinks he saw when he slowed things down:

"In this one frame it looks like someone with an Arab headdress. In the first couple of frames, the lady moves towards the right. There is some kind of stand to the right of her. As she starts to the left you can make out an extended arm with a pistol in it. One frame shows it well. I think the 200 zoom shows it best.

"I am sure she is shot then starts to fall. At the same time a construction worker on the left walks towards the camera. He looks like he is shot in the chest and then in the last frames he is shot in the head and blood sprays red blood sprays every where. It also seems like there are frames missing. I also don't think the audio fits what people are doing. Everybody nearby might have been shot therefore no real witnesses. Remember at least 1000 people were never found."

Another picture uncovered, which gets no coverage, is one with the tower burning and a black object flying near the right side of the tower. When Nelson blew this picture up, it clearly shows what looks like a stealth fighter plane.

"It looks like a stealth, that's for sure," said Nelson, adding he uncovered other video oddities too numerous to mention. However, regarding the video which shows a "pod" on the lower portion of one of the jetliners heading into the tower, Nelson said:

"In this one video, the plane does shoot something out from underneath just before it hits the towers and everybody sees that. What they miss, however, is the pod shoots three times before it comes in contact with the tower. You have to go frame by frame and put a magnifying glass up to the pod. You will then see two other dim flashes before the bright one which proves it is shooting missiles to open up the building. There are also things flying past the jet as if it were being shot at which the second video I will send will prove this. It is important to look at it over and over with the magnifying glass then sit back a ways

"I definitely think I have struck a nerve because they have come at me real hard. These people are going to get me someday, but hopefully I can get a lot of my work out to the public before it is too late."

BYU Brass Discredit Physics Professor for Saying WTC Brought Down by Controlled Demolition

Professor Steven E. Jones only was in the public eye for five days before BYU told him to stop giving interviews. Now the university has issued a public statement distancing itself from Jones and even discrediting his work. Critics suggest Bush administration had its dirty hand in forcing BYU to 'shut up' its professor.

29 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Brigham Young University (BYU) issued a public statement this week, discrediting and distancing itself from physics Professor Steven E. Jones for publicly claiming the WTC was brought down by explosives not jet fuel like the government contends.

Jones, a tenured BYU professor, went public two weeks ago after releasing a 19 page academic paper, essentially showing how the laws of physics do not support the WTC's freefall and, consequently, the official government story.

While expressing doubt about the government's version of 9/11, he called for an independent investigation concerning the strange collapse of the towers and Building No. 7, something the 9/11 Commission failed to do and something the Bush administration adamantly opposes.

However, Jones' notoriety turned out to be short lived as only days after giving numerous press interviews, including a six-minute spot on MSNBC, BYU officials twisted his arm and convinced him to stop appearing publicly.

Critics quickly pointed out that Jones must have been 'silenced quickly' after the Bush administration pressured BYU to end any further embarrassment while, at the same time, reminding officials about the numerous government grants swinging in the balance.

But before the situation turned ugly, Jones himself tried to immediately end the controversy, claiming all parties reached an amicable agreement without anybody strong arming anybody.

"I want to thank everyone for the attention, but it is best that I limit my appearances at this time," said Jones in a telephone conversation from his BYU office only five days after first appearing publicly about his controversial 9/11 statements. "University officials and I have come to an understanding that in the best interest for all parties involved, it is better that I limit my speaking on 9/11 to academic peer reviews."

Even tough all parties appeared to be on the same "closed mouth" page, BYU this week BYU came out with an official statement, distancing itself from its professor and even finding a way to politely criticize him for the methods he used in researching his 9/11 paper, adding his techniques may have not been up to high standards usually attached to other BYU academic work.

The paper now openly questioned by BYU officials is entitled "Why Indeed did the WTC Buildings Collapse" and has been accepted for academic publication included in the book "The Hidden History of 9-11-2001, Research in Political Economy, Volume 23."

Finding a way to discredit Jones in a subtle way, BYU issued the following public statement about Jones' controversial 9/11 views:

"Brigham Young University has a policy of academic freedom that supports the pursuit and dissemination of knowledge and ideas. Through the academic process, ideas should be advanced, challenged, and debated by peer-review in credible venues. We believe in the integrity of the academic review process and that, when it is followed properly, peer-review is valuable for evaluating the validity of ideas and conclusions.

"The university is aware that Professor Steven Jones' hypotheses and interpretations of evidence regarding the collapse of World Trade Center buildings are being questioned by a number of scholars and practitioners, including many of BYU's own faculty members. Professor Jones' department and college administrators are not convinced that his analyses and hypotheses have been submitted to relevant scientific venues that would ensure rigorous technical peer review."

Jones was unavailable for comment as he is no longer talking openly with the media, but when he did talk it created a stir which even was addressed on MSNBC by conservative talk show host, Tucker Carlson.

Jones made a brief six minute appearance, saying publicly afterwards he was unhappy by the "one-sided presentation" siding with the government as well as Carlson's failure to show the video clip of Building No. 7 freefalling to the ground as requested by Jones during the show.

"I asked three times to play the clip of Building No. 7 falling but they wouldn't do it," said Jones after the appearance with Carlson, a well-known Bush administration mouthpiece who slanted Jones' story in favor of the government, as expected.

Not only did Carlson refuse to address key visual evidence clearly showing a freefall of the WTC, he also issued a statement telling Jones and others who think the government may have been complicit in 9/11 to leave the country, an analysis completely lacking sensibility and bordering on outright insanity.

Responding to a caller about pre-positioned explosives detonated in all three buildings at Ground Zero, Carlson said:

"If you really believe the U.S. government killed 3000 of its own citizens for no reason and lied about it and invaded Afghanistan as a result of something it did, you ought to leave the country... because that's so terrible... so evil, that your tax dollars go in to support it make you complicit in it... if you really believe that, you ought to leave..."

Besides the MSNBC appearance, Jones previously granted one of his first interviews to the Arctic Beacon and American Free Press, also making one of his only radio appearances before going silent on Greg Szymanski's radio show, "The Investigative Journal," on the Republic Broadcasting Network. For a replay of the hour-long radio interview go to www.rbnlive.com (archives page) and for a feature article on Jones go to www.arcticbeacon.com.

Before ending his media appearances, Jones tried to explain why he wrote his paper:

"I wanted to limit my discussion to my expertise and that is why I talked mainly about the physics of the freefall of the towers and Building 7," said Jones, adding he did criticize the so-called "pod theory" or the theory that a "drone plane" was used to crash into the towers.

In his paper, Jones stayed away from commenting on most other aspects of 9/11 except for the freefall of the towers and the limited criticism of the "pod theory."

"I did receive emails about why I did that (criticized the pod theory) and even told Morgan Reynolds, I really felt it was important to stick with the issues of 9/11 that are the most obvious and the easiest to prove. That is why I wanted to limit my discussion, but in further papers I plan to address other 9/11 issues. Also, I feel the 9/11 community needs to work together and not be splintered by constantly arguing among ourselves over conflicting theories that may take away from the ones we can conclusively prove."

Jones literally shocked the "Red State" of Utah and the conservative world when he released his 19 page critical paper basically ripping apart the official 9/11 story, limiting his discussion to his expertise in physics and the virtual impossibility of the towers falling from merely jet fuel as the government contends.

Jones earlier said he first presented his explosive conclusions at Brigham Young University (BYU) on September 22, to 60 people from the BYU and Utah Valley State College faculties, including professors of Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Geology, Mathematics and Psychology.

After presently scientific arguments in favor of the controlled demolition theory, Jones said everyone in attendance from all backgrounds, conservative and liberal, were in total agreement further investigation was needed.

Jones added that the contingent of faculty members at the September seminar were all in agreement that the government needed to "come clean" and release more than 6,900 photographs and close to 7,000 segments of video footage, now being held from independent investigation by the FBI and other agencies.

In Jones' 9,000 word paper, his conclusions why the towers most likely were brought down by a controlled demolition can be summed up as follows.:

- o The three buildings collapsed nearly symmetrically, falling down into their footprints, a phenomenon associated with "controlled demolition" - and even then it's very difficult, he says. "Why would terrorists undertake straight-down collapses of WTC-7 and the Towers when 'toppling over' falls would require much less work and would do much more damage in downtown Manhattan?" Jones asks. "And where would they obtain the necessary skills and access to the buildings for a symmetrical implosion anyway? The 'symmetry data' emphasized here, along with other data, provide strong evidence for an 'inside' job."

- o No steel-frame building, before or after the WTC buildings, has ever collapsed due to fire. But explosives can effectively sever steel columns, he says.

- o WTC 7, which was not hit by hijacked planes, collapsed in 6.6 seconds, just .6 of a second longer than it would take an object dropped from the roof to hit the ground. "Where is the delay that must be expected due to conservation of momentum, one of the foundational laws of physics?" he asks. "That is, as upper-falling floors strike lower floors - and intact steel support columns - the fall must be significantly impeded by the impacted mass. . . . How do the upper floors fall so quickly, then, and still conserve momentum in the collapsing buildings?" The paradox, he says, "is easily resolved by the explosive demolition hypothesis, whereby explosives quickly removed lower-floor material, including steel support columns, and allow near free-fall-speed collapses." These observations were not analyzed by FEMA, NIST nor the 9/11 Commission, he says.

- o With non-explosive-caused collapse there would typically be a piling up of shattering concrete. But most of the material in the towers was converted to flour-like powder while the buildings were falling, he says. "How can we understand this strange behavior, without explosives? Remarkable, amazing - and demanding scrutiny since the U.S. government-funded reports failed to analyze this phenomenon."

- o Horizontal puffs of smoke, known as squibs, were observed proceeding up the side the building, a phenomenon common when pre-positioned explosives are used to demolish buildings, he says.

- o Steel supports were "partly evaporated," but it would require temperatures near 5,000 degrees Fahrenheit to evaporate steel - and neither office materials nor diesel fuel can generate temperatures that hot. Fires caused by jet fuel from the hijacked planes lasted at most a few minutes, and office material fires would burn out within about 20 minutes in any given location, he says.

o Molten metal found in the debris of the World Trade Center may have been the result of a high-temperature reaction of a commonly used explosive such as thermite, he says. Buildings not felled by explosives "have insufficient directed energy to result in melting of large quantities of metal," Jones says.

o Multiple loud explosions in rapid sequence were reported by numerous observers in and near the towers, and these explosions occurred far below the region where the planes struck, he says.

Vanunu Speaks Out About 'Illegal Incarceration' and Harrassment by Israeli Authorities

Two weeks after Mordechai Vanunu, the Israeli nuclear whistle blower, was jailed for 36 hours on alleged parole violations he tells why he feels 'unfairly targeted' as well as telling why his freedom of speech and association rights are being disregarded. Even though he already spent 18 years in jail, it looks like authorities are looking 'for any little thing' to put him behind bars.

28 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Two weeks after Mordechai Vanunu was jailed for 36 hours, he claims Israeli authorities are still harassing him for talking with the foreign press and wanting to leave Israel.

He claims Mossad, CIA and MI6 intelligence agents are “watching him closely” and “looking for any little thing” to put him back behind bars.

He added agents are searching with "a fine tooth comb" for parole violations, prohibiting him from talking to journalists or leaving Israel in what he calls unfair restrictions on his free speech and association rights.

Vanunu, 51, talked with the Arctic Beacon the day after his release two weeks ago from a cold and dank Israeli jail, saying the experience was a terrible reminder of his 18 year jail term, 11 years in solitary confinement, for telling the world about Israel's secret nuclear stockpile, estimated at more than 200 weapons in 1986.

This week he released a longer statement, reflecting on his situation and claiming he still feels abandoned by worldwide human right's groups, who have been pressured by Israel and the U.S. to ignore his case.

“I had served the full extent of the harsh 18 year sentence after being unfairly convicted for crimes I didn't commit,” said Vanunu in a telephone conversation from Israel, technically also violating his parole even though he has openly talked to the press repeatedly since day one of his release on charges of treason and spying.

Vanunu was released from an Israeli prison near Tel Aviv in 2004 for divulging what au information regarding Israel's nuclear weapons program and its nuclear reactor in Dimona, where he worked for nine years as a technician/scientist.

The Sunday Times of London published a full account of Vanunu's story, calling the attention to the world in 1986 that Israel has already constructed 200 nuclear atomic bombs. He verified his claim with photographs of the Dimona site, verified by experts who eventually confirmed that Israel had nuclear weapons.

Vanunu was arrested in Rome as the article was being published by a combination Mossad and CIA undercover kidnapping. Once back in Israel, Vanunu claimed he was not given a fair trial and quickly sentenced to a maximum term for treason as well as being termed a foreign spy.

Four days prior to his recent detention near a checkpoint near Jerusalem while traveling on a bus, Vanunu made a rare American radio appearance on Greg Szymanski's Investigative Journal on the Republic Broadcast Network at www.rbnlive.com where a audio clip of the one hour interview is archived.

On that show was openly critical of Israel's stringent parole requirements, adding Israel's nuclear stockpile has grown to more than 400 weapons.

"If President Bush wants to find nuclear weapons in the Middle East, all he has to do is come to Israel. I am not going to let Israel keep me from exercising my freedom of speech," said Vanunu during the radio interview. "I am waiting for my January hearing where the Israeli judge will determine if I go back to jail for talking to the foreign press.

"But I will not stop talking as what else can they do to me after spending 18 years in jail, 11 years in solitary confinement, for doing nothing wrong. All I ever wanted to do was alert the world to the terrible nuclear threat Israel presented to the whole Middle East and the world."

After Vanunu reflected on his recent trouble with authorities, he said he felt the United States and Britain were collaborating with the Israeli's to keep him "locked within Israel's borders" unable to communicate with the world. This week he made his reflections on the arrest and his future known to the Arctic Beacon in this following statement, a statement he wanted Americans to hear:

"Two weeks ago again the Israel authorities use their power to arrest me, but this time they put me back in prison for 2 days, causing me back to remember all the cruelty and hard life of 18 years in isolation.

"The reason this time was because I came very close to the checkpoint near the wall in Aram, a small Palestinian neighborhood in east Jerusalem where they have not yet decided where the apartheid wall is going to continue.

"I took a bus from the bus station in east Jerusalem and traveled to the Aram village without being checked, but when the bus returned to Jerusalem, they inspected it at the Aram check point.

"At the check point, they took my ID card and the soldiers received orders to arrest me. They confiscated my camera and my mobile, and took me to the nearest police station, where I waited for the special police unit to come from Tel Aviv and take me to there to be questioned.

"Meanwhile, the police themselves invited the Israel media TV to come and let them take as many photos as they wanted and to report my arrest in their main news, as a man who is going to the occupied territories where the "enemies," "fighting" them. They did this because they want the Israeli public to regard me as being equal to terrorist.

"I said to the media "they arrested me when I went to see the Aram check point, to see the Apartheid wall, the Palestinians ghettos."

"In Tel Aviv they questioned me about why I was "Interring" to the Palestine occupied territories. They wanted to know what I was doing there and why I was not following the general Army's orders. I said Aram is still part of Palestine east Jerusalem, I am not interested to see the occupied territories, I just want to see the apartheid wall, to see this village, and it is not yet clear where the borders of Jerusalem are. They wanted to know with whom I was traveling, their names, why I was with foreigners, and he wanted to see my camera photos.

"The police decided to arrest me because they wanted to release me under court orders. However, there is no court on the Jewish Sabbath day, so they had to wait until Saturday night. They imprisoned me in Tel Aviv, in a cell without any thing but a mattress and a blanket.

“Saturday morning my lawyer Feldman and Sfard, came to see me, to hear what happened, and to represent me in court. In the evening the police took me back to the court, and the woman judge heard my case at 20:30. Feldman did not agree to the police terms of my release. They wanted 2 of week's house arrest, and 50.000 shekels. Feldman convinced the judge and even the police that this arrest was a big mistake because I did not violate the terms of my release, since it is not yet clear where Israel wants to put its apartheid wall. But, before the judge made her decision the police capitulated and agreed for immediate release without any condition, just my signature.

“This was a small victory for Feldman in defending me, and my friend Gideon took me back to Jerusalem, St George, where we had a glass of Beer.

“But the police and the Israeli spies couldn't go without something. They demanded that I give them my Camera and my mobile so they could check them. Now I don't have my mobile and no phone connection until receiving them back.

“So that was another incident of harassment in this new series of cruelty since my release. They will not give up and let me go -- leave Israel. If they could put me back in prison they would.

“My conclusion: the world continues to ignore my situation and is not doing anything to help me gain my freedom in the same way it did during the 18 years of my imprisonment. Nobody will intervene to demand my release. The world stands by and allows Israel to do as it pleases. The world will let them commit more crimes such as kidnapping, injustice and cruelty.”

This last brush with Israeli authorities hasn't been the first time Vanunu has been detained since being released from prison in April 2004. Last November 11, Israeli police entered St. George's Cathedral, arresting Vanunu. He was questioned about his interviews with foreign press, which he conducted in open defiance of the restrictions, believing they were in violation of his freedom of speech.

Vanunu was also detained last Christmas Eve, as he attempted to enter the off-limits West Bank city of Bethlehem for worship at the Church of the Nativity. He was released several hours later being given five days of house arrest.

Vanunu's case was then reviewed by the Israeli court last April where the charges were dropped but then immediately prosecutors filed new charges under a different law prohibiting contact with the media concerning matters of national security.

Prior to his Friday arrest, Vanunu was scheduled to appear for a January hearing where he faces a possible six months in prison if convicted on other alleged parole violations, charges specifically concerning his alleged disregard for the Israeli order not to talk to the foreign press.

Clinton Involved in Arkansas 'Blood Scandal' According to New Documentary Released

Kelly Duda, an Arkansas native, should blow the lid off Clinton's dirty past with his new film. It should also make the former President's own blood boil, even more than being caught having sex in the White House.

27 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Ever since Bill Clinton left the White House, he has been “buddy-buddy” with Daddy Bush, the pair appearing at political rallies and on television like the “Bobbsey Twins.”

It's obvious now Clinton is just another neo-con snake in the grass, his so-called “Bridge in the 21st Century” Presidency used as a diversion but nonetheless used to simply advance the New World Order's horrific agenda.

Recently, Washington D.C. journalist, Jim Tucker, who has written extensively about the New World Order and its ruling group called The Bilderburg's for over two decades, told the Arctic Beacon Clinton was a guest at a secret Bilderburg meeting the year before being elected, apparently getting his marching orders and final stamp of approval from the worldwide financiers who pull the Washington political strings.

Looking back, Clinton turned out to be an integral part of the shadow government's game plan, now forging full-steam ahead after 9/11.

While Bush, Cheney, Rumsfeld, Wolfowitz and Rove are now grabbing headlines, the truth is finally starting to surface about Clinton's two-faced Presidency

One of Clinton's first acts as President in 1993 was to terminate, for no apparent good reason, a Justice Department investigation into 'Iraq Gate' and “Daddy Bush's” alleged involvement in selling WMD to Iraq.

Remember a book written in 1991 by Deborah Mathis, an obsessive Arkansas journalist who was one of the lone wolves, allegedly pinning Clinton with complicity to Latin American cocaine transports on U.S. military planes in isolated regions of northwest Arkansas.

Although most journalist's were enamored by the Clinton's charisma, Mathis stuck to her guns, writing the book which also documented the mysterious deaths of two teen-agers believed to stumble across an Arkansas cocaine drop.

But Mathis' allegation and persistence concerning Clinton's dirty past was little match for the supportive nature of most of the media, many of whom couldn't see past their noses when it came to Clinton's dirty past as Arkansas Governor.

And now surfacing in a long overdue documentary seven years in the making, the real truth about the Clinton's disgusting past should finally blow the lid off what remains of his clean image and probably make his Arkansas blood boil like never before.

The documentary called "Factor 8: The Arkansas Prison Blood Scandal," written and produced by Arkansas native Kelly Duda, made its debut two weeks ago at the prestigious American Film Festival Institute.

Duda's documentary deals with fresh evidence about the Arkansas prison blood scandal where officials knowingly sold AIDS tainted blood for a huge profit, then deliberately shipped to thousands in Europe and Canada who unknowingly contracted AIDS and hepatitis.

Duda's documentary shows how senior officials in the Arkansas prison system paid inmates to donate AIDS tainted blood while at the same time altering prisoner medical records to make it look like they were not carrying the deadly virus.

The filmmaker said he made an attempt to tie Clinton to the prison blood racket, but was thwarted and stopped every step of the way when he tried to unseal old Arkansas state records.

"When I went looking for Clinton's governor papers relevant to the blood investigation, I was told that 4,000 boxes had been hidden away. In private storage and couldn't be located," said Duda in a recent interview prior to the film festival release.

"When I went to the Arkansas State Health Department to request records regarding disease rates at the prison and anything about the plasma program, I was stonewalled.

"I actually had to sue the state agency just to get access to its files that by law are supposed to be a matter of public record. When I went to the Arkansas State Police Headquarters, key documents had disappeared. When complete strangers showed up out of the blue asking me what I was doing and with whom did I work for, I had to ask myself, 'What's going on here?'"

Duda was first made aware of Clinton's involvement in the scandal based on various news reports in the early 90's, reporting Clinton while governor of Arkansas in the 1980s being at the center of the AIDS tainted blood scandal.

While governor, he awarded a contract to Health Management Associates, a company involved in the scandal that provided medical care to state prisoners. News reports also uncovered the president of the company was a long-time Clinton friend and confidant, later appointed to a cushy political position on the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission and a member of his 1990 statewide election team.

Clinton was then tied to knowing about the blood scandal when Michael Galster, who treated Arkansas inmates, said he had personal knowledge of Health Management official's knowingly selling tainted blood for profit to a number of foreign countries, as well as personal knowledge that Clinton was aware of the scam and profited financially.

An old article, written in Salon.com, described in detail the specifics behind the inner-workings of the Arkansas scandal:

"At the Cummins Unit of the Arkansas penal system during the 1980s, while President Clinton was still governor, inmates would regularly cross the prison hospital's threshold to give blood, lured by the prospect of receiving $7 a pint.

"The ritual was creepy to behold: Platoons of prisoners lying supine on rows of cots, waiting for the needle-wielding prisoner orderly to puncture a vein and watch the clear bags fill with blood. Administrators then sold the blood to brokers, who in turned shipped it to other sates and to Japan, Italy, Spain and Canada.

“Despite repeated warnings from the Food and Drug Administration, Arkansas kept its prison plasma program running until 1994 when it became the very last state to cease selling its prisoners' plasma.”

Throughout the seven year process of making the documentary, Duda claims his life had been threatened on numerous occasions being, as well as being followed, warned to lay-off the project, hauled into court, burglarized and having his car tires slashed.

Regarding the making of the controversial document, he added:

“Prior to the making of Factor 8, I never considered myself an investigative journalist. In fact, I had never written a newspaper article before in my life. I was an aspiring filmmaker who had a story thrown into his lap.

“Actually, it wasn't even a story at the time but a series of events that allegedly took place in my home state in the 1980s. It was a tale I didn't want to tell, but the more I looked into it, the more I found. It didn't take long before I realized that regardless of the cost and sacrifice, the story you're about to see which is a complicated one had to be told. There where quite literally lives at stake. I felt a moral responsibility, a civic duty to do something.”

During the making of the film, Duda interviewed prison officials, high-ranking Arkansas figures, foreign victims, former employees and inmate blood donors.

The film debuted at the prestigious film festival two weeks ago, but was actually delayed for two years after its premier was blocked by a Park City, Utah, federal judge right before it was set to open in 2004.

Two 9/11 Airliners, Flight 93 and 175, Just Recently Taken Off FAA 'Active' List. Are Both Jetliners Still Flying in United's 'Friendly Skies'?

FAA records for four years listed both 9/11 United jetliners as still on the 'active' list. Now planes only 'deregistered' in September after snoopers questioned FAA officials a month earlier.

25 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Two of the 9/11 airliners were never 'deregistered' and remained on the 'active' flight list until Sept. 28, 2005, the classification officially changing only a month after two inquisitive flight researchers made repeated calls to the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), inquiring about the strange irregularity.

The two planes in question were Flight 93 and Flight 175, both owned and operated by United Airlines and, according to the official story, both destroyed on 9/11, one in Shanksville, Penn., and the other crashing into the South Tower of the WTC.

Usually a normal procedure after an airliner is destroyed, why it took United more than four years to 'deregister' the airplanes and fill out the official FAA paperwork remains a mystery and never has been fully explained by the FAA, United or the government.

In fact, in stark contrast, a check of FAA records shows the two other American Airline flights, Flight 11 and 77, both were 'deregistered' and classified as 'destroyed' only months after 9/11 on Jan. 14, 2002.

Why the late filing by United?

"My brother and I both wrote the FAA in August about this situation and asked why the planes were not deregistered. The FAA said that an owner does not need to deregister an aircraft," said one of the researchers named Roger, who preferred only to use his first name. "Ironically, a couple of months after I wrote the FAA, the planes were deregistered. What's up with that?"

"Although the planes are deregistered, they are not listed as cause destroyed but rather as cause cancelled. The American airplanes are clearly listed as cause destroyed but not so the United planes.

"There is a guy who was saying on a web posting that he knew one of the United planes was still in service in Chicago. I know nothing of how he would know this or who he was but I think he was the same guy who brought this stuff to our attention and he's clearly right about the planes still being registered.

"Two planes destroyed and two planes still flying? Are you familiar with the Cleveland airport mystery? So did Flight 93 land at Cleveland with 200 passengers on board?"

A recent check of FAA records proves the flight researcher's statements correct as Flight 93 identified as N591UA and Flight 175 as N612UA, both were taken off the active FAA list in September with a reason given as 'cancelled' not 'destroyed.'

The FAA again was contacted this week, giving the same answers given to the two researchers back in August regarding the late deregistration. And in regards to listing both United flights as 'cancelled not destroyed,' FAA officials also gave no further explanation.

Besides the FAA deregistration issue, solid evidence has also come forward that two of the 9/11 flights, Flight 11 and 77, never even existed at all, according to Bureau of Traffic Safety (BTS) records.

According to BTS statistics, both 11 and 77 officially never took-off on 9/11. The meticulous data kept on every airliner taking-off at every airport in the country also showed no elapsed run-way time, wheels-off time and taxi-out time, not to mention several other categories left blank on 9/11 concerning the two flights.

Although Flights 11 and 77 have the above data meticulously logged on 9/10, it was suspiciously absent on 9/11, even when every other plane that took off that day had been recorded and logged by the BTS.

Why the discrepancy? No one has ever given an official explanation for the BTS missing flight data, even though it is well known that airports are extremely concerned about recording accurate BTS data for each and every flight in and out of its airport for liability purposes.

More importantly critics contend this is another clear indication Flight 11 and 77 were only 'phantom flights,' adding even further doubt to the credibility of the official government story concerning 9/11.

Besides the FAA and BTS irregularities, the official flight lists from all four flights have been a serious bone of contention for 9/11 critics, who call attention to the glaring errors and conflicting passenger numbers on many of the flight lists released, many coming from unverified sources.

On Flight 11, for example, American Airlines released two different lists containing 77 and 75 names the day after 9/11, but the Washington Post published 89 names the same day while the Boston Daily published 89 names with conflicting names, however. Remember, complicating matters worse, Fox News all along was still claiming that only 81 names were confirmed a week later.

Through out the years, not only have the numbers conflicted but so have the names on the lists. Gerald Holmgren, a 9/11 researcher who has spent much time and effort researching the flight irregularities found one of the most glaring errors never explained by the airlines or the government.

Holmgren, whose compilation of 9/11 flight data can be found at <http://indymedia.all2all.org/news/2004/05/84711.php>, uncovered that four of the alleged passengers on American Airlines Flight 11 with the last names of Ward, Weems, Roux and Jalbert also mysteriously and unexplainable were also listed as passengers on Flight 175 that struck the South Tower.

Holmgren in his 2004 article had this to say:

“What a mess! This crime - the murder of approximately 3000 people, and the excuse for two wars and alarming attacks on civil liberties - and presumably more to come - is supposed to have been properly investigated and documented? Why should we be expected to believe who the hijackers were, when the spin doctors can't even do a credible fabrication job of a list of innocent victims?

“It's previously been demanded by many skeptics that we need to see a verifiable official passenger list which actually contains the names of the alleged hijackers. We can now take the implications of that further and point to the absence of any passenger list documentation for AA11 which stands up to scrutiny as a credible document. We have nothing which could support the existence of any of the alleged passengers on the alleged flight.”

Utah Lawyer Hospitalized After Being Targeted by Homeland Security for Information Linking Five U.S. Supreme Court Justices With Bribery Over Bush v. Gore Decision

The head of a Chicago-based court reform group said the attorney, Paul Young, was targeted by 'American Gestapo Agents' posing as businessmen. Sherman Skolnick says he has been warned by a federal judge that he also is a target of a bogus Homeland Security probe that may land the 50-year 'judge busting' truth seeker in jail.

By Greg Szymanski

A prominent Utah lawyer, working on an explosive Coca-Cola patent case appeal linking five U.S. Supreme Court justices with taking Coke bribe money in the Bush v. Gore decision, was hospitalized last week in Salt Lake City under suspicious circumstances.

Paul Young, a former law professor touted as a brilliant legal mind, was unexpectedly hospitalized with serious respiratory or pneumonia like conditions and remains in serious condition.

Unavailable for comment, Young told an associate this week who heads up a nationwide public interest court reform group that he immediately fell ill and was rushed to the hospital after being approached by two men in business suits who tricked him into inhaling toxic chemicals.

In what sounds like something out of a James Bond movie, Sherman H. Skolnick, the head of the Chicago based court reform group, told the Arctic Beacon Wednesday in an extended telephone conversation from his south side Chicago home:

"I just got off the telephone with Paul and he could hardly talk, but he told me he was approached by two large Samoan-looking men in suits, saying they were businessmen. While making conversation, they handed him a ball point pen and as they walked away, they turned to Paul, saying strangely without a clear meaning 'you'll be needing us.'

"When he clicked the pen, a substance was ejected and that's when he said he immediately fell ill."

Skolnick said Young also was notified the two businessmen played the same potentially deadly trick on one of his female legal assistant's, who is still missing and her condition unknown.

"These guys are playing for keeps now and it's all apart of the attack on all of us because of the information we have in our possession regarding the Supreme Court judges and the Coca-Cola/Disney bribery money passing hands in the Bush v. Gore case, which installed George W. Bush as the current resident and occupant of the White House" said Skolnick, adding he was recently notified through credible sources that he and others in his court reform group have been specifically targeted by Homeland Security or what he calls the American Gestapo.

Skolnick said he was recently tipped-off by a Chicago federal judge, one of his numerous contacts made in his 50 year career of 'judge busting,' that he, Young and others are smack dab in the middle of a 'scam Bush administration probe' to put them behind bars for bogus homeland security violations.

"In my younger days, I would go right over to the court house and ask the judges if they were looking for me. But if they want me, they know where I'm at and will have to haul me out of the house. I've been told this attack on us stems from recent secret meetings of federal judges chaired in person or via teleconferencing by Antonin Scalia, an Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court," said Skolnick, who did not want to reveal the federal judge who tipped him off for his protection. "The judges asked for and received from George W. Bush, an order signed by proxy Karl Rove, designating certain persons linked to the court-reform group, as 'domestic terrorists' during a 'war emergency'.

"Because of this certain members of our Chicago-headquartered court-reform group face seizure of their properties, assets, goods, licenses, and records, and face the possibility of also being stripped of our citizenship and making us detainees without time limits and without trials and without right to consult attorneys."

Skolnick claims the Bush administration is pulling out all the stops, as the attack on Young demonstrates, to use intimidation, life-threatening tactics and the Patriot Act to silence the group in an effort to protect the five high court judges from felony charges, stemming from their majority decision installing Bush as President in an illegal fashion.

The case, pinning the judges to the wall, is long and legally complicated but involves a federal copyright infringement case filed against Coca-Cola by a graphic designer named Robert E. Kolody, the man who Young represented in his appeal.

Skolnick, helping Kolody in his case, uncovered shenanigans by Kolody's original attorney who admitted to Skolnick in the courthouse cafeteria that he permitted Coca Cola and their attorneys to spy on his client's confidential legal strategies.

The accusations opened up a can of worms, as well as leading to other secret documents obtained by Kolody and the court reform group, showing not only that the 14 judge federal en banc panel assembled in Chicago unfairly and arbitrarily blocked Kolody's appeal, but also that they blocked information that secret Coca-Cola and Disney funds were used, according to Skolnick, "to bribe and corrupt the five judge majority, spear-headed by Justice Anton Scalia, who installed Bush in the Oval Office."

"Thereafter, to try to unblock the appeal, Kolody retained Young, the brilliant Utah lawyer who was unsuccessful in getting the appeal to proceed which would have obviously implicated the fourteen appeals judges in obstructions of justice to assist Scalia and four others on the High Court to hush up the Coke/ Disney bribery in Bush vs. Gore," said Skolnick.

"To put Paul Young out of action, first a prosecutor and judge in Utah framed up Paul Young on phony criminal charges. Now, they obviously attacked him and he is still in grave condition as I just finished talking with him from the hospital.

"This all comes from the information we have that the Bush v Gore decision was corruptly and arbitrarily procured through secret use of funds, obtained by book-cooking, from Coca-Cola and also Disney. It should also be mentioned that many of Coke's overseas offices are in great part proprietary operations of the American CIA."

Those under surveillance and targeted for arrest by Homeland Security include Skolnick, Young, two associates named Robert J. Corr and Michael W. Lynch, as well as an international business consultant who wishes to remain anonymous although well-known by authorities.

Regarding the arrests and its implications on the deteriorating conditions of civil rights in this country,

Skolnick has these parting words:

“We have been designated, by the Bush White House, as U.S.-born citizens, as "Domestic Terrorists" for directly confronting, or seeking to directly confront, Federal Judges who they accuse of corruption. Homeland Security contends that this tends to interfere with the operation and credibility of the Federal Judiciary, such as in Chicago and at the U.S. Supreme Court in Washington, D.C.

“Most all Americans obey ‘Court Orders’, whether taking away their Liberty, or Property, or Peace of Mind. As a result, the Federal Courts, for example, do not have to, so far, enforce their ‘Court Orders’ by ‘bayonet law’, where a military unit would have to be sent in to guarantee that the ‘Court Order’ as stated and written, is complied with by persons against whom the ‘Court Orders’ operate. Large, corrupt corporate interests, so far, have been assured by the corrupt, politicized, venal ‘for sale’ Federal Judiciary that their "Court Orders" will be enforced against the peons of America, the ‘shirtless ones’.

“In the current era, any supposed Insurrection of the American common folk, using the Second Amendment or otherwise, in opposition to the quiet enforcement and submission to Federal ‘Court Orders’, will be met with brute military force, primarily by the several hundred thousand foreign troops almost permanently resident on U.S. soil, but little known to most Americans.”

More Miraculous 9/11 Evidence: Four Credits Cards Found in Perfect Condition From Inside the Wallet of Flight 11 Passenger

Joseph Iskandar said his son, Waleed, always carried his cards in his wallet and were 'miraculously' returned one year later, but he never questioned where and how the credit cards were found amidst the devastation of the towering inferno.

By Greg Szymanski

More miraculous 9/11 evidence has turned up, as Joseph Iskandar, the father of Flight 11 passenger, Waleed, said not one but incredibly four of his son's credit cards were found in perfect condition by the Ground Zero Recovery Team.

Originally Iskandar reported receiving only one credit card, a perfectly intact Wells Fargo ATM card, but now three more cards mysteriously surfaced, either in a 'miraculous' stroke of luck, considering the devastation in the towering inferno, or possibly another clear sign of more planted evidence placed by the FBI at all disaster locations on 9/11.

Iskandar never doubted the credibility of the evidence, also becoming another in the long line of flight passenger family members who have never questioned the government's 9/11 story.

This comes in stark contrast to the other group of Ground Zero family members, a group made up of literally hundreds, if not thousands, who openly say 9/11 was an inside job or who publicly call for a new investigation. In contrast, the flight families either remain incredibly silent or, like Iskandar, have echoed the government story like a bunch of parrots in a cage.

Regarding the new evidence, Iskandar, 73, a Lebanese native who immigrated to the U.S. in 1980, told the Arctic Beacon Monday in an extended telephone conversation from his Northridge, California, home, the three other cards returned to him included Frequent Flyer credit cards from United, American and Delta airlines.

"When I returned to Ground Zero for the first anniversary of 9/11, I was told by some men that they had found four of Waleed's credit cards, all in good condition. They never told me how they found it or where but just sent me the cards," said Iskandar, adding he never questioned the identity of the men or the credibility of the cards, the items being mailed to his home several weeks later.

"Waleed used to keep his credit cards in his wallet and although it was a bit unusual considering the devastating crash, I just considered it to be a miracle from God. I then took the cards and they are included in a memorial at his burial site."

Another person closely following the chain of strange 9/11 evidence, who wants to remain anonymous, had this to say about the Iskandar credit cards:

“I guess his ATM card must have slid out of his wallet, flown out of his pocket, then out of his seat and around the seat belt, then through the exploding jet fuel and debris, out of the building, then to be found picture perfect!”

Although Iskandar believes the cards were God-sent, others think the FBI had a dirty hand in planting tainted evidence, since besides the incredible find of not one - but four - of Waleed's cards coming from inside his wallet, many other pieces of miraculous evidence has also surfaced.

The Arctic Beacon recently reported Capt. Jim Ingledue of the Virginia Beach Fire Department and 9/11 first responder finding the completely unblemished California ID card, driver's license and wedding ring of one of the Flight 77 passengers amidst the devastation and rubble at the Pentagon.

Passenger Suzanne Calley's husband, Frank, of San Martin, California, verified the return of his wife's items, but like Iskandar didn't question or even seek verification of the credibility of the evidence.

Although Calley had no questions, Capt. Ingledue, a firm believe of the official government 9/11 story, called it “highly strange and remarkable” to find this type of evidence in the Pentagon meltdown.

“I remember thinking it was highly unusual and strange to find a perfectly intact ID card amidst all that devastation,” said Capt. Ingledue, a Pentagon first responder who arrived two days after 9/11 and spent a total of seven days in search and rescue.

In a telephone conversation two weeks ago from Virginia Beach, Capt. Ingledue added the find was “so strange” he kept it in his pocket for an hour instead of immediately turning the evidence over to FBI agents like he was instructed.

“When we arrived at the Pentagon, we were advised to turn over any personal effects or possible evidence immediately over to the FBI,” said Capt. Ingledue, who admitted the find was unusual, but doesn't subscribe to any wild-eyed 9/11 conspiracy theories. “I kept this bit of evidence with me a little longer, I don't know why, but I guess I thought it was strange to find an ID in perfect shape when everything else around me was devastated.”

Besides the possibility that Calley and Iskandar's ID cards and credit cards were planted by the FBI, a similar question has been ignored by the state sponsored press and authorities the day after 9/11 when miraculously the unscathed passport of Satam Al Suqami, one of the alleged 19 Arab terrorists, turned up several blocks from Ground Zero.

Although ABC News and the Associated Press played up the importance of the Suqami passport, linking 9/11 to the Arab hijackers, serious questions were never raised in the press or by the 9/11 Commission as to the credibility and authenticity of the find.

Critics now contend with the Calley and Iskandar cards, all turning up in perfect condition like the passport, it only adds to the necessity of launching a full scale investigation into the possibility that all three items were planted by the FBI in an attempt to hoodwink the American people into believing the official 9/11 story, a story that has so many holes that it makes a perfectly good piece of Swiss cheese look like a solid object.

And to add even more fuel to the fire, numerous other accounts of suspicious evidence has also conveniently surfaced, linking the alleged hijackers to 9/11, including two of Mohamed Atta's bags also found right after 9/11.

Not only did authorities find the luggage but they conveniently contained a handheld electronic flight computer, a simulator procedures manual for Boeing 757 and 767 aircraft, two videotapes relating to “air tours” of the Boeing 757 and 747 aircraft, a slide-rule flight calculator, a copy of the Koran, Atta's passport, his will, his international driver's license, a religious cassette tape, airline uniforms, a letter of recommendation, “education related documentation” and a note to other hijackers on how to mentally prepare for the hijacking.

Again the state sponsored media jumped on the story, running in the Associated Press, Boston Globe and other papers in the weeks following 9/11, further perpetuating the government's 9/11 myth without even asking the question of whether the evidence was credible or possibly planted by the FBI.

Regarding the Iskandar case, what's even more unusual than the credit cards, is Waleed, a 34-year-old Harvard graduate, was never even listed as an original Flight 11 passenger either on the American Airlines flight manifest or the several different conflicting passenger list versions made public by major media outlets.

In fact, his name first appeared on a passenger list one year later in an unverified list given by a media outlet on the first year anniversary, but continued not to be listed on other distributed lists by other large media outlets.

In response to his son being left off the Flight 11 list, Iskandar said:

"I contacted American the day after the tragedy and told them not to list my son as my wife, Samia, and I were grieving terribly and we didn't want to be bothered by the press. Later after we realized how big this whole incident became, we had him put back on the list."

Iskandar said he also kept his son's flight itinerary as a keepsake, adding his son was on his way from Boston to Los Angeles to tell his parents about his recent engagement to his new fiancé, who was also with Waleed in Boston but decided to leave on a later flight that never arrived in Los Angeles due to the airplane lockdown after 9/11.

The official flight lists and there many discrepancies have been a serious bone of contention for 9/11 critics, who call attention to the glaring errors and conflicting numbers on many of the flight lists released, many coming from unverified sources.

On Flight 11, for example, American Airlines released two different lists containing 77 and 75 names the day after 9/11, but the Washington Post published 89 names the same day while the Boston Daily published 89 names with conflicting names, however. Remember, complicating matters worse, Fox News all along was still claiming that only 81 names were confirmed a week later.

Through out the years, not only have the numbers conflicted but so have the names on the lists. Gerald Holmgren, a 9/11 researcher who has spent much time and effort researching the flight irregularities found one of the most glaring errors never explained by the airlines or the government.

Holmgren, whose compilation of 9/11 flight data can be found at <http://indymedia.all2all.org/news/2004/05/84711.php>, uncovered that four of the alleged passengers on American Airlines Flight 11 with the last names of Ward, Weems, Roux and Jalbert also mysteriously and unexplainable were also listed as passengers on Flight 175 that struck the South Tower.

Holmgren in his 2004 article had this to say:

"What a mess ! This crime - the murder of approximately 3000 people, and the excuse for two wars and alarming attacks on civil liberties - and presumably more to come - is supposed to have been properly investigated and documented ? Why should we be expected to believe who the hijackers were, when the spin doctors can't even do a credible fabrication job of a list of innocent victims?"

"It's previously been demanded by many skeptics that we need to see a verifiable official passenger list which actually contains the names of the alleged hijackers. We can now take the implications of that further and point to the absence of any passenger list documentation for AA11 which stands up to scrutiny as a credible document. We have nothing which could support the existence of any of the alleged passengers on the alleged flight.

“The fact is - that in nearly three years - the media has tried to give the impression that they have published valid passenger lists, when all that has been provided is the contradictory rubbish exposed in this investigation. We are left with no choice but to conclude that these AA11 lists are fabrications.

“Personal stories of those allegedly involved have been built on the basis of these fabricated lists. As qualified earlier, some or all of them may be real people who are really missing, and may have friends or families who genuinely believe that they got on to a flight called AA11. We don't know at this stage. But the passenger lists as complete entities are lies.”

Whether Iskandar knows the real fate of his son or whether his son is a fiction, is unknown due the speculative nature and unreliability of the flight lists. Taking Iskandar at his word, his son exists and was killed on Flight 11, but it is also well-known the CIA/FBI creates aliases and fictitious identities to fill many needed slots in the witness protection as well as other clandestine programs.

“The FBI/CIA are busy now creating fictitious identities that they will need 30 years from now, complete with totally made up backgrounds right down to pictures in high school year books,” said Phil Jayhan, a long time 9/11 researcher. “Maybe the boys at the Pentagon borrowed some for 9/11 because the flight lists just aren't credible or real.”

Researchers also point to speculative nature of the flight lists when information surfaced regarding to the real possibility that Flight 11 and 77 never even existed in the first place on 9/11.

According to Bureau of Traffic Safety (BTS) statistics both flights officially never took- off on 9/11, as well as showing no elapsed run-way time, wheels-off time and taxi-out time. However, Flights 11 and 77 existed on 9/10, having all the recorded data properly logged as do each and every commercial flight that leaves each airport in America.

Why the discrepancy? No one has ever given an official explanation for the BTS missing flight data, even though it is well known that airports are extremely meticulous about recording accurate BTS data for each and every flight in and out of its airport for liability purposes.

But, more importantly, if this is a clear indication Flight 11 and 77 were only ‘phantom flights’ and never existed, why then wouldn't some of the family members publicly voice their concerns?

One more suspicious thing about the Iskandar interview is that he became another in the long list of those who lost loved ones on the airplanes who either remained silent or bought into the official 9/11 story lock, stock and barrel.

“I have no reason to doubt the government. Everyone has been good to me including former California Gov. Gray Davis,” said Iskandar. “I come from Lebanon and I think these people are crazy, like bin Laden, and I call them the bad seeds or bad Muslims. I am satisfied with the government investigation and have no doubt who caused this terrible disaster.”

Iskandar joins several other members of the airplane 9/11 community, including Calley and Linda Gay, who recently said they are in total agreement with the official government story, adding they are unquestionably satisfied with the government investigation.

In fact, save Ellen Mariani, who lost her husband on Flight 175, the rest of the jetliner family community has never publicly questioned the government's official 9/11 story and has pretty much stayed quiet in the background, out of the public eye.

What makes this surprising, if not downright suspicious, is that it is in stark contrast to the majority of family members who lost loved ones at Ground Zero, a group that has hundreds of outspoken critics of the government's official story, a group unafraid to publicly blame the Bush administration for being the real culprits behind 9/11.

For example, there are literally hundreds of survivors and family members from Ground Zero who protest the government regularly, saying Bush and the neo-cons are hiding the truth about 9/11 to protect their own skin.

But in stark contrast only Mariani has gone public with her disgust of the government from the airline group, a fact that shouldn't be ignored when trying to unweave the complex web of deceit woven by the neo-con culprits behind 9/11.

Elderly Woman Survived 10 days in New Orleans Attic Despite Late Government Response

Clothilde Mack, 85, says it was a miracle she survived Katrina. But now claims FEMA is her biggest obstacle in getting back home. Officials have promised to get her home by Christmas, but FEMA red tape holding up plans.

22 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Clothilde Mack looked up to the heavens, made the sign of the cross and told the Holy Spirit "it won't be long now, I'm a comin!" As the water gushed in, she had time for one quick prayer, one last solitary word before boarding the infamous one-way A train to the Promised Land.

Doesn't seem like too bad a place, this 'Promised Land?' But strangely it's never on anyone's yearly vacation list unless an unexpected hurricane hits or truly backed into a corner, cornered like Ms. Mack when the water started rising after the one and only Katrina swept through New Orleans.

In fact, when the water started gushing like Niagra Falls was falling in her New Orleans home, the 85-year-old, living alone with her three cats in Orleans Parish, thought she was the proverbial 'gonner' with only a few minutes to say goodbye.

And it was so ugly, so bad and nasty, especially when the water was up to her neck and running into her mouth, she started reciting prayers out loud like she did in grade school, even started yelling out her precious loved ones names as if to try and call them back for one last earthly meeting.

But it just was meant to be. It just wasn't her time to go, as they say. It just wasn't her time to meet her Maker, to meet the guy upstairs who always seems to meet everyone under the worst possible conditions.

And although she didn't know it then, her 'Maker and Promised Land' were a million miles away, as one of those lucky prayers kicked-in and seemed to ring a bell in the heavens, telling the A train to get out of town before Ms Mack had a chance to get on.

Whether it was a bell from heaven, the prayers or a stroke of Cajun luck, Ms. Mack swears on a stack of bibles it was "only by the grace of God" she survived 10 days in her New Orleans home without food and water in a true living testament that "miracles do exist."

The harrowing story of Ms. Mack's ordeal is one for the survival record books. It's a story about an elderly woman, having the strength of 100 men, who miraculously lived for 10 days cramped-up in her tiny attic like a human sardine as she almost was baked alive in the sweltering New Orleans summer heat.

"I broke a window to get some air when the water was still very high for the first couple of days," said Ms. Mack in an extended telephone conversation from her room in a half-way house in Greene County, Tenn. about 500 miles from New Orleans. "I didn't have anything to eat up in the attic or any water. After calling 911 until my cell phone gave out and nobody coming to rescue me, I never thought I was going to make it. I made peace with everyone and everything, really thinking I was going to die up there in the attic.

"But by the grace of God I made it through those first couple of days and then the water started going down. I kept calling for my cats but they didn't come as they didn't make it up to the attic. I haven't seen them for three months and really don't see how they could have survived. They were really the only family I had left and I miss them more and more each passing day."

After the water receded and still no rescue workers in sight, on the third day Ms. Mack literally floated on furniture to her kitchen where she found two cans of string beans and seven small water bottles in what turned out to be the extent of her rations for the remaining eight days.

The question remains why no help for 10 long days?

"I'll tell you why. The only answer I have is that the government delayed things on purpose," said Wendy Owens of Greene County, Tenn., a local resident who has taken on the private responsibility of trying to help Ms. Mack return to New Orleans despite no help from FEMA. "First, it was a disgrace and outrage that it took our military and government so long to get into New Orleans, leaving many people like Ms. Mack to die.

"If our military can get to Baghdad in one day, why did it take them so long to help people in a major American city? Why? Maybe the delay was orchestrated."

Besides Ms. Mack's ordeal, which Owens claims could have been avoided, she said her treatment in the last three months by FEMA and other federal agencies is even a worse disgrace and public embarrassment.

After her rescue and being treated at a local New Orleans emergency center, Ms. Mack was whisked away by airplane to Tennessee without being told her destination, something she says still makes her angry almost as much as FEMA's continued lack of proper care and its unwillingness to help her get back home.

"I have been deprived of my medication and nobody has really helped me get home even though the water is gone and my house needs repair. I have been lied to by my case worker so many times I can't even count them all," said Ms. Mack, adding on top of the insensitivity of her case worker, the FEMA program actually encourages evacuees to stay out of New Orleans, not return home even in areas that are habitable.

"All I ever wanted to do was go back home but they have been giving me the run-around. My caseworker even lied to me now and said she never worked on my case. I've gone weeks without my medication and kept telling them to just send me home."

Recently discussing her plight and her attempt to get back home to New Orleans, Ms. Mack appeared on Greg Szymanski's radio show called The Investigative Journal, saying she was finally promised by FEMA and Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-La), a small travel trailer to put on her property in order that she could return home.

"We will just have to wait and see if they live up to their promises as they haven't in the past," said Ms. Mack on the radio show, which appeared to spark interest in her case as Mayor Roger Jones of Greene County also decided to call in and add his two cents about Ms. Mack's situation.

Asked if he'd make sure Ms. Mack could at least get home by Christmas, knowing the wheels of government turn slow, Mayor Jones said:

"We definitely can make it happen. I'll make sure of it myself. And, as for a car, like you said, I think we can make sure that happens too so she'll have some transportation when she gets back home."

As for the way FEMA has treated the evacuees, Owens said it reminded her of the old Woody Guthrie song 'Deportees.'

"It seems there is an effort by the government, or some elements of it, to scatter these people all over the country like dry leaves," said Owens. "They should have made arrangements for Ms. Mack to return home, if that's her desire, a long time ago. But it seems like they are encouraging people to stay here in Tennessee in order to keep them away from their homes and property."

Instead of setting up programs in New Orleans to get people back home or at least close to the city, a FEMA flyer indicates its clear intentions are to keep people as far away as possible by offering out-of-state assistance.

The message on the flyer, being passed out in Green County to evacuees in shelters like Ms. Mack and others, offers a sign-up program for free housing in a rental apartment or home for up to one year, but offers no assistance or directions on how an evacuee can return home to New Orleans.

"I really don't want to stay here any longer, don't want that type of assistance and finally now have been promised a trailer to return home," said Ms. Mack. "I need to get back to my house, make repairs and take care of the business. I have lived in that house for 47 years, it's all bought and paid for and nobody is going to keep me away from it any longer."

When Sen. Landrieu's office was contacted regarding Ms. Mack's trailer, they were initially unaware of the case in all three of her offices in New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Washington D.C.

A return message to the Arctic Beacon from Sen. Landrieu's office the following day, left assurances Ms. Mack's case would be looked into and the proper procedures followed in order to acquire the needed travel trailer from FEMA.

Editor's Note: If anyone is interested in following-up to make sure Ms. Mack gets her FEMA trailer and gets home by Christmas, contact Sen. Landrieu's office in Baton Rouge at 225-389-0395 or Washington D. C at 202-224-1949. Also, you can contact Mayor Jones in Greene County Tenn. at 423-798-1766. If you'd like to assist Ms. Mack financially contact the Arctic Beacon at arcticbeacon@earthlink.net and arrangements will be made to put you in touch with Ms Mack.

Ground Zero Worker and 9/11 Hero Dying of Cancer From Toxins at WTC; White House And New York Officials Deny Liability and Have Thrown Victims into the Streets Like Pieces of Garbage

Pat Arcese, now dying of cancer, says government lied about the safety of workers at Ground Zero. He is now suing New York but officials have denied liability, leaving him $2 million in debt from mounting medical bills.

20 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Pat Arcese wakes up every morning, knowing the clock is ticking, knowing he's fighting a losing battle against cancer, a deathly cancer caused by working at Ground Zero after 9/11.

It's a story that would break anyone's heart, a story about a 9/11 hero left to die by heartless, inhuman government officials who tossed Arcese aside like throwing away a piece of garbage in the street.

Forget about all the political wheeling and dealing for a moment. Forget about Valerie Plame, Dick Cheney's leak problems, Baby Bush's drinking problems and all the other White House idiotic nonsense.

And think about one thing. Think about how these scoundrels, these less than human political pieces of garbage treated Arcese, a longtime New Yorker and Ground Zero hero.

Think about how former Mayor Giuliani, Bush, EPA officials and all the others down the lying chain of command told Arcese and others it was safe to work at Ground Zero, knowing full-well it wasn't, knowing all along they were sending these rescue and clean-up workers into nothing but a disgusting and lethal pit of pollution.

Now four years later, two other workers are thought to have died from the exposure of lethal contaminants at Ground Zero and, according to Arcese, he may be the third in what may prove to be only the beginning of a long line of graves caused by the likes of these 'garbage bag' politicians, these pitiful specimens of human beings who sent thousands of workers unprotected into nothing but a cesspool of deadly toxic waste.

"I am 6'3", used to be 225 pounds and solid as a rock. I was the toughest guy on the block and if you knocked me down, I'd just get up and keep coming at you," said Arcese in a telephone conversation this week from his mother's home near Tampa, Florida, where he stays due to his weakened condition.

Arcese, who was once robust and solid as a rock, has now been reduced, turned literally into a walking skeleton, as his over 200 pound muscular frame has been dwindled down by cancer to a mere 125 pounds.

"Remember Raging Bull or the Marciano fights? That was me and if you don't believe me, you can ask anyone who knew Pat Arcese in New York what I was really like. You could knock me down but I would always get up," recalls Arcese about his days on the streets in New York.

"Right now I can't sleep at nights so sometimes I go walking late at night. I'm not the kind of person who turns the other cheek and that's probably why I worked at Ground Zero longer than most, working 12 hours a day and staying long enough to decorate one of the first Christmas trees there in remembrance of the 3,000 people who were murdered there and, I mean, murdered!

"Even though I have been ill, I still ain't gonna change. I still helped someone recently one night who was being mugged, saved his life and then testified against the perpetrators and put them away where they belong.

"And here in Florida one night, when I was out walking late because I couldn't sleep due to the pain, I helped someone out like I did in New York, someone who was being robbed in a van. I'm just that way. I'm not gonna turn my back on anyone who needs help.

"You know, there were a lot of people who saw what happened at Ground Zero, came all gung-ho to help and then, just as quick, just left because it was so bad. I don't hold it against them because it was a really a bad scene, I mean the worst possible scene. It was sort of like coming and going to hell and back every day. That's about the best way to describe it."

After working at Ground Zero day and night for more than three months, Arcese started feeling ill about eight months later, the symptoms starting with respiratory problems, paleness and skin rashes, but rapidly growing much worse.

"I kept waking up every day wondering what the hell was wrong with me," recalls Arcese who twice during his illness collapsed on the New York streets, his heart stopping and having to be brought back to life by paramedics. "I deteriorated so fast and nobody knew what was going on. But it felt like my insides were being ripped out and I knew it had to be from toxins, asbestos and other contaminants I was exposed to at the World Trade Center.

"My god, I was never sick a day in my life and now I am down to 125 pounds and can't hardly stand up straight without a cane! I kept telling the doctors, 'you tell me what it is, smart guy, if it ain't what I was exposed to at Ground Zero?'"

When working at Ground Zero, Arcese recalls three important facts that made it clear to him that the city of New York, the White House and the EPA were all lying to him and the other workers who were all told - told point blank - the air was safe to breathe and conditions safe to work every day they reported to Ground Zero.

The three facts, in Arcese's own words, that proved to him the government lied were:

"One, they had these little test tube bottles all around the WTC and they would use these as proof to the workers it was safe. Every day One of the EPA workers would tell us they checked the tubes and it was safe. I knew they were lying.

"One day I went around and filled at least 30 of the tubes with asbestos that I found lying around the site. When EPA announced next morning and said it was safe, I caught them lying red-handed and called the official a liar right to his face.

"Another thing. The government spent millions of dollars on wash down machines for workers, but they never even used them once. Why? Well, they never even gave us protective gear or any protective clothing. They just didn't care about people, but they sure did care about getting the billions of dollars out from the basement and they sure cared about hauling the steel away as quick as they could.

"The second reason I know they lied is because I found out after the trucks that hauled the steel out left the WTC, they went into a wash down contamination center. What does that tell yah"

"And, the last thing, which is the icing on the cake, is the EPA put up this protective fence or what they called the 'safe zone.' And, think about it, there were hundreds of FBI and CIA there every day but they always stayed in the 'safe zone' and on the other side of the fence. Why?

"And the politicians, like Bush Giuliani and the rest, they'd only show up for a quick photo session and get the hell out of there as fast as they could in their limousines. Ask yourself: why didn't they stay and lend a hand if it was so safe? And tell me why did they dump the dust right into the river? Hell, they tried to contaminate the whole city!"

In answer to Arcese's question, the politicians never stayed longer than a few minutes at Ground Zero because everybody in high places knew all along the WTC and the surrounding area was a powder keg of lethal contaminants.

In fact, it was well-known by the city of New York that the WTC was an asbestos bombshell. For years, the Port Authority treated the building like an aging dinosaur, attempting on several occasions to get permits to demolish the building for liability reasons, but being turned down due the known asbestos problem.

Further, it was well-known the only reason the building was still standing until 9/11 was because it was too costly to disassemble the twin towers floor by floor since the Port Authority was prohibited legally from demolishing the buildings.

Although the city of New York and the federal government has refused to accept liability in Arcese's case leaving him $2 million in debt for his medical bills, he is still pursuing a lawsuit filed in New York.

He recently overcame a motion to dismiss by city lawyers, claiming no responsibility Arcese's deadly cancer diagnosis even though he has independent medical examinations saying his condition is directly related to the battery of carcinogens and toxins he was exposed to at Ground Zero.

"I recently got back from the doctor and was told there was no cure and nothing could be done," said Arcese, adding that he also has knowledge that several of his New York friends, including a good buddy named Patty O' Neil, all coming down with the same symptoms. "I just talked to Patty and he said his skin was turning gray and he was having breathing problems. I told him, Patty, you got to get to a doctor quick because that is exactly what happened to me."

Besides Arcese, several other Ground Zero workers have sued the federal government in 2004 for lying about air quality at the WTC.

The suit accuses EPA officials of making misleading public statements about the level of dangerous contaminants released into the air after the twin towers were destroyed in a terror strike.

The plaintiffs say they were sent to work without proper protective gear, exposing them to PCBs, asbestos, benzene and other known carcinogens.

Among those making claims are city correction officers, a National Guard medic and a city paramedic sent to help with the cleanup. Also in the case, a federal marshal charges he lost two months of work because of shortness of breath and other ailments triggered by his work at the site.

Attorneys are asking to classify the case as a class action to include thousands of workers sent to Ground Zero after the attacks. Among those named as defendants are former EPA director Christie Whitman and officials from the Occupational Health and Safety Administration, accusing them of authorizing news releases in the day after the attacks that were "false and misleading."

To indicate how false and misleading the EPA reports really were after 9/11, the following was sent out on September 18, 2001, by Whitman:

"EPA Administrator Christie Whitman announced today that results from the Agency's air and drinking water monitoring near the World Trade Center and Pentagon disaster sites indicate that these vital resources are safe.

"Whitman also announced that EPA has been given up to $83 million from the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) to support EPA's involvement in cleanup activities and ongoing monitoring of environmental conditions in both the New York City and Washington metropolitan areas following last week's terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

"We are very encouraged that the results from our monitoring of air quality and drinking water conditions in both New York and near the Pentagon show that the public in these areas is not being exposed to excessive levels of asbestos or other harmful substances," Whitman said. "Given the scope of the tragedy from last week, I am glad to reassure the people of New York and Washington, D.C. that their air is safe to breathe and their water is safe to drink," she added.

However, according to Arcese and many others now suffering illnesses from being exposed to the air at Ground Zero, was anything but safe, as children in nearby schools are now complaining of respiratory problems, more than half the site workers have serious breathing problems, half of the firefighters can no longer work and at least 14 rescue dogs have died.

Regarding the enormity of the health problems, one man who has pushed the issue about the EPA lies has been American philanthropist, Jimmy Walter, who has publicly called for justice for these "unsung 9/11 heroes," many who like Arcese are sick and dying.

"If you worked or had loved ones in Manhattan after 9/11, who have resulting injuries or health issues, we encourage you to consider filing criminal charges against Mayor Giuliani, Christi Whitman, James Connaughton and other members of the White house, EPA and the NY Health Department," said Walter in a written plea on his web site at www.reopen911.org. "We are dedicated to bringing justice to the real terrorists who attacked us and answering the glaring, painful questions surrounding 9/11."

Arcese, who recently appeared on Greg Szymanski's radio show the Investigative Journal on the Republic Broadcast Network at www.rbnlive.com, announced he is trying to raise money to go back to a New York Hospital to receive special treatment after two recent operations have been unsuccessful in stopping the cancer spread.

"I spend my time taking care of a young horse I adopted after I found him starving in a nearby field during one of my walks in the neighborhood," said Arcese, adding he plans to one day return to New York and ride his newfound friend, who he named Twin Towers, in one of the New York City parades.

"Twin Towers has become a real friend and the day he tried to get in the car with me. Everybody in the neighborhood is telling how good he looks and the other day I took him with me to the store and he just waited outside in the parking lot until I came out. The police came by and at first told me you can't have a horse out here, but after they found out it was me, they just all huddled around and starting taking pictures of me and Twin Towers walking on sidewalk in the middle of a six lane highway.

"But about the cancer, this has been a tough thing to beat, but my friends back in New York said if anyone can beat the cancer, it's Pat Arcese and I'm not going to let them down."

Editor's Note: If anyone is interested in helping Pat get up the funds to get treatment he needs back in New York since he is living on a small fixed income, please contact the Arctic Beacon at arcticbeacon@earthlink.net and we will put you in touch with Pat Arcese, a true 9/11 hero.

Mordechai Vanunu, Israeli Nuclear Whistle Blower, Released From Jail Early Sunday After Being Held 36 Hours in Isolation for Suspected Parole Violations
Vanunu said authorities are looking for 'any little thing' to put him back in jail after serving 18 years for blowing the whistle on Israel's nuclear stockpile.

20 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Mordechai Vanunu, the Israeli nuclear whistle blower, was released from jail early Sunday morning after being held in isolation for 36 hours by Israeli authorities on suspicion of parole violations.

Vanunu, 51, a former nuclear technician, originally spent 18 years in an Israeli prison for telling the world in a London Sunday Times article in 1986 about Israel's nuclear capability, including a stockpile of more than 200 nuclear weapons.

Released in April 2004, he has been strictly prohibited under the terms of his parole to leave Israel, including traveling to the occupied territories. Early Friday afternoon he was detained by Israeli police at the A-Ram border station as he was traveling on a bus near Jerusalem.

"It was the first time I sat alone in prison since being released and it was very difficult as it brought back terrible memories," said Vanunu in a telephone conversation with the Arctic Beacon from his home in Israel. "I think they are looking for any reason to put me back in jail.

"After being held in isolation for 36 hours, when I finally saw the judge, the prosecution wanted to detain me under house arrest for two weeks and give me a stiff fine. But my lawyer successfully argued that where I was detained was not in an unoccupied territory and that the terms of my parole are vague.

"He also told the judge authorities needed to provide me with a list of checkpoints that are off limits, which they haven't done. I was just trying to travel to a small village and felt I shouldn't have been detained."

After his lawyer successfully argued the legal points, Vanunu was released without charges being filled or a fine being levied. Authorities also did not give any specifics regarding his detention, merely saying Vanunu was required to notify authorities anytime he planned on leaving Jerusalem.

Under the terms of parole, he has also been prohibited from talking to the press, something he has openly disregard, adding in past public statements he was "not going to allow the Israeli authorities to stop his freedom of speech."

"They never mentioned anything this time about talking to the foreign press, but like I said I think they are looking for anything little thing to put me back in jail," said Vanunu, who spent 11 of his 18 year prison term in solitary confinement for going public about Israel's nuclear program.

Vanunu was released from an Israeli prison near Tel Aviv in 2004 for divulging what authorities claimed was classified information regarding Israel's nuclear weapons program and its nuclear reactor in Dimona, where he worked for nine years as a scientist.

The Sunday Times of London published a full account of Vanunu's story, calling the attention to the world in 1986 that Israel has already constructed 200 nuclear atomic bombs. He verified his claim with photographs of the Dimona site, verified by experts who eventually confirmed that Israel had nuclear weapons.

Vanunu was arrested in Rome at the time the article was being published to Italy by a combination Mossad and CIA undercover kidnapping. Once he returned, Vanunu claimed he was not given a fair trial and quickly sentenced to a maximum term for treason as well as being termed a foreign spy.

He also appeared last Monday, four days before his arrest at the checkpoint, in his only U.S. radio interview on Greg Szymanski's "Investigative Journal" on the Republic Broadcasting Network where he said Israel's nuclear arsenal now had at least doubled to 400 nuclear weapons. His entire interview can be heard at www.rbnlive.com in the archives section.

"If President Bush wants to find nuclear weapons in the Middle East, all he has to do is come to Israel. I am not going to let Israel keep me from exercising my freedom of speech," said Vanunu during the radio interview. "I am waiting for my January hearing where the Israeli judge will determine if I go back to jail for talking to the foreign press.

"But I will not stop talking as what else can they do to me after spending 18 years in jail, 11 years in solitary confinement, for doing nothing wrong. All I ever wanted to do was alert the world to the terrible nuclear threat Israel presented to the whole Middle East and the world."

The Friday arrest hasn't been the first time Vanunu has been detained by Israeli authorities since being released from prison. Last November 11, Israeli police entered St. George's Cathedral, arresting Vanunu. He was questioned about his interviews with foreign press, which he conducted in open defiance of the restrictions, believing they were in violation of his freedom of speech.

Vanunu was also detained last Christmas Eve, as he attempted to enter the off-limits West Bank city of Bethlehem for worship at the Church of the Nativity. He was released several hours later being given five days of house arrest.

Vanunu's case was then reviewed by the Israeli court last April where the charges were dropped but then immediately prosecutors filed new charges under a different law prohibiting contact with the media concerning matters of national security.

Prior to his Friday arrest, Vanunu was scheduled to appear for a January hearing where he faces a possible six months in prison if convicted on other alleged parole violations, charges specifically concerning his alleged disregard for the Israeli order not to talk to the foreign press.

Israeli Nuclear Whistle Blower, Mordechai Vanunu, Who Appeared This Week On Greg Szymanski's Radio Show, Arrested Friday Near Jerusalem For Parole Violations

Authorities unclear why he was arrested but it may include Vanunu's defiance of his gag order to talk with the press, including his only recent U.S. talk radio show appearance on the Republic Broadcast Network.

19 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Mordechai Vanunu, a former Israeli nuclear technician and whistleblower, was arrested near Jerusalem Friday for a parole violation as he traveled on a bus north of the holy city.

Vanunu, 51, was identified and searched at the A-Ram inspection checkpoint where authorities claim he was violating the terms of his parole after serving an 18-year prison term for violating state secrets.

Authorities did not give specifics regarding the arrest, saying Vanunu was required to notify authorities anytime he planned on leaving Jerusalem. Under the terms of parole, he has also been prohibited from talking to the press, something he has openly disregarded from day he was released, adding he was "not going to allow the Israeli authorities to stop his freedom of speech."

Vanunu was released from an Israeli prison near Tel Aviv in April 2004 for divulging what authorities claimed was classified information regarding Israel's nuclear weapons program and its nuclear reactor in Dimona, where he worked for nine years as a scientist.

The Sunday Times of London published a full account of Vanunu's story, calling the attention to the world in 1986 that Israel has already constructed 200 nuclear atomic bombs. He verified his claim with photographs of the Dimona site, verified by experts who eventually confirmed that Israel had nuclear weapons.

Vanunu was arrested in Rome at the time the article was being published to Italy by a combination Mossad and CIA undercover kidnapping. Once he returned, Vanunu claimed he was not given a fair trial and quickly sentenced to a maximum term for treason as well as being termed a foreign spy.

After the Friday arrest at the Jerusalem checkpoint, Vanunu has been unavailable for comment and did not return emails or answer his telephone.

But last Monday he gave his U.S. only radio interview when he appeared on Greg Szymanski's "Investigative Journal" on the Republic Broadcasting Network where he said Israel's nuclear arsenal had at least doubled to 400 nuclear weapons. His entire interview can be heard at www.rbnlive.com in the archives section.

"If President Bush wants to find nuclear weapons in the Middle East, all he has to do is come to Israel. I am not going to let Israel keep me from exercising my freedom of speech," said Vanunu during the radio interview. "I am waiting for my January hearing where the Israeli judge will determine if I go back to jail for talking to the foreign press.

"But I will not stop talking as what else can they do to me after spending 18 years in jail, 11 years in solitary confinement, for doing nothing wrong. All I ever wanted to do was alert the world to the terrible nuclear threat Israel presented to the whole Middle East and the world."

Vanunu has been held since being released from prison under what is termed "state arrest" and has been prohibited from leaving the country. Upon his arrest Friday, authorities were unclear whether it also involved his open violations of talking to the press, including his recent appearance on the Republic Broadcasting Network.

One of 11 children of Moroccan Jewish parents who emigrated to Israel in 1963, Vanunu served in the Israeli army and then worked in the Dimona nuclear "research center" in the Negev Desert near his home at Beersheba.

The facility harbored an underground plutonium separation plant operated in strictest secrecy. As the years went by he grew increasingly troubled as he realized his work was part of Israel's nuclear bomb program. In 1985, before leaving Dimona, he took extensive photographs inside the factory in order to document the truth for his fellow citizens and the entire world.

Israeli agents were alerted of Vanunu's intentions to publish the story. Even before they had lured him from Britain, abducted him in Italy, and dumped his drugged body onto an Israeli cargo vessel bound for Israel.

In the following months he was charged with espionage and treason and convicted at a closed-door trial. All legal appeals were exhausted, and he was consistently denied parole or probation.

For the first 11 1/2 years of his imprisonment, Vanunu was held in solitary confinement, denied human contact except with his guards, a lawyer, a priest, and the occasional visits of his siblings. This treatment was condemned by Amnesty International as "cruel, inhuman, and degrading."

On March 12, 1998, he was released into the prison population but was still subject to many restrictions - no contact with Palestinian prisoners, no phone use and his mail was censored. During the last 6 years he spent in prison, Vanunu was also able to have occasional visits with Nicholas and Mary Eoloff, the St. Paul, Minnesota couple who adopted him in the fall of 1997.

Despite years of isolation in prison, Vanunu remains steadfast in his belief that what he did was necessary and right. He was released on April 21, 2004, but the Israeli government imposed severe restrictions on his movement and speech, including the condition that he is not allowed to leave the country.

The Association for Civil Rights in Israel represented Vanunu in an appeal of the restrictions to the High Court. In July, the Court rejected the appeal, on the grounds that Vanunu "might be in possession of additional secrets he had not yet revealed". Vanunu continues to assert that he has no more secrets, and told everything he knew to the London Sunday Times when he blew the whistle in 1986.

At a mandated six-month review in October, 2004, the restrictions were renewed.

Last November 11, Israeli police entered St. George's Cathedral, arresting Vanunu. He was questioned about his interviews with foreign press, which he conducted in open defiance of the restrictions, believing they were in violation of his freedom of speech.

Vanunu was also detained last Christmas Eve, as he attempted to enter the off-limits West Bank city of Bethlehem for worship at the Church of the Nativity. He was released several hours later being given five days of house arrest.

Vanunu's case was then reviewed by the Israeli court last April where the charges were dropped but then immediately prosecutors filed new charges under a different law prohibiting contact with the media concerning matters of national security.

Prior to his Friday arrest, Vanunu was scheduled to appear for a January hearing where he faces a possible six months in prison if convicted.

Family Members of the Doomed 9/11 Flights 'Strangely Silent' About Irregularities and Inconsistencies of Official Government Story

Except for Ellen Mariani, whose husband was reported on Flight 175, others who lost relatives on the airplanes have kept quiet in stark contrast to those who lost loved ones at Ground Zero. But when those from the 'airplane community' talk like Linda Gay and Frank Calley, who respectively had family members on Flight 11 and 77, they accept the government 9/11 story hook, line and sinker.

By Greg Szymanski

Linda Gay believes her husband died in the fiery crash on Flight 11, believes the government conducted a fair investigation and blames the entire event on President Clinton who had eight years to catch Osama bin Laden but failed.

Gay lost her husband, Peter, 54, a vice president of Raytheon Co. on 9/11. Four years later, she still lives in Tewksbury, Mass., claiming as she did right after the tragic event, she is satisfied with her government's efforts at getting at the truth behind 9/11, satisfied with the money she received from the victim's compensation fund and satisfied with not pursuing her husband's death any further.

"I guess I am different than most people, but I just don't believe in suing the airlines or the government over something they couldn't control," said Gay this week in a rare conversation this week from her home in Tewksbury, as she reflected back about the death of her husband, a top executive with a defense technology company doing business with the Pentagon.

"Looking back, one thing strange was that the night before the flight and the early morning on 9/11, Peter seemed more reluctant than usual to leave for California on business like he did every Tuesday for the last year.

"He was the type that didn't like to be away from home, but on 9/11 he seemed more apprehensive about leaving than usual. The last thing we said was the normal goodbyes before he took the limousine and that was it. I never saw him again and had it confirmed he was on Flight 11 late in the afternoon at 2p.m. when American Airlines called."

Giving a rare interview, Gay's belief in the official 9/11 story and her reluctance to speak out is a pattern seen among many of the families of those who died on the four doomed airliners.

In fact, save Ellen Mariani, who lost her husband on Flight 175, the rest of the jetliner family community has never publicly questioned the government's official 9/11 story and has pretty much stayed quiet in the background, out of the public eye.

What makes this surprising, if not downright suspicious, is that it is in stark contrast to the majority of family members who lost loved ones at Ground Zero, a group that has hundreds of outspoken critics of the government's official story, a group unafraid to publicly blame the Bush administration for being the real culprits behind 9/11.

For example, there are literally hundreds of survivors and family members from Ground Zero who protest the government regularly, saying Bush and the neo-cons are hiding the truth about 9/11 to protect their own skin.

But in stark contrast only Mariani has gone public with her disgust of the government from the airline group, a fact that shouldn't be ignored when trying to unweave the complex web of deceit woven by the neo-con culprits behind 9/11.

Take, for example, the across the board silence from the airline family community who has never really spoken out about obvious irregularities in the flights themselves, NORAD's slow response, flight manifest irregularities and, basically, the total lack of a serious investigation regarding their missing relative.

If we want to believe Gay, the answer is simple: total trust in the government and the system. But if we want to look farther, we may find the silence among the flight family community as the tip of the iceberg behind the entire 9/11 mystery.

Take, for example, the simple law of averages. Doesn't it make sense that at least a handful out of the approximately 261 who died on the planes would have had a few family members as outspoken critics?

But besides this strange veil of silence blanketing the entire group, there are many other stranger things concerning the airline families, a series of unexplainable facts and occurrences that draws attention to what may be the 'Achilles heel' of the 9/11 mystery if, that is, investigators dig deep enough.

First, the Arctic Beacon has tried to contact at least 10 airline family members besides Gay, all who have repeatedly refused to answer the telephone or return emails. Julie Sweeney, whose husband, Brian, a former Navy F-14 pilot on Flight 175 who made two calls prior to the plane supposedly hitting the South Tower, said she was too busy to talk, acting apprehensive and wondering how the Arctic Beacon got her phone number.

After making an phone appointment the next day, Sweeney at the time of this publication failed to answer the phone at least 10 times, a sign she no longer wanted to speak after having time to reflect on the situation.

In contrast, family members who experienced Ground Zero losses have been more than happy to speak, as over a hundred family members of Ground Zero victims have been contacted by the Arctic Beacon, and even more by pother publications, with an overwhelming majority having no problem to talk openly about their loss and their feelings about the 9/11 investigation.

Why the difference? There are no polls or experts to figure this out, but one simple explanation is the flight families are hiding something. Although this may be jumping to conclusions, what other conclusion can be drawn when nobody wants to talk?

Besides these speculations, it also should be noted that several psychologists and psychiatrists contacted said the typical reaction to a loss of a loved one in a situation like 9/11 is to strip all allegiance to state, country and employer, as the only motivation left for those who have paid the ultimate price is getting at the truth and nothing but the truth.

However, strangely, the reaction by the 9/11 airline community, less Mariani, is just the opposite. Let's look at some of the glaring oddities about the airplane family members and why the government's story should have at least sparked some doubt among them:

Remember Gay and those who remained silent, as the law construes silence as consent, believe or give the appearance to believe the official government story hook, line and sinker, despite the existence of credible evidence Flight 11 and 77 never even existed and, for all intents and purposes, may very well have been only 'phantom flights.'

According to Bureau of Traffic Safety (BTS) statistics both flights officially never took- off on 9/11, as well as showing no elapsed run-way time, wheels-off time and taxi-out time. However, Flights 11 and 77 on both 9/10 and 9/12 had all the recorded data properly logged.

Why the discrepancy? No one has ever given an official explanation for the BTS missing flight data, even though it is well known that airports are extremely meticulous about recording accurate BTS data for each and every flight in and out of its airport for liability purposes.

But, more importantly, if this is a clear indication Flight 11 and 77 were only 'phantom flights" and never existed, why then wouldn't some of the family members publicly voice their concerns?

Four years after 9/11, the answer still remains a guarded mystery, but then there is a lot of mysterious evidence regarding the flights, or the absence thereof, which has never been answered.

For example, why hasn't the government turned over airport surveillance tapes, readily available for all flights, but suspiciously unavailable for all of the four doomed flights on 9/11? Again, why hasn't there been a public outcry by the 9/11 family airplane community when obvious information regarding their loved ones is being withheld?

This, however, is only the tip of the iceberg: Start with the obvious "pod" hanging from the underbelly of the airplane that struck the South Tower, the airplane purported by the government to be Flight 175.

However, after looking at the video footage taken by CNN, pictures on Newsweek magazine and other video tapes, it's obvious what hit the South Tower wasn't Flight 175, but actually a military "drone" made to look like it. And it should be noted that when United Airlines was asked to respond about the strange existence of the "pod" on the airliner's underbelly, officials didn't deny its existence but simply refused to answer, citing national security as an excuse.

But, again a major question is why with this glaring evidence staring the whole world in the face, hasn't the real people with a vested interest and loss - the airline family members -- demanded a public investigation?

Why? For the same reason they haven't, excluding perhaps Mariani, demanded an investigation into the BTS records, the missing surveillance tapes, NORAD's pitiful response time, unsubstantiated autopsy reports, miraculous evidence and personal belongings recovered from the wreckage and glaring inconsistencies concerning the actual flight lists, not to mention the fact that seven of the 19 hijackers are reportedly alive, well and living abroad.

However, specifically concerning the recovery of 'miraculous evidence' and discrepancies in the flight lists, one of the most interesting cases is that of Waleed Iskandar, purported to be a passenger on Flight 11.

As unbelievable as it sounds, Iskandar's parents were notified by the Ground Zero Recovery Team a year after 9/11 that they found the unscathed Wells Fargo ATM card of their son, who allegedly perished on the doomed flight.

After being notified of the miraculous find, Joseph and Samia Iskandar were sent their son's bank card within days, noting it was in "perfect condition," but never really publicly questioned the late timing of the incredible find or the suspicious nature of a flimsy ATM card surviving such a towering inferno.

What's even more suspicious is that their son, a 34-year-old Harvard graduate, was never even listed as a passenger on Flight 11, either on the original manifest or on the official list provided by American Airlines, even though every reference to him afterwards on internet memorials or in newspaper accounts lists him as a Flight 11 passenger.

One would think, Iskandar's family would have publicly questioned the numerous errors and discrepancies concerning Flight 11 and, of course, the official passenger list which never listed their son. But instead they have remained silent, his parents even failing to return over 25 messages left and emails sent over a two-week period concerning these very important issues.

"It's only my opinion but if that was my son, I'd be raising holy hell about the crazy government investigation and the information withheld about Flight 11," said one 9/11 family member who lost a loved one, but wanted to remain anonymous.

Besides the strange silence from the Iskandar's, the miraculous recovery of Flight 77 passenger, Suzanne Calley's, California ID card, driver's license and wedding ring, all found in perfect condition at the Pentagon, has also been accepted without questions asked by her surviving husband, Frank. Despite numerous questions regarding Flight 77 and the Pentagon crash, Calley's husband believes the government has done its level best when it came to the handling of his wife's case, his wife's military autopsy and subsequent government investigation into the Pentagon crash.

And it's hard to believe Calley and the other Flight 77 family members haven't been screaming from the rafters, demanding justice after looking at the facts of the secret investigation and the glaring inconsistencies concerning the military autopsy performed under the cloak of darkness. But, again, Calley and the others seem to be in 100 percent agreement with the Pentagon since none of them have so much as whispered criticism against a government investigation lacking obvious credibility. To make the point clear, here is exactly what Calley had to say about the Pentagon investigation and a run-down of the discrepancies in the Pentagon autopsy of the alleged Flight 77 victims as reported last week in the Arctic Beacon:

As told to another family member who lost a loved one in 9/11, Calley said:

"They told me they found her remains, but I decided not to look. The Pentagon officials also said the remains of at least 19 others on board the plane were also identified by a military medical group.

"Immediately after the crash, I was assigned a personal liaison who handled my case. He was cooperative and helpful and I decided I didn't want to see Suzanne's remains."

What's strange about the autopsy investigation is that none of the family members, including Calley, have demanded an independent investigation, relying solely on government medical reporting as advised by the Pentagon liaisons, a personal military attaché conveniently provided for each individual family.

The question has to be asked why would the military go to such extremes as to provide personal attachés unless they wanted to hide manipulate and control what should have been an independent crime scene investigation.

And, even stranger, questions like this should have been asked and independent investigations demanded by family members, all collectively as a group remaining strangely silent when it is the natural reaction of someone who loses a loved one, to travel to the ends of the earth to get at the truth.

Although the government medical team played up the fact it undertook the most comprehensive autopsy in medical history, utilizing DNA and dental records, none of the family members of those who allegedly died on 9/11, like Calley, can now ever be 100 percent sure of the results since the government controlled the autopsy, an independent investigation never being allowed and in the case of Calley, the remains of his wife's body has subsequently been cremated.

"Even though it's four years after 9/11, I still understand that family members can still be grieving. But wouldn't they want positive independent DNA testing done to prove their loved ones actually died in the crash," said on family member who lost a loved one 9/11 but wanted to remain anonymous.

"I never received any remains or evidence of the person I lost on 9/11, but if there were any remains, I surely would have had them independently tested instead of relying on the word of the government.

And that's exactly what transpired in the strange and unexplainable autopsy investigation of the Flight 77 passengers, conducted essentially in the cover of darkness by the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology (AFIP).

And after reading the report, it is filled with so many inconsistencies and generalities that it makes one wonder why Calley and the other family members - not a single one of them - ever insisted on independent DNA proof, matching the remains held by the government with that of their loved ones.

In fact, the AFIP in its report dated November 16, 2001, incredibly said it positively identified nearly all the bodies, including the Flight 77 passengers, a medical feat which several medical experts considered miraculous if not, impossible, considering the short amount of time and the amount of devastation at the crime scene.

Remember that Calley was told by his private Pentagon attaché that 19 passengers were positively identified from Flight 77, but the AFIP reports that 184 of the 189 who died at the scene, including all but one of the airplane passengers, were positively identified within about two months.

But, to make matters worse, even these numbers have been seriously questioned by an independent medical investigator named Thomas R. Olmsted, M.D., who made a recent Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request in order to get to the bottom of what he calls a staged and phony government autopsy report in order to cover up for "monsters who planned this crime."

Dr. Olmsted said about the AFIP autopsy:

"A list of names on a piece of paper is not evidence, but an autopsy by a pathologist, is. I undertook by FOIA request to get the autopsy list. Guess what? Still no Arabs on the list. It is my opinion that the monsters who planned this crime made a mistake by not including Arabic names on the original list to make the ruse seem more believable.

"When airline disasters occur, airlines will routinely provide a manifest list for anxious families. You may have noticed that even before Sep 11th, that airlines are pretty meticulous about getting an accurate headcount before takeoff. It seems very unlikely to me, that five Arabs sneaked onto a flight with weapons."

Dr. Olmsted then calls attention to the blatant discrepancy of the names on the airline passenger manifest and the names provided by the official Pentagon autopsy report, showing also that three names were on the autopsy that never even were listed as passengers on the airplane, an obvious indication of foul play never explained by the Pentagon.

Further Dr. Olmsted found through his FOIA request that although the medical examiners positively all of the passengers, they did not identify any of the Arab hijackers onboard, who were also not listed on the original flight manifest.

"The AFIP suggest these numbers; 189 killed, 125 worked at the Pentagon and 64 were passengers on the plane. The AA list only had 56 and the list just obtained has 58. They did not explain how they were able to tell "victims" bodies from "hijacker" bodies," said Dr. Olmsted. "In fact, from the beginning no explanation has been given for the extra five suggested in news reports except that the FBI showed us the pictures to make up the difference, and that makes it so.

"No Arabs wound up on the morgue slab; however, three additional people not listed by American Airline sneaked in. I have seen no explanation for these extras (on the autopsy list but not listed as passengers.) I did give American the opportunity to "revise" their original list, but they have not responded. The new names are: Robert Ploger, Zandra Ploger, and Sandra Teague.

"The AFIP claims that the only "passenger" body that they were not able to identify is the toddler, Dana Falkenberg, whose parents and young sister are on the list of those identified. The satanic masterminds behind this caper may be feeling pretty smug about the perfect crime, but they have left a raft of clues tying these unfortunates together."

Editor's Note: Of course, not all family members of the airline victims have been contacted. If there exists anyone who disagrees with the official 9/11 story or wants to comment about this article, the Arctic Beacon requests you contact our office so that your story and opinions can be heard.

Prof. Jones "Bows Out of Limelight;" Talks To Arctic Beacon In What He Says Will Be His Last Media Appearance.

The BYU professor, who thinks explosions most likely brought down the twin towers, is now limiting his media appearances to only 'peer reviews.' Read his last words to the media here in the Arctic Beacon.

By Greg Szymanski

The BYU physics professor who thinks explosions brought down the WTC said Wednesday he's "bowing out of the limelight" and limiting his media appearances to only academic peer reviews.

Conservative Professor Steven E. Jones has been barraged by media appearances since releasing a 19 page paper last week, saying "pre-positioned explosives" most likely brought down the twin towers as well as Building No. 7.

Professor Jones told the Arctic Beacon in a phone conversation from his BYU office Wednesday, he was disappointed over having to turn down numerous media requests, but felt it was in the best interests of all parties to end the media shower and concentrate again on academics.

He added after discussing the enormous media attention with the heads of BYU, enormous attention coming from all corners of the country, it was jointly decided by all parties it would best for the university and for Jones to limit his speaking engagements to "peer review events only."

"I want to thank everyone for the attention, but it is best that I limit my appearances at this time," said Jones in a conversation with the Arctic Beacon Wednesday morning, a parting word which could be his last with the media for quite awhile.

Professor Jones previously granted one of his first interviews after calling the Arctic Beacon last Saturday and appearing on Greg Szymanski's radio show, "The Investigative Journal," Monday on the Republic Broadcasting Network. For a replay of the hour-long radio interview go to www.rbnlive.com and for a feature article on Jones go to www.arcticbeacon.com.

"I thoroughly enjoyed your interviews (with the Arctic Beacon) and you were very fair," added Jones. "I wouldn't say as much for Tucker Carlson and my appearance on MSNBC, who was short with me and refused to play the video that graphically showed Building 7 come down in a freefall, as I described in the paper I just released.

"I am going to have to turn down the appearance tonight on the Rense show and also have decided not to attend a recent invitation by the philanthropist, Jimmie Walter, to speak at a 9/11 event in Tampa. No hard feelings to anyone but it is just something I have decided is in my best interest.

Before ending his media appearances, Jones tried to explain why he wrote his paper:

"I wanted to limit my discussion to my expertise and that is why I talked mainly about the physics of the freefall of the towers and Building 7," said Jones, adding he did criticize the so-called "pod theory" or the theory that a "drone plane" was used to crash into the towers.

In his paper, Jones stayed away from commenting on most other aspects of 9/11 except for the freefall of the towers and the limited criticism of the "pod theory."

"I did receive emails about why I did that (criticized the pod theory) and even told Morgan Reynolds, I really felt it was important to stick with the issues of 9/11 that are the most obvious and the easiest to prove. That is why I wanted to limit my discussion, but in further papers I plan to address other 9/11 issues. Also, I feel the 9/11 community needs to work together and not be splintered by constantly arguing among ourselves over conflicting theories that may take away from the ones we can conclusively prove."

Jones literally shocked the "Red State" of Utah and the conservative world last week when he released a 19 page paper basically ripping apart the official 9/11 story, limiting his discussion to his expertise in physics and the virtual impossibility of the towers falling from merely jet fuel as the government contends.

Jones earlier said he first presented his explosive conclusions at Brigham Young University (BYU) on September 22, to 60 people from the BYU and Utah Valley State College faculties, including professors of Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Geology, Mathematics and Psychology.

After presently scientific arguments in favor of the controlled demolition theory, Jones said everyone in attendance from all backgrounds, conservative and liberal, were in total agreement further investigation was needed.

"I was quite surprised how my conclusions were received," said Jones, adding he plans to give two continue telling the public how he came to his startling conclusions essentially ripping apart the official government story that jet fuel brought down the towers, including Building 7.

"In fact, after I researched how Building 7 fell, I am certain there existed pre-positioned explosives to bring down the three buildings."

Jones added that the contingent of faculty members at the September seminar were all in agreement that the government needed to "come clean" and release more than 6,900 photographs and close to 7,000 segments of video footage, now being held from independent investigation by the FBI and other agencies.

In Jones' 9,000 word paper, his conclusions why the towers most likely were brought down by a controlled demolition can be summed up as follows.:

- o The three buildings collapsed nearly symmetrically, falling down into their footprints, a phenomenon associated with "controlled demolition" - and even then it's very difficult, he says. "Why would terrorists undertake straight-down collapses of WTC-7 and the Towers when 'toppling over' falls would require much less work and would do much more damage in downtown Manhattan?" Jones asks. "And where would they obtain the necessary skills and access to the buildings for a symmetrical implosion anyway? The 'symmetry data' emphasized here, along with other data, provide strong evidence for an 'inside' job."

- o No steel-frame building, before or after the WTC buildings, has ever collapsed due to fire. But explosives can effectively sever steel columns, he says.

- o WTC 7, which was not hit by hijacked planes, collapsed in 6.6 seconds, just .6 of a second longer than it would take an object dropped from the roof to hit the ground. "Where is the delay that must be expected due to conservation of momentum, one of the foundational laws of physics?" he asks. "That is, as upper-falling floors strike lower floors - and intact steel support columns - the fall must be significantly impeded by the impacted mass. . . . How do the upper floors fall so quickly, then, and still conserve momentum in the collapsing buildings?" The paradox, he says, "is easily resolved by the explosive demolition hypothesis, whereby explosives quickly removed lower-floor material, including steel support columns, and allow near free-fall-speed collapses." These observations were not analyzed by FEMA, NIST nor the 9/11 Commission, he says.

o With non-explosive-caused collapse there would typically be a piling up of shattering concrete. But most of the material in the towers was converted to flour-like powder while the buildings were falling, he says. "How can we understand this strange behavior, without explosives? Remarkable, amazing - and demanding scrutiny since the U.S. government-funded reports failed to analyze this phenomenon."

o Horizontal puffs of smoke, known as squibs, were observed proceeding up the side the building, a phenomenon common when pre-positioned explosives are used to demolish buildings, he says.

o Steel supports were "partly evaporated," but it would require temperatures near 5,000 degrees Fahrenheit to evaporate steel - and neither office materials nor diesel fuel can generate temperatures that hot. Fires caused by jet fuel from the hijacked planes lasted at most a few minutes, and office material fires would burn out within about 20 minutes in any given location, he says.

o Molten metal found in the debris of the World Trade Center may have been the result of a high-temperature reaction of a commonly used explosive such as thermite, he says. Buildings not felled by explosives "have insufficient directed energy to result in melting of large quantities of metal," Jones says.

o Multiple loud explosions in rapid sequence were reported by numerous observers in and near the towers, and these explosions occurred far below the region where the planes struck, he says.

More 'Miraculous 9/11 Evidence' Found; Independent Medical Investigation Not Allowed as Pentagon Controls Flight 77 Autopsy Results, But Lists Three People Not Even On The Flight!

Flight 77 passenger, Suzanne Calley's, wedding ring and driver's license turns up in perfect condition from Pentagon wreckage. ATM card of Flight 11 passenger, Waleed Iskandar, also turns up unscathed, but he wasn't even listed as a passenger on the AA official flight list.

16 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Capt. Jim Ingledue of the Virginia Beach Fire Department and 9/11 first responder recently reported he found the completely unblemished California ID card of a Flight 77 passenger amidst the devastation and rubble at the Pentagon.

Critics were quick to jump on what they called "another miraculous find," claiming it was just another indication of bogus evidence planted by FBI, including the unscathed passport found outside the WTC of one of the hijackers, Satum AL Suqami, the luggage of Muhammad Atta with blatant incriminating evidence and the perfectly intact Wells Fargo ATM card of Walled Iskandar, one of the Flight 11 passengers.

In the case of Iskandar, whose ATM card discovery was first made public by the Arctic Beacon, it has also been learned he never even was listed as a passenger on Flight 11 in the first place, either on the original flight manifest or on the verified passenger list made public by American Airlines and subsequently released by CNN.

Iskandar's parents, Joseph and Samia, were unavailable for comment, failing to return numerous messages left on the answering machine at their home in Northridge, California.

Besides the strange Iskandar situation, the Arctic Beacon has now learned there may be even more bogus and planted FBI evidence, as the husband of Suzanne Calley, 42, whose ID was found at the Pentagon, also said the recovery team returned the couple's wedding ring and her perfectly intact California driver's license, as well as the ID card.

Frank Calley of San Martin, California, this week told another family member who lost a loved one on 9/11 that all three items were returned in perfectly good condition, a recovery even Capt. Ingledue said was "strange and unbelievable" considering the meltdown at the Pentagon.

Calley, however, didn't question the authenticity or believability of the items found, but added when questioned whether his wife's body was positively identified in the rubble:

"They told me they found her remains, but I decided not to look. The Pentagon officials also said the remains of at least 19 others on board the plane were also identified by a military medical group.

"Immediately after the crash, I was assigned a personal liaison who handled my case. He was cooperative and helpful and I decided I didn't want to see Suzanne's remains."

What's strange about the autopsy investigation is that none of the family members, including Calley, have demanded an independent investigation, relying solely on government medical reporting as advised by the Pentagon liaisons, a personal military attaché conveniently provided for each individual family. The question has to be asked why would the military go to such extremes as to provide personal attachés unless they wanted to hide manipulate and control what should have been an independent crime scene investigation.

And, even stranger, questions like this should have been asked and independent investigations demanded by family members, all collectively as a group remaining strangely silent when it is the natural reaction of someone who loses a loved one, to travel to the ends of the earth to get at the truth.

Although the government medical team played up the fact it undertook the most comprehensive autopsy in medical history, utilizing DNA and dental records, none of the family members of those who allegedly died on 9/11, like Calley, can now ever be 100 percent sure of the results since the government controlled the autopsy, an independent investigation never being allowed and in the case of Calley, the remains of his wife's body has subsequently been cremated..

"Even though it's four years after 9/11, I still understand that family members can still be grieving. But wouldn't they want positive independent DNA testing done to prove their loved ones actually died in the crash," said a family member who lost a loved one 9/11 but wanted to remain anonymous.

"I never received any remains or evidence of the person I lost on 9/11, but if there were any remains, I surely would have had them independently tested instead of relying on the word of the government.

And that's exactly what transpired in the strange and unexplainable autopsy investigation of the Flight 77 passengers, conducted essentially in the cover of darkness by the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology (AFIP).

And after reading the report, it is filled with so many inconsistencies and generalities that it makes one wonder why Calley and the other family members - not a single one of them - ever insisted on independent DNA proof, matching the remains held by the government with that of their loved ones.

In fact, the AFIP in its report dated November 16, 2001, incredibly said it positively identified nearly all the bodies, including the Flight 77 passengers, a medical feat which several medical experts considered miraculous if not, impossible, considering the short amount of time and the amount of devastation at the crime scene.

Remember that Calley was told by his private Pentagon attaché that 19 passengers were positively identified from Flight 77, but the AFIP reports that 184 of the 189 who died at the scene, including all but one of the airplane passengers, were positively identified within about two months.

But, to make matters worse, even these numbers have been seriously questioned by an independent medical investigator named Thomas R. Olmsted, M.D., who made a recent Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request in order to get to the bottom of what he calls a staged and phony government autopsy report in order to cover up for "monsters who planned this crime."

Dr. Olmsted said about the AFIP autopsy:

"A list of names on a piece of paper is not evidence, but an autopsy by a pathologist, is. I undertook by FOIA request to get the autopsy list. Guess what? Still no Arabs on the list. It is my opinion that the monsters who planned this crime made a mistake by not including Arabic names on the original list to make the ruse seem more believable.

"When airline disasters occur, airlines will routinely provide a manifest list for anxious families. You may have noticed that even before Sep 11th, that airlines are pretty meticulous about getting an accurate headcount before takeoff. It seems very unlikely to me, that five Arabs sneaked onto a flight with weapons."

Dr. Olmsted then calls attention to the blatant discrepancy of the names on the airline passenger manifest and the names provided by the official Pentagon autopsy report, showing also that three names were on the autopsy that never even were listed as passengers on the airplane, an obvious indication of foul play never explained by the Pentagon.

Further Dr. Olmsted found through his FOIA request that although the medical examiners positively all of the passengers, they did not identify any of the Arab hijackers onboard, who were also not listed on the original flight manifest.

"The AFIP suggest these numbers; 189 killed, 125 worked at the Pentagon and 64 were passengers on the plane. The AA list only had 56 and the list just obtained has 58. They did not explain how they were able to tell "victims" bodies from "hijacker" bodies," said Dr. Olmsted. "In fact, from the beginning no explanation has been given for the extra five suggested in news reports except that the FBI showed us the pictures to make up the difference, and that makes it so.

"No Arabs wound up on the morgue slab; however, three additional people not listed by American Airline sneaked in. I have seen no explanation for these extras (on the autopsy list but not listed as passengers.) I did give American the opportunity to "revise" their original list, but they have not responded. The new names are: Robert Ploger, Zandra Ploger, and Sandra Teague.

"The AFIP claims that the only "passenger" body that they were not able to identify is the toddler, Dana Falkenberg, whose parents and young sister are on the list of those identified. The satanic masterminds behind this caper may be feeling pretty smug about the perfect crime, but they have left a raft of clues tying these unfortunates together."

More Miraculous or Perhaps Planted 9/11 Evidence Uncovered: A Wells Fargo Card From a Flight 11 Passenger Turns Up in Perfect Condition One Year After the Fact

The ATM card of Waleed Iskandar was returned to his parents, allegedly found by the Ground Zero Recovery Team on Sept. 11, 2002. Questions remain as to why it turned up a year later and how could such a flimsy card survive such a towering inferno?

14 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

One year after 9/11, as unbelievable as it sounds, the parents of a Flight 11 passenger were notified by the Ground Zero Recovery Team that they found the unscathed Wells Fargo ATM card of their son who allegedly perished on the doomed flight.

After being notified of the miraculous find on Sept. 11, 2002, Joseph and Samia Iskandar were sent their son's bank card within days, noting it was in "perfect condition," but asking the obvious question: "How could a plastic card survive the fire of the terrorist attack of the Black Tuesday on the USA?"

The question about the strange return of their son's bank card has been placed on a web site memorial, remembering their 34-year-old son, Waleed, a Harvard MBA graduate listed as one of the passengers that perished when Flight 11 allegedly smashed into the North Tower.

The Iskandar's were unavailable for comment after numerous calls were not answered, but receipt of the card was verified by another close family member, as well as a photographic duplicate of the ATM card also being placed on the Iskandar web site, proving its existence and return in almost perfect condition.

Besides an enlarged picture of the card on the site, the Iskandar's also placed the following message regarding the return of their son, Waleed's, Wells Fargo ATM card:

"On September 11 2002, one year Anniversary of the death of our son, we were informed that the Recovery Team at Ground Zero have found the ATM Bank card of Waleed and that it will be mailed to us in Northridge. When we received it, we found it in good condition," Walleed's parents wrote.

"How could a plastic card survive the fire of the terrorist attack of the Black Tuesday on the USA? I consider it as a sign from Waleed to his parents on the first Anniversary of his loss."

What the Iskandar's mean by "a sign from Waleed" is unknown, but it can either be construed as a miracle from heaven that he is safely in a better place, a sign that his personal belongings were tampered with and he died in another location or a sign he is still alive but unable to communicate with his parents.

Although it's impossible to come to a solid conclusion, the 'government spooks' of 9/11 holding the real truth, no one including the Iskandar's can doubt the miraculous nature of such a recovery, considering the devastation at the WTC, as well as strange nature of the timing of the return of their son's bank card, occurring one year after the fact.

One observer who wants to remain anonymous and who claims the FBI planted numerous pieces of bogus evidence at all locations on 9/11 to justify an equally bogus official 9/11 story, had this to say about the Iskandar ATM card:

"I guess his ATM card must have slid out of his wallet, flown out of his pocket, then out of his seat and around the seat belt, then through the exploding jet fuel and debris, out of the building, then to be found picture perfect!"

The miraculous recovery of Iskandar's ATM card is not the only piece of 9/11 evidence suspected of being planted by the FBI. Recently, the Arctic Beacon first reported a first responder at the Pentagon finding a perfectly intact California ID card of one of the alleged Flight 77 passengers.

Capt. Jim Ingledue said two days after 9/11 he found the perfectly unscathed ID of Susanne Calley, 42, one of the alleged passengers, adding he thought the find "highly unusual and strange to find a perfectly intact card amidst the devastation and rubble at the Pentagon."

But what makes the Iskandar ATM card even more suspicious and intriguing than even Calley's ID card is that it was returned one year later. Why one year after the fact? Where was it found? Was it used in the interim? But, most importantly, how on earth could a plastic card, normally contained inside a man's wallet or his pocket, survive a massive explosion that completely consumed an airliner as well as pulverized a 100 story skyscraper?

However, besides the possibility that Calley's ID and Iskandar's ATM card were both planted by the FBI, the same question was also ignored by the press and authorities the day after 9/11 when miraculously the unscathed passport of Satam Al Suqami, one of the alleged 19 Arab terrorists, turned up several blocks from Ground Zero.

Although ABC News and the Associated Press played up the importance of the Suqami passport, linking 9/11 to the Arab hijackers, serious questions were never raised in the press or by the 9/11 Commission as to the credibility and authenticity of the find.

And now with the Calley ID and the Iskandar ATM card, both turning up in perfect condition like the passport, it only triples the necessity of launching a full scale investigation into the possibility that all three items were planted by the FBI in an attempt to hoodwink the American people into believing the official 9/11 story, a story that has so many holes that it makes a perfectly good piece of Swiss cheese look like a solid object.

Furthermore, the simple reason an investigation is desperately needed, now more than ever in light of the Calley and Iskandar discoveries, is that the more pieces of "miracle evidence" that surface, the better the chances the evidence is bogus.

Besides the Al Suqami passport, numerous other accounts of suspicious evidence have conveniently surfaced linking the alleged hijackers to 9/11, including two of the alleged ringleader, Mohamed Atta's bags also found right after 9/11.

Not only did authorities find the bags but they conveniently contained a handheld electronic flight computer, a simulator procedures manual for Boeing 757 and 767 aircraft, two videotapes relating to "air tours" of the Boeing 757 and 747 aircraft, a slide-rule flight calculator, a copy of the Koran, Atta's passport, his will, his international driver's license, a religious cassette tape, airline uniforms, a letter of recommendation, "education related documentation" and a note to other hijackers on how to mentally prepare for the hijacking.

Again the state sponsored media jumped on the story, running in the Associated Press, Boston Globe and other papers in the weeks following 9/11, further perpetuating the government's 9/11 myth without even asking the obvious question:

"If the hijackers could pull off the perfect crime, fooling the entire U.S. military, how could they be so stupid and leave such incriminating evidence behind unless it was planted and set up by the FBI/CIA/Mossad agents?"

BYU Professor Has Plenty of Company in the Academic Community, Including 60 Faculty Members from Two Utah Universities who Concur a Controlled Demolition Most Likely Brought Down the WTC and Further Investigation Is Needed

Professor Steven E. Jones is another in the long line of conservatives in the political and academic world joining the 9/11 truth movement and asking to open up further investigations on the true cause of 9/11.

13 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The BYU physics professor who believes the WTC collapsed from a controlled demolition isn't alone in the academic community, as a group of more than 60 colleagues from two universities also agreed with Professor Steven E. Jones' conclusions.

Jones told the Arctic Beacon Saturday in a telephone conversation from Provo, Utah, he first presented his explosive conclusions at Brigham Young University (BYU) on September 22, to 60 people from the BYU and Utah Valley State College faculties, including professors of Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Geology, Mathematics and Psychology.

After presently scientific arguments in favor of the controlled demolition theory, Jones said everyone in attendance from all backgrounds, conservative and liberal, were in total agreement further investigation was needed.

"I was quite surprised how my conclusions were received," said Jones, adding he plans to give two continue telling the public how he came to his startling conclusions essentially ripping apart the official government story that jet fuel brought down the towers, including Building 7.

"In fact, after I researched how Building 7 fell, I am certain there existed pre-positioned explosives to bring down the three buildings."

Jones added that the contingent of faculty members at the September seminar were all in agreement that the government needed to "come clean" and release more than 6,900 photographs and close to 7,000 segments of video footage, now being held from independent investigation by the FBI and other agencies.

Since day one, the Bush administration has safely guarded much of the 9/11 evidence, including the WTC steel hauled away by FEMA and eye-witness testimony of basement explosions censored by the 9/11 Commission and the state sponsored press, as well as discrediting many other scientists or academics like Jones who have disagreed with the official story.

"We are calling for the release of all the data, including the videos and photos, in order that a cross-disciplinary, preferably international team of scientists and engineers can reach an independent conclusion," said Jones, adding all 60 professors in attendance agreed with this course of action.

"Since I decided to come forward with my findings, I have found the people in the 9/11 community very supportive and helpful. I hope my contribution will one day help get at the truth of what really happened and specifically how the towers collapsed."

Jones' theory on the way the towers collapsed was presented in a 9,000 word formal paper already approved for publication in an upcoming academic journal. The following is a partial explanation of how and why he came to his conclusions that the WTC most likely collapsed due to pre-positioned explosives. He writes:

"In writing this paper, I call for a serious investigation of the hypothesis that WTC 7 and the Twin Towers were brought down, not just by damage and fires, but through the use of pre-positioned explosives.

"I consider the official FEMA, NIST, and 9-11 Commission reports that fires plus damage alone caused complete collapses of all three buildings. And I present evidence for the explosive-demolition hypothesis, which is suggested by the available data, testable and falsifiable, and yet has not been analyzed in any of the reports funded by the US government.

And the reasoning behind his conclusions can be summed up as follows:

- o The three buildings collapsed nearly symmetrically, falling down into their footprints, a phenomenon associated with "controlled demolition" - and even then it's very difficult, he says. "Why would terrorists undertake straight-down collapses of WTC-7 and the Towers when 'toppling over' falls would require much less work and would do much more damage in downtown Manhattan?" Jones asks. "And where would they obtain the necessary skills and access to the buildings for a symmetrical implosion anyway? The 'symmetry data' emphasized here, along with other data, provide strong evidence for an 'inside' job."

- o No steel-frame building, before or after the WTC buildings, has ever collapsed due to fire. But explosives can effectively sever steel columns, he says.

- o WTC 7, which was not hit by hijacked planes, collapsed in 6.6 seconds, just .6 of a second longer than it would take an object dropped from the roof to hit the ground. "Where is the delay that must be expected due to conservation of momentum, one of the foundational laws of physics?" he asks. "That is, as upper-falling floors strike lower floors - and intact steel support columns - the fall must be significantly impeded by the impacted mass. . . . How do the upper floors fall so quickly, then, and still conserve momentum in the collapsing buildings?" The paradox, he says, "is easily resolved by the explosive demolition hypothesis, whereby explosives quickly removed lower-floor material, including steel support columns, and allow near free-fall-speed collapses." These observations were not analyzed by FEMA, NIST nor the 9/11 Commission, he says.

- o With non-explosive-caused collapse there would typically be a piling up of shattering concrete. But most of the material in the towers was converted to flour-like powder while the buildings were falling, he says. "How can we understand this strange behavior, without explosives? Remarkable, amazing - and demanding scrutiny since the U.S. government-funded reports failed to analyze this phenomenon."

- o Horizontal puffs of smoke, known as squibs, were observed proceeding up the side the building, a phenomenon common when pre-positioned explosives are used to demolish buildings, he says.

- o Steel supports were "partly evaporated," but it would require temperatures near 5,000 degrees Fahrenheit to evaporate steel - and neither office materials nor diesel fuel can generate temperatures that hot. Fires caused by jet fuel from the hijacked planes lasted at most a few minutes, and office material fires would burn out within about 20 minutes in any given location, he says.

- o Molten metal found in the debris of the World Trade Center may have been the result of a high-temperature reaction of a commonly used explosive such as thermite, he says. Buildings not felled by explosives "have insufficient directed energy to result in melting of large quantities of metal," Jones says.

o Multiple loud explosions in rapid sequence were reported by numerous observers in and near the towers, and these explosions occurred far below the region where the planes struck, he says.

Prof. Jones Talks to Arctic Beacon; Advised in for Whirlwind 9/11 Ride, after Claiming WTC Was a Controlled Demolition

Prim, proper and Republican-looking BYU professor crosses into uncharted 9/11 truth waters. Bush attack dogs lurking around every corner. Watch your back, professor!

12 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The story of the day in the 9/11 truth world is the prim, proper and conservative-looking BYU physics professor, coming out of the closet with a 19 page report about how the WTC buildings, defying laws of gravity, most likely collapsed due to "pre-positioned explosives."

Professor Steven E. Jones' highly provocative and scientifically researched report, concluded the government's jet fuel theory was inconceivable due the nature of the freefall of the buildings, the towers falling in a matter of seconds within their own footprints exactly like a controlled demolition.

Jones' story first appeared Friday in the Salt Lake City Deseret Morning News and was quickly circulated throughout the country on the internet. And, apparently expecting a barrage of callers, emails and faxes, Jones seems to have cut-off communications with the rest of the outside world, instead letting his 19 page report do the talking for him.

Numerous calls to the number listed on his resume were met Friday by a strange sounding busy signal and emails requesting an interview sent to jonesse@physc1.byu.edu were returned undeliverable.

Perhaps the good professor wants his privacy or perhaps he has been overwhelmed with calls and emails. But let's just say good luck since now he's nothing but "media meat" to slice up every which way by those on both sides of the hotly contested 9/11 truth issue.

However, on Saturday Professor Jones telephoned the Arctic Beacon, saying he is more than willing to tell everyone why he believes the WTC came down from a controlled demolition and why he is urging the American people to insist authorities open up a fresh investigation.

"I came to the conclusion after several months of serious investigation and after conferring with people like David Ray Griffin and others," said Jones today from his home in Utah, sounding like a very sincere, honest and forthright person, wanting to get to the truth about 9/11.

"My paper has been accepted for publication and surprisingly I have been met with a lot of encouragement and support from my colleagues at BYU. There have been, of course, emails calling me nuts and crazy but that's to be expected."

However, for practical purposes and to help Professor Jones adjust, let's just say his quiet Utah world has ended forever with his decision to essentially tell the world the government is lying about 9/11. Of course, that's not what he said specifically, but that's how it will be interpreted, especially with the administration's hyper-sensitive view towards those in academia who have questioned the official 9/11 story.

"I just believe we should get at the truth and open up another investigation. What finally tipped the scales for me was the way in which Building 7 collapsed," said Jones, who admitted coming from a conservative background.

Although he stops short of saying exactly who pulled the demolition plug on the towers, the insinuation is there that it was an inside government job, his statements being enough to ignite a fury of retaliation from the Bush administration attacks dogs if reaction to past statement made by others like Jones is any indication.

And if history proves right, Jones is now in for a world-wide 9/11 ride, a ride like he's never experienced before. So professor be prepared to strap yourself very tight to your office chair since those on both sides of the 9/11 issue are going to be pulling and tugging at you, pulling hard in very different and opposite directions.

Professor, be prepared to first be hounded by the 9/11 truth seekers, who are going to try to use your every word to bolster their position that Bush and his cronies killed 3,000 on the morning of 9/11. Interviews from radio stations, news outlets and underground television stations will come by the thousands as you have now, for the time being, become the 9/11 truth movement's new poster child, replacing the likes of former Bush administration official, Morgan Reynolds, and other conservatives who came out of the closet attacking Bush for bringing about 9/11.

The Arctic Beacon was one of the first to interview Reynolds and his statements about the 9/11 being a government inside job, the story being literally picked up round the world. Then came former Reagan Treasury Secretary, Paul Craig Roberts, making similar statements while bashing Bush on the Iraqi War as well, causing equally as big of a stir as Reynolds.

And all bets are off as to how hard the Bush attack dogs will come down on Jones, who will be viewed as hitting Bush below the belt from a strongly conservative stronghold like BYU and Utah.

So, it's really only a matter of time before he is somehow discredited for his views and only a matter of time before the Bushies pull out of their hats five, ten or fifteen other physics professors who totally disagree with him, as endless scientific debates will automatically take center stage for awhile like the many debates on the same issue have transpired in the past.

And what will be accomplished? Well, in reality Jones will probably get frustrated of the constant harassment and soon slip back into academia. The Bush administration will try to hasten that move and uncover whatever dirt on him available to discredit his character while, at the same time, checking to see what type of government contracts can be withheld from BYU in order to get Jones to shut up.

And, in the end the great scientific debate over 9/11 will continue as the real culprits in Washington like Daddy and Baby Bush, Clinton, Rumsfeld, Cheney, Rice, Wolfowitz, Pearle, Rove and the other crooks continue to walk hand in hand by the banks of the Potomac, smoking cigars and laughing all the way to the bank.

But for the sake of discourse, it's rather interesting to note the innocence, almost schoolboy attitude exhibited by Professor Jones, as to why he finally decided to go public about 9/11. First he said he was inspired by a clairvoyant who had a near death experience, warning others "if you think the WTC came down just due to fire, you have a lot of surprises ahead of you."

He then was quoted as saying "at which point everyone around me (at the speech) started applauding." Even though this is a rather amusing tale, Jones should be prepared for some near death experiences of his own, since crossing the line with Daddy Bush is sometimes hazardous to one's health.

Also, Jones should be prepared to be forever classified by the Bushies as "a crazy clairvoyant nut" as he made his first mistake by giving the administration this type of ammunition to use against him, being too honest and too naïve -- two big mistakes he will come to regret when looking back on the whole story

Next Jones makes a second statement about his 9/11 reawakening in the Deseret Morning News, again indicating he has no idea what kind of corrupt government world he is entering. Although a good idea, he said he would like the government to turn over 6,899 photographs and 6,977 segments of video footage for "independent scrutiny" now being conveniently held out of sight and out of mind by the government.

Fat chance! All that can be said is good luck since most serious investigators and truth seekers to date can't even get their hands on one video, let alone 12,000, an example being from the gas station across the street from the Pentagon, a video which is being held by the FBI that most likely could show an airliner never struck the Pentagon.

Besides the 12,000 pictures and tapes, Jones is also asking the government to turn over a piece of molten steel from the core of the towers for his independent investigation, again perhaps not understanding FEMA shipped the steel right after 9/11 out of the country to China in an obvious obstruction of justice criminal violation.

Good luck again to Jones if he can get a piece of WTC steel, but it should be remembered for four long years thousands before him have tried and failed, obviously proving we have a cover-up of massive proportions.

Even though Jones means well and his heart is in the right place, he is going to have a rude awakening when he tries to get anything, even a cup of coffee and a roll, from anyone close to the government after what he has said. It's basically the gloves off, professor, so get used to the controversy as perhaps the old saying "be careful what you ask for as you just might get it" may aptly apply here.

But regarding his 9/11 conclusions, it's important to note they are bolstered by what he says are many eye-witnesses who have come forward, saying they heard, felt and experienced explosions in the sublevels of the towers just prior to the airliners striking at the top floors.

Jones is correct in his conclusions since the Arctic Beacon has been one of the first to conduct interviews with many of those eye-witnesses, including a North Tower survivor named Felipe Sanchez, who experienced third degree burns from the powerful basement explosions, resulting in a six month hospital stay before he finally recovered.

Jones should be told that 9/11 Commission as well as everybody else in high places, including the major television and newspaper outlets, have all categorically censored all the eye-witnesses, shutting up anyone who can finger the government liars and verify a controlled demolition took place, thus revealing the true nature of the corrupt media owners protecting the equally corrupt government officials.

However, in all fairness, Jones' thoughts should be heard and added to the words of many other 9/11 truth seekers who have come spoken before him. In the article written by Elaine Jarvik of the Deseret Morning News, the following points are highlighted from his 9,000 word article claiming the towers and Building 7 were most likely brought down by a controlled demolition:

- o The three buildings collapsed nearly symmetrically, falling down into their footprints, a phenomenon associated with "controlled demolition" - and even then it's very difficult, he says. "Why would terrorists undertake straight-down collapses of WTC-7 and the Towers when 'toppling over' falls would require much less work and would do much more damage in downtown Manhattan?" Jones asks. "And where would they obtain the necessary skills and access to the buildings for a symmetrical implosion anyway? The 'symmetry data' emphasized here, along with other data, provide strong evidence for an 'inside' job."

- o No steel-frame building, before or after the WTC buildings, has ever collapsed due to fire. But explosives can effectively sever steel columns, he says.

o WTC 7, which was not hit by hijacked planes, collapsed in 6.6 seconds, just .6 of a second longer than it would take an object dropped from the roof to hit the ground. "Where is the delay that must be expected due to conservation of momentum, one of the foundational laws of physics?" he asks. "That is, as upper-falling floors strike lower floors - and intact steel support columns - the fall must be significantly impeded by the impacted mass. . . . How do the upper floors fall so quickly, then, and still conserve momentum in the collapsing buildings?" The paradox, he says, "is easily resolved by the explosive demolition hypothesis, whereby explosives quickly removed lower-floor material, including steel support columns, and allow near free-fall-speed collapses." These observations were not analyzed by FEMA, NIST nor the 9/11 Commission, he says.

o With non-explosive-caused collapse there would typically be a piling up of shattering concrete. But most of the material in the towers was converted to flour-like powder while the buildings were falling, he says. "How can we understand this strange behavior, without explosives? Remarkable, amazing - and demanding scrutiny since the U.S. government-funded reports failed to analyze this phenomenon."

o Horizontal puffs of smoke, known as squibs, were observed proceeding up the side the building, a phenomenon common when pre-positioned explosives are used to demolish buildings, he says.

o Steel supports were "partly evaporated," but it would require temperatures near 5,000 degrees Fahrenheit to evaporate steel - and neither office materials nor diesel fuel can generate temperatures that hot. Fires caused by jet fuel from the hijacked planes lasted at most a few minutes, and office material fires would burn out within about 20 minutes in any given location, he says.

o Molten metal found in the debris of the World Trade Center may have been the result of a high-temperature reaction of a commonly used explosive such as thermite, he says. Buildings not felled by explosives "have insufficient directed energy to result in melting of large quantities of metal," Jones says.

Former Cleveland Mayor Reported Flight 93 Landed at Cleveland Airport on 9/11 and Flight 175 in Vicinity. Cincinnati WCPO TV Cover-ups Why Account Removed From Web Site

State sponsored U.S. media ignores story, leaving 'internet hounds' to smell out the truth behind what really happened to the passengers on the doomed flights.

11 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

On the morning of 9/11 a little known Cincinnati television station ran a story saying Flight 93 landed at Cleveland International Airport instead of crashing in Pennsylvania as claimed in the official government story.

Reporters at WCPO Channel 9 quoted then Cleveland Mayor Michael R. White as saying "a Boeing 767 out of Boston made an emergency landing due to a bomb threat," the airplane landing safely, moved to a secure location and evacuated.

The early morning report when on to say United Airlines verified the plane as Flight 93, but was also deeply concerned about another jetliner in the vicinity, Flight 175, flying from Boston to Los Angeles.

Also included in the little known news report was a comment from United CEO, James Goodwin, who said, "The thoughts of everyone at United are with the passengers and crew of these flights. Our prayers are also with everyone on the ground who may have been involved. United Airlines is working with all the relevant authorities, including the FBI, to obtain further information on these flights."

Former Mayor White, as well as United and WCPO, could not be reached for comment, but the evidence still remains, even though it was suspiciously removed from the television's web site in June 2004 in and around the time of the 9/11 Commission hearings.

With the evidence trail getting colder and colder, the obvious still must be asked: if Flight 175 was slamming into the South Tower and Flight 93 was downed over Pennsylvania like the government contends, why was Mayor White saying both planes were in or in the vicinity of Cleveland?

The answer to this question remains a mystery four years later since the 9/11 Commission or the FBI never thoroughly investigated the news report or former Mayor White's statement.

And if there still happens to be any 9/11 family members still wondering what really happened to their loved ones aboard the doomed 9/11 flights, it isn't much consolation that the only really serious investigation to date has come from a couple of cyber space sleuths with no real criminal investigation background and only a hyperactive curiosity as their credentials.

But to the credit of these novice sleuths, who never even listed their names in order to take credit for their work, the following information about the original WCPO story and its removal from the internet is all we have to go on:

"Though the story from Cincinnati TV station WCPO is not recent news (it was posted within hours of the 9/11 attacks)," said the sleuths, "I had never heard of it until a fellow researcher recently contacted me. Click on the first link "(see links below) and you will see what is currently posted on the website, 'This story has been removed from WCPO.com. It was a preliminary AP story, and was factually incorrect.'

"However, using the powerful resource of the Internet Archive <<http://www.wanttoknow.info/coverupnews#archiveinstructions> , which archives all major websites on the internet on a regular basis, you can see how this webpage appeared over past months and years. Using this excellent resource, you will discover that the original posting (provided below) can be viewed at the second link below.

"Note that the original posting says nothing about being an AP article. Note also that the article continued to be posted for all dates through June 2004, and disappeared only after that. Remember that Flight 93 reportedly crashed in Pennsylvania on 9/11, with all aboard killed. How can this be? See these web sites for verification:

http://www.wcpo.com/specials/2001/americaattacked/news_local/story14.html http://web.archive.org/web//http://www.wcpo.com/specials/2001/americaattacked/news_local/story14.html <http://web.archive.org/web//http://www.wcpo.com/specials/2001/americaattacked/news_local/story14.html."

Besides WCPO's obvious cover-up, another little known account concerning the passengers aboard the flights concerns the strange - almost unbelievable -- reaction of former Rep. Phil Crane (R-III) in response to the information compiled on another internet sleuth's 9/11 web site.

The incident involves a phone call by Rep. Crane to Phil Jayhan, a serious 9/11 fact gatherer, who appears to be on to something and headed in the right direction in solving parts of the 9/11 mystery if this strange -- out of the blue call -- from a Congressman is any indication.

In an extended phone conversation this week concerning the call, Jayhan asked why would a big shot Congressman call him unless it was to designed to gather information, interrogate him or find out what he really knew, as well as indicating he might be hot on the trail of something important

Jayhan, who puts together www.letsroll911.org, also wrote this on his web site about the mysterious call from former Rep. Crane, the former head of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee:

"Well, we all now know there was a series of War Games going on the week of 911, as well as 911 itself. I probably wouldn't have even thought of this if it were not for Congressman Phil Crane's phone call to me.

"Why take any chances on 911? They had time on their side, and thus a near perfect plan, or a perfect plan that didn't work as advertised. Crane seemed most interested in 'the people' & 'the pathology' more than anything else. Why would he be asking me about this, if indeed flight 93 was the meat wagon? All of the remains would have been sent to path and identified, and no one would be the wiser, right?

"But as I have said, if I could pin down a reason why Phil Crane would have pulled the stunt he did with me, it would have to be the subject of where are the people...? Because he didn't have a problem with the missile and the pod or that the flight was switched, so he was well acquainted with my web site when he called. But he, they(?) were stumped as to the missing people, and where they went. So, let's think in Phil Crane's shoes for a moment. He finally is forced to see the site (let's roll) by one of his aids who finally had done the research and seen that what my site says is true.

"So Phil Crane and perhaps a few in his staff, or perhaps a few other Congressman and Senators are sitting around, and they see the problem pod, the problem missile and realize this plane was switched.

"I am assuming here that they know something we don't in this area, i.e. namely that there were No bodies or true DNA tests done. They were a PR sham to help sweep 911 under the rug sooner and more efficiently, best not to have grieving loved ones family members crying foul because DNA testing was taking too long to put their hearts to rest, so they faked the DNA test results."

Like the Unscathed Hijacker Passport Found Near Ground Zero, Now Comes Flight 77 Passenger's Perfectly Intact ID Card Found at Pentagon Meltdown
Never before revealed passport of Pentagon victim called by critics 'another piece of bogus evidence' planted by the FBI like the passport, hijacker luggage and other suspicious evidence quickly linking the 19 Arab hijackers to 9/11.

9 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

One day after 9/11 the perfectly unscathed passport of Satam Al Suqami, one of the alleged 19 hijackers, was found several blocks from Ground Zero, even though its next to impossible such a flimsy item escaped the towering inferno unblemished.

Now comes another piece of mysterious evidence, like the Al Suqami passport, never before revealed to the public and overlooked by authorities and the media, showing again the FBI probably was busy planting evidence at all 9/11 locations, including the Pentagon.

Never before released and revealed first to the Arctic Beacon, a first responder said he found a perfectly intact California ID card at the Pentagon on Sept 13, 2001, supposedly now revealing the identity of one of the alleged passengers who perished on Flight 77.

However, unfortunately, for the state sponsored media and the FBI/CIA it was a piece of evidence overlooked and never used after 9/11 to perpetuate the government's myth.

But fortunately it can now be first introduced to the American public in its proper light, as a piece of bogus and planted evidence making it look like one of Flight 77's passengers died at the Pentagon when, in fact, the person probably never was there at all.

Capt. Jim Ingledue, shift safety officer of the Virginia Beach Fire Dept, said Monday he found amidst the rubble at the Pentagon, two days after 9/11, the perfectly clean and unblemished California ID card of Suzanne Calley, 42, one of the alleged victims killed aboard Flight 77.

"I remember thinking it was highly unusual and strange to find a perfectly intact ID card amidst all that devastation," said Capt. Ingledue, a Pentagon first responder who arrived two days after 9/11 and spent a total of seven days in search and rescue.

In a telephone conversation from Virginia Beach, Capt. Ingledue added the find was "so strange" he kept it in his pocket for an hour instead of immediately turning the evidence over to FBI agents like he was instructed.

"When we arrived at the Pentagon, we were advised to turn over any personal effects or possible evidence immediately over to the FBI," said Capt. Ingledue, who admitted the find was unusual, but doesn't subscribe to any wild-eyed 9/11 conspiracy theories. "I kept this bit of evidence with me a little longer, I don't know why, but I guess I thought it was strange to find an ID in perfect shape when everything else around me was devastated."

Capt. Ingledue said he arrived at the Pentagon about two days after the fact, seeing body parts, airplane parts and other debris, but adding it was impossible to determine the exact type of airplane involved as well as if the body parts he saw came from passengers or from people killed inside the Pentagon.

"I have no reason to believe it wasn't a commercial airliner," said Capt. Ingledue. "I don't believe all those conspiracy stories and the stories people make up. I did see airplane seats and a corpse still strapped to one of the seats.

"I also remember seeing a table with a number of dead bodies still sitting around it. In my line of work, you have to disassociate yourself from the tragedy and the only time I really think about it is every year on Sept. 11."

Capt. Ingledue said finally this year on the anniversary of 9/11, he again recalled the incident, writing a note on an internet memorial web site dedicated to Calley, adding he was deeply saddened by her death while mentioning finding some of her personal belongings in perfect condition.

Calley is survived by her husband, Frank, who lives in St. Martin, California, but he was unavailable for comment after numerous messages were left on his answering machine.

Regarding the similarity of the unscathed passport and Calley's ID perfectly unblemished ID card, critics all along rightfully suspected Al Suqami's passport was an FBI hoax and now, without question, critics will be saying the same thing about the Calley passport.

But even though the passport and the ID card had a snow ball's chance in hell of surviving the WTC and Pentagon meltdown, ABC News and the Associated Press quickly jumped on the story, with accounts running on September 12 and 16 of 2001, telling America essentially the passport discovery was proof positive Osama bin Laden's gang outfoxed the mighty U.S. military.

In fact, whether the FBI/CIA actually planted the evidence never has been thoroughly questioned or investigated by the state sponsored press, perpetuating even further the incredible lies surfacing about the credulity of the official 9/11 story.

Besides the passport, numerous other accounts of suspicious evidence have conveniently surfaced linking the alleged hijackers to 9/11, including two of Mohamed Atta's bags also found right after 9/11.

Not only did authorities find the bags but they conveniently contained a handheld electronic flight computer, a simulator procedures manual for Boeing 757 and 767 aircraft, two videotapes relating to "air tours" of the Boeing 757 and 747 aircraft, a slide-rule flight calculator, a copy of the Koran, Atta's passport, his will, his international driver's license, a religious cassette tape, airline uniforms, a letter of recommendation, "education related documentation" and a note to other hijackers on how to mentally prepare for the hijacking.

Again the state sponsored media jumped on the story, running in the Associated Press, Boston Globe and other papers in the weeks following 9/11, further perpetuating the government's 9/11 myth without even asking the obvious question:

"If the hijackers could pull off the perfect crime, fooling the entire U.S. military, how could they be so stupid and leave such incriminating evidence behind unless it was planted by them and set up by the FBI/CIA/Mossad agents?"

But now on top of all the other bogus, planted evidence comes Capt. Ingledue's rare find of the Calley ID card, this piece of evidence every bit as unbelievable as Al Suqami's passport and Atta's bags.

Although Capt. Ingledue appears to believe the government story in light of his amazement to find the ID card, there are many other skeptics who point out the government account of the Pentagon crash as being filled with so many holes it might as well be a piece of Swiss cheese.

Besides unbelievably claiming that Pentagon surveillance cameras failed to pick up the aircraft slamming in the western wall, critics claim the FBI has also concealed two important private tapes, one taken at a nearby hotel and the other at a gas station.

The first private tape confiscated and never released to the public was footage taken from a security camera atop a hotel close to the Pentagon, showing what type of plane or object struck the Pentagon.

Also, as reported days after 9/11, several hotel employees allegedly sat watching the film in shock and horror several times before the FBI confiscated the video as part of its investigation.

However, no reports have surfaced either officially or in the media, indicating what the employees actually witnessed, as FBI agents had first access to these potential eye-witnesses.

And what is disheartening if not outright obstruction of justice, this may be the only tape of the crash since The Pentagon has repeatedly said that its security cameras did not capture the crash. This is even more unbelievable and another incident of obstruction of justice since the attack occurred close to the Pentagon's heliport, an area that normally would be under 24-hour security surveillance, including video monitoring. A later release of five grainy and unrecognizable by the government of the crash indicated the statement made that no security cameras captured the crash were untrue.

Further, in a subsequent report, an employee at a gas station across the street from the Pentagon, servicing only military personnel, said the gas station's security cameras should have recorded the moment of impact, but the tapes were immediately confiscated within minutes after 9/11.

The station attendant also claimed he did not witness the actual crash but only came out from the back room of his gas station to see white smoke billowing from the Pentagon.

Calling worldwide attention to the U.S. government lies surrounding the Pentagon crash, the book l'Effroyable Imposture (The Horrifying Fraud) was published in France. The book makes a strong argument that Flight 77 did not crash into the Pentagon on 9/11.

It is written by Thierry Meyssan, "president of the Voltaire Network, a respected independent think tank whose left-leaning research projects have until now been considered models of reasonableness and objectivity

Although the state sponsored American media has widely denounced the book, The book is widely denounced by the media, the book set a publishing record for first-month sales.

One of the French writer's theories is that people within the US government wanted to hit the Pentagon for its propaganda effect, but at the same time did not want to create a lot of damage or kill important people like Defense Secretary Rumsfeld.

He makes an important point that the plane hit the one section under construction, thus greatly reducing the loss of life. Furthermore, at point of impact was the first and only wall to be reinforced and have blast-resistant windows installed as part of an upgrade plan, considerably reducing damage and the loss of life.

Besides numerous questions surrounding the implausibility of a large airliner making such a small hole on impact, as measured by independent researchers, the entire flight path of Flight 77 is seriously questioned, as it was allowed to meander in highly protected airspace for more than 40 minutes without being detected or picked up by fighter jets.

Also in question is the quick identity made of all the passengers on board, as the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology supposedly positively identified 176 of the 189 killed at the Pentagon by November 16, 2001, a task several credible pathologists consider remarkable considering the extent of damage. It should be noted that specifics of the autopsy were never revealed, but conducted under cover at a military hospital in Dover, Delaware.

According to an article written by Dr. Thomas Olmsted, the government pathology report was highly inconsistent and filled with many discrepancies. He writes:

"The AFIP (pathology report) suggest these numbers; 189 killed, 125 worked at the Pentagon and 64 were "passengers" on the plane. The AA list only had 56 and the list just obtained has 58. They did not explain how they were able to tell "victims" bodies from "hijacker" bodies. In fact, from the beginning NO explanation has been given for the extra five suggested in news reports except that the FBI showed us the pictures to make up the difference, and that makes it so.

"So I figured that the government would want to quickly dispel any rumors. It seemed simple: produce the names of all the bodies identified by the AFIP and compare it with the publicized list of passengers. So, I sent a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request to the AFIP and asked for an expedited response, because we were getting ready to send our boys to war on the pretext that Osama/Sadaam had done the deed.

"Fourteen months later, a few US soldiers dead, many Iraqi civilians pushing up daisies, and I finally get the list. Believe me that they weren't a bit happy to give it up, and I really have no idea why they choose now to release it.

"No Arabs wound up on the morgue slab; however, three additional people not listed by American Airline sneaked in. I have seen no explanation for these extras. I did give American the opportunity to "revise" their original list, but they have not responded. The new names are: Robert Ploger, Zandra Ploger, and Sandra Teague.

"The AFIP claims that the only "passenger" body that they were not able to identify is the toddler, Dana Falkenberg, whose parents and young sister are on the list of those identified. The satanic masterminds behind this caper may be feeling pretty smug about the perfect crime, but they have left a raft of clues tying these unfortunates together."

And although Calley was listed as one of the people killed in the crash and her paper ID was supposedly found in the rubble in tact, consider the fact the FBI never provided DNA profiles of the hijackers to medical examiners for identification because the official position was that "there was a giant fireball on impact that not only destroyed the airplane, but actually vaporized the metal."

So if there was a giant fireball how did the paper ID survive when metal was vaporized?

As another rescue worker at the Pentagon said in a news report two months after 9/11: "The only way you could tell that an aircraft was inside was that we saw pieces of the nose gear. The devastation was horrific."

Italian TV Nails U.S. Military for Illegal Use of Chemical Weapons on Iraqi Citizens

U.S. Media scooped by RAI TV Italiano as broadcast reveals "proof positive" of napalm MK77 used to wipe-out innocent Iraqi women and children in November 2004 Fallujah attack.

8 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The U.S. military is up to its filthy, dirty tricks again and even though the state sponsored media continually turns a blind eye to the use of chemical weaponry on civilians in Iraq, an Italian TV station has finally decided to the air the truth.

RAI News 24, an Italian satellite TV outlet, will broadcast exclusive footage Tuesday night, showing proof positive the U.S. government sanctioned the use of chemical weapons, including a new mixture of napalm called MK77, as well as showing civilians with illuminating white phosphorus during its November 2004 bombardment of Fallujah.

The highly controversial investigative story, produced by Maurizio Torealta and obviously whitewashed by the American press, shows dramatic footage, revealing the deadly effects of the chemical bombardment on civilians, including women and children, many of whom were surprised in their sleep.

The RAI broadcast explains how the use of this chemical weaponry is forbidden by an international treaty signed by the U.S. in 1997 and how the use of incendiary substances on civilians is strictly forbidden by another 1980 treat signed by the U.S.

"RAI News 24 will broadcast video and photographs taken in the Iraqi city during and after the November 2004 bombardment which prove that the US military, contrary to statements in a December 9 communiqué from the US Department of State, did not use phosphorus to illuminate enemy positions (which would have been legitimate) but instead dropped white phosphorus indiscriminately and in massive quantities on the city's neighborhoods," said a statement released by the Italian station.

"The investigation will also broadcast documentary proof of the use in Iraq of a new napalm formula called MK77." The broadcast also includes eye-witness accounts by U.S. soldiers who claim seeing "bodies melting away before their eyes."

In the broadcast, a U.S. veteran of the Iraq war tells RAI New correspondent Sigfrido Ranucci: "I received the order use caution because we had used white phosphorus on Fallujah. In military slag it is called 'Willy Pete'. Phosphorus burns the human body on contact--it even melts it right down to the bone."

According to other soldiers, it's called Willy Pete, but the technical name is white phosphorus. In theory its purpose is to illumine enemy positions in the dark. In practice, claims RAI TV, it was used as a chemical weapon in the rebel stronghold of Fallujah.

The broadcast also shows the illegal weaponry was used not only against enemy combatants and guerrillas, but again innocent civilians.

"The Americans are responsible for a massacre using unconventional weapons, the identical charge for which Saddam Hussein stands accused," said the Italian journalists who finally pulled the veil from one of the most carefully concealed mysteries from the front in the entire US military campaign in Iraq.

"I gathered accounts of the use of phosphorus and napalm from a few Fallujah refugees whom I met before being kidnapped," says Manifesto reporter Giuliana Sgrena, who was kidnapped in Fallujah last February, in a recorded interview. "I wanted to get the story out, but my kidnappers would not permit it."

Fallujah: La strage nascosta, (Fallujah, The Concealed Massacre), will be shown on RAI News Nov. 8 at 07:35 (via HOT BIRDTM satellite, Sky Channel 506 and RAI-3), and rebroadcast by HOT BIRDTM satellite and Sky Channel 506 at 17:00 (5 pm) and over the next two days.

Jimmy Walter, Philanthropist and 9/11 Truth-Seeker, Returns from Europe to Picket Outside New York Times Building in Week-Long Protest of Media Censorship

Returning from a self-imposed European exile due to FBI harassment, the outspoken American multi-millionaire again wants to 'turn up the heat' on the 9/11 truth movement.

7 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Jimmy Walter, the American philanthropist and 9/11 truth-seeker, is setting his sights this week on the corrupt state sponsored media, taking his protest to the streets directly in front of the New York Times Building.

Walter and a large contingent of media protestors will be picketing in front of the Times Building every day this week during employee shift changes at 7a.m., 3p.m. and 7p.m. in an attempt to force media coverage sorely lacking concerning 9/11.

"I am accusing the New York Times of being cowards, traitors and censoring important facts about 9/11, including my challenge to give away one million dollars to anyone who can categorically prove the validity of the government's official version of how the Twin Towers collapsed," said Walter Sunday in a telephone interview from New York about an ongoing contest he is sponsoring, the details being outlined on his web site www.reopen911.org.

"I am also accusing them of censoring many other important stories, including the story of William Rodriguez, the WTC head maintenance man who heard explosions rock the sub levels of the North Tower prior to the plane striking the top floors."

Walter, a long time nemesis of the neo-con Bush administration over its obvious involvement and cover-up of 9/11, returned to New York this week from his home away from home in Vienna, Austria, where he re-located in protest of the U.S. government's imperialistic posture both home and abroad.

Walter also claims on his web site that he left the states in a self-imposed exile due to constant FBI/CIA attacks, threats and lack of police investigations into the government harassment leveled at him for his stance on 9/11 truth.

"They can attack me physically to shut me up yet the police and FBI do nothing. I give away T-shirts and they send a sergeant to intimidate myself and my secretary. You would have to be stupid to stay. I can continue the fight here," said Walter in a public statement on his web site.

And concerning his motives regarding his activism, one New Yorker close to the 9/11 truth movement summed it up this way:

"His heart has always been in the right place and he has been very generous to many others trying to uncover the government lies about 9/11. He's for real when it comes to getting at the truth and he has no hidden agendas."

A multi-millionaire businessman, Walter for years has been one of the few who people who has put his money where is mouth is," dipping deep into his pockets and spending millions in a broad effort to uncover what he calls "the real truth behind 9/11."

Besides funding one of the most highly read 9/11 truth web sites on the internet, reopen911.org, Walter has spent millions on commercial advertising over the years. His most recent television ad campaign, which can be previewed on his web site, includes more than $300,000 spent in New York, Miami and other large city markets across the country.

In September 2004, Walter also funded the jam-packed Omission Commission in Manhattan: "Confronting the Evidence - a call to reopen the 9/11 investigation."

Walter said the reason for the event was twofold: "First, to expose a complete accounting of the facts and circumstances surrounding the 9/11 attacks; second, like the 9/11 Commission to make recommendations.

"In this made-for-broadcast forum," Walters added, "presenters had the task of laying out a compelling case for their evidence. The panel, composed of 9/11 victims, environmental experts, researchers, scientists, journalists and first responders, challenged some of the key data that had been the basis of the 9/11 Commission's investigations and pointed out many serious omissions and incongruities."

Walter said he is also in New York to protest Tuesday's mayoral elections between incumbent Republican billionaire Michael Bloomberg and Democratic Bronx Borough President, Fernando Ferrer, adding he wants to uncover why the truth concerning the government cover-up has not been made a major campaign issue.

"I am just trying to find out why none of the mayoral candidates has even mentioned the lies surrounding 9/11, but in particular the EPA (environmentally related) lies," said Walter, adding Mayor Bloomberg and others have repeatedly lied about 9/11 safety and health issues, leading to the death and illness of many first responders, including New York's own fireman and policeman.

"People have died because of the lies spread by the Mayor's office and the White House, making their cover-up of the truth nothing less than manslaughter or murder."

On Walter's web site, he details why people are dying from hazardous environmental conditions concerning 9/11 and the enormous support in New York to reopen truthful 9/11 hearings, two issues completely whitewashed by Bloomberg, former Mayor Rudy Giuliani and the Bush White House

"In order to reopen Wall Street, the Bush administration censored crucial EPA and New York City Health Department warnings that the air after 9/11 was highly poisonous. The White House forced the EPA to say "The air is safe to breathe" at the World Trade Center. This has seriously injured the health of Manhattan workers and residents, is even killing some of the heroes who worked at Ground Zero.

"EPA administrator Christine Whitman, Mayor Giuliani and NYC health departments lied to New Yorkers and visitors from around the world that there were "No Significant Problems". There were no Arabs, Muslims, or hijackers involved in these crimes. Just United States, NY City, and NY government officials committed these major felonies and misdemeanors which, when one of these people dies, will be Second Degree Murder! Read the EPA Inspector General Report, which exposes the crimes, the MSNBC article, and another MSNBC article.

"Rescue workers are suing the EPA for lying because they were sent to work without proper protective gear, exposing them to PCBs, asbestos, benzene and other known carcinogens.

"So many have been affected that there is new diagnosis in New York City called "WTC cough". Scientists Dr. Cate Jenkins, Dr. Marjorie Clarke, Paul Bartlett, and others, warned about inhaling toxic dust and fumes, but were ignored by the agencies in charge.

"For more details please go to the World Trade Center Environmental Organization (wtceo.org) and 'Messages in the Dust'.

"See what Criminal Charges victims working at or near ground zero may have to file with the Manhattan District Attorney against Mayor Giuliani; Christie Whitman; James L. Connaughton, Chair of White House Council on Environmental Quality, Antonia C. Novello, NY Health Commissioner; Neal Cohen, NYC Health Commissioner; Thomas R. Frieden, NYC Health Commissioner starting January of 2002; and Sam Thurmstrom, White House Press Coordinator who told the lies first.

"Remember 66% of New York City residents believe that the 9/11 investigation should be re-opened, as well as 60% of the residents of New York state, according to a recent Zogby Poll. The New York Times did not report it! We had to pay for an ad to get the poll in the New York Times.

"And 49% of New York City residents and 41% of New York citizens overall say that some US leaders "knew in advance that attacks were planned on or around September 11, 2001, and that they consciously failed to act", according to a recent Zogby Poll.

"Bush and Cheney blocked the 9/11 investigation. Initially Bush denied an investigation into the 9/11 attacks was necessary. Bush later got Sen. Tom Daschle and the 9/11 Commission to limit the investigation's budget to $600,000; yet Republicans spent $65,000,000 on whether President Clinton had sex in the oval office. Bush has never testified under oath. His administration has refused to release thousands of documents pertaining to 9/11."

Walter said he will remain in New York, depending on media coverage, until Dec 7, 8 and 8 when he travels to Tampa and Miami for a 9/11 truth speaking tour he has financed and organized to coincide with Pearl Harbor Day.

The event will kick-off at the Tampa Auditorium December 7 and speakers include Rodriguez, declared a national hero for his heroics at ground zero, as well as 9/11 activists and radio hosts Joyce Riley and Dave Von Kliest of the highly popular "Power Hour" on the Genesis Communications Network.

According to Walter's bio his day job, as he calls it, is using his extensive economic experience to start and operate several progressive, futuristic, sustainable and eco-friendly enterprises.

Known worldwide as an ecological crusader, he heads Walden Three, an environmental based think tank dedicated to preserving our environment while stimulating the economy and providing luxurious lifestyle for all.

Walden Three is a paradigm for future architectural and 'bio-tecture' development. He is working with architect R. Edmond of HASSELL Pty Ltd, Melbourne, Australia, who won the Urban Design Competition for Architecture.

Irwin Schiff Railroaded Right to Slammer by Two-Bit Federal Judge Running Kanagaroo Las Vegas Court

The 77-year-old tax protestor being held without bond and in chains after being convicted on 14 counts, including conspiracy and income tax evasion. Trial observers say court proceedings looked like an episode of the "Three Stooges" with "Moe, Curly and Larry" prosecuting the case.

6 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Hurry! Hurry! Read all about it!

Public enemy No. 1 Irwin Schiff is in chains and being held without bond as a flight risk in the Las Vegas City Jail, as the 77-year-old tax crook was recently convicted last week on 14 counts of income tax evasion.

Now that's the bogus headline the government wants America to read and believe about the freedom-fighting tax guru who claims income taxes have been illegally collected for years.

But the real criminals in this unfortunate case are those professing to uphold justice, being "Moe, Curly and Larry," the nicknames given to the Schiff prosecution team, as well as the two-bit, crooked card-dealing Las Vegas federal judge named Kent Dawson, who essentially railroaded Schiff right to the slammer.

Now that's a bold statement, one these legal bozos aren't used to hearing and one not usually associated with so-called "officers of the court."

But if the shoe fits, wear it.

And in this case the "judicial shoes" are a perfect fit for nothing less than a "judicial fix" in order to keep the government charade going that income taxes are legal and constitutional.

For lack of a better explanation and without presenting a 500 page legal argument, the constitutionality and legality of the income tax law is an outright lie and nothing but a legal fantasy, a legal myth being perpetuated by every federal judge, prosecutor and IRS agent in the land determined in keeping the "cash cow" safely bedded down in Uncle Sam's barn.

Anyone with half a brain who reads the constitution and its related tax cases has really no choice but to come to the same conclusion, the undisputable conclusion that the collection of income taxes is unconstitutional.

But what's right, just and fair and, for that matter constitutional, means nothing when it comes to disrupting the government's cash flow. And Schiff is just another example in the long line of people abused, used and thrown to the dogs by a group of judicial rats, lacking any type of integrity, honor or sense of fair play.

"The judge in Irwin's case was a complete and utter tyrant," said Mike Golden, a close friend of Schiff who sat by his side every day through out the two-month trial. "Dawson ought to be thrown off the bench and to say that Irwin was railroaded was an understatement.

"I watched and listened to the entire proceeding and there were many in the courtroom whose jaws were dropping by the conduct of the so-called. He made no bones about it that he didn't like Irwin, having the audacity in open court on the third or fourth day to even say and I quote: "The law has nothing to do with the trial."

"Behind closed doors Dawson even told Irwin that if he tries to introduce law into his court, every time he does it he'll get one day in jail. I could see the judge counting the days while Irwin talked without the jury knowing and I think even if he wasn't convicted he would have spent at least six years in jail just on contempt charges..

"It was nothing less than a judicial joke and I even nicknamed the prosecutors, who looked like the Three Stooges, Moe, Curly and Larry. I was kicked out of court several times for making comments, but when they got word of their nicknames, I even heard them call each other the names of the Stooges."

Despite the intermittent levity, the Schiff federal trial from a legal prospective became a kangaroo court, according to Golden, other legal observers and Schiff's new appellate attorney, Mike Nash of Chicago.

Nash, an attorney with 30 years appellate experience, came on the scene several days ago as Schiff finally became convinced outside legal help may be his only chance of survival and not dying in jail in the face of what he now fully understands is a corrupt system bent on putting him away for life.

"Mike saw Irwin just a couple of days ago and is trying to keep his spirits up and is confident the trial errors in this case will eventually set Irwin free," said Golden, adding that when he first visited Schiff in jail last week he was kept in chains and deprived of adequate blanketing in a cold and damp jail cell. "I have been a paramedic and let me tell you Irwin looked like he was on his last legs. While the other prisoners were walking without cuffs, here we have a 77-year-old man held without and as a flight risk and still kept in manacles."

"He was given no blankets and when I saw him, he damn near fell off the chair he was sitting because he was so cold and weak."

Also commenting on the unfairness of the Schiff conviction was Phil Hart, a Republican State Legislator from Idaho, who has written an extensive book called "Constitutional Income" that presents a solid legal argument that the income tax laws are an unjust tax as well as blatantly unconstitutional.

"The government just doesn't want to listen to the arguments and Irwin's case is a prime example," said Hart this week from his Idaho office, adding his research about income taxes dates all the way back to the Magna Carta. "Until Americans are educated about their own constitutional in relation to the income tax laws and until they want to change things as they are today, the government will continue to unfairly tax its citizens.

"The only way to change things is to get enough political momentum and people behind the unconstitutional nature of the income tax laws."

Despite arguments made by people like Schiff and Rep. Hart, the attorneys for the Justice Department's tax Division had a different take on the Schiff prosecution.

"People who evade their tax obligations, or encourage or enable others to do so, are cheating all law-abiding taxpayers," said Eileen O'Connor, assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Tax Division, adding this marks the third time Schiff, who served as his own attorney during the five-week trial, has been convicted of tax-related offenses.

"Paying taxes is the price of citizenship. After three times, I would hope that even Schiff realizes that he has struck out," said Internal Revenue Service Commissioner Mark Everson.

Schiff, who will be sentenced in January 20, faces a maximum term of 43 years in prison and $3.25 million in fines for charges including income tax evasion and filing false tax returns for the years 1997 through 2002.

Cynthia Neun, 52, a co-defendant, faces up to 50 years and $3.3 million in fines, convicted on 15 counts, including conspiracy, tax evasion, aiding in the filing of fraudulent tax returns.

A third co-defendant, Lawrence Cohen, 65, was found guilty of one count of aiding in the filing of fraudulent tax returns and acquitted on three other counts of the same charge, and of conspiracy.

For years, Schiff has been holding tax seminars and selling books such as "The Federal Mafia: How the Government Illegally Imposes and Unlawfully Collects Income Taxes" and "The Great Income Tax Hoax: Why You Can Immediately Stop Paying This Illegally Enforced Tax."

Possible U.S. and Israeli Connection in Assassination of Rafiq Harari, the Former Popular Lebanese Leader

U.S. mafia hit squads may again have their ugly hands in the car bombing of Lebanese President. U.S. Intelligence reports were quick to finger Syria, but critics contend the killing was U.S. backed in order to justify a future Syrian invasion.

4 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The official U.S. mafia, masquerading as a legitimate government, has again exposed its dirty, itchy trigger finger in the February assassination of former Lebanese Prime Minister Rafiq Harari.

Harari, 61, was killed in a powerful Beirut explosion, rocking his heavily guarded car caravan as it traveled near a seaside resort area, the shocking murder immediately plunging the country into a state of shock and hysteria.

Although specific trigger-men cannot yet being squarely identified or nabbed, reports are starting to circulate eight months after the incident that a joint U.S. and Israeli hit squad killed the popular Lebanese political figure.

But quickly after Harari was killed to cover any American-Israeli shenanigans, U.S. intelligence reports pointed the finger squarely on Syria in an attempt to further inflame relations between the two countries as well as give the U.S. another reason, albeit a misguided and wrong one, to justify a future Syrian invasion, a plan reportedly being concocted by the maniacal U.S. Vice President Dick Cheney and his band of neo-con thugs.

The U.S. charges, filtering through the Lebanese-controlled media, of course, outraged Syrian leaders, even leading to the reported recent suicide of Syrian Interior Minister, Ghazi Kanaan, who just hours prior to killing himself left a statement categorically denying his involvement, despite repeated media reports pointing the finger at him and his country's leaders.

In a live state broadcast startling listeners, Kanaan made these statements just before killing himself:

"This is going to be the final declaration that I can make.

"We have affection and mutual respect for Lebanon ... We have served the interests of Lebanon with dignity," he said in the dramatic intervention.

"I will let the people of Lebanon pronounce their verdict. Our action allowed us to reunify Lebanon, while this unity ... would have been impossible without Syria.

"I am calling you to give a declaration concerning what was broadcast [on] Tuesday on NTV, which has not ceased to broadcast lies aimed at fooling public opinion especially concerning what happened when I met the UN commission of enquiry and Syria's assistance to come to the truth as Syria has an interest that the truth comes out."

"As for my testimony, light was shed on the period when I served in Lebanon and I spoke about everything that I was asked," he said, adding that the commission had a transcript of the interview that backed his own account.

"I wonder if the motivation of this station was its hatred of Hariri that is known to everyone or if someone fed them the poison and they fell into the trap. If we had benefited so much from Rafiq Hariri, I don't understand how we could have killed him."

Besides Syrian leaders denying the assassination charge, chairman of Lebanon's own Najada Party this week publicly called on the U.N. investigation team looking into Hariri's killing not to discount U.S./Israeli involvement.

"Israel has numerous interest in the assassination act, on top of which is hitting and harming the Syrian-Lebanese relations, as well as imposing siege on Syria because she is the last fortified citadel in the face of the Israeli project in the region," Hakim said in a statement.

However, pressured by U.S. influence, the present UN investigation seems to be tilted only in Syria's direction as the internal UN dossier on the Hariri assassination prepared by Detlev Mehlis, the German prosecutor appointed by UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan, quite possibly might even include the names of high-ranking Syrian officials including the president's brother Maher.

Upon completion of his investigation, sources close to the Syrian regime fear Mehlis may include on the suspects list Brig. Gen. Rustum Ghazaleh, former chief of Syrian intelligence in Lebanon who recently retired as well as Maher Assad.

Right after the February 14 car bombing killed Hariri, eight in his caravan and wounded about 100 others, Qatar's al-Jazeera television broadcast a tape showing a bearded man claiming to speak on behalf of an unknown Muslim fundamentalist group, "Jamaat al-Nasrat wal-Jihad-Bilad al-Sham" (Al Jihad's Partisans for Greater Syria). The group reportedly is believed to be linked to Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida network.

As of today, the man identified as Ahmed Abu Adas has been linked as a "Saudi agent" but what organization and the covert operatives that orchestrated and planned the killing have not been uncovered.

And as noted in a recent Lebanese broadcast, many serious questions remain. Was Abu Adas the real suicide bomber? And if so, was Adas used by some intelligence service other than Syria's that had close U.S./Israeli ties?

Although speculation and name throwing abounds in overseas espionage and assassination stories, here at home credible information has surfaced on numerous fronts, pinning U.S. covert operatives with the killing of the former president of the American University in Beirut.

Besides this assassination being carried out by a group of covert U.S. Marines, it is well known that as far back as the 1953 coup in Guatemala, the military has been involved in Mafia-style hits, even publishing an official "Assassin's Killers Manual" as solid evidence.

Concerning the Hariri killing, Sen. Robert Byrd (D-WV) recently received correspondence from a source trying to get to the bottom of the killing, alerting him to the possible U.S./Israeli connection.

First, the correspondence alerted Sen. Byrd of a statement made by Col. Lawrence Wilkerson, former Chief Aid to Colin Powell, warning of a secret cabal within our government operating above the law.

"What I saw was a cabal between the vice-president of the United States, Richard Cheney, and the secretary of defense, Donald Rumsfeld, on critical issues that made decisions that the bureaucracy did not know were being made.

"Now it is paying the consequences of making those decisions in secret, but far more telling to me is America is paying the consequences," said Col Wilkerson.

Specifically regarding the Harari assassination, Sen. Byrd was alerted of the possibility of the former Lebanese leader being killed "by a small group of professional assassins," headed by a man with dual Israeli/American citizenship and with close ties to "the U.S. Pentagon, in specific, a secret Pentagon committee, set up by Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld in October 2001."

Dirt Starting to Fly Around Alito's Supreme Court Nomination Saying He Is A "Mafia Friendly Insider"

Former Italian government informant talks about Alito's shady past, including dishing out favors to known underworld figures.

3 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The dirt is starting to fly around the Supreme Court nomination of federal court judge Samuel Alito, Jr., called by some a "mafia friendly insider" who takes a liking to shady, smoke-filled backroom dealings with thugs in the New York Gotti crime family and other New Jersey mobsters.

Alito, 55, familiar with the underworld's influence in New Jersey politics as well its racketeering and bribery operations in other states like Illinois and Pennsylvania, has been linked to "going easy, turning the other cheek and knowingly turning loose" crime family thugs when he served as a U.S. Attorney in New Jersey, primarily handling organized crime cases.

One former FBI/CIA undercover informant, living in Italy and who will remain anonymous, came forward this week, saying talk on the street when he was on the East Coast during Alito's tenure as a supposed crime-busting U.S. Attorney was that he was "tight and friendly, dishing out legal favors to known crime members."

Although certain FBI reports since have internally cleared Alito of any mischief or wrongdoing, critics including the former Italian informant, claim "official investigations" don't tell the real story behind Alito's backroom legal antics.

"He was close to everything and a lot of connected people walked when he was a U.S. Attorney," said the informant from an undisclosed location in Italy. "He knows how to play the game and he plays it well. Getting the truth is going to be tuff. Alito has a lot of friends, the kind of guys who don't talk."

Further reports have also surfaced from the U.S., Italy and elsewhere that Alito is a key member of a renegade but influential worldwide group called "Propaganda-Due" or P-2, well-known overseas for orchestrating assassinations of key figures in order to advance its jaded notion of world supremacy.

The shady activities of P-2 has for decades been on the front pages of Italian newspapers, linking its members to numerous Vatican finance scandals and assassinations as far back as the murder of former Italian leader Aldo Moro.

And now stories are beginning to surface that Alito is a part of P-2, a group that considers itself above the law, consisting of influential politicians, bankers and businessmen from countries like the U.S., Italy, Germany, Switzerland and the United Kingdom.

In light of his conservative legal record as a federal judge in the 3rd Circuit which has appeased the right wing closet neo-cons, many critics consider it "small potatoes" if not irrelevant since Alito appears to "fit in quite well" with the fascist-minded Supreme Court Judge Antonin Scalia, as well as the other four high-court justices who illegally installed George W. Bush as President in 2000, in a ruling considered by certain judicial watchdog groups investigating the installment of Bush as "fraught with corruption, bribery and illegal judicial profiteering."

With the emotionally charged issues of abortion and other social concerns about to take center stage in the Alito nomination hearings, watchdog judicial groups are now starting to demand Senators delve deeply into Alito's past ties with organized crime as well as his underhanded dealings with politicians like New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg and Sen. Hillary Clinton (D-NY), both interconnected with corrupt financial affairs involving the New York and New Jersey underworld.

Another interesting aspect of Alito's past, showing the "good old boy's club" at work in the Bush administration, is his relationship with the corrupt and unscrupulous Michael Chertoff, the head of Homeland Security.

Chertoff, who took over administering what has been termed by many Americans as a "Gestapo-like" homeland surveillance agency after 9/11, served as Alito's First Assistant in the New Jersey's U.S. Attorney's office where together they supposedly arranged cover-ups, benefiting financially from many shady dealings with the underworld, as well as Israeli fronted companies dealing in the illegal arms trade sanctioned by the Mossad and the CIA.

According to a report released by a judge-busting investigator privy to inside information, Chertoff and Alito's association was far more about breaking the law than upholding to the principles of justice, an oath Alito again must take "with perhaps his fingers crossed" if and when he is added to the Supreme Court.

Citing specifics and circulated on various internet outlets including www.cloakanddagger.de, the shady report on Chertoff and Alito alleged:

"They jointly arranged apparently to cover up and personally financially benefit from numerous crimes committed by renegade groups of officials and agents of Israeli Intelligence, The Mossad, operating front companies for various scams.

"These criminal gangs arranged rackets skimming off vast sums from runaway corruption among Judges and other court officials in the U.S. Bankruptcy Courts. Also Alito and Chertoff reputedly profitably engaged in clandestine and corrupt weapons deals with supposedly Israeli weapons and defense contractors located in New Jersey. In favor of Gestapo tactics, Chertoff after 9-11 became head of Homeland Security.

"Alito, with the help of Chertoff, likewise reportedly covered up various rackets perpetrated by Israeli gangsters more or less resident in New Jersey, victimizing suckers; quoting them lowball figures for furniture moving and then at the destination demanding a huge price which if not paid, the Israeli criminals would threaten to empty the contents of the moving vans into the Hudson River."

The choice of Alito comes four days after Bush's first appointee, his personal friend and lawyer, Harriet Miers, resigned because of legal incompetence. Alito, originally appointed to the federal bench in 1990 by Daddy Bush is seen as a strong conservative voice nicknamed "Scalito" for his philosophical similarities with Justice Scalia, also called my many of his critics the "Go To Hell Judge" for his insensitive and underhanded rulings.

Regarding abortion, Alito is most definitely opposed to it, backing a Pennsylvania law as a federal judge in Planned Parenthood v. Casey, that required women to inform their husbands before they sought an abortion.

Historic Vermont Meeting in State Capital Passes Resolution to Secede from the U.S.

The members of a peaceful freedom-fighting group want no part of neo-cons running the imperialistic U.S. government. Plan to secede from the U.S. gaining momentum in the fiercely independent Green Mountain state.

2 Nov 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The neo-con band of criminals running Washington, trampling on civil rights at home and invading countries at will overseas, has led a large group of strong-minded Vermont freedom-fighters with no choice but to secede from the United States.

And last Friday at the state capital building in Montpelier, a historic independence convention was held, the first of its kind in the United States since May 20, 1861, when North Carolina decided to leave the Union.

A packed House Chamber in the Vermont statehouse, with more than 400 gathered, started the daylong secession convention with a speech by keynote James Howard Kunstler, author of The Long Emergency, and ended with a resolution passed to secede from the United States.

Most people think of secession as impossible if not treasonous, but the concept is deeply rooted in the Declaration of Independence, reminding us that "Whenever any form of government becomes destructive, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it and to institute new government."

And with the neo-con takeover of Washington, including all its branches of government that transforming America into a one-party dictatorship, that's exactly what the resolution passed in Vermont seeks to do by members of grassroots movement growing in numbers daily.

Although the resolution is the first step in the long process that needs support from the state legislators - as well as an officially recognized convention - the grass roots group called the Second Vermont Republic passed the following citizen's resolution:

"Be it resolved that the state of Vermont peacefully and democratically free itself from the United States of America and return to its natural status as an independent republic as it was between January 15, 1777 and March 4, 1791."

Even though critics give the secession group 'a snowball's chance in hell,' organizers are firmly convinced in the present-day tyrannical political climate secession will not only succeed but will prosper.

"This could only happen in Vermont where people are still fiercely independent and fed up with the course the American government is taking," said Thomas Naylor, the head of the group calling itself the Second Republic of Vermont. "We have a lot going for us and if you think about it, we have a lot in common with Poland's Solidarity movement, who many said would never succeed."

"But Poland did get its freedom, mainly because it was a country liked around the world, sort of like how people in America feel about Vermont. When people think of Vermont, they have a warm and fuzzy feeling, an image of black and white Holstein cows and beautiful scenery. I can also tell you there is now closet support in the legislature now and we are serious about getting the support needed to secede from the United States.'

Naylor, a former Duke University economics professor, said from his Vermont home this week that statewide independence is really a euphemism for secession, adding Vermont also will seek to join the group of Unrepresented Nations similar to the Lakota Indians and other international indigenous people.

"Secession is one of the most politically charged words in America, thanks to Abraham Lincoln," said Naylor, adding he had been writing about secession for the better part of 10 years but the movement picked up tremendous steam after 9/11. "Secession really combines a radical act of rebellion grounded in fear and anger with a positive vision for the future.

"It represents an act of faith that the new will be better than the old. The decision to secede necessarily involves a very personal, painful four-step decision process. It first involves denunciation that the United States has lost its moral authority and is unsustainable, ungovernable and unfixable. Second, there is disengagement or admitting 'I don't want to go down with the Titanic. Third, there is demystification that secession really is a viable option constitutionally, politically and economically. And finally, defiance, saying 'I personally want to help take Vermont back from big business, big markets and big government and I want to do so peacefully.'"

What started out as Naylor's little fantasy to have an independent country made up of Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, has already grown from a small group of 36 several years ago to a packed House Chamber in the state's capital. Claiming to have a membership of 160 as of last April, Naylor said the numbers have doubled or even tripled.

"I'm getting calls from all over the country supporting our movement," said Naylor. "Although there are more than 20 states with some kind of secession movement, Alaska and Hawaii being the best examples, I think Vermont really has the best chance at succeeding at seceding."

Besides holding the Vermont independence convention in Montpelier, the smallest state capital city in the United States, it also has the reputation as being the most fiercely independent and anti- big business, being the only one not allowing a McDonald's in the entire country.

"First and foremost, we want out of the United States. It's not just an anti-Bush statement and if Kerry was elected, we still would have wanted out," said Naylor. "The reality is that we have a one party system in this country, called the Republican party, that is owned and operated and controlled by corporate America. So it's not just a Bush protest, but a protest against the Empire.

Although many critics have said the mighty U.S. would not stand for Vermont's secession, Naylor as well as others disagree, including Jim Hogue, a talk show host on Vermont Public radio.

"There's nothing they would want here. There's no oil, just mountains. We're just not important enough. We're funny, we're small and we're peaceful," said Hogue several months ago in an article in the Montreal Gazette.

With most Vermont politicians, including the Congressional delegation, ignoring the grassroots secession movement or just laughing it off as good theatre, Vermont's Lt. Gov., Brian Dubie, has weighed in on the issue, giving it a certain amount of merit but stopping short of outright support.

"I really salute their energy and passion," he said in a local press interview. "we have an obligation to think of what is in our best interest as a state and for the people of our state, even as we approach federal and national issues."

Besides Naylor and Kuntsler, others who spoke at the Oct. 28 independence convention included Professor Frank Bryan of the University of Vermont; Kirkpatrick Sale, author of Human Scale; J. Kevin Graffagnino, executive director of the Vermont Historical Society; Professor Eric Davis, Middlebury College; Shay Totten, editor of the Vermont Guardian; and Dr. Rob Williams of Champlain College.

Wife of POW Navy Pilot, Who Had Husband's Remains Sent Home By North Vietnamese in 1989, Was Lied to by U.S. Officials For Years About His Whereabouts And POW Status

Diane Van Renselaar says she still hasn't gotten the truth about her husband from the military and lawmakers, including Sen. John McCain who she claims is 'no friend' of POW families and has backstabbed them every step of the way toward getting at the truth.

31 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The remains of captured Navy pilot, Larry Van Renselaar, came home in a body bag, sent back by the North Vietnamese in 1989, after his wife put up a 20 year fight against a corrupt U.S. government, concealing her husband's whereabouts as a POW for political expediency reasons.

Instead of telling Diane Van Renselaar her husband was alive and in a slave labor camp, the lying contingent of morally irreprehensible politicians and military brass concealed his status, closing the official book on the pilot in 1978 even though credible CIA intelligence information revealed he was still alive in 1987, two years before he arrived home in a body bag.

"Larry was shot down on September 30, 1968. They closed his case in 1978. In fact, John McCain, who is a very dangerous and violent man, was the driving force behind closing all the POW files, classifying records in order to keep the truth from the families and the American people," said Van Renselaar this week from her home in Corte Madera, California.

"McCain is even more dangerous than Bush. I don't want to see this man ever become President and that's why I want this story out because he is one of the biggest liars in our government and, by no means, a friend of the POW families.

"After backstabbing all of us, hiding the truth about the POW story, I wish they would have kept him in a prison camp for life like so many others who didn't have his military and political clout. If they lied to us about this, just think about the lies spread about 9/11 and the present-day war in Iraq?"

Van Renselaar's story is just another in a growing number of cases, showing the deceit, deception and outright lies advanced by the Pentagon, Congress and the Executive towards POW family members seeking the truth about their loved ones,

The cold, hard facts, said Renselaar's wife, is the U.S. government has left thousands of prisoners left behind, telling family members they were "missing, presumed dead" when high-ranking scoundrel-Senators John Kerry and McCain continue to advance government lies started after World War II by then President Eisenhower.

Van Renselaar, a leading activist for more than 30 years in bringing home POW's who still may be alive in North Korea and Vietnam, started the search for the POW truth after her husband was taken prisoner, but over the years the story has grown wings larger than expected, revealing government corruption and lies at the highest levels, including Kerry, McCain, former President George H. Bush and many others.

Her long and difficult quest of searching for the truth has opened up so many cans of political worms, most high-ranking officials like McCain and "Daddy Bush" run and hide when they see her face in the halls of government.

Perhaps it's guilt, knowing the real truth or wanting to save their political hides, but without question these high-ranking, two-faced politicians want nothing to do with the likes of Renselaar, once being on the board of directors of the National League of POW/MIA Families.

"In 1992, when George H. Bush was giving a political speech with many of the POW families gathered in a large hotel ballroom trying to get answers, I said straight to his face: 'we can help you get elected if you just tell us the truth about the POW's,'" said Van Renselaar, who added Bush basically ignored her request, but had his jaw drop to the floor when she mentioned the name of Lt. Col. William Atkins, a man who told her many sordid things about Bush, including his involvement with the Iran-Contra scandal when Col. Atkins acted as an intermediary between Bush and Oliver North.

"When I told him, again straight to his face, that 'you know Col. Atkins briefed you about many things, including the truth of the POW's,' he look at me with wide-open eyes, saying nothing, but his jaw literally dropped to the floor.

"I talked to Col. Atkins many times about CIA files he had uncovered with Oliver North about John McCain, telling the real truth about McCain's POW captivity. Also, Atkins told me he was a liaison between Bush and North, the pair traveling on Irish passports during Iran-Contra.

The Iran-Contra Affair, also known as "Irangate", took place in the mid-1980s. A political scandal of wide-ranging proportions where President Ronald Reagan's administration sold arms to Iran, an avowed enemy.

At the time, Americans were being held hostage by Islamic terrorists in Lebanon, and it was hoped that Iran would influence the terrorists to release the hostages. At the same time, Iran, which was in the midst of the Iran-Iraq War, could find few nations willing to supply it with weapons.

The U.S. diverted proceeds from the sale to the Contras, anti-Communist guerrillas engaged in an insurgency against the socialist, democratically elected Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

Both the sale of weapons and the funding of the Contras violated stated administration policy as well as legislation passed by the Democratic-controlled Congress, which had blocked further Contra funding.

Col. Atkins, who became a friend and close confidant of Van Renselaar and other POW family members, was arrested in 1992 for his involvement in the Iran-Contra scandal, a twist of fate she said preventing him from testifying about the real truth about McCain and the POW lies advanced by lawmakers and the military.

"I know for a fact Sen. Bob Smith, who was trying to help us get at the truth in the Senate hearings on the POW issue, never got a chance to depose Col Atkins since he was arrested and then jailed for years over Iran-Contra," said Van Renselaar, adding it "was very strange" how Atkins was left to rot in a District of Columbia jail system until at least 1999. "They didn't want him to talk about a lot of things, but he talked to me about McCain's CIA file and many things the senator wants kept from the American people.

"People need to know the truth about McCain. He sealed his own records, as well the records of all POW's, so he could continue lying about his POW experience. He was never tortured, never in a dog-cell like the other prisoners and never deprived of food.

In fact, Col. Atkins, who died in 2001 of a cerebral hemorrhage, told Renselaar that when he and North acquired McCain's CIA file it showed he was out of the system for at least two years, being in an eastern European country instead of being in solitary confinement in a Vietnam jail cell like he has told the public.

To verify Atkins' claim, Van Renselaar said she has talked to several Vietnam POW's in the same camp McCain was held, including Larry Larson, who told her "without a doubt I didn't see McCain for at least a year."

Further, she added John Parcels, a former helicopter pilot, and his wife, Patty, who visited Vietnam after the war, said they were taken on a tour by the North Vietnamese, who showed-off with pride the 'plush cell' in which McCain was held as well as the memorial in his honor put up by the banks of Lake Hanoi.

"Why have the North Vietnamese honored him? What did McCain tell them and how was he really treated?" questioned Van Renselaar, adding Parcels said McCain's prison cell was of a much higher standard than the other dog-cells prisoners were given.

"They gave him special treatment and it is documented he was even out of the country for two years instead of being in solitary confinement. He is lying about what happened and that is why he had his own POW records sealed for life. He was never tortured, never deprived of food and I've even learned he may even have fathered two children after having an affair with his Vietnamese nurse.

"According to my very credible Vietnamese contacts he had an affair with the sister of Nguyen Tan Thanh, a high-placed North Vietnamese official. Since they knew McCain was the son of a Navy Admiral, he was given a special nurse, Tan's sister. I've been told he fathered two sons with her, one attending the University Of Colorado, Up until now, though, we haven't been able to get their names."

Besides what Renselaar calls McCain's "pack of POW lies" about his real record of captivity, she recalls her husband saying McCain was not well-liked by him or other pilots when they were under his direction before the Vietnam War when McCain was an operations officer at a Meridian, Miss., flight-training center.

"I remember my husband saying he was not well-liked and thought of as a hot dog and a punk," said Van Renselaar. "And nothing has changed over the years. Once when POW families were outside his Senate office on Capital Hill demanding answers, he pushed his way through the crowd in a violent manner refusing to answer questions, almost knocking a POW supporter over in her wheel chair."

And last week to keep Renselaar's fight alive, as well as the entire POW issue, Rep. Ron Paul (R-Tex.) has now taken up the cause on Capital Hill to get the truth out about the thousands of living POW's still incarcerated in political prisons around the world.

Last Friday, Rep. Paul held a press conference to revive the issue, officially sending to each legislator on Capital Hill a copy of an historic video called "Missing, Presumed Dead: The Search for American POW's," in an attempt to open new hearings, being introduced under House Resolution 123.

House Resolution 123 seeks to force Congress to investigate "all the unresolved matters relating to any United States personnel unaccounted for from the Vietnam era, the Korean conflict, WW II, the Cold War missions and the Gulf Wars, including all issues regarding MIA's and POW's.

In a portion of the video, written and directed by Hollywood producer, Bill Dumas, former Sen. Bob Smith, pushed out of public life, said he was convinced from the evidence that there are many men still alive in political prison camps in both Korea and Vietnam.

"We should accept the evidence and move ahead to find these men," Sen. Smith said in the documentary.

Rumsfeld And Other Neo-Cons 'Hands Down' Guilty of 1996 War Crimes Act; But Crooked High Court Judges Will Never Have The 'Legal Balls' To Enforce The Law

Army General this week ties Bush and high officials in giving specific orders to administer inhumane and torture at Abu Ghraib and other prison camps around the world.

29 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The law works in strange ways, sometimes allowing the rats to run free while putting the good guys behind bars. It's an old game used by the rich and famous like a stacked deck of cards used in a two-bit, crooked western gambling parlor.

But despite the obvious crooked nature of the law, nobody seems to mind, since the oldest legal tricks in the book are still working today, legal tricks like were used to burn people at the stake, burn the witches in Salem and, more recently, to convict Irwin Schiff of income tax evasion.

In law school, lawyers learn the law is an imperfect system. In life, they learn it is a corrupt system, learning if they don't bend with the crooked administrators, they will be broken by the system they swore to uphold.

So most lawyers end up ethically compromised, bending over like intellectual prostitutes, hiding behind corrupt legal decisions so they, too, can get a little piece of the poisonous pie.

What's interesting about the law is that every right or wrong decision can be justified with even more legal mumbo jumbo, making any accountability, even at the appellate and supreme court levels, virtually impossible.

And it's probably true that two circus clowns, a tight rope walker and a fire-eating sword swallower have more collective sense than most judges and lawyers, as a recent case should bear out, a case of a War Crimes Act violation being advanced by some legal pundits against President "Baby" Bush and his other two-faced cronies running the dog and pony show near the Potomac River.

Before getting into the specifics of the possible Bush administration violations, the record should reflect there doesn't exist one appellate or high court justice in the land with the legal balls and the guts enough to convict Bush, Cheney, Rumsfeld and any of the other scoundrels.

Not one legal whore in the crooked, black-robed bunch will ever step to the plate and do the right thing, even after an Army General this week, in charge of the notorious Abu Ghraib prison, said Rumsfeld and other higher ups directly ordered the inhumane treatment and torture be conducted as a deliberate U.S. strategy.

And what's worse news reports have surfaced that the torture is still going on in many locations worldwide, indicating the administration has no plans to stop, but instead continues to implement policy maneuvers making it easier to carry out torture in the future.

Now, the federal statute in direct violation, being put forth by the legal pundits, is the War Crimes Act of 1996 at 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2441, making it a federal offense for any U.S. national, whether military or civilian to violate the Geneva Convention by engaging in murder, torture or inhumane treatment.

The statute goes on to explain, as pointed out by the legal pundits on George Washington Blog on Oct. 27:

"The statute applies not only to those who carry out the acts, but also to those who ORDER IT, know about it, or fail to take steps to stop it. The statute applies to everyone, no matter how high and mighty.

"18 U.S.C. § 2441 has no statute of limitations, which means that a war crimes complaint can be filed at any time.

"The penalty may be life imprisonment or -- if a single prisoner dies due to torture -- death. Given that there are numerous, documented cases of prisoners being tortured to death by U.S. soldiers in both Iraq and Afghanistan, that means that the death penalty would be appropriate for anyone found guilty of carrying out, ordering, or sanctioning such conduct."

Furthermore, the legal thinkers over at the GW's Blog recapped the damning case against Bush and his cronies, making a pretty open and shut case that probable cause exists to at least bring the high-ranking officials before a court of law, recapping the War Crimes Act violations this way:

"We now know that torture in Iraq was ordered by top officials, and that torture is continuing, notwithstanding the administration's claims that it was only "a couple of bad apples" that were responsible for Abu Ghraib.

"Making a potential prosecutor's job easier, U.S. Attorney General Alberto Gonzales wrote a memo in January 2002 to President Bush saying that America should opt out of the Geneva Convention because top officials have to worry about prosecutions under 18 U.S.C. § 2441.

"By attempting to sidestep the Geneva Convention, Gonzales created a document trail that can be used to prove that top administration officials knowingly created a policy of torturing prisoners, and that such a policy could reasonably have been expected to result in the death of some prisoners.

"The U.S. did opt out of the Geneva Convention for the Afghanistan war, but we never opted out of the Geneva Convention for Iraq. Indeed, President Bush has repeatedly stated that Geneva applies in Iraq (although he has since claimed that foreign fighters captured in Iraq are not covered). Thus, there would be very little room for fancy footwork by defense lawyers in a prosecution against top officials concerning torture in Iraq."

Although there may be very little room for fancy footwork by lawyers, what these legal pundits are overlooking is that there isn't an honest judge in the whole entire system with the guts to buck the system, a system that has corrupted their entire heart, soul and spirit a long time ago.

What these pundits are forgetting is that Appellate and Supreme Court justices have all, every last one of them, bought their way into their high-ranking judgeships, starting out a young age and working their way up the judicial ladder on political favors, including back room bribes.

So, although the War Crimes Act is a good legal exercise and Bush and his buddies are probably guilty as sin, remember the old maxim that the rats go free while the good die young the next time Rumsfeld, Cheney and "Baby" Bush can be seen walking by the banks of Potomac smiling, smoking a big cigar and laughing all the way to the bank.

Wisconsin Man Claims He Was Drugged After Stumbling Across American Company Shipping Chemicals To Iraq In 1980's Used Against The Kurds
Jim Godfrey's story is bizarre and unexplainable but merits telling since the scoundrels in government just can't be trusted.

28 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

There's only one way to say it when it comes to telling Jim Godfrey's rather unusual story:

Some people are just in the wrong place at the wrong time and for no damn good reason get involved in the craziest things.

And in Godfrey's case the craziest thing involved getting stuck in the arm with a needle and syringe by a government thug trying to protect state secrets -- deep hidden secrets Godfrey claims had to do with sending chemicals over to Saddam Hussein in the early 80's that helped chemically wipe-out the Kurds.

To this day Godfrey can't fully explain why he was drugged, who drugged him and incredible as it sounds, why he didn't remember the incident until last June, more than 20 years after it took place.

He has absolutely no idea why it took so long to remember, only saying whatever concoction or secret government potion used either wore-off or didn't have the life-long effect expected by those who administered it.

"Everything just came back, first in bits and pieces, and then like a bolt of lightening," said Godfrey this week from his Wisconsin home, adding he is "hopping mad and won't rest a minute" until he finally gets to the bottom of the story. "I will not rest until I find out what really happened. I have the name of one lawyer present that day, but he denied ever being there.

"Also, I remember seeing large barrels with skull and cross bones on them and guys saying these barrels were in route for the Middle East. I recently went back to the place where it happened but the place is abandoned and no longer in business."

But what makes this incredible story even crazier is that the drugging incident happened right in the heart of Wisconsin cheese land at a fertilizer company owned by Land O'Lakes, known for its butter and other assorted dairy items.

So how did Godfrey, just another average Joe, and the Land O'Lakes butter company, end up in the heavy mix of government intrigue and controversy, perhaps leading all the way to Hussein's doorstep while implicating the U.S. with aiding and abetting in killing the Kurds?

Although Godfrey readily admits after more than 20 years he still can only speculate about his assailant's motives for the drugging incident, his story is filled with dates, names and circumstantial verification, making it to tantalizing to be left untold.

And after hearing it, even though there still may be some doubt as to the Iraqi connection, with the Nazi-like political cancer infecting Washington, it may be better to give an average citizen the benefit of the doubt instead of the liars in government.

Godfrey's run-in with the needle and syringe began on the second day of work with the Edmond Co-op, a company that primarily dealt with storing and spreading fertilizer, owned by Land Of Lakes.

"I was looking for a job back then and just walked into the place," said Godfrey this week from home in nearby Dodgeville. "They hired me to answer the phone, asking me if I had a military background. I told them I was in the Air force for two years and they hired me on the spot to answer the phones.

"Nothing appeared strange the first day. It was just a big warehouse and I really only saw a couple of people walking around."

But on his second day of work, all hell broke loose, as his supervisor frantically rushed into the office, saying there was a chemical spill of Gramoxin, a chemical cousin of Paraquat banned in many other countries for its known cancer causing agents.

What happened next was not only bizarre but downright unexplainable, but then again in the world international espionage and intrigue, nothing really makes sense anyway.

"I remember my supervisor appeared frantic and told me to stay put in the office," recalls Godfrey. "He then said 'I know what we should do and I'll get you a lawyer,' something that I really didn't understand at the time.

"About 15 minutes went by and this big guy came in, pulling out a needle and syringe and saying while he jabbed me quickly in the arm, it would neutralize the gramoxin. Before I knew it the needle was in and out and I really started to feel groggy."

After Godfrey was drugged, he remembers being led outside where he saw five or six yellow barrels, each labeled with a skull and crossbones. He also remembers several men dressed with protective suits and masks, moving the large containers.

"You have to remember I didn't recall any of this until last June. I went 30 years without remembering a thing and then all of a sudden everything came back like yesterday," said Godfrey who recently told his story to a Madison psychiatrist, Dr. Donald Ferguson, who listened intently on the first visit, but on the second said he was sounding like a sociopath and provided no further assistance.

"Dr. Ferguson wasn't much help, but if you live with such an experience, you will go to any lengths to find out what happened."

In a further attempt to find out, he tracked down Madison lawyer, Robert A. Kaye, who Godfrey claims was present the day he was drugged. Although Kaye since denied being there, he said he distinctly remembers his face and made a positive identification after seeing the lawyer's face in telephone book advertising.

"I approached him and he said he wasn't there and didn't know me," said Godfrey, "I know it was him but there just isn't any way yet I can prove it. I remember they took me back into the office and sat me down and that's when I saw him and overheard them saying he was a lawyer.

"At that point I was feeling out if it and going in and out of consciousness. But I heard them in the background say that I will never, ever remember anything and that 'he'll do anything we want him to do.

"That's when I also heard them say the canisters will going to the Middle East. I have no proof they went to Saddam Hussein, but it happened around the time he was using chemicals on the Kurds."

Godfrey says after hearing the three men in the room talking about 'billions of dollars,' the next thing he remembered was waking up the next morning on his couch but never going back to the scene of the crime until several months ago.

"When I woke up, I didn't remember a thing," he added. "I only worked there two days, never received a check and didn't even remember. In fact, the next day, I found a job at the Quick Stop gas station and worked there for two years. Then I got a job as a distribution clerk for the USDA at Forest Products Laboratory and I've been working there ever since.

"It's the strangest story and it all came back to me after 20 years which is even more unbelievable. No one since has ever approached me about it, but I really need to find out what happened.

"I know people are going to have a hard time believing me and it's driving me up the wall since I really need to find out the truth because I am 100 percent convinced it happened. I can't explain everything now, but I will find out.

Although the Madison attorney was unavailable for comment and a Land O'Lakes spokesman said he would check records to see if Godfrey worked for the company, it was verified that the Edmond Coop existed and was under the company's corporate umbrella.

Whether the chemical canisters ever made their way to Iraq is, of course, unknown. And whether Godfrey's is telling the truth or not is, of course, debatable. But no one can doubt the necessity to get at the truth about government corruption, especially in the Middle East, even if it means sometimes listening to outlandish and unbelievable stories.

And come to think of it, it's probably better to hear an outlandish story from an average Joe once in awhile instead of constantly having to hear the same old government lies coming from the same old political liars.

Scooter Libby Indicted Today But Fitzgerald Probe Falls Short At Nabbing The Real Criminals

Sources say the Special Prosecutor had 'his hand slapped' and has kept from the people other indictments implicating Cheney and others of serious high crimes.

28 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Special Prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald today brought a five-count indictment on Senior White House official, I. Lewis 'Scooter Libby,' but inside reports say the real story of corruption and back-door political bribery took place behind the scenes.

Credible sources verified Fitzgerald's 'hand was slapped,' forcing him to withhold indictments on Vice President Dick Cheney, President Bush's henchman, Karl Rove, and White House advisor, Steve Hadley.

Other reports indicate the treasonous wrongdoing leads right to President Bush, but they are all being protected from serious high crimes against the U.S. Constitution, at least for the time being, by a criminal contingent acting above the law within highest levels of our government.

It has also been learned that Fitzgerald plans to ask judicial permission to open up a new grand jury to nail others, including Bush and Cheney, but was warned in no uncertain terms today behind closed doors "he has gone far enough."

And behind the scenes, President Bush has also been standing ready to fire Fitzgerald, similar to how Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox was fired by former President Nixon in what was termed as the famous "Saturday Night Massacre."

Sources speculate if Fitzgerald further pursues a new grand jury, Bush through lapdog Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez, will seek for Fitzgerald's dismissal. Also, what happened today with the watered-down indictment of only Libby, could possibly be an indication Fitzgerald compromised the true findings of the grand jury since internal documents reveal many more serious charges and higher-level officials heads were on the chopping block.

According to the indictment, released publicly today, Libby's wrongdoings stop short of implicating himself and others, including Bush and Cheney, for high crimes involving the doctoring of WMD intelligence leading America to an illegal war.

The five-count indictment also stops short of implicating anyone in forging officials documents, known as the Niger documents, claiming Saddam Hussein was seeking significant quantities of uranium from Nigeria.

Reports have surfaced the documents used by the Bush administration to justify the Iraqi War are unequivocally a fraud, even though in Bush's January 28, 2003, State of the Union address he delivered the following 16 word message:

"The British government has learned that Saddam Hussein recently sought significant quantities of uranium from Africa."

Critics of Fitzgerald's findings claim serious information is being withheld from the American people, adding to the cover-up in the Bush administration which has included 9/11, the voting fraud scandal, war crime violations related to Abu Ghraib and the doctored WMD intelligence reports leading to the illegal Iraqi War.

Despite the serious charges remaining on the table, Libby was indicted on obstruction of justice, false statements and perjury charges, specifically related only 'to how and when in 2003 he learned and subsequently disclosed to reporters then-classified information concerning the employment of Valerie Plame by the CIA.

Libby has served since January 20, 2001, as Assistant to the President, Chief of Staff to the Vice President and Assistant to the Vice President for National Security Affairs.

Libby, 55, will be arraigned, although a date has not been set, in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. If convicted on all counts, he could face a maximum of 30 years and a $1.25 million fine.

Fitzgerald Indictments Could be Coming Down Today; Bush Acting Like Stalin in 1953, Claiming A Foreign Cabal Is Out to End His Presidency

Sherman Skolnick, the first to report on the Bush administration indictments months ago, claims Bush may be on the verge of a psychiatric breakdown. He also claims Bush is saying 'the Jews, the French and a foreign cabal' are out to destroy him.

26 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Chicago investigator and 'judge buster,' Sherman Skolnick, who once brought a former Illinois governor to his knees, putting him behind bars, is up to his old truth-telling tricks again, saying he's received credible reports President Bush is on the verge of a psychiatric collapse over U.S. Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald's pending indictments.

Skolnick said Bush has been ranting and raving in the White House, claiming "the Jews, the French and a foreign cabal" are conspiring to take down his Presidency and are behind the well-known and imminent Fitzgerald indictments.

"If anybody remembers Stalin back in 1953, Bush sounds just like him," said Skolnick this week from his Chicago home. "He's on a sinking ship and he knows it. I've gotten reports that when the indictment comes down he may leave the country and go to Alice Springs, Australia, a well-known CIA base of operation."

Other reports, circulating from Washington insiders, claim the President is "emotionally unstable, totally absorbed with the fall his of presidency and "living on cloud nine" unable to focus on anything but Fitzgerald and his indictments which are going to reveal "the lying and illegal nature" Bush plunged America into war.

Skolnick also claims that Bush will not take the dignified way out and resign like President Nixon, but will go down "fighting and screaming' or finally be convinced to go into forced exile.

"He won't go easy, that's for sure. And the indictments, including Bush and Cheney, could come down as early as this week and perhaps Wednesday," said Skolnick. "Reports are Bush also has made a last ditch effort to go to the Supreme Court to have the indictments quashed but only two of the nine high court justices were in favor of listening to his story."

Skolnick, well-known for his hard brand of investigating government corruption since the 1960's, was the first to go public months ago with the story of the Fitzgerald indictments taking down Bush and his cronies, going forward with the story when many called his reporting and investigating "over the edge and baseless."

However, Skolnick again has been "proved right," as even the mainstream press and those in the Republican party close to Bush have acknowledged Fitzgerald's indictments are not "hype" but are, in fact, a reality about to soon take place.

"I've heard reports, which have also surfaced in the "Capital Hill Blues" reports that Bush's aides say he is flying off the handle and out of control," said Skolnick. "Also my sources tell me that Bush, behind closed doors, is trying to tell the federal court in the District of Columbia that a foreign cabal is behind the indictments, trying to take his Presidency.

"He's obviously losing it and if anyone saw him at his recent press conference, when he was questioned about indictments and refused to answer, he is definitely not all there. "Also, Gordon Liddy recently said on the Sean Hannity Show that Bush 'ought to be put in a monkey cage' and Chris Matthews acknowledged the indictments are for real and Bush is on the hot seat."

This week other reports surfaced that Bush lawyers tried to get the federal court for the Eastern District of Columbia to quash Fitzgerald's indictments but were unsuccessful on both occasions.

Sources close to the case said Bush's personal lawyer, Harriet Miers, made an unsuccessful plea to the court to stop Fitzgerald in his tracks, a move judges felt had no legal basis.

Skolnick added that when Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez recently met with Fitzgerald, seeing the severity of the indictments, he immediately disqualified himself from the case, refusing to sign or issue the indictments against his colleagues in the White House.

Other sources close to the case said 22 indictments are expected to be released, going far beyond just the leaked evidence outing CIA agent Valerie Plame, but exposing the treasonous acts of Bush and others regarding the illegal nature of the Iraq War and doctoring of WMD intelligence reports leading to the unjustified invasion which has left thousand of soldiers and civilians dead as a result.

Skolnick claims politicians from all corners of the country are "reading the writing on the wall,' trying to distance themselves from Bush, who basically is being left to drown in his own pool of political.

Skolnick claims all bets are off as to Bush's successor, but he added the indictments will tarnish the administration so badly that "the ninth man down in the chain of command," being an obscure position in the agriculture department, could possibly wind up as President after the political dust finally settles.

Government Has Lied For More Than 50 Years About POW's Left Behind And Still Alive In North Korea And Vietnam

Bob Dumas' search for his brother, Roger, still goes on after more than a half century despite no help and roadblocks put up by U.S. government. He calls the media corrupt and John Kerry and John McCain "liars and frauds" for keeping the truth about live POW's from the American people.

By Greg Szymanski

The POW issue has long been a thorn in the side of government, a problem politicians keep pushing under the rug. Despite credible evidence soldiers were left behind and are still living in political prison camps in North Korea and Vietnam, high-powered, two-faced Senators, like John Kerry and John McCain, are the main culprits for keeping the truth from the American people.

However, on Oct. 28, Rep. Ron Paul (R- Tex.) is holding a press conference to revive the issue, officially sending to each legislator on Capital Hill a copy of an historic video called "Missing, Presumed Dead: The Search for American POW's," in an attempt to open new hearings, being introduced under House Resolution 123.

The following story is about Bob Dumas, whose brother, Roger, may still be alive in a North Korea prison camp after more than 50 years and his nephew, Bill Dumas, the writer and producer of the historic POW video that finally tells the true story.

Most people would fight through hell and high water to find a missing loved one. Bob Dumas is no different.

For 55 long years, he has been looking for his younger brother, Roger, after he was taken prisoner during the Korean War. But despite traveling to the ends of the earth and trying to uncover every small stone imaginable, his brother's whereabouts still remain a mystery.

However, Dumas says, a mystery which could have easily been solved decades ago if it wasn't for the criminal activity and outright lies of the United States government by and through many two-faced, high ranking politicians and military officers still lurking on Capital Hill today.

Two of the major corrupt politicians he wants to expose as liars and two-faced traitors, in what he calls the "biggest military cover-up in the history of our country," are former Presidential candidate and Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) and Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.), a former Vietnam POW declared a national hero.

"He's no hero," said Dumas, 74, in an extended conversation this week from his Connecticut home. "He's anything but a hero. Ask why he had the Senate, through Kerry's influence, seal all his POW records in Vietnam? He had these records sealed for life and is hiding the true story of how he sided with the North Vietnamese to save his own skin."

McCain sells his fellow POW brothers down the river

Even though the true story of McCain's captivity may never be known, backing up Dumas' harsh criticism is a 1992 article written by Ted Sampley in the U.S. Veteran Dispatch entitled "John McCain: The Manchurian Candidate," a scathing article strongly criticizing McCain's credibility and truthfulness.

Sampley writes: "What, therefore, motivates a John McCain to attack as a pit bull everyone and anyone who has the opinion that men are still alive in the very same captivity that he himself once experienced? Mr. McCain disguises his attacks on the POW/MIA by claiming he is on the committee to ask "the tough questions" to grill and berate in order to get to the truth. What motivates the man, who at the same time has shown a sensitive, almost patronizing approach to U.S. government officials who have lied to the committee?"

Further Sampley's article gives eye-witness accounts, information McCain has since classified, showing how the former Navy fighter pilot's own story told to the American people is filled with holes and many inconsistencies.

"After being periodically slapped around for "three or four days" by his captors who wanted military information from him, which McCain claims he refused to give, providing only his name, rank and serial number, he realized he was in critical shape and called for an officer. He told the officer, 'O.K., I'll give you military information if you will take me to the hospital.'

"Regardless of the reasons, the offer to give "military information" in exchange for better treatment was a violation of the military Code of Conduct and Collaboration No. 1.

"The doctor, according to McCain, said about taking him to the hospital, 'It's too late.' At that point, McCain knew he was in big trouble. According to information obtained by the U.S. VETERAN, the flier in desperation invoked the name of his famous father, Admiral John S. McCain, Jr., the soon-to-be commander of all U.S. Forces in the Pacific.

"And that was a violation of the Code of Conduct and Collaboration No. 2.

"McCain admits that because of the Vietnamese having the knowledge of who his father was, he thus survived because they rushed him to the hospital. The Vietnamese figured that because POW McCain's father was of such high military rank that he was of royalty or the governing circle. Thereafter the communist bragged that they had captured "the crown prince."

"At the hospital his wounds were treated. He readily admits that other U.S. prisoners with similar wounds were left to die, pointing out "There were hardly any amputees among the prisoners who came back because the North Vietnamese just would not give medical treatment to someone who was badly injured. They weren't going to waste their time.

"McCain has failed to mention in public what he has confided to another U.S. prisoner privately, that since the Vietnamese felt they had in their hands such a 'special prisoner', a propaganda bonanza, a Soviet surgeon was called in to treat him."

And to add more fuel to the McCain controversy, according to Dumas, in the forefront of the POW issue for over a half century, and several Vietnam POW's like retired Navy captain, Eugene "Red" McDaniel, McCain was given special treatment since he told the North Vietnamese he was the son of Admiral John McCain II, who became commander-in-chief of the Pacific forces in 1968 and who actually ordered the bombing of Hanoi while his son was in prison.

However, instead of coming to McDaniel's side, a long time activist in keeping the POW/MIA issue alive in the halls of Congress, McCain has openly called McDaniel a "fraud and dishonorable man who preys upon families still unaccounted for from the war."

Although McDaniel was unavailable for comment, Dumas said he told him that he was aware of many propaganda anti-American broadcasts made by McCain, while in captivity from 1967-73, in exchange for special treatment and basically to "save his own hide" when many other POW's received no medical care and were left to die.

Even though it's understandable a man trying to save his life may compromise his ethics, the problem with McCain is that he's withheld truth about his POW record and, without question, has not come the aide of those honorable veterans trying to get at the truth behind the POW scandal.

"If it ever becomes known and people find out the real truth about McCain, Kerry and the others, there will be political turmoil," said Dumas

"They both know there are many POW's still alive all over the world, but instead of admitting there are many MIA's and trying to negotiate their release, they just take the easy way out, claiming they're dead. Kerry and McCain have simply sold the POW's down the river in Vietnam as well as those like my brother who could still be alive after 50 years in a North Korean prison camp."

More than 93,000 POW's, from World War I through the Gulf Wars, have been left to rot by the U. S. government. Dumas filed and won a landmark federal court case to change his brother's POW's status from 'presumed dead' to 'prisoner of war' but ruling had no teeth as military ignored court opinion.

Dumas says the major problem with our country's stance toward POW's is that we refuse to negotiate for the safe return of our captured soldiers instead declaring them "missing and presumed dead" as an easy way out.

He even filed and won a landmark federal court case in 1985 to get Roger's POW official status changed, the judge ruling in his favor. But after government trickery using legal jargon as an escape hatch, the military lawyers simply declared Roger dead, saying even though the court found him to be a POW, there was no need to investigate further essentially closing the case.

"The government just ignored the ruling and it basically had no teeth as nothing really changed," recalls Dumas, who added that two witnesses on his behalf died suspiciously before testifying and a third, who testified, did so after being repeatedly threatened and harassed.

In the case of Roger, Dumas' younger brother captured in North Korea, his story is a perfect example of how many lost soldiers are put "out of sight and out of mind" by the U.S. government's policy of lying to family members about the real status of their missing loved ones.

"My brother was declared dead in 1954, along with about 8,300 other POW's in Korea, after our government didn't know how to deal with the problem," said Dumas even though Roger was verified as being seen alive and in a North Korean prison camp in 1957. "Back then Eisenhower didn't know how to deal with the problem so, as an easy way out, he just gave orders to tell all the families that their loved ones were dead. And, basically that is still the policy today, effecting more than 93,000 POW's.

Dumas said throughout the painfully long and hard years of trying to locate his brother, many attempts to travel to North Korea to locate his whereabouts have been blocked by the State Department, including a visit headed by Rev. Jesse Jackson stopped at the 11th hour.

Besides his brother, Dumas has received credible information, covered-up by U.S. authorities including Senators McCain and Kerry, that more than 3,000 POW's may be still be alive and held captive in North Korean prison camps.

"Even last year Korean Lt. Col. Kim Yong went on the record, stating there were many live Americans still being held in political prison camps," said Dumas, adding family members deserve the truth about the real status of their loved ones not the cover-up orchestrated by the U.S. government.

"We know there are many Americans still alive. The Pentagon will admit it. Kerry and McCain and the rest of Congress know it too, but nobody will do anything. And that is why have I have said all along this is the biggest military cover-up in the history of our country."

Missing soldiers were simply forgotten until POW advocates like Dumas forced the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Foreign Relations, headed by Kerry in the early 1990's, to investigate the numerous sightings of POW's in Vietnam and North Korea

Although Sen. Kerry served in Vietnam and ran for the White House as a friend of combat veterans, his own POW Commission in January 1993 released a report that made a mockery of the POW issue and trashed any effort by activists to get at the real truth.

Called by Dumas and others bold-faced liars and cover-up artists, Kerry, McCain and others on the Foreign Relations Committee ignored the evidence, releasing a report concluding that U.S. POW's were left behind, but all have since died. The report added further insult to injury to activists like Dumas seeking the truth when it stated that "all possible efforts in Korea and Vietnam have been undertaken to search for the remains of the dead soldiers.

"Kerry sold out his fellow soldiers just like McCain," said Dumas. "What's worse is that McCain then made sure Kerry helped get his own POW records sealed from public view for life in order to keep the truth about what really happened in Vietnam from the American people.

"Furthermore, any Congressman like Bob Dornan or Senator like Bob Smith who really tried to help us get at the truth behind Kerry and McCain's back, were simply run out of office. At this point, the only hope left was going to the press but, as it turned out, the mainstream media, including all the television stations, didn't want to touch our story with a ten foot pole."

Newsweek runs Dumas story, written by Melinda Liu its China bureau chief in June 2000, appearing in its international edition as well as a limited run domestically. The story, however, receives no attention and no other outlets print follow-ups, including Dan Rather who Dumas says personally quashed the story

Dumas recalls after his brother Roger's POW story appeared in 2000, he figured the to be the beginning of a media campaign to push for the truth about the numerous POW's reportedly alive in North Korean prison camps.

But instead of being hounded for interviews, Dumas was shunned by the press, adding he didn't receive one interview request leading to speculations that the story was somehow censored in America.

"Melinda told me it was one hell of a story but that the magazine, owned by Katherine Graham of the Washington Post, had ways to keep the story pout of the major markets in the states," said Dumas. "It must have been censored since I was never contacted by any of the other major newspapers or television stations.

"But I did get a rather intimidating call from Graham, the owner of Newsweek, after the story ran internationally. She warned me not to go running around the country saying that my brother was a POW or she would have turn the country upside down, I told her to go ahead and start turning because I was going to shut up about my brother's story."

And the media kept Dumas' story, as well as the entire POW issue, under wraps pretty well until an attempt 18 months ago was made by Linda Kim, a courageous CBS 48 Hours producer, who tried to expose the issue again, an attempt which never made it on the air and, according to Dumas, quashed personally by Dan Rather.

"I found out to that Dan Rather is a rat like the rest of them," said Dumas about his story that never aired on CBS and also has led to the strange disappearance of Kim no longer working at the station. "No one has been able to find her and thanks to Rather, I surmise, she is no longer working at the station. I got it from inside sources that Rather personally told Kim and others not to talk with Dumas or talk with Dumas.

"They had originally asked if I wanted to accompany the 48 Hour crew to North Korea to try and uncover Roger, but that never happened. And if Rather professes to be such a truth-telling journalist, why did he purposely not want to cover our story. I guess he's bought and paid off like the rest of the media."

To keep the POW issue alive, Dumas' nephew, Bill Dumas, a Hollywood writer and filmmaker, recently produced and distributed a video called "Missing, Presumed Dead: The Search for America's POW's" narrated by Ed Asner and winning the top documentary prize at a recent FT. Myers, Florida, film festival

Besides catching the eye of film buffs, Rep. Ron Paul (R-Tex.) has now taken up the cause on Capital Hill to get the truth out about the thousands of living POW's still incarcerated in political prisons around the world.

Rep. Paul has invited the Dumas family to attend an Oct. 28 Washington press conference where he plans to make public his intention to distribute over 750 copies of Dumas' POW documentary to each member of Congress and influential members of the Executive branch.

Dumas said never before has Congress been blanketed with such a unified POW message as contained in the documentary and Rep. Paul plans to use this message as a way passing House Resolution Bill 123.

House Resolution 123 seeks to force Congress to investigate "all the unresolved matters relating to any United States personnel unaccounted for from the Vietnam era, the Korean conflict, WW II, the Cold War missions and the Gulf Wars, including all issues regarding MIA's and POW's.

In the video, former Sen. Bob Smith, pushed out of public life, appears, saying he is convinced from the evidence that there are many men still alive in political prison camps in both Korea and Vietnam.

"We should accept the evidence and move ahead to find these men," Sen. Smith said in the documentary.

Other events like the State's Department's last minute refusal to allow Jesse Jackson's North Korean POW trip to materialize are included in the video as well as showing how Senate subcommittee hearings were abruptly cut off by Senator McCain and Kerry, who also refused to be interviewed for the film.

And then included in the film is the heart wrenching testimony of Bob Dumas, recounting the endless search for his missing younger brother, a search he said is still not over.

"McCain and Kerry are just waiting for all us old timers to die off. They just want us to fade into the woodwork," said Dumas. "It's like Mission Impossible. But we're getting closer and closer all the time.

"I wanted to add one last thing: I really worry for the safety of my nephew, Bill, who made this truthful documentary. And I told him when he's in Washington this week to watch his back.

"This is the second time I've tried to make this video. The man who attempted to do make it several years ago worked for USA Today and suspiciously turned up dead after being sent on assignment overseas."

New Jersey Man Has Idea To End Unfair Taxation By Exposing Hidden Treasure Trove Of Government Money Listed In CAFR's But Not Divulged To The People

Walter Burien has been harassed and abused by the feds for wanting government to open up its financial books just like corporations in the private sector. His revolutionary ideas may just be the answer to bring back some semblance of fairness and equity back to the American way of life.

23 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Walter Burien has been run over the coals so many times by federal agents and covert operatives it doesn't even hurt anymore when his foot touches the fire.

He has been trampled on, left for dead and financially ruined so often that, as they say, any day's a good day when a government thug is at least a hundred miles away.

And there's no doubt that Burien, a New Jersey former commodities trader, definitely knows what it's like to take on the "big boys" in government and be burned for doing it.

He knows what it's like to challenge them in a game of "financial baseball," so to speak, trying to hit that homerun to protect the people's interest, but instead getting hit by a government fastball right smack between the eyes.

But no matter how many times Burien struck out, he didn't quit. And somehow he has always been able to pick himself out of the dirt, brush himself off and live to play another day.

Burien, you see, is another one of the disillusioned Americans who has had it up to his eye balls with being reduced to slave in the American system, which no longer even resembles freedom and prosperity.

But instead of just griping or blowing a lot of hot air, he decided to hit government officials smack dab where it hurts the most, hitting them right square below the belt in their overflowing, corrupt pocket books.

And with the strategy of 'following the money' and uncovering a treasure trove of hidden government funds, Burien struck a financial nerve the likes of which any pirate would call nothing less than a king's ransom.

So what financial nerve did Burien hit to cause such severe retaliatory treatment, including having his children threatened and assaulted, the ultimate pain a father can endure?

What did he do that was so out of line, so deserving of government harassment and torture? Basically, all he did was ask government to do business ethically and honestly, something that causes most politicians to grimace in pain at such an outlandish request.

All he did was simply apply standard corporate accounting practices to the way government does business. And what he found not only raised the eyebrows of shady politicians and lawyers, it could very well have let the 'financial cat out the bag,' ending the government gravy train once and for all.

You see, what Burien found out after years of painstaking research while fiddling through thousands of governmental budgets at all levels was that taxpayers were only getting an edited version of the total money picture, a version beneficial to government officials but not the people they represented.

What he found out was that government, including over 86,000 entities at all levels, only disclosed about one-third of the actual money it had in its coffers. The loophole he uncovered was simple, but a government loophole nonetheless used to hide trillions of investment dollars not mandated by law to be disclosed to the people.

And the "dirty words" hiding the money, words officials want keep secret, are Comprehensive Annual Financial Report (CAFR), a concept started in 1946 as official government accounting procedures but a document in reality always kept hidden from the American people by shrewd politicians who never mandated making CAFR's a document of public disclosure.

For those left in the dark for many years, a CAFR is basically a reporting or balance sheet documented and kept by every government agency in the country. It is the tabulation of all money at the disposal of the government, money not only raised from taxes but money raised from years of investing hard earned tax dollars, including the entire holdings and land assets held by the government.

But the trick Burien uncovered is that lawmakers decided to write laws for their own benefit, excluding CAFR's from mandated public disclosure. By doing this, Burien said, it closed the public door on knowing about the vast majority of money at the government's disposal, an amount each tax year estimated to be two-thirds more than all the money collected.

"Government officials like to tell us how much they are spending and what the annual budget entails, but not one of them wants to mention or disclose a CAFR. We should not elect one more politician who doesn't promise to make CAFR's public knowledge," said Burien from his New Jersey home this week in an extended conversation. "But, you see, the reason they won't is that it would blow the lid off government, exposing the corrupt way they do business.

"Keep in mind that government budget reports made public show what is expected to be spent for a typical tax year and the CAFR, as the annual financial report, shows the general purpose budget plus the decades worth of wealth that have amassed and the annual wealth generated.

Regarding the difference in which government "illegally" does business as compared to what's mandated in the private sector, Burien elaborated in an open letter entitled "What the media will not tell you about Al Gore," written to Gore, who behind the scenes wanted to expose the nondisclosure of CAFR's, ending taxation as we know it today.

His October 2004 analysis fully explains why Gore probably never made it the White House and how we are still saddled under President Bush with unfair taxes while the government continues to do business in a shady and criminal manner:

"Mr. Gore believed in open disclosure as to the true finances of government wealth. Mr. Gore put forward www.financenet.gov what I considered to be a full disclosure site.

"Myself being a strong critic of government's nondisclosure, when I looked at and reviewed financenet.gov in 1998, it broke all the rules in the behalf of the people. It gave a listing of local government CAFRs (Comprehensive Annual Financial Reports), government's Annual Financial Report that showed "Gross" income as well as total "Investments." [Trillions in composite totals] It listed the original transmittal letters from GFOA (Government Financial Officers Association) a private group originally located in Chicago, Illinois who started the CAFR accounting structure in 1946.

"What was being hand spoon feed to the public across the country up until that point were selectively created budget reports which excluded "substantial" portions of the gross income and in almost all cases did not list the investment / future funding accounts as was shown in the CAFRs.

"CAFRs when digested and gross income is totaled showed in most cases that government had evolved into a corporate for profit business in which as of the year 2000 only 1/3rd of governments "Gross" income came from Tax income. Budget reports mislead the public into believing government's primary income was tax income, it was not. Tax income was only 1/3rd of the gross as shown in the CAFR once digested.

"In many a case after careful review of a CAFR, it was shown that government in many a case was indirectly funding their own debt with the use of their own investment funds. A debt as would be shown on the selectively created budget reports and that the public was being tagged to repay.

"Most people from the private sector would think that the majority of that ever-growing debt of their local government for bond issuance's, insurance coverage, etc., or even the mortgage on their own house was being funded by the private sector. Well, come the year 2000, it was not. Government enterprise investment groups and government Pension operations were the primary investors in that debt, and did so using the government's own investment funds. The public was being locked into repayment of the debt and by doing so accomplished a return (Non-Tax income) for the government. If a private corporation did the same to its shareholders without full and open disclosure of doing so, the directors involved would be sitting in the federal pen after a multiple count SEC indictment.

"But then due to the money involved, government starting in 1946 evolved into what gives a new definition to the expression of letting the "Foxes guard the Hen house" and by definition of circumstance and reality of the current structure, has now given government the true title and has redefined the meaning of the words "Organized Crime." Or as the definition of RICO goes, "Extortion of money from the public through criminal enterprise."

"In 1999, after reviewing Mr. Gore's actions and intent as I read it, he appeared to want a change in this new definition of government as shown above. At Mr. Gore's instructions Financenet.gov was created. At Mr. Gore's instructions an audit was conducted of Federal operations so that disclosure to the public could be made. The results of that audit showed a five Trillion dollar surplus! More amazingly was the fact that they let the public know this. This fact was a true "Hats off" to Mr. Gore.

"Then Mr. Gore announced his run for President. Here I saw the sparkle of light coming over the horizon. Could Mr. Gore be the one to downsize the abusive and obtrusive growth in government? Could Mr. Gore be the one who would qualify that government having 2/3rds non-tax income? A government that could administratively restructure and phase out all taxes and become self sufficient without taxation? My anticipation was growing!"

But with Gore out and Bush in, corrupt governmental business practices continue as usual. However, Buriens outlook for change and financial accountability still remains optimistic, saying he likes to view the financial playing field as having three major players.

He views the three major ones as government, which has amassed most of the wealth having a majority of holdings in most large corporations; the world's most powerful financiers, who play ball with the government due to its massive wealth; and the American people, the largest of the three powers, but at the same time the weakest since it has been relegated to an unorganized band of workers viewed by the select few in the other two groups as mere slaves used only for their benefit.

"We basically over the years left the vault doors open for a select few to take advantage of all the money," said Buriens, adding his solution is to once and for all close the people's vault of money, forcing the financial world to deal with the American people instead of government, which presently holds all the money and assets.

"If we can force the financiers to deal with the people and not the government then we have a chance of taking back our country. I tried doing this several years ago with a concept called Tax Retirement Funds (TRF). I tried this in Phoenix with a wealthy backer who put up millions, but when the feds got wind of what we were doing, the backer was put in jail for various trumped up reasons and he is presently still serving a long jail term. They have come down hard on me, too. But that's just part of the game when you take on the big boys.

"Basically, my idea for change goes like this: pension funds pay your salary at retirement. Any city, county school district or state can be restructured to meet their normal budgetary needs in the exact same fashion. Instead of a pension fund to meet retirement cost, a TRF can meet budgetary funds without any taxation of the people, allowing the people to benefit from their entire work efforts.

"Also with investment capital benefiting local venues, prosperity will be at unequaled levels. Government's cash flow will prosper based on the prosperity of the people. With no taxation, the people will have a greater purchasing power and thus the TRF funds will have excellent investment returns."

Burien said the concept of using TRF's has been met by strong government resistance, landing his former backer in jail. But convinced his idea is the only way to defeat corruption and big government, he is actively looking for others bold enough to take on the "big boys," bringing back a semblance of fairness and prosperity to a growing number of Americans feeling deceived, cheated and relegated to slavery by its own government.

On Burien's web site at www.cafr1.com, he offers an informative video, information the government doesn't want you to have, called The National Tea Party (TNT), explaining his fight to expose CAFR's as well as explaining his solution to bring the "money power" back to the people with his revolutionary concept of TRF funds.

Making a final plea to encourage people to take back their country, he said:

"The financiers are only working with government since it has all the money and assets at its disposal and there is no doubt in my mind they would work with us if we were a financial force. As a collective group, we need to figure out a way to get them to work with us instead of government.

"If we can once and for all expose CAFR's and then give large private financiers the motivation to work with us, I believe we really have a chance to take back our country by bringing prosperity back to the people, taking it away from the select few in government who have unfairly benefited."

The Story of 9/11 Hero, William Rodriguez, Is Censored Again As Savage Approach Taken To Caller on 'The Savage Nation' Radio Show Silences Real Truth Behind 9/11

Although Michael Savage tries to depict himself as a truth-seeker, his handling of a caller this week shows 'his true colors' as a gatekeeper for the neo-con, Nazi-like corporate press in the business of hiding the truth not telling it.

21 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The outright criminal censorship by the media continues to rock the foundations of our free speech rights as another mainstream radio personality, claiming to be independent, bites the dust, deciding this week to "shut up" a listener after she tried discussing the explosions in the WTC basement on 9/11 as the real cause of the collapse.

Regan MacBannon-Mason said she was told to shut up and called a conspiracy nut after calling in the "Savage Nation" radio show, hosted by Michael Savage, who claims to have the No. 1 independent radio show in the country.

Mason said after trying to explain why she felt 9/11 was an inside job by recounting the story of WTC janitor and national hero, William Rodriguez, Savage became rude and obnoxious, giving her "an earful" about how he doesn't put up with conspiracy nuts on his radio show.

Savage on his promotional web site claims to be the top "independent show" in the country with over 8 million listeners on 370 channels. However, what Savage fails to mention is that he really is a government hack, bought and paid off by the corporate media/government, having his show sponsored and underwritten by the deep pockets of CNN.

Shows like Savage, claiming to be independent but actually filtering the truth as controlled media gatekeepers for the neo-cons, are popping up all over the country in an attempt to cover the real stories by posing as truth-tellers but actually being liars hiding behind a phony microphones built on corruption and deceit.

And experiences like Mason's, being censored this week on the Savage show, bring to the forefront the folly taking place, as the tentacles of the 9/11 cover-up extend to all segments of the media, even the phony, so-called "independent press."

To put the Mason radio experience into prospective, all she tried to do was recount for the listeners another radio interview she heard where Rodriguez, the head WTC janitor on 9/11, heard distinct explosions rock the basement area of the North Tower just prior to the airplane striking the above floors.

Rodriguez was not the only one who heard the explosions, but there were at least 14 other people with him on the morning of 9/11, all hearing the same thing from an office on sub-level one.

However, besides hearing the explosions, the other thing they all have in common is that their eye-witness testimony has been systematically suppressed, as their stories have never seen the light of day in the mainstream media for four long years.

Rodriguez has been fighting ever since 9/11 to get the truth to the American people, but has been blocked by the 9/11 Commission, where his story has been left out of the final report.

It also has never been told in the American mainstream press, having been either edited or never printed by the New York Times, NBC News and all the other major news outlets.

Commenting about his story being censored again on the "Savage Nation," Rodriguez said this week from his New Jersey home:

"It doesn't surprise me. This has been going on for a long time. Even though my story has been told and I have been embraced with open arms overseas, the American government and press doesn't want to touch my story, as well as many other eye-witnesses who heard the same explosions in the North Tower.

"They want to keep the truth from the American people while not tarnishing the official story, and this is why all of us have been systematically kept out of the newspapers and the 9/11 Commission report. There exists a massive cover-up and the government knows my story will expose the truth.

"But despite everything they have tried to do to keep me quiet, I will never stop telling the truth about 9/11 for those who died and paid the ultimate price."

With Rodriguez being kept from earshot of mainstream America with a story that is not in the "conspiracy nut' category, Savage also showed his true colors this week by trying to protect the neo-con party line by not delving into the real truth behind 9/11, a story that remains to be the "the biggest untreated cancer" growing in our country.

And it's common, every day people like Mason and her story of radio suppression that clearly and accurately depicts the Nazi-like level of manipulation and censorship employed by the neo-con controlled media.

"I listened to an interview with William Rodriguez on Monday, June 27, 2005.

A point came out numerous times from Mr. Rodriguez about how the mainstream media would not repeat a word about President Bush's role in the attacks on the country, specifically how CNN would edit Mr. Rodriguez' attempts to reveal the truth," said Mason this week in an email to the Arctic Beacon about her displeasure over the experience with Savage.

"This afternoon I tried to share the information with Michael Savage over the radio airwaves. Mr. Savage asked me: "Do you believe George Bush had anything to do with that?" When I answered with an emphatic 'yes' and tried to explain what Mr. Rodriguez and 14 other people witnessed, I received an earful on the air from Mr. Savage about how he does not "put up with that" on his program. And how I had tried to 'pull' something with him for being a conspiracy person.

"Mr. Savage's "Savage Nation" is sponsored by CNN. I learned today what I had believed: that the media itself is 'not to talk about this,' nor is it to allow anyone else to invoke it. Like so many others, today, I too was told to 'shut up.'

"I adored the Twin Towers. I ate at Windows on the World and relished working on the South Tower's 86th floor. I realize that this is strong, but I would rather have died in the Twin Towers I loved, than to have lived to witness what is happening to this country. I don't believe we will win. My optimism is gone. I am so sorry."

Are the Hidden Underground Military Bases the Real Headquarters for the New World Order?

A former Canadian military officer finally goes public with shocking information he learned while working at an underground base at Cold Lake in Canada. Although some may say his story is pure fiction, others claim the secrets to the New World Order's depopulation plan lies underground.

20 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Everyone is talking about the New World Order and a one world government, but according to a former Canadian military officer, nobody wants to believe its true sinister nature lies in the mysteries surrounding thousands of deep underground military bases scattered throughout the world. Here is his story:

Timothy of Canada tells a wild story, a story of underground military bases where animal and human sacrifices nourish the bowels of creatures that have inhabited the earth long before man arrived.

He doesn't expect anybody to believe him, saying most people will think he's talking science fiction anyway. But nevertheless he feels compelled to speak, feeling compelled to risk life and limb as the New World Order zeroes in on the last stages of its incredible worldwide population reduction plan.

"They have been delayed with their plan to reduce the world's population by 80 percent but the globalists are now stepping up their activities," said Timothy, who refuses to use his real name, in an extended conversation this week from Germany, where he's employed in the aerospace industry.

"I am not about to use my name, risking incarceration as I would be in violation of our country's State Secrets Act. Also, do you know that more than 3,000 people have been killed for trying to talk about what goes on in these underground bases. It's basically a death sentence when you start getting too close to the nerve center of the real New World Order's plans."

And Timothy says the real heart and soul of the New World Order plan lies in the mysterious underground military bases scattered all over the world, including roughly 30 in Canada, 140 in the United States and more than 1,500 worldwide.

He became privy to this top secret information when he served as a junior officer in the Canadian Armed Forces in the aerospace engineering branch, while working at one of the top secret deep underground military bases at Cold Lake in Canada.

And what he learned and what he has been researching ever since leaving the military is how this network of underground bases not only houses and conceals non-human life forms with incredible powers, but conceals an underground warehouse of sophisticated super-human technology used for mind control, advanced military weaponry and weather manipulation with the eventual goal of depopulating the world.

"Most people, including most of the so-called patriots, are sincere about defeating the New World Order, but they are really looking in the wrong direction. They need to uncover, expose and alert the people of the world what's going on below the earth's surface," said Timothy who likes to talk in a machine gun, rapid fire fashion, as he recalled first being alerted to the underground military base phenomenon when he researched the mysterious events surrounding cattle manipulation in Alberta, Canada, in the 1970's.

"It is very dangerous and you could be killed if you try to expose what the globalists are doing with this network of tunnels and underground facilities, but I have ended my silence since they are now in the final stages of their plan. Remember, AIDS being manufactured? Well, what's in store for mankind is now much worse and we need to do everything we can to try and stop the destruction of the world as we know it."

Although Timothy's story can easily be dismissed as pure fantasy, stories like his have a funny way of getting under your skin, a funny way of creeping up on you right before you fall asleep at night. They have a strange way, no matter how outlandish and unbelievable they are, to solicit questions in your mind like "What if he is telling the truth and what if these sinister plans and military bases really do exist?"

Even though Timothy has promised from his undisclosed location in Germany to provide names of at least three other people, making this initial story an ongoing saga, he provided a battery of questions and perhaps a scientific Shakespearean soliloquy of sorts in the interim, explaining why he decided to go public and why it is imperative to uncover the secrets of the underground military bases.

"With the outbreak of the flu virus I feel compelled to break my silence. Maybe some of you have heard the term New World Order and feel confused about its significance.

"From this point let's put everything into a series of hypotheticals. Maybe I do not wish to break the Official Secrets Act and wind up incarcerated. Let us pretend I am about to reveal ultra-sensitive information to you. Please approach this with an open mind.

"In the late 1970s I first became aware of the cattle mutilation phenomenon living in Alberta, Canada. The reasons given were unusual for this and it was the suppression of the outcry and true angst I sensed from the cattle farmers protesting outside of Calgary that first got to me.

"This was the first time I realized there was something seriously wrong. The hush-hush of this left a lasting impression.

"Let us assume I served as a junior officer in the Canadian Armed Forces in the Aerospace Engineering Branch. One base was Cold Lake. The members of this base wondered innocently why this was the only base where it was required to always wear a black radiation exposure detector.

"Maybe this is due to a Deep Underground Military Base with unusual aerial phenomena a few hundred statute miles north almost straight in line with Cold Lake bordering with Saskatchewan.

"What if you were to realize that Canada has over 30 DUMBs, and its neighbor to the south has over 140 active DUMBs. Worldwide there are now over 1500 DUMBs.

"Let us assume all North American DUMBs are connected below by oxygenated magnetoleviton trains from Krupp, Germany, and are able to reach MACH2+, having the tunnels vacuumed of air to eliminate air resistance. Adjacent to this is a subterranean tunnel highway.

"Let us assume that many of these bases are actually underground cities for beings that in actuality have resided here for millennia. Do you have the courage to believe this?

"All patriots who are willing to resist this New World Order should realize that globalists who have submitted are not the only problem. Maybe they have sold the rest of us out-thinking they will survive and not be enslaved as the remaining.

"What if by 2029 the global population is to be massively reduced, the remaining subjects enslaved and hauled off to underground slave labor factories to serve the global elite?"

"What if the SDI project is in reality a weapon system to ward off unwanted "guests". Maybe all countries were fighting secretly a global war against strangers once they realized in the late 1970s that true intentions of inhabitants of these DUMBs were evil beyond belief.

"What if society cannot handle the truth?"

"What if Eisenhower decided at Holloman AFB keeping things secret would prevent mass panic and decay into total anarchy? Examining the panic Y2K generated, has society become more courageous with time? I, for one forgive Eisenhower.

"What if over 8 million humans have literally been devoured by residents of these bases, the majority nourishing themselves with human glandular secretions?"

"I do not expect anyone to believe this. But let us assume I have been privy to a lot of horrific information. Let us assume that in reality there are 143 elements in the periodic table. Maybe the only way the SR75 can reach MACH9+ is by using metal technology not of this world? Maybe the stealth aircraft use special coatings combined with electrochemical electronic countermeasures. Maybe this is why the stealth never were used when it rained in former Yugoslavia?"

"Maybe the cloaking technology successfully tested at Tonapaz Range and S2 employs high frequency helix devices in the leading edges of the newest generation vehicles, refracting light making the aircraft invisible.

"Maybe I have dealt with metallurgic technology with crystalline structures not of this earth? Maybe the general public has been kept in the dark for many decades.

"I wish things were not the way they are. Nobody has the right to sell anyone out. Maybe I would not be revealing anything if I was not certain that all the secrecy and timeline is reaching a climax. We are all going to have to assert ourselves beyond belief. We have been lied to and we thought we were doing our best for betterment.

"I know mankind is destroying this planet, but I refuse to be enslaved. I am sick of the lies and the New World Order agenda. Maybe the force driving it resides in these bases. If you sense your freedoms are being revoked, you are not mistaken.

"After the last element of gun control is implemented, all freedoms will be removed within a ten year period. Never surrender your weapons. I wish this was not happening and I have had many sleepless nights, but for me I cannot stand it anymore. Never believe that the One World government is good for us. Observe the dismantling of nations now and how the United Nations is taking over.

"I wondered back then why is the Canadian military shrinking. This is no accident. The American military is becoming more and more the global force combined with NATO. What can we do? Well, I know this. I will not cooperate with anyone who has sold me out. I will fight for every right I have, simultaneously enjoying the freedom of travel which still exists. Not for long though.

"I will not believe whatever the World Health Organization dictates. Do not believe anything?"

"Examine the new Denver International Airport. Maybe in reality below it is a massive DUMB with 8 levels. Why does the fence point inward? Why the unusual security? Maybe the tent spires are in actuality large ventilation shafts to the subterranean levels. Start with this airport please. If you cannot find anything bizarre there then I feel sorry for you.

"I do believe in God. He gives us faith. The New Testament in the Book of Genesis refers to the son of God.

The Old Testament refers to the sons of Gods. Both refer to the serpent or demons. Maybe the residents of the DUMBs are what were meant - a serpent race.

"God bless you. Remember, this information and revealing it is not without peril. Be wise!"

Nationwide Poll Finds 50% Want Bush Impeached Over 'Doctored' WMD Intelligence Reports

Even though there is mounting public interest over the Bush impeachment question, Congress and even the Gallup Poll refuse to address issue. With this in mind, progressive democrats outside the Washington circle have commissioned their own highly credible poll from another independent polling company.

18 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Standing firm to the old maxim "out of sight out of mind," the Gallup Poll still refuses to query Americans about whether President Bush should be impeached, saying its official policy is to refrain from asking hypothetical questions lacking a clear-cut public interest.

However, two months ago a group of progressive democrats called attention to the millions of people supporting President Bush's impeachment over a number of issues, including his motives for entering the Iraq War based on knowingly and willingly "doctoring" WMD intelligence reports.

"The facts have become abundantly clear," said David Swanson, a leader in the democratic group at www.afterdowningstreet.org, 'that millions of Americans have realized their President lied and deceived them, as made clear in the infamous Downing Street Memo.'

After the incriminating documents from England surfaced last May, Swanson and others, including a host of congressional democratic support, quickly formed the After Downing Street coalition to force Bush and others in his administration to come clean on the Iraqi WMD issue.

But five months later after millions of Americans have rallied behind the After Downing Street movement, a congressional committee recently voted 22-21 to not even investigate the WMD issue, again giving Bush a free ride by the neo-con controlled Congress.

Regarding the government's refusal to hold Bush's feet to the fire, critics quickly tried to hammer home their point that the administration and Congress feel they are above the law, using the failure to even investigate allegations of "doctored" WMD intelligence reports as a prime example..

What makes Congress' failure to investigate the WMD claims even more troubling is that the evidence implicating Bush comes from highly credible sources in Britain, including incriminating written statements made by Sir Richard Dearlove, head of England's MI6 intelligence force.

Not only did Dearlove say Bush was fixing the cold, hard WMD facts to support his desire to invade Iraq at all costs, but his statements were also verified as being made by other high ranking British officials, including Prime Minister Tony Blair.

But despite the mounting evidence that Bush may have committed high crimes and misdemeanors leading to the deaths of millions of people, Congress and the Gallup Poll are, to date, trying to hoodwink the Americans by taking the "out of sight and out of mind" approach and protecting Bush from his probable wrongdoings.

With Gallup still protecting Bush, Swanson and others from the After Downing Street group, recently commissioned a poll by the highly regarded Ipsos Public Affairs polling company, interviewing 1,001 American adults on Oct. 8 and 9 regarding the Bush impeachment question.

The poll found by a margin of 50% to 44%, Americans want Congress to consider impeaching President Bush if he lied about the war in Iraq after being asked the following question:

"If President Bush did not tell the truth about his reasons for going to war with Iraq, Congress should consider holding him accountable by impeaching him." The remaining 44% disagreed, and 6% said they didn't know or declined to answer. The poll has a plus or minus 3.1% margin of error.

"The results of this poll are truly astonishing," said AfterDowningStreet.org co-founder Bob Fertik. "Bush's record-low approval ratings tell just half of the story, which is how much Americans oppose Bush's policies on Iraq and other issues. But this poll tells the other half of the story - that a solid plurality of Americans want Congress to consider removing Bush from the White House."

Even though impeachment has become a strong matter for public concern, Frank Newport, Gallup's editor-in-chief, issued the following public statement trying to justify its decision not to pose the question to the American public:

"The general procedure Gallup uses to determine what to ask about in our surveys is to measure the issues and concerns that are being discussed in the public domain. We will certainly ask Americans about their views on impeaching George W. Bush if, and when, there is some discussion of that possibility by congressional leaders, and/or if commentators begin discussing it in the news media. That has not happened to date."

Delaware Folksinger Writes 'Tough Lyrics' Calling Attention to Neo-Con Corruption

Vic Sadot picks up where Bob Dylan left off, telling America in his music to end the Iraq War and put the neo-cons in jail for causing 9/11.

14 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Vic Sadot has a knack for tackling tough political issues and then turning them into the sweet sound of music. But unfortunately his brand of brash, hard-hitting folk music, similar to Bob Dylan in the 60's, is a rarity nowadays and about as hard to find as an honest judge.

In fact, come to think of it, where is Dylan hiding these days? Where is the Vietnam anti-war balladeer when we need him? Is he living off his Mr. Tambourine Man profits instead of hitting the streets, singing against the illegal Iraqi war?

But even if Dylan is only 'blowing in the wind,' who needs him when we have a true balladeer and patriot like Sadot waiting in the wings, aiming his guitar and lyrics right at the neo-con criminals, including daddy Bush, baby Bush, Herr Rumsfeld and Doctor Death, Big Dick Cheney.

For those who know the real truth about this band of 'closet Nazis,' Sadot's lyrics only affirm the alarming truth that our nation is under attack from an internal enemy now occupying the White House.

And for those who remain skeptical or loyal to the Bush dictatorship, his lyrics hopefully will shock them into finally facing the music and finally facing the cold hard facts that the neo-cons in Washington are about as phony as a three dollar bill.

But before delving into Sadot's lyrics and hard hitting songs it needs to be mentioned that never in the history of our country has such blatant arrogance of power took such a deathly stranglehold on Washington. And with such arrogance, also comes the truth from a simple balladeer who, like a lone horseman riding in the night with a sword waving, is trying to desperately awaken a sleeping nation before it's too late.

A wise old man once said the music of a nation reveals the inner soul of its people. And with that in mind, Sadot's lyrics may be the inner prescription needed to rally the souls of million Americans who are waiting for the right moment to exorcise the sickness and cancer out of our government.

Although Sadot's latest CD, Broadsides& Retrospectives, definitely will not be playing under the Bush Christmas tree this holiday season, it could be playing under millions of other trees across the country since baby Bush's approval polls recently have dipped about as quick as the Titanic sunk.

And just as Dylan's raspy sound rallied a nation against the Vietnam War, Sadot's lyrics could have the same effect, the same effect, that is, if ever he is heard in the mainstream media, a corrupt media that protects daddy and baby Bush like they are "God, the father and his only begotten son."

Although like Dylan, he may never be accused of always carrying a perfect tune or sounding like he belongs in a boys' choir, Sadot's lyrics aptly paint the picture of a nation's government 'gone south,' telling it like it is in original songs entitled The Ballad of William Rodriguez, The Nightmare of New Orleans, Cheney's in the Bunker/Do the Orders Still Stand, Mad Cowboy Disease and are You a Citizen or Are You a Slave.

"I didn't play the guitar until I graduated college from the University of Delaware," said Sadot in an extended conversation this week from his Delaware home. "I was always interested in politics and earned a political science degree ears ago. I remember being influenced by Kennedy's book Profiles in Courage and it is ironic that I first was recruited in 1968 and got involved with the Young Republicans."

But Sadot quickly migrated to a more liberal political camp, taking up music and writing a series of Watergate songs while also hosting a public interest radio program in Washington D.C. during the tumultuous Nixon days.

"Even way back then I wrote anti-war and Watergate songs with my first group called the Crazy Planet Band," recalls Sadot, who plays the guitar, the 10 button accordion and the piano-accordion in a brand of folk/rock music that has a definite Cajun-New Orleans jazz influence ringing loud behind his original lyrics.

"I always looked up to Phil Ochs and even got a chance to interview him while I was doing my radio show years ago. He was always my hero and my latest CD called Broadsides and Retrospectives is dedicated to him as well as a compilation of 19 songs I've written over a 25 year period."

Besides Sadot's career as a musician, he also dabbled in publishing an alternative truth-telling Delaware newspaper in the 1980's, saying whether it's music or writing he has always tried to preach the truth by exposing the corrupt and the powerful.

"These neo-cons are a whole new ballgame," said Sadot. "They're not like traditional conservatives who are fiscally responsible so as a result both liberals and conservatives are equally upset by what is going on in our country."

"As far as Bush and Cheney are concerned, they need to be impeached and quickly removed from office. They are ruining the country and we are dealing with an evil empire here who is bankrupting America while allowing their corporate friends to profit handsomely."

Regarding 9/11, Sadot firmly believes the Bush administration caused the tragedy and claims after reading the story of William Rodriguez, the WTC janitor who heard explosions in the basement and has had his statements kept from the American people, he was inspired to write a song about what he called solid evidence of a government 9/11 cover-up.

"When I first read about his incredible story, I couldn't believe what I was reading," said Sadot, who also recently attended a 9/11 truth gathering in New York on September 11th where he sang the Rodriguez song after the WTC janitor spoke at the rally held on the fourth anniversary of 9/11. "Here we have a guy who was declared a national hero, tried to tell the truth and then had his words kept out of the final 9/11 Commission report as well as systematically out of every American mainstream newspaper."

"He heard explosions prior to the airplane striking the towers and there were many others who verified his testimony and heard the same thing. All of the testimony has been kept from the American people and after four years still has not come out in the mainstream press. What is going on is a crime against the people and I had to write a song about it which turned out to be The Ballad of William Rodriguez."

Besides the Rodriguez song, Sadot wrote a scathing tune about Cheney based on statements made by former Transportation Secretary Norman Mineta, later censored by the 9/11 Commission, about the Vice President's strange actions at approximately 9:20 am on 9/11.

"I wrote the song Cheney's in the Bunker/Do the Orders Still Stand after I heard about Mineta's testimony being taken out of the 9/11 report which clearly shows Cheney orchestrating activities on 9/11," said Sadot. "Mineta said a young man was at Cheney's side at 9:20am saying repeatedly 'Do the Orders Still Stand' and once said 'the plane is 50 miles out sir' with Cheney responding 'of course, the orders still stand' obviously referring to the stand down of defense systems and the orders regarding Flight 93.

"I'm trying to do songs that expose the neo-cons for what they really are," said Sadot. "One thing for sure is they are not true patriots. But after all the years, although it's a struggle, I am still trying to make my music happen while telling stories about truth, justice and about the United States we used to believe in, not what the neo-cons have turned it into today."

Sadot's music can be found on his web site www.zydecoplanet.com. He is also available at a moment's notice for live engagements at venues that appreciate his "no holds barred" brand of folk-rock music and truth-telling lyrics.

And like a true balladeer with strong feelings, he had a parting message in honor of his father, Jean-Henri Sadot, a poet and humanitarian, who gave his son his first lesson in the importance of dignity and respect for your fellow man:

"If we are going to get the reins to power back in the hands of the American people, then we must go back to basics and see the corporate media as evil and manipulating as they truly are. Common Sense during "these times that try men's souls" demands that we get reality based and then get faith based behind some sensible democratic socially responsible system that we can participate in that will give hope in our beloved US to the rest of the world!

"Is the Statue of Liberty a lie now? Is it the next state terrorist target?"

"Instead of putting blind faith in war criminal profiteers, we could base decisions on how we share earth's resources and what the people's labor and genius produces with incredible generosity. Like Tom Paine, Ben Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, and the forty fathers who died here at Cooch's Bridge here in Delaware, We the People could get a lot of people re-connected to some of the best history that this country has laid down.

"How did our dear land become so swiftly a corporate banker dominated system that laid down such a solid foundation of genocide on the indigenous dwellers and slavery and indentured servitude on free blacks from Africa and the desperately poor whites in Europe? When did we go for empire and plunder instead of Common Sense, the Bill of Rights and The Statue of Liberty?"

PNAC Executive Director and Neo-Con/Nazi Propagandist Called 'Real Terrorist' Behind 9/11

Dr. Gary Schmitt, the mouthpiece for Cheney and Wolfowitz, set to speak at University of Wisconsin. Local group threatening to perform citizen's arrest before the speech, calling Dr. Schmitt a traitor and terrorist.

11 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The head of a dangerous ultra-conservative Washington think tank is now going public to defend the neo-con's perverted war strategy, taking his "dog and pony show" on the road Tuesday where he will be speaking at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee campus.

Dr. Gary Schmitt, executive director of the Project for a New American Century (PNAC), the Nazi/neo-con radical rightwing group that called for a "New Pearl Harbor" in September 2000, is stepping-up the Bush administration's propaganda pitch to justify the spread of global war and terror.

But local citizens and students are trying to stop the neo-con propaganda message in its tracks by threatening to perform a citizen's arrest on Schmitt, calling him a traitor and "the real leader of the terrorist organization within our government" that planned the 9/11 attacks, killing 3,000 Americans in the process.

"In it's document 'Rebuilding America's Defenses' of September 2000, PNAC called for a massive military budget increases, a policy of pre-emptive war, including using Saddam Hussein as an excuse to invade the Iraqi oil fields and stepped up intervention around the world," said a spokesman for "Flush Pee-NAC," the local Wisconsin group threatening to arrest Schmitt before the speech.

"But PNAC also noted that these goals would be extremely difficult to accomplish absent some galvanizing event like a new Pearl Harbor which occurred on 9/11."

Although millions in America now view the Iraqi war as a mistake and Al Qaeda as a Bush-neo-con myth created to instill fear, Schmitt is still trying to convince Americans of the administration's "good intentions" in the face of dwindling support for the war and other Bush policies, both home and abroad.

Besides Schmitt, others behind PNAC's global war strategy, bent on destroying the United States, include Vice President Dick Cheney, Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, Presidential Advisor Richard Perle and World Bank President Paul Wolfowitz.

And immediately after Bush and his gang took power in January 2000 it is well-documented they were immediately overly zealous and committed to the invasion of Iraq, an invasion that would have been politically possible to pull-off without 9/11, occurring only eight months later.

A Wisconsin 'Flush Pee-NAC' spokesman gave further credibility to the administration's involvement in bringing about 9/11 and orchestrating a global war on terror, adding:

"According to former Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill, the Bush administration was so obsessed with its planned Iraq invasion from the moment it took power that they had no time for other issues. Then in July, 2001, after the Taliban pipeline deal fell through, they committed to invading Afghanistan in the fall, also impossible without 9/11."

Even though the Bush still plays the terror card justifying his illegal war, prominent Americans from all walks of life, both conservative and liberal, are now calling 9/11 an inside government, citing numerous inconsistencies in the official story making it impossible to believe.

Some of the more glaring inconsistencies with the government story include NORAD's stand down of air defenses, the likely controlled demolition of the WTC and Building No. 7, the fact at least seven of the 19 named so-called Arab hijackers are still alive, the likelihood of a missile or a military jet, not a commercial airliner, striking the Pentagon, the myth surrounding the "let's roll" passenger scenario on Flight 93 and the strange actions by President Bush on the morning of 9/11.

Some of those prominent Americans who disbelieve the government's official 9/11 story, calling it an inside job, include former Republican cabinet members Catherine Austin Fitts, Morgan Reynolds and Paul Craig Roberts. Others include writer Gore Vidal, noted theologian David Ray Griffin as well as David Cobb, Rabbi Machael Lerner, CIA analyst Ray McGovern, Howard Zinn, Jim Hightower, Rep. Cynthia McKinney, British ex-Environmental Minister Michael Meecher and the later Sen. Paul Wellstone.

Schmitt, a well-known neo-con mouthpiece, will also be speaking on the Ben Merens Show on Wisconsin Public Radio at 3pm Tuesday before giving his evening speech at the university.

Although much criticism is expected, Schmitt intends to rally support for Bush's low nationwide approval ratings in what many critics see as a last ditch effort to sell the administration's failed policies to a disbelieving public.

Former NY Aux. Fire and Policeman Uncovers Transit Authority Tapes Showing 'Heavy Smoke Condition' Below WTC On 9/11

More evidence now surfaces indicating explosions rocked the WTC and a pre-planned controlled demolition.

9 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

More 9/11 evidence has surfaced indicating explosions rocked the North Tower prior to the jetliner striking the top floors, again showing the official government story is nothing more than a pack of lies.

Transit Authority conversations between motormen and dispatchers reveal a "heavy smoke situation" on transit line's 1 and 9 adjacent to and in the sublevel basement area near the North Tower just minutes before the jetliner strike.

The obscure tapes, unknown until recently discovered in official transit authority transcripts and released in the Transit Authority News, adds further credibility to the numerous eye-witness claiming to have heard explosions rock the North Tower prior to the jetliner strike.

The conversations between subway worker's came to light after avid 9/11 researcher and former auxiliary fireman perused through transit authority records after listening to the same conversations he taped himself on the morning of 9/11.

"I'm an emergency communications buff and have kept many tapes of what was going on the morning of 9/11," said Paul Isaac this week in a conversation from his home in Brooklyn. "I have on tape the motormen talking to the dispatchers about a heavy smoke condition between building 5 and 6 right next to the North Tower.

"This occurred a minute before the plane hit the tower on the 1 and 9 lines that were running below the mezzanine levels between sub level one and two."

Isaac, who has compiled an enormous amount of research contradicting the official story, said his tapes were verified by the official transit authority transcripts he recently uncovered.

"This adds more credibility to William Rodriguez's statements that he heard explosions in the basement," said Isaac about the WTC head maintenance man who has tried for years to get people to listen to his eye-witness accounts, corroborated by at least 20 other people in the North Tower who also heard the same massive explosions.

Rodriguez, the last man out of the WTC and declared a national hero for saving hundreds of lives, has had his damaging testimony censored by both the cowardly American press as well as the 9/11 Commission.

Besides Rodriguez, the commission and the press have never reported on at least 20 other eye-witnesses who verify the head maintenance man's statements. And now comes the "heavy smoke" reports on the transit authority tapes, also ignored by the lapdogs in media and the 9/11 Commission.

Further, the testimony of a man by the name of Felipe David, severely burned in the basement from the underground explosions, has also been suppressed by all parties, including the 9/11 Commission and the unscrupulous media.

"It's a massive cover-up. We all know it," added Isaac.

To illustrate the massive cover-up and to the extent in which former 9/11 commissioners are still lying to the public, recently on September 10, commissioner and former congressman Tim Roemer refused to confront Rodriguez or answer his questions after a victim's and family meeting held at the Marriot Hotel in New York.

Roemer, who spoke to family members, told a heart breaking story how just after 9/11, a woman who lost her husband, put his wedding ring on his desk, demanding the truth be uncovered since the only thing the widow had left of her husband's after the tragedy was his finger in the ring.

Roemer, like a typical lying politician, told the families after that incident he vowed to get the truth behind who caused 9/11.

However, as quick as the tear jerking wedding story ended, Roemer forgot about his vow to get at the truth as he ran from the Marriot like a scared rabbit when confronted by Rodriguez and asked why his statements have been kept out of the final 9/11 report and from the most of the American people.

"You see, they still will not deal with the truth, but for the memory of all those who died, I will never stop telling it," said Rodriguez after he tried to confront Roemer.

Besides the explosions rocking the WTC basement, Isaac said he has uncovered another little known fact, which also may show the WTC was a pre-planned, staged demolition.

Isaac, a man with a knack of digging a little deeper than most about 9/11, said two large 400 foot tall empty WW II fuel reserve tanks, standing side by side, were brought down in a controlled demolition in East Williamsburg (Brooklyn) on July 15, 2001, at 7:02am.

"I found out the same company, CDI, who had the clean-up contract at Oklahoma City and with the WTC, brought down the water tanks for no apparent reason and despite complaints from the neighborhood who tried in vain to stop the demolition," said Isaac, adding the site still remains vacant and a reason for the demolition was never given by local or company officials.

"I think it might have been a dry run for 9/11. Perhaps they were trying to see the tilt and how the top 400 feet of the towers would fall in place. There has been no plans to put anything on the property or any valid explanation why they were taken down.

"But I do know the company who owned the tanks, Keyspan Maspeth, acquired a minor league baseball team called the Brooklyn Cyclones right around the same time. There may or may not be a connection, but it is suspicious and should be investigated further."

Isaac's investigations into terrorism have long been a thorn in the side of New York officials, including former Mayor Rudi Giuliani. The former auxiliary fireman and police man said he sent a personal correspondence a year prior to 9/11, urging the city to better prepare for terrorist activity as he felt the city's resources remained vulnerable

Isaac also was relieved of his duties, for conduct unbecoming an auxiliary police officer, after being alerted by a bus passenger on July 27, 2000, and responding to a bomb threat on a New York City bus.

After given clearance by NYPD, Isaac and his partner blocked heavy city traffic by 53rd Street and Madison Ave. and then a man with a brief case was apprehended. He claims, however, the only result of the apprehension was his suspension as he never found out what happened to the suspect on the bus or the contents of the brief case.

"It was very strange why I was suspended and I never found out what was in the briefcase," said Isaac.

It seems Isaac almost always is in the middle of controversy as on the recent fourt anniversary of 9/11, he was involved in a confrontation with 9/11 protestors who set up their protest on the sidewalk in front of Ground Zero in the midst of the reading of the names of those who perished.

Isaac, who believes with his heart in the 9/11 truth movement, tried to convince protestors it was neither the time or place to create a controversy, especially on a morning which is set aside solely to remember those who dies without having politics getting in the way.

"If it was any other day, I would be right out there protesting with them. I would even do it front of the fire station. But on the morning of 9/11, when the families are mourning their loved ones, it just wasn't the right time," said Isaac, adding he was also tring to protect the protestors fro violence since many in the crowd seemed to be almost provoked into raising fists.

"This type of protest has a way of discrediting the 9/11 truth movement and maybe that was their intentions. I just don't know. But I do know that the same people who were protesting, misquoted and totally printed things I didn't say on their web site.

"If you read the Village Voice who covered what happened the next day, it was totally different then what appeared on the Wing TV web site. What they did wasn't right on the 4th anniversary of 9/11 and what they wrote about me isn't what I said."

Don't Buy Into American Slave System; Washington 'Free Man' Shows How To Opt Out

Terry Lee of Washington was tired of being a slave. Since the American system is voluntary, he decided to become a sovereign citizen by using the U.S. Constitution, common sense and a lot of legal hard work.

7 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Terry Lee is a man with conviction and a sense of dignity, a hard working American who has had it up to his eye-balls with being a slave to the Corporate Republic of America.

And make no mistake about it, whether you like the term slave or not, most Americans are exactly that to a system created to benefit the rich while taking advantage of the poor.

It's a system geared at using the labor and talent of many to benefit a select few, a system that Lee, who calls himself a "true patriot and free man," decided years ago he no longer wanted to be a volunteer.

A wise old man once said: "Son, if you wanna get ahead in this world, never work for another man as long as you live." Although Lee says that's sound advice, he adds it's imperative to go one gigantic step farther by never working or selling your life's blood into the "corporation as long as you live."

But before understanding how Lee, a homebuilder and land developer by trade who lives near Spokane, Washington, figured out how to buck the system, he says first it's vitally important to comprehend that each and every America volunteers his servitude to the system from birth, albeit volunteering without full knowledge or consent.

And just as a citizen impliedly and implicitly volunteers, according to Lee, he has the same ability to release the chains and bondage by following a method he is perfecting, Lee admits, however, his method is no "overnight fix" but is difficult, time consuming and more like a total lifestyle makeover instead of a quick fixer-up course in being a so-called free man.

Although there are many patriot movements taking place all over the country, Lee says he has taken the best from each, while adding more detailed legal steps and procedures, in order to help others effectively work and live outside the jurisdiction carved out by the corporate government, rights he claims fundamentally protected by the constitution.

"I've been a hard working man all my life and when you go through life accumulating things and then don't know how to protect yourself, it makes you stop and think," said Lee this week in an extended conversation from his home in Spokane, where he now lives free from the bondage of what he calls a controlled and manipulated corporate-driven slave system.

"When I finally realized I had been lied to and technically I was not a free man but a slave, I decided to do something about it. I also realized that the rich men of the world really want to capture all the living beings and take 50 percent of their labor for their own benefit. The system is designed to control and dominate the people and I didn't want any part of it."

Lee said it's important for a person deciding to leave the system to understand what's going on in the world as well as fully understand what a person's birth right really means and what he can become if he truly believes freedom is more important than being a slave to the government.

"We are created by our creator to be free with inalienable rights as long as we do not harm our neighbor. There are really only two basic rules to follow, being no trespass and love thy neighbor as thy self," said Lee. "In Isaiah 45, God created good and evil. But in my case I realized a long time ago being honest wasn't good enough.

"I realized I had to gain more knowledge to protect against evil and to protect myself from not becoming evil myself. This is our major goal in life and once this is mastered it is our responsibility to teach our young the same beliefs in order to stop evil from being passed on from generation to generation."

With these high moral standards to attain, Lee said out to free himself from the jurisdiction of being under the thumb of the U.S. government, starting out by first getting judicial acknowledgement from the court he was no longer volunteering his services to the system.

Lee said the process of confronting the system head on needs to be carefully thought and worded, as it is necessary to make it clear to the court system the real purpose for taking up the court's time.

He added that the real purpose for filing the initial court papers isn't adversarial like most court proceedings, but merely a legal venture into admitting errors were made in entering the corporate-driven government system and that these errors need correcting in order to get out.

"This distinction is important because the law says it can correct errors but not a mistake," said Lee, adding the first thing he wanted the court to acknowledge was that he wanted to be known as simply Terry Lee instead of the name listed on his official birth certificate.

"I presented a five page brief and 50 pages of supporting evidence proving that I can carry a name of my choosing as long as I don't use it fraudulently and, of course, it's not necessary to have your name legally changed. The judge agreed and I still carry the court order with me, which now replaces any type of ID card or driver's license issued by the state."

Lee said the court order recognizing the right to carry a name of his choosing, free from the state recognized name, is only the first step in a myriad of legal maneuvers needed in order to break the contract with the state, a contract binding most men to a life of servitude and government slavery.

Wheels Coming Off White House As Bush-Cheney Indictments Pending
ABC News, usually a neo-con mouthpiece, is now confirming, through George Stephanopolis, that reliable sources claim Bush-Cheney indictments are coming down from the Valerie Plame grand jury probe.

6 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The wheels are coming off the Bush administration, but it matters little since the problems facing America go much deeper. The Arctic Beacon reported months ago about the impending indictments against Bush and Cheney, receiving criticism in some circles over the use of "credible sources" surrounding Special Prosecutor's Patrick Fitzgerald's grand jury investigation.

Now ABC news agents, who usually follow the neo-con party line, reported last Sunday through George Stephanopolis, "reliable sources" reveal indictments against Bush and Cheney are pending.

But even with Bush and Cheney gone, the cancer in our government remains since the entire executive, judicial and legislative branches needs to 'picked clean' so that fair-minded men can again take back the country.

However, it can't be denied that Bush and Cheney are a good start and if the cat's really finally out of the bag, let's hope they are good "mousers," efficient at getting all the rats out of Washington, including the Clinton's, McCain and Kerry.

There are simply bigger fish to fry than the "Three Stooges," adding Condoleezza Rice in for good measure. And, of course, for added political pleasure, don't forget Rumsfeld and Wolfowitz, two scoundrels that probably should be horsewhipped first before being booted out of Washington.

Regarding the secrecy surrounding the Fitzgerald inquiry, observers speculate ABC leaked the information in order to prepare America for upcoming political chaos, but then again chaos has been the rule not the exception since Bush, nicknamed "Your Stupidity" not Your Majesty, was illegally appointed King of the neo-cons in 2000 by the black robed marauders posing as jurists at the Supreme Court.

One person following the indictments from the outset, Sherman Skolnick of Chicago, nicknamed the "judge buster" for putting more jurists behind bars than any American alive and also putting away a former Illinois governor and federal court judge, had a particularly ominous view about the impending high-level indictments.

"I think our government will be discredited and swept away because this stooge and scapegoat, George W., supervised by his father on behalf of the Queen of England and the Anglo-American aristocracy, has controlled what is going on in the United States," said Skolnick after Stephanopolis commented last Sunday on his morning ABC talk show.

"I'm very concerned that they may in the very near future create some kind of earthquake scenario with the White House then claiming there's an emergency situation meriting martial law."

Skolnick also feared the political bombshell could also reverberate in Wall Street, causing a stock market crash making the great depression look like a day at the beach. Looking at historical precedent, Skolnick added:

"I think by the third week of October we may have another historical event, October has historically been seen as 'crash month.'"

Months ago the U.S. attorney's Office of the Northern District of Illinois refused to comment to the Arctic Beacon on whether an indictment was pending or not, saying at the time any questions on the status of the grand jury investigating were off limits.

And this week the U.S. Attorney's Office continued its "hush hush" position on the status of the Bush Cheney indictments, saying again any questions were not going to be answered.

In December 2003, Fitzgerald was named Special Counsel to investigate the alleged disclosure of the identity of who leaked information in the Valerie Plame case, but the present grand jury probe has expanded to include the wide-reaching crime allegations as new information surfaced.

Although the U.S. Attorney's office in Chicago is staying silent, it is well known that Fitzgerald is digging deep into an assortment of serious improprieties among many Bush administration figures based, in part, on subpoenaed testimony provided by former Secretary of State Colin Powell.

Besides Fitzgerald's probe into Bush administration lies relating to the war in Iraq and the CIA- Plame leaks, he is also looking into a huge drug money laundering operation involving both the Clinton and Bush administrations with ties reaching all the way to Arkansas.

Fitzgerald began serving as the U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois in September, 2001. He was initially appointed on an interim basis by former Attorney General John Ashcroft before being nominated by President Bush.

The U.S. Senate confirmed his nomination by unanimous consent in October 2001. In December 2003, he was named Special Counsel to investigate the CIA-Valerie Plame case.

Homeless Mothers With Small Children Get Nothing From FEMA One Month After Katrina

Nothing but excuses from FEMA while thousands remain homeless and left wondering where all the money is going.

4 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Single mothers with children, the elderly, the homeless and others who experienced the wrath of Hurricane Katrina are now experiencing the wrath of an arrogant government led by FEMA, an agency that's adding injury to insult to many evacuees not getting a penny of assistance a month after the disaster.

The horror stories from New Orleans continue to surface and if anyone in the media or elsewhere lets FEMA off the hook or utters a kind word please take a flame thrower or a horsewhip to them before the sun goes down.

And for good measure throw in all the other government agencies involved, every one of them hiding behind the other like bureaucratic cowards, while thousands of Americans remain displaced, homeless and penniless.

And while thousands remain sleeping in cars and taking handouts from neighbors, they are being slapped in the face every time they call FEMA for assistance, many being told in an arrogant fashion "your application is pending."

Well, take the pending applications, the government promises and the government salaries and put them where the sun won't shine. It's about time America wake up to the cold, hard truth that the neo-con regime, filled with millionaire blowhards, cares zero about average people It's about time people once and for all realize "Your Majesty" President Bush, known as "Your Stupidity" and his underlings, is not on their side, as they silently enjoy the suffering and figuring out how they can profit from it.

Here are few stark examples about how single mothers with kids and other hard working Americans have been tossed aside like pieces of dirt while "Your Stupidity" and his gang of criminals fly around in jets, sip champagne and eat caviar behind the walls of the King's White House Palace.

Robin Fourroux, 31, a single mother with two small kids, was living in Marrero on the outskirts of the west side of New Orleans when Hurricane Katrina whipped through town, demolishing the house she rented for the past three years.

Born In New Orleans, Fourroux was working at the Fairmont Hotel the night the disaster struck, taking refuge for five long days on a top floor with her children by her side, all of them just scraping by to survive.

When they were told to evacuate, Fourroux and her children waded through water waist deep, finally getting to the busses waiting to evacuate thousands of others displaced by the storm to points unknown.

"The bus driver didn't tell us where we were going. It was like a herd of cattle being told to move," said Fourroux from the home of a truck driver good Samaritan, who rescued her and her children and is still providing lodging in Liberia, Louisiana, a month after the storm.

"Without the kindness of trucker Harold Edwards, who has taken us in, I don't know where I would be. A month has passed and I still haven't got a cent from FEMA or the Red Cross. FEMA keeps saying my application is on hold after hundreds of calls. They are just a waste and have done nothing for me but make my life even more miserable."

And how Fourroux ended up at Edward's house is a story filled with kindness from an average American and arrogance from a government agency paid to help evacuees like Fourroux.

But instead of helping, from day one government helpers acted more like damn fool than paid public servants. Instead of providing a comforting trip out of New Orleans, Fourroux and other evacuees were herded onto busses like cattle and not even given the courtesy of telling them their eventual destination.

"We got to Baton Rouge after my kids hadn't eaten in a day and half before finding out on the sly where we were going," said Fourroux, adding she is furious at not receiving a penny's worth of help after a month, seeing that she has paid taxes and played by the rules all her life.

"When we found out in Baton Rouge our bus was headed for Dallas, half the people on it just started walking and I was one of them. I kept walking, walking and walking until out of nowhere an 18 wheeler picked us up. It turned out to be Mr. Edwards, who took us to Liberia, offered us his home and to this day I am still here."

Fourroux said without the kindness displayed by a stranger and with the runaround from the government during the last month, she imagined a month of being homeless or on the street may have been too much for her little two year old to handle.

"I probably owe my life and the life of my children to Mr. Edwards because the people in the government who were supposed to help could care less if we live or die," said Fourroux. "I've gotten nothing from FEMA but only cold responses that my application is still pending. The Red Cross has also been giving me the run around but they promised tomorrow a check would be waiting for me for about $900 but we will just have to wait and see."

Fourroux said during the long month in Liberia she returned to New Orleans once to find her house and everything she owned destroyed, saying it's impossible to find a place to live there. She adds that no one in government is providing her with temporary housing and she needs assistance to afford a deposit and first month's rent in order to get her own place.

"My friends are scattered all over the. It's awful," said Fourroux. "I pay taxes every year, have been working since I was 15 and then when I lose everything, the government hasn't lifted a finger or given me one red cent to get started again."

Robin Fourroux's story is not uncommon or an exception to the rule, as literally thousands of evacuees are crying for help but running up against a government brick wall when it comes to needed assistance.

Paula Purvis and her husband are two more New Orleans' evacuees echoing the same nightmare story being told by Fourroux, the couple receiving no help from FEMA and getting the same "application is pending" excuses told to them over and over again.

Purvis who also had her apartment destroyed after living in the Big Easy for 10 years, said not only did she get the FEMA run around for a month, she recently was told her application was denied due to an incompetent error made by the person who originally took her FEMA assistance application.

"This has been a total nightmare. I've had FEMA workers hang up on, treat me with arrogance and just outright lie about the problem with my application," said Purvis. "I still haven't gotten any money and probably never will just because my husband and I use different last names.

"I found out through this whole mess that FEMA is denying anyone any money who live in the same apartment or house and have different last names even though the couple may be married. It happened to us and probably has happened to others. It's just ridiculous."

Purvis, however, is one of the few evacuees who has documented ever minute of her ordeal, starting with the first phone call with FEMA on September 2nd and continuing with countless calls up until the present.

And it reads like an ordeal in hell, seeing she was displaced, lost her job, all her belongings along with having to put up with daily government abuse that could drive anyone over the edge.

"I've got nothing but lip service from FEMA and I am furious," added Purvis, who is finally returning to New Orleans in order to try and resume work at a local hotel where she has been a long time employee. "FEMA is not seeing anyone yet in New Orleans. Why? I have no idea. But I know it looks like a war zone there."

International Human Rights Lawyer Points Out Absurdities in Hussein's Legal Defense

Dr. Curtis Doebbler, well-respected human rights lawyer and law professor, can't get American media to tell the truth about the legal farce going on in Baghdad. He claims proceedings against the former Iraqi dictator have no merit since initial invasion violated international law. He also says Hussein's court appointed Iraqi attorney has been harrassed and had legal papers stolen by American authorities.

2 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The disgusting and biased American press has again let down the people, distorting facts and slanting story lines, reminiscent of a state-controlled media like existed in Nazi Germany.

FOX agents, disguised as reporters, but actually owing allegiance to the Pentagon and the U.S. and Iraqi governments are crawling on land like vipers, infecting airwaves with neo-con propaganda better described as outright lies.

No better example exists than the recent slanted reporting by FOX, another garbage media outlet called The Weekly Standard and all other big city dailies, including the New York Times, regarding the events surrounding the upcoming kangaroo court proceedings in the Saddam Hussein case.

The rule of law means absolutely nothing to these journalistic propagandists and to Your Majesty President Bush, or as he is better known as "Your Stupidity," as he flaunts international justice with the illegal invasion of Iraq as well as his utterly absurd legal handling of the Hussein case.

And just as the rule of law means nothing to "Your Stupidity" and his appointed underlings, it carries little weight with the American press who continues on a daily basis to perpetuate the lies and injustices of a neo-con administration gone mad with power.

But fortunate for the few remaining fair-minded Americans intent on ousting "Your Stupidity" from his royal thrown and preventing millions more from dying worldwide from Nazi-like U.S. aggression, comes forward a distinguished and well-respected international human rights attorney and professor, Dr. Curtis Doebbler, to once and for all set the legal record straight.

Although he has attempted to do so countless times before, the unscrupulous lying dogs parading as journalists, in the case of FOX and The Weekly Standard, purposely slanted recent interviews with Dr. Doebbler, making it appear as if justice was being carried out and the rule of law followed to the letter in the Hussein case.

But nothing is farther from the truth, according to Dr. Doebbler, in a case that defies all legal principles and, from day one, simply has made no sense and a mockery out of international law. And what is even more troubling is that when Dr. Doebbler told his story in the neo-con party line media outlets, many of his statements were intentionally left out or misinterpreted to give the sense Hussein's defense attorneys were actually being given a fair shot at representing their client.

But as absurd as the American's government's untenable legal position remains in the initial Iraqi invasion, so it is equally absurd when it comes to inept news reports about justice in Baghdad.

Not only did the FOX and The Weekly Standard slant the stories about Hussein's trial to suit "Your Stupidity's" party line but these morally deficient government agents carrying press cards have little desire to tell the truth about a host of matters but, more importantly, about two very crucial issues surrounding the case, which conclusively demonstrates a whiskey filled, cowboy Texas courtroom would be far more appropriate than what's actually going on in Baghdad.

"The first thing I have to clear up from what the press has reported is that neither I or Ramsey Clarke (former U.S. Attorney General) are really representing or truly can be called Saddam Hussein's attorneys," said Dr. Doebbler in a telephone conversation this week from New York, citing Article 14 of the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights as precedent, a document "Your Stupidity" has never read or doesn't even know exists since law and its concepts are completely foreign to our President's feeble mind.

Dr. Doebbler points out that Article 14, a longstanding recognized international law rule, mandates a defendant be given a right to a lawyer and the lawyer, in turn, be given adequate facilities to prepare a defense. And since Dr. Doebbler and Clarke have been given little, if any time, to even see or visit with their client, Dr. Doebbler insists he cannot be termed or even called the attorney representing Hussein.

"We are willing to represent Mr. Hussein. Mr. Clarke and I have a signed power of representation from him," said Dr. Doebbler. "But if you do not have access to your client, I would rather have my little sister represent me. And what is really ridiculous is that the news publications covering this story always start out by saying numerous lawyers are representing him, but this is totally wrong Totally wrong!"

Besides setting the record straight as to Article 14 violations, Dr. Doebbler believes the announced government trial should not go forward since the tribunal itself does not meet international law standards of impartiality and fairness.

"The court set up in Baghdad is not only biased, but it is incompetent and totally lacking any type of legal credibility normally associated with international cases," said Dr. Doebbler. "As lawyers we hope the rule of law will be respected and thus far this is not the case.

"It is my belief that the tribunal is illegal in the first place. There is an overwhelming number of jurists and statesmen around the world, bound by international law, who openly recognize the invasion of Iraq as a preemptive strike and in violation of all sound principles of international law. And, it's important to note, that one cannot create legal rights out of an illegal act, meaning what's going in the Hussein trial has no legal merit to being with."

Another important fact about the Hussein trial never reported and ignored by the American press concerns the illegal treatment and harassment of the only so-called Iraqi court appointed attorney assigned officially by an illegal tribunal to supposedly represent Hussein.

Kalel al Dolami, an Iraqi lawyer assigned to the Hussein case as the initial legal contact in Baghdad, never has been allowed to visit with his client privately. But what's more shocking is that al Dolami has accused U.S. operatives of outright harassment, including break-ins at his Baghdad home and destruction and theft of legal documents related to the Hussein case.

Although Dr. Doebbler and al Dolami have tried to bring these violations to the attention of the press and authorities, they have never surfaced in the American media and never even been investigated thoroughly, with an eye towards justice, by police authorities.

"They have attacked his house and stolen his legal papers, but it's never surfaced in the American press," said Dr. Doebbler.

With all the injustices and blatant violations of law, including crimes against al Dalami, Dr. Doebbler still holds out hope justice will be served even though the chances look slim.

"As a lawyer, I can't make predictions about what is going to happen in a case, but I will not abandon the principles of law or the possibility that justice will one day be served," said Dr. Doebbler.

Dr. Doebbler has acted all over the world as an expert consultant and teacher in the field of international human rights law and is currently working in the Middle East as a law professor.

His clients have included an estimated two million internally displaced persons in the Khartoum State, approximately 3,500 Ethiopian refugees in the Sudan, dozens of political activists in the Sudan, the democratic Republic of the Congo, Peru, Afghanistan as well as hundreds of other clients from countries too numerous to mention.

Editor's note:

The time to expose the treacherous enemies within our own government and media has never before been so needed, as when they flaunt the rule of law both at home and abroad in such immoral and flagrant ways.

The illegal invasion of Iraq, the unwillingness of Congress to even investigate the WMD issue and the fiasco involving the Hussein trial are just three more reminders why our country and constitution are under assault.

With that in mind, it is no time to seek help from your government or write your congressman since they are all criminals perpetuating the destruction of America.

9/11 Safety Group Warns No Government Involvement in Katrina Study, People who experienced the lies and deception used by the 9/11 Commission tell Gulf Coast residents to demand an independent study in order to get at the truth. Keep government out should be the slogan behind the future Katrina study.

1 Oct 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A 9/11 organization formed to improve public safety has called for an immediate independent investigation into the response failures of Hurricane Katrina, saying any type of government control will only taint the credibility of the investigation.

And several New York business owners, near Ground Zero, warn not to believe government agencies when it comes to environmental safety and health hazards related to the hurricane, citing unsafe health conditions near the World Trade Center existed for months - even years - after 9/11 even though the government deemed the area safe.

Regarding the Katrina investigation, Glen Corbett, chief technical advisor for the Skyscraper Safety Commission, said glaring emergency response failures, leading to added death and destruction, called on President Bush this week to create an independent "Katrina Commission" to thoroughly investigate all aspects of the disaster.

"One of the big issues was the 9/11 Commission's failure to mount an independent investigation free from political pressure," said Corbett in a telephone conversation from New York. "As a 9/11 organization dedicated to improving public safety, we are deeply concerned about our national emergency preparedness, including terrorist attacks.

"We are asking the Bush administration to quickly assemble a non-partisan panel of independent subject matter experts - not politicians - to comprise the commission. If anything was learned from 9/11, the study commission should be separate from politics and should be a cross-section of independent experts who will take into consideration all the facts."

Corbett said he was dissatisfied with certain aspects of the 9/11 Commission and hopes the Katrina Commission will do a better job and given all the resources necessary to mount a fair and honest investigation.

"We implore President Bush to ensure that the commission is fully funded, has a clear yet comprehensive mandate and investigates all the failure and successes at all levels of government," said Corbett.

Besides the slow response, many challenges remain about future health hazards related to Katrina. It was well-known after 9/11 that the government decreed it safe for local New Yorkers to continue life as usual in and around Ground Zero even though independent groups insisted the environment remained toxic, presenting a major health concern.

After 9/11, reports began to surface about respiratory and other illnesses cropping up in survivors, rescue workers and first responders. And Olga Diaz, a hair salon business owner from the WTC and the nearby Marriot Hotel who lives in the neighborhood, said although she was told it was safe to return to her apartment months after 9/11, she still suffers from a respiratory condition which.

"I have never been the same since 9/11 and my respiratory condition is getting worse," said Diaz, who related her problem to the unsafe conditions in and around Ground Zero. "Why should I believe the government when they said it was safe after they lied and covered-up what really happened about 9/11.

"Besides everything else, including my high monthly medication bills, I never received proper assistance to get my business on its feet and all I can remember is trying to deal with FEMA's red tape.

"I've had to move my salon several blocks away from the World Trade Center and I still have not been able to get back to where I was financially before 9/11."

Besides Diaz, Eddie Pichardo, a super in a nearby apartment complex near the WTC at 911 Maben Lane, said although many of his former tenants moved after 9/11, but he was aware of a number of people experiencing health problems due to the unsafe conditions caused by the WTC collapse.

"The conditions couldn't have been safe if you would have seen how everything around here looked like a war zone after a bomb hit," recalled Pichardo.

To highlight the lack of proper testing, very little was ever said about asbestos exposure since little known to many people, is the city refused to allow owners a permit for demolition, citing the danger of asbestos exposure made it necessary for a floor by floor dismantling of the high rise building, which was determined to be a cost prohibitive procedure.

Critics site this little known aspect about the WTC as another reason why a controlled demolition in the guise of a terrorist attack is a strong possibility, providing more speculation into the credibility of the official 9/11 story.

Last Man Out of WTC Possibly Slated for Mainstream Film Documentary
Irish film documentarian and recent Emmy winner pitching William Rodriguez to HBO and others for ground breaking 9/11 truth documentary.

28 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Emmy winner and documentary film maker, Pat O'Mahony, is pushing hard with HBO and others to film a story of William Rodriguez, the last man out alive of the World Trade Center and declared a national hero for saving hundreds of lives.

"William's story needs to be told and what he has to say is a great way to lead up to the bigger story of 9/11," said O'Mahony last week in New York, a day after receiving an Emmy for his acclaimed documentary called 'Reporters at War.'

O'Mahony, recipient of his first Emmy and originally from Ireland, is now in the process of pitching the story to major studios after meeting with Rodriguez on two occasions, once in London and recently in New York.

"It has all the ingredients. The last man out alive, heroism, his fight for the truth and, of course, his interesting life starting back as a boy in Puerto Rico," said O'Mahony.

Rodriguez, a 20-year-veteran WTC head maintenance man who had one of the only master keys for the towers, barely escaped death several times on 9/11, as he risked life and limb opening doors and pulling people to safety all the way up to the final seconds before the towers collapsed.

His heroics have been well-documented overseas, also being declared a hero in his home country of Puerto Rico, but strangely the true story of what really happened to Rodriguez in the North Tower has been muffled and silenced for four long years by the mainstream media and the 9/11 Commission.

Not only did the brave maintenance man save numerous lives, but he also claims to have heard explosions coming the sub levels of the North Tower prior to the jetliner striking the top floors.

On the morning of 9/11, Rodriguez and at least 14 other people, all able to verify his story, were huddled in a sub-level one office when an explosion emanating from beneath their feet rocked the lower levels of the tower, cracking walls and rupturing sprinkler systems.

The explosion came a split second before Rodriguez said he heard another more faint and distant explosion coming from high above in the tower, which he later surmised to be the airplane striking the upper floors.

Besides those in the office, at least three other eye-witnesses in the sub levels have corroborated Rodriguez's story. Felipe David, walking in the sub-level hallway near the office and severely burned moments after the basement explosion was heard, stormed into the office where Rodriguez and the others were still reeling from the explosion, yelling 'explosion, explosion, explosion!'

Rodriguez then immediately rushed David to safety, where he later was taken to a hospital where he spent more than three months recovering in a coma from severe third degree burns.

Salvatore Giambanco, trapped in an elevator between sub-level one and two of the North Tower, also tells the same story about hearing an explosion in the basement. After Rodriguez brought David to safety, he returned to the North Tower basement, where he then crawled in a darkened elevator shaft, pulling Giambanco and another man trapped after the explosion brought the elevator to a halt between floors.

Still another eye-witness, Jose Sanchez, working on sub level four, came forward with the others, telling the same story about a powerful explosion heard beneath the North Tower.

Filmmaker O'Mahony didn't reveal whether the documentary would delve into Rodriguez's controversial statements that contradict the government's jet fuel theory as being the sole cause of collapsing the towers. But Rodriguez for years has said he never would allow his story to be told without "telling the truth" about what he experienced, even if it leads to proving that the government was responsible for lying and covering up the truth about what really happened on 9/11.

What has troubled critics of the government story and the subsequent 9/11 Commission Report is that the stories of explosions in the North Tower, told by Rodriguez and the other eye-witnesses, has been systematically censored by the government, media and 9/11 Commission.

Even though Rodriguez's story has been presented overseas unedited in numerous markets, including Europe, South America and the Middle East, the New York Times, Washington Post and all major television networks have kept his story from earshot of most Americans.

Although he recently told his story on ABC radio after the fourth annual 9/11 ceremony at Ground Zero, Rodriguez has documented how the media in this country has either edited his story or censored it completely in what he calls a systematic effort to keep any serious evidence that contradicts the official 9/11 story out of the mainstream news.

"From day one, I have told the same story, never straying from the truth," said Rodriguez at Ground Zero at the recent 9/11 ceremony held in New York. "I am going to continue to tell my story, trying to get at the truth of what happened at the WTC since the 3,000, people who died on that tragic day, including more than 200 friends, deserve nothing less than the truth in order to preserve their dignity and honor."

Besides the documentary, First Amendment Publishing, a subsidiary of the American Free Press, is in the process of publishing a book about Rodriguez to be released early next year.

Also, Rodriguez has begun to speak out publicly across the country, recently talking about his experiences at speaking engagements in Hollywood and Chicago. Presently, he is actively looking for sponsors to jump-start what he hopes will turn out to be a nationwide tour.

"I will speak at every church and university in the country if that's what it takes to get at the truth. The government story is a lie and I know it for a fact because I was there that morning," added Rodriguez.

Besides the media censorship, the 9/11 Commission finally met with Rodriguez before releasing its 2004 report, but in the final version his story was completely omitted and his name never mentioned.

"Unless there is a cover-up, why didn't they use my comments or even mention my name," said Rodriguez, saying all the other statements were omitted from eye-witnesses in the basement who also heard the same explosion.

Rodriguez contends after "not playing ball" with the government who wanted him to change his story or keep quiet, he was systematically black balled, going homeless in 2004.

At one point, living under a bridge while feeling hopeless and destitute with no place to turn, he planned to tie himself to a cross in the middle of Ground Zero to prove his point. But before taking such drastic action, a 9/11 Methodist support group came to his assistance, finding him shelter and providing financial assistance to get him back on his feet.

Even though he now lives more comfortably in Jersey City, his troubles haven't completely vanished. Recently, after returning from a 9/11 truth speech near Chicago, his apartment was suspiciously burglarized, the thieves taking his laptop containing personal information as well as a camera and jewelry.

Wife and Friends of Slain 72-year-old Puerto Rican Independence Leader Claim FBI Agents Pulled-Off Another Waco or Ruby Ridge

Three hundred agents with sharp shooters surround an old man wearing a pacemaker then swarm his farmhouse, shooting a barrage of bullets and leaving him to die on the floor in a pool of blood without calling for medical help. These are the reports coming from the island, made by eye-witnesses, but not reported here by the doddling and inept American press, obviously again covering up for our ruthless government agencies

By Greg Szymanski

More than 300 armed FBI agents and 20 sniper-sharp shooters last Friday opened fire on a 72-year-old Puerto Rican independence leader wearing a pacemaker, leaving him to bleed to death, according to eye-witnesses and autopsy reports.

But as expected, the doodling, inept and unscrupulous American press inexcusably failed the American people once again, remaining strangely silent on the story. And while a few accounts did dribble out, these one-sided FBI versions only contained inaccurate and censored facts about the bloody shoot out

But in the silent background the victim's wife and several close friends reveal the untold story, telling a completely different version about how ruthless FBI thugs pulled off what amounts to another Waco or Ruby Ridge style massacre on Filiberto Ojeda Rios, a well-known leader and founder of the Macheteros or Peoples' Independence Army.

Rios' wife, Elma Barbosa, who emerged from the house after the incident while her husband remained dying and bloody on the floor, told island officials the FBI opened fire first then allowing her elderly husband to bleed to death. Barbosa, who is openly calling for justice against her husband's FBI murderers, was arrested, spent the night in jail but was released of any charges the following day.

Rios, who had a severe heart condition and appeared to be no immediate threat to the more than 300 agents assembled, was also strangely murdered during the Grito de Lares, which is the Sept 23rd annual celebration of the island's independence movement.

"This is all too strange and getting way out of hand. The FBI claims he shot first, but reports from my home country, including those from Filerberto's wife and friends who witnessed the incident claim the FBI definitely opened fire on him," said Guillermo Beytagh Maldonado, a native of Puerto Rico and leader of the Puerto Rican independence movement in New Jersey.

A Cornell University graduate with a master's degree, Maldonado from his New Jersey residence said he has been receiving numerous inside reports from friends and contacts in his home country, all saying the FBI murdered Rios in cold blood as officials traced at least 120 FBI bullet holes left at the gruesome farmhouse murder scene.

"Everybody in Puerto Rico and all of us here are pissed off, including the governor of my home country," added Maldonado, who recently resigned as Executive Director of the Puerto Rican Action Social Services Board.

"The FBI agents let him die. Evidently, their tactic was not to let anybody intervene so that Rios would die. The autopsy of the Puerto Rican Forensic Science Institute confirmed he died from a bullet wound following a shot to the collarbone that penetrated his lung and that he eventually died due to a lack of medical attention."

Maldonado also said widespread FBI criticism is being leveled across the board by his fellow countrymen, saying agents cordoned off the farmhouse where Rios was located for more than 24 hours before swarming in on the old man without even allowing friends or mediators to enter in order to negotiate a peaceful solution.

"They wanted him out. This is so bad, so incredible and is just like Waco," said Maldonado, who claims he is not anti-American just anti-colonialism. "It's just not working anymore and I've always felt we should be a free country ever since being invaded by the U.S. in 1898. I know I am still in the minority, but look what these ruthless agents did to Rios

"I think Bush may have been behind it. Everyone knows how he and his FBI agents cannot be trusted to work in the best interests of the people."

Rios, a musician who supposedly taught the famed trumpet player Arturo Sandoval of Cuba how to play, was killed in a farmhouse in the northern part of Hormigueros, Puerto Rico, after being a fugitive for more than 15 years on what has been called trumped up and bogus theft charges.

The charges of theft supposedly were brought on as a government set-up and retribution for being found not guilty of what turned out to be a self defense killing of a Navy enlisted man in the 1980's.

After being forced to wear an ankle bracelet due to the theft charge, Rios in a display of opposition ripped off the electronic shackle on the steps of a well-known Puerto Rico newspaper, then fled to parts unknown for almost 15 years until his untimely death Friday.

"I have been closely following the story since it happened Friday and let me tell you the whole thing makes me sick," said Maldonado. "I talk to a lot of people here and in my country where I was born and raised and everybody is furious over what happened.

"I have looked very hard and the American press is not telling the story. Nothing is going out here but a few words about the incident, all of which are slanted towards favoring what the FBI did."

Maldonado said Rios was laid to rest in Puerto Rico Tuesday and followers of his independent cause in New Jersey held a vigil service at the Suydam Street Reform Church in his honor on the same day.

He added that plans are also in the works for a local rally to bring attention to the FBI massacre and killing of Rios as well as drawing attention to the growing problem in Puerto Rico over the issue of independence, statehood or continued U.S. colonization.

NY Doctor Beats FEMA to New Orleans and Saves Many Lives

Dr. Lisa Aptaker took matters in her own hands, rushing to the Big Easy. She talks about horror stories of dead bodies floating in the water, adding without 'locals in boats' goint to the rescue many more people would have died.

26 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Some people think about living life, taking risks and helping others, but never do it. People like this spend their time wishing, hoping, wondering and playing hero in their minds over and over again.

But then there's New York Dr. Lisa Aptaker who took action, packed her bags and headed to New Orleans just like that old saying goes "as fast as New York minute."

When Hurricane Katrina hit, Dr. Aptaker already had her mind made up to make a beeline to the Big Easy. And so without any second thoughts or personal reservations, she put her own life on hold, placing the needs of others before her own. She took off for New Orleans, never looking back and in the process saving many lives.

Helping others is a rare quality nowadays. But then again it's always been that way otherwise mankind wouldn't find itself in the predicament it's in today.

In fact, if there were more Lisa Aptaker's in the world, it wouldn't be such a bad place to live. But as it stands, trying to find a helping hand is like trying to walk on water. Better yet, trying to get the time of day is hard enough.

Everybody says tragedies like Katrina bring out the best in people, but don't believe it. Rather it should be said tragedies like Katrina bring the best out in too few people. and if this isn't true, why are thousands dying in Africa every day or why are thousands still sleeping in the streets in the Gulf Coast three long weeks after the hurricane hit?

The answer being there's too few Lisa Aptaker's in the world and too many others who do nothing or responded dreadfully late like our bungling, Alfred E. Newman look-alike President Bush as well as many other higher-ups from supposed government assistance agencies.

Sure many people came to help in New Orleans, but the cold hard truth is that many more are needed. The cold hard truth is that America needs a real leader who will act decisively and with true compassion, not one who make excuses while playing the photo-op game to make it look like he really cares

A comedian once said: "The only thing I demand of President is that he is smarter than me and in the case of President Bush it just isn't happening."

And the lack of Bush brainpower once again surfaced when Hurricane Katrina hit, as he sat twiddling his thumb for four days instead of taking immediate action, the same strange modus operandi he displayed on 9/11 when he sat reading a goat or pig book to 2nd graders for 20 minutes like a blubbing idiot while Americans were jumping from buildings and running for their lives at the WTC.

So thank God for people like Lisa Aptaker who put aside everything else, having the brainpower and courage to rush down to New Orleans in a car, arriving before President Bush who had the entire United States Air Force at his disposal.

Although Dr. Aptaker, a health care worker first and critic second, wants to stay away from throwing political stones, she admits without the help of locals with boats many more people would have died since even as late as Sunday, a week after Katrina hit, FEMA and the feds were strangely absent from the scene.

And it is this stark comparison between Dr. Aptaker's quick private action and Bush's lackadaisical public response that highlights the problem, a problem of too few private helpers like Dr. Aptaker and a "too little too late" government response.

"It's scary to thin how they are going to put New Orleans and the rest of the Gulf Coast back together," said Dr. Aptaker from her west side New York apartment after returning this week from what she calls two weeks in living hell, adding she plans to rest for awhile and return to New Orleans on October 20.

"When I left I still saw bodies floating in the water. When I first arrived, after a hellish trip to even get there by car, there wasn't anybody from the government around that I could see. In between I pulled a lot of people out of the water and we opened up a make-shift clinic near one of the oil refineries that was spewing oil in the water making the situation very dangerous.

"When we arrived, I-10 turned into a river and that's where we launched our boats. I spent most of the time in the hard hit area of St. Bernard's Parish which had six to 12 feet of standing water in most parts. Although many people came to help, what's really needed is more volunteers from all walks of life as well as more government assistance since the situation will remain critical for a long time. Literally, we would launch our boats at 4:30am and it seemed like we never stopped helping people all day and night."

Besides the tremendous amount of death, destruction and human suffering, Dr. Aptaker pointed out that already serious health issues with regards to contaminants and toxins in the water surfaced in both the citizens of New Orleans and the rescue workers.

"Rescue workers were coming in with rashes, serious skin conditions and respiratory problems," said Dr. Aptaker, who also has a masters degree in public health administration, adding mosquito born viruses and infections were also beginning to pose a major health threat. "Right before I left, one of my fingers blew up from a mosquito bite.

Warning that future environmentally related health problems are a major concern, she said problems to look out for include Legionnaire's Disease from the extensive mold, viral disease from the mosquitoes and all types of bacteriological infections and diseases from water and air contamination.

"When I go back to New Orleans, I would like to help monitor the public health issues," said Aptaker, emphasizing that counseling for emotionally related problems is also needed.

Asked what she saw from her own eyes, she added:

"What did I see? I saw a lot of pain, suffering, death and disassembled families. It truly is a life-changing experience and makes you appreciate what you have. From what I saw, we need many more people to help. The whole area is in need of desperate help and that's why I am going back. I saw dead bodies floating the water. It was horrible.

As for what the Gulf Coast locals are lacking, she said the government needs to get its act together and provide immediate health care, food and shelter as thousands still remain homeless and without the basic necessities.

Regarding the late government response, Dr. Aptaker said everyone agrees that was the unfortunate case, but being a long time skeptical New Yorker it's something that didn't come as a big surprise.

"I don't really understand the government at all," she said. "Remember, I am a New Yorker and what happened here. And like I said if it wasn't for the locals in New Orleans, not the government, I don't know what we would have done."

To emphasize Dr. Aptaker's point of view, even Wal Mart trucks were far ahead of the federal government's slow response with trucks heading into the flooded streets with needed supplies the day after the hurricane hit.

And yet another example of government foolishness and incompetence occurred in 1997 when the feds gave the state of Louisiana $500,000 to study an evacuation plan for New Orleans. Instead of using the money for its intended purpose, government officials in their infinite wisdom used it for a study to build a bridge.

If anything can be taken from Dr. Aptaker's unselfish dedication to helping others, it's important, if at all possible, to take a trip to the Gulf Coast, since offering a helping hand is more important than just sending an envelope full of money that may end up in the wrong hands anyway.

Private Katrina Housing Effort Outdoing FEMA and Red Cross NOLA housing group says red tape and government foolishness standing in the way of relocating homeless.

24 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Victoria Moate and Bobbi McBratney took matters in their own hands when they saw thousands of Americans sleeping in alleys, abandoned cars and demolished houses, as a result of Hurricane Katrina's devastating blow on the Gulf Coast three weeks ago.

Instead of sitting on their thumbs like the feds after the hurricane hit, they quickly organized a volunteer help group, put together a web site, added a data base and started matching available housing with thousands of hurricane-homeless scattered across the country.

In three short weeks, their make-shift volunteer organization, which has grown to about 100 helpers, has been assisting thousands of homeless now with trying to find long term housing as well as every other need imaginable in a time of extreme crisis.

And what's truly ironic, this band of ragtag Americans led by two courageous business women with little or no resources, is outdoing the efforts of the 'big boys' at FEMA and Red Cross.

It seems the 'big boys' are so mired in red tape and bureaucratic foolishness they not only are dropping the housing ball, but they actually are referring the homeless to Moate's and McBrantney's volunteer group.

And with the Red Cross and FEMA now referring thousands to their web site at www.NOLAhousing.com, it exemplifies the total lack of preparedness and government mismanagement while, at the same time, putting a tremendous financial strain on the volunteers, some even dipping into their 401K's to help out.

As the tales of horror and stories of bureaucratic red tap continue to mount on their web site, Moate wants everyone to know what's really going on behind the scenes in New Orleans and other small towns in Louisiana and Mississippi hardest hit by the storm.

These rural towns, said Moate, look like outposts in a third world country, still remaining without housing, utilities, running water and the basic necessities of life without a stitch of help from FEMA or others in government three weeks after the storm.

"These stories are just not getting out in the media. We hear how FEMA and Red Cross are on the scene, but they are hopelessly caught up in red tape and not doing a good job," said Moate in an extended conversation this week from her New Jersey home.

"We are hitting brick walls with the Red Cross and FEMA. We are taking money out of our own pockets, using our cell phone minutes, paying to put up people in short term housing as shelters close and kick out the evacuees, paying for bus tickets, gas for the evacuees to drive across state lines to get home or to relocate to new areas, driving families to bus stations, airports, etc. All the while, donations are pouring in by the millions to Gov.org and the Red Cross. What are they doing with it?

"The situation is such a mess that we have Red Cross volunteers leaking information to us, giving us ten of thousands of names of evacuees they need placed, asking for our help. Their own Director of Human Services called us on Friday asking if we could help find homes, rentals, temp housing for displaced citizens.

Saying despite the lack of funding and the government's shabby effort, the volunteers spread across the country are determined to find every last person housing no matter what it takes.

"We will do anything it takes to help place the 1,000,000 people left homeless by Hurricane Katrina, but we are not a non-for-profit raking in billions like the Red Cross or Gov.org," said Moate. "We are independent volunteers who have assembled across the country in an effort to keep Americans properly housed, to help find resources for them, jobs, etc.

"We are working night and day, plus our regular jobs, raising our families and working until 3:00 am, 5:00 am to keep this effort going.

"However, we can't afford to pay for gas, transportation, housing and communication when FEMA or the Red Cross should be footing the bill. For example, FEMA gave out the personal cell phone number of one of our volunteers in Houston. Her cell phone bill has exceeded over $500 and she is taking money out of her 401K. This is insanity."

Moate said the situation has become critical that the American public needs to know "everything is not OK," saying the media has turned a blind eye to the emergency housing crisis.

"Is there a media gag order out there right now? We are beginning to think so," said Moate. "Our in the field volunteers have stories to tell, how the evacuees are being evicted from hotels, shelters with no place to go.

"People are living in their cars because their own funds have run out and their insurance hasn't kicked-in. Other stories tell how they are lining up blocks long at Red Cross centers, sleeping in line 24/7 in order to get meager Red Cross assistance, which is less than $200 for a family of four in the state of Mississippi."

McBratney, co-leader of the volunteer group living in San Diego, tells a nightmare story about an evacuee named Robert and his three children, separated from his wife who stayed behind in Lafayette, Louisiana, for medical attention.

She added that Robert had been given the run-around for days, bouncing back from FEMA and the Red Cross like a pin ball, finally receiving a mere $200.

"I talked with him for hours last week until 4am in the morning," recalls McBratney. "We then started calling the Red Cross agencies since he was sleeping in his car. It's easy to get through to their donation lines, but when you try to get actual assistance for those who need it, well, that's another story."

McBratney said it took five days to finally get Robert help after being treated rudely by one Red Cross agency and then given flimsy excuses by several others.

Besides the Red Cross, McBratney said FEMA's so-called $2,000 per person assistance plan is fraught with technicalities, leading to a big conception about how much money is really going to the people.

"When people go to get their assistance, the government checks their tax records and many people only qualify for a tiny sum based on their tax records or are told they'll be given a loan but no money. It's just ridiculous," said McBratney.

Besides Robert, said she is the process of relocating 18 displaced hurricane victims from Houston to another location as they were now experiencing their second mandatory evacuation as Hurricane Rita now is bearing down on Texas.

"This family of 18 just got into an apartment and now they have to evacuate Houston," she said. "They have no car, no money and they are scared. So we organized one of our helpers from Jefferson, Texas, and they are driving down in three cars, as we speak, to pick them up."

Crystal Williams, one of NOLA's volunteers in Dallas, said the problem with government red tape is so bad she literally can't keep up with calls for assistance, including families sleeping in cars and others walking the streets looking for shelter.

"I am working with a family of 10 from Hammond, Louisiana, who is sleeping in a car," said Williams. "I am trying to relocate them along with many other families in a similar situation. There are many evacuees here in Dallas and working at the grass roots level, I see a lot of suffering and just too much red tape."

"Without private organizations lending a hand, I really don't know what these people would do because it's obvious the government has no plan and no idea what to do. It's a very desperate situation. What you see on the news, isn't what's really happening on the streets."

And with the third most powerful storm in recorded history, Hurricane Rita, headed toward Galveston and Corpus Christi and expected to make landfall Friday evening, it looks like NOLA's work is only beginning as many others could be searching for housing in the days to come.

Galveston Couple Decides to Ride-Out Storm Even Though Most Everybody Else Left

Tim and Marci Anderson feel they're safe even after watching what happened in New Orleans. They have boarded up their house, have generator power, two life boats and enough food and water to last. Only two other families have remained in their neighborhood and they were warned by the mayor everybody who stays is on their own.
22 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

As Hurricane Rita bears down on Galveston, most people have decided to leave under the mandatory evacuation order. However, a few families have remained, even after seeing what happened in New Orleans. Tim and Marci Anderson are one of those staying in their Friendswood home on the outskirts of Galveston. As the hurricane draws near, they have agreed to tell their story, day by day and minute by minute, if necessary, and if their cell phone communication holds up. This is the first account on Wednesday evening as they boarded up their beach home and are now holed up in their nearby family home.

Tim and Marci Anderson boarded up their Galveston family beach home Wednesday, never expecting to see it again. They gathered up a few heirlooms and took a video of the house as a lasting memory.

But instead of leaving under the mandatory evacuation order like most of their 250,000 Texas Gulf Coast neighbors, the Anderson's and their two young daughters decided to ride out the storm at their nearby home in Friendswood, only 20 miles inland, but still not out of harm's way from deadly Hurricane Rita.

They decided to remain even though only two other families in the entire neighborhood stayed and authorities warned there would be no police help.

So what motivates someone to ride-out what could be one of the most powerful hurricanes in recorded history with winds at over 175 mph, especially in the wake of what happened in New Orleans just a month ago?

Although the reasons are never clear, it's definitely a crap shoot. It's definitely a decision of preparing for the worst and hoping for the best. But whatever the case it's too late for second guessing and they'll just have to hope and pray their decision was the right one.

"We have two generators, two boats, enough food and water, and all the other necessities we need," said Marci in a conversation Wednesday evening from her Friendswood home. "We are boarding everything up now. I know only two other families in the neighborhood that decided to stay and I guess we are on our own.

"We boarded up the beach house and don't expect to ever see it again, but I think we will be safe here. We're here with our two daughters who are seven and 11-years-old and we're hoping for the best.

"My other older daughter has left town and she said the traffic was bumper to bumper for miles, leaving Galveston. We have a cell phone and we will try and keep your publication abreast of how we are doing throughout the storm if at all possible.

"The whole thing is a nightmare but we are staying. It just seems like one storm after another and I can't imagine how many homeless there will be after this storm hits."

During the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, Marci lent assistance to a private shelter group and helped with finding temporary housing for the homeless in New Orleans.

"I understand the danger and what could happen, but somehow I feel we are safer in our home and, anyway," said Marci. "The traffic is going to be a nightmare and we just don't want to get stranded on the road."

Although the Anderson's remain confident, the storm as of Wednesday evening shifted closer to a direct hit on Galveston, a storm packing deadly force winds of more than 175 mph.

The last major hurricane that hit Galveston with the same punch as Hurricane Rita is packing, killed 7,000 people in 1900 and is still considered America's worst natural disaster.

Cindy Sheehan's NY Anti-War Rally Organizer Arrested For Improper Permit
Sheehan is ruffed-up by NY police as protestors butt heads with pro-war supporters at Union Square. Sheehan headed to D.C. for weekend anti-war march.

21 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The organizer of Cindy Sheehan's New York's anti-war rally was arrested Monday after Sheehan finished her emotionally charged anti-Bush speech in New York's Union Square

Paul Zulkowitz, a well-known New York peace activist, was taken into custody and held by police for three hours after tempers flared at the conclusion of the rally. Zulkowitz was charged with operating a sound system without a permit even though organizers said they had went through the proper legal channels to obtain proper permits weeks in advance without a response from the city.

"As Cindy Sheehan ended her speech at Union Square, cops closed in, pushed her aside and arrested Paul," said one 9/11 truth activist. "He had repeatedly applied for a permit today and the city never responded. Then they just lay in wait and grabbed him. But he came later that evening to Cindy's appearance at St. John the Divine Church."

Eye-witness reports said Sheehan, the outspoken Bush critic and mother who lost her son in Iraq, was grabbed, pushed and mishandled by police after tempers flared at the rally.

At the end of her emotionally charged speech, calling for an immediate withdrawal of troops from Iraq, some in the crowd who disagreed with her anti-war statements, rushed the elevated podium as police encircled Sheehan for protection.

One eye-witness saw a hand from the crowd grab Sheehan's backpack, snapping her head back in a violent manner as she fell from view among a large crowd.

"The crowd erupted in booing and jeering," said an eye-witness who attended the rally. "The crowd then rushed the elevated park where she stood speaking, not to fight but to witness what was happening. People crowded the police, who formed a semi-circle around Cindy.

While the police tried to control the scene and was taking Zulkowitz into custody, chants of 'Nazis, Gestapo, free speech, burn the constitution and traitors' could be heard from the angry crowd as police stood shoulder to shoulder forming a human wall.

"It's a waste of energy to yell at police," yelled another in the crowd. "We can't stop it from happening, but what we can do is trumpet this event to the rest of the United States."

The protestors throughout the hour-long event, before it was cut short by police, were orderly and spoke from microphones with speakers which triggered police action and Zulkowitz's arrest.

Sheehan began speaking about 3:00pm Monday afternoon, urging supporters to join her on Saturday for an upcoming anti-war march in Washington D.C. Supporters nicknamed the Union Square rally as 'Camp Casey NYC' after her makeshift protest camp near President Bush's Crawford, TX, ranch.

Sheehan's month-long war protest during August made her name a household word as almost overnight she became the spearhead of the country's growing anti-war movement.

Camping out with celebrities and politicians making visits on a regular basis, Sheehan refused to leave Crawford until Bush personally answered her tough questions about the war, something Bush refused to do even though he had plenty of spare time during his month-long ranch vacation.

Sheehan takes her bus tour and anti-war protest to Washington this Friday as she is a featured panelist in a forum to be held on the Iraq war, hosted by Rep. Charles Rangel (D-NY) from 9am to Noon at the Washington Convention Center, Hall 146A.

Others on the panel include Gen. Wesley Clarke, Hon. Kweise Mfume, E.J. Dionne, Rev. Al Sharpton and Mark Fields.

"With more than 1,900 U.S. troops dead and thousands wounded after two years of war, Americans want to know how the war can be brought to an end and what will become of our military and our country if current policies continue," said Rep. Rangel.

Human to Human Passage of Deadly Avian Flu Verified Overseas; World Health Organization Refuses to Acknowledge As True

Microbiologist, Dr. Henry Niman, says don't rely on government to protect against Avian flu since it is "playing catch-up" and vaccines are ineffective against new strains. He warns Avian flu is coming and it could be deadly.

20 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Dr. Henry Niman has been flying high with the birds for the last two years, dedicating his life as a microbiologist to tracking the mysterious Avian flu outbreaks in almost every corner of the world.

Niman, who did his post graduate work at the University of Southern California and now lives in Pittsburgh, isn't in the business of scaring people with trumped up biological conspiracy theories.

But he is the complicated business of trying to figure out how viruses mutate and how to best protect mankind against a flu pandemic that could kill millions of people world wide, making the 1918 outbreak pale in comparison.

And make no mistake about it, Dr. Niman says the Avian flu, in one of its many mutated forms, is coming to America, the only questions remaining are when, what strain and how deadly.

To make matters worse, Dr. Niman says don't rely government for advice, assistance or an immediate vaccine since the United States, as well as the rest of the world, is playing a game of catch-up against the many strains of the H5N1 avian flu, a game he says they can't win against this formidable foe that appears to be changing and mutating almost on a daily basis.

"The present pandemic vaccines have proven ineffective in 2004 for the Vietnam strain and they are still ineffective for what is being called the wild bird flu strain and others," said Dr. Niman Sunday in an extended conversation from his home in Pittsburgh. "The government has essentially done nothing up until now, even though we've known about the seriousness of H5N1 mutations and different forms of the virus for some time. We've had Avian flu before, but this year the situation is extremely critical for a variety of reasons, including the many different strains detected and the unusually high mortality rate is some of those strains.

"Even though the World Health Organization, the United States and 16 other countries have recently signed on to tackle the problem, the chances are very good that their efforts will come up short against several strains of H5N1 spreading across the world."

Since Dr. Niman thinks it's next to impossible to come up with an effective vaccine to cover all the possible strains that could hit America in the coming months, he is telling people to stock up with two different types of anti-virals called Tami flu and Amantadine as possibly the only two precautions now available.

"Tami flu is effective against the type of strain now found Vietnam and Indonesia, but it wouldn't be effective against the so called wild bird strain, which could eventually makes its way to Alaska and Canada very soon and then down to the United States," said Dr. Niman, adding that Tami flu is much more expensive, selling at $50 for 10 tablets while Amantadine sells for about $20 for 100 tablets. "If the wild bird flu strain makes its way here, then I would tell people to take Amantadine doses as this could prove effective. But remember an anti-viral is only effective when taking it so you have to stock up enough doses to last a relatively long time.

"Another big problem is we are not sure what strain and how severe the strain will be that finally arrives, but the chances are very high that a deadly form of the virus could come here soon.

"And for those who didn't take precautions, the outcome could be deadly. The problem is some forms of the H5N1 detected this year have a more devastating effect on healthy people and healthy immune systems and not just on the sick and elderly."

Although there has been much controversy about whether human to human contact has been confirmed in H5N1 cases, Dr. Niman said 15 to 20 clusters have been uncovered overseas and human to human passage of the deadly virus has been known since 2004.

He said what compounds the problem is the World Health Organization (WHO) still refuses to acknowledge human to human passage of the Vietnam-type strain even though strong evidence exists to the contrary as three family members in Jakarta all died from Avian flu within a short period of time.

Dr. Niman claims the passage of H5N1 appears to be most prevalent among family members or people who are in constant close contact with the virus such as people in the health care profession.

In a recent article on his informative website at www.recombinomics.com, monitoring the spread of the Avian flu on a daily basis, he wrote:

"Human-to-human transmission was clear in the initial family cluster, which involved 3 members of a government auditor in Jakarta. His eight year old daughter was the index case, showing symptom on June 24. The time gap between her symptoms and her 1 year old sister who developed symptoms on June 29 is a strong signal of human-to-human transmission.

"Such a 5-10 day gap has been present in almost all familial clusters in Vietnam, Thailand, and Cambodia. WHO however, has refused to acknowledge the virtual certainty of human-to-human transmission in all or most of those cases, which account for more than one third of confirmed cases. Instead WHO maintains that the vast majority of cases come from poultry, thereby contributing to more human-to-human transmission within families, which is clearly happening in Tangerang."

He continued, slamming officials for not taking the possible deadly virus strain more seriously.

"The testing in Indonesia is scandalously poor. The H5N1 positive swine in Tangerang was largely ignored. After 3 members of a government worker died, very limited testing and culling was done. When another government office worker died, a press conference cited negative tests in a 100 meter radius that excluded the chicken slaughterhouse 100 meters from the victim's house.

The number of reported positives remains obscure. Four are dead that were clearly H5N1 infected. At least two more have H5N1 antibodies and symptoms. There may be another positive child and a 2 month old who lived above a chicken slaughterhouse and died of pneumonia was not tested."

Dr. Niman emphasized that the entire Avian flu situation "is clearly heading south," saying the situation in Indonesia is of grave concern since about one-third of the cases involve people to people transmission, but saying nobody really knows how these people are getting infected.

He adds that the chances of a deadly strain landing in America is high, but the question remains how, when and what virus will makes its way here first.

"If it comes this year and it's the wild bird flu strain, it will come from the north by way of bird migration," said Dr. Niman, reminding people to stock up on Amantadine for this type of H5N1. "If it is the Vietnam strain, it will come from a person landing here on airplane and how and when that will occur is anybody's guess.

"However, if this strain arrives, stock up on Tami flu. But remember the possibility of a deadly strain arriving this year is exceedingly higher this year than in years in the past because of a combination of a flurry of activity and many viruses popping up all over the world."

Dr. Niman said Avian flu symptoms killing a high percentage of people infected overseas include pneumonia, respiratory problems, internal bleeding and organ failure.

Regarding the spread of the wild bird flu strain, he recently wrote:

"Two wild birds - a duck and a magpie -- have been found dead near Lake Sharonur in the republic of Tuva - the first such case among wild birds reported

"The wild bird deaths described above may signal more H5N1 wild bird flu in southern Russia, just north of outbreaks reported in Mongolia. Mongolia invited WHO to help control the wild bird deaths which were H5N1 positive. Last week there was a larger die off involving 123 birds in Buryatta which is adjacent to Tuva (see map). The deaths in Tuva, Buryatta and northern Mongolia may be signaling new movement of migratory birds toward warmer regions.

"New H5N1 deaths were also reported in Chelyabins which may be signaling movement of H5N1 toward the Caspian and Black seas regions, which is expect to begin at this time of the year. The continued geographical spread is cause for concern. Prior to July, there had been no reports of H5N1 in Russia, Mongolia, or Kazakhstan. These most recent outbreaks indicate the geographic spread of H5N1 will expand."

Asked how he would protect his family against the many H5N1 strains he tracks on a daily basis, he added:

"There really aren't many alternatives, but I would stock up on the anti viral medication which can be obtained by prescription easily now over the internet or through a doctor. Besides that, devise a plan to isolate yourself with enough food and water for an extended period of time since vaccines will not be ready and the ones available now are not effective against the mutations taking place in H5N1.

"Besides that keep your eyes open because the bird flu is coming and I don't think the government will be of much help. I recommend that everybody get the two different anti virals if they can afford them. Remember, it only protects you while taking the doses, which differs from getting a vaccine shot."

FBI Harasses Informant of Former Agent John O'Neill

Janet Parker says agents discredited her association with O'Neill and discounted she saw London bombing suspect in Seattle in 2002. Agents told her she needed psychiatric help and was fabricating story for public attention. Parker denies FBI allegations.

18 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

FBI agents two weeks ago made an unexpected visit to a close friend and former informant of deceased bureau agent John O'Neill after a Seattle woman recently went public on numerous radio stations and news outlets, saying O'Neill told her government bigwigs thwarted his Al Qaeda undercover manhunt just months prior to 9/11.

O'Neill was killed on 9/11 at the World Trade Center (WTC), some say in a suspicious manner, after being forced out of the FBI and taking a cushy top security position at the WTC, starting his $350,000 a year job on Sept. 10, only a day before the towers collapsed.

Janet Parker, 53, who knew O'Neill for 30 years and helped him on numerous investigations, including the 1993 world Trade Center bombing, said agents called her on Sept. 8, asking her to be at Gene Coulon Park in Renton, WA, at 4:30pm or otherwise they were going to pay her a personal visit.

"I decided to meet them because I know how these guys work," said Parker Saturday from her Renton home near Seattle, adding agents were concerned with her statements about O'Neill and her claims she saw Haroon Rashid Aswat in Seattle in the spring of 2002.

Aswat, a known terrorist possibly being protected by American and British Intelligence, was in O'Neill's cross-hairs as far back as 1999 during the Millennium investigation, claims Parker. He is also suspected of being involved in the recent London bombings commonly referred to as 7/7.

Reports first surfaced by journalist John Loftus that Aswat was being protected by M16, an arm of British Intelligence and by the U.S. Justice Department. Loftus added that Aswat was in the U.S. in 1999 and certain officials were seeking indictments, but were thwarted by higher-ups in the Justice Department since Aswat was apparently working for British intelligence.

During the Sept. 8 meeting, Parker said FBI agents insisted Aswat could not have been in Seattle during the time Parker claimed, adding that throughout the 40 minute FBI meeting agents kept hinting she may need a psychiatrist or was simply seeking public attention.

"They tried to make me out to be crazy and said they had no intentions of following up my accusations, dismissing them as untrue fabrications," said Parker. "My belief is that John O'Neill had wanted to arrest Aswat and was prevented from doing that once in 1999 during the Millennium investigation and again right before 9/11 in July 2001 when he was working with sting ops with me.

"I believe Aswat is the reason I was exposed and now do not have the cooperation of federal agents to protect me. I believe he may have betrayed John O'Neill as well."

Regarding Parker's earlier accusations that O'Neill 9/11 investigation was thwarted by government bigwigs as late as July and August of 2001, she claims FBI asked her if the article with her comments first appearing in the Arctic Beacon last month, were true and accurate.

"I told them that except for a few minor details everything in the article was true, including my relationship with O'Neill and how his 9/11 investigation was thwarted by the U.S. government," said Parker. "The agents of course denied that I could have had contact with John O'Neill and when I insisted I did, he began asserting that I may need psychiatric help, which I considered to be a form of intimidation or a way of telling me how they planned to smear me in the future.

"I think they were just trying to let me know they were watching and that they didn't appreciate me going public. I am not good in situations when I am confronted by officials and didn't say much in response to their accusations."

Parker decided to go public in order to let the American people know 9/11 could have been prevented if O'Neill had been allowed to pursue his terrorist investigation. She added that O'Neill's private comments to her about how his own bureau was hindering his investigation, months prior to 9/11, only made it clear how the U.S. government had its dirty hands in bringing about 9/11.

"This meeting was strange and I really don't know what to expect," she said. "All I ever wanted to do was assist John when he asked for my help and it's amazing how I am being harassed for what I did. It makes me wonder even more just what the government is really hiding. If they weren't hiding anything, wouldn't they be trying to help me and not harass me.

"When I heard about John's death at the WTC, I knew it sounded suspicious. He was offered a security job at three times his FBI salary after being relegated to a desk job two months before 9/11. At that critical time, he was getting close to obtaining warrants with my help at what we thought was a major east coast terrorist cell planning a big event soon, an event which later turned out to be 9/11."

Parker, a veterinarian and long time informant of O'Neill who was a high ranking FBI agent and considered an expert in terrorism, first went public in the Arctic Beacon, saying O'Neill was stopped by his bosses only months prior to 9/11 from getting a wire tap on a major cell leader, Shadrack Manyathella, who had close ties with Ali Mohammad, a suspected CIA double operative and Mohammad Atta, the alleged 9/11 ring leader.

"His own bureau blocked him every step of the way, but John wanted me to bait Shadrack and get as much information as possible," said Parker in the original article.

"Shadrack was anxious to get me into his organization, since I was considered a valuable asset as a veterinarian. Also, he wanted me to marry another one of his friends named Mohammad, I think so he could get him citizenship papers and a passport."

During July 2001, O'Neill and Parker communicated numerous times, sharing vital information and trying to determine the best way to uncover Shadrack's plans, as O'Neil told Parker "something big was in the works and coming down soon."

Although O'Neill was working non-stop, day and night, to connect the dots and pin down Shadrack and the intentions of other terrorists, traveling back and forth from Europe and Yemen about the USS Cole bombing as well as trying to stop future attacks.

However, Parker said during this time O'Neill also became very despondent and depressed by the lack of cooperation he was getting from FBI headquarters.

Mother Talks About Pain Felt Losing Daughter at Ground Zero
Donna Marsh-O'Connor made an impassioned plea at a recent New York 9/11 truth rally, demanding Bush be removed and calling for Americans to demand a truthful investigation into what really happened on 9/11.

17 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The morning began with the highest of highs and ended with the lowest of lows. It had all the makings of a perfect September day but turned quickly into one ordered up by the devil as if a black curtain had been thrown over the entire world.

On the morning of 9/11, Donna Marsh O'Connor started out to Toronto with high expectations, hoping her husband Robert's film, Buffalo Soldiers, would fair well in the prestigious film festival held there every year.

It ended with the deepest feelings of despair and desperation and a life or death race back to New York City after hearing about 9/11, knowing her 29-year-old daughter, Vanessa, who was five months pregnant, was working on one of the top floors in the South Tower.

Many stories of horror and tragedy have been told about 9/11, but this one somehow is a bit different. It's different because, four years after the fact, it places the entire picture of 9/11, both the tragedy and political ramifications into proper perspective from the eyes - the thoughtful and intelligent eyes - of a grieving mother who only wanted justice from the very beginning, something she claims she never has gotten.

But before delving into politics and social injustice, this is the type of compelling story that needs to be explored from the human side. It's the type of heart-wrenching, sad story that can't be easily wrapped up in a neat, little package with all the answers plainly visible on the cover.

In fact, it's the type of story that leaves an eternity of unanswered questions, perplexing questions like why good people die young and why some people like Marsh-O'Connor are given an extra-large dose of sadness and grief, given enough turmoil and disappointment to fill up the lives of a million people combined.

But in between the unanswered questions and mysteries of life, this is a story about the greatest human tragedy of all, the story of a loving mother losing a daughter and, in the process, upsetting the entire balance of nature and progression of life.

It upsets the entire balance because children aren't supposed to die first and parents just aren't supposed to outlive their children. But when it happens, when the young are ripped away for no good reason, it's like turning the entire planet upside down and driving a stake through its core and, at the same time, driving it through the mother's heart as she watches her child die before her very eyes.

And Marsh-O'Connor knows what it's like to have that eternal stake driven through her heart, knows how excruciatingly long the pain can last, realizing it may last forever and perhaps even longer than that.

She knows all too well how the pain started on the black and horrid morning of 9/11 when she first collapsed on the roadside after frantically calling from a phone booth on her way back to New York City, trying desperately to talk with her daughter.

She knows what it's like to rush as close as she could get to the rubble at Ground Zero, staring endlessly into what was nothing more than a bottomless pit of smoke and debris, wondering if her daughter was dead or alive.

She knows what it's like to live on pins and needles for 13 long days, holding on tight to every last glimmer of hope that her daughter, Vanessa, would somehow miraculously walk through the door, giving her a big kiss and a hug instead of forever remaining just a memory.

And she knows what it's like when that last glimmer of hope faded out on September 24 when she was told Vanessa died fleeing the South Tower, being one of only 289 bodies found in tact at Ground Zero out of the 3,000 who perished.

"For months after she was killed, I would call her cell phone just to listen to her voice on the answering machine," said Marsh-O'Connor from her home in Syracuse after spending the weekend in New York for the fourth 9/11 anniversary ceremony held every year at Ground Zero.

"Her face is like a screensaver in my mind. And on that horrid 9/11 morning I physically felt like I was going to explode. I called my son, James, who was 14, and he said: 'Mom, Vanessa!' The whole thing is surreal. My husband broke into tears.

"Vanessa loved the towers and she knew I hated them. The last time we talked we made up for an argument we had and then I remember she said 'I love you' and then we decided to go away for a few weekend trips. That never happened.

"Then on July 25, this year, Vanessa's husband Timothy died. He started drinking after 9/11 and never stopped. He loved her very much and never was the same after she died. I think he died for Vanessa."

So, four years later, the 9/11 death toll increases by one as Timothy's name won't be added to the official victim's list, but nonetheless calls shocking attention to the magnitude of the pain and suffering going on within all the families who suffered losses at Ground Zero.

It also calls attention to the many other social, political and economic problems surrounding the aftermath of 9/11, problems Marsh-O'Connor said need immediate attention since the victims and families deserve the truth and nothing but the truth.

Last Sunday on the fourth anniversary of 9/11, Marsh-O'Connor at a 9/11 Truth Movement rally near the United Nations made an impassioned plea to more than 300 Bush protestors, saying it was time for both Bush and Cheney to be removed from office.

She claimed the 9/11 investigation mounted by the government was a sham, adding that four years later there still exists a media blackout and little support among the American people to get at the truth.

"Look in the crowd," she said at the rally. "We need more suits out there. We simply need more awareness if we ever want to get anywhere."

Back at home in Syracuse, she added more depth to her emotional statements made at the rally:

"I swear to God I don't know if we will ever get these guys. I hold Bush and Cheney responsible 9/11 and for blocking any type of meaningful investigation. I would like to see the truth come out in my lifetime, but I just don't know.

"But Bush, Cheney and Karl Rove, at his demonic best, have blocked all chance at getting at the truth. When a crime is committed, you look to who benefits for motive. Bush and Cheney had the most to benefit. All I ever wanted was the questions to be answered. Where was NORAD? Eighteen minutes is a lifetime in air traffic control and if they would have acted, my daughter would be alive today."

Besides the mystery surrounding the disappearance of NORAD, Marsh-O'Connor provided a litany of unanswered questions not addressed by anyone in government, including the 9/11 Commission.

Some of the questions she personally wanted answered included why were the Saudis allowed to leave the country right after 9/11 when all other flights were cancelled? Others included why were those in the South Tower not told to evacuate right after the North Tower was hit and why, in general, does Bush think he has the right to refuse answering questions about the discrepancies in the official government story when millions in America don't believe it?

"When my daughter was running for her life, why was George W. Bush reading to second graders?" she asked, adding Bush, the person, is even more frightening than Bush the politician. "I have a knack at reading people and Bush is a nasty little brat.

"He is belligerent, narcissistic and insecure. His entire life is spent covering up and it is painful to watch him talk with his constant pausing and groping for words and sentences."

Saying that Bush and his neo-con band of thugs are dangerous, Marsh-O'Connor puts nothing past this gang of criminals in the White House, saying she is prepared to speak out anytime, anyplace or anywhere in order to wake-up America to the reality that the enemy of America lies within.

"Bush scares me," she added, "because he and his friends are willing to do anything to get what they want. We have to start preparing ourselves for a biological attack. There are just so many things he has done since 9/11. Why did he take away bankruptcy from the people? Why is there going to be higher minimum payments on credit cards in the near future?"

Giving a lesson in the American psyche and also asking a tough question to the American people, she added:

"What we say about ourselves is different than what we see. If we allow Bush to get away with everything what do we have left? You tell me what freedom means?"

Concerning Hurricane Katrina, she said lessons from 9/11 haven't been learned and the 'Bush MO,' as she likes to call it, is being repeated all over again in New Orleans.

"We see the same Bush pattern in New Orleans," she said, referring to the fact that the Bush administration appears to want to maximize pain and suffering instead of minimizing it.

"When are people finally going to get it?"

Navy Veteran and Old Conservative Republican From The Heartland Wants Bush Out Now!

Founder of the 'Crocodile Council' says America's tank is almost on empty due to the neo-con criminals running Washington.

15 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Bob Marshall is the type of crusty, old patriot who speaks his mind and can smell a crooked politician a mile away.

He's the type of headstrong World War II veteran who doesn't like his rights trampled on, the type who would like to take the Patriot Act and shove it up a politician's 'you know what' where the sun don't shine.

And he's the type that probably wouldn't hesitate to take the whole bunch of crooks on Capitol Hill out behind the woodshed for a quick lesson with a leather strap, reminding them what really happens to liars living back in the heartland of America.

But instead of resorting to violence and taking a hickory stick to the whole gang of Washington thieves, liars and scoundrels, the former Ohio conservative Republican and Navy veteran has decided to fight fire with fire, taking on the crooks by playing their own game and uniting thousands of Americans under the real banner of truth and freedom in what he calls the The American Patriots for a Free Republic.

Marshall, a conservative at heart with fiscal responsibility on his mind, opted out of the Republican party when the criminal-likes of George W. Bush and his cronies illegally took power in 2000, saying the drastic change in America since 9/11 calls for a drastic response otherwise he fears the country may end up in complete fascism within several years.

And so to fight the 'Daddy H. Bush' crowd as he likes to call them, he started several years ago uniting veterans and any others who would listen, uniting them under one banner with the intent of re-taking the country back from the neo-con stranglehold on Washington.

Traveling from one VFW hall to another, Marshall struck a nerve, causing a sharp pain in conservative veterans like and bad toothache that in many places he found his message of radical political change either ignored or ridiculed as anti-American.

And instead of battering his head against a wall, he decided to use his marketing skills to take his campaign to the internet, a campaign which has grown by leaps and bounds with the first scheduled national conference set for Peoria, Illinois, in September 2006.

"I believe Bush, Cheney, Rumsfeld and the whole pack of them are criminals and should be removed from power before we lose our country," said Marshall who puts out a newsletter called the Crocodile News reflecting the views of his group which he aptly calls the Crocodile Council, picking the name in order to draw attention and attract members.

"I could go on and on about the atrocities and the outright criminality of this administration as well as the Clinton administration, especially since 9/11. I fully believe 9/11 was either staged by the government or allowed to happen with their full knowledge.

"This would not have happened back in the 1940's and 50's as at least politicians and people back then had guts to stand up for what they believed. But these people in power now are very dangerous, dangerous for our country and dangerous for the continued health and prosperity of the world.

"This is really not the same country anymore. It is being run by these sick minds, all from the Skull and Bones secret society. The government is being controlled by what has been termed as the elite Illuminati, a group or a shadow government that has been trying to destroy America ever since Kennedy was killed. I think basically there are only maybe four Senators and maybe a handful of Representatives left on the Hill that are true patriots. The rest are all bought off and paid not to represent the people but to toe the party line or take care of the special corporate interests."

Besides his outright disdain for the spineless and gutless politicians leading America in the toilet, one of Marshall's biggest pet peeves is the neo-con annihilation of civil rights in this country with the passage of the Patriot Act.

The Patriot Act, passed hurriedly after the 9/11, wipes away constitutional rights by allowing the government to search and seize individuals and property without probable cause and without proper warrants merely on suspicion of terrorism.

Critics, including Marshall, claim the oppressive act, compared to laws passed by Hitler's Nazi Germany, has been used for domestic surveillance or to keep dissidents from ever being able to mount a serious challenge to the oppressive neo-con rule which has swiftly but effectively changed the political landscape in America since 9/11.

"Once you read the Patriot Act, you will see that all of our rights have been taken away under this phony guise of fear and terrorism," said Marshall. "This whole administration is treasonous and there really is no other word for it.

"Back in my day, the whole lot of them would be in jail or never really allowed to get this far. But if you look closely, they are taking this country apart piece by piece and creating a climate of war purely for greed and oil."

Standing by the old maxim that knowledge is power, Marshall has set his course on informing everyone, especially in the middle class heartland of America about how close America is to martial law and fascism.

But instead of merely trying to point out the problems, Marshall through his growing grassroots political movement and Crocodile Council, is offering advice and strategies for those disenfranchised Americans who also feel like a drastic change is needed.

"We have to start changing the political system from the bottom up since the top is so corrupt and almost impossible to break up at this time," said Marshall. "I hope we have the time but this process may take years, but perhaps it's our only choice left for the survival of our Republic.

"What we have to do is utilize the write-in ballot process which exists in most all states, except for a few. In this way we cut through the red tape and perhaps form political clubs under one movement, who are all writing-in the candidates who have proven to be loyal, truthful and honest Americans. This is what our nationwide conference is about next year in Peoria and as of now there are thousands interested in the idea and the necessity of taking back our country from the criminals now running it."

Regarding 9/11, Marshall said he realized it was an inside job after reading countless articles in the alternative press which has opened up his thinking to finally understand what really happened.

Calling the fall of the Twin Towers a controlled demolition, he added:

"Everyone has to read the story about the WTC janitor, William Rodriguez, who heard explosions in the basement of the tower along with many other witnesses who heard the same thing. But why hasn't America heard their stories. Why hasn't the media kept the story quiet and why have they even criticized the government for not properly investigating 9/11.

Marshall feels if the media did it's job and wasn't complicit in the cover-up, the true criminals within our own government would have been brought to justice years ago and probably 9/11 would never have happened.

Saying an 'enemy within' is the most difficult to fight, Marshall said America's only hope is to unite as a people and rise up against the minority who hold the power, saying we can no longer stay silent and remain afraid to speak out against government.

"We need to hold together and form a strong organization, both young and old," said Marshall. "I want the younger people to know that there are many from my age group who will help to take back our country and try and make it a better place for the youth of tomorrow."

House Intelligence Committee To Determine Bush's Fate On 'Doctored WMD' War Issue

Dems in House want Bush to turn over all documents about fake WMD threat; White House balks and ignores demand.

15 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

After dragging its heels for months, the House Intelligence Committee Wednesday began debating the issue on whether the Bush administration will be required to turn over vital information about whether President Bush doctored WMD intelligence, lied to America and misled the country into the Iraq war.

The House committee voted 22 against and 21 in favor of demanding the White House turn over documents, demonstrating the strength of the Republican-backed Congress when it comes to opening up a fair and honest debate concerning issues of vital importance to the American people.

The committee took up the resolution to get to the bottom of the controversial WMD issue after Rep. Barbara Lee (D-CA) introduced a resolution demanding the reluctant Bush administration turn over documents and all other communications with the United Kingdom from Jan. 1, 2002, and Oct. 16, 2002.

A spokesman from Rep. Lee's office said the formal resolution to get at the truth was finally heard since if the committee refused to hear the matter, Rep. Lee would have the parliamentary right to have the full House vote on the matter, something Republicans are trying to avoid.

"The measure is a privileged resolution, meaning if it is not taken up by the International Relations Committee in a defined period of time, Representative Lee would be entitled to request that it be brought to the House floor for a vote," said Nathan Britton, communications director for Rep. Lee.

"On May 1, 2005, The Sunday Times (UK) published the leaked minutes from a US-British meeting on July 23rd, 2002. The "Downing Street Memo," as the minutes came to be known, as well as other documents that came to light subsequently, have raised serious questions as to whether the Bush administration manipulated intelligence data in order to justify the invasion of Iraq; the UN weapons inspection process was manipulated to provide a legal pretext for the war; and that pre-war air strikes were deliberately ramped up in order to soften Iraqi infrastructure in preparation for war, prior to the October Congressional vote authorizing the use of force."

The Bush administration has not disputed the authenticity of these documents, but has said repeatedly that the President acted on faulty intelligence reports without the slightest bit of deception and manipulation.

However, since the Downing Street Memo surfaced, 131 congressmen have demanded accountability, writing Bush and demanding answers to the serious question of whether he led America into an illegal war.

The push for truth and presidential accountability has been led by Rep. Lee and Rep. John Conyers (D-MI) as they also delivered more than 575,000 petition signatures to the White House, demanding answers. Since the letter has been presented, all inquiries have been ignored by the White House.

"The American people deserve to know the truth about the circumstances under which our troops were sent to war," said Rep. Lee prior to the hearings. "The memo and subsequent documents raise questions not only about the administration's case for war, but also the constitutional separation of powers, specifically whether Congress' power to authorize the use of force was circumvented through the manipulation of intelligence.

"The U.S. is currently at war in Iraq under an authority conferred to President Bush by the U.S. Congress. It is not only Congress' prerogative, it is our responsibility to make sure that the authority to use force was not granted under circumstances that were deliberately misleading."

Only one Republican, Rep. Jim Leach of Iowa, has thrown his support in with Democrats, the lone and only break in party ranks, signifying only minimal hope Rep. Lee's WMD resolution will ever see the light of day with a Republican controlled Congress.

In early May, documents were leaked showing head of MI6, Sir Richard Dearlove, told Prime Minister Tony Blair and others at a top level meeting that Bush had already decided to manufacture the WMD threat, learning this during high-level meetings in Washington months prior to the Iraqi invasion.

The documents were then verified as authentic by Blair, creating a public outcry on both sides of the Atlantic for accountability regarding the accusations made in Dearlove's assessment of the American war strategy.

After the release of the potentially damaging documents, Bush has remained steadfast, saying the WMD threat was not manufactured, claiming the decision to topple Sadaam Hussein was justified and he should not be blamed if intelligence was flawed.

On Thursday, Rep. Lynn Woolsey is holding hearings on Capitol Hill regarding exit strategies for Iraq and a coalition of organizations demanding an end to the war will hold a rally at 5 p.m. that evening in front of the White House.

Witnesses testifying for a quick exit from Iraq include U.S. Senator Max Cleland, former member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, former head of the Veterans Administration and triple amputee from his military service in the Vietnam War; General Joseph Hoar (Ret. USMC), former Commander in Chief of U.S. Central Command; Ambassador David Mack, former Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for the Near East, former U.S. Ambassador to the United Arab Emirates, and current Vice President of the Middle East Institute; Dr. Ken Katzman, Middle East analyst and Iraq specialist at the Congressional Research Service; Anas

Gutless Politicians Still Won't Answer 9/11 Questions; Truth Rally Calls For Treason And Murder Indictments Against Bush And Cheney

William Rodriguez given national media attention about his ignored 9/11 testimony. Rally draws hundreds of 9/11 truth supporters but mainstream media again ignores event.

13 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Gutless politicians still continue to avoid the truth about 9/11, as this week in New York former 9/11 commissioner and Congressman, Timothy Roemer, avoided answering questions, running away like a scared rabbit when confronted by William Rodriguez, the WTC janitor who heard explosions in the North Tower basement and wanted to know why his testimony was omitted in the final report..

New York City - The 9/11 truth will be told. Bush and Cheney will be indicted for treason and murder. And immediately stop the killing and illegal war in Iraq.

These were the strong and poignant words ringing through the streets of New York Sunday as more than 250 9/11 truth protestors marched carrying "Impeach Bush" and "9/11 Inside Job" signs, the rally starting at the New York Times building and ending at the United Nations.

Organized by members of www.ny911truth.org, the rally was called to vent anger and make the public aware of the concerted effort by the mainstream media and the government to keep the truth about what really happened on 9/11 from the American people.

Although the corporate-elite media came out earlier in the day in force to cover the Ground Zero activities in honor of the 9/11 victims on the fourth anniversary of the tragedy, the media was predictably absent from protest rally just like it has been purposely absent for four years in covering compelling stories that contradict the flimsy government official account..

Protestors picked the New York Times building for a starting point, passing by the FOX, CNN and NBC buildings, to emphasize their feelings that media suppression has been primarily responsible for keeping the America from the truth about 9/11 and largely responsible for allowing government officials to get away with the murder of 3,000 fellow citizens at Ground Zero.

At the Sunday rally, William Rodriguez, the WTC janitor and last survivor of the North Tower, told the crowd his story about hearing and feeling explosions emanating from the sub level basement of the tower, prior to the plane striking the upper floors, has been systematically suppressed by the government, mainstream media and 9/11 Commission,

"They have done everything in their power to ignore my statements which directly contradict the government story," said Rodriguez as the crowd chanted "let the truth be told."

"I have at least 27 other people who are ready to testify that they also heard explosions, all who have been completely ignored by the 9/11 Commission. Also, the last drop of water fell from the glass and I realized all hope was lost to get at the truth when, the testimony I gave the commission behind closed doors last year, was omitted from the final report."

This weekend, however, Rodriguez and his compelling story showing a controlled demolition took down the towers broke new ground as for the first time in four years a major news outlet carried his story.

Although he still hasn't broken the television network barriers, his story aired on a one hour pre-recorded special for ABC radio and its nationwide affiliates. The story aired on the east coast Sunday evening at 7pm along with comments made by author David Ray Griffin who has written a scathing report about at least 101 lies presented in the final 9/11 Commission report.

Griffin, who also has been relegated for years to the alternative press, finally received a national audience for his scholarly efforts at revealing the truth about 9/11. Previously, Griffin, who has written two books about government lies and its cover-up of 9/11, said the 9/11 Commission report that received a national book award should have been declared a ""national disgrace."

After Rodriguez finished speaking, former Lt. Col. USAF Dr. Robert Bowman gave the crowd a rousing political speech, calling for the immediate removal of Bush, Cheney and their cronies on charges of treason and murder.

The former fighter pilot who flew over 100 Vietnam combat missions and directed the Star Wars program under President Ford and Carter, said he took a solemn oath to protect his country from enemies both foreign and domestic, including defending against a rogue President like Bush.

"9/11 is based on a pack of lies. It wasn't misjudgment, it was treason," said Dr. Bowman as he called for the immediate removal of what he called the mob and crooks in the White.

Saying he received a kiss on the cheek by a family member who lost a loved one at 9/11 while walking in the march, Dr. Bowman reassured the audience those seeking truth about 9/11 and the illegal war in Iraq were "doing the right thing."

"The entire Bush administration is based on deception and lies. They are needlessly killing off the youth of this country in the name of freedom and democracy when it is really for nothing but oil and greed."

One of the final speakers at the rally, Donna Marsh, a mother who lost her pregnant daughter at Ground Zero, gave the most heart-felt emotional appeal, as tears came to her eyes and the eyes of many in the crowd, when she recalled how her daughter perished at the hands of what she called "criminals in the White House."

After the rally lasting two hours, protestors doubled in size as they congregated at St. Marks Church where more speakers, including Pastor Frank Morales, attorney Phil Berg, who has filed a federal RICO conspiracy lawsuit against Bush, and attorney Mimi Rosenberg of WBAI radio, assured listeners they were in the movement "for the long haul, adding no longer can we as a people live in fear of our government.

They added that the 9/11 truth movement is just as important as the Revolutionary War in terms of preserving American freedoms and protecting against a tyrannical dictatorship bent on the ultimate destruction of America.

"As Americans we can no longer live in fear of George W. Bush and his band of criminals who all belong behind bars in jail," said Berg, as he promised to work for people like Donna Marsh, who lost her daughter and William Rodriguez, a true American hero, adding he wouldn't stop fighting for their freedoms until he put the entire neo-con gang behind bars.

"I promise I will never stop searching for the truth and one day the truth will be told."

Earlier Saturday, 9/11 family members, survivors and victims held their own rally outside Ground Zero in what they called "Take Back the Memorial" in order to block government plans to build the International Freedom Center on the WTC site.

Family members say the government proposal seeks to honor America's freedoms in general, including remembering such things as the holocaust and other wars, which minimizes the significance and long term remembrance of the victims who lost their lives at Ground Zero.

"All of those who were killed on 9/11 need to be remembered at a place that will pay homage to their story and show reverence to their memory," said James Slevin, vice president of Legislative and Political Affairs of the 22,000 strong Uniformed Firefighters Association.

Although he wasn't opposed to memorializing the great story of American freedom, he said Ground Zero wasn't the appropriate place and should be left solely for the memory of those who perished on 9/11.

"We owe to all of the lives lost and to future generations, who will seek to learn of the day's events (9/11), to have a memorial that conveys homage, without the revisionist history that cultural institutions like the International Freedom Center will attempt to portray."

Other family members placed the blame for the government's misguided idea of a memorial squarely on the shoulders of New York Gov. George Pataki.

"Governor, you have lost your way, you have lost sight of what is most important at Ground Zero and if you think your advisors including Tom Bernstein know better than the American people, think again," said Patricia Riley, who lost her sister Lorraine Lee on 9/11, to the group of more than 1,000 family members and survivors gathered for the Saturday rally.

Other family members, many carrying pictures of their lost loved ones, openly denounced the Bush administration, calling them a criminal gang of thugs who needed to be removed from office.

"Many of us know that the government was involved in 9/11 and that they have never told us the truth from day one," said Eileen Torres, who lost family member and firefighter Manuel Del Valle when the North Tower collapsed. "All we ever wanted was the truth regarding how our loved ones died and it's something even four years later we have never heard."

After the rally family members took their protest to an organized day of conferences and discussions about the proposed family-backed memorial and other 9/11 related issues regarding the fourth anniversary.

During the conference, former 9/11 commissioner and Congressman, Timothy Roemer, addressed family members, saying his goal despite criticism was to get at the real truth behind 9/11.

However, after the meeting, he appeared to immediately contradict himself when he skirted questions posed by William Rodriguez, the WTC Janitor, who asked him point blank why his story regarding explosions in the North Tower was ignored by the Commission.

When Rodriguez attempted to push the issue, Roemer made a quick exit to the elevators in the Marriot Hotel hallway, looking like a scared rabbit in a den of foxes and again showing the true gutless quality of politicians running our country today.

"You see, even after four years," said Rodriguez, "they still won't answer my questions or deal with the truth of how the towers really collapsed."

Average Iranian Citizens Claim Bush And Cronies Creating False Nuclear Threat To Take Over Oil Reserves

One-on-one interview with an average Iranian citizen reveals Bush is spreading false propaganda about Iran to create another war. Many Iranians simply call Bush 'crazy.'
12 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

It's rare to get a chance to speak with an average Iranian, walking the streets of Tehran. It's even harder to get someone to comment honestly about true feelings toward America, its people and its government.

There are language barriers, political hurdles and then, of course, the person on the other end of the line must have a pulse on what's really happening in a country of roughly 70 million people, a country filled with a strange, social and religious customs unknown to most Americans.

Of course, there are the snobbish elite in both Washington and Tehran who think they know it all. But who cares what the elite think when it's the average people, the people working clothing shops, bars and restaurants who will feel the brunt of the nuclear bombs that eventually will fly on both sides of the world.

It's not the elite who will feel the effects of the bombs. They will simply run, hide and live to spread their nonsense another day.

So, for once let's listen to an average Joe." Let's listen to someone in Iran who puts her shoes on every day like the rest of us. Let's listen to someone who not only talks straight but as an independent television and radio producer, has a pulse on what the rest of average Iranians are thinking about the mighty United States.

"Most of the people here think George W. Bush is crazy. People think a U.S. attack is imminent, but have no animosity against the American people just against the government and it's imperialistic mindset," said Assaneh Ostovar, 32, in an extended telephone conversation this week from her home in Tehran.

Ostovar is an independent television and radio producer, searching for answers regarding the U.S. build up against Iran as well as looking at the motives and potential of her own countries growing nuclear capabilities.

Citing examples of hundreds of nuclear weapons stockpiled in Israel pointing at her country, she feels her country has every right to protect itself as well as use nuclear technology to improve Iran's infrastructure capabilities.

"It is very silly to think that Iran is an immediate threat to the United States. We simply are not a threat and do not want to instigate problems with your country. Most people in Iran like the American people. It's the government that is hated for its lies and deception, depicting Iranians as evil and depicting our country as an imminent threat," said Ostover, emphasizing that the American media and the government have painted a false picture about Islam in general.

"The media in America is a big part of the problem since together they have falsely put in the minds of the American people that Islam is a fanatical religion and should be destroyed. The majority of Muslims are peace loving, kind and generous people, wanting to live in harmony with America.

"But it's the American government through the biased American media that depicts us as evil doers. That just isn't true. It's a misconception systematically orchestrated by the U.S. government who is using this as an excuse to create wars like in Afghanistan and Iraq in order to invade and steal our precious resources.

"The American government wants to do the same thing in Iran and I hope and pray the American people stand up against this false campaign set up by the government. The Iranian people in general feel the same way I do and the last thing they want is to threaten or harm America."

Reflecting on the mood of her people, Ostovar claims Bush is perceived as thinking "he is the master of the world" and that this climate of war and hatred has greatly increased since he became President in 2000.

"I hope the American people wake up and see that the people of the Middle East are not a threat to democracy and freedom, but that actually Bush and his band of neo-con warriors who want to benefit financially from war, are the real threats to peace and democracy," said Ostovar, claiming the Iranian people and its government are not instigating war but only trying to defend itself from untruthful attacks orchestrated by the U.S. government.

"Like I said, I think an attack is imminent but it will be different from the ground war in Iraq, which by the way has created a greater instability in the entire region. Most Iranians fear they are next on Bush's list. I happen to think when the attack comes it will be from the air and if everybody else is threatening to use nuclear weapons against us, shouldn't we have the right to defend ourselves with the same type of weaponry?"

Ostovar wanted to make it perfectly clear that her country is not advocating the use of nuclear weapons, but only advocating Iran's right to defend itself against threats now coming from the U.S.

She added that her country was well-aware of Vice President Dick Cheney's orders recently given to Strategic Command (STRATCOM) to prepare for an eventual nuclear strike on Iran.

"First we heard it was coming in June and then in August, but now with the disaster in New Orleans it appears the strikes have been delayed," said Ostovar.

Regarding the American government's smear campaign to misrepresent the intentions of Islam, she added:

"Don't believe what you hear about Islam. I want to say that the views of Al Qaeda are not the views of the Islamic people. Bin Laden is actually a part of the CIA and the American government is using him to take over the world's resources of oil here and in South America."

Former Green Beret Comes Clean About Mafia-Like Hit On Military Officer Who Knew Too Much About Kennedy Assassination

Called 'Dangerous Dan' by his military buddies does an about face from being a Green Beret and military hitman to now fighting for Christ as a born again Christian. Once he found the Lord, the former Special Forces Lt. Col. says he no longer fears the assassins who have tried in the past to kill him for going public in a tell-all book.

10 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Some say once a government hit man always a government hit man. But in the case of Ret. Lt. Col. and Green Beret Dan Marvin, once solicited by the CIA to kill a military officer who knew too much about the Kennedy assassination, nothing is farther from the truth.

Once the pride of the Green Beret's during the Viet Nam era and considered one of the toughest of the bunch, "Dangerous" Dan as he was called in his military days, has replaced his M16 and special ops killing equipment for a bible and a kind word for anyone who wants to find the pathway to Jesus.

And after finding Jesus, he decided to write a book, called the Expendable Elite, exposing the dark side of the American military and how he was used as a hired-gun, being asked to assassinate government and military leaders both here and abroad.

The killing tactics and motives have been heard a million times: kill for the honor and the glory, kill to save America from its enemies and kill in the name of freedom and democracy. And "Dangerous Dan" bought into the familiar patriotic themes, all the time thinking he was doing the right thing for God and country.

But then one day in 1984, after retiring from active duty, he listened to his daughter read from the bible on a cross-country road trip, a trip and bible lesson that changed his life forever.

After being forced to listen to the bible by his daughter who threatened to otherwise never speak to him again, "Dangerous Dan" decided to retain the name 'Dangerous Dan' but every so often explain to people "I am now dangerous to those who would deny me the opportunity to tell the truth."

Living a lie is sometimes hard to swallow, but disbelieving what was once believed is even more difficult, as Lt. Col. Marvin would be the first one to admit the incredible amount of soul searching and humility needed to make such an about face.

"That day listening to my daughter changed my whole life. I found Jesus," said Lt. Col Marvin, adding it gave him the understanding to face up to his past and to correct his mistakes by exposing the dirty side of the military. "I knew that if I spoke-out, they would try to kill me. I knew that because I was an instrument of the government for so long and understood what happened to people who tried to come forward about their killing ways before.

"But after I found Jesus, I no longer feared the government. I no longer feared that somebody just like me would now try to kill me. The only thing I fear now is the Lord. He gave me the strength and courage to write the book, a book I hope sets the record straight by telling the truth to the American people, even to the world!"

And the story behind publishing the book is almost as interesting as the book itself. Lt. Col. Marvin actually finished publishing the book 17 years ago in 1988, and told of "sending advance copies of what was contained in two chapters, telling about the plot to assassinate Crown Prince Sihanouk, my quid pro quo, my unilateral aborting of the mission just two days prior to the day that 42 volunteers would have gone up the Bassac River and then cross country deep into Cambodia to ambush the Prince and finally, Gen. Quang Van Dang's rescue of my camp from an ARVN regiment sent by Premier Ky and the CIA to destroy us all."

Learning of his actions, the CIA and the Pentagon sent out the attack dogs to keep the book off the shelves, but the book was then sent to President George H. Bush with a handwritten note attached, a story within a story that Lt. Col. Marvin details in his book.

The book was finally published in 2003 by Trine Day press at the suggestion of a well-published author named Jim Marrs, who called Kris Milligan and suggested the book's publication.

"First, let me say the Pentagon did everything in its power to keep my book from being published and it is still trying to stop me today with the law suit and a concerted effort to keep my book off the shelves even after I finally found a publisher," said Lt. Col. Marvin, adding that he nearly gave up trying after over 120 publishers turned him down until meeting Chris Milligan at Trine Day in 2003. "We still have only sold about 3,000 copies as major distribution chains have blocked the book from reaching the American people.

"Regarding Bush, I sent him a handwritten note with a copy of my manuscript back in 1988, saying I was intimately familiar with his activities in the CIA prior to the time he officially announced being a part of the agency. He knew what I was talking about and I used it in order to help ARVN Lt. Gen. Quang Van Dang, deputy to the President of Viet Nam, get into North America as our government previously had black balled him and wanted him to keep quiet about how our government actually sold out the people of South Vietnam. We basically never allowed them to win the war."

A major portion of his book talks about the inside information he obtained while working as a Special Forces Captain, stories which clearly demonstrate how President Lyndon Johnson, Gen. Harold K. Johnson and Gen. William Westmoreland deceived the American people by providing safe havens for the enemy along with their protected use of the Mekong River in order to keep the war going, leading to the betrayal and abandonment of the South Vietnamese people.

A key chapter in his book describes how he was asked in June 1966 to assassinate Cambodia's Prince Norodom Sihanouk and how he tried to use this mission as leverage against President Johnson in order to get him to admit allowing the Viet Cong safe havens along the Cambodian border.

Asked to accept command of an independent operation in the An Phu District with the Hoa Hoa people as CIDG, he was told by LTC Tuttle:

"Dan, if you take this command and accept this top secret mission, you will be on your own. When you leave this room, it will be as if we never met. We can't and won't stand behind you if you are caught doing what I am about to tell you to do. Got it, Captain?"

""We want you to take care of it, 'Dangerous,' because we believe you can get the job done. We've been asked to terminate Prince Sihanouk. Your job will be to bring about his death and make it appear to have been done by the Viet Cong."

The centerpiece of the book goes on to tell how Lt. Col. Marvin aborted a mission brought to him by the CIA's agent Walter Mackem that would have him sending this CIDG forces into Cambodia to assassinate their leader, Prince Sihanouk. However, he aborted the mission because President Johnson refused to honor his demand that he put an end to the enemy safe havens.

Once Lt. Col Marvin went against them, the CIA orchestrated the attack on his entire unit in retaliation for abandoning the assassination attempt in mid stream.

"When we were about to be attacked by our own forces, South Vietnamese Lt. Gen. Quang Van Dang came to our rescue and I have been deeply indebted to him for saving my life and the lives of my men and our Hoa Hoas," said Lt. Col. Marvin. "This is why our government turned on him and why I sent the handwritten note to President Bush, finally getting Van Dang into North America.

Besides the Prince Sihanouk hit and enemy safe haven debacle, the book documents how he was involved in the periphery of actions that were part of a diabolical plot to take-out Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and how he was asked to kill U.S. Navy Lt. Com. William B. Pitzer, an officer who had photos of President Kennedy's autopsy and who wanted to go forward with the truth behind the presidential assassination in Dallas. Lt. Col Marvin said details of the matter are contained in the book 'Devious Elite' by Kent Hunter.

Lt. Col. Marvin's book, Expendable Elite, also describes in a vivid manner how the American government operates essentially like the Mafia, using the exact same tactics as the crime families use to get what they want, including mafia-like oaths of secrecy to protect those higher-ups in the chain of command. Lt. Col. Marvin, however, said he never would sign any secrecy oaths.

And when Marvin became a reborn Christian and finally spoke out about the military hits on top political figures it was as if he had violated that sacred military oath of secrecy, and had himself now become a marked man with a target on his back, a target that still remains today even though he is 71-years-old and leading a pretty average life in Casanova, NY.

Besides being targeted for death, he also has been sued for libel over his book by six of his fellow Green Berets in a Special Forces Association and CIA/Pentagon-backed federal law suit.

"Six of my men in the unit assigned to take-out the enemy safe havens and Col. William Tuttle who gave me the original order, but who vowed to deny it are suing me over the book," said Lt. Col. Marvin, adding that his attorney Barry Bachrach expects to win the case with truth as the total defense and vindication for any libel action. "My men know what happened and so does Col. Tuttle. The Pentagon has got to them, but in the end the truth will prevail."

While the Pentagon also tried to stop publication of his book for more than 10 years, the libel case seeks $700,000 in damages and is set for trial in a Charleston, NC federal court on Oct. 31.

Finding the Pathway to Christ

Finding the pathway for "Dangerous Dan" was as criss-crossed and difficult as anyone could imagine since the former Special Forces operative and trained military killer started his long journey, first to the military and then to Christ, as a two-bit teenage gang member in the back alleys of the south side of Chicago.

But saying that "Dangerous Dan" was only a two-bit thug back then probably doesn't do him complete justice since even when he was a kid, there were signs he had a heart of gold hiding somewhere behind the macho madness.

Even though he led a small gang of young thugs who used cross-bows as weapons, "Dirty Dan," as he was then known, said they always respected women, especially protecting the old ladies of the neighborhood who were being threatened or harassed on the dangerous south side Chicago streets by high school age gangs.

Kennedy Assassination

Although he hung out and even led young criminal types, living the lifestyle somewhat similar to that of young Jimmy Files. Files would later play a big part in the Kennedy assassination that eventually led to the hit on Lt. Cmdr. Pitzer that then Capt. Marvin was asked to perform but never carried-out.

"Jimmy Files and Dirty Dan lived a similar life in different areas of Chicago in organized street gangs when young.. In 1959, we were both in the 82nd Airborne Division," recalls Lt. Col. Marvin. "Jimmy told me he was the guy on the grassy knoll in Dallas who put a bullet in Kennedy's head. The mafia was infiltrated by the CIA and the mob hired Jimmy to carry it out. He's still alive, admitted doing it and now we communicate regularly. In fact, I write him about every week and have a common friend who visits Jimmy every week that keeps us in touch with him.

"We were told that there were four Mafia shooters involved in the Kennedy assassination, two were Americans and two were from the Corsica Mafia. The 'company' as they like to be called, asked a Boston area Don if he would hit Kennedy prior to Dallas. He was the same Don who wanted to hire MSG Joe Hill and myself to be a hit team and if I didn't have a wife and children, I probably would have said yes since I hadn't yet found the Lord Jesus Christ.

"The Mafia and the CIA together were involved in the Kennedy assassination. I remember looking eye ball to eye ball at one of the Don's of the mafia and he told me the CIA contacted him for the Kennedy hit. You see, Kennedy wanted to expose things, do things above board and end many of the covert operations. This is why he was killed and in my estimation, he was the last independent thinking President America has ever had."

The high school drop out who recalls being one of the last one's in the military to carry a "brass swagger stick" (tool for punishment), recalls signing up for Special Forces Green Beret duty the day President Kennedy was killed.

Lt. Cmdr. William Pitzer's Assassination

After going through Green Beret training and becoming leader of a special atomic demolition munitions team, on Aug. 5, 1965, while at Ft. Bragg, Lt. Col. Marvin again became in contact with the Kennedy assassination, this time being asked to kill someone he was told was giving "secrets to the enemy."

"I received a call from my commander, Col. C. W. Patten, at Ft Bragg and then I met with a CIA agent," said Lt. Col. Marvin. "I had been taught that all missions of this nature are strictly voluntary and that this one involved killing someone who was giving secrets to the enemy so I eagerly accepted the job.

"When I was told the man's name was Lt. Cmdr. William Bruce Pitzer and that he was stationed at Bethesda Naval Hospital. I turned it down, wanting to reserve my special skills for that kind of activity in the foreign theatre, but later learned he was planning to go public with numerous original photos of the Kennedy autopsy which would have destroyed the government's story about the shooting. Later, I heard he was found dead in his office at Bethesda and it was set-up as a suicide."

Lt. Col. Marvin Says People Need to Listen Before the Bush Administration Destroys America.

Lt. Col. Marvin is blunt about his feelings about President Bush and his cronies, saying he doesn't trust them and doesn't believe a word that comes out of their crooked mouths.

"I am anxious to get out my information because it relates to the oppression in America that is going on right now," he said about his boo, the introduction written by famous actress and singer and friend of all Green Berets, Martha Raye.

Saying that America is no longer a defender of freedom but an invader of nations, he claims that America is now firmly in the hands of leaders and under the control of people who do not have America's best interests at heart.

"We are not a democracy any longer. I simply do not trust Bush, Rumsfeld and Cheney," added Lt. Col.

Marvin. "The entire gang of Skill and Bones are involved here and I fear they are trying to destroy our country right before our very eyes. We have no business being in Iraq. We went in there on Bush's lies and his doctored intelligence reports regarding weapons of mass destruction that never existed."

Lt. Col. Marvin said the only way to change Bush's evil direction, if it's not already too late, is to change the political system "from the bottom up," hopefully attracting honest people who will not sell out to the corporate interests controlling America today.

He's not intending a second book, saying the "first one was enough," but he is gathering information and helping another author put together another military expose due out next year called The Devious Elite.

CIA Publishes Its Own "Assassin's Manual," Proving It Condones Killing Those Who Oppose U.S. Policy

The CIA 'Killer's Manual' was kept out of the public eye for years, but now we know it teaches the 'fine art' of assassination as if it was a mandatory college course.

8 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

If there are any lingering doubts about whether the U.S. government acts like a bunch of mafia hit men, the following documents, classified for years, should clear things up.

And as the "CIA's Killer's Instruction Manual" points out remember that possibly the only thing separating the mafia from the U.S. government is that the thugs in the underworld are much, much smarter.

Never in a month of Sundays would mafia thugs ever think of leaving behind a paper trail, like the following CIA documents indicate, on how exactly to pull off the perfect assassination attempt.

But that's exactly what the U.S. government did when the CIA distributed a training manual for would-be killers called "A Study of Assassination," distributed to agents and operatives taking part in the agency's 1953 covert coup in Guatemala, which ousted the country's democratically elected President.

The killer's training manual, hidden and classified until 1997, until the National Security Archive, a Washington D.C. public-interest group, obtained a copy among roughly 1,400 pages found by the group concerning the Guatemala coup, in light of CIA statements that it has destroyed all other secret files about the coup.

Since the release of the documents, however, their contents have remained virtually hidden from the public eye, the messy details of how to pull off the perfect assassination never making it into the mainstream press and only viewed by a select few elsewhere.

Presented by the CIA almost like a college course for future killers, the Department of Defense and CIA spokesmen this week denied knowing anything about the manual, adding they were not aware of any such teaching tool being distributed to agents or operatives.

As the manual verifies purely by its publication, the U.S. government is involved up to its neck in the killing business, the involvement going back to the early 1950's and most likely much farther back.

And it's safe to say nothing has changed today, since reports by John Perkins in his latest book, "The Economic Hit Man" and other reports surfacing, seem to indicate the killing business is booming for the government.

Take, for example, the recent story told by former Army wife Kay Griggs of Virginia, who recounts how her husband for more than 10 years told her about his involvement with training and participating in government hit squads, knowledge of which leads to the doorstep of some of the most powerful leaders in our country, including the Oval Office.

Also, consider the recent stories coming out of Venezuela where democratically elected President Hugo Chavez is running for his life from the CIA after he publicly on numerous occasions has announced to the world that the Bush administration wants him dead for not cooperating with policies that would leave his country bankrupt and his people starving.

And in a sick, twisted manner, working on a theory that the end justifies the means, the CIA published its killer's manual, breaking down the art of committing the perfect assassination into eight major categories, including definition, employment, justification, classification, the assassin, planning, techniques and examples.

Here are the portions of the manual, the words taken directly from the CIA writers illustrating just how sick, twisted and distorted they really are:

DEFINITION

According to the CIA, assassination is a term thought to be derived from "Hashish", a drug similar to marijuana, said to have been used by Hassan al-Sabbah to induce motivation in his followers, who were assigned to carry out political and other murders, usually at the cost of their lives.

It is here used to describe the planned killing of a person who is not under the legal jurisdiction of the killer, who is not physically in the hands of the killer, who has been selected by a resistance organization for death, and whose death provides positive advantages to that organization.

EMPLOYMENT

Assassination is an extreme measure not normally used in clandestine operations. It should be assumed that it will never be ordered or authorized by any U.S. Headquarters, though the latter may in rare instances agree to its execution by members of an associated foreign service.

This reticence is partly due to the necessity for committing communications to paper. No assassination instructions should ever be written or recorded. Consequently, the decision to employ this technique must nearly always be reached in the field, at the area where the act will take place. Decision and instructions should be confined to an absolute minimum of persons. Ideally, only one person will be involved. No report may be made, but usually the act will be properly covered by normal news services, whose output is available to all concerned.

JUSTIFICATION

Murder is not morally justifiable. Self-defense may be argued if the victim has knowledge which may destroy the resistance organization if divulged. Assassination of persons responsible for atrocities or reprisals may be regarded as just punishment. Killing a political leader whose burgeoning career is a clear and present danger to the cause of freedom may be held necessary.

But assassination can seldom be employed with a clear conscience. Persons who are morally squeamish should not attempt it.

CLASSIFICATIONS

The techniques employed will vary according to whether the subject is unaware of his danger, aware but unguarded, or guarded. They will also be affected by whether or not the assassin is to be killed with the subject hereafter, assassinations in which the subject is unaware will be termed "simple"; those where the subject is aware but unguarded will be termed "chase"; those where the victim is guarded will be termed "guarded."

If the assassin is to die with the subject, the act will be called "lost." If the assassin is to escape, the adjective will be "safe." It should be noted that no compromises should exist here. The assassin must not fall alive into enemy hands.

A further type division is caused by the need to conceal the fact that the subject was actually the victim of assassination, rather than an accident or natural causes. If such concealment is desirable the operation will be called "secret"; if concealment is immaterial, the act will be called "open"; while if the assassination requires publicity to be effective it will be termed "terroristic."

Following these definitions, the assassination of Julius Caesar was safe, simple, and terroristic, while that of Huey Long was lost, guarded and open. Obviously, successful secret assassinations are not recorded as assassination at all. [Illeg] of Thailand and Augustus Caesar may have been the victims of safe, guarded and secret assassination.

THE ASSASSIN

In safe assassinations, the assassin needs the usual qualities of a clandestine agent. He should be determined, courageous, intelligent, resourceful, and physically active. If special equipment is to be used, such as firearms or drugs, it is clear that he must have outstanding skill with such equipment.

Except in terroristic assassinations, it is desirable that the assassin be transient in the area. He should have an absolute minimum of contact with the rest of the organization and his instructions should be given orally by one person only. His safe evacuation after the act is absolutely essential, but here again contact should be as limited as possible. It is preferable that the person issuing instructions also conduct any withdrawal or covering action which may be necessary.

In lost assassination, the assassin must be a fanatic of some sort. Politics, religion, and revenge are about the only feasible motives. Since a fanatic is unstable psychologically, he must be handled with extreme care. He must not know the identities of the other members of the organization, for although it is intended that he die in the act, something may go wrong. While the Assassin of Trotsky has never revealed any significant information, it was unsound to depend on this when the act was planned.

PLANNING

When the decision to assassinate has been reached, the tactics of the operation must be planned, based upon an estimate of the situation similar to that used in military operations. The preliminary estimate will reveal gaps in information and possibly indicate a need for special equipment which must be procured or constructed. When all necessary data has been collected, an effective tactical plan can be prepared. All planning must be mental; no papers should ever contain evidence of the operation.

In resistance situations, assassination may be used as a counter-reprisal. Since this requires advertising to be effective, the resistance organization must be in a position to warn high officials publicly that their lives will be the price of reprisal action against innocent people. Such a threat is of no value unless it can be carried out, so it may be necessary to plan the assassination of various responsible officers of the oppressive regime and hold such plans in readiness to be used only if provoked by excessive brutality. Such plans must be modified frequently to meet changes in the tactical situation.

TECHNIQUES

The essential point of assassination is the death of the subject. A human being may be killed in many ways but sureness is often overlooked by those who may be emotionally unstrung by the seriousness of this act they intend to commit. The specific technique employed will depend upon a large number of variables, but should be constant in one point: Death must be absolutely certain. The attempt on Hitler's life failed because the conspiracy did not give this matter proper attention.

The techniques portion of the manual then went on to provide details about the particular effectiveness and use of an assortment of weapons, including all types of firearms, explosives as well as blunt and sharp-edged weapons. However, the most interesting assassination techniques recommended by the CIA were:

1. Manual

It is possible to kill a man with the bare hands, but very few are skillful enough to do it well. Even a highly trained Judo expert will hesitate to risk killing by hand unless he has absolutely no alternative. However, the simplest local tools are often much the most efficient means of assassination. A hammer, axe, wrench, screw driver, fire poker, kitchen knife, lamp stand, or anything hard, heavy and handy will suffice. A length of rope or wire or a belt will do if the assassin is strong and agile. All such improvised weapons have the important advantage of availability and apparent innocence. The obviously lethal machine gun failed to kill Trotsky where an item of sporting goods succeeded.

In all safe cases where the assassin may be subject to search, either before or after the act, specialized weapons should not be used. Even in the lost case, the assassin may accidentally be searched before the act and should not carry an incriminating device if any sort of lethal weapon can be improvised at or near the site. If the assassin normally carries weapons because of the nature of his job, it may still be desirable to improvise and implement at the scene to avoid disclosure of his identity.

2. Accidents

For secret assassination, either simple or chase, the contrived accident is the most effective technique. When successfully executed, it causes little excitement and is only casually investigated.

The most efficient accident, in simple assassination, is a fall of 75 feet or more onto a hard surface. Elevator shafts, stair wells, unscreened windows and bridges will serve. Bridge falls into water are not reliable. In simple cases a private meeting with the subject may be arranged at a properly-cased location. The act may be executed by sudden, vigorous [excised] of the ankles, tipping the subject over the edge. If the assassin immediately sets up an outcry, playing the "horrified witness", no alibi or surreptitious withdrawal is necessary. In chase cases it will usually be necessary to stun or drug the subject before dropping him. Care is required to insure that no wound or condition not attributable to the fall is discernible after death.

Falls into the sea or swiftly flowing rivers may suffice if the subject cannot swim. It will be more reliable if the assassin can arrange to attempt rescue, as he can thus be sure of the subject's death and at the same time establish a workable alibi.

If the subject's personal habits make it feasible, alcohol may be used [2 words excised] to prepare him for a contrived accident of any kind.

Falls before trains or subway cars are usually effective, but require exact timing and can seldom be free from unexpected observation.

Automobile accidents are a less satisfactory means of assassination. If the subject is deliberately run down, very exact timing is necessary and investigation is likely to be thorough. If the subject's car is tampered with, reliability is very low. The subject may be stunned or drugged and then placed in the car, but this is only reliable when the car can be run off a high cliff or into deep water without observation.

Arson can cause accidental death if the subject is drugged and left in a burning building. Reliability is not satisfactory unless the building is isolated and highly combustible.

3. Drugs

In all types of assassination except terroristic, drugs can be very effective. If the assassin is trained as a doctor or nurse and the subject is under medical care, this is an easy and rare method. An overdose of morphine administered as a sedative will cause death without disturbance and is difficult to detect. The size of the dose will depend upon whether the subject has been using narcotics regularly. If not, two grains will suffice.

If the subject drinks heavily, morphine or a similar narcotic can be injected at the passing out stage, and the cause of death will often be held to be acute alcoholism.

Specific poisons, such as arsenic or strychnine, are effective but their possession or procurement is incriminating, and accurate dosage is problematical. Poison was used unsuccessfully in the assassination of Rasputin and Kolohan, though the latter case is more accurately described as a murder.

EXAMPLES

Agents may be presented brief outlines, with critical evaluations of the following assassinations and attempts:

Marat, Hedrich, Lincoln, Hitler, Harding, Roosevelt, Grand Duke Sergei, Truman, Pirhivie, Mussolini, Archduke Francis Ferdinand, Benes, Rasputin, Aung Sang, Madero, Kirov, Abdullah, Huey Long, Gandhi, Alexander of Yugoslavia, Trotsky.

No Excuse For Feds Slow Response To Katrina; Critics Claim Government Heads Should Roll, Including Bush

Bush critics on Capitol Hill say he cares little for poor people and race was an issue in slow response. Other more sinister critics claim Bush is America's enemy, say slow response designed to bring America to its knees and one step closer to martial law.

5 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

One week after Hurricane Katrina ripped through the Gulf Coast, the magnitude of the death and devastation is finally starting to sink into a shocked American public having a hard time comprehending what happened.

Scenes of dead bodies floating in the streets, where usually Mardi Gra parades take place, have been too much for most Americans to stomach, leaving an entire country in a state of mourning and prayer instead of partying on the traditional Labor Day weekend.

Death tolls from New Orleans are starting to trickle in, but officials on the scene are saying 10,000 may be a conservative estimate. But what they are not saying is how many more people are going to die from the disease and pollution, already beginning to surface in nearby Biloxi, MI, where a rescue center was evacuated Sunday evening after at least 20 people reported feeling ill.

In the blink of an eye, New Orleans for the time being has been erased from the map with over a million people sent packing from what has been turned into a ghost town.

Besides New Orleans, the Mississippi and Alabama coasts were devastated with an estimated 162 dead and figures expected to climb much higher as more and more people are pulled out from the rubble.

In these regions where whole towns like Waveland and Gulf Port have been wiped off the map, more than 529,000 people still remain with power. News reports also are telling a story of a slow federal relief effort with water and the basic necessities running low, as citizens complain they have been ignored buy the federal government due to its emphasis on New Orleans.

And the two major political issues lingering along with the dead bodies floating in the water are why the levee system that failed was neglected for so long and why the Bush administration sat on their hands for more than four days before mounting a relief effort.

Regarding the levee system, it has long been known by local, state and federal officials that it needed repair. However, needed funds were never allocated, showing officials never really considered it a priority.

In fact, since the Bush administration took office hurricane and flood control funding for the Gulf Coast region has experienced historic cuts, even though warning signs and climate conditions showed New Orleans was likely to be hit by a catastrophic hurricane like Katrina.

Al Naomi, head of the Lake Pontchartrain and Vicinity Hurricane Protection Project, told a group of New Orleans business men in early 2004, as the cost of the Iraqi conflict skyrocketed, President Bush proposed spending less than 20 percent of what the Army Corps. of Engineers said was needed to shore up the levee system.

"The $750 million Lake Pontchartrain project remains about 20 percent incomplete due to a lack of funds," said Naomi about the project, consisting of protection for pumping stations and building up levees on the east bank of the Mississippi River in Orleans, St. Bernard, St. Charles and Jefferson parishes.

According to the New Orleans daily paper, The Times-Picayune, in June of 2004, at the height of the hurricane season, Naomi went before the East Jefferson Levee authority, begging for $2 million in "urgent emergency funds" since Washington refused to allocate proper funding to strengthen the levee.

After the levee system failed this week, critics of the Bush administration quickly cited the "lack of priority funding" for the Lake Pontchartrain project, adding the administration failed in its duties to the people of New Orleans by not providing the needed money even though the danger of a major catastrophe was well-known.

"The longer we wait without funding, the more we sink," Naomi also told a New Orleans City Business magazine last year. "I've got at least six levee construction contracts that need to be done to raise the levee protection back to where it should be (because of settling). Right now I owe my contractors about $5 million. And we're going to have to pay them interest.

"The system is in great shape, but the levees are sinking. Everything is sinking, and if we don't get the money fast enough to raise them, then we can't stay ahead of the settlement. The problem that we have isn't that the levee is low, but that the federal funds have dried up so that we can't raise them."

In its article concerning the lack of funding for the levee system, the New Orleans City Business Magazine added that despite of the 2004 hurricane being one of the worst on recorded record, the President's budget came back "with the steepest reduction in hurricane funding and flood control funding for New Orleans in history."

On top of the lack of federal funding, the Bush administration's response to Katrina was pathetically slow, coming four days late, causing numerous additional deaths and strong public criticism from what seemed to be every corner of the country, including journalist, civic leaders, celebrities and especially the people stranded in the flooded areas without food and water.

In the most telling-tale of the government's failure to respond, the president of one of the New Orleans local parishes, cried on national television as he retold the story of how the elderly mother of one of his local supervisors drowned in her home Friday evening after asking for help for three days without any federal or state rescue assistance.

"She died in here home because nobody came after we asked for help for three days," said Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard, crying as he told politicians using four letter words to stop the press conferences and send help.

And while his picture of helplessness and despair was played over and over again on national television, it was only one of many similar situations playing out on roof tops and in attics of many New Orleans homes, where many people still remained trapped or left for dead.

Estimates of those trapped or dead are unknown, but New Orleans Mayor Nagin feared many more lives have been lost due to the government's four day delay in responding to the catastrophe.

"Where the hell are they," said Nagin earlier in the week as he waited for federal assistance, adding the city's resources of food and water are almost gone. "We need god damn help now, not tomorrow or the next day. I've almost given up asking for federal help. They've ignored my SOS pleas for help. It's a living hell and we are sinking fast."

In the wake of the slow government response time, leaders on Capitol Hill are already calling for hearings to find out why FEMA failed to respond and to determine whether the military was delayed due to a lack of manpower since its emphasis has been on the war in Iraq, leaving the homeland vulnerable.

And one of the leaders of the Congressional Black Caucus, Rep. Elijah Cummings (D-MA), claimed race may have played an issue in the slow response, saying if the incident occurred in a predominantly White community, help would have arrived much faster.

"They say they're doing everything, but give me a break," said Rep. Cumming about the tragedy occurring in mostly poor Black New Orleans neighborhoods where people lacked the resources to leave the city after the mandatory evacuation was announced.. "You tell me they can't get some diapers and formula to the New Orleans convention center, but we can go overseas and do much more. Give me a break. Something's drastically wrong.

Although the situation in New Orleans remains critical, Rep. Cummings warned the worst is yet to come after the thousands of dead bodies are uncovered from the rubble. He said only then will the real questions need answering when the families of those who lost loved ones demand to know why the government first withheld funds to improve the levee system and then responded slowly to the tragedy.

"They will want to know and, justifiably so, if the federal government acted differently, could their loved ones be alive today," added Rep. Cummings.

Besides the lack of funding and slow response and the reorganizing of FEMA, other critics who consider the Bush administration the enemy of the American people and who claim it help bring about 9/11, claim the question of how the levee system broke in three places after the storm hit - not during - is suspicious and should be completely investigated for any Delta Force or Special Ops foul play

Other strong Bush critics, who claim his world wide backers are bent on the destruction of America in favor of a one world government, said the lack of response was deliberate in an attempt to bring another large area of America to its knees like it did by orchestrating 9/11.

Still others who go much farther with their government criticism claim weather control and manipulation programs like HAARP in Alaska should be thoroughly investigated to see if intensity and storm patterns can be manipulated by new and military technology.

Bacteriologist and Government Insider Claims Oklahoma City and 9/11 Both 'Inside Jobs'

Despite threats on his life, Dr. Bill Deagle went public after being told by credible sources U.S. government brought about Oklahoma City bombing and 9/11 tragedy.

5 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Dr. Bill Deagle has been on a government hit list more than once in his life, each time brushing it aside like a common cold. Each time instead of running, hiding and shutting his mouth like a good government hack, he stood his ground, refusing to give into threats and intimidation.

Dr. Deagle, instead of playing the game, did what's right. He stood his ground, told the truth and defied the odds, since many other whistle blowers have been bumped-off for knowing a lot less.

And to say that Dr. Deagle "has heard too much about too many big things" is an understatement. However, to say that Dr. Deagle, heard some things implicating the government big time is not quite accurate.

It's not quite accurate since it's positively necessary to times the "big time" about what he knows by two and then, only then, is the statement even close to being correct.

So what really does the good doctor, a doctor who practices occupational medicine as a biochemist and bacteriologist while treating government employees exposed to radiation and toxic waste, have in his black bag that's so damaging to the government? What is it that makes the government want to put a 45 caliber bullet through the good doctor's heart?

Ask this: If you had solid information given to you by credible sources implicating the government conclusively in not only the Oklahoma City bombing but also 9/11, what would you do? Would you run and hide or would you talk?

What would you do if you had two bombshells laid on you in one lifetime when one is probably too much for any man to live with?

In 1995, when this question was posed to Dr. Deagle, he decided to take the high road and talk. He decided to try and alert the American people about the truth, no matter how dangerous.

And today 11 years later Dr. Deagle, who now chooses for safety reasons to live in Canada, is talking louder than ever, even taking his message to the radio air waves twice weekly on the Genesis truth radio network.

Although a media personality by nature, Dr. Deagle decided to do the show to reach more people with the truth and to keep in the public eye in order to stay alive. And knowing what Dr. Deagle knows, it's a miracle he's stayed alive this long.

Military Forensic Expert, On Bomb Site Within 24 Hours, Implicates Government In Oklahoma City

Dr. Deagle's twist of fate that turned him into probably one of the most significant whistle blowers in modern times began about two months after the Oklahoma City bombing when he was treating one of the five government forensic experts in charge toxicology reports and cleaning up the Oklahoma City bomb site.

His "wake-up call to the truth," as Dr. Deagle likes to call it, came when working at St. Francis Hospital for the Colorado Center of Occupational Medicine, while testing patients for respiratory issues related to chemical exposure.

During a routine check-up of one of the five bomb experts, one of them spilled the beans, telling Dr. Deagle a story that would change the course and direction of his life forever.

The patient, who Dr. Deagle has kept anonymous under the doctor-patient privilege, has since been court-martialed from the military.

"Most of the guys were pretty straight forward with their physical complaints, but this one man looked really frightened, acting like he wanted to tell me something," said Dr. Deagle this week in an extended telephone conversation from his home in Nova Scotia.

After prodding the patient to open-up and checking a severe rash, the military forensic expert, who arrived at the Oklahoma bombing scene within 24 hours, finally came clean with his story about finding more than the remains of Timothy McVey's fertilizer truck.

"He looked at me with this frightened look and finally came clean," recalls Dr. Deagle about the routine check-up that turned into a confession about government complicity in the bombing. "He told me they removed two softball size micro-chip nukes as well as removing C-4 pineapples and many C-4 placer charges systematically put throughout the building.

"He said he had to tell somebody but feared he would be killed if this ever leaked out. He then went on to say that special FBI units placed the nuke charges in he building to bring it down as a plan to one day bring about martial law."

Although Dr. Deagle will not give his name, he said the man was based at Ft. Carson in the military forensics unit and was in his late 30's or early 40's, adding he was under strict orders to keep his findings secret.

"He told me the building blew up from the inside out and the truck used by McVey was just a decoy," said Dr. Deagle, who originally aired a partial account of his findings on the Alex Jones truth-radio show. "I remember him saying specifically that he was under orders to leave any radioactive materials in military quarantine or otherwise be shot."

Since loose lips usually sink ships, word got out at Ft. Carson quickly about what Dr. Deagle learned from the forensic expert, who eventually was court-martialed. Dr. Deagle then was confronted by his supervising military physician, Air Force Maj. Dr. George Schwinder, who warned him he was in "big trouble."

"My boss looked at me with a cynical doctor's smile and said 'you're dead, Deagle,'" he recalls about a month after the tell-all session took place with the forensic expert. "At that point, I told him I had a hidden vault of information and I wouldn't hesitate at going public if anyone tried to harm me or my family.

"Later they cut me a five-figure check and I was gone, but I remember telling them even if they killed me, I wasn't going quietly."

FBI Head of Bio-Terrorism Tells Dr. Deagle About 9/11 Government Plot in 1999

Three years past after the Ft. Carson incident, the government kept close tabs on Dr. Deagle, tapping his phone and committing other numerous violations of his constitutional privacy rights.

In 1999, he found himself in Denver working at the Rocky Mountain Occupational Medical Center, where he worked closely with the Center of Disease Control (CDC) examining patients, mostly from military facilities, who were exposed to radioactivity and plutonium in a highly contaminated area of Rocky Flats, Colorado.

Then in March of 2001 at a causal lunch during an infectious disease conference in Denver, a high-ranking FBI official, who perhaps had too much wine at lunch, told Dr. Deagle about months in advance about the scenario involving what occurred on 9/11.

"When 9/11 happened, I knew right away it was a government inside as I thought about what the head of bio-terrorism told me March," said Dr. Deagle. "And, now years later, many of my military contacts have confirmed the Twin Towers were brought down by a controlled demolition with bombs being placed in the basements of both towers.

"It's important to recognize that what Condaleeza Rice testified to was a lie. There were actual simulations and many warnings prior to 9//11 about airplanes being used to bring down the Twin Towers. If I knew this, how could she not know if she was the National Security Advisor at the time.

Dr. Deagle said he was tipped-off the U.S. government has a hand in bringing about 9/11 at the March 2001 Denver lunch with Jay Reddington, one of top government infectious disease specialist and the CDC FBI directors for bio-terrorism.

"My vessels were popping out of my neck when the FBI head told me there was a 95% chance there would be a large terrorist attack in the upcoming months, using jets as weapons in the Twin Towers," said Dr. Deagle. "He kept talking about using nukes and dirty bombs to bring down the buildings.

"Of course, you have to remember this was pre-9/11 and during the course of this conversation, everything appeared to be speculation. However, looking back, he must have known something. I am sure of it. In fact, he was confirming at that time there was going to be a terrorist attack that would usher in martial law and the National ID card, which has subsequently been passed into law.

"Also, in February 2002 I went to a bio-terrorism conference in St. Louis and for three days I talked with Delta Force and special ops guys, all of them saying they know 9/11 was staged and that our own government was in control and pulling the strings of terrorism. They warned me that the next event was going to be a radiological event involving six major cities, including Chicago, Denver, Atlanta, Seattle, Boston and San Diego.

"I remember them mentioning those cities and that it would involve dirty bombs and that the suit case nukes already would be pre-placed in core areas of the cities with the help of Mossad agents.

"I want to emphasize that the same scenario was repeated over and over again and these men were angry as they talked how these rogues placed in positions of power were trying to bring about martial law through fear and terrorism. From what I've learned. I am almost sure there will be a radiological event within the next 6 to 24 months. "

Dr. Deagle Continues to Pursue Truth, Knowing the U.S. Government Sponsors Terrorism with Martial Law on the Horizon

Since going public and trying to alert Americans about the truth, Dr. Deagle has moved to Canada for his own safety, but has continued to aggressively research matters concerning the neo-con plot to destroy America under the guise of the New World Order.

A meticulous researcher, Dr. Deagle uncovered the already functioning National ID data base center located at Falcon Air Force Base (renamed Shreevers Air Force Base) as well as an advanced and already functioning military operation to micro-chip all Americans.

Besides these two obvious unconstitutional and evasive measures which invade privacy, he said what disturbs him even more are the complicated and expansive system of underground tunnels and detainment facilities already existing throughout America.

"Something really bad is going to happen in America and that is why I moved my family to Canada," said Dr. Deagle, who has also been harassed professionally by an organized group trying to black ball him from practicing medicine in Canada even though he holds a valid license in Colorado.

"Through my travels, I had a patient named John Fialla, who worked for the government in the tunnels and underground facilities which are in and around more than 132 U.S. cities and over 4,000 underground structures exist world wide.

"John became ill from working in facilities in Colorado and Mexico. He told me about things going on there, literally involving people from out of this world."

Besides fearing the obvious use of the underground cities as detention centers, Fialla's citing, confirmed by another Army Corp. of Engineers worker, Phil Schneider, who recently was found dead, may indicate the presence of an unexplainable malevolent alien presence.

"John said he saw a tall white creature over seven feet tall in one of the underground tunnels in Mexico," said Dr. Deagle, who remains open-minded about Fialla's claims, but is continuing to seek further verification, adding that several of the underground structures have been scientifically proven to be excavated more than 300,000 years ago.

Although Dr. Diebold was unaware of any further verification of "Tall Whites," recently Charles Hall, a former Air Force weather observer, claims he made contact with similar looking tall white creatures while working in an isolated portion of the Nevada desert air force base in Indian Springs.

Hall told similar stories of how these "Tall White's lived in underground facilities and communicated regularly with higher-ups in the military.

"The reason I started my radio show is to alert more people of what is really going on and to continue searching for truth no matter where it leads," said Dr. Deagle, adding that he is not worried about destroying his credibility over mentioning the words alien presence.

"We all know Bush is a soft puppet and Cheney is a bull dog. And going up the feed chain we have the international bankers who are pulling the New World Order strings. Now, no one can be sure about the presence of these alien malevolent beings living underground, but if the truth leads in that direction, then so be it."

Gallup Refuses To Run Poll Asking Americans If Bush Should Be Impeached
Independent democrats say Gallup's response is dishonest and the company is using a double standard when considering the nationwide poll run during the Clinton presidency.
2 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Behind the scenes, independent Democrats who are not "bought and paid off" by the neo-cons have been pushing the Gallup Poll organization to conduct a nationwide inquiry, asking Americans if they support the impeachment of President George Bush.

But Gallup officials this week categorically refused to poll Americans, telling Bob Fertik, Democrats for Unity president until impeachment was discussed by congressional leaders or news commentators in the media, it was their official policy to refrain from asking hypothetical questions.

Frank Newport, Gallup Poll editor-in-chief, wrote in response to Fertik:

"The general procedure Gallup uses to determine what to ask about in our surveys is to measure the issues and concerns that are being discussed in the public domain. We will certainly ask Americans about their views on impeaching George W. Bush if, and when, there is some discussion of that possibility by congressional leaders, and/or if commentators begin discussing it in the news media. That has not happened to date."

Fertik, head of an organization at www.democrats.com, disagreed with Gallup, saying the company's justification was "completely dishonest" since Bush's impeachment is a hot topic clearly in the public domain and on the minds of many Americans.

"Of course, your justification is completely dishonest. Is Bush's impeachment being discussed in the public domain? Unquestionably! Simply Google 'impeach Bush' and you'll get 723,000 links, said Fertik, reminding Gallup that a recent ZogbyPoll in June found 42 percent of Americans polled support impeachment if Bush lied about Iraq

"And this discussion is not limited to the Internet. Wherever Bush goes, he is greeted by "Impeach Bush" signs (e.g. August 29 in Camp Casey and August 30 in California.. And I hear it discussed on political talk radio frequently. But clearly you did not genuinely mean discussed in the public domain, because your next sentence limits the public domain" explicitly to congressional leaders and/or pundits.

"Thus your answer to the other 99.9 percent of Americans who are neither congressional leaders nor pundits can be summed up by paraphrasing a famous Daily News headline: "Gallup to Americans: Drop Dead!"

Fertik also called to Gallup's attention that many discussions of impeachment have appeared in the media, including statements or references made in the made by Pat Buchanan, Rep. Maurice Hinchey, Dan Froomkin, John Zogby, Keith Olberman. Mark Morford, Rush Limbaugh. Rep. Charlie Rangel, Alan Combes, Ralph Nader, Lyndon LaRouche and John Dean.

Further, Fertik reminded Gallup editors that a poll to impeach former President Clinton appeared in January 1998, shortly after allegations about his affair with an intern surfaced, the poll being taken with much less public fanfare than Bush is receiving over a host of possible impeachable offenses.

In response to Fertik's campaign for an impeachment poll, Gallup was hit with an email barrage, asking why Gallup is skirting the impeachment questions.

One email typical of many others asked Gallup editors:

"I'd like to see more polls on whether or not people think Bush lied to the American people regarding the reasons we went to war in Iraq and if they think he should be impeached for it. The Gallup Organization was very interested in if people wanted Clinton impeached.

"The latest polls were all we heard about at the time. Is lying about adultery more of a crime than lying to the American public in order to go to war? Shouldn't our soldiers know why they're dying? Give the Republicans equal treatment as you gave the Democrats. Raise the impeachment issue."

The question of the Bush impeachment has been a hot topic on the internet with millions of people all over the world discussing the subject. Further, internet bloggers have marveled at the ability of Bush, called the "Teflon President" to avoid impeachment due to a government that has basically turned into a one party system or, as some say, a dictatorship in the guise of democracy.

There have been many reasons cited by Bush critics that merit impeachment, but the issue mentioned the most the facts that have surfaced, indicating the President doctored WMD intelligence reports to justify the Iraqi invasion, exposed in the infamous Downing Street Memo.

Although the issue is much more serious than the sexual promiscuity of President Clinton, Bush has avoided being subjected to impeachment hearings due to a Congress, bought and paid off by special interests advancing what has been called a neo-con stranglehold on democracy.

Fed Response To Katrina Leaves People Dying In Streets

As politicians pat themselves on the back, the New Orleans poor continue to die. Rep. Charles Rangel (D-NY) and entire Congressional Black Caucus puts the blame squarely on President Bush.

2 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The response by politicians to the catastrophe in New Orleans is enough to make you sick. As they pat themselves on the back, people are being eaten by rats and dying in wheel chairs, pushed into alleys like pieces of garbage.

And in the midst of death and destruction, the mainstream media shifts its attention to the lawlessness in the streets instead of focusing on the desperate life and death situation on the streets of New Orleans.

Instead of reporting the poor are dying and the rich are watching on television, the media gives politicians hours of airtime to thank each other over and over again for pledging needed support.

But four days after Hurricane Katrina devastated the Gulf Coast, the rescue response by state and federal agencies has been a disgrace and almost nonexistent. Four days after, emergency help is finally starting to trickle in, but New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin today basically "threw up his hands," saying he is outraged at President Bush and the federal government for essentially sitting on their thumbs while New Orleans citizens were dying in the streets.

Nagin today told a local radio station the slow government response is costing hundreds if not thousands of lives, adding he has given up even asking for help as his earlier "SOS" pleas have either been ignored or met by gross negligence by the federal government.

"It is an SOS situation and a night of hell here," said Nagin in a statement just released from his office. "People in our city are holding on by a string. We are almost out of water and there has been a large natural gas explosion. We can't hold on much longer."

Frustrated with people dying in the streets, Rep. Charles Rangel (D-NY) today issued the harshest criticism of President Bush's lack of response, saying his policies and "unbelievable mismanagement on the domestic front have brought pain and suffering to the American people."

As Bush spoke to the media from Mobile, Alabama, pledging a stepped up relief effort in his first visit to the Gulf Coast, Rep. Rangel said his efforts are "too little and too late," adding the cuts in the Bush budget are directly responsible for the catastrophe.

"The President's policies in Iraq contributed to the slow response of federal troops who should have been on alert even before the hurricane struck," said Rep. Rangel. "Now, as bedlam reigns in New Orleans, 35 percent of Louisiana's and 37 percent of Mississippi's National Guard troops are in Iraq. The hurricane is clear evidence of how the war directly affects the domestic security of our country.

"The President is destroying the fabric of America with a combined policy of war, tax cuts for the wealthy, and reductions in spending for domestic needs. These policies are supported by the Republican-dominated Congress. Even so, it was shocking to read reports that Dennis Hastert, the Speaker of the House, said that rebuilding New Orleans made no sense to him."

Although politicians have been deflecting criticism of failed policies since the hurricane hit, saying this is not to time to cast blame for levee failures, Rep. Rangel disagreed, adding the American people have a right to know the truth behind the cuts in the President budget that left New Orleans even more vulnerable for this type of natural disaster.

"Thousands of people may have been killed by hurricane Katrina and many more could die in its aftermath because of the President's refusal to heed the calls of governors for help in repairing the infrastructure in their states," added Rangel. "In Louisiana, everybody knew that the levees that hold back flood waters were in disrepair. But instead of listening to the governors, the President cut funding for this purpose.

Rangel said the President's policies have not only made America less secure, but they have widened the chasm between the well-to-do and the poor. He added that the people who couldn't get out of New Orleans to escape the storm were predominantly African American, remaining behind because they were poor and didn't own cars..

"No one is even talking about the poor in more rural areas--Blacks and Whites--who have not even been reached by rescue teams," said Rangel, warning that he wasn't going to let President use this tragedy for political gains.

"President Bush will try to turn this tragedy into a political victory by flying in on a helicopter to examine the damage. But he is in store for political problems resulting from his failed policy in Iraq and the anger of U.S. governors whose constituents are paying the price for the domestic policies of the "war president."

Besides Rep. Rangel, the entire Black Congressional Caucus today came out against Bush's failed domestic policies and his slow response to the Gulf Coast tragedy. Congressional members used the Iraq analogy, saying if the "shock and awe" campaign to enter Iraq was touted as quick and decisive, the response to Hurricane Katrina is "shocking and awful" in comparison.

Bush Finally Arrives In New Orleans; People Dying in Wheel Chairs As Rescue Response Called 'Shocking and Awful'

Outraged Mayor of New Orleans sends 'four letter words' as response to White House relief effort. Chemical explosions and fires break-out throughout New Orleans as nightfall descends on a crumbling city with the stench of death in the air.

2 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Four days after Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans President Bush finally made a cameo appearance to the area, but much needed federal aide is still far behind as mostly poor Black Americans continue to die in the street from a what critics call a "shocking and awful" rescue response to the worst natural disaster in American history.

Top Republicans and Democrats on Capital Hill are already talking about opening up hearings into why the response time was so slow and members of the Congressional Black Caucus, considered the conscience of the Congress, are claiming if the disaster occurred in a predominantly Affluent white community, the response time would have been much quicker.

"That's probably true and I am sick and tired of the media referring to the mostly African Americans shown on broadcasts kneed deep in water as refugees," said Rep. Elijah Cummings (D-MD) in reference to CNN's coverage and what he calls a delay in rescue efforts since the tragedy occurred in the predominantly Black communities of New Orleans.

As politicians continued fighting over the lack of action, stories of misery and death continued to come out of New Orleans, as Mayor Ray Nagin used less than proper language to describe his feelings towards President Bush and the federal government's lackadaisical attitude at getting to the sick and dying in the flooded streets where 80 percent of the once vibrant New Orleans is underwater.

"Where the hell are they," said Nagin earlier today as he waited for federal assistance, adding the city's resources of food and water are almost gone. "We need god damn help now, not tomorrow or the next day. I've almost given up asking for federal help. They've ignored my SOS pleas for help. It's a living hell and we are sinking fast."

As Nagin vented his anger early in the morning today, national guard troops began to arrive in trucks with needed food and water in the early afternoon. Since the hurricane hit, numerous people have died in the New Orleans and have been shown on video lying on she streets under blankets or left dead sitting up in their wheel chairs.

In the distance, floating dead bodies were seen in the alley ways and the cry of starving children rang in the distance. Reporters on the scene reported "a living hell" on the streets with the stench of death, burning chemicals and polluted water making conditions unbearable for evacuees and rescuers.

But even as Mayor Nagin left on the Presidential helicopter with Bush late in the afternoon with Bush to survey the New Orleans streets, Rep. Cummings had harsh words for the administration.

"They say they're doing everything, but give me a break," said Rep. Cummings. "You tell me they can't get some diapers and formula to the New Orleans convention center, but we can go overseas and do much more. Give me a break. Something's drastically wrong.

Although the situation in New Orleans is critical, Rep. Cummings warned the worst is yet to come after the thousands of dead bodies are uncovered from the rubble. He said only then will the real questions need answering when the families of those who lost loved ones demand to know why the government first withheld funds to improve the levee system and then responded slowly to the tragedy.

"They will want to know and, justifiably so, if the federal government acted differently, could their loved ones be alive today," added Rep. Cummings.

Earlier in the day, Rep Charles Rangel (D-NY) issued a scathing statement, directly blaming Bush for the magnitude of the tragedy expected to kill thousands in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.

"The President's policies in Iraq contributed to the slow response of federal troops who should have been on alert even before the hurricane struck," said Rep. Rangel. "Now, as bedlam reigns in New Orleans, 35 percent of Louisiana's and 37 percent of Mississippi's National Guard troops are in Iraq, The hurricane is clear evidence of how the war directly affects the domestic security of our country.

"The President is destroying the fabric of America with a combined policy of war, tax cuts for the wealthy, and reductions in spending for domestic needs. These policies are supported by the Republican-dominated Congress. Even so, it was shocking to read reports that Dennis Hastert, the Speaker of the House, said that rebuilding New Orleans made no sense to him."

Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-LA) late this afternoon asked for President Bush to appoint a special cabinet level position to deal with the magnitude of the crisis in her home state, an obvious and open move in direct criticism of FEMA's slow response time.

In the days following the hurricane, Sen. Landrieu has refrained from criticizing the administration's slow response to the disaster, but appears to be losing her patience as reports of chemical explosions and large fires are beginning to erupt as nightfall hits her native New Orleans.

Editor's Note: It's impossible not to have you own heart torn out by what's going on in The Big Easy. If anyone has a story related to the hurricane and its aftermath, please email articbeacon@gmail.com

FEMA Claims New Orleans Was Disaster Priority; Bush 2005 Budget Drastically Cut Lake Pontchartrain Levee Funding

Army Corps levee project manager criticizes Bush administration for the steepest reduction in hurricane and flood control funding in New Orleans history.

1 Sep 2005

By Greg Szymanski

While the Bush administration spends billions in Iraq, a project manager for the repair of the New Orleans levee system said President Bush's 2005 budget is "totally inadequate," providing only $3.9 million of the $20 million needed before Hurricane Katrina devastated the Gulf Coast.

Al Naomi, head of the Lake Pontchartrain and Vicinity Hurricane Protection Project, told a group of New Orleans business men in early 2004, as the cost of the Iraqi conflict skyrocketed, President Bush proposed spending less than 20 percent of what the Army Corps. of Engineers said was needed to shore up the levee system.

After the Category Four hurricane battered New Orleans this week, the levee system collapsed in three vital areas, flooding 80 percent of the city and leaving thousands dead, according to city officials.

"The $750 million Lake Pontchartrain project remains about 20 percent incomplete due to a lack of funds," said Naomi about the project, consisting of protection for pumping stations and building up levees on the east bank of the Mississippi River in Orleans, St. Bernard, St. Charles and Jefferson parishes.

According to local papers, in June of 2004, at the height of the hurricane season, Naomi went before the East Jefferson Levee authority, begging for $2 million in "urgent emergency funds" since Washington refused to allocate proper funding to strengthen the levee.

After the levee system failed this week, critics of the Bush administration quickly cited the "lack of priority funding" for the Lake Pontchartrain project, adding the administration failed in its duties to the people of New Orleans by not providing the needed money even though the danger of a major catastrophe was well-known.

"The longer we wait without funding, the more we sink," Naomi told the New Orleans City Business magazine last year. "I've got at least six levee construction contracts that need to be done to raise the levee protection back to where it should be (because of settling). Right now I owe my contractors about $5 million. And we're going to have to pay them interest.

"The system is in great shape, but the levees are sinking. Everything is sinking, and if we don't get the money fast enough to raise them, then we can't stay ahead of the settlement. The problem that we have isn't that the levee is low, but that the federal funds have dried up so that we can't raise them."

In its article concerning the lack of funding for the levee system, the New Orleans City Business article added that despite of the 2004 hurricane being one of the worst on recorded record, the President's budget came back "with the steepest reduction in hurricane funding and flood control funding for New Orleans in history."

Regarding the lack of federal priority funding, the article added:

"The panel authorized that money, and on July 1, 2004, it had to pony up another $250,000 when it learned that stretches of the levee in Metairie had sunk by four feet. The agency had to pay for the work with higher property taxes. The levee board noted in October 2004 that the feds were also not going to pay for a hoped-for $15 million project to better shore up the banks of Lake Pontchartrain.

Two days after the New Orleans was left in chaos, Michael Brown, head of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the government's point man for hurricane assistance, said the New Orleans levee system was always one of the government's highest priorities.

However, his statements issued to the nation on CNN, appear to directly conflict with the stark reality that the Bush administration cut funds to repair the levee system even though it was a known danger if a major storm hit.

New Orleans has long been known as a flood threat from a direct hit from a hurricane, the federal government working with state and local officials since the late 1960s on major hurricane and flood relief efforts.

And when flooding from a massive rainstorm in May 1995 killed six people in New Orleans, Congress authorized the Southeast Louisiana Urban Flood Control Project (SELA).

Over the next 10 years, the Army Corps of Engineers, tasked with carrying out SELA, spent $430 million on shoring up levees and building pumping stations, with $50 million in local aid.

But Naomi pointed out that at least $250 million in crucial projects remained under funded, even though New Orleans had a near miss in 2004 from a major hurricane.

Due to the cuts, the Corps office there imposed a hiring freeze. Officials said that money targeted for the SELA project -- $10.4 million, down from $36.5 million -- was not enough to start any new jobs," according to New Orleans City Business magazine in a June 5, 2004 article.

The disaster surrounding Hurricane Katrina, largely affecting Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama, is still unfolding, officials saying recovery is going to take years not months since it has been declared the worst natural disaster in U.S. history.

Two days after the storm's devastating blow, looting and lawlessness has been reported in New Orleans, but police have largely ignored the problem due to its first priority of looking for survivors.

It is estimated that 250,000 people remained in the city despite a mandatory evacuation order. New Orleans city officials feared the death toll could reach as high as one-third of that figure, since many people were trapped in their homes unable to escape from rising flood waters that reached 20 feet high in some parts of the city.

The federal government has not yet arrived with mass assistance, although officials said late Wednesday evening, help was on the way with food, water and other necessities. In the interim, New Orleans remains primarily a "refugee city" with no power or fresh water, officials estimating it could be more than two months before services are restored.

House Republican Joins Dems In Making Bush Turn Over Documents About The Downing Street Memo

Republican Rep. Jim Leach of Iowa wants Bush to answer questions and turn over documents about whether he doctored WMD intelligence to justify the Iraqi War.

30 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A leak in the Republican ranks has provided new hope for 39 Democrats on Capitol Hill who recently sponsored a House resolution demanding White House disclosure of documents related to the infamous Downing Street memos.

Republican Rep. Jim Leach of Iowa has thrown his support in with Democrats, the first Republican asking President Bush to come clean with the American people about accusations, based on high-level British documents, that he doctored WMD intelligence reports to justify the Iraqi invasion.

In early May, documents were leaked showing head of MI6, Sir Richard Dearlove, told Prime Minister Tony Blair and others at a top level meeting that Bush had already decided to manufacture the WMD threat, learning this during high-level meetings in Washington months prior to the Iraqi invasion.

The documents were then verified as authentic by Blair, creating a public outcry on both sides of the Atlantic for accountability regarding the accusations made in Dearlove's assessment of the American war strategy.

After the release of the potentially damaging documents, Bush has remained steadfast, saying the WMD threat was not manufactured, claiming the decision to topple Sadaam Hussein was justified and he should not be blamed if intelligence was flawed.

However, a contingent of 89 Democrats in Congress and signatures from over a half million Americans strongly disagreed with Bush's explanation, as a letter was quickly authored in May and sent to the White House, demanding accountability.

Although essentially ignored by the White House and the mainstream media who both have downplayed the importance of Dearlove's statements, a grass roots Washington group called After Downing Street has kept the issue alive with a highly popular internet campaign, drawing millions of supporters at www.afterdowningstreet.org.

And this week aides to the Iowa Republican confirmed an internet announcement, saying Re. Leach will become a co-sponsor of House Resolution 375, written by Rep. Barbara Lee (D-CA).

The resolution requests that Bush and Sec. of State Condaleeza Rice release to the House all information in their possession about the sensitive communications made with British officials between Jan. 1, 2002 and

Oct. 16, 2002, in connection with the Iraqi invasion. The information requested includes any memos, meeting minutes, calendars, logs, records, telephone communications and emails.

"These documents offer strong evidence that the Bush administration 'fixed' intelligence in order to mislead our country into war, evidence the administration has failed to dispute or answer," Rep. Lee recently said in an official statement regarding the reason behind the House Resolution.

The explosive Downing Street Memo has also become a centerpiece for the growing anti-war movement, accusing Bush of lying to the American people about his real reasons behind going to war.

Opponents to the Bush war policy claim the President manufactured the WMD threat in order to control valuable Iraqi oil, as well as providing hefty profits for "his rich friends involved in profiting from the war movement."

Along with Rep. John Conyers (D-MI), Rep. Lee has been one of the strongest Bush critics on Capitol Hill. Recently at an Oakland town hall meeting, called to get questions answered about the war, she said:

"We knew all along that the president was misleading and lying to the American people about why he wanted to go to war. We all have a right to know. . . . We're going to force them to answer the questions by any means necessary."

However, in a joint news conference, held earlier this summer, both Bush and Blair denied any involvement in trying to fix intelligence reports to justify the war.

"No, the facts were not fixed in any way, shape or form at all. And let me remind you that the memorandum was written before we went to the United Nations," said Blair in the press conference.

The resolution, now with Rep. Leach's support, has been forwarded to the House International Relations Committee where he is a senior Republican member.

Adding further credibility to the Downing Street Memo, a leaked "confidential" document entitled the "The Iraqi Options Paper," prepared in March 2002, quotes British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw as saying:

"The US administration has lost faith in containment and is now considering regime change... A legal justification for invasion would be needed. Subject to Law Officers advice, none currently exists. This makes moving quickly to invade legally very difficult. We should therefore consider a staged approach, establishing international support, building up pressure on Saddam, and developing military plans. There is a lead-time of about 6 months.

"But there is no greater threat now that he will use WMD than there has been in recent years, so continuing containment is an option. The US has lost confidence in containment. Some in government want Saddam removed. The success of Operation Enduring Freedom, distrust of UN sanctions and inspection regimes, and unfinished business from 1991 are all factors."

Straw's comment about the lack of an imminent WMD threat from years past clearly puts Bush's claims for war in doubt, especially when Straw refers to Washington's plans for regime change in Iraq.

Put these words together with the original memo, indicating in July 2002 Bush had already fixed intelligence reports to fit his war policy, and even a stronger case can be made that the Iraqi invasion was manufactured around a false threat..

This is further bolstered by Straw's admission that Iraq was not in violation of mandated WMD security sanctions imposed by the Gulf War cease fire agreement, making the accusation that Iraq was an imminent threat to U.S. interests even more tenuous.

"Currently, offensive military action against Iraq can only be justified if Iraq is held to be in breach of the Gulf War cease fire resolution, 687. 687 imposed obligations on Iraq with regard to the elimination of WMD and monitoring these obligations

"They (United Nations) would need to be convinced that Iraq was in breach of its obligations regarding WMD, and ballistic missiles. Such proof would need to be incontrovertible and of large-scale activity. Current intelligence is insufficiently robust to meet this criterion."

Another memo written by Prime Minister's Tony Blair foreign policy advisor, David Manning, indicates Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice had already made up her mind about regime change in Iraq as early as March of 2002, months prior to the invasion.

Manning's memo, written on March 25, 2002, refers to a dinner engagement with Rice where she purportedly expressed desire for a regime change, but expressed increasing concerns about the political risks. She also told Manning that President Bush was still unsure about how to justify an Iraqi invasion and was searching for answers.

"Condi's enthusiasm for regime change is undimmed. But there were some signs, since we last spoke, of greater awareness of the practical difficulties and political risks," said Manning to Blair about his dinner conversation with Rice

"From what she said, Bush has yet to find the answers to the big questions as to how to persuade international opinion that military action against Iraq is necessary and justified; what value to put on the exiled Iraqi opposition; how to coordinate a US/allied military campaign with internal opposition (assuming there is any); and what happens on the morning after?"

To add even more fuel to the WMD fire, another confidential memo obtained from P.F. Ricketts, a political advisor to Blair, dated March 22, 2002, purportedly advised the Prime Minister how to deal with the impending problems of an Iraqi invasion and how Blair could help influence Bush's final decision.

"First, the (Iraqi) threat. The truth is that what has changed is not the pace of Saddam Hussein's WMD programs, but our tolerance of them post-11 September. This is not something we need to be defensive about, but attempts to claim otherwise publicly will increase skepticism about our case document. My meeting yesterday showed that there is more work to do to ensure that the figures are accurate and consistent with those of the US.

"But even the best survey of Iraq's WMD programs will not show much advance in recent years on the nuclear, missile or CW/BW fronts: the programs are extremely worrying but have not, as far as we know, been stepped up.

Actor Martin Sheen, Rev. Al Sharpton and Joan Baez Come To Crawford In Support Of Cindy Sheehan

On the final weekend of Sheehan's anti-war protest near the Bush Ranch, Hollywood stars and politicians join anti-war movement. Pro Bush supporters arrive in big numbers, calling Sheehan a traitor and telling her to go home.

29 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

CRAWFORD, TX - Tempers flared in the hot, sweltering Texas sun this weekend as at least four arrests were made during a heated exchange of words, nearly leading to violence, between Cindy Sheehan and President Bush's war supporters separated only by a two-lane country road.

Two people from each side of the war protest were arrested by local law enforcement officials on disorderly conduct and public disturbance charges, reflecting the electricity in the air over the controversial war issue.

Although Sheehan is staying until Wednesday, crowds gathered for the final weekend of the three-week long war protest began leaving late Sunday afternoon as both pro and anti war supporters tried to garner last minute media attention from major news outlets gathered for the event that has captured national attention.

Earlier on Sunday, Rev. Al Sharpton addressed Sheehan supporters, calling for "Bush accountability" in the Iraq War while adding his unique, emotionally charged brand of speaking to excite and energize protestors.

Known for his anti-war activities, actor and activist, Martin Sheen, also spoke at Camp Casey later in the evening, lending his support to Sheehan and adding an important Hollywood name to the growing list of anti-war supporters, a list that has swelled to millions across the country.

"The war is based on wrong reasons and I commend Cindy for her bravery and courage," said Sheen, who has lent his name to many other anti-establishment causes throughout his many years as a Hollywood star.

Prior to Sheen's arrival, folk singer Joan Baez, known for her anti-Vietnam songs, made a second appearance this weekend in Crawford, singing several of her old folk songs and leading crowds in the singing of "Amazing Grace." Also, several Iraqi veterans against the war in the crowd could be heard saying "Sheehan's movement will eventually will bring peace" as they chanted "impeach Bush."

And while an endless list of speakers took the weekend stage, supporters on both sides of the war issue estimated at least 5,000 people ascended on the sleepy Texas town where President Bush is taking a five-week vacation behind the fences of his Crawford ranch.

Sheehan arrived on Bush's doorstep three weeks ago, vowing to remain until the end of August or until the President granted her a personal meeting to answer tough questions about his true motives concerning the Iraqi War.

Even though the President has referred to Sheehan by name in two press conferences, he has refused to meet with the outspoken war critic, who lost her son in a 2004 Baghdad fire. Bush has also refused to speak with thousands of other anti-war supporters, who have gathered on a lonely country road near his ranch.

Although Bush has failed to answer serious questions about his true motives about the war with the Sheehan group, representing a majority of Americans who now oppose the war, Bush openly has granted several "photo ops" with war supporters who arrived for the weekend Crawford rally.

Bush on Saturday was seen smiling, sharing hot dogs and cajoling with a group of war supporters who made the trek in their motor homes and cars from California to oppose the Sheehan movement. Later several of these same supporters openly called Sheehan a traitor as well as used obscenities and foul gestures, telling Sheehan in no uncertain terms she was "not welcome on Texas soil."

"Go home, bitch," said one Bush supporter as he was escorted from the roadway by a contingent of at least nine sheriff's deputies who set up a barricade to separate protestors.

In the Sheehan camp, dozens of supporters chanted anti-Bush lyrics as Bob Dylan's "Knocking on Heaven's Door" played in the background. One large anti-war banner labeled Bush, Vice President Dick Cheney and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld as "pigs of war" while repeated chants of "Bush is a liar" ringing in the background.

On the other side of the road from the original Camp Casey set up three weeks ago by Sheehan when she first arrived, several Bush supporters rode on horseback with "Go, Home Cindy and Cindy is Nuts," painted on the hind quarters of their horses in a display of how they really felt about Sheehan's anti-war movement. One specific pro war banner especially displayed the deep contempt for Sheehan, saying "Repent, you treasonous scum, go home!"

However, the pro Bush riders acting like angry cavalry soldiers, failed to realize that even the horses they rode could be slated for the glue factory as Bush recently allowed a little known Republican bill to slip through Congress without a veto, leading to the eventual slaughter of thousands of wild horses grazing on public land previously protected by law.

Bush supporters also took over a nearby high school football field as several parents who also lost sons or daughters in the war condemned Sheehan and labeled her a "terrorist threat and a traitor."

As crowds chanted pro war slogans, a group of unruly protestors in the football stands turned on a pair of news reporters, as one reporter from was grabbed and told to leave, accused of glamorizing the Sheehan movement.

During the heated weekend rally, both camps distinguished their causes by name with Sheehan's group gathered under the name of "Camp Casey" in honor of her fallen son and Bush supporters taking the name "Camp Reality."

Both groups are also backed by well-oiled liberal and conservative groups. MoveOn.org, Democrats for Peace and True majority are largely underwriting the Sheehan movement while the pro war group is primarily sponsored by Move America Forward, a California conservative group largely responsible the recall of former Gov. Gray Davis.

Although mostly Republican and conservative, one of the pro war speakers, Mike Crowley of California who also lost his son in Iraq, said he denounced Sheehan and supported Bush even though he was a democrat and never voted for Bush.

During his speech, he asked Sheehan to remove his son's name from one of the white crosses placed by the anti-war group on the side of the road, adding: "It's really not right what she is doing and I don't want my son's memory or his name associated with her."

Whatever side of the war issue is taken, the cold, hard reality is that more than 1,870 troops have perished and hundreds of thousands of civilians have been killed since the beginning of the Iraqi invasion.

And whether the Sheehan movement is termed a success, it comes in the wake of bad news for the Bush administration as a Gallup poll released last week showed his lowest job approval rating, 40 percent, of his presidency. And even among Republicans support for the war is at a all-time low, although still comfortably high at 82 percent.

However, Gallup reports overall that only 34 percent of Americans are satisfied with how things are progressing in the country, another all-time low for Bush's presidency.

And the stark reality at the Crawford war rally is Bush supporters spent a large portion of the weekend, spewing obscenities and attacking Sheehan, calling her a traitor while failing to address any concrete issues behind the anti-war protest movement.

On the other hand, speakers in the Sheehan camp acted more civilized, keeping Bush attacks to a minimum while asking that he address the issues, including accusations that he doctored intelligence WMD reports well in advance of the war to justify the invasion.

Bush, however, remained hidden at his ranch, preferring to boost his sagging war report in his weekly nationwide radio address while addressing his reasons for keeping troops in Iraq.

"Our continued efforts in Iraq and the broader Middle East will require more time, more sacrifice and continued resolve," he said, adding Israel's recent departure from the Gaza strip as surefire signs of success.

While Bush spoke on the radio, anti-war supporters, included Sheehan, claim the President needs to respond openly to the infamous Downing Street Memo, an official British document verified by Tony Blair, revealing the President was guilty of doctoring WMD intelligence data months prior to the invasion.

Crowds Swell For Cindy Sheehan's Final Weekend Of War Protest

The highway to Crawford is lined with cars as far as the eye can see, as both pro and anti-war supporters converge on the President's ranch. All indications are that Bush remains firm and will not speak with Sheehan.

27 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

CRAWFORD, TX - Highway 185, usually an empty country road, looks like a California freeway during rush hour this Saturday afternoon with drivers lined up as far as the eye can see, headed for President Bush's ranch to be a part of the final days of the Iraqi War protest started over three weeks ago by Cindy Sheehan.

Thousands of people are rolling into the sleepy Texas town in sweltering heat, many with signs draped from their motor homes and cars, some backing Bush's war effort and others siding with Sheehan who seeks an immediate troop withdrawal in what she calls "the President's illegal war."

And the signs being displayed as drivers make their way into Crawford reveal just how divided America is over the war issue.

"Bush is Right and Sheehan is Nuts," proclaimed one Bush follower's sign on the side of an expensive RV, reflecting the mood of thousands of administration supporters caravanning from California to get their pro-war message heard.

But several car lengths behind the Bush-backers RV, another sign supports Sheehan, saying "Bush is a Coward. Why Don't You Talk to Cindy," reflecting the reason Sheehan started the war rally in the first place.

More than two weeks Sheehan set up camp with a handful of peace advocates on a spur of the moment decision to travel to the President's ranch during his five-week long vacation.

"Nothing was planned. Just a decision to come and get some answers from the President about what he meant when he announced publicly the fallen troops died for a noble cause," said Sheehan when she first arrived in Crawford without much fanfare, seeking a personal explanation from the President since her 24-year-old son, Casey, was killed in Baghdad in 2004.

And on that first day in Crawford, camped-out in a small tent near the President's ranch, she made clear what she thought of the Iraqi War and what she called the President's less than honest motives: "I want him to explain to me personally what the noble cause really is that my son died for? I think he really means my son died in order to line the pockets of rich friends, who are profiting from this illegal war, based on lies and deceptions from the beginning."

Now, more than two weeks later, Sheehan's spur of the moment protest began with a handful of other grieving mother's who lost children in the war, has grown into a nationwide movement, drawing national media coverage on a daily basis and becoming a focal point of interest for those both for and against continuing the Iraqi War.

And when arriving in Crawford for the final 'showdown weekend,' the scene is set perfectly for either chaos or an orderly protest with Bush remaining quietly behind the fences of his Texas ranch with no intention to meet with Sheehan and a large contingent of national and international press, reporting amidst the thousands rallying either to Sheehan's or the President's side.

"Thousands of people are pouring in today and my hope is that it goes smoothly since tempers can flare easily especially in this sweltering Texas heat," said Hadi Jawad, spokesman for the Crawford Peace House, a local group caring for the needs of the war protestors during their long stay in Crawford.

"It's is my hope that everyone gets a chance to express their opinions and something positive comes from the last weekend here in Crawford."

Asked if President Bush has showed any signs of going in and granting Sheehan a meeting, he added:

"No, definitely not. We are almost one hundred percent positive he will not speak with us. However, hopefully he is getting the message that there are millions of Americans who do not agree with his war policies and want some serious answers to questions he has continually been avoiding."

Most the activities for Sheehan' anti-war group are taking place at two make-shift camps, named Camp Casey I and II, in honor of her fallen son. The original protest site is located about four miles from the President's ranch on Prairie Chapel Road and the other has recently been set up on the opposite side of the ranch about a mile away from the entrance.

"Today we are going to be having continual music and speakers, going well into the night," added Jawad. "Rev. Sharpton is going to be here later and we expect many other political figures to be also arriving to lend their support to Cindy."

In recent days, outspoken Bush critic and political observer, Arianna Huffington, arrived to lend her support to Sheehan, as did Rep. John Conyers (D-MI), both speaking to supporters and the media about the need to hold Bush accountable for his failed war effort.

Although the initial protest started with a small group, during the last three weeks organizers said more than 20,000 people have wandered in and out with another 5,000 expected this final weekend.

"It really has been incredible what has happened," said unofficial camp leader Ann Wright, who has taken over the organizational duties after recently resigning from her post as a top diplomat in the Mongolian Embassy, leaving in protest over the Iraqi War.

Also, arriving in support for Sheehan is a large group of anti-war veterans called Veterans For Peace, arriving by bus after traveling cross-country to rally behind Sheehan, who has become the centerpiece for the nationwide anti war movement.

Tammara Rosenleaf, who arrived several days ago to support the protest and the Veterans for Peace, said her husband is back at Ft. Hood awaiting deployment to Iraq, but decided to make her voice heard in opposition of the Bush war.

"My husband is proud of me and told me this is where I need to be," said Rosenleaf.

Since the protest began, the national news media has made a point to present opposing views of war supporters, including mothers who lost children and who radically disagree with Sheehan. This weekend the war supporters have come in large numbers right to Sheehan' doorstep, since they are expecting wide media coverage and they want to make sure their voices are heard.

"I think Sheehan is full of s...," said one Bush supporter arriving from California who wanted to remain nameless due the vulgarity of his message.

In response to the vulgarities and the right wind attacks on her character from the likes of Rush Limbaugh and Bill O'Reilly from FOX, Sheehan told supporters in a speech late Friday night:

"I am going to make sure that after our troops are brought home from Iraq, and they will be brought back, that we're going to keep the Camp Casey movement going and we're gonna make sure that our kids are never sent to fight a war for power and greed.

"I'm thinking, I'm thinking probably, probably the country is kind of going to take me at my word from now on. They are going to know that I'm not going to give up and today was really hard when I came in and saw Casey bigger than life in that beautiful painting hanging over there. I miss him so much and I miss him more every day, but like that song "Joe Hill," Casey's not dead. I see him in all of your eyes and Casey will never die. And they can kill the body, but they can't kill the love and the spirit, and no matter how hard they try they can't do that.

"I want to tell you a little bit about Casey because this whole movement is because of him and because of the others that have sacrificed themselves. The hardest thing for me to hear, I don't care about them talking about me being a crackpot or a media whore, or a tool of the left, you know. I'm like if I truly was a media whore do you think I would like maybe get myself fixed up a little bit before I went on?

"That doesn't bother me at all, but what bothers me so much is when they say I am dishonoring my son's memory by what I'm doing, that my son would be ashamed of me or what they really like to say is that I'm pissing, or shitting, or spitting on his grave. And look what Casey, look what Casey has started. You know, I'm here because of Casey, we're all here because of Casey."

On the Heels Of Death Threats Coming Out Of Washington, WTC Janitor Has Jersey City Apartment Burglarized

Journalist Wayne Madsen has left Washington over death threats and William Rodriguez, 9/11 truth-seeker, had his apartment burglarized. Both fit the description of the person supposedly targeted by the government.

27 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Coming on the heels of reports today that government operatives are trying to assassinate someone highly critical of the Bush administration, William Rodriguez, the WTC janitor who has been speaking out across the nation about a 9/11 government conspiracy, came home to find his Jersey City apartment burglarized Saturday.

Rodriguez, who has damaging eye-witness testimony that bombs exploded in the WTC basement prior to the airplanes striking, said today his apartment was burglarized between 12:30pm and 7:50pm after returning home and noticing his second-floor apartment door wide-open.

Rodriguez immediately filed a police report with Jersey City police, but there are no leads or suspects in the case, as neighbors also reported seeing nothing while Rodriguez was out.

"I came home to find my door open," said Rodriguez in a telephone conversation Saturday night from his apartment just after police left the crime scene. "They didn't destroy the place, but took my lap top with all my vital information, as well as one of my video cameras and all of my girl friend's jewelry, including an expensive engagement ring."

Rodriguez expressed concern over the burglary since earlier in the day he received a "warning email" from contacts close to Washington investigative journalist Wayne Madsen, who received credible information his life may be in danger.

Rodriguez was notified because he also fits the description of the potential government target, as the inside intelligence source that leaked the information to Madsen said the target was not specifically mentioned by name, but fits the description of both Madsen and Rodriguez.

"I just received this email this morning, warning that someone who fits my description is going to be targeted," said Rodriguez, concerning the communication highly sensitive communication he received from John Caylor, a friend of Madsen who is spreading the word to others potentially in danger.

"Now, the robbery in my apartment is highly suspicious, considering the timing of the email. I wonder just who is being targeted? I notified police about it and everybody needs to be careful."

Madsen, highly critical of the Bush administration, left Washington for several days and is taking the warning seriously while keeping his whereabouts secret.

"I am laying low for a few days," said Madsen in an email Saturday from an undisclosed location. "The threat, although not directly to me personally, was credible enough to leave D.C. for awhile."

Madsen, a former National Security Agency employee turned reporter, has been a thorn in the side of the Bush administration for his inside reports, revealing financial corruption linking the Bush administration to major foreign and domestic scandals, including 9/11.

Rodriguez has also been highly critical of the Bush administration lately, spreading his message across the country in numerous public speeches about his story about the 9/11 cover-up has been withheld from the American people by a systematic censoring of his words by the government and the media.

The long-time WTC head maintenance man holds key information literally destroying the government's official story and theory about how jet fuel was solely responsible for bringing down the WTC.

What makes his eye-witness testimony even more damaging to the government is that it can be corroborated by numerous eye-witnesses who have also been censored by the government and media.

Although Rodriguez's story has been told freely without censorship overseas in a number of foreign markets, the American media as well as the 9/11 Commission has seen fit to suppress his story, a story that very well could lead to pinning the Bush administration with high-crimes related to the 9/11 cover-up.

The recent assassination threat coming from inside Washington has also been taken seriously by Rodriguez, who in the past has on numerous occasions turned down government bribes to keep him quiet.

Since 9/11, Rodriguez has remained steadfast in his determination to tell the truth despite the enormous odds, saying he owes it to all those who lost lives at the WTC, including more than 200 personal friends and acquaintances who perished on 9/11.

Rodriguez, the last survivor out of the North Tower before it collapsed, was declared a National Hero for his valiant efforts the morning of 9/11, saving hundreds of lives as he possessed one of the few master keys for the North Tower stairwell, using it to save many lives just before the tower collapsed.

But after being courted at the White House, Rodriguez quickly became a government target once officials realized he could not be bribed or bought-off.

The intelligence report received by Madsen and forwarded to Rodriguez this morning as a warning was sent to the Arctic Beacon.

Although the target wasn't mentioned by name, the profile fit both Madsen and Rodriguez as well as others who have been recently very critical of the Bush administration.

The warning sent to Madsen, causing him to flee Washington and perhaps linked to the Rodriguez burglary, reads as follows:

"We have reason to think that a "project" will be undertaken against "someone" considered problematic now...not next week but NOW. That person is not specified but is in the US, in an apartment setting and lives alone. It is a "he" and he works via www. This information is specific to an intent but not specific to a person. The source is impeccable and you know my track record which have parallel sourcing.

"The "project" will be assigned to "parallel contractors" who will make any action appear random and witnesses would suggest Middle Eastern in source. Actions would be carried out in or near the home. We do not hear things like this often (almost never) and so far every warning of this type has been within 24 hours of action and these warnings have proven 100% accurate in the past. We do not know of any direct reason for someone to use this source to provide wrong or misleading information or for use by those who are "contracting" this action. Your recent work and profile make us tell you this directly.

"Please respond with a note that all is normal there. Please consider the warning we received as it can be applied to many including your self. It is possible that someone considers "us" linked in some way and that this warning may be a "deterrent" to work that some may not want completed. We have no reason to think this but I want to consider every possible angle and application to this warning.

"Please consider what can be done while taking any measures you think necessary to avoid this "project". We consider this warning as coming with the highest level "authenticity" and purity of motive, but the subject and message subject and its specifications were too unusual to be sure of intent."

Madsen, Rodriguez and Caylor also wanted the report circulated in public since others who fit Madsen's similar profile may also be in danger.

Investigative Reporter Wayne Madsen Flees Washington Over Assassination Threats Coming From Inside Bush Administration

Although not mentioned by name, Madsen received credible information his life may be in serious danger from his hard-hitting accounts revealing financial corruption in the Bush administration.

27 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Investigative reporter Wayne Madsen has left Washington for several days after receiving credible reports his life may be in serious danger for his hard-hitting accounts of corruption within the Bush administration.

"I am laying low for a few days," said Madsen in an email Saturday from an undisclosed location. "The threat, although not directly to me personally, was credible enough to leave D.C. for awhile."

Madsen, a former National Security Agency employee turned reporter, has been a thorn in the side of the Bush administration for his inside reports, revealing financial corruption linking the Bush administration to major foreign and domestic scandals, including 9/11.

Previously, the Bush administration was linked to stopping publication and intimidating the publisher of one of Madsen's upcoming books, highly critical of the Bush family name.

The highly controversial reporter has told the Arctic Beacon in a previous interview that he has undergone months of harassment by Bush operatives, including getting him fired from his job at a Washington think tank and repeatedly attempting to strip him of his membership in the Washington Press Club.

John Caylor, a close friend speaking for Madsen in his absence, released the following statement on Madsen's request:

"At Wayne Madsen's request we are putting this message to him from a source high in a United States Intelligence agency. Wayne is now in hiding and on the run after his source revealed that a private contractor assassination team had been hired to take him out due to his articles and exposures in Insider-Magazine.com and WayneMadsenreport.com. We will keep you informed and if the assassination teams kill him, then all the world will know where the orders came from."

Madsen revealed he received firsthand intelligence information from a Washington insider, trusted by Madsen, who warned him to leave town immediately, saying the threat on his life was "imminent and real."

Prior to Madsen leaving town, he wrote his friend Caylor the following message:

"You know have what was sent to me by someone who has excellent bona fides. If anything happens to me, send this far and wide. I am leaving Washington for a few days."

Madsen sent the Arctic Beacon a copy of the warning he received from a credible source within the government, saying the target wasn't mentioned by name but the profile fit Madsen as well as others who have been recently very critical of the Bush administration.

The warning sent to Madsen, causing him to flee Washington, read as follows:

"We have reason to think that a "project" will be undertaken against "someone" considered problematic now...not next week but NOW. LaRouche Says 'Georgie Porgie And Hitler' Running Government And Leading World Into Global Disaster

Former Democratic nominee for President and Labor Party Presidential candidate, Lyndon LaRouche, claims martial law is right around the corner if Bush, Cheney and the neo-cons aren't removed from their stranglehold on government.

26 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

He likes to call President Bush "Georgie Porgie" and Vice President Cheney "Hitler in a bunker." He considers Bush a half-wit and a "nominal President" while classifying Cheney, actually in control of the country, as trigger-happy and a Hitler-type mad-hatter.

And put "Georgie Porgie" and Hitler together in the same Oval Office and according to Lyndon LaRouche, former Labor Party presidential candidate and controversial international political figure, it's the perfect recipe for global disaster, economic chaos and martial law, the likes of which are unimaginable to most Americans clinging to the last remnants of prosperity, democracy and freedom.

But LaRouche, 84, using his vast economic and political experience as a guide, claims Bush and Cheney aren't the real problem, but just willing mouthpieces for a syndicate of wealthy international bankers pulling the strings and controlling the White House.

"These guys are not important. Bush, Cheney and Rumsfeld are just the willing stooges," said LaRouche this week in a telephone conversation from his Vermont headquarters where he operates his latest political organization called LaRouche Political Action Committee (PAC).

"These bankers are in danger of losing power since the economic system they created years ago is finally collapsing. They are at the end of their string after playing the funny money game for so long.

"Now, they are saying 'we can't have democracy and we need a dictatorship' in order that they can control what's left after the fall. This is why things are moving so fast now. Bush and company are in a race to create a dictatorship before everything collapses or people catch on to what they are trying to do."

And LaRouche says after fighting the good fight for so many years, it his role now to "clog up the works" and alert America of the evil within since most all politicians and media commentators have "become gutless" and unable to fight for the truth.

"There isn't much in the way of guts on Capital Hill," said LaRouche. "The World War II generation would have never let this happen."

Providing a powerful combination of blows with plenty of guts to both the character and integrity of Bush and Cheney, he added:

"Here you have a guy (Cheney) who is a real jerk and a Vietnam-era draft dodger. What you really have is a chicken hawk planning wars with no military background whatsoever. And then there is a psychopath for a President, the combination of which makes for a very dangerous situation."

And in a recent August 1 radio interview with James White on the number one British commercial station, he elaborated on his views towards the nation's top leaders:

"Bush is a man of limited intellect, and limited comprehension of what's going on around him. To some things he reacts passionately. To other things he reacts with a very curious indifference to reality. As, for example, when you have a President of the United States, who says that U.S. government bonds, which are part of the essential security system of the international monetary system, and says they're nothing but worthless pieces of paper, you know you have a President who is not quite all there."

"And in that situation, a fellow like Cheney, rising as Vice President way beyond the Constitutional limits of what a Vice President is allowed to do, is serving, actually, as an acting President. He's taking over. And I don't think George W. Bush really understands what going on."

Although some may claim LaRouche, known for his over-the-top statements, is over-reacting, others claim the exceptionally talented economic and political forecaster is right on target with his recent prediction that America is only months, if not weeks away, from a another 9/11-like attack as well as nuclear war in Iran.

Recently after checking meticulously with numerous inside Washington sources including a high-ranking former U.S intelligence official, LaRouche put out a "world wide" red alert covering the period of August 2005.

In his alert distributed widely on the internet, The American Conservative Magazine originally claimed Cheney had already ordered the Strategic Command (STRATCOM) to prepare contingency plans for a conventional and tactical nuclear strike against hundreds of targets in Iran in the event of a "new 9/11-style attack on the U.S."

Following the initial report LaRouche then verified it with reports from highly qualified Congressional and military sources, who have confirmed the essential elements of the original story , adding the Iran plans are not merely contingency studies, but represent the policy intentions of Cheney.

"Time is of the essence," said LaRouche. "The administration is on a fast and furious time schedule and that's why something is going to happen in August or September. I foresee even a bigger attack than 9/11 and what they are planning is a shock-effect to the public conscience in order to take control. It is my intention to try and get them out of office before that happens."

Gaining political prominence in the 1960's, LaRouche originally known for his economic expertise, he has always been at odds with the traditional ruling families formerly connected with the New England opium traders and Manhattan bankers who follow in the tradition of Martin Van Buren and J.P. Morgan as well as those still clinging to the tradition of southern slave-holding.

Although the roots of differing economic theories rest deep in history and philosophical thought, LaRouche attempted to bring America's failing economic situation into terms understood by everyone.

"After World War II, we maintained for years the world's most powerful economy despite our foolish mistakes," said LaRouche. "America was then put through a series of shocks with the Kennedy assassination and Vietnam while all the time the economy shifting from being an industrial, production based system to essentially a service economy."

"Now, we have white collar crooks running the country, guys who have destroyed the economy. For 40 years, we've been destroying the U.S. economy. We are now, still, nominally, the masters of a world monetary system, by virtue of the dollar. We're crashing the dollar. And the whole thing is about to come down, because of these financial derivatives kinds of nonsense, as typified by the hedge-funds crisis.

"We're sitting there, like idiots! We got ourselves into this mess: We destroyed our industry; we destroyed our agriculture; we're living off the back of the rest of the world-and we think we can go on like this forever? No. Certain countervailing things begin to come in and hit us, after, say, 40 years of lunacy."

Concerning 9/11 and the 7/7 London bombings, Larouche thinks they both were inside government jobs, creating the necessary fear an intimidation need to lead a population into an eventual dictatorship.

Claiming the Bush and Blair governments have caused their own Reichstag fire, LaRouche claims what happened to the German people during the Nazi era is similar to what is now being played out in America.

"Remember, people first laughed at Hitler, saying he never could rise to power. But then Hermann Goering set fire to the Reichstag and dictatorial powers were granted to Hitler," said LaRouche.

"Now we have people like Cheney, who are thinking like some of those behind Hitler then, thinking they can pull off an operation, and they have no comprehension-remember, Cheney is a draft-dodger, and here he is planning wars! And this kind of situation is the danger.

"Sensible people, around the world, know that warfare, except for defense, is a pointless operation in this day and age. The consequences are immense. There are other ways, and better ways that we can handle security problems, than going to general war simply because we're angry."

Besides war, LaRouche thinks if Bush and his cronies were removed from power, there still is a fighting chance to save America and its economic future. Although LaRouche admits there is very little "guts: on Capital Hill, he is still trying to convince a small minority "of true patriots" in the Senate to block the Bush administration push towards martial law and a totalitarian state.

"I am essentially carrying the spear and trying to clog up the works for those on the hill who won't come forward publicly," said LaRouche, who is trying to use every avenue to divert the Bush administration push towards a global conflict.

Seeking the Democratic Presidential nomination without success on six occasions and running for President in 1976 as the U.S. Labor Party candidate, LaRouche has been target for harassment and litigation by the establishment on numerous occasions.

Convicted and sentenced on conspiracy charges in in the late 1980's in what critics call a political hatchet job, German law specialist, Professor Freidrich A. Freiherr vo der Heydte, said:

"Everything we have been able to find out about the trial against Lyndon H. LaRouche, has been yet another painful reminder that the exploitation of the judicial system for the achievement of political ends, is unfortunately a method used repeatedly today in the West as well as the East."

Also, commenting on the injustice behind the LaRouche charges and conviction was former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, described the case as representing "a broader range of deliberate cunning and systematic misconduct over a longer period of time utilizing the power of the Federal government than any other prosecution by the U.S. Government in my time or to my knowledge."

Texas Author And Bush Critic Announces New Third Party And Run For 2008 Presidency

Karl Schwarz wants to unite country behind The American Patriot Movement, a new third party bent on ridding America of neo-con control.

26 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

New political parties in America are not very popular, but Karl Schwarz, an outspoken Texan and critic of President Bush, wants to "buck the two party system" as he announced his candidacy for President for 2008 this week under the banner of a third party called The American Patriot Movement.

A successful business entrepreneur and author, Schwarz, 54, officially announced his candidacy for President on a public telephone-seminar Thursday night, where hundreds joined him in a question and answer period to map out a strategy to "rid America of the neo-con stranglehold on Washington."

Schwarz, best known for his 800 page book bashing Bush and the neo-cons, titled "One Way Ticket to Crawford Texas," has been rallying support and organizing his third party for more than two years, ever since coming on the national scene with his detailed analysis of how the bush administration is actually a "front government" for the New World Order, bent on destroying American democracy under a one world oppressive government.

"One Way Ticket chronicles the lies and deceit perpetrated on the American people by the Bush-Cheney administration," said Schwarz.

Schwarz said the primary focus of his presidential campaign is simple "yet profound," saying he intends "to expose the deceit, corruption and crimes" of the Bush administration."

"While I intend to clean up the mess in Washington and make those responsible accountable for their crimes, I want to also get our once proud government back on the track of serving people and protecting our inherent rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," said Schwarz.

Schwarz said he intends to use the internet and the growing alternative media in America to get his message across, adding he announced his candidacy well in advance knowing he would be ignored by mainstream papers.

He also added that "the time was right" for a third party even more so then in 1992 with Ross Perot since the fruits of the present administration have devastated democracy with the passage of the Patriot Act, Homeland security, The National ID. Mandatory mental health screening for children, CAFTA and many other measures pushed in to law under the guise of the fear of terrorism.

Concerning terrorism, Schwarz has openly accused the Bush administration of being part and parcel of 9/11, saying it definitely was an inside government job. Since coming forward as a strong Bush critic,

Schwarz has been in the forefront of the 9/11 truth movement, pointing out numerous inconsistencies and overt cover-up by the administration to keep the truth from the American people.

Besides 9/11, Schwarz said the three major areas that need to be thoroughly investigated regarding the Bush administration's present policies, include:

- The administration ties with Afghanistan, the Taliban and the Bidas Corp. Schwarz claims a high ranking Bidas executive is one of his main sources, implicating the Bush administration with corruption involving the Taliban and the Afghan invasion, involving numerous breaches of contract due to military invasions.
- Information implicating 9/11 Commission members with direct and indirect financial benefits due to the Bush policies in the Middle East.
- The Bush administration's creation of financial, social and military chaos in order to undermine the Bill of Rights and the U.S. Constitution.

"Whistleblowers Sibel Edmonds, Karen Kwiatkowski and others that I cannot disclose without jeopardizing their safety, including many members of the Armed Services have acted as my main sources," said Schwarz. "I've also had my own investigators working on issues regarding corporate fraud and that, in turn, uncovered the 9/11 related fraud on the part of the Bush administration."

Asked how he would describe himself, since many critics may consider him a disgruntled Republican with an axe to grind, he said:

"I am conservative, fiscally responsible, an ecumenical Christian and an American Patriot that clearly understands fascism and clearly sees this is exactly what is going on within the Bush administration.

"To answer my critics, they can say whatever. However, those that read my book will clearly see that the main problem now facing America has been caused and amplified by the last three Presidential administrations, Bush I, Clinton and Bush II."

For years, the successful business entrepreneur and conservative republican, once asked by the RNC to run against President Clinton for Arkansas governor, has been using his inside political and business clout to expose corruption among the neo-cons in the Bush administration.

He strayed away from the Bush agenda two years after being one of the lead orchestrators in the Republican Party takeover of Congress during the Clinton administration.

"I designed the strategy that took the House and Senate from Clinton," recalls Schwarz, also a strong supporter and strategist for President George H. Bush. "I designed that takeover two years before I realized the Republican "Contract with America" was actually a "Contract on America."

After his political reawakening, he began blasting the neo conservatives where it hurt most - in their pocketbooks - coming forward with shocking evidence regarding shady oil deals and government involvement with the Taliban and Pakistan.

In his book and his ongoing seven-part series of articles entitled "Pop Goes the Bush Mythology Bubble," he provides inside information about countless financial scams, essentially revealing the Bush motive behind the Middle East invasion was more about oil profits than the war on terrorism.

White House Aides Claiming Bush Has "Flipped-Out" Over Anti-War Protestors
D.C. News Service reporting Bush has been using obscenities when Cindy Sheehan's name is mentioned. Doug Thompson of Capitol Hill Blue News Service claims staffers telling him they are concerned about Bush's tirades and short temper regarding anyone disagreeing with his policies.

25 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

White House aides are leaking reports that President Bush has finally "flipped his lid" over anti-war protestor Cindy Sheehan, screaming obscenities and repeatedly "flipping the bird" at the mention of Sheehan's name or others disagreeing with his policies.

Washington insider Doug Thompson of Capitol Hill Blue news service said aides close to the President are becoming increasingly concerned about his "short temper and tirades," directed especially at anyone who questions his war policy and his honesty.

Concerning Cindy Sheehan, the mother who lost her son in Iraq and has camped out near his Crawford TX ranch for two weeks, Thompson reported that Bush told members of his staff:

"I am not meeting again with that goddamned bitch," Bush supposedly screamed to staffers. "She can go to hell as far as I am concerned."

The White House today denied the President ever used vulgar language, directed at Sheehan or any other person or group opposing his policies.

"The President remains level-headed and calm," a White House spokesman said.

However, Thompson reported sources told him the President is becoming increasingly agitated, flipping-off staffers and reporters similar to his behavior widely reported during his days as Texas governor.

While Bush travels the country trying to garner support for the war, the grieving mother, who has become the central figure in a growing war protest movement, returned to Crawford Wednesday after leaving the protest site to be by her mother who recently suffered a stroke.

Although Bush has refused to meet with Sheehan during his five week ranch vacation, Sheehan said he really means the noble cause for the war is "to line the pockets of his rich friends" profiting from an illegal war started without proper justification.

Since arriving in Crawford, Sheehan has been the lightning rod for anti-war protestors across the nation, drawing support from numerous peace groups and others disenchanted with the mounting GI death toll now at more than 1,850.

For the final weekend of the war protest, numbers are expected to swell into the tens of thousands as protestors on both sides of the war issue converge on the small Texas town, hoping to get their voices heard.

Regarding Bush's angry behavior, if true, Washington psychiatrist, Dr. Justin Frank, in his recent book titled "Bush on the Couch: Inside the Mind of the President" said the President's behavior is typical of a recovering alcoholic.

Dr. Frank said it is common for alcoholics to have set-backs, reverting to bullish behavior and emotional outbursts, especially when their character and integrity is put on the line. He also speculates in his book that Bush "may be drinking again" since he continually boasts about giving up alcohol without the help of Alcoholics Anonymous, a sign that the President may still be in the denial stage and susceptible to returning to the bottle.

And according to Thompson, Bush's behavior has been extremely erratic recently, flying-off the handle regarding recent polls showing declining support of the war as well as flipping the bird to reporters at a recent CAFTRA bill-signing ceremony.

Thompson also reports that Presidential aides told him that Bush continually refers to war protestors as "m.....fu.....traitors" and became extremely upset at reports of VFW members wearing "bullshit protectors" over their ears at a recent speech, saying:

"Tell those VFW assholes that I'll never speak to them again if they can't keep their members under control."

Arctic Note:

Although Thompson's sources wouldn't go on the record for obvious reasons, Bush's brash and vulgar behavior in the past, documented by photos of him "flipping the bird," merits giving Thompson the benefit of the doubt regarding the veracity of the story.

Cindy Sheehan Due Back In Crawford Today For Final Days Of Anti-War Protest

Thousands converging at Bush ranch, while President vacations, to protest Iraq War; Pro war groups also organizing to have voices heard as Sheehan gathers support from numerous peace groups.

24 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

President Bush's anti-war nemesis Cindy Sheehan is expected back in Crawford, TX, later today in what looks to be a real live "Texas showdown" as both pro and anti-war groups gather on the final weekend of the vigil protest started more than two weeks ago.

Sheehan, the mother who lost her son in Iraq and caught the nation's attention with her protest near the Bush ranch, left the Crawford camp site last week after her mother suffered a stroke in California.

Sheehan returns today in time for the final "weekend showdown" with Bush and pro-war followers, also gathering in Crawford.

"I have said all along that I will stay camped out in Crawford until Bush meets with me personally or until the end of August," said Sheehan, who has demanded that Bush meet with her personally to explain public remarks he recently made that the "fallen soldiers died for a noble cause."

Although Bush has refused to meet with Sheehan during his five week ranch vacation, Sheehan said he really means the noble cause for the war is "to line the pockets of his rich friends" profiting from an illegal war started without proper justification.

Since arriving in Crawford, Sheehan has been the lightning rod for anti-war protestors across the nation, drawing support from numerous peace groups and others disenchanted with the mounting GI death toll now at more than 1,850.

For the final weekend of the war protest, numbers are expected to swell into the tens of thousands as protestors on both sides of the war issue converge on the small Texas town, hoping to get their voices heard.

"We have extended an olive branch out to those pro war people already here in Crawford," said Hadi Jawad, spokesman for the Crawford Peace House, a local group assisting protestors with the necessities during their stay. "We are hopeful there will be no violence and that the two sides coming together this weekend can provide meaningful discussions on the important war issues.

Jawad added that numbers for the final weekend of the protest are expected to be in the thousands this weekend, as people from both camps are already beginning to arrive. Many peace groups, including Code Pink, Gold Star Families for Peace (founded by Sheehan), Veterans for Peace and After Downing Street are expected to arrive in large numbers to offset the thousands arriving in support of the war.

"We are going to try and accommodate everyone and hopefully something productive will take place," added Jawad.

During Sheehan's absence, folk singer Joan Baez spend one night in Crawford, supporting the anti-war movement and providing her brand of anti-establishment music for protestors holding down the vigil protest site, named "Camp Casey" in honor of Sheehan's 24-year-old son who was killed in Iraq in 2004.

Sheehan claims Bush has told countless lies to the American people about the war originally based on lies and distortions about Iraq's WMD threat.

To gain further support and lift public awareness, Sheehan organized nationwide candlelight vigils, started last Wednesday, and running nightly. Sheehan's idea was just picking up steam when her mother fell ill, as reports surfaced that hundreds of local groups began holding nightly prayer vigils to bring an end to the Iraqi occupation.

"I encourage people to keep organizing the local nightly prayer vigils," said Jawad.

Throughout the protest, Bush has refused to meet with Sheehan, only referring to her by name once in a recent press conference on his ranch last Thursday while he took time from his month-long vacation to address reporters.

Last week in the press conference, Bush said: "Listen, now, I sympathize with Mrs. Sheehan but I strongly disagree with her that we need to pull the troops out right now. She feels strongly about her position, and she has every right in the world to say what she believes. This is America."

Former Air Force Capt. Turned Activist Says Pentagon's Actions Towards Depleted Uranium Use 'Beyond Treason'

Popular activist-broadcaster, Joyce Riley, hits government 'right between the eyes' with powerful new documentary exposing cover-up of depleted uranium illnesses, leaving Gulf War troops sick and dying.

24 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

There was a time in former Air Force Capt. Joyce Riley's life when everything was coming up roses. There was a time when the country girl from Kansas probably felt like Dorothy in The Wizard of Oz, traveling down the Yellow Brick Road.

And like an old song says, she had the "world on a string sitting on a rainbow" during the late 1980s, as Capt. Riley fit perfectly into the military scheme of things like a poster-child officer with her boots and epaulets shined to the tee every day.

Back in the good old days, Capt. Riley thought she had it all figured out. She thought her life, the military and the world had a nice, neat little yellow ribbon tied around it with smiles, happiness and a taste of the good ole' Irish whiskey to go around for everybody.

It was a simple, structured, follow orders kind of world Capt. Riley created for herself. It was the kind of world where everything was taken at face value without questioning much else but what was for dinner or who was going to take the dog out for a walk.

Simply put, Capt. Riley was the type of person people like Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and others in the Pentagon enjoy having around. She was the type that put duty, honor and country first, always trusting and never thinking her superiors could stray from the straight and narrow.

And back in the good old days, Capt. Riley probably would have jumped head first into the Grand Canyon if given an order. She probably would have jumped, thinking all the way down better to die than to disobey an order.

But something strange happened to her on that long fall down into the great abyss. Something happened while floating in thin air over the Grand Canyon that lifted her up, gave her wings and gave her the courage to fly away from military life and, more importantly, fly away from the "yes sir, no sir" in your face type military thinking.

It's the great Hindu thinkers who say that to truly understand life one must travel full circle, disbelieving what once was believed and, in essence, becoming one's polar opposite. And, without knowing it or putting any religious labels on her life's journey, that's exactly what happened to Captain Riley.

Although her transformation from a military order taker and combat nurse to "military pain in the ass" and activist didn't happen over night, it happened perhaps like a Kansas tornado strikes. It happened like a sudden burst of wind quickly clearing the excess debris from her soul, leaving in its aftermath a belief system torn to pieces but, at the same time, leaving a body and soul left to be rebuilt brick by brick, one truthful step at a time.

And like most life transformations involving more than one significant event, Capt. Riley's is no different since her physical problems caused by her stint in the military are every bit as important as the problems with her changing belief system. In fact, both are so intertwined that her physical illness after taking 10 unknown vaccines at one time in 1991, mandated by the military prior to Gulf War I, actually led to her present-day role as anti-government broadcaster, producer of documentaries and activist fighting to save military lives affected by illness and diseases from both Gulf Wars that are not even being recognized by the Pentagon.

"At one time in my life the military was the most noble cause I could ever think of. I remember even writing in my journal back in 1991 how I had 10 vaccine shots in one day and how I would have taken 100 in order to serve my country." said Riley who now has replaced the captain in her name with truth-seeker, as she talked openly from her home in the Midwest about her "about face" from toeing the military line.

"George H. Bush was my hero back then and I remember getting into my flight suit at Kelly Air Force Base, feeling extremely proud before being deployed into Gulf War I while Bush was on TV saying: 'This is the beginning of the New World Order.'

"Looking back, it was so ironic. I was so enamored with Bush when he actually sold destructive chemicals and weapons to Iraq in 1985 to 1989. Without me knowing, he was responsible for poisoning us over there while, at the same time, I was eating right out of his hand."

Although Riley was never deployed to the Middle East, she remained stateside working as a surgical nurse on one of the military's C-130 flying hospitals until becoming too ill to continue in December 1991.

"I had to quite flying because I was too sick and went into the reserves," recalls Riley, saying she was diagnosed with a debilitating type disease with MS symptoms, causing extreme pain due to excessive nerve damage. "When I received essentially no help from the military during the next few years, I began searching out alternative cures and medicines since I needed to continue working as a nurse to support myself."

And it wasn't until 1995 that Riley's life drastically changed, becoming her polar opposite on the other side of the military fence, after being shunned by the Department of Defense (DOD) and the Veteran's Administration (VA), both organizations refusing to recognize that her illness was even remotely caused by the vaccines taken in 1991.

"I was furious after I called the DOD and the VA and they wouldn't lift a finger," said Riley, adding that it was difficult to get answers because the military never labeled or even told troops what vaccines were being administered. "And I found out to my surprise that if you were in the Reserves or the National Guard, you couldn't even use the VA hospitals. That was a huge shock. I felt deceived."

With virtually nobody addressing the vaccine problem in the military, Riley set out to find a reason and a causal relationship between her illness and the vaccines. By a quirk of fate and a stroke of Irish luck, she met Dr. Garth Nicholson affiliated with a Houston cancer treatment center, who had been researching Riley's vaccine-related problems.

"Since a large number of Gulf War I vets were returning with the same symptoms I had, he asked if I would submit to a test he developed," said Riley. "Sure enough, I tested positive like more than 50 percent of returning Gulf War troops, which showed proof positive the vaccines were most likely causing the illness since I never went to the Middle East."

Armed with medical evidence, Riley decided to take her campaign to the public air waves in Houston, buying air time on a popular Houston AM station in an attempt to reach out and locate other Gulf War veterans with the same symptoms.

As finances permitted, Riley continued purchasing Saturday air-time, calling her show 'Nurse Talk Radio,' as she tried to aggressively expose Gulf War I illnesses while also turning against the military she once loved and revered by exposing its failure to care for the ailing troops.

But like a gust of wind from a Kansas tornado, she said after researching and reading a declassified Senate Report numbered 103.97 from the Veterans affairs Committee, it was the straw that broke the camel's back, forcing her to mount an even more aggressive public attack against the military, an attack that is still going on today.

"It changed my life," said Riley, referring to the Senate report. "I had to go public and I have never stopped since the report was beyond belief and appalling. It said, now get this, that during the past 50 years, hundreds of thousands of military personnel have been medically and scientifically experimented upon without their fundamental knowledge or consent. Can you believe that! It's simply disgusting and unacceptable.

"And when I finally realized the higher-ups in the military could care less if the troops lived or died, my loyalty to the military and all it stood for was completely over. I was now on a campaign and mission to get at the truth and help as many people end their suffering caused by a lack of caring, concern and cooperation by the Pentagon. I realized there was a cover-up and I was the only person in 1996 to come forward."

Riley not only came forward on Houston radio, compiling documentation from many others suffering from the same vaccine-related illness, but she also testified in 1996 before the Presidential Advisory Commission on Gulf War Illnesses.

Although amounting to mostly political rhetoric, Riley used the public notoriety to form a private grass roots group called the American Gulf War Veterans Association, a group seeking to unite afflicted veterans in order to get redress both medically and financially from the government.

Slowly becoming a driving force behind the Gulf War medical care truth movement, Riley began appearing on numerous radio and television stations as she tried to drive her message home. And it was in the media frenzy of 1996 that another quirk of fate led to another life change, this time a personal change leading her to the altar as she married Dave Von Kleist, an enterprising Connecticut musician, disk jockey and anti-establishment radio talk show host.

"I remember Dave called and wanted me on his show, but he was pretty tough," recalls Riley, as the pair now how have joined interests and skills, combining since 2001 on a daily morning talk radio show on Genesis Radio called "The Power Hour."

"So, Dave tells me if what I said was true, to come to Connecticut and prove it. I remember arriving with my documentation and besides appearing on the radio show, being asked to speak before a group of 300 people, including VA people and Congressmen. My information was well-received, but you have to remember back then nobody really knew anything about Gulf War illnesses so it was quite a shock.

And the union between Riley and Von Kleist then moved from the altar to producing their first anti-military video called "Gulf War Illness: Fact or Fiction," a highly successful documentary still in distribution today and originally sent free to all military personnel geared at getting needed medical help for afflicted veterans.

Riley recalls a cool reception and butting heads with Pentagon officials immediately after the controversial video came out, as she received an arm twisting phone call from Capt. Chalker Brown of the Pentagon.

"He called and asked me to stop sending the video to the military bases, saying that I was really one of them," said Riley. "I remember telling him if being one of you means allowing troops to die, then I no longer wanted to be a part of the military.

"I also later was banned from speaking at local American Legion Halls by the National American Legion Commander. Back then we used to travel around in our RV, trying to get the message out and particularly trying to help the many vets who were threatening to commit suicide as a result of being ignored by the military."

As Riley continued to defy Pentagon brass and especially trying to help suicidal veterans, she said not long after the intimidating telephone conversation from Capt. Chalker, she noticed when buying a used RV her credit report and rating was illegally tampered with and her identity stolen.

"I found out my identity had been stolen, $100,000 was charged against my name, 14 credit cards had been maxed-out using my name and even a federal bankruptcy had been charged against me," recalls Riley, saying she spent one year of her life, as well as spending thousands of dollars in legal expenses trying to clear her name, but never ever being able to absolutely prove the government was behind the illegal activity.

"I of course have my suspicions, but I have never been able to prove the Pentagon was behind it. When I went to the local federal courthouse where the bankruptcy was filed, they even went to the trouble of constructing a large file, all of it bogus but verifying the bankruptcy. My credit report also had five aliases attached so, as you can see, it was the work of somebody wanting to completely destroy my identity, good name and character."

Furious over possible government retaliation and stonewalling, Riley became even more determined to make the military accountable as her talk radio show, structured to empower people with knowledge, continued to bring numerous people out of the woodwork with Gulf War related illnesses.

With her activism spilling over to the recent Iraqi invasion, she recently has taken up the cause of stopping the illegal use of depleted uranium in the battle field and pointing out its debilitating effects on troops and civilians exposed to high levels of radiation.

Again upset by the Pentagon's failure to recognize the problem or treat the afflicted troops exposed to radiation, Riley set out to make another video, this time alerting Americans about what amounts to a nuclear war going on Iraq since the invasion as well as the Pentagon's failure to clean-up the nuclear waste or admit responsibility in taking care of the troops and civilians poisoned by radiation.

"I met with William Lewis and I said If I had one thing to do in my life, it would be this video project," said Riley about what turned out to be the video released last month called "Beyond Treason," a documentary that thoroughly analyzes the depleted uranium problem and the government's lack of concern about hundreds of thousands of sick and dying troops and civilians.

"I thought to myself if I had one shot to tell the world something, this depleted uranium story was it. We wanted to let the world know what was really going on and how the Pentagon really doesn't care if the troops live or die.

"These kids are coming back from Iraq sick and dying and the military won't accept responsibility. I wanted everybody to know since the Pentagon has not acknowledged the illness, the VA hospitals cannot treat any of the soldiers for what amounts to something they say doesn't exist.

"I remember telling Dave that after the new video was released that the suicide calls would start coming in to the show just like after the first video. Sure enough they did and it just breaks my heart as I recently talked to a 23-year-old girl who returned from Iraq who is sick with symptoms of radiation. She also said that out of the 105 who returned in her unit, 93 have reported similar radiation symptoms.

Riley said another major reason behind the video is to alert every family who may have children considering entering the military, saying she wanted them to make an informed decision before sending them.

Riley again is giving away free copies of the video to all vets and enlisted men, having sent out 10,000 so far, adding she intends to distribute millions as she tries to reach every school and church in the country that will listen.

"The invasion of Iraq amounts to nothing less than a nuclear war and hundreds of thousands of people are either going to get sick or die while the government and the Pentagon sits idly by doing nothing," said Riley.

Riley and Lewis, who wrote and produced the video, were assisted by numerous military and scientific experts, who provided detailed research and proof behind the enormity of the depleted uranium problem.

People like radiation experts Lauren Moret, Marion Fulk and Maj. Doug Rokke, along with Dennis Kyne, Bob Jones and Mark Zeller, have all provided documentation for the explosive video, which directly points the finger at the Pentagon's nuclear killing fields.

"It has been determined that the equivalent of more than 400,000 Nagasaki bombs has been released in the Middle East since 1991," said Moret, citing a report and subsequent speech at a 2000 depleted uranium conference given by Professor Yagasaki, a physicist and well-respected nuclear radiation expert.

And in the 89 minute video, exploring a massive government cover up, Riley and Lewis point out the unexplained illnesses in civilians and military personal may be the cause of depleted uranium or perhaps a combination of overlapping causes, including chemical and biological exposure and the use of experimental vaccines.

The writers of Beyond Treason, added:

"The ailing Gulf War heroes from all 27 coalition countries slowly die from of "unknown causes," they wait for answers from their respective governments, but no satisfying or even credible answers have come forth from the military establishment. Records that span over a decade point to negligence and even culpability on the part of the U.S. Department of Defense and their 'disposable army' mentality.

"The VA has determined that 250,000 troops are now permanently disabled, 15,000 troops are dead and over 425,000 are ill and slowly dying from what the Department of Defense still calls a mystery disease. How many more will have to die before action is taken?"

Progressive Democrats Call For Quick Exit Strategy In Iraq

Republicans have been blocking efforts to force the Bush administration to commit to a war exit strategy while GI death toll mounts to more than 70 this month and more than 1,870 since the beginning of the Iraqi occupation. In other news, crazy evangelist Pat Robertson publicly calls for the assassination of President Hugo Chavez of Venezuela.

23 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A group calling itself Progressive Democrats of America (PDA), founded by California activist and politician Ton Hayden, has collected more than 13,000 signatures seeking to present a petition to Congress, demanding an exit strategy be immediately fashioned to end the Iraqi occupation.

Hayden, long known for his anti-war position dating back to Vietnam and his marriage to activist Jane Fonda, said the petition will be formally presented to Congress on Sept. 15.

"As the death toll in Iraq escalates and support for the Iraq war plummets, a national consensus has taken root that current U.S. strategies there have failed and cannot bring about peace and stability in that country" wrote Hayden in the anti-war petition.

"While President Bush and his chief advisors seem in deep denial, it is overwhelmingly apparent to the rest of the nation that we are faced with only one question: How to exit Iraq."

The petition then goes on to list five essential principles that must be adhered to along with a complete and thorough exit strategy to be given by Congress and the Bush administration to end the needless occupation.

According to the PDA, the principles for ending the Vietnam-like quagmire in Iraq, include:

- The US government must declare it has no interest in permanent military bases or controlling Iraqi oil or other resources.
- The US government must set goals for ending the occupation and bringing all our troops home, in months, not years, beginning with an initial withdrawal of troops by the end of this year.
- The US government must request that the United Nations monitor the process of military disengagement and de-escalation, and organize a peaceful reconstruction effort.
- The US government should appoint a peace envoy independent of the occupation authorities to underscore its commitment to an entirely different mission-that of a peace process ending the occupation and returning our soldiers home.
- The peace envoy should encourage and cooperate in talks with Iraqi groups opposed to the occupation, including insurgents, to explore a political settlement. The settlement must include representation of opposition forces and parties, and power-sharing and the protection of women's rights as core principles of governance and economic and energy development.

Previously, in May 2005, Rep. Lynn Woolsey introduced an amendment on the House floor, calling for President Bush to develop a plan for withdrawing from Iraq which was soundly defeated with only 123 Democrats and five Republicans voting in favor of a White House exit plan.

Behind the scenes, for months Rep. Woolsey has requested bipartisan hearings for an exit strategy, but has been consistently blocked by republican committee heads friendly to the neo-con movement inside the Bush administration.

And while politicians ignore leaving the Iraq, growing resistance to the war is mounting among millions of Americans frustrated with President Bush's stubbornness a to even address his alleged illegal motives behind the Iraqi invasion by doctoring WMD intelligence reports to justify the war.

Further, the casualties are mounting this month in Iraq with more than 70 troops killed, bringing the total to more than 1,870 since the beginning of the occupation.

After hearing of the PDA petition for a speedy exit strategy, Rep. Woolsey, said:

"Everything about this war has been a ruinous debacle: the way we got into it, the way we've conducted it, the refusal of a plan for disengagement, the high price - in dollars and lives - we've paid for it. It must end as soon as possible. There is only one solution: bring the troops home."

Other groups backing PDA and Rep. Woolsey's efforts include After Downing Street, National Organization for Women (NOW), Democrats.com, Women's Action for New Directions and Peace Majority.

OTHER NEWS:

Robertson Says Kill President Chavez

Right wing evangelist Pat Robertson today called for the assassination of President Hugo Chavez of Venezuela, calling him a menace to the free world after the democratically-elected leader today publicly announced he would sell oil to America for a reduced rate in order to help impoverished Americans who could no longer afford high gas prices.

Chavez dismissed Robertson's statements as ridiculous, but did mention again before a scheduled meeting in Cuba with Fidel Castro today that American hit squads have been actively trying to kill him ever since he has refused to accept lopsided terms from the Bush administration regarding Venezuelan crude.

Venezuela is a major player in the world-wide oil markets, amounting to the fourth largest U.S. exporter, which is why the Bush administration is paying such close attention to the Chavez who has repeatedly defied Bush, calling him a Hitler-style dictator who is out to have him assassinated.

In the past, Chavez has called attention to a 2002 failed coup which he said was orchestrated by American covert operatives meddling in his country's affairs. He also has recently ended cooperation with the U.S. Drug Enforcement AGENCY (DEA), saying the agency is used to gather intelligence information against Venezuelan interests.

In response to Robertson's statement, the State Department was quick to denounce it as being contrary to American foreign policy. Also former CIA Director John McClaughlin said it's never been the policy of America to assassinate foreign leaders, although it has long been common knowledge, brought out in the open by numerous federal whistle blowers, that U.S. assassination hit squads are commonplace.

Also, if assassinating of foreign leaders is not included in American foreign policy, McClaughlin is forgetting about an old CIA "assassination manual" recently made public, which will be reprinted in part in the Arctic Beacon later this week, explicitly providing details for the training of future CIA agents in the art of assassinating leaders who oppose American interests.

Regarding the Robertson death threat, the Venezuelan Ambassador, Bernardo Alvarez, immediately demanded the Bush administration immediately denounce in the strongest possible terms what amounts to a "desire to commit a terrorist act."

Bribery, Loan Sharking And Murder True American Foreign Policy, Says Economic Hit Man

In one-on-one interview, best-selling author, John Perkins, lays it on the line about corrupt American foreign policy.

22 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Jackals inside the U.S. government's foreign hit squads recently warned at least six of the major democratic leaders of South American countries, in no uncertain terms, either "play ball or be killed.," according to John Perkins, best-selling author, whistle blower and self-proclaimed economic hit man..

Perkins recently shocked America with a startling account about how government-sponsored mafia-like hits and economic bribery are a mainstay in U. S. foreign policy, used as dirty tools in order to "get what it wants when it wants" no matter what the cost.

"Right now our government's heavy-handed pressure, applied by hired jackals, is worse today in Latin America than it was when I worked applying pressure to foreign leaders years ago," said Perkins in a telephone conversation this week from his Florida home while recovering from colon surgery and preparing to go on the road for an American and European speaking tour..

He is presently working on a second book, due to be released next year, a book attempting to offer future solutions about how to the reverse America's destructive empire building tactics, including economic bribery and assassinations.

"We have the resources and we are the last powerful country able to change the destructive course being taken now," added Perkins. "I am optimistic and believe we will reverse the course being taken now, otherwise why would I be writing these books."

His first huge success, "Confessions of an Economic Hit Man," released last year and selling over 200,000 copies, immediately became a New York Times best-seller. His shocking book, a must-read for anyone who wants to know why America is hated around the world, reveals how foreign governments are intimidated and uncooperative leaders assassinated while the U.S. masquerades as a benevolent benefactor.

For more than 15 years, Perkins, the former corporate consultant, acting as a third party intermediary between the U.S. and foreign leaders, lived in a dangerous "political underworld" of deceit, bribery, loan sharking and murder while advancing America's shady foreign policy interests.

Perkins finally went public, detailing how he helped the U.S. "gets what it wants" by using a mafia-style tactics, after being guilt-ridden from taking a half million dollars from the Stoner-Webster Corp. to keep silent and then being haunted by the memory of the 9/11 tragedy. He adds 9/11 is the result of foreign retaliation based on years of U.S. aggression.

His book clearly shows the ugly side of America's empire building, providing a firsthand account why the "jackals" in the CIA and what he calls "the corporatocracy" were responsible for the assassinations of President Omar Torrijos of Panama and President Jaime Roldas of Ecuador.

Perkins said the same sort of mafia-like tactics are taking place today in countries like Argentina, Chili, Brazil, Ecuador, Uruguay and Venezuela, citing the recent coup ousting President Gutierrez of Ecuador as an example after the former leader cut a one-sided deal with President Bush against the interests of his own people.

"One month after he was elected, Gutierrez met with Bush in Washington," said Perkins. "He was originally elected by a mandate of the people based on an anti-American and anti-globalist platform. But after getting in office and being pressured by Washington, he agreed to a deal whereby Ecuador gets about 10 percent of the profits from their oil and natural resources while 90 percent goes to American oil companies and to pay back debt owed to the World Bank."

"When word leaked out in his country what happened, the people of Ecuador were furious. They ousted Gutierrez, replacing him with the Vice President, but it is still up in the air whether anything will really change there. Put yourself in their shoes. The pressure we exert is outrageous and the leaders are essentially offered millions of dollars or a bullet in the head, with the jackals reminding them of how other victims of obvious assassinations, like President Torrijos of Panama and President Roldas of Ecuador, were dealt with in the past.

Perkins said the American people need to be made aware, since the media is ignoring the problem, that a majority of the Latin American countries in recent years are putting democratically elected leaders in office, all running on anti-American platforms. Claiming hatred runs deep among the Latin American people, Perkins said leaders are finally starting to stand-up against American aggression due to growing resistance at home.

Perkins used President Hugo Chavez of Venezuela as a perfect example of how U.S. government-sponsored hit squads are attempting to kill him for not agreeing to one-sided loans which would eventually bankrupt his country while turning over all of Venezuela's infrastructure, like water, gas and power, powerful American owned and operated corporations.

Referencing Perkins' book as evidence of U.S. attempts on his life, Chavez is the most outspoken of all the leaders who is bucking the American system, even publicly saying recently that he wouldn't set foot on U. S. soil until the people of America liberated themselves from Bush's tyrannical rule.

Chavez has also publicly accused Bush of trying to have him killed for not "doing business as usual" which means rich American corporations profit while his countrymen starve. Venezuela has long been a target on the U.S. imperialistic map, since it has large oil reserves and is the fourth largest oil exporter to the United States, making it a prime target for the Bush administration's lopsided and heavy-handed foreign policy approach.

Last week Chavez also suspended all cooperation with the U.S. Drug Enforcement agency, accusing its agents of spying and espionage. Further, Chavez has threatened to discontinue U.S. oil shipments and Washington observers verify Perkins claims that much of Latin America is rallying around Chavez becoming increasingly discontented with Washington's undiplomatic policies toward the region and its distrust with the Bush administration in general.

"The Latin American people are obviously saying don't meddle with us, but the media and the government are keeping the real truth from the American people," said Perkins, citing a conspiracy among large corporate media owners, wealthy international bankers and the government in manipulating public opinion and the news for their own globalist agenda.

Perkins also cites his wildly popular book as another example of media suppression. Although his book has hit the all the best seller lists, he has been relegated to discussing it in the alternative media, saying he has systematically been silenced by the major networks and newspapers, not granting him interviews or bothering to discuss the book.

While CNN recently gave a pro Bush administration author with a relatively obscure book 20 minutes of air time telling the public how Iran posed an imminent nuclear threat, Perkins has never once been asked to appear on CNN.

He also has never been asked to appear or be interviewed on other major networks, forcing him to tell his story on CSPAN, including outlets like Public Broadcasting Radio as well as print and internet magazines like The American Free Press and the Arctic Beacon.

"This is a big story in itself," added Perkins. "Here I have a best-selling book with truthful, important and controversial issues needing to be dealt with, and the corporate-driven media has seen fit to ignore me and keep my story from the American people. If anyone is going to save this democracy, it is not the spineless mainstream media, but people in the alternative press and on the internet who have had the courage in the face of much adversity to expose the truth."

Searching for reasons for telling his story and trying to explain to the American people why he became a whistle blower, he added:

"I wanted and needed to expose what was going on. Most Americans have no idea. I think that what we have is a world empire that's controlled by a few men I call the corporatocracy. These are the heads of the big banks, the corporations and the government. You now they jump across these lines and it is very dangerous, very undemocratic. MacNamara was a good example. He was President of Ford and then became Secretary of Defense and then President of the World Bank. Today we've got Dick Cheney who's basically the same picture. This has been going on for a long time and it not simply a republican issue but it goes across party lines.

"I think our aggressive position of bringing other countries to their knees has created a tremendous economic imbalance where now out of the 100 largest economies in the world, 52 are corporations and 47 of those are American. Here we have 5% of the world's population reaching out like a giant octopus and sucking in 25% or more of the world's resources.

"But it's not really 5% of the world's population or the American people. It's really 1% of our population controlling more than 90 % of the wealth while the rest of us support them through taxes, our purchases, through our silence and through going along with the system."

Saying the imbalance of resource consumption can not be transferred to emerging countries like China and others without having devastating effects, the problem is that the Bush administration is clinging to the old ways.

"With the appointments of Paul Wolfowitz as President of the World Bank and John Bolton in the United Nations, Bush is telling the world that the bank is a not an international entity, but an American one used to advance only our interests," said Perkins about the financial institution which is likely to get worse with its policies of saddling tremendous debt on third world countries in order to insure allegiance to American imperialism.

Concerning the recent public announcements made by Bush about third world debt forgiveness in 18 countries, Perkins said it is a "complete sham" as the real motive is to forgive debt put at the same time make it contingent on large American corporate interests taking over the gas, water, power, education and telephone systems of the countries involved.

Saying the debt forgiveness initiative is just another clear example of American economic blackmail at work, he claims the poor people of the developing countries are the ones that really suffer at the expense of corporate greed.

Concerning this problem as well as the increase of world-wide terrorism, Perkins offered his solution:

"The only way we are going to get security and stop terrorism is to address and stop the problem of 20,000 people every day dying from hunger world wide. We need to address and solve the problem of roughly 30,000 people, mostly children, dying from curable diseases every day.

"There are more than 2 billion impoverished people in the world today. These are staggering numbers that need to be addressed because as long as there is extreme poverty, there will always be hatred, resentment and terrorism."

And it's the heavy-handed games played by the American government, often times bankrupting third world countries causing poverty, starvation and death that Perkins deals with his hard-hitting book.

How the "game is played" provides the main thrust of Perkins' book and his role as the government's "economic hit man" provides the credibility behind the shocking details. Page by page, every step of the way, he portrays America as a greedy villain, never taking "no" for an answer when it comes to raping a country of its wealth and natural resources.

"In Indonesia, Panama, South America, Saudi Arabia, Iraq and Iran, the U.S. has used the same system of economic intimidation, assassination and then ultimately war as a last resort to get what it wants," said Perkins.

Perkins remembers first recruited by the Boston consulting firm of Chas T. Main in 1971 after a two year stint in the Peace Corp. The firm worked closely with the National Security Agency and CIA, recruiting Perkins for his knowledge of languages while working in Ecuador.

After being trained and given his first assignment in Indonesia, Perkins describes his 10 year tenure with the consulting firm as "technically legal, but morally and ethically bankrupt."

Essentially, no matter where he traveled or what leader he was hired to manipulate, the modus operandi was the same. Perkins would meet with a leader of a targeted country, encouraging him to accept a large loan for an inflated project that both the CIA and the leader knew the country could not afford.

When the loan was accepted, usually through U.S. connections at The World Bank, the money would be transferred to a bank in the U.S. and then funneled back to U.S. companies through massive construction and engineering projects.

Perkins's job was to provide inflated loan estimates, saddling the underdeveloped country with a massive debt, impossible to repay and leaving the country at the mercy of the U.S. to dictate repayment terms. These terms often times included the right to construct a strategically important military base, a favored U. N. vote in support of U.S. policy or cheap access and usage to a country's natural resources.

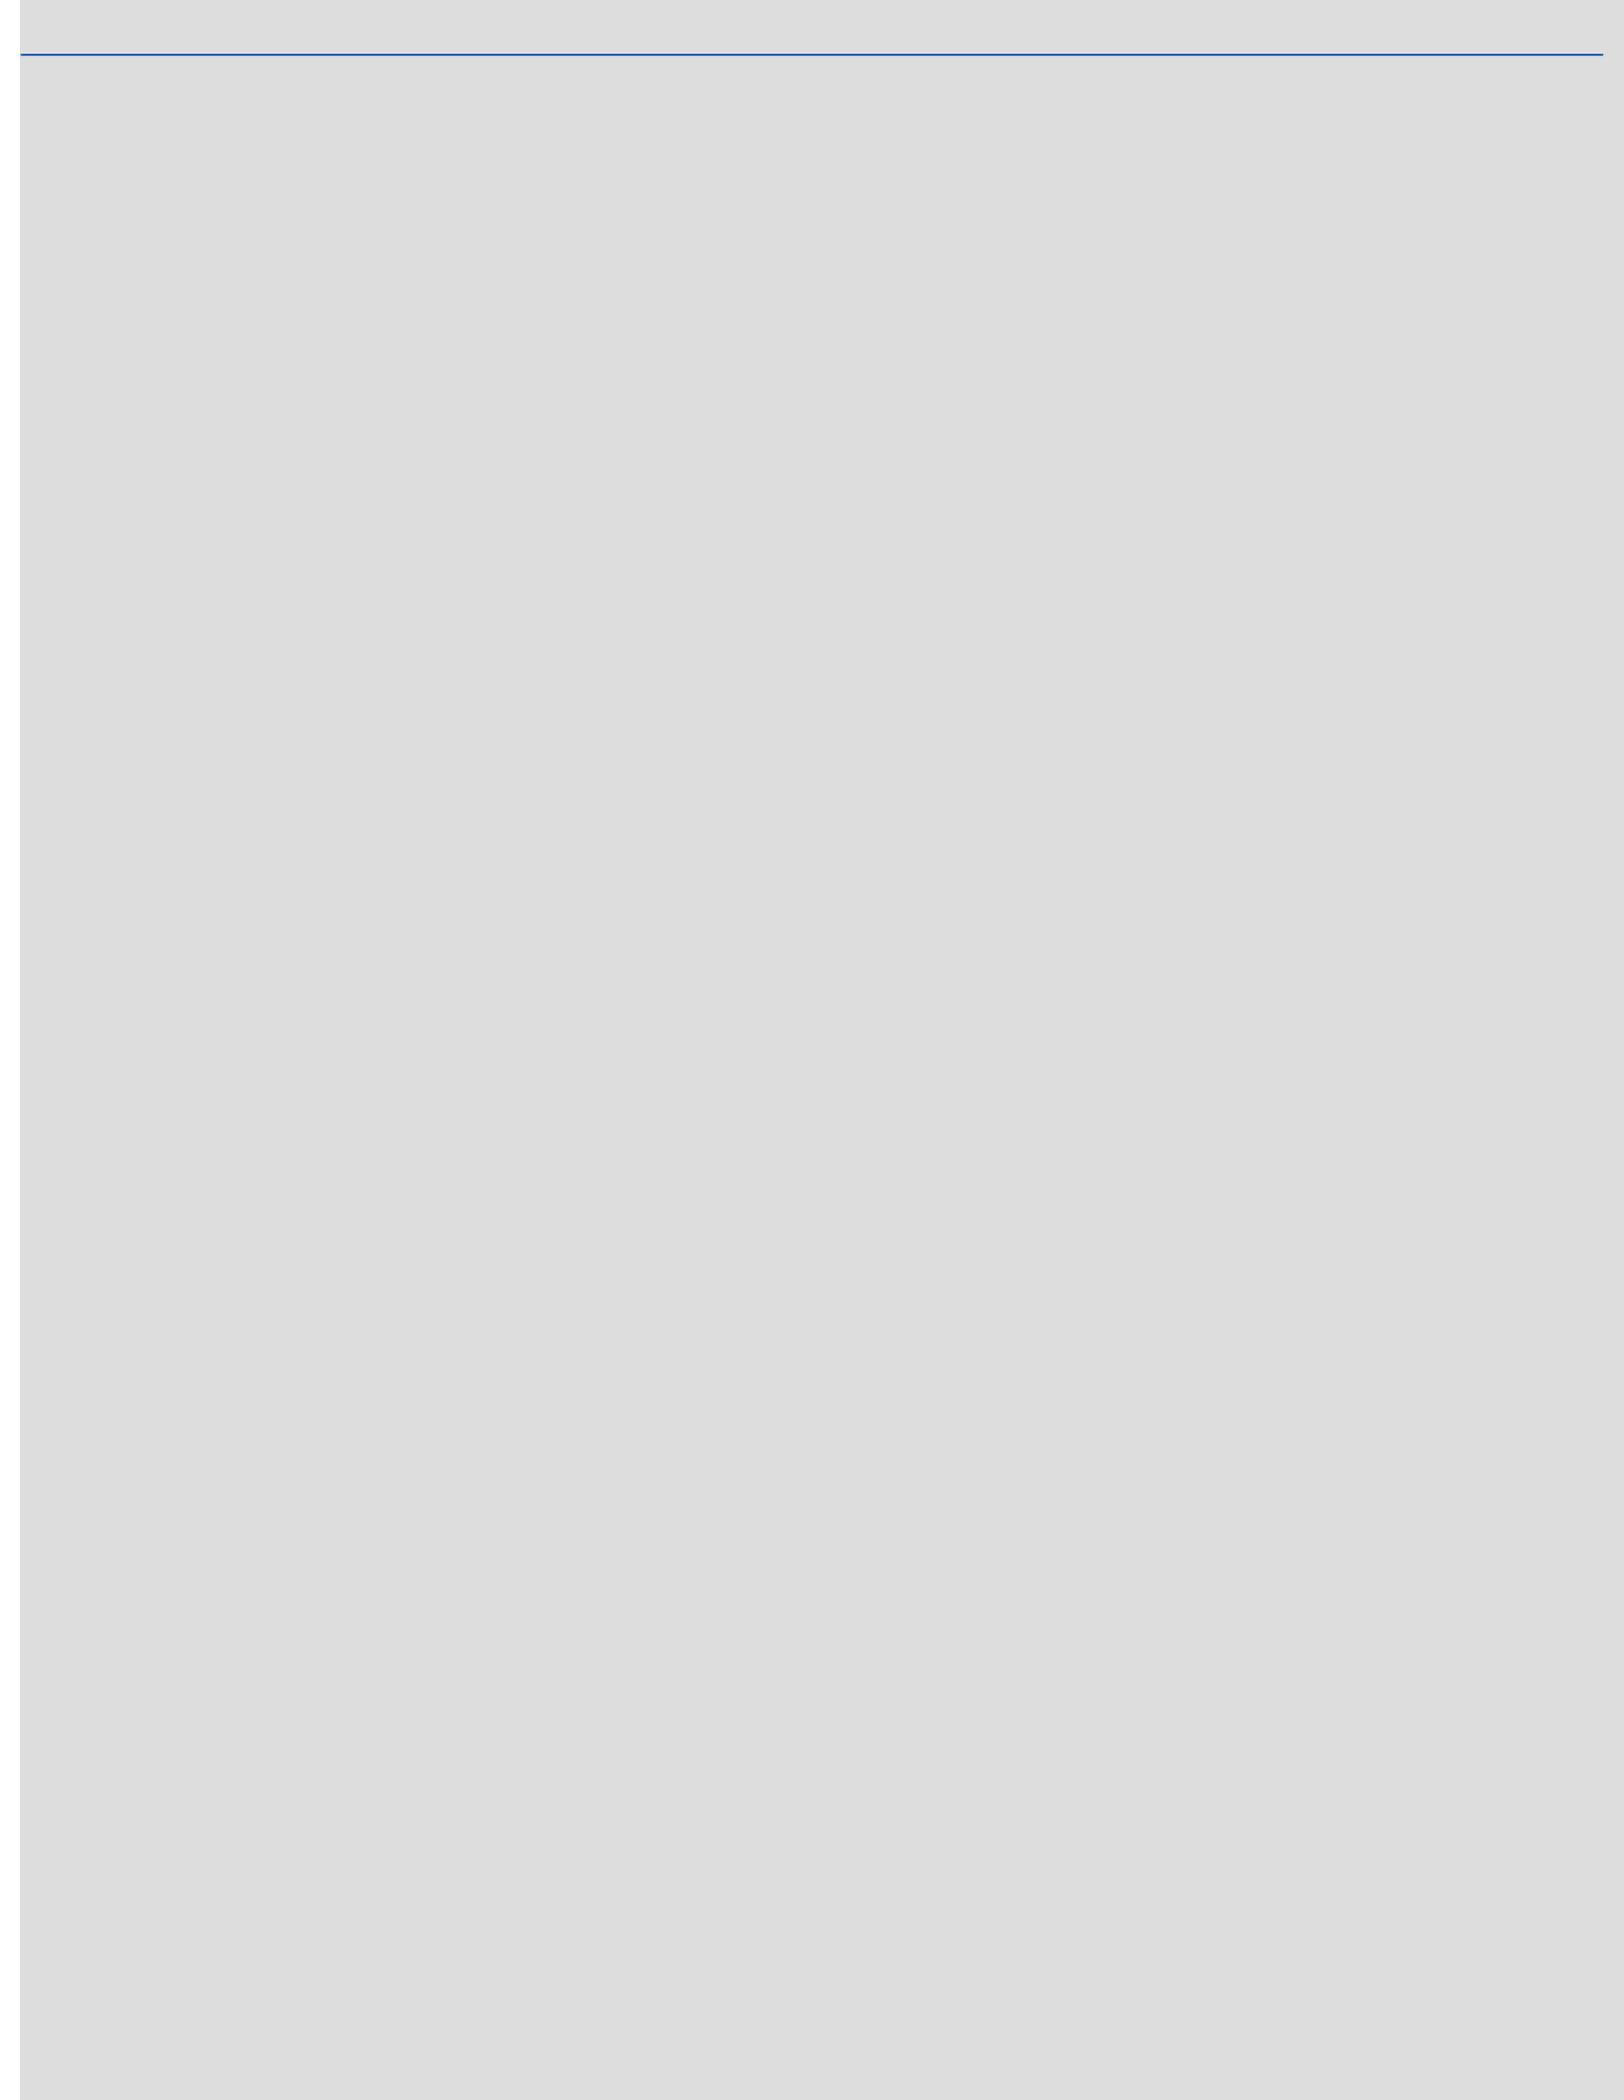

"Once the third world country was economically indebted to the U.S., the CIA would then have its hooks into manipulating the course and direction of the country's political agenda," said Perkins.

Perkins added that if this type of loan was arranged between private parties, it would be called extortion, but in the international arena it's simply dismissed as economic development.

North Carolina Supreme Court Candidate Fires Back At Neo-Con Bill O'Reilly
Former Republican loyalist, Rachel Lea Hunter, who recently referred to the Bush administration as a Nazi regime, claims her highly popular web site was recently terrorized and destroyed by neo-con techno criminals.

22 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Rachel Lea Hunter, a top North Carolina state Supreme Court candidate, is back in the news this week, firing back at conservative talk show host Bill O'Reilly for smearing her name on national television and talking about how neo-con "techno-criminals" recently destroyed her popular web site.

The fiery, former Republican Party member, who has compared the Bush administration to the Nazi regime, claims her web site was "terrorized and torn down" last week by neo-cons fed up with the outspoken Republican defector, who has taken on the administration head-on with a highly critical message that Bush and his cronies must be removed to have any chance of saving the republic

After being down for almost a week, Hunter's web site has been fully restored at www.rachelforjustice.com where the state Supreme Court candidate also openly answers questions from visitors, many disenchanted with the oppressive neo-con agenda.

Concerning O'Reilly's recent smear campaign, Hunter said he wrongly linked her to "Michael Moore type" liberals, saying she takes a more down to earth and balanced approach for her anti-war and anti-Bush views.

"I think the war is wrong, but that doesn't mean I am linked to Michael Moore," said Hunter. "I was a loyal Republican for years. I am not a communist or socialist like he (O'Reilly) suggests."

Although Hunter wants to separate herself from the "distant left," she did say she strongly supports Cindy Sheehan's anti war protest, taking place in Crawford TX .

Sheehan's protest vigil staged for the last two weeks near the President's Texas ranch, has captured the nation while, at the same time, gathering growing momentum for millions of Americans against the illegal Iraqi invasion and lingering war which has taken the lives of more than 1,850 troops.

"And FOX News and O'Reilly, who sexually harassed his own co-workers, or any other talk show host can attempt to smear me, as they do Ms. Sheehan, as being part of these (far left) groups. But it is not true of me and it is not true of Ms. Sheehan," said Hunter.

"Fortunately, the neo-cons' plan is unraveling. Support for Ms. Sheehan is growing. And there is overwhelming support among the people that this war was based on untruths and that it is time to end it. The war is going so badly for the neo-cons that they may not do well in the elections next year.

"If there is any proof of this, one can see it in a recent election in a Republican stronghold in Ohio. Yes, the incumbent may have won, but the race between her and her Democratic opponent, who was himself in Iraq as a soldier and campaigned against the war, was a lot closer than anyone thought it would be."

Also expressing displeasure about the price of gasoline and the recent swindling of money by Halliburton in Iraq, she added:

"We were told that the war would provide oil. And yet gas prices are on the rise. I have not been to the gas station today, but the price is already over $2.15 per gallon here and over $3.00 per gallon in California. We are told that it is because of the refineries and hurricanes in the Gulf of Mexico. Huh? Like we never had hurricanes before? Meanwhile, the oil companies are reporting record profits.

"And there were millions that have gone unaccounted for in Iraq. The word is actually embezzled. Someone took the money. And you and I, the American taxpayer, will be left with paying the bills."

Hunter, mounting a strong campaign for the state's high court, joins a growing list of former party loyalists, including high-ranking officials and military personnel who are publicly speaking out against Bush and his evangelical neo con movement that is putting a stranglehold on government and the free-flow of information in the press.

"What I said was I find disturbing is that we are criticized for nothing more than the exercise of our Constitutional rights," said Hunter recently about her Nazi comparisons to the Bush administration. "Those who disagree with any aspect of the administration are branded as traitors and must be silenced. I thought the previous administration was bad because of the amorality. This is far worse.

"There is a famous poem about the Nazis of Germany - first they came for one group, then another, but the writer did not speak up. And then they came for him and there was no one left to speak up. The administration is acting like the Nazis. I will not be quiet."

Concerning the flawed Bush policies, Hunter vowed not to sit idly by and watch the neo cons bring the nation to its knees.

"Are we going to just lie back and take it?" asked Hunter. "Or will we wake up and do something about it? I am running to do something about it."

Folk Singer And Peace Activist, Joan Baez, Joins Cindy Sheehan's War Protest In Crawford

Iraqi War protest takes on flavor of the 1960's when folk singers and activists united to bring the Vietnam War to an end.

21 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Joan Baez has arrived in Crawford TX and will be singing Sunday night in support of the anti-war movement centered around Cindy Sheehan, the mother who lost her son in Iraq and set-up a protest vigil near President Bush's ranch two weeks ago.

Sheehan's movement, catching the eye of the nation and drawing heavy media coverage, is headed for a showdown next weekend, the final weekend of the Crawford protest vigil since Sheehan has vowed to remain camped-out until President Bush gives her a personal meeting or until the end of August.

And like war protests back in the Hippie 60's, Baez arrived to lend her support to Sheehan, offering up her music as a symbol of peace, offering up a message that lessons learned about needless killing in Vietnam have once again been ignored in Iraq.

"I waited for the right time to come to Crawford, a time when I felt I could be of some use," said Baez right after she arrived in Crawford.

Baez, famous for her anti-establishment brand of folk music, arrived Sunday afternoon with guitar in hand bringing back memories when singers like Bob Dylan led the opposition to the Vietnam War, a movement which eventually brought the government to its knees and the war to an end.

But what's different today is that the youth of America has failed to strongly pick up the anti-war message, seemingly content to voice their opinions quietly on campus instead of rallying in the streets like the millions of students and others during the Vietnam period.

Although forgotten by many today, the opposition to the Vietnam War started slowly but quickly picked up steam when dissent on college campuses and rebellion among the youth explode, taking their war protest to the streets and forcing the government to address their concerns.

"Joan arrived and will be singing for a group that looks to be about 300 or 400," said Hadi Jawad, spokesman for the Crawford Peace House, a group lending both moral and logistical support to the protestors.

Regarding the return of Sheehan who left several days ago to be by her mother's side in California after suffering a stroke, Jawad said she is expected to return to Texas later in the week.

"We are remaining hopeful, but Cindy's return is dependent on her mother's condition. If she continues improving, Cindy said she'd be back this week," said Jawad.

He added that in Cindy's absence the mood in what has been called "Camp Casey" in honor of Sheehan's 24-year-old fallen son killed in Iraq in 2004 five days after he arrived in Baghdad.

Further, Jawad said the protestors are camping out in two locations, one four miles from the President's ranch and the other, called Camp Casey II, located about a mile from the ranch where the President is spending the month of August vacationing.

Sheehan made the trip to Crawford last two weeks ago, setting up camp and saying she wouldn't leave until the President answered her questions personally after being angered by Bush's recent public statements, saying the "fallen died for a noble cause."

"I am not going to let him get away with lying to the American people any longer," said Sheehan earlier in the week, adding she would remain until she is carried away or arrested.

Sheehan claims Bush lied to the American people about the "noble cause," saying he really means the fallen soldiers died in order to get the President's friends rich from war profits, a war Sheehan claims is based on lies and distortions about Iraq's WMD threat.

To gain further support and lift public awareness, Sheehan organized nationwide candlelight vigils, started last Wednesday, and running nightly. Sheehan's idea was just picking up steam when her mother fell ill, as reports surfaced that hundreds of local groups began holding nightly prayer vigils to bring an end to the Iraqi occupation.

"I encourage people to keep organizing the local nightly prayer vigils in Cindy's absence and also to say an extra prayer for her mother," said Jawad.

Throughout the protest, Bush has refused to meet with Sheehan, only referring to her by name once in a recent press conference on his ranch last Thursday while he took time from his month-long vacation to address reporters.

Last week in the press conference, Bush said: "Listen, now, I sympathize with Mrs. Sheehan but I strongly disagree with her that we need to pull the troops out right now. She feels strongly about her position, and she has every right in the world to say what she believes. This is America."

Former Head Of Pentagon's Depleted Uranium Project Says Thousands Of Troops Are Sick And Dying From Illegal DU Use And Military's Failure To Admit Responsibility

After Maj. Doug Rokke went public in 1997 exposing the military's flawed DU program, his life has been threatened but he still continues to search for solutions in order to save the lives of those afflicted.

20 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Army Major Doug Rokke has been shot at, run off the road, threatened, harassed, black-balled, intimidated, called a liar and treated like a "hated enemy" not by opposition forces in Iraq, but by 'secret ops' in the U.S. government, obviously acting on orders from top military brass.

And in May 2000 he was subjected to the biggest scare of his life when bullets rang through his son's bedroom window while living in Jacksonville, Alabama, in what he calls "another near miss" by government hit men bound and determined to remove his presence from the planet.

Maj. Rokke, living in Rantoul, Illinois, and still active in the Army Reserves, has been a government target ever since going public in a May 1997 article in the Nation Magazine, criticizing the military for failing to clean-up depleted uranium used in Iraq during the first Gulf War.

Although Maj. Rokke's accusations have been echoed by many others, what makes his statements so electrifying - so damaging to the military - is that he was one of the Pentagon's 'top boys.' In fact, he was not only one of the Pentagon's elite, he was "the man" so to speak when it came to determining the causes and effects of depleted uranium (DU) used in the battle field.

Being so well-respected by the Pentagon brass, Maj. Rokke was the military expert assigned as director of the 1994 U.S. Army Depleted Uranium Project in response to congressional inquiries and direct Department of Defense (DOD) orders.

The study was commissioned after it was found the military lacked adequate preparation to deal with the adverse health and environmental effects regarding the use of DU in the battle field. This highly efficient 'killing tool,' which amounts to nothing less than a radioactive nuclear assault, has been extensively used in U.S. weaponry in the first Gulf War as well as the present Iraqi conflict, even though it is a direct violation of the Geneva Convention and United Nation regulations.

In simple terms, Maj. Rokke was asked to evaluate the extent of DU used and asked to advise the military how to adequately comply with its own existing regulations of training, clean-up and medical care involving soldiers and civilians contaminated.

In his final report, Maj. Rokke, however, didn't beat around the bush or provide a technical escape for evading regulations. He simply laid it on the table plain and simple, saying if the military intended to keep using DU, it needed to address the above problems, as regulations mandated, or simply cease and desist from its use.

And, in hindsight, it was probably the words "cease and desist" or Maj. Rokke's simple ultimatum of "clean-up or don't use" that initially ticked-off military brass, since behind the scenes the 'big boys' never really intended to open up a can of worms caused by Maj. Rokke's report.

But when the implacable army officer went public about the extent of the DU problems in 1997, letting the cat out of the bag about the military's outright refusal to comply with existing regulations, the 'big boys' put their boxing gloves on and are still trying to punch Maj. Rokke into submission today.

"They have been after me ever since I went public," said Maj. Rokke in a telephone conversation this week from his country home in the heartland of Illinois. "I've been shot at, run off the road several times, harassed, threatened and whatever else they could think of doing to discredit me for what I was doing.

"They even shot bullets through my son's bedroom window. These guys don't play around and the first thing I was told when I went public was to keep my 45 loaded at all times."

Even though Maj. Rokke's obviously right and the military wrong, the cold and hard truth is that the big brass tried to crucify him for simply telling the truth. The cold hard truth is that even though the military admits using DU, it never has admitted to the legal causal connection between its use and its adverse effects on human and environmental health.

And critics contend that such outright contempt for its own regulations and the military's failure to provide adequate medical care for those exposed to DU has left hundreds of thousands of military personnel and civilians sick or dying, including Maj. Rokke.

"It's really very simple," added Maj. Rokke. "I was asked to report on what they needed to do about the DU problem. Our team of experts then reported and provided our recommendations, plain and simple.

"But when I realized in 1997 we were being ignored and thousands of people, including myself, were sick and possibly slowly dying from DU exposure, I had to go public and blow the whistle."

And Maj. Rokke said his warnings as well as warnings from many other experts were not only dismissed by the military, but also by every other bigwig on Capital Hill, including President Clinton, Senator John Kerry and every other member of Congress, all very much aware of his position since he even addressed the 2000 Fall Congressional Coalition Leadership at its quarterly breakfast in Washington D.C.

Adding that the DU problem is even worse today, Maj. Rokke pointed out the military continues to bombard the Iraq and Afghanistan with "increased levels" of nuclear weaponry, leaving in its wake even higher levels of nuclear fallout than were present in Gulf War I.

And like President Clinton, his predecessor, President Bush has failed to address or even recognize the problem, leaving behind 'hot zones' in the Middle East while, at the same time, failing to care for radiation illnesses in returning troops.

"President Bush and Prime Minister Tony Blair must acknowledge and must accept responsibility for the willful use of illegal uranium munitions, their own 'dirty bombs,' resulting in adverse health and environmental effects," wrote Maj. Rokke in recent open letter, criticizing the two major leaders of the Iraq occupation.

And being crystal clear about his demands in compliance with existing military regulations, he added:

"President Bush and Prime Minister Blair need to immediately order medical care for all DU casualties, order thorough environmental remediation, issue immediate orders for the cessation and retaliation against all of us who demand compliance with medical care and ban the further use of depleted radiation munitions.

"They arrogantly refuse to comply with their own regulations, orders, and directives that require United States Department of Defense officials to provide prompt and effective medical care all exposed individuals. Look to Medical Management of Unusual Depleted Uranium Casualties, DOD, Pentagon, 10/14/93, Medical Management of Army personnel Exposed to Depleted Uranium (DU) Headquarters.

"They also refuse to clean up dispersed radioactive contamination as required by Army Regulation- AR 700-48: Management of Equipment Contaminated With Depleted Uranium or Radioactive Commodities (Headquarters, Department Of The Army, Washington, D.C., September 2002) and U.S. Army Technical Bulletin- TB 9-1300-278: Guidelines For Safe Response To Handling, Storage, And Transportation Accidents Involving Army Tank Munitions Or Armor Which Contain Depleted Uranium" (Headquarters, Department Of The Army, Washington, D.C., JULY 1996)."

To further bolster Maj. Rokke's accusations and his detailed analysis, all of the following regulations are also being violated, specifically section 2-4 of United States Army Regulation-AR 700-48 dated Sept. 16, 2002, requiring:

- (1) "Military personnel "identify, segregate, isolate, secure, and label all RCE" (radiological contaminated equipment).
- (2) "Procedures to minimize the spread of radioactivity will be implemented as soon as possible."
- (3) "Radioactive material and waste will not be locally disposed of through burial, submersion, incineration, destruction in place, or abandonment" and;
- (4) "All equipment, to include captured or combat RCE, will be surveyed, packaged, retrograded, decontaminated and released IAW Technical Bulletin 9-1300-278, DA PAM 700-48."

With the military's blatant violations placed in the public eye due to Mj. Rokke's courage to buck the system, other experts and scientists quickly came to his side, offering startling information and detailed statistics showing the seriousness of the DU problem and the government's failure to take responsibility even though it obviously caused the problem.

Radiation experts Leuren Moret and Marion Fulk, along with others like Dennis Kyne, Bob Jones and Mark Zeller, have provided documentation for an explosive video just released, written and produced by Joyce Riley and William Lewis, called "Beyond Treason," providing an in depth look at DU used in the Gulf Wars and its likelihood of causing numerous civilian and military illnesses.

"It has been determined that the equivalent of more than 400,000 Nagasaki bombs has been released in the middle east since 1991," said Moret, citing a report and subsequent speech at a 2000 depleted uranium conference given by Professor Yagasaki, a physicist and well-respected nuclear radiation expert.

Moret, who has spent a life time working in the nuclear field, first as a staff scientist at the Livermore Nuclear Weapons Laboratory in California, is now a member of The Radiation and Public Health Project (RPHP), a privately funded group studying the devastating effects of depleted uranium especially in Iraq and Afghanistan.

And the writers of Beyond Treason added more ammunition to Rokke's accusations regarding the government's failure to recognize the DU problem 15 years after it was first exposed:

"The ailing Gulf War heroes from all 27 coalition countries slowly die from of "unknown causes," they wait for answers from their respective governments, but no satisfying or even credible answers have come forth from the military establishment. Records that span over a decade point to negligence and even culpability on the part of the U.S. Department of Defense and their 'disposable army' mentality.

"The VA has determined that 250,000 troops are now permanently disabled, 15,000 troops are dead and over 425,000 are ill and slowly dying from what the Department of Defense still calls a mystery disease. How many more will have to die before action is taken?"

Although Maj. Rokke has been fighting to save the lives of thousands of afflicted veterans, he is also trying to save his own life as he was originally exposed to DU in 1990 and 1991 while deployed in Iraq and looking into the hazards of DU.

"First, I remember experiencing breathing problems, then a rash and then bleeding sores that never go away," said Rokke, 56, adding DU exposure is slowly, day by day, turning him into an invalid. "The sad thing is that only several hundred military personnel have even been tested for DU exposure since the beginning when there are literally hundreds of thousands afflicted.

"In fact, it took the military more than two years to even tell me that I was 'hot,' withholding my urine tests and hiding the truth. One of the reasons I went public is because so many soldiers are dying from the same symptoms I have and the military simply still refuses to take medical responsibility and care for them."

Recently, to keep the DU issue alive, Maj. Rokke published an article in the Nov. 27, 2004 edition of the popular Vanity Fair magazine, where he updated his concerns with new information about Gulf War II.

After the article appeared, he said the Pentagon and others in military circles immediately unleashed another attack on his character, accusing him of lying and even saying he never headed up the Pentagon's DU program in the first place.

"I guess if I played their game, I would sit somewhere with a cushy $100,000 a year job," said Maj. Rokke. "But I decided to do what's right no matter what the consequences. But, don't get me wrong, I'm not a peace-nick. I am a military officer and a warrior. I would not hesitate to use nuclear weapons only, however, if it was a last resort. But I also feel the military should live up to its responsibilities and follow regulations, which is not the case now and why I am speaking out."

Although declaring himself a warrior, Maj. Rokke tempered that statement, writing in September, 2002, what he called a "A Commitment To Peace." In this short open letter, however, much is revealed about the inner-man, his obvious choice of peace versus war and his ultimate fears about the ramifications of the Iraqi invasion, which at the time of his writing was just on the horizon:

"As I sit here tonight unable to sleep, my mind is considering the ramifications of potential and ongoing military actions and economic sanctions. As a disabled warrior with combat experience in two wars, Vietnam and Desert Storm, I can only hope and pray that the outcomes of these actions do not leave another trail of adverse health and environmental problems.

"I have concluded that we must unite in a concerted effort to prevent additional suffering. Throughout the history of the world those who make a commitment to peace have endured isolation and retaliation when they challenged the individuals and governments seeking economic and political advantages. A vision of peace where all nations can live together for the common good is an ideal dream but may be unrealistic.

"War is the ultimate weapon a nation or leaders can use to control the allocation and use of food, water, terrain, shelter, and mineral resources. War occurs when nations or individuals fail to reach a satisfactory compromise on sharing of these limited resources.

"Today we are reaching another crossroads in history where we must decide which road we follow. We can select peace or go to war. One means life the other means death! The prevalent modus operandi at this time of those seeking power and control is to threaten economic sanctions or military attacks in order to achieve their goals and objectives.

"This is unacceptable. We must act to with a unified and strong voice to prevent nations and leaders from imposing their demands on others. At the same time we must make sure that those nations and leaders who pose a viable threat to peace are checkmated. But that does not mean that we resort to military force.

"There are many options but only wise persons are willing to discuss and mutually select the option most beneficial to all. Today information control is used to prevent discussion and debate. If a person does not have adequate and validated information they will be unable to contribute to the resolution of serious problems. We must ensure the complete dissemination of information even if that information reveals illegal or disturbing actions by our own or any other nation.

"These ways to achieve peace will require a commitment of time, financial resources, knowledge, attitudes, life, liberty, and willingness to endure and retaliation by any person who wishes to contribute towards the resolution of local, state, national or international problems. The choice is ours. We can select a life as a mushroom or we can select to act. I select action for if peace is to be achieved then I must let peace begin with me."

Radiation Expert Claims High-Radiation Readings Near Pentagon After 9/11 Indicate Depleted Uranium Used; High-Ranking Army Officer Claims Missile Used at Pentagon, Not Commercial Airliner

Two high profile radiation experts concur Pentagon strike involved use of a missile. Also Geiger counter readings right after the attack shows high levels of radiation 12 miles away from Pentagon crash site.

18 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A radiation expert and high-ranking Army Major, who once headed the military's depleted uranium project, both contend the Pentagon was hit by missile, not a commercial jetliner, adding high radiation readings after the strike indicate depleted uranium also may have been used.

"I'm not an explosives or crash site expert, but I am highly knowledgeable in causes and effects related to nuclear radiation contamination. What happened at the Pentagon is highly suspicious, leading me to believe a missile with a depleted uranium warhead may have been used," said radiation expert Leuren Moret in a telephone conversation this week from her Berkeley, CA home.

Moret, who has spent a life time working in the nuclear field, first as a staff scientist at the Livermore Nuclear Weapons Laboratory in California, is now a member of The Radiation and Public Health Project (RPHP), a privately funded group studying the devastating effects of depleted uranium especially in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Regarding the missile theory, it is also backed up by retired Army Maj. Doug Rokke, a PhD educational physics and former top military expert banished from the Pentagon after the military failed to follow regulations regarding the use, clean up and medical treatment regarding the use of depleted uranium.

"When you look at the whole thing, especially the crash site void of airplane parts, the size of the hole left in the building and the fact the projectile's impact penetrated numerous concrete walls, it looks like the work of a missile," said Maj. Rokke from his Rantoul, IL home this week. "And when you look at the damage, it was obviously a missile. Also, if you look at the WTC and the disturbing flash hitting the tower right before the impact of the airplane, it also looks like a missile was used."

And to prove the government's jetliner theory is wrong, Moret said the quick actions of a friend near the Pentagon on the morning of 9/11, provide even more suspicion.

Moret recalls on the tragic morning that once she saw the jetliner strike the twin towers and then heard about the Pentagon crash, she immediately called a close friend in Alexandria VA, Dr. Janette Sherman.

Thinking radiation might be involved, she quickly asked Dr. Sherman, 77, a radiation expert and medical doctor who lived about 12 miles from the crash site, to get a Geiger counter reading.

What the pair of experts found is astonishing. What they found is not only astonishing but four years after 9/11, what's even more incredible is that their findings have been completely ignored by most everyone, including the Bush administration, the 9/11 Commission and the mainstream media, all who appear more interested in rubber stamping the official 9/11 story than getting at the real truth.

"Dr. Sherman was downwind from the Pentagon on 9/11 and her Geiger counter readings show an extremely high reading, a reading of more than eight to ten times higher than normal," said Moret, also an expert in the cause and effects of depleted uranium.

"Dr. Sherman, who is well-respected radiation expert herself, then went about contacting the proper authorities in order to try and alert emergency responders of the radiation risk at the Pentagon crash site. And we have also kept photos of the Geiger counter readings in order to verify what Dr. Sherman found 12 miles away."

After notifying the Nuclear Industrial Safety Agency (NIRS), experts from the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and the FBI were alerted and according to Moret, radiation experts later confirmed high radiation levels at the Pentagon crash site possibly from the presence from depleted uranium or other unknown causes.

But what disturbed Moret most has been the Bush administration's lack of concern and its failure to mount a thorough investigation into what really caused the high radiation levels, saying perhaps the findings might reveal something contrary to the official story that a jetliner rammed through 12 Pentagon walls of solid concrete.

"Even if there was depleted uranium used, do you think the likes of Bush, Cheney and Rumsfeld would really care? These are bottom feeders that 20 or 30 years ago wouldn't have been even allowed to set foot in such high positions of power," said Moret.

Although Dr. Sherman's Geiger counter can't be a conclusive finding, another nuclear radiation expert, Marion Fulk, agrees the positive reading, if anything, is suspicious.

"It definitely looks suspicious but of course many factors have to be considered before a conclusion is reached," said Fulk in a telephone conversation this week. "The type of Geiger counter used by Dr. Sherman needs to be looked at as well as the possibility of the true source of the radiation, whether it is depleted uranium in a missile, ballast in the airplane or within the structure of the building hit."

Even though no one can be sure, one thing positive is the Bush administration never really seriously cared about addressing the possibility of depleted uranium at the Pentagon just like it cares little about the same problem at the World Trade Center and in the war fields of Iraq and Afghanistan.

And, more recently, Moret, Fulk and Maj. Rokke, along with Dennis Kyne, Bob Jones and Mark Zeller, have provided documentation for an explosive video written and produced by Joyce Riley and William Lewis called "Beyond Treason," providing an in depth look at depleted uranium used in the Gulf Wars and its likelihood of causing numerous civilian and military illnesses.

"It has been determined that the equivalent of more than 400,000 Nagasaki bombs has been released in the middle east since 1991," said Moret, citing a report and subsequent speech at a 2000 depleted uranium conference given by Professor Yagasaki, a physicist and well-respected nuclear radiation expert.

And in the 89 minute video, exploring a massive government cover up, Riley and Lewis point out the unexplained illnesses in civilians and military personal may be the cause of depleted uranium or perhaps a combination of overlapping causes, including chemical and biological exposure and the use of experimental vaccines.

The writers of Beyond Treason, added:

"The ailing Gulf War heroes from all 27 coalition countries slowly die from of "unknown causes," they wait for answers from their respective governments, but no satisfying or even credible answers have come forth from the military establishment. Records that span over a decade point to negligence and even culpability on the part of the U.S. Department of Defense and their 'disposable army' mentality.

"The VA has determined that 250,000 troops are now permanently disabled, 15,000 troops are dead and over 425,000 are ill and slowly dying from what the Department of Defense still calls a mystery disease. How many more will have to die before action is taken?"

And in February, 2004, a conference called "Dialogues with Decision Makers" was held in New Delhi, India, where a group of experts gathered for the prevention of nuclear war and looked closely at the depleted uranium problem in the Middle East.

Admiral Vishnu Bhagwat, former chief of the Naval Staff in India, reported the following shocking details about the effects of depleted uranium:

"In the 2003 war, the Iraqi's were subjected to the Pentagon's radioactive arsenal, mainly in the urban centers, unlike in the deserts in 1991. The aggregate effects of illnesses and long term disabilities and genetic birth defects will be apparent only 2008 onwards.

"By now, half of all the 697,000 US soldiers involved in the 1991 war have reported serious illnesses. According the American Gulf War Veterans Association, more than 30% of these soldiers are chronically ill, and receiving disability benefits from the Veterans Administration.

"Near the Republican Palace where US troops stood guard and over 1000 employees walked in and out, the radiation readings were the hottest in Iraq, at nearly 1900 times background radiation levels.

"At a roadside stand, selling fresh bunches of parsley, mint, and onions, children played on a burnt out Iraqi tank just outside Baghdad, the Geiger counter registered 1000 times normal background radiation.

"The Pentagon and the United Nations estimate that the US and Britain used 1,100 to 2,200 tons of armor piercing shells made of DU during attacks in March-April 2003, far more than the 1991 Gulf War (this does not include air dispensed DU munitions and missiles)," wrote the Post Intelligencer.

"The long term effects, as Dr Asaf Durakovic elaborates, after the early neurological symptoms are cancer, and related radiation illnesses such as chronic fatigue syndrome, joint and muscle pain, neurological and/or nerve damage, mood disturbances, auto-immune deficiencies, lung and kidney damage, vision problems, skin rupture, increase in miscarriages, maternal mortality and genetic birth defects/deformation.

"For years the US government described the Gulf War Syndrome as a post traumatic stress disorder. It was labeled as a psychological problem or simply as mysterious unrelated ailments much in the same way as health problems of Vietnam veterans suffering from Agent Orange poisoning."

Sheehan Leaves 'Camp Casey' Today After Mother Suffers Stroke In California

The war protest goes on in Sheehan's absence with protestors moving to a location closer to the President's Crawford TX ranch

18 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Cindy Sheehan, in the 11th day of her war protest staged near President Bush's ranch, left Crawford, TX today after getting word her 74-year-old mother in California suffered a serious stroke.

"Her mother's condition was serious enough for Cindy to leave earlier today and go back to California to be by her side," said Hadi Jawad, spokesman for the Crawford Peace House, assisting Sheehan and others during the protest vigil.

Jawad said he was unsure how this would affect the protest vigil since Sheehan is the "driving force and energy" behind the protest vigil.

However, he added there still are numerous anti-war protestors remaining at what has been named Camp Casey in remembrance of her 24-year-old son, Casey, killed in Baghdad in 2004 only five days after arriving in Iraq.

Jawad also said the protestors are moving their camp site from Prairie Road, about four miles from the Bush ranch, to a location on the opposite side, only one mile from the ranch.

"There are still numerous people coming and going, but we will have to wait and see how Cindy's leaving effects the whole atmosphere here. She is the driving force," said Jawad. about the war protest that has created nationwide attention ever since Sheehan arrived in Crawford demanding a personal meeting with the President.

"A local rancher has allowed us to use his property closer to the ranch and we are moving everything right now. People are concerned but it looks like we will remain till Cindy gets back."

Sheehan made the trip to Crawford last 11 days ago, setting up camp and saying she wouldn't leave until the President answered her questions personally after being angered by Bush's recent public statements, saying the "fallen died for a noble cause."

"I am not going to let him get away with lying to the American people any longer," said Sheehan earlier in the week, adding she would remain until she is carried away or arrested.

Sheehan claims Bush lied to the American people about the "noble cause," saying he really means the fallen soldiers died in order to get the President's friends rich from war profits, a war Sheehan claims is based on lies and distortions about Iraq's WMD threat.

Speaking to the nation in the wake of more than 30 troops killed last week, which sparked anger in Sheehan and her trip to Crawford, Bush said, "We have to honor the sacrifices of the fallen by completing the mission and the families of the fallen can be assured that they died for a noble cause."

The drama behind Sheehan's protest has captured the nation, leading to national media coverage where Sheehan's anti-war message has been met by an onslaught of mudslinging by the White House and a daily dose of "Sheehan Browbeating" by the conservative media who have obviously decide to take off their gloves even against a grieving mother.

Besides the personal tragedy today with her mother, earlier in the week Sheehan's long time husband of 22 years filed for divorce while other family members came out opposing her anti-war message.

However, support for Sheehan's movement has grown throughout her stay, according to Jawad, with a constant flow of traffic coming on going from Crawford on a daily basis.

Support for her protest has largely come from behind the scene liberal political groups with millions backing her on the internet as well as receiving support from Democrats in Congress and many other top liberal leaders, including and Ralph Nader.

She also recently drew a large lump sum for her cause from a wealthy democratic contributor, who bankrolled the protest movement with a $52,000 contribution.

To gain further support and lift public awareness, Sheehan organized nationwide candlelight vigils, starting Wednesday, August 17, and running nightly. Sheehan's idea was just picking up steam when her mother fell ill, as reports surfaced that hundreds of local groups began holding nightly prayer vigils to bring an end to the Iraqi occupation.

"I encourage people to keep organizing the local nightly prayer vigils in Cindy's absence and also to say an extra prayer for her mother," said Jawad.

Throughout the protest, Bush has refused to meet with Sheehan, only referring to her by name once in a recent press conference on his ranch last Thursday while he took time from his month-long vacation to address reporters.

Last week in the press conference, Bush said: "Listen, now, I sympathize with Mrs. Sheehan but I strongly disagree with her that we need to pull the troops out right now. She feels strongly about her position, and she has every right in the world to say what she believes. This is America."

High-Ranking Military Officer Warns Of Major Terrorist Attack Looming; Cheney Consumed Day And Night With Nuclear Retaliation In Iran

A situation of instability is taking hold of the military like it did in the Cold War. Two more retired generals now warn the world is on the verge of nuclear war and terrorist attacks on the homeland are only weeks away.

17 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A high-ranking military officer has come forward saying "a real danger exists" for a large-scale terrorist attack in the coming weeks, adding Vice President Dick Cheney spends his entire day consumed with issues of terrorism and U.S. nuclear retaliation in the Middle East if an attack on American soil occurs.

The retired officer, who remains anonymous, claims military factions are battling over how to address the terrorist threat, claiming the Iraq War, the threats being leveled to Iran and Israel's stranglehold on the Palestinians has created instability within U.S. political and military establishments.

These reports compound earlier reports made last week by others in the military that Cheney had already ordered Strategic Command (STRATCOM) to prepare a nuclear attack against Iran, a fact verified by Washington insiders, including Lyndon LaRouche, a former democratic nominee for President, who now has taken up the role as a spear-thrower while getting the message out for several senators on Capital Hill not willing for political reasons to go public.

Confirming military sources, LaRouche said he also learned this week said that the plan for a nuclear strike against Iran has been in the works longer than thought, actually starting in 2004 after Ariel Sharon and his government made threats "that Israel would take out Iran's nuclear facilities" like it did in Iraq in 1981.

"I think under the Bush administration time-frame we are weeks away from an attack on our homeland and also an impending nuclear catastrophe," said LaRouche, an outspoken Bush critic in a telephone conversation from his Vermont political headquarters called Larouche PAC.

Although the high-ranking officer claimed the military is highly resistant to crossing the nuclear threshold, he warned if it is crossed "there will be hell to pay for the next 50 years."

And to verify plans for an Iranian nuclear assault are all too real, today retired Maj. Gen. Paul Vallely went public with some shocking statements about how close the world actually is to a nuclear conflict.

"It's similar to what we had during the Cold War," said Vallely. "We tell the radical Islamists, 'If you launch one nuclear device against us anywhere, we will then irradiate Mecca and Medina because you know all Muslims have to go there at least once in their lifetime.

"Change the regime in Iran and you change the whole Middle East. All roads lead to Teheran: Hamas, Hezbollah, Al Qaeda. I told the Pentagon that my sources have also sighted bin Laden in Iran. They're also supporting Zargawi.

"We could conduct operations, but they would be covert, to take out training camps in Syria and Iran." With regard to the Iranian nuclear program, the Israelis have completed targeting for Iran, and bunker busters have already been given to Israel."

Further raising eye-brows and fueling tension of another 9/11-like attack is the ongoing simulated nuclear terrorist attack, called Exercise Sudden Response being held this week from Aug. 15- 19 at Ft. Monroe, VA.

Regarding the nuclear exercise, Capt. Kevin McNamara, media relations officer, said the training session is being conducted officially by the Joint Task Force Civil Support (JTF-CS), beginning last Monday and ending Thursday.

"The exercise will focus on the Department of Defense's ability to support civil and federal authorities in providing a coordinated response to a nuclear explosion in a major U.S. city. The exercise will be a computer-based field training exercise with very limited troop movements. All unit-level troop movements and response activities will be simulated," said Capt. McNamara.

Some observers are worried since preceding or during most every other terrorist attack, including 9/11 and the 7/7 London bombings the American and British governments were coincidentally holding a similar type training session like occurred in the attacks.

Close Informant And Friend Of Former FBI Agent John O'Neill, Killed on 9/11, Tells How FBI Higher-Ups 'Shut Him Down' Letting 9/11 Happen

Janet Parker was helping O'Neill get close to a known terrorist kingpin in the months preceding 9/11, but says FBI officials did everything in their power to block O'Neill.

16 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A Seattle woman who was a close informant of former FBI agent and Al Qaeda hunter John O'Neill during the crucial months prior to the 9/11, said they both provided vital information in an attempt to stop the attack but were blocked by officials in the New York and Washington bureaus every step of the way.

The informant's earth shattering revelations and hard evidence, including names, dates, locations, motives and sordid dealings of known terrorists, may once and for end all speculation that the FBI overtly tried to thwart O'Neill's investigation, as well as even show authorities worked closely, assisting known terrorists in bringing about 9/11 as well as other previous terrorist attacks.

The detailed information, never released publicly and provided to the Arctic Beacon and the American Free Press, clearly shows, according to the informant, a plot in the FBI by O'Neill's boss, Tom Picard and others higher-up in the chain of command to block O'Neill just when he may have been able to gum up the works, mainly from contacts made by the Seattle informant with a major Al Qaeda cell operating on the East Coast.

Seattle veterinarian and long time friend and informant of O'Neill, Janet Parker, 53, said O'Neill was stopped by his bosses only months prior to 9/11 from getting a wire tap on a major cell leader, Shadrack Manyathella, who had close ties with Ali Mohammad, a suspected CIA double operative and Mohammad Atta, the alleged 9/11 ring leader.

"His own bureau blocked him every step of the way, but John wanted me to bate Shadrack and get as much information as possible," said Parker in an extended telephone conversation from her Seattle home this week, concerning several telephone conversations with the alleged terrorist thug in the months preceding 9/11.

"Shadrack was anxious to get me into his organization, since I was considered a valuable asset as a veterinarian. Also, he wanted me to marry another one of his friends named Mohammad, I think so he could get him citizenship papers and a passport."

During July 2001, O'Neill and Parker communicated numerous times, sharing vital information and trying to determine the best way to uncover Shadrack's plans, as O'Neil told Parker "something big was in the works and coming down soon."

Although O'Neill was working non-stop, day and night, to connect the dots and pin down Shadrack and the intentions of other terrorists, traveling back and forth from Europe and Yemen about the USS Cole bombing as well as trying to stop future attacks.

However, Parker said during this time O'Neill also became very despondent and depressed by the lack of cooperation he was getting from FBI headquarters.

Parker, who first became associated with O'Neill more than 30 years ago in other FBI-related investigations, said O'Neill had even traveled to France, deciding to work with French intelligence, instead of his own bureau, since they were more cooperative and Shadrack often communicated to other terrorist cells, located in all parts of the world, in French.

"You have to understand that John and I had known each other for a long time. We shared a lot of information, not only about Shadrack, Al Qaeda and what turned out to be 9/11, but also about the Boston FBI scandal which I was involved in, when various FBI agents were jailed for corruption and about 19 informants like myself were brutally murdered," said Parker, adding O'Neill protected her identity in that case and probably saved her life, allowing her to run for her life and start over again in Seattle. "I remember once when my foster daughter was visiting, I think in February, 2001, I overheard talk about airplanes and the World Trade Center.

"But concerning John, he was ambitious and maybe that was his downfall, but he was also skilled, talented and completely dedicated to stopping terrorism. He did pressure me over the years and put me in difficult spots, but I would fight back at times, reminding him I was only a volunteer.

"However, since we both knew my inside connection with Shadrack was extremely important, concerning both the bombing of the USS Cole off the coast of Yemen and what turned out to be 9/11, I tried to help any way I could until we both realized we were working alone with no assistance from higher-ups in the FBI."

Parker also sadly recalls during the crucial months before 9/11, O'Neill telling her that "someone higher-up" had blocked attempts to wire tap Shadrack, refused to let him return to Yemen, mysteriously deleted all his files at FBI New York headquarters and then finally relegated him to a desk job, far away from the front lines of terrorism.

"John was devastated when this happened, telling me how frustrating it was to know that something big was coming down but not be able to do anything about it due to lack of cooperation by his own bureau," said Parker, adding O'Neill told her in the later part of July 2001 that he had already planned to leave the FBI but was unsure of his next move.

"Although John would keep sensitive details from me for ethical reasons and also in order to protect my life, never specifically mentioning names, I think, as does his long time partner Valerie James, it was his direct boss, Tom Picard, who was acting on orders from higher-ups, all of them together trying to stifle John's investigation. I am not really sure why but the only conclusion I can draw is that they wanted to let 9/11 play out and John and I were getting in the way."

During the month of August 2001, Parker lost contact with O'Neill, who resigned under pressure in late August, taking a cushy job handed to him on silver platter as head of security at the World Trade Center. According to Parker, O'Neill never really wanted to leave the FBI and would have preferred staying in the intelligence field for another agency, but was lured away to the WTC job over money, being offered $350,000 in comparison to his $100,000 FBI salary.

What happened next is well-documented, as O'Neill was killed inside the Twin Towers on 9/11, after officially starting work on Sept. 10, a coincidence never been fully investigated but filled with suspicion, some saying he was set-up and others brushing his death aside as mere coincidence.

"The last time I talked with John was Sept 8, 2001. He wasn't with the FBI, but was still somehow actively pursuing Shadrack and Al Qaeda," said Parker. "John was telling me all sorts of things. I said I'd help him, but I also remember asking him how much danger I was in and if I even had to watch my back from our own FBI. He never mentioned anything about the World Trade Center security job, but was furious with me for allowing my foster daughter to fly from the East Coast to Seattle.

"John had been closely monitoring her activities as well, since she had unwillingly gotten caught up with Shadrack and his shady activities years ago. John was furious since he lost track of her on the East Coast, having no idea I changed her flight date for the early part of September.

"I remember him saying that they were planning something big soon and he was angry because he was still watching my foster daughter's movements closely. At that time we decided to meet in October at a remote place in the Berkshires during an upcoming Boston veterinarian conference I was attending so we could talk strategy. This was the last time I talked to John, but some strange things happened with my foster daughter while she was visiting me in Seattle just days before 9/11."

And it was Parker's foster child, Patty, now 24, originally sold as a sex slave to Shadrack by her Vermont drug-running brothers in the late 1990's that provided Parker and O'Neill's main connection to what she calls an Al Qaeda cell heavily involved for years in the planning of 9/11 and other terrorist acts.

Although the story of Parker and her step daughter involve a complicated web of corruption starting in the mid 1990s on the East Coast, including illegal arms dealing, brutal killings of young girls stolen from state-sponsored foster care institutions, corruption in the famous Boston FBI scandal, connections to the Irish mob and gangster Whitey Bulger and finally Shadrack's terrorist cell, it was originally problems surrounding Parker's foster daughter that brought the pair together again.

After Parker and her foster daughter witnessed an arms deal going down near their country home in Hudson Falls, O'Neill intervened to lend assistance in the mid 1990's, although she did communicate with him briefly in 1993 involving an upstate New York investigation after first World Trade Center bombing.

Parker first met O'Neill in 1975 when she worked in Peru in the Peace Corps and was airlifted from Lima back to Washington D.C. during a coup attempt. Afterwards, O'Neill, just getting started in the FBI, took an interest in her Peruvian experiences, interviewing her at Penn State where she attended school, beginning what turned out to be a working relationship that lasted up until O'Neill's untimely death at Ground Zero in 2001.

"I've been accused before of being John's lover, but that's never been the case," said Parker. "I lost track of John in 1975, both of us getting married and going our own separate ways."

And it wasn't until 1987 that the paths of Parker and O'Neil crossed again, this time at Washington State University when Parker was in the midst of getting her veterinarian's degree and O'Neill was investigating alleged terrorist activity going on at the university.

"He asked for my help in getting photos for a sting operation involving an Iranian who was harassing me when I was teaching English as a second language," recalls Parker. "I got him to go to a picnic where John took the photos and it turned out he was on a terrorist watch list.

"John was involved in watching for domestic terrorism and as a veterinarian, I was close to animal rights' groups, who John was investigating and who were also putting pressure on Washington State and especially targeting my professor, Dr. Robert Speth. Together John and I made a good team, attending various animal rights' conferences and trying to secure information."

After graduating in 1991 and traveling to Hudson Falls, NY, to practice veterinary medicine on primarily cats and dogs, it wasn't until 1993 that O'Neill came calling again, this time asking Parker for assistance in tracking a local upstate New York Pakistani woman, suspected of being involved in the 1993 first World Trade Center bombings.

"He asked for my help again, but this time it didn't amount to much," said Parker, recalling that O'Neill always approached his work diligently, like a true detective, always using inductive and deductive reasoning in an attempt to solve his case.

"He was a pleasant man, extremely intelligent and liked to live the good life, knowing that being around money and power meant also gaining vital knowledge. Maybe in the long run this was his downfall, but at heart, he was a good, honest, hard working man dedicated to his country and the FBI."

But after helping O'Neill in the 1993 bombing investigation, Parker's real troubles began, first witnessing with her foster daughter an illegal arms deal going down at her neighbor's house and then getting thrown in up to her neck unexpectedly into the Boston FBI corruption case and, if that wasn't enough, simultaneous getting embroiled into the dealings of the dangerous Irish mob and its leader, Whitey Bulger.

"I was always interested in helping abused children and decided to take on a foster child, as my husband of 22 years, though we are now divorced, couldn't have children. I met Patty and went about the foster care procedures. She had gone through incredible abuse with her drug-trafficking family and was living with me when we witnessed the arms deal go down at Joe Lambert's house as we were standing in our horse pasture," said Parker, recalling that her problems increased substantially when she notified authorities, receiving no help and eventually, along with her daughter, becoming the victim of threats and several near misses on her life.

Although what followed involved many mysterious and complicated details, basically O'Neill tried to protect Parker throughout the investigation while, at the same time, trying to nab the crooked FBI agents in the Boston bureau, agents involved in illegal dealings with the Irish mob and other known terrorists.

"I found myself in the middle of drugs and violence while still practicing veterinary medicine and essentially John got involved, coming to my rescue. It was a web of criminality that went deep and was hard to pinpoint, but I remember John was always trying to get me to testify but, at the same time, trying to protect me and my foster daughter from getting killed," said Parker, adding during this period in 1995 her personal life went through turmoil, getting divorced, placing her foster daughter back in foster care and moving to where she took another job as a veterinarian.

"I was offered this great job with great pay in Massachusetts that turned out to be a come-on to get me involved with illegal prescriptions sales and money-laundering," said Parker. "When things started to heat up, I started to get violent calls threatening me and my foster daughter who was back in the Vermont foster care program.

"John got dragged into this whole mess and he said he didn't like it one bit since he was in direct conflict with the Boston FBI. They didn't want him to get too close. Then in 1997 John wanted me to testify and put me in the witness protection program. At the same time, I started getting run off the road in obvious murder attempts, found out my horse pasture was set on fire back in upstate New York and also was being told my foster daughter's life was in serious danger."

However, after 19 confidential informants were mysteriously murdered during the Boston FBI corruption case, sending some agents to prison including the Boston FBI Director, Parker backed-off from testifying, fleeing with her horse van and running for her life cross country, finally settling in Tukwila, WA near Seattle.

"I wanted out, plain and simple," said Parker.

But several months after landing another veterinary job, Parker again started receiving threatening phone calls, wondering if the nightmare she was living on a daily basis would ever end.

Then in January 1999, O'Neill turned up on her Seattle doorstep again, this time investigating the 2000 Millennium plot and the LAX bombing threats. And it was when O'Neill arrived that threats started escalating further, as frightening news came from the East Coast that her foster daughter had been sold to Shadrack by her brothers as a drug payoff and two of the four eye-witnesses to the upstate New York illegal arm's shipment, Joe Lambert and his daughter, Jessica, had been brutally murdered.

"My foster daughter and I were the other two witnesses and I was totally scared," said Parker. "She was now in the hands of Shadrack, had a baby with him and I heard two other girls recruited for sex and put into that group's hands were eventually found beheaded before they had a chance to go to police."

During this time, Parker was also accosted, threatened and pushed into a hallway wall outside her apartment by someone she later identified as one of Bulger's Irish mob street thugs.

"Every time I went to the authorities, nobody helped me," said Parker, adding a lack of law enforcement cooperation turned out to be a pattern throughout her Al Qaeda investigations with O'Neill and continuing even today.

At present, the whereabouts of her foster daughter and Shadrack are unknown, her daughter essentially disappearing after her trip in early September 2001 to Seattle. Parker also said the last time she spoke with Shadrack was on or about Sept. 8, 2001, when he tried to encourage her to join his organization.

"The whole key to this story that I am telling is that John O'Neill may have been able to do something good for America and stop 9/11 and other terrorist activity, but they shut him down. Plain and simple that's what they did and I am totally convinced of it," said Parker.

Stand-Off Between Cindy Sheehan And Bush Enters 10th Day
White crosses destroyed, White House slings mud at Sheehan as atmosphere gets ugly in Crawford anti-war protest. Sheehan calls for candlelight vigils across the country to remember fallen soldiers.

16 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The stand off between Cindy Sheehan and President Bush goes into its 10th day today with things getting ugly as white roadside crosses in memory of the fallen soldiers have been destroyed and the White House continued its mudslinging campaign against Sheehan in hopes of derailing support behind her anti-war movement.

Early in the morning hours Tuesday a careless driver destroyed a number of the white crosses lined up on Prairie Chapel Road, each hand-painted with the name of a fallen soldier in memory of the more than 1,850 troops killed in Iraq.

Sheehan's son, Casey, 24, was killed in Iraq in April 2004 after only five days in Baghdad. She met with Bush personally in June 2004, but disappointed with the meeting, the grieving mother and founder of a large anti-war group wants another meeting, but Bush has refused.

Bush got his first glimpse of the protest, swelling to over 600 on the weekend, when last Thursday he passed the rows of white crosses in his black sports utility vehicle en route to a local Republican fund-raise at a nearby Texas ranch.

Sheehan could be heard saying as Bush's caravan of cars drove by while holding up a large sign against the war, "Why don't you make time for donors and not for me?"

Others on the side of the road, some from the peace group founded by Sheehan called Gold Star Families for Peace, also held up signs saying, "Bring The Home Now" and "Iraq Is Arabic For Vietnam."

Police have under the investigation the incident that destroyed many of the white crosses after an unidentified man recklessly drove off the country road, running over the crosses. No injuries were reported.

Earlier in the day Sheehan received further bad news that her husband, back in California, filed for divorce, citing irreconcilable difference. Sheehan commented that the stress behind her son, Casey, contributed to her break-up of her husband of more than 20 years.

In the wake of the Sheehan's continued demand for a personal showdown with the President, the White House has pulled out all stops to whitewash the grieving mother's motives, saying she is using her son's death mainly for political purposes.

Further conservative talk shows have lambasted Sheehan, calling her a political opportunist and dragging her other family members into the controversy, saying they publicly do not support Sheehan's protest vigil.

In the wake of the conservative criticism, Sheehan is holding her ground, still saying she won't leave until arrested or Bush changes his tune and meets with her. However, the White House has given no indication that the vacationing President has changed his mind, adding that Bush's comments about Sheehan in last week's press conference was as far as he would at confronting Sheehan.

Last week in the press conference, Bush said: "Listen, now, I sympathize with Mrs. Sheehan. She feels strongly about her position, and she has every right in the world to say what she believes. This is America."

Since Sheehan arrived, support for her protest has grown with millions backing her on the internet as well as receiving support from Democrats in Congress and many other top liberal leaders, including Lyndon LaRouche and Ralph Nader. She also recently drew a large lump sum for her cause from a wealthy democratic contributor, who bankrolled the protest movement with a $52,000 contribution.

To gain further support and lift public awareness, Sheehan has organized a nationwide candlelight vigil for Wednesday, August 17, which is co-sponsored by the liberal anti-Bush movement located at www.moveonpac.org.

Sheehan has also asked Bush to join her in prayers Friday evening in memory of the fallen soldiers.

"Local hosts are urgently needed to help organize the vigils for Cindy and you can contact us at our web site if you want to help," said a spokesman for Move On.

Sheehan's anti-war group recently took out an advertisement to run on a Texas cable television, costing $15,000, where the grieving mother said:

"Mr. President, I want to tell you face to face how much this hurts. I love my country, but how many more of our loved ones need to die in this senseless war? How many more soldiers have to die before we say enough?"

Since arriving, Sheehan was met last Sunday by National Security Advisor, Steve Hadley, who tried to assure the group that the President was "concerned and wanted a speedy return of the troops."

However, Sheehan told Hadley his message wasn't "good enough," adding she arrived in Crawford to meet personally with Bush and nothing else would suffice, considering that "innocent lives were being lost every day."

"We would like for Bush to explain this 'noble cause' to us, and I plan to ask him why his two daughters, Jenna and Barbara, are not in harm's way, if the cause is so noble," said Sheehan from Crawford. "If he is not ready to send the twins, then he should bring our troops home immediately. We will demand a speedy withdrawal."

Nuclear Training Drill May Have Provided Another Reason For Firing Of Four Star General

Suspicion mounts as to real reason why Army General Kevin Byrnes was fired for sexual misconduct only months prior to retirement. Sources close to the Pentagon say Rumsfeld has wanted to get rid of Byrnes for more than three years.

15 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Controversy around a simulated nuclear terrorist attack, called Exercise Sudden Response to be held Aug. 15- 19 at Ft. Monroe, may have provided another reason for the recent firing of General Kevin P. Byrnes, the head of a prestigious Army unit coincidentally taking part in the same nuclear training exercise.

In a highly unusual occurrence, Gen. Byrnes, 55, was relieved of his duties as commander of the prestigious Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) at Fort Monroe, several months short of retirement for what Army brass claims to be sexual misconduct and what insiders say involves an affair with an enlisted female.

Dismissed earlier in the week, Gen. Byrnes has been unavailable for comment.

Under Army regulations, the affair is an actionable offense if found to be an adulterous relationship, but the oddity in the charges against Gen. Byrnes is that he was legally separated from his wife when the alleged sexual misconduct occurred.

Further, it is highly uncommon for a four star officer like Gen. Byrnes to be treated so harshly, especially when he was only several months from full eligibility for Army retirement.

Besides the retirement issue, what makes the Gen. Byrnes firing even more suspicious is that only two other four star officers in the entire military have been fired for misconduct, one being high-ranking Naval officer in 1995 and the other a four star Air Force officer in 1990.

But political observers point to several other more serious reasons why Gen. Byrnes was pushed aside, including to an ongoing feud with Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, who has wanted to oust Byrnes for more than three years for bucking the neo-con party line.

Military insiders claim Rumsfeld, who has been trying to weed out officers who don't toe the party since taking over at the Pentagon, finally let the hammer drop on Gen. Byrnes after backing off several times on the advice of several generals who mediated what looks a short-lived compromise.

Rumsfeld has remained silent on the issue, only saying it wouldn't be proper to comment on an ongoing military investigation. However, two reliable sources from two different political camps, one conservative and one liberal, claim Gen. Byrnes was stopped in his tracks by Rumsfeld after intelligence reports surfaced that Gen. Byrnes was behind a contingent of at least 40 other high-ranking officers who are trying to thwart the administration's to engage in a nuclear conflict with Iran.

To back up these claims, recently credible sources inside the Pentagon told the American Conservative Magazine, subsequently verified by Lyndon LaRouche and his political research staff that Vice President Dick Cheney has already instructed Strategic Command (STRATCOM) to prepare for a nuclear attack against Iran in the event of another 9/11-like attack occurs on American soil.

"I think under their time-frame we are weeks away from an attack on our homeland and also an impending nuclear catastrophe," said Lyndon LaRouche, an outspoken Bush critic and former third party presidential candidate in a telephone conversation from his Vermont political headquarters called Larouche PAC.

Besides the feud with Rumsfeld and Gen. Byrnes' involvement in a military faction to overthrow the neo-con war agenda, the upcoming nuclear training exercise set for next week at Ft. Monroe also has political observers nervous.

Reports have surfaced that Gen. Byrnes was also fired due to certain irregularities involved in the nuclear training session, which is set to simulate a large nuclear bomb being brought on board a ship into a large U. S. city.

Bush critics also site the danger of these "simulated attacks" since the same type of training sessions occurred just prior to both 9/11 and 7/7, wit simulated jetliner and subway attack training exercises providing an eerie backdrop for the actual attacks that followed.

Regarding the nuclear exercise, Capt. Kevin McNamara, media relations officer, said the training session will be conducted officially by the Joint Task Force Civil Support (JTF-CS) with a press conference being held for credentialed media at Building 261, 363 Fenwick Road. Fort Monroe, VA at 10a.m.

"The exercise will focus on the Department of Defense's ability to support civil and federal authorities in providing a coordinated response to a nuclear explosion in a major U.S. city. The exercise will be a computer-based field training exercise with very limited troop movements. All unit-level troop movements and response activities will be simulated," said Capt. McNamara.

When asked about the Gen. Byrnes firing, Capt. McNamara said he wasn't in a position to comment, deferring all questions to TRADOC media relations, who has failed to offer further details besides it has not been determined whether Gen. Byrnes will be determined or whether criminal charges will be filed.

And to further add fuel growing speculation that a homeland nuclear attack and impending global war are near, ominous reports are coming from the Washington Post, obviously fed the story by the military this week, that the Pentagon has developed its first ever war plans for operations within the United States, plans justifying and making necessary preparations for martial law in case of a homeland terrorist attack.

As reported in the front-page article, sources working at the headquarters of the military's Northern Command (Northcom), located in Colorado Springs, Colorado gave details to Post reporter Bradley Graham, who was recently given a tour of Northcom headquarters at Peterson Air Force Base.

Observers say the article appears to be a deliberate military leak conducted for the purpose of getting America accustom to hearing the possibility of military rule and martial law.

According to the Post, "the new plans provide for what several senior officers acknowledged is the likelihood that the military will have to take charge in some situations, especially when dealing with mass-casualty attacks that could quickly overwhelm civilian resources.

"The war plans represent a historic shift for the Pentagon, which has been reluctant to become involved in domestic operations and is legally constrained from engaging in law enforcement."

Law Abiding Ohio Resident And Korean War Veteran Has Authorities Illegally Swarm On His Property Just Hours After He Called President Bush A Liar On A Local AM Radio Station

Although Doug Stout, 77, won't pin illegal entry on his property to his harsh comments about Bush, but says one thing for sure "I don't smoke pot and everybody in town knows it." After hovering over his property with a helicopter, officers then swarmed on his land, looked at some shrubbery and then left without any explanation.

13 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Don Stout looked up into the Midwestern sky one afternoon two weeks ago and saw a strange helicopter flying over his five-acre piece of land in rural Albany, Ohio.

Before he knew what happened, the 77-year-old long-time resident, law-abiding citizen and Korean War veteran had eight law enforcement officials swarm on his property, checking the place out for marijuana.

Never before having a run-in with the law, Stout said the heavy-handed looking group of law enforcement thugs "came and went without saying a word" after suspiciously looking at a large bush on his property not in the slightest bit resembling a pot plant.

"I've been here since 1994 and everybody's knows me including the sheriff. I never smoked marijuana and they know it, but I think they just like terrorizing people," said Stout in a telephone conversation from his rural home, adding he still hasn't received an answer from anyone why law enforcement officials invaded his privacy and entered his land without a proper search warrant.

"It scared the hell out of me as eight or ten men swarmed my place. I was weeding my garden and the next thing you know, they were on my property, looked at this bush and left without saying a word. It was ridiculous, but the sheriff, the deputy sheriff and the game warden all raided my place for no reason and I am still looking for an explanation."

Although Stout can't pinpoint why authorities entered his property without a warrant, earlier that day he aired his strong opinions against President Bush, calling him an outright liar, on a free speech and truth-telling talk radio show on the popular WAIF AM770 local radio station.

Stout said he has been calling in regularly voicing his anti-Bush opinions, saying people in rural Ohio are finally starting to wake up to lies, deceit and treachery imposed on the American people by what he calls a "lying dog of a President."

"I think he and the rest of his buddies are corrupt, down right crazy and Bush should be impeached plain and simple for lying to the people about weapons of mass destruction in Iraq," said the former Korean War veteran, who lashed out at Bush for going to war illegally and in the process killing thousands of innocent civilians, including more than 1,700 GI's.

"I think George Bush is a liar and is personally responsible for the deaths of many good young men in order that his rich buddies could profit from this illegal war."

Considering himself a "true American" who honorably fought for his country and drove a Greyhound bus for many years, the plain speaking Bush critic thinks America is in a crisis and at the brink of martial law at the hands of government tyrants bent on destroying the country from within.

"I think we have lost this country and many people feel it's too late and feel helpless about doing anything about it," said Stout. "I am pretty outspoken about a lot of things and it wouldn't surprise me if another terrorist hits us harder than 9/11, putting the country under a state of emergency and martial law while at the same time taking the heat off Bush.

"This reminds me of Nazi Germany. The people are being fed propaganda and in turn the dollar is going to hell as are the rest of our freedoms. I don't think we should give up our freedoms in order to be safer, when all the government is trying to do is take us over from within.

"The Founding Fathers would have never stood for what is going on and would have thrown Bush and his buddies out on their ears. I think the people of Ohio are starting to wake up and I do not intend to stop talking about how I feel on that talk radio show."

Besides the strange raid on Stout's property, the radio station giving the thumbs up to air the controversial truth-telling radio program in the traditionally conservative heartland also has reported mysteriously having its transmitter knocked out on two occasions from "two mysterious bolts of lightning."

Housewife Lauren Dowling, another avid WAIF listener and unofficial promoter of the truth-telling show that schedules many of the guests for broadcaster Sharon Elliot and station owner Joe Edwards, isn't pointing fingers but said this week from her rural home that the two "bolts of lightning" in the last six weeks was very unusual.

Although Elliot and Edwards have been airing a controversial show from their station headquarters in Nelsonville, Ohio, radio for quite some time, it hasn't been until recently that they decided to bring on even more controversial figures like anti-establishment broadcaster Alex Jones and others to talk the traditionally mainstream audience at WAIF.

"And Maureen Jones just came on the other day educating people about fluoride in the water, which was very interesting," said Dowling, adding calls have been coming in from all over the South East quadrant of Ohio, including parts of West Virginia about the station that has small town roots but a large broadcast reach.

"I thought it was time the people of our community heard the truth from people like Alex Jones, who by the way, probably shocked a few listeners, but had a very important message which has been basically censored by the mainstream press.

"I'm just an average Mom, giving out a common sense dose of the truth to these arrogant leaders.

Besides Jones, WAIF is scheduling for future morning shows other alternative broadcasters and activists basically silenced in rural America by the Bush propaganda machine and a cooperative press.

Plans also include interviewing many people who have had their voices silenced about 9/11, especially eye-witness, victims and journalists who have struggled hard to wake up a sleeping country.

"It's never too late and people around here are starting to open their hearts and minds, tuning in to listen and participate," added Dalling.

And Stout, who many people in the community believe had his civil rights violated by law enforcement officials for voicing his regularly on WAIF, had one last message to President Bush before getting to the bottom of why officials illegally swarmed down on his private property:

"I don't intend to trade of security for my rights as an American. I believe we need to take our country back from these thugs and brown shirts before or jobs, our financial security and our lives are taken away from us right before our very eyes.

"I want the American people to know that a lot of other people here in Ohio feel like I do and also know the election was stolen by Bush. He is losing popularity because a lot of people over here are finally starting to see through his lies, lies that are costing young American lives every day this illegal war continues."

Cindy Sheehan's Anti-War Protest Swells To 600; Group Prepares To Walk To Bush Ranch Entrance To Demand He Answer Tough Questions

The mother who lost her son in Iraq and has gained national attention, is taking her anti-war march to the President's front door step, demanding he answer tough questions about his true motives behind the war. Ralph Nader, Lyndon LaRouche and a host of Congressional members all have pledged their support to Sheehan, some calling Bush a coward for not facing the grieving mother.

13 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The anti-war protest staged in Crawford TX, centered around the mother who lost her son in Iraq, has swelled from a small band of 50 to a crowd of about 600 people today, the group gathering at a local park before heading to the entrance of President Bush's ranch where he is spending the month of August vacationing.

"We have just had a big rally in the public park in Crawford with speakers taking the stage in support of Cindy," said Hadi Jawad today, a spokesman for the Crawford Peace House for a group assisting Sheehan and other anti-war protestors with necessities during their stay in Crawford.

"Many of the 600 who have assembled have come from out-of-state. From the park we are going to Camp Casey on Prairie Chapel Road and from there, we are going to caravan to the front gate of the President's ranch in order that our message be heard loud and clear."

Cindy Sheehan, a vocal war critic and head of an anti-war group, arrived in Crawford last Saturday, vowing to remain camped-out near the President's ranch until she was arrested or Bush personally met with her to answer serious questions about his true motives behind the war.

Even though Bush has found time to attend a local Republican fund raiser-barbecue this week, he has refused to even spend five-minutes with the concerned mother of a fallen soldier, only referring to Sheehan by name at a Thursday press conference while saying he disagreed with her position on the war but validated her right to protest.

He also has refused to answer Sheehan's direct questions about the illegality of the war, including whether he doctored WMD intelligence reports to justify the Iraqi war and whether he directly deceived and lied to the American people in order to "line the pockets of his rich friends who are profiting from the war."

Sheehan's week-long protest has caused a national uproar among the growing number of people opposed to the war in the wake of Bush's job approval ratings plummeting in recent months, forcing the mainstream media to give Sheehan national attention even though the mainstream media has essentially ignored Bush's overt lies and deceptions concerning the Iraqi War.

Observers claim most, if not all, politicians, media writers and the American people lack the guts to seriously confront Bush and his neo-con followers, allowing them to pursue their new world order policies, quickly leading to a destruction of the Constitution and a dictatorship.

Although many Americans may have been falsely lulled into thinking this an impossibility, close political observers claim otherwise, saying the "writing is on the wall and it's only a matter of time" before America is destroyed from within unless Bush and his more powerful over-lord are stopped.

And Sheehan, who lost her 24-year-old son last year in Baghdad, is one common voice representing million of Americans who feel helpless, trying to stop Bush and his cronies in their tracks before thousands of more innocent lives are taken needlessly.

In one short week, since Sheehan arrived in Crawford, she has become a lightning rod for many feeling helpless in the growing anti-war movement, drawing open support from many in Congress, including other strong Bush critics like Ralph Nader and Lyndon LaRouche.

Recently, Nader distributed an open letter on the internet, encouraging Sheehan to hold her ground in Crawford while, at the same time, essentially calling Bush a coward for not having the courage to meet with her to answer questions about the war.

"From your grief over the loss of your son, Casey, in Iraq has come the courage to spotlight nationally the cowardly character trait of a President who refuses to meet with anyone or any group critical of his illegal, fabricated, deceptive war and occupation of that ravaged country," wrote Nader.

"As a messianic militarist, Mr. Bush turned aside his own father's major advisers who warned him of the terroristic, political, and diplomatic perils to the United States from an invasion of Iraq. He refused to listen."

Nader, a former Presidential candidate, went on to offer questions of his own he'd like Sheehan to ask Bush in case she gets her requested meeting:

"Ask him why, despite Pentagon audits and GAO investigations about corruption, waste and non-delivery of services in Iraq by profiteering large corporations totaling billions of dollars, this Commander of Chief accepted campaign contributions from their executives and proceeds to let this giant corporate robbery continue without the requisite law and order?"

"Consider bringing to him a copy of President Dwight Eisenhower's famous "Cross of Iron" speech, delivered in April 1953 before the nation's newspaper editors in Washington, D.C. And add statements by Marine General Anthony Zinni (ret.), a Middle East specialist who strongly criticized the Bush-Cheney war policy before and after March 2003.

"May you and your associates succeed in galvanizing the public debate in this country over why a growing majority of Americans now think it was a costly mistake to invade Iraq and want our soldiers back, with the U.S. out of that country. He knows that his support for how he is handling this war-occupation is falling close to one third of respondents in recent polls-the lowest yet.

"Even with the mass-media at his why, despite Pentagon audits and GAO investigations about corruption, waste and non-delivery of services in Iraq by profiteering large corporations totaling billions of dollars, this Commander of Chief accepted campaign contributions disposal everyday, he now represents a minority of public opinion, which should give him pause before closing his oil marinated doors on majority views in this nation.

During the week threats of arrests by authorities for trespassing have failed to take place, but the group has been allowed camp-out only a small piece of public property about four miles from the President's ranch and two miles from Crawford.

Since arriving Saturday, Sheehan was met Sunday by National Security Advisor, Steve Hadley, who tried to assure the group that the President was "concerned and wanted a speedy return of the troops."

However, Sheehan told Hadley his message wasn't "good enough," adding she arrived in Crawford to meet personally with Bush and nothing else would suffice, considering that "innocent lives were being lost every day."

"We would like for Bush to explain this 'noble cause' to us, and I plan to ask him why his two daughters, Jenna and Barbara, are not in harm's way, if the cause is so noble," said Sheehan from Crawford. "If he is not ready to send the twins, then he should bring our troops home immediately. We will demand a speedy withdrawal."

Mother Who Lost Son In Iraq Still Camped-Out In Crawford; Bush Holds Press Conference But Fails To Meet With Sheehan

Cindy Sheehan is still standing her ground with about 50 other anti-war protestors on a small piece of county property about four miles from the Crawford ranch. Although Bush held a press conference today mentioning Sheehan by name, he still has refused to meet with her and never really addressed major war policy concerns. The President again was given a free-ride by the press, allowed to run an administration propaganda speech, not a hard-hitting question and answer session.

11 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Cindy Sheehan remains camped out near President Bush's Crawford TX ranch Thursday, but Bush still refuses to step out of his home while vacationing to meet with Sheehan and the group of about 50 anti-war protestors camped out near the Texas ranch.

Sheehan, who lost her son in Iraq in 2004, made the trip to Crawford last Saturday after being angered by Bush's recent public statements, saying the "fallen died for a noble cause."

"I am not going to let him get away with lying to the American people any longer," said Sheehan, adding she was staying in Crawford until Bush meets with her or until she is carried away or arrested.

Sheehan claims Bush lied to the American people about the "noble cause," saying he really means the fallen soldiers died in order to get the President's friends rich from war profits, a war Sheehan claims is based on lies and distortions about Iraq's WMD threat.

Speaking to the nation in the wake of more than 30 troops killed last week, which sparked anger in Sheehan and her trip to Crawford, Bush said, "We have to honor the sacrifices of the fallen by completing the mission and the families of the fallen can be assured that they died for a noble cause."

Earlier in the week, Sheehan and others from several peace groups claimed they had been warned to leave Crawford or face arrest Thursday, coincidentally the same day Vice President Dick Cheney, Secretary of State Condaleeza Rice and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld were to be arriving to meet with Bush in Crawford.

As of early Thursday afternoon, Sheehan and others were still standing their ground without and action by authorities to remove the group from a small piece of county roadside property on Prairie Chapel Road about two miles from Crawford.

"Everything is quiet and about the only thing that has changed is that our numbers are growing," said Hadi Jawad today, spokesman for the Crawford Peace House, a group assisting the protestors with food, beverages and moral support during their stay.

Jawad said the anti-war group was also thinking about holding a press conference of their own in response President Bush's press conference held on his ranch today, where he referred to Sheehan by name, saying he understands the pain and the grieving parents feel as well as saying she had every right to express her opinions openly about wanting the troops immediately withdrawn from Iraq.

"I strongly disagree with her since it will send the wrong message to the enemy, a message that America is weak," said the President while Cheney and Rice stood by his side, the pair along with Rumsfeld in Crawford to discuss war strategy as well as attend a local Republican fundraiser.

During the week, Sheehan also criticized the President for acting aloof, callous and uncaring during a 2004 private meeting with and family members at the White House two months after her son, Casey, 24, died in Iraq five days after arriving in Baghdad.

"He didn't even know our names when he entered the room for the private meeting, acting cocky and it was probably one of the worst experiences in my entire life," recalls Sheehan about the Presidential visit, saying Bush acted more like he was doing Sheehan a favor for allowing the visit.

During the press conference, Bush did not address allegations of insincerity, instead skirting the issue, saying that he generally likes to meet and console family members who have lost loved ones in the war.

Although Sheehan could not be reached for comment after Bush's statements, she previously asked for an apology from Bush and others after the White House released a statement earlier in the week saying Sheehan was originally "happy" with the White House visit, but later changed her story.

"That's just another pack of lies about me and a smear campaign put out by these deceitful people in control of our country. The truth about how I felt and what happened at the White House meeting was in your story," said Sheehan, referring to an article written in early July, an exclusive appearing in the Arctic Beacon and the American Free Press where Sheehan essentially described the President "as inhuman and a sociopath."

Sheehan's trip to Crawford and her request for a personal meeting with Bush while vacationing has drawn national attention, including a Sunday CNN interview with commentator Wolf Blitzer. Allowed about five minutes to tell her story she openly criticized Bush for lying to the American people as well as recounted his insensitivity and arrogance at the 2004 White House meeting.

During the press conference, Bush stayed away from the details of the meeting, instead generally stating that "all people react differently" after meeting with him regarding the loss of loved ones in Iraq.

"Everyone reacts differently and I understand their pain," said Bush, as he appeared to want to answer Sheehan's protests without really answering the hard questions posed by Sheehan's visit.

And the reporters asking questions again gave Bush a free-ride, never once asking him any tough questions about the true motives behind the war or pressing him about what really happened at the Sheehan White House visit.

Instead the press conference took on the air of a government propaganda session where reporters acted like mouth pieces for the administration. Not once was Bush put on the spot or not once was he asked about the infamous Downing Street Memo, indicating he clearly doctored intelligence reports.

Further, not once was his war policy seriously questioned even though millions of Americans think he lied about WMD and Bush's job approval rating is at an all-time low.

Since arriving Saturday, Sheehan was met Sunday by National Security Advisor, Steve Hadley, who tried to assure the group that the President was "concerned and wanted a speedy return of the troops."

However, Sheehan told Hadley his message wasn't "good enough," adding she arrived in Crawford to meet personally with Bush and nothing else would suffice, considering that "innocent lives were being lost every day."

"We would like for Bush to explain this 'noble cause' to us, and I plan to ask him why his two daughters, Jenna and Barbara, are not in harm's way, if the cause is so noble," said Sheehan from Crawford. "If he is not ready to send the twins, then he should bring our troops home immediately. We will demand a speedy withdrawal."

Editor's Note: Since the Sheehan visit to the White House after her son, Casey, 24, died, has drawn national attention, the following story, written by Greg Szymanski, is enclosed. The interview with Sheehan was the first in depth story where she let the nation know how arrogant and uncaring the President really is in private, even though publicly he expresses caring and concern for the fallen soldiers.

Mom, Who Lost Son In Iraq, Talks About 'Disgusting' White House Private Meeting With Bush; Claims He Was Arrogant, 'Totally Detached From Humanity' And Didn't Even Know Her Name
Founder of peace group to stop senseless murder of our children, Cindy Sheehan wants parents to 'wake up' to the illegal nature of the war and Bush's corrupt motives meriting impeachment. She tells parents to advise their children not to fight, saying it's better 'to spend a year in jail instead of an eternity in a coffin.'
July 5, 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Cindy Sheehan has already had her heart ripped into a million pieces by the illegal Iraqi war, losing the son she loved more than life itself only five days after he arrived in Baghdad in April 2004.

There is nothing more painful or more heart breaking than a parent losing a child.

And for Sheehan to lose her 24-year-old son, Casey, must have been like someone taking her very own heart and soul and, without warning, ripping them out and throwing them into the depths of hell.

No one should have to experience such pain, but the cold reality of war is that someone's child actually dies and there are actual parents left living with the hopeless task of trying to cope with the pain.

And anyone with any semblance of a heart and soul knows a mother coping with such a loss needs all the help and understanding she can get.

Anyone with the slightest bit of compassion knows a kind word or a shoulder to cry on helps a mother, who experienced the ultimate loss, get through another day when every day feels like it could be the end of the world.

So when Sheehan received an invitation to meet privately with President Bush at the White House two months after her son died, the least she could have expected was a bit of compassion or a kind word coming from the heart.

But what she encountered was an arrogant man with eyes lacking the slightest bit of compassion, a President totally "detached from humanity" and a man who didn't even bother to remember her son's name when they were first introduced.

Instead of a kind gesture or a warm handshake, Sheehan said she immediately got a taste of Bush arrogance when he entered the room and "in a condescending tone and with a disgusting loud Texas accent," said: "Who we'all honorin' here today?"

"His mouth kept moving, but there was nothing in his eyes or anything else about him that showed me he really cared or had any real compassion at all. This is a human being totally disconnected from humanity and reality. His eyes were empty, hollow shells and he was acting like I should be proud to just be in his presence when it was my son who died for his illegal war! It was one of the most disgusting experiences I ever had and it took me almost a year to even talk about it," said Sheehan in a telephone conversation from Washington D.C. where she was attending a July 4th anti-war rally.

Sheehan said the June 2004 private meeting with the President went from bad to worse to a nightmare when Bush acted like he didn't even want to know her name. She said Bush kept referring to her as 'Ma' or 'Mom' while he "put on a phony act," saying things like 'Mom, I can't even imagine losing a loved one, a mother or a father or a sister or a brother.'

"The whole meeting was simply bizarre and disgusting, designed to intimidate instead of providing compassion. He didn't even know our names," said Sheehan. "Finally I got so upset I just looked him in the eye, saying 'I think you can imagine losing someone. You have two daughters. Imagine losing them?' After I said that he just looked at me, looked at me with no feeling or caring in his eyes at all."

Sheehan said what really upset her about the meeting is that Bush appeared to become annoyed and even angry at her daughter Carley, 25, who also attended the White House get-together.

"My daughter said to him directly 'I wish I could bring my loved one back' and he said something like 'so do we.' Later she told me that after he made his remark he gave her one of the filthiest looks she had ever had gotten in her life.

"I just couldn't believe this was happening. It was so surreal and bizarre. Later I met with some of the other 15 or 16 families who were at the White House the same day and, sure enough, they all felt the same way I did.

"It's interesting that they put us each in separate rooms. I heard this was done to prevent any type of group outburst and since it's easier to control a situation when people are separated. Looking back, all I can say is that the meeting with Bush was one of the most disgusting experiences in my life.

"And I even asked him: 'Why did you even bother to bring us here when I didn't vote for you and don't support the illegal nature of your war?' He said it wasn't political but I know it was just another one of his lies, as he probably wanted to be able to say out on the political stump that he wasn't afraid to meet with families who lost loved ones in the war."

Although Sheehan was opposed to the illegal nature of the war from the outset, it wasn't until January that she began to become politically active.

Besides speaking at rallies and becoming known in Washington for her outspoken criticism of Bush, Sheehan formed a group called Gold Star Families For Peace, joining together families who lost loved ones in an effort to expose the illegal nature of the war and to hasten the return of troops still fighting in Iraq.

Her involvement with the anti-war movement also led her recently to join forces with the After Downing Street movement, a civic, political and activist group seeking to open a Presidential impeachment inquiry based on the release of damaging British intelligence documents showing Bush doctored WMD intelligence reports to justify his war policy.

"Americans need to wake up and we need to put public pressure on our leaders to end this illegal war," said Sheehan, adding that if the public remains passive, recent statements by Donald Rumsfeld that the war may last another 12 years will come true. "We can't let these people continue to murder our children and also continue murdering innocent Iraqi citizens, now totaling more than 100,000.

"This is an immoral war based on a false premise. Iraq was never an imminent threat and the Downing Street Memo proves Bush went to war for oil, greed and all the wrong reasons.

Commenting on Bush's recent speech at Ft. Bragg intended to rally America behind an unpopular war, she said:

"He never mentioned the WMD threat and repeatedly brought up 9/11 in an attempt to scare and frighten everyone again. People have characterized the speech in many ways, but if I had to pick a few words, I would say hypocritical, manipulative, condescending, meaningless drivel."

After the speech, Sheehan was unexpectedly invited on the CNN Larry King Show June 28, but expressed concern and outright anger over the fact she was only given 82 seconds to be "the token anti-war peace speaker" in an hour show which essentially contained a pro war message from all the other guests.

In a recent rebuttal article placed on the Internet, expressing her displeasure with some of the CNN guests and the short time given for her anti-war message, she wrote:

"My absolute favorite guest of the evening was Sen. John Warner, powerful chair of the Senate Armed (Disservices) Committee. Of course, he fell in lockstep behind his Führer (Bush) and praised the speech.... I sat in the Green Room with Sen. Warner's entourage. I wondered (even out loud) what price they have paid for our administration's misdeeds in Iraq. They all looked like happy, well-fed, well-dressed, well-educated, and well-hydrated Americans....I sincerely doubt if any of them had a loved one ripped from their lives by a car bomb, IED, or bullet in an ambush.

"I spoke with John Warner after his interview and told him unless he was prepared to sacrifice even a good night's sleep over this senseless and criminal war, then he should work on ending it, not prolonging the carnage. He told me that I was "entitled to my opinion," but he would respectfully have to disagree with me. That was awfully Constitutional of him!

"I finally got to speak for my 82 seconds (all the time Larry King Live could spare for the peace message) about how this war is a catastrophe and how we should bring the troops home and quit forcing the

Iraqi people to pay for our government's hubris and quit forcing innocent children to suffer so we can allegedly fight terrorism somewhere besides America. How absolutely racist and immoral is it to take America's battles to another land and make an entire country pay for the crimes of others? To me, this is blatant genocide.

"After my brief advocacy for peace, my position was refuted by another mom whose son was killed in Iraq in 2003, saying she "totally disagrees" with me and "feels sorry" for me.

"Well, you know what? I ache for her blindness and for the millions of 'sheeple' who have had the wool pulled over their eyes by this bunch of hypocritical, bad shepherds who are running a disastrous herd over the world. I have distressing news for the 'Soccer Safety Moms' and the 'NASCAR Dads' who are such ardent supporters of this administration and war:

"Your grandchildren and children who will be entering Kindergarten this fall will be fighting George's endless war if he gets his way and is allowed to continue spreading the cancer of imperialism in the Middle-East....

"Think about it when you tuck your child into bed tonight."

Crime Busting, Judge Busting Tough Chicago Investigator Talks About 40 Years Of Putting Government Crooks Behind Bars

Sherman Skolnick, who spearheaded the investigation into largest judicial bribery scandal in U.S. history in 1969, is now back again to finger crooked judges on the U.S. Supreme Court. Saying the Bush administration wants him arrested as a domestic terrorist, Skolnick claims Bush and his cronies are in hot water involving the Chicago grand jury investigation headed by Special Prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald.

10 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Some people say Sherman Skolnick has gone over the edge more than once during his 46 year career of investigating judicial bribery, mafia payoffs, CIA hit squads, pedophilia in the Bush administration and whatever else falls on the table in his self-imposed quest to keep the corrupt honest.

And some people say Skolnick is falling over the cliff once again with his recent article, pinning indictments on Bush and his cronies based on what he calls credible sources, telling him they have been nabbed for perjury and obstruction of justice in the Chicago grand jury investigation about the Valerie Plame-CIA leak case.

"I knew I would be called a liar for this one, but it won't be the first time or the last," said the tough talking investigator, nicknamed the "judge buster," from his home on Chicago's south side, a place he has called home for the last 54 years.

And, in the face of adversity and doubt, Skolnick would be the first to crack a smile and scoff at his detractors, saying "it goes with the territory" since dealing with dark, back alley payoff type stories brings dark, back alley comments about most anything he writes and investigates.

But, on the bright side, there are many others who know his work well, swearing on a stack of holy bibles about Skolnick's analytical approach, incredible energy and a 40 year data base of sources he uses in order to finger the bad guys who are swimming like sharks and feeding off the people's money.

And to those who know the "judge buster" even better, know him as a friend or colleague, he is considered nothing less than a national treasure and a man who will stop at nothing to find out the truth, even if it means stripping the robes off the country's most powerful and corrupt judges, even if it means taking on the Bush administration right square in the belly where it hurts with accusations of homosexuality and pedophilia running rampant right in the halls of the White House.

In this shady world of backroom deals, syndicate payoffs, and well-oiled corruption, Skolnick has somehow over the years found his place, a place on the outside looking in, a place where he is always staring in very closely with a watchful eye and a finely tuned ear able to spot a crooked judge or a politician as quick as a dog can sniff out a bone.

It would take several book volumes to detail all the investigations Skolnick has been involved in and all the judges and crooked politicians he's been responsible for putting behind bars since the early 1960's. But like any good baseball hitter, only as good as his last at bat, Skolnick prefers to talk about his last investigation first, working his way back to when he was a young man in Chicago who represented his parents before the Illinois Supreme Court for being bilked by a shady broker for $7,000, the family's entire life savings.

Besides breaking the story about the Bush indictments by the Chicago grand jury last week, Skolnick is in the midst of a five-year investigation of corruption within the U.S. Supreme Court regarding Bush v. Gore and the 2000 election. He said he initiated his investigation over what he calls a ruling that is a travesty of justice and a demonstration of corruption at the highest level of the judiciary.

But before rolling up his sleeves and putting on his gloves to fight the likes of Chief Justice William Rehnquist and Justice Antonin Scalia, who he calls the "go to hell" judge, Skolnick took time out to recall the his parent's struggle with the Illinois Supreme Court, the case that got Skolnick started along time ago in the tireless and often-times thankless business of uncovering corruption among the rich and powerful.

"I trained myself in the law," recalls Skolnick, who prepared all the legal documents and arguments every legal step of the way, the case ending up in the state's high court. "I told the judge right there in open court if my parents were not treated fairly, I would one day come back and put every one of the crooked judges on the high court in jail where they belonged.

"And that's what I did when they came down with their crooked decision against my parents. Honest judges are the most endangered species in our country and one rule of thumb I have used over the years is to look for a the closest bank near the courthouse to find the black-robed criminals.

"It's not in the back alleys with a bag of money where the judges are bribed. It's usually right in the bank owned by the judges, a bank owned also by underworld and criminal types. This is where the bribing goes on and where all the dirty money is transferred.

"Not all the judges are corrupt, mind you, there are some good ones. And I would also like to say that I am always fair with who I am accusing. In fact, when I have the goods on let's say a corrupt politician or judge, I usually tell them what I have and that if they come clean to the public, admitting what they did, I'll put in a good word to the DA in order that he go a little easier on him.

"But in all the years, not one of them took me up on the offer. I remember telling that in the hallway in a Chicago courthouse to former Illinois Governor and U.S. Appeals Court Judge Otto Kerner, who went to jail when I found out he took bribes involving horseracing cases"

Skolnick In 1969 Uncovers Biggest Judicial Bribery Scandal In U.S. History

After promising his parents and vowing to come back to investigate the wrongdoings on the Illinois Supreme Court, Skolnick made good on his word, creating a public judicial watchdog group called the "Citizens' Committee To Clean Up The Courts" in an effort to stamp out corruption.

Setting his investigative sights on his own home turf first, Skolnick uncovered unknown documents in the basement of a Cook County building, showing and eventually proving that two Illinois Supreme Court Justices took bribes from a banker and former chief tax collector of Illinois, Theodore Isaacs, to wipe out criminal charges against him.

In August of 1969, Time Magazine featured a story about Skolnick and the Illinois case, the largest judicial bribery scandal in the country, a scandal that eventually put the former director of the Illinois Department of Revenue in jail along with one of his accomplices, a sitting federal appeals court judge.

Besides catapulting Skolnick into the national limelight, the case also began a lasting relationship with U.S. Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens, who was then acting as special counsel to the commission investigating the corrupt judges.

Stevens' work on the commission also catapulted him into the public eye, beginning his rise to fame in the U.S. Supreme Court. In fact, Skolnick still keeps in touch with Stevens, calling him an honorable and honest man, who also wrote the introduction to Skolnick's most recent book titled "Ahead of the Parade," which in part looks at the lives of three honest high-level judges who were banished from the bench and then terrorized for, of all things, making honest and fair decisions.

"This one particular judge in my book was a chief judge in the federal courts who made a decision against a major oil company," said Skolnick, adding that he learned through investigating the judge's story about a secret judicial tribunal where judges who try to buck the system are dealt with in an underhanded and mafia-like manner.

"I get a call from the judge one day and he says, 'Sherman, you can't believe what's happened? My brother in law who is a lawyer was just disbarred and then one day I came into my office, an office under tight security, and everything was gone. I mean everything. Including my files, my file cabinets, everything cleaned out!'"

Skolnick's book goes on to talk about other honest judges with similar stories, one having his court room taken over by mafia figures and another quitting the bench and relocating thousands of miles away after ruling against the president of a state bar association caught with perjured affidavits in a million dollar probate case.

"This other judge calls me and tells me that his court has been taken over by the mafia, but when he goes to the FBI to investigate, agents instead begin to investigate the judge and not the mafia. After having his family threatened, the judge finally resigned," said Skolnick, adding that these examples prove his point about honest judges being the most endangered species in America.

Skolnick Uncovers A Nationwide Network Of Secret Judicial Tribunals

Taking on the corrupt judicial system like a bull in a china shop with no qualms about leaving a dirty mess in his wake, Skolnick claims few people in and out of the law trade even know or understand the inner workings of this secret judicial group.

Skolnick claims the tribunals are organized with one being formed in each of the federal judicial circuits but all acting above the law, leaving no public records regarding the course, scope, direction and outcome of any decisions being made.

"In Chicago, for example, they are the Judicial Council of the Seventh Circuit, involving the federal courts of Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin. Each Judge on the U.S. Supreme Court actually wears two hats. First, they are, of course, a justice on the high court. Secondly, they are the supervising Circuit Justice of one or more of the federal court circuits. They are more or less the "orchestra leader" of the secret tribunals, apparently operating outside the regular court system, known as Judicial Council," instructs Skolnick about the corruption within a purportedly honest justice system.

"I have been a court reformer more than forty six years. For more than forty years, I have been the Founder/Chairman of a court-reform group, Citizen's Committee to Clean Up the Courts. Among other things, through volunteer associates and investigators worldwide, we compile data on financial and espionage matters. Why? Because we are about the only ones who use the label Banker-Judge to describe important judges who are interwoven with the financial system and aristocracy, and some, who are entangled with the espionage cartel, the American CIA, and other spook agencies."

Talking about an ongoing investigation into corruption in the judiciary and the Coca-Cola Co., Skolnick wrote in a series of articles titled "Coca-Cola, The CIA and the Courts" about the use of the secret tribunals and its relationship to the rampant corruption involving an unholy triumvirate of corporate America, spook agencies and the judiciary.

"I seem to be one of the few who understands something about this secret Gestapo, the Judicial Council. They operate beyond the Bill of Rights," said Skolnick. "Some years ago I confronted the dictators operating as the Judicial Council of the Seventh Circuit, in Chicago, Illinois. My detailed court papers, setting forth their crimes, completely disappeared from the U.S. Supreme Court officially listed as Sherman H. Skolnick, petitioner versus Judicial Council of the Seventh Circuit, respondents.

"Our group did much of the investigations and research that on September 22, 2003, was filed as Motion to Investigate Fraud Upon the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, Perpetrated by the Judges Themselves. As shown in the detailed document, among other things, I was a key sworn witness in the matter.

"I obtained the confession of a local attorney who was apparently a spy in the camp of the one who sued Coca-Cola. He admitted his sister was "media buyer for Coca-Cola". Among the details was the matter of cocaine, a by-product of the massive processing in the U.S. of coca leaves for the secret base of Coca-Cola. Some of the cocaine in the U.S. actually is not smuggled in but is created within the U.S. There is "leakage" into non-legal channels of cocaine and implicated in the same has been George Herbert Walker Bush, a director of a pharmaceutical firm, and a federal appeals judge, later chief Judge, installed on the bench by Bush in Chicago.

"There has been a Coca-Cola connection to bribery of judges and espionage, as stated in the court papers. For example, this was the route for corrupting at least two U.S. Supreme Court Judges of the 5-Judge majority that arbitrarily installed George W. Bush as the occupant and resident of the White House. Some call it the infamous Bush versus Gore litigation."

Skolnick Investigates Bribery And Malign Influences To Obtain A Five-Judge Majority On The U. S. Supreme Court To Install Bush As President In 2000

Once Bush was installed and appointed President by a narrow five to four decision, Skolnick began taking a lose look at the dealings of the court. For five years he has been compiling data in what he calls "an arbitrary and corrupt ruling," adding a "fictitious President has been put in the Oval Office."

Skolnick notes that his longtime friend, Justice Stevens, issued one of the most blistering dissenting opinions ever made by a high court judge while another dissenter, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, deleted certain "choice revealing matters" after being subjected to what amounted to threats by some of the five majority justices.

Without even blinking an eye, Skolnick claims four of the five who authored the Bush majority are sitting on the bench in direct violation of federal law for conflict of interest and mandatory annual judicial income disclosures related to ties with major corporations, whose litigation is ruled upon by the judges without disqualifying themselves.

"The kingpin of the infamous five was Judge Antonin Scalia. He and three judges in the federal appeals court in Chicago, U.S. Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit, one step below the high court in Washington, three were professors together and one was law school dean at Rockefeller's University of Chicago Law School," said Skolnick about the similar judicial and educational past of present-day members of the Supreme Court.

"These four Rockefeller judges, while on the bench, continue to represent the several billion dollar investment portfolio of Rockefeller's University of Chicago. Included are stocks of major corporations whose litigation is ruled upon by these judges who do not disqualify themselves. Further, by failing to reveal this, these judges violate a federal law requiring a mandatory annual judicial disclosure of income which these judges sign subject to the penalties of perjury.

Moving to some of the dirty particulars behind the scenes of the Bush v. Gore decision, Skolnick added:

"Particularly arrogant is Judge Scalia. In the law trade he is known as a "go to hell judge". In December, 2000, presenting the position of George W. Bush in the high court case of Bush versus Gore, was Theodore B. Olson, at the time, a private law partner of Eugene Scalia, son of Judge Scalia. Some contend Olson is a "court bagman" in Washington and in the Federal Courthouse in Chicago.

"After George W. Bush was thus installed, Olson was made the Solicitor General. In that capacity, he perverted an intellectual property case in the High Court which benefited Mickey Mouse---Disney---by extending their copyright 75 years, worth many billions of dollars. And funds from Disney and Coca-Cola were involved in corrupting the unholy five on the high court."

Going even deeper into the web of corruption and influence peddling involved in the Bush v. Gore decision, Skolnick draws attention to some mysterious circumstances involving Olson and his estranged wife, Barbara Olson, allegedly killed on one of the four doomed 9/11 flights.

"In the 9-11 matter, there is a serious controversy whether Olson's estranged wife Barbara, with whom he apparently had not spoken to for some time, actually spoke from a supposed hi-jacked plane directly to Theodore B. Olson. Was it actually a conversation with a call center operator? Was the American CIA involved? Some think so," wrote Skolnick in a recent article on the subject.

"Some continue to aver that Barbara Olson did not perish and has a plastic surgeon new face and a wig. And, moreover, that she is parked in seclusion in an Embassy in Sweden. If so, her emergence some day would pulverize the fake story of 9-11 "Moslem terrorists" like the internal planted explosives that took down the Twin Towers of the World Trade Center."

For those more inclined to read and analyze an in depth look the Coca-Cola, CIA and Supreme Court connections, Skolnick provides an in depth series of articles on his personal web site at www.skolnicksreport.com.

In the Coca-Cola reports, Skolnick claims he has documented solid evidence how Homeland Security and the FBI run a separate warehouse near the Supreme Court where documents are secretly stored. In one case, Skolnick recently sent a box of incriminating documents by registered mail to one of the dissenting Supreme Court judges that never made it to its destination.

"A box of documents sent by registered mail and addressed to one of the dissenting Judges was unlawfully there blocked by the American Gestapo," said Skolnick. "Instead the documents were sent to a secret federal tribunal supposedly considering misdeeds and corruption of federal judges.

"A tiny portion of our investigation of the high court corruption, without mentioning us at all by name, became the subject of a lengthy story in Vanity Fair Magazine, October, 2004 issue. Following this was a forty minute segment about this on the Terri Gross Show on National Public Radio.

"Also, risking their future career, some of the law clerks of the dissenting four judges in Bush versus Gore reportedly stole private secret records of the infamous five showing the malign influence worked on the Judges in installing Bush. Instead of investigating the five high court judicial criminals, Homeland Security and the FBI have been threatening and inflicting harm on the dissenting four judges and their brave law clerks."

Skolnick Investigates Bush Indictments Of The Chicago Grand Jury Assembled In 2003 To Investigate The Valerie Plame-CIA Leak

Skolnick recently stuck his neck out again with a story saying perjury and obstruction of justice indictments have been vote out by the grand jury in a host of related wrongdoings by Bush and his cronies in a spill over of the Valerie Plame investigation, spearheaded by Chicago U.S. Federal Attorney and Special Prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald.

Skolnick claims a 'true bill' has been voted by the grand jury, indicting Bush and others as well as naming Justice Scalia and justice Rehnquist as un-indicted co-conspirators, adding the indictments have been suppressed from the public due to the sensitivity of issues involved, similar to way indictments against Richard Nixon were suppressed during Watergate.

Skolnick also reported last week that the situation has become so serious that his longtime friend Justice Stevens arrived in Chicago to try and work out a deal in the country's best interests, considering the gravity and sensitivity of a sitting President being indicted.

"Stevens is in town to try and arbitrate a solution," said Skolnick. "One or more of the grand juries have concluded their probe and have voted True Bills, Federal Criminal indictments, against George W. Bush, Richard Cheney, "Scooter" Libby, Condoleeza Rice, and Theodore B. Olson; and several media people not previously mentioned in the monopoly press as implicated,"

For His Pioneering Judicial Reform Efforts, How Has The Establishment Reacted To Skolnick?

During his long career of throwing crooked lawyers and judges in jail, Skolnick has been sent to jail himself eight times for contempt of court, each time the judge who put him behind bars eventually spending time in jail himself.

"That's a record I an extremely proud to have," said Skolnick, adding authorities at times found it hard to fit his wheel chair in a squad car since Skolnick has been handicapped since childhood.

Besides being found in contempt of court, Skolnick is also officially barred from attending federal court proceedings in his home state of Illinois as well as neighboring Indiana and Wisconsin, even after trying to legally protect his civil rights through what he a calls a "CIA corrupted American Civil Liberties Union."

And regarding his latest investigations into Bush v. Gore, the grand jury indictments and the pedophilia ring connected to the White House, Skolnick said he along with his journalistic internet partner, Lenny Bloom, who together run www.cloakanddagger.de have been officially put on Bush's hit list.

"I heard that Chief of Staff, Andrew Card, called me a domestic terrorist and Bush wants me and Lenny, a Canadian citizen living in Toronto, arrested," said Skolnick, adding he heard Bush claiming he didn't even care about the legal stumbling blocks of incarcerating a Canadian without having proper legal jurisdiction.

"It's ridiculous, but recent federal court decisions, one even handed down in a federal appeals court by the new Supreme Court nominee, John Roberts, gives Bush unlimited Gestapo-like power when it comes to domestic terrorism. In short, I think Bush is a megalomaniac and extremely dangerous to this country."

Four Star Army General Fired For Alleged Sexual Misconduct; Some Say He May Have Been Ousted For Attempting To Thwart The Bush Administration Plans To Strike Iran

General Kevin P. Byrnes was relieved of his duties Tuesday, only the third four star officer to be fired in more than 15 years. Observers speculated there are much deeper reasons behind the firing of the high-ranking officer said to be against the administration's escalating war policies.

10 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Sabers are rattling deep within the highest-levels of the U.S. military as for the first time in more than a decade a four star officer was relieved of his duties, Army officials announced Tuesday.

Gen. Kevin P. Byrnes was relieved for personal conduct reasons as the Pentagon Inspector General's Office has been investigating possible sexual misconduct by Byrnes for several months.

"The investigation is complete but it is yet to be determined if the general will be only demoted or charged criminally," said a Pentagon spokesman about relieving Byrnes of his duties as commander of the prestigious Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC).

To understand the magnitude of the firing and its unusual nature, Byrnes, 55, was only months away from full retirement and though high-ranking officers are commonly relieved of their duties rarely - if ever - is such a drastic measure taken against a four star general.

Although the military and Pentagon officials, including Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, are remaining silent about the details, speculation among some military observers is that the firing of Gen. Byrnes goes much deeper than only personal sexual misconduct.

Sources close to the military who remain anonymous said Byrnes was part of U.S. military faction discontented with the Bush administration war policies in Iraq and the potential for a nuclear disaster in Iran.

In an effort to stop the Bush administration in its tracks, sources say Byrnes was about to lead a coup against the hawks in the military and executive branch determined to lead America into a global conflict, leading to devastating ramifications for the country, as well as financial and social chaos.

Rumors inside the military say that a growing faction of discontented high-ranking officers are attempting internally to try and stop the Bush administration's imminent plans for war with Iran in an effort to avert global war.

Although the exact number of high-ranking military involved is undetermined, sources have disclosed it appears to be evenly split between pro Bush and anti Bush factions.

Even though speculation abounds about that an attempted coup relating to the Byrnes firing, no one would question the strange rumblings of war against Iran and warnings of terrorist threats on the homeland that are beginning to circulate from administration officials and media talking heads almost on a daily basis.

Further, ominous reports are even coming from the Washington Post this week that the Pentagon has developed its first ever war plans for operations within the United States, plans justifying and making necessary preparations for martial law in case of a homeland terrorist attack.

As reported in the front-page article, sources working at the headquarters of the military's Northern Command (Northcom), located in Colorado Springs, Colorado gave details to Post reporter Bradley Graham, who was recently given a tour of Northcom headquarters at Peterson Air Force Base.

Observers say the article appears to be a deliberate military leak conducted for the purpose of getting America accustomed to hearing the possibility of military rule and martial law.

According to the Post, "the new plans provide for what several senior officers acknowledged is the likelihood that the military will have to take charge in some situations, especially when dealing with mass-casualty attacks that could quickly overwhelm civilian resources.

"The war plans represent a historic shift for the Pentagon, which has been reluctant to become involved in domestic operations and is legally constrained from engaging in law enforcement."

Concerning Byrnes, he is one of only 11 four-star generals in the Army previously in charge of all Army training programs and the development of combat guidelines for soldiers. His position at TRADOC gave him command of 33 training schools on 16 Army installations, one of the most prestigious and sought after positions in the entire Army.

Only twice since 1990 has a four star officer been relieved of his duties, once happening to a high-level Navy officer in 1995 and the other a high ranking Air Force officer in 1990.

Mother, Who Lost Son In Iraq, Says She'll Be Arrested Thursday For Protesting Near Bush Ranch And Being Called a Security Risk

Cindy Sheehan, who arrived in Crawford Saturday with a small group of about 50 anti-war protestors, now faces the possibility of being jailed for trespassing. Coincidentally, the threat of a Thursday arrest comes on the day Condaleeza Rice and Donald Rumsfeld are arriving in Crawford for a visit with Bush.

9 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Cindy Sheehan, the mother who lost her son in Iraq and is protesting with supporters near the Bush ranch in Crawford, TX, said today she has been told she will be arrested Thursday for becoming a threat to national security.

Sheehan, who arrived in Crawford last Saturday, is camping out in a tent along with about 50 other anti-war protestors on the side of Prairie Chapel Road about two miles on the outskirts of Crawford and four miles from the Bush ranch, where the President is taking an extended hiatus.

Observers coincidentally discovered the threat of Sheehan's arrest came after they learned Secretary of State Condaleeza Rice and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld are due in Crawford sometime Thursday for a visit with Bush, the trio then headed to a local Republican fund raiser.

Although Bush has failed to address her and personally answer questions about his motives behind the Iraq War, Sheehan's motivation for coming to Crawford in the first place, the outspoken war critic has stated she would remain protesting either until arrested or Bush meets with her.

In the meantime, Sheehan and the small band of anti-war protestors are positioned on the side of a road, a path Bush needs to take by car caravan en route to the local fund raiser.

Of course, observers point out, if the President chooses to avoid the unfriendly crowd, he can travel by helicopter, but organizers say this would be a direct sign Bush would rather avoid "putting his foot in the fire" since the fund raiser is only a short drive away from his Crawford ranch.

Regarding possible trespassing violations that now are being used by authorities as the legal reasons to remove the protestors, Sheehan said:

"I think we need as many people here on Thursday anyway, because Rice and Rumsfeld will also be here," said Sheehan. I'd rather not get arrested, but I'm willing to, I'm willing to have them pick me up and carry me away."

As early as Tuesday morning, Sheehan is reporting that the threat of arrest was real and sheriff's deputies on Saturday identified several areas as county property on which they could stand.

Now, Sheehan claims, the deputies changed their tune, saying most of the area used by the protestors was in fact private property, forcing the group to huddle together onto one small area of roadside property.

"Can you believe that on the road to the President's house they don't know exactly who owns it?" asked Sheehan.

Sheehan said she was provoked to come to Crawford after Bush last week made public statements that she called "a pack of lies."

Speaking to the nation in the wake of more than 24 Marines killed last week, Bush said, "We have to honor the sacrifices of the fallen by completing the mission and the families of the fallen can be assured that they died for a noble cause."

And it was the words "noble cause" that sparked anger in Sheehan, the mother who lost her 24-year-old son, Casey, in 2004, and founder of the anti-war group called Gold Star Families for Peace.

Since arriving, Sheehan was met Sunday by National Security Advisor, Steve Hadley, who tried to assure the group that the President was "concerned and wanted a speedy return of the troops."

However, Sheehan told Hadley his message wasn't "good enough," adding she arrived in Crawford to meet personally with Bush and nothing else would suffice, considering that "innocent lives were being lost every day."

"We would like for Bush to explain this 'noble cause' to us, and I plan to ask him why his two daughters, Jenna and Barbara, are not in harm's way, if the cause is so noble," said Sheehan from Crawford. "If he is not ready to send the twins, then he should bring our troops home immediately. We will demand a speedy withdrawal."

Journalist Stands By His Story That Bush And Others Indicted But Retracts Story About Potential Firing Of Chicago Special Prosecutor

Investigative reporter released story about the firing of U.S. Federal Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald by mistake over on line mix up with web master.

8 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The journalist who first broke the story about President Bush and others being indicted by the Chicago grand jury stands by his original account, but says a story he released Sunday about the potential firing of Special Prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald was a mistake.

"We apologize for the inaccuracy, however, we stand by our on the record source Tom Heneghen and our story reporting that the 'true bill' indictments have been voted out by the Chicago grand jury against a host of Bush administration officials and that Vice President Cheney, President Bush and Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice are aware that boxes of cash left the Phillipines right after 9/11," said investigative journalist Tom Flocco, one of the first to break the indictment story.

Flocco apologized to readers Monday for his in a statement released on his web site, which had been down for several days for technical reasons. Flocco added the story was inadvertently put on line due to a controversy with his web master over file transfers and other matters.

"The rough working draft about the fired prosecutor should never have been placed online and was in a batch of files transferred by the new webmaster and was posted by mistake," said Flocco.

The wide-range of indictments for perjury and obstruction of justice against Bush and other top administration officials, was first reported last week by Flocco, who claimed sources close to the grand jury investigation in Chicago told him indictments had been handed down but not released to the public due to the highly sensitive nature of the charges.

Flocco reported last week that Fitzgerald's grand jury voted out "true bills" or federal criminal indictments against President Bush, Vice-President Cheney, Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez, former Attorney General John Ashcroft, former CIA Director George Tenet, Presidential Senior Advisor Karl Rove, Presidential Chief of Staff Andrew Card, Vice-Presidential Chief of Staff I. "Scooter" Libby, imprisoned New York Times reporter Judith Miller and Vice-Presidential Senior Advisor Mary Matalin.

The U.S. Attorney's office in Chicago, through its media spokesman, Randall Sanborn, refused comment on any aspect of the grand jury proceedings, but high-level and credible legal observers claim suppression of grand jury indictments is not unusual, especially when dealing with matters concerning the national interest such as the Nixon indictments during Watergate and now Bush.

Although Flocco is taking considerable heat for running the story, long time Chicago truth-teller and advocate for cleaning up the judicial system, Sherman Skolnick, agreed with Flocco's reporting.

"I have received credible reports from my high-level government sources in Canada, the United States and Europe that the grand juries have concluded their probe and have voted True Bills, Federal Criminal indictments, against George W. Bush, Richard Cheney, "Scooter" Libby, Condoleeza Rice, and Theodore B. Olson and several media people not previously mentioned in the monopoly press as implicated," said Skolnick in a telephone conversation Saturday from his Chicago home.

Skolnick, who has been fighting judicial indiscretion and criminality for over 40 years since the early 1960's, is one of the few men in America who has developed credible sources to back-up what he reports, especially concerning judicial stories taking place right in his own Chicago backyard.

"I expected to be called a liar on this one for sometime after my story appeared, but the truth will come out," he said regarding a recent article he published verifying indictments have been handed down.

And Skolnick is no "average Joe or talking head," since he is probably responsible for putting more crooked lawyers and judges behind bars than any other single American and is still pursuing judicial corruption with vengeance, as founder of his public interest group called Citizens' Committee to Clean Up the Courts.

Recently on his website www.skolnicksreport.com and www.cloakanddagger.de he posted an article titled "Bush and Co. Face Prosecution," where he gave a detailed look at the recent grand jury proceedings going on in Chicago and indictments handed down against Bush.

"One or more of the grand juries have concluded their probe and have voted True Bills, Federal Criminal indictments, against George W. Bush, Richard Cheney, "Scooter" Libby, Condoleeza Rice, and Theodore B. Olson; and several media people not previously mentioned in the monopoly press as implicated," wrote Skolnick.

"Shown also as unindicted co-conspirators are two Judges on the U.S. Supreme Court, William Rehnquist and Antonin Scalia, who are among the "Gang of Five" also in Bush versus Gore. Because of the horrendous consequences involved, the indictments are suppressed and there may be an extended delay until they appear on the Chicago Federal Court open records.

"The substance of the details in this story have been confirmed to us as being true and correct by high government officials, with spotless records, of the U.S., Canada, and Europe. To distract from the impending release of the indictments and the naming of the unindicted co-conspirators, the Bush White House has caused deadly rumors to circulate.

"Such as, that the FBI is tracking in the District of Columbia and elsewhere that certain supposed "terrorists" have suitcase dirty nukes ready to set off in D.C. Such as, that Bush will declare Martial Law and suspend Habeas Corpus, the U.S. Constitution and the Bill of Rights. Such as the U.S. will be wracked with financial and domestic anarchy as Bush seeks asylum in Brazil, or Australia, or elsewhere overseas."

Authorities Getting Ready To Throw Anti-War Protestors From Bush Ranch For Trespassing

Cindy Sheehan, who lost her son in Iraq last year, won't leave Crawford TX until she's arrested or personally meets with Bush. No trespassing signs are now going up near to the location where the group of about 50 anti-war protestors are camped out near the President's ranch while he vacations. In the event Sheehan and the group are told to leave, they have obtained legal counsel to protect their free speech rights.

8 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Law enforcement authorities are taking steps to remove a group of about 50 peace activists camped near President Bush's Crawford, TX, ranch, mounting an effort to accuse the Iraqi War protestors of trespassing.

Cindy Sheehan, a mother who lost her son in Baghdad and founded an anti-war group, traveled to the President's ranch Saturday with other supporters, demanding answers from the vacationing President about his recent public statements regarding the "noble nature" of the Iraqi War.

Hadi Jawad, a spokesperson for the Crawford Peace House helping Sheehan and supporters with food and water during their protest, said today "it was a very fluid and changing situation right now" with authorities keeping a close eye on the group and warning them about the possible trespassing violation.

"A woman who owns the property across the road from where the group is camped out today began putting up no trespassing signs with law enforcement officials nearby," said Jawad.

Sheehan and her group of anti-war protestors are camped out near the President's ranch about 2 miles from Crawford on the side of Prairie Chapel Road.

Jawad said Sheehan tried to get as close to ranch as possible, choosing the Prairie Road location since Bush, who has not yet confronted the group, is due to pass by the protestors on Thursday on his way to a local fundraiser.

"We are digging in," said Jawad, "and we are not planning to leave the location since Bush has no other choice but to pass by Cindy and the others on Thursday since it's the only way he can get to the fund raiser unless he decides to go by helicopter."

As a result of the no trespassing signs being put up around the protestors, Sheehan and the others are seeking legal counsel with the assistance of the ACLU in order that their free speech rights are protected in lieu of a police effort to move the protestors for trespassing.

"We are going to stand our ground and put up a legal fight," added Jawad. "I was told today that nothing was going to happen so I am assuming the authorities are mounting its plan to remove the protestors. All I can do is that we will challenge any attempt to be removed because Cindy is technically on the side of the road on public property.

"People are walking on the property across the road and that is where the lady who owns that vacant property is putting up trespassing signs."

Sheehan, a vocal critic of the President's war policy, said she was provoked to come to Crawford after Bush last week made public statements that she called "a pack of lies."

Speaking to the nation in the wake of more than 24 Marines killed last week, Bush said, "We have to honor the sacrifices of the fallen by completing the mission and the families of the fallen can be assured that they died for a noble cause."

And it was the words "noble cause" that sparked anger in Sheehan, the mother who lost her 24-year-old son, Casey, in 2004, and founder of the anti-war group called Gold Star Families for Peace.

Calling Bush's statements callous and untrue, his words sparked Sheehan's trip to the Crawford, where she plans to camp out until either she's "arrested or gets answers to many questions" surrounding what she calls an illegal war."

Since arriving Bush has not met with the protestors, but Sunday National Security Advisor, Steve Hadley, met with Sheehan, saying the President was "concerned and wanted a speedy return of the troops."

However, Sheehan told Hadley his message wasn't "good enough," adding she arrived in Crawford to meet personally with Bush and nothing else would suffice, considering that "innocent lives were being lost every day."

"We would like for Bush to explain this 'noble cause' to us, and I plan to ask him why his two daughters, Jenna and Barbara, are not in harm's way, if the cause is so noble," said Sheehan from Crawford. "If he is not ready to send the twins, then he should bring our troops home immediately. We will demand a speedy withdrawal."

As Sheehan prepared for a long stay in the hot Texas summer heat, she added:

"I am tired of all the lies while young men continue to. I want him to finally admit that my son, Casey, didn't die for a noble cause, but died in order that President Bush's friends could get rich and line their greedy pockets with oil money.

"We want our loved ones' sacrifices to be honored by bringing our nation's sons and daughters home from the travesty that is Iraq immediately. This war is based on horrendous lies and deceptions. Just because our children are dead, why would we want any more families to suffer the same pain and devastation that we are?"

Sheehan also recently expressed deep displeasure with Bush in an exclusive article in The Arctic Beacon and the American Free Press, discussing, in depth, a recent trip she made to the White House after being invited in the wake of her son's death after only being in Baghdad five days during 2004.

Called to the White House supposedly to be consoled by the President, instead Sheehan reported just the opposite, saying she was greeted by an "arrogant and heartless man" who entered the private room to meet with Sheehan without even knowing anyone's, including her fallen son.

"It was a horrendous experience. I left feeling that this man was not even human. It was the worst experience of my life," said Sheehan in the article that appeared a month ago about her private meeting with Bush.

Sheehan recounted her White House experience with Wolf Blitzer of CNN in a nationally televised interview Saturday, as she told viewers how the President was callous, cold and didn't even know her family member's names, including her own, when he entered the White House room for the personal visit in 2004, two months after her son was killed in combat.

In response to Sheehan's comments and the article in the Arctic Beacon and American Free Press, officials now released a statement saying that Sheehan has changed her story since she originally said she was pleased with the Presidential visit.

Although Sheehan was unavailable for comment, all her past statements to the press, including the long interview with The Arctic Beacon and The American Free Press, indicate it would have been totally out of character for Sheehan to make such a statement unless taken totally out context by White House officials to discredit Sheehan.

Besides being founder of Gold Star Families for Peace, Sheehan is an active member of the large Washington D.C. group called After Downing Street, a large contingent of politicians and activists calling for a Congressional investigation over the infamous Downing Street Memo and whether Bush doctored WMD intelligence reports to justify the war in Iraq.

Along with members of Gold Star, Sheehan is being accompanied to the President's ranch by members of the peace group Code Pink, Veteran's for Peace (VFP), Military Families Speak Out (MFSO), Iraq Veterans Against the War (IVAW) and Crawford Peace House.

Prominent Chicago Judicial Watch Dog Claims U.S. Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens In Chicago To Mediate Resolution Concerning Grand Jury Indictments Against Bush And Other High-Level Officials

Sherman Skolnick, the long time 'judge buster' and advocate for judicial honesty, claims Newsweek story will hit news stands Monday, claiming Bush will fire Special Prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald. Skolnick also contends Bush has been given two options: either resign or stop the grand jury.

7 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Sherman Skolnick, a long time Chicago 'judge buster' with a 40 year history of investigating judicial criminality, today confirmed his sources claim U.S. Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens is in Chicago looking for a way to "prevent a national catastrophe" by mediating the dilemma caused by the recent grand jury indictments against President Bush and other high-level officials.

Skolnick claims a 'true bill' has been voted by the grand jury, indicting Bush and others for perjury and obstruction of justice, as well as naming U.S. Supreme Antonin Scalia and William Rehnquist as un-indicted co-conspirators.

Skolnick adds the indictments have been suppressed from the public due to the sensitivity of issues involved, similar to way indictments against Richard Nixon were suppressed during Watergate.

Speaking from his Chicago home, Skolnick said Justice Stevens is in town for a speech but also arrived to try and work out a deal in the country's best interests, considering the gravity and sensitivity of a sitting President being indicted.

"Stevens is in town to try an arbitrate a solution," said Skolnick, who has known him since the early 1960's when Stevens served as special counsel to an investigating commission into one the biggest judicial bribery scandals in U.S. history based in large part on Skolnick's investigative work.

In the 60s bribery scandal, Skolnick provided crucial testimony substantiating bribery charges against the Illinois Supreme Court, catapulting Skolnick to national prominence as a judicial watchdog and Stevens eventually to the U.S. Supreme Court.

According to Skolnick's sources, Bush has been given two distinct choices in the wake of the impending release of the indictments suppressed from public view, either to resign or stop the grand jury process, his sources telling him that Bush said 'if he takes the fall for this, he'll cause a financial disaster in the process.'

Skolnick also said Newsweek went to press Saturday at 6pm with a story to hit news stands Monday regarding the zealous Chicago Special Prosecutor, Patrick Fitzgerald's investigation that started in 2003. Fitzgerald's probe began by looking into the Valerie Plame-CIA leak, but spilled over into more damaging issues involving Bush and others, including the 2000 Presidential elections, the war and Iraq and even the administration's handling of 9/11.

Recently on his website www.skolnicksreport.com and www.cloakanddagger.de he posted an article titled "Bush and Co. Face Prosecution," where he gave a detailed look at the recent grand jury proceedings going on in Chicago and indictments handed down against Bush.

"One or more of the grand juries have concluded their probe and have voted True Bills, Federal Criminal indictments, against George W. Bush, Richard Cheney, "Scooter" Libby, Condoleeza Rice, and Theodore B. Olson; and several media people not previously mentioned in the monopoly press as implicated," wrote Skolnick.

"Shown also as un-indicted co-conspirators are two Judges on the U.S. Supreme Court, William Rehnquist and Antonin Scalia, who are among the "Gang of Five" also in Bush versus Gore. Because of the horrendous consequences involved, the indictments are suppressed and there may be an extended delay until they appear on the Chicago Federal Court open records.

Also, last week investigative reporter Tom Flocco reported that Fitzgerald's grand jury voted out "true bills" or federal criminal indictments against President Bush, Vice-President Cheney, Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez, former Attorney General John Ashcroft, former CIA Director George Tenet, Presidential Senior Advisor Karl Rove, Presidential Chief of Staff Andrew Card, Vice-Presidential Chief of Staff I. "Scooter" Libby, imprisoned New York Times reporter Judith Miller and Vice-Presidential Senior Advisor Mary Matalin.

However, the U.S. Attorney's office in Chicago, through its media spokesman, Randall Sanborn, refused comment on any aspect of the grand jury proceedings, but high-level and credible legal observers claim suppression of grand jury indictments is not unusual, especially when dealing with matters concerning the national interest such as the Nixon indictments during Watergate and now Bush.

Although Flocco is taking considerable heat for running the story and today retracted a follow-up story adding more details about Bush's alleged response to hearing about the indictments, Skolnick is standing by the facts behind his own version of the indictments, saying he was unaware of Flocco's situation.

"I expected to be called a liar on this one for sometime after my story appeared, but the truth will come out," said Skolnick after his original story on Friday appeared.

Independent of the grand jury investigation, Skolnick has privately been investigating for the last five years the illegal nature of the U.S. Supreme Court's 2000 certification of Bush as President .

In his most recent article, he wrote:

"For several years we have been researching and investigating bribery and other malign influences used to procure from a Five-Judge majority of the U.S. Supreme Court the arbitrary and corrupt ruling, December, 2000, installing by way of the case of Bush versus Gore, a fictitious president into the Oval Office.

"A tiny portion of our investigation of the High Court corruption, without mentioning us at all by name, became the subject of a lengthy story in Vanity Fair Magazine, October, 2004 issue. Following this was a forty minute segment about this on the Terri Gross Show on National Public Radio.

"Risking their future career, some of the law clerks of the Dissenting four judges in Bush versus Gore reportedly stole private secret records of the "Infamous Five" showing the malign influence worked on the Judges in installing Bush. Instead of investigating the five High Court Judicial criminals, Homeland Security and the FBI have been threatening and inflicting harm on the dissenting four High Court Judges and their brave law clerks."

Father, Who Lost Son at WTC, Claims Bush Administration Hiding Key Financial Documents Leading To Culprits of 9/11

William Doyle has become one of the main lightening rods of the 9/11 truth movement, saying President Bush and his cronies are the biggest stumbling block in getting at the real truth. Involved as one of the plaintiffs in a trillion dollar 9/11 lawsuit, he wants the American people to know Bush is hiding vital documents that could lead to the truth.

6 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

What happened to William Doyle, shouldn't happen to any man. It's something you wouldn't wish on your worst enemy or something a parent shouldn't have to experience in a hundred lifetimes.

But on the morning of 9/11 the unthinkable happened. On the morning of 9/11, Doyle lost his 25-year-old son, Joseph, who was among the approximately 3,000 who perished at Ground Zero.

On that tragic morning when Doyle first heard reports of a jetliner striking the top floors of the North Tower, it must have felt like he was standing in the fiery flames of hell, not his comfortable New York home.

And Doyle recalls when the jetliner hit the towers feeling like a bolt of lightning passed through his body, knowing his young son was in one of the worst possible places, working on the 101st floor at Cantor Fitzgerald in the North Tower.

"The last time I talked to Joseph was the night before when we were talking football and about the Green Bay Packers," said Doyle, 58, a former stockbroker, in an extended telephone conversation this week from his New York home. "He was very excited about his new job at Cantor and for a long time after, my wife and I held out hope that somehow Joseph survived."

Tragically, however, his son became one of the 658 Cantor employees who never made it out of the WTC. Tragically, like so many other family members who lost loved ones, Doyle has had to undergo "a living hell" in every aspect concerning the WTC attacks, from the emotional pain and scars of losing a son to the callous arrogance and outright lies from the Bush administration.

"They have blocked every avenue into getting at the truth behind 9/11," said Doyle, referring to the shallow and unfounded 9/11 Commission findings as well as the Bush administration's failure to release known information about the financial ties to 9/11.

But in the face of government lies and numerous roadblocks, Doyle has remained strong and steadfast in his search for the truth, fighting the "good fight," for four long years and doing it especially for his son and for all the others who lost their lives.

He has taken the government head on in almost every issue and aspect of 9/11, becoming one of the leading vanguards in most every possible issue imaginable. In the past, he has fought politicians on Capitol Hill to get sensitive 9/11 financial information released, fought with the 9/11 Commission to get truthful testimony into the official record, taken on the bureaucracy to help victims receive assistance and even goes out of his way to get counseling for every victim or family member who needs it.

"When it's about 9/11, it usually passes through Bill Doyle," he said, referring to his tireless and active involvement with the 9/11 truth movement. "Just the other day I received a call from a man in Minneapolis who lost his daughter on 9/11. He said this was the first time he was able to talk about it for all these years. We talked for hours and the next morning I had a counselor at his doorstep to help him out."

Besides his emotional ties to the victims and his efforts to make sure everybody he comes in contact with gets the needed psychological and emotional help, Doyle takes an active role as one of the thousands of plaintiffs involved in an active trillion dollar lawsuit filed against the alleged financial perpetrators of 9/11.

The ongoing suit, filed by the South Carolina firm of Motley Rice, is attempting to recover damages for the victims by uncovering the money trail behind 9/11, which eventually leads to the true perpetrators who caused the mass murder of approximately 3,000 people.

And Doyle said what's so strange about uncovering the truth about the financial trail is that the U.S. government has been the main obstacle, not foreign banks or governments.

"There was a 28 page bi-partisan report released to the government, headed by Sen. Phil Gramm, which should tell us about who funded 9/11," said Doyle about information sought by attorneys from Motley Rice, one of the only law firms in the country able to afford to handle this massive civil suit, which has already cost the firm over 25 million in expenses.

"This report has since been kept secret and classified by the Bush administration ever since they got their hands on it. Our lawyers have repeatedly asked for this information, but the administration will not release it. What are they hiding?"

"Recently, I sent letters to all the lawmakers on Capitol Hill, including the White House, demanding this information be released so we can get at the truth. After making a lot of noise, I finally heard from the White House press secretary, who released a statement that the information was now not classified but could not be released since it may jeopardize sources being investigated by the government.

"What does that mean? I think it means they want to still cover up the truth and cover up our government's involvement in bringing about 9/11. And the key to uncovering the true perpetrators of 9/11 may very well be in this 28 page document."

Regarding the ongoing lawsuit filed against numerous American, Saudi Arabian and other foreign interests, it has become a legal 9/11 storage bin and a treasure chest for 9/11 researchers eager to uncover what attorneys are finding about the long and complicated 9/11 paper trail.

Doyle said Motley Rice, the firm famous for first defeating the powerful tobacco industry, has hired the world's most pre-eminent and respected terrorist investigator, Jean Claude Risard of France, who supposedly has uncovered a wealth of startling 9/11 information, revealing Israeli and American involvement in 9/11 which will shock many Americans once it is revealed.

Of course, Doyle isn't at liberty to talk specifics about the high-profile and complicated law suit still under intense litigation, he did say he has no doubt in his mind that the government either allowed 9/11 to occur or had an active role in it.

"I honestly don't believe the government story," said Doyle, adding everything about the official story and the follow-up investigation has not lived up to his or most all the other victims and survivors expectations. "The 9/11 Commission report doesn't even begin to get at the truth. They ignored most of the family member's serious questions and failed to even incorporate the findings of the 28 page bipartisan report looking into the financial links to 9/11 as well as any solid information leading to names involved with insider trading stock profits and 9/11.

"In fact, they didn't even include testimony made by William Rodriguez, the janitor who has solid evidence about explosions in the WTC basement and other vital testimony from witnesses who basically ripped into shreds the official government story."

And Doyle's claims of a shoddy 9/11 Commission has received tremendous support among victims and survivors who responded in masse over an email he sent demanding the 28 page financial report concerning 9/11 be released by the government.

"I sent out an email making this fact known and I received over 1,400 responses from families in agreement that all this financial data should be released to the American people," said Doyle.

Becoming a virtual funnel for all new 9/11 information coming forward, Doyle said he was recently approached by a man, who gave him information and documents linking the Mossad to 9/11.

"He came to my door with documents saying he could prove the Mossad was involved with the hijackers through their association with them through flight schools," said Doyle about the man whose identity is being protected for his safety.

"When he left the information, he tore a dollar bill in half, keeping half and giving me the other half, saying whoever I choose to give the information to must present the torn dollar bill. "If this information checks out, it could provide another solid link to what really happened on 9/11.

Besides the suspicious man who came to his doorstep, Doyle said another story ignored by the 9/11 Commission and cover-up by the government involves the actions of terrorist ringleader, Muhammad Atta, the night before 9/11 when he stayed at the Comfort Inn in Portland Maine.

"I know the 9/11 Commission took the testimony of the night manager at the Comfort Inn, but never included it in its final report," said Doyle. "Also I know the FBI confiscated the hotel's surveillance tapes, never making them public. The night manager insisted that there was a third person along with Atta and the other hijacker reported to be with him at the Portland airport. Supposedly this third person never boarded the plane, but for some reason no one wants to bother to find him.

"What we really need is an entire new investigation to answer all the questions not answered by the 9/11 Commission," said Doyle, who is urging all Americans to support the victims and family members in fighting for this cause. "I've heard so many stories from whistle blowers, compelling stories that need to be told that have been silenced by the government and the media."

Doyle recalls one of the most mind boggling stories about the 9/11 investigation not released to the public, only appearing briefly on one NBC news broadcast over a year ago, is about a man cornered and suspiciously released by the FBI in 2000. The man, an alleged 'muscle man' involved with the hijackers, apparently had vital information about his role in 9/11 and the attack which was about to take place.

However, for unknown reasons he was released by the FBI and sent to England where there he was suspiciously released by MI6 where he then went into hiding.

"I remember about a year and half ago, the London Times had an exclusive and finally ran the story, which was previously ignored here," said Doyle. "Once this story broke, I sent it out to over 300 major media sources, as I have an extensive email list, but not one of them bothered to run the story.

"Finally, NBC news picked up on the story and Lisa Meyers ran with it on the nightly news, but nobody else that I know of even bothered to pick it up."

Doyle also likes to tell the story of when he met face to face with FBI Director Robert Mueller, who he said became confused and very evasive when he posed some difficult questions.

"I asked him about an FBI correspondence made to Los Angeles about two of the hijackers who were living with an FBI agent," recalls Doyle, adding Mueller denied knowing anything about it, but became even more alarmed and evasive when Doyle refreshed his memory by provided the exact date the memo was sent on Aug. 13.

"He looked astonished that I had this information, but continued to deny even after I let it be known that I disagreed with the information and the answer I was getting."

Regarding President Bush's role in 9/11 and the war in Iraq, Doyle is not about to start mincing words or acting diplomatic at this stage of the game.

"I feel like he is shoving a lot of things under the rug, including 9/11, and he wants to cover-up the true cause. I think the disgust over the Warren Commission findings pale in comparison to the cover-up going on in 9/11," said Doyle, adding Bush's strange reaction in the school room upon being alerted of the WTC attacks seemed contrived, acting as if he already knew what was happening.

"Why did he just sit there reading for twenty minutes when the country was supposedly under attack?"

Regarding the war in Iraq and the allegations in the infamous Downing Street Memo that Bush lied to the American people about weapons of mass destruction to justify the invasion, he added:

"I really can't believe he is really getting away with it," said Doyle, adding Bush should be impeached for lying about WMD in Iraq, leading to the deaths of many young GI's as well as countless of innocent Iraqi civilians.. "There is no question in my mind that the Bush administration used 9/11 as an excuse for the war in Iraq and then he lied about weapons of mass destruction in order to invade Iraq."

Doyle, a former stockbroker, is outreach director for the WTC United Families Group and treasurer for the 9/11 Families Group.

Mother Of Fallen Soldier To Camp Out In Tent At Bush Ranch Until She Gets Answers About What She Calls "The Illegal Iraq War"

Cindy Sheehan, who lost her son last year in Baghdad, was angered by Bush's comments last week that "the fallen soldiers died for a noble cause." Sheehan claims this is a lie, contending the reason her son died was so Bush's friends could profit from the war and "line their greedy pockets with dirty oil money." Sheehan, founder of the peace group called Gold Star Families for Peace, says she staying in a tent until she either gets "arrested or gets Bush to answer questions."

By Greg Szymanski

A woman who lost her son in Baghdad and founded an anti-war group has traveled from her California home to Crawford, TX, with other supporters, demanding answers from a vacationing President Bush about his recent statements regarding the "noble nature" of the Iraqi War.

Speaking to the nation about the dreadful loss of life and in the wake of more than 24 Marines killed last week, Bush said, "We have to honor the sacrifices of the fallen by completing the mission and the families of the fallen can be assured that they died for a noble cause."

And it was the words "noble cause" that sparked anger in Cindy Sheehan, the mother who lost her 24-year-old son, Casey, in 2004, and founder of the anti-war group called Gold Star Families for Peace.

Calling Bush's statements callous and untrue, his words last week also sparked Sheehan's trip to the Crawford, where she plans to camp out in a tent near Bush's ranch until either she's "arrested or gets answers to many questions" surrounding what she calls an illegal war."

When Sheehan arrived on Saturday with a group of more than 25 people with tents and supplies, she was greeted by a small contingent of well-wishers, journalists, including NBC News, and several Bush representatives who questioned Sheehan's purpose and nature of the visit.

"The President's press secretary came to the entrance of the ranch, assuring us our loved one's died for a good cause, but of course, we don't agree and are not leaving until Cindy gets a chance to ask Bush some hard questions," said Sheehan's sister, DeDe, from in front of the Crawford ranch Saturday, where the group is planning to pitch tents.

Earlier that day, while Sheehan was en route to Crawford, she expressed anger and disgust for what she called Bush's "continued lying" about the real reasons behind the Iraqi war.

"I am tired of all the lies while young men continue to die," said Sheehan, vowing not to leave Crawford until she gets public answers from Bush. "I want him to finally admit that my son, Casey, didn't die for a noble cause, but died in order that President Bush's friends could get rich and line their greedy pockets with oil money."

Sheehan also released a statement to the press today explaining her motives behind the trip to the Bush ranch, adding:

"We want our loved ones' sacrifices to be honored by bringing our nation's sons and daughters home from the travesty that is Iraq immediately. This war is based on horrendous lies and deceptions. Just because our children are dead, why would we want any more families to suffer the same pain and devastation that we are?"

"We would like for Bush to explain this 'noble cause' to us, and I plan to ask him why his two daughters, Jenna and Barbara, are not in harm's way, if the cause is so noble. If he is not ready to send the twins, then he should bring our troops home immediately. We will demand a speedy withdrawal."

Sheehan also recently expressed deep displeasure with Bush in an exclusive article in The Arctic Beacon and the American Free Press, discussing in depth a recent trip she made to the White House after being invited in the wake of her son's death after only being in Baghdad five days during 2004.

Called to the White House supposedly to be consoled by the President, instead Sheehan reported just the opposite, saying she was greeted by an "arrogant and heartless man" who entered the private room to meet with Sheehan without even knowing anyone's, including her fallen son.

"It was a horrendous experience. I left feeling that this man was not even human. It was the worst experience of my life," said Sheehan in the article that appeared a month ago about her private meeting with Bush.

Besides several of Sheehan's close family members, Diane Wilson, co-founder of a women's peace group called Code Pink, also traveled to the where the President is taking an extended August vacation.

"I totally sympathize with Cindy. The Army even tried to recruit my autistic son. They tried to get my daughter to join too, leading her to believe she would be joining the Coast Guard when it was actually the Army," said Wilson as she accompanied Sheehan in Crawford.

"My daughter was needing money, we make our living fishing and have trouble making ends meet, so the military can be tempting. If George Bush really thinks this is such an honorable battle, let him send his twins over there."

Hadi Jawad, local spokesperson for the Crawford (Texas) Peace House, said his group would be providing Sheehan and the other peace advocates food and other supplies for as long as the group plans to camp out at the President's ranch.

Besides being founder of Gold Star Families for Peace, Sheehan is an active member of the large Washington D.C. group called After Downing Street, a large contingent of politicians and activists calling for a Congressional investigation over the infamous Downing Street Memo and whether Bush doctored WMD intelligence reports to justify the war in Iraq.

The details of the highly volatile and credible memo from the head of British intelligence MI6, clearly states in no uncertain terms that Bush doctored WMD reports well before the Iraqi invasion, subsequently lying to the American people to justify the illegal invasion.

The group's activities are being recorded at www.afterdowningstreet.org. The Downing Street group is a rapidly growing coalition of veterans' groups, peace groups, and political activist groups, which launched on May 26, 2005, the campaign to urge the U.S. Congress to begin a formal investigation into whether President Bush has committed impeachable offenses in connection with the Iraq war.

Besides members of the peace group Code Pink, Sheehan is being accompanied to the President's ranch by members of Veteran's for Peace (VFP), Military Families Speak Out (MFSO), Iraq Veterans Against the War (IVAW) and Crawford Peace House.

Abu Ghraib Right Here In South Carolina Federal Prison, Says Abused Inmate
Inmate Larry Lawton says at least three inmates have died due to improper medical attention. He has sent letters to numerous U.S. Senators without a response and is filing legal charges against prison authorities for his own medical condition being ignored by authorities.

4 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

There are many prison stories that never see the light of day, but Lawrence Lawton's isn't one of them. And for trying to go public, he received five months "in the hole," punishment for trying to blow the whistle on prison abuse leading to the deaths of three other inmates.

Although there is little public sympathy for prisoners, even the most hardened of hearts might take a second look at the inhumane treatment Lawton and the three dead inmates received at the hands of prison authorities at the Federal Correctional Institution in Edgefield, South Carolina.

Convicted in 1996 for interstate jewelry theft, Lawton, 41, was sentenced to 12 years. He is due to be released in 2007, but in the meantime he says "he's stuck in a federal pen worse than Abu Ghraib."

"I believe the death of at least three inmates recently has been caused by the direct medical neglect of the prison staff," said Lawton from his South Carolina prison cell. "The abuse of prisoners is due to a lack of money, overcrowding, a lack of staff training and a lack of medical care."

Prison authorities would not comment on Lawton's claims, but his attorney Steve Lander, said his client "has no reason to lie" and is providing credible information about the deaths of the other inmates.

Lander is representing Lawton against federal prison authorities in a civil abuse case, claiming his client is receiving improper medical attention for a severe scoliosis condition, a condition which is being ignored by authorities.

"He's not the type of person who complains and according to my client, prison authorities are still ignoring his condition despite being alerted to his severe problem," said Lander this week from his law office in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida.

To call public attention to the severity of his scoliosis problem and the problem of a lack of medical care for the three other inmates who died, Lawton has written letters to a host of U.S. Senators, including Sen. Bill Nelson (D-FL), Sen. Lindsay Graham (R-SC), Sen. Hillary Clinton (D-NY), Sen. Charles Schumer (D-NY) and Sen. Richard Burr (R-NC).

"Due to my letters and inquiries into these very serious matters, I was put in the hole for what they said was an investigation. That's the magic word," said Lawton, who is still waiting for responses from the Senators he wrote. "I spent five months in the hole for minor infractions that carry very little or absolutely no hole time.

"Also, numerous prison staff members told me it was my constant complaining to Congress about improper medical care at this federal facility that landed me in solitary confinement. Please, someone, contact the Senators for me in order that I may get some help so that conditions here can be improved."

Lawton's elderly mother, Irene, also verified he spent five months in the hole, saying she had no direct evidence it was due to his letters sent to Congress but she strong suspicions hat her son's whistle blowing was the direct cause.

"I know my son isn't getting proper attention for his medical condition and he told me about what happened to the other prisoners. I think the prison authorities punished him for bringing these abuses out in the open," said Lawton's mother in a telephone conversation from her Florida home.

One of the prison abuses reported by Lawton and related to poor medical care was the facts surrounding the death of Inmate Shifflett, who died March 25, 2005. According to Lawton, Shifflett was suffering from cancer, spitting up blood and tissue for more than a week, but was essentially left unattended by prison authorities until finally he died in his cell.

Describing the brutal and inhumane death, Lawton said:

"His cellmate, Inmate Brawley, went to the head of the medical unit at the afternoon meal, explaining the situation and was told to tell Shifflett to sign up for sick call. That night he awoke Brawley begging for help and there was blood all over the cell.

"It took the prison authorities over 30 minutes to get Shifflett out of his cell and by that time he was already dead He was only 41 years old and didn't they know he had cancer? And Brawley said it was the most brutal and inhumane death he ever saw."

Besides Shifflett, Lawton tells the story of Inmate Arch who died surrounding strange circumstances on September 15, 2004:

"For more than a week, Arch was complaining of chest pains, arm pains and feeling ill. He kept going t the medical department and was always told he had gas pains and to stop complaining. Arch was given Maalox and told to go back to his sell, but when he was walking back, he grabbed inmate Brown, saying 'help me, Jimmy, I'm dying' and right there on the spot he dropped dead.

"Later, the prison investigators, asked Brown and another inmate named Alberson in an intimidating fashion: 'Didn't you see him hit his head?' Alberson and Brown can verify what I am saying and even add much more."

Lawton then goes on to talk about another inmate name Harris who died in his cell early one morning after receiving inadequate treatment the night before. He also talks about witnessing another inmate near him in solitary confinement undergoing brutal and inhumane treatment.

"While I was in the hole, there was inmate across from me who had no legs. His condition was so poor that a Lieutenant on duty took a video and told me if someone saw this video, someone would be in handcuffs," said Lawton. "I found out when someone dies, a death mortality review is done, but the question is who does the review? I found out through a staff member who explained like this: 'It's like the hen guarding the hen house. She's going to protect her nest.'"

In his letter to the U.S. Senators, Lawton outlined what he thought to be the most serious problems at the prison needing immediate attention, which included no medical staff on duty after midnight, only one guard for two units on the midnight shift and keys to open cells are not given to guards in case of emergency.

"Why is there no medical staff on duty after midnight?" asked Lawton, adding the Department of Prisons categorizes Edgefield as a 24 hour medical care facility serving over 2,200 inmates.

"The inhumane treatment of inmates here at Edgefield has at the very least contributed to the deaths of numerous inmates. The outrage about Abu Ghraib is justified and right. But I want people in America to know that we have our own Abu Ghraib right here in our own backyard."

To write Lawton in prison in order to lend assistance, he is at:

Government Hacks Continue To Violate Civil Rights Of Illinois 9/11 Truth Seeker

Phillip Jayhan is on the Bush administration "watch list" for getting too close to unraveling the U.S. government's shady dealings in 9/11. The victim of constant harassment, his personal privacy and free speech rights have been violated on a weekly basis for more than a year by government thugs who have no respect for the U.S. Constitution.

2 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

If the government is as clean as a whistle over 9/11, explain why it wants to put Phillip Jayhan in a nice, neat little package and dump him into the Fox River? Explain why government hacks have harassed him, broke into his apartment, pilfered his car and generally made him look over his shoulder every time he leaves his McHenry, Ill, home?

Explain why they tap his telephone, send undercover agents to debrief him and crash his web site every chance they get? Explain why they want to shut him up when all he wants to do is find out the truth?

Jayhan isn't a domestic or foreign terrorist so the Patriot Act shouldn't apply and, in theory, the government hacks should keep dirty little hands out of his business. But, instead, they're right in his face most every day, violating his civil rights when all he's done is ask some ordinary questions concerning what happened on 9/11.

In fact, Jayhan is so ordinary, one wonders why they even bother? But that what was before the 9/11 world, before the "pagans in power", as he calls them, put the clamps down on anybody "who gets too close to the serious game they are playing."

And make no mistake about it, Jayhan must be close to something big. Otherwise why are the power players paying such close attention to somebody like him? It makes one wonder what the government is really hiding because Jayhan is about as average as they come, born and raised the Midwest with no special titles or political axes to grind.

He isn't a Washington power broker, a financial threat or a double agent spy, trying to steal state secrets. In fact, before he took on 9/11 research and what he calls "trying to preserve the American way of life," he was a common every day messenger delivery man, slugging out a living delivering documents from office to office.

But when he decided to question the official 9/11 story - striking a nerve like few before him have done - the Bush administration attack dogs didn't care who he was, targeting him as "a man to watch" and generally hounding him like he was some big piece of fresh meat walking through a den of wolves.

For example, in the last year, since he was the first one to bring to light exclusive video footage showing a missile firing from the jetliner that struck the South Tower, government agents have attacked every area of his privacy, including monitoring his communications and invading his living space, all without proper warrants showing probable cause he committed a crime.

But in the post 9/11 Bush America, Constitutional protections against evasive and illegal government intrusion into a citizen's personal life has been thrown out the window, especially if one gets too close to unraveling the shady activities surrounding 9/11.

And from the looks of the government surveillance put on Jayhan, he has uncovered some damaging evidence, consequently making some of the 9/11 power players very nervous.

Not only has he uncovered some damaging information, but he has also found a way to appeal to the public, convincing thousands if not hundreds of thousands of Americans that the airplane that hit the second tower wasn't a commercial jet at all, but was actually a government drone armed with weapons.

The montage of video footage he has collected for public viewing on his web site seems to have struck a nerve, if not a main artery, piercing the validity of the commercial jetliner theory the government has advanced since 9/11.

And since the footage has drawn over 15,000 web site hits on a daily basis for some time now, the government has tried in every way possible to keep his convincing video presentation from the American people by regularly, almost on a weekly basis, crashing his site using what he believes to be government hackers.

Although it's difficult to prove who is the culprit in this modern age of electronic surveillance, Jayhan has a pretty good idea ever since connecting a sophisticated web site tracking system which has revealed daily visits from State Department and Department of Defense computers, not to mention other companies with ties to government interests.

"This was a big find, the footage of the missile, and really got me started to seriously research 9/11. Consequently, I have been harassed and monitored very closely but it has only made me more determined to uncover the real truth behind what really happened on 9/11," said Jayhan this week in a telephone conversation from his McHenry home about the sensitive video footage that first appeared on April 15, 2004, on his web site www.letsroll911.org, a site which again this week was brought down by government hackers.

"They crashed my computer again, but that has become normal. They tear it down and I put it up again. But regarding the important information, when I first saw the footage of the airliner striking the second tower, I noticed something strange, like a pod, under the belly of the jet. This got me started and then I began looking for every piece of original footage I could find.

"What I found was amazing but yet simple to see and so I displayed this on my site, which really got me and my web site off the ground, seriously researching 9/11. The footage clearly shows a missile actually fired from the plane and striking the tower right before the plane itself crashed into the South Tower. And when people go to the site and look for themselves, nine out of 10 go away believing the same thing."

And by the reaction he received from government officials, apparently they believed Jayhan was on to something, too. After compiling the footage from many different sources and presenting a compelling visual case, he knocked on almost every government door from Illinois to Washington D.C., trying to get answers and alert the proper authorities, including the 9/11 Commission, asking all of them to mount a more thorough investigation in light of his findings.

But instead of receiving praise for his hard work, he was either ignored or cross-examined like a common criminal by officials more concerned at finding out "what he knew and who he told" instead of using his information to get at the truth.

"The 9/11 Commission ignored me, but I really knew something was strange when I finally got a call from my Congressman, Rep. Phillip Crane, who is now out of office but for a long time was the head of the powerful House Arms Services Committee," said Jayhan about the 30 minute call he received from Rep. Crane after he advised his office of his findings.

"Now get this: This big politician calls me and talks for a long time. How often does that happen? But after the call he never really did anything, and looking back, it was as if he was trying to debrief me, not get at the truth. He called me a couple weeks after my web site came out at the end of April 2004 and I remember Crane even asking how many people I talked to about the footage.

"And this wasn't the last time I have been debriefed by government informants as I am sure they are still trying. Recently, I was invited to a meeting with someone who appears to be working on both sides. I won't mention any names as I can't be completely sure, but again it seemed to be one of those meetings designed to find out any new information I was working on."

And after Jayhan started his web site more than a year ago, he has continued his relentless fact-finding 9/11 mission despite constant harassment, giving most of the credit to a small group of truth-seekers who have dedicated their time, energy and resources to helping him uncover the truth.

"Many people, like Deb Simon, have helped me tremendously to make my web site credible," said Jayhan, admitting one of the most difficult aspects of the 9/11 truth movement is to weed out the disinformation agents from the true believers in uncovering the truth.

"I don't want to mention any names, because in this post 9/11 world, you can never really be sure. But let me tell you there are a lot of people out there and web sites waving the 9/11 banner that are actually designed to spread disinformation with the intention of disrupting those of us trying to get at the real truth.

"People always ask me why I have dedicated my entire life to this project and all I can tell them is that I am doing it to preserve the American way of life, which is in serious trouble of being destroyed from within our own government.

"I starting researching 9/11 about six months after the fact, knowing in my heart something wasn't right. Then after spending an enormous amount of research time uncovering the jetliner-missile footage, I knew there was a massive cover-up. After that, I vowed never to stop researching the other holes in the official story until the truth was finally uncovered and the real culprits inside our own government brought to justice."

And being a man of his word, Jayhan has expanded his 9/11 truth-finding mission to almost every aspect of the complex one day assault on the WTC, The Pentagon and the mishap over Shanksville, Penn., including detailed documentation of many inconsistencies of the official story.

"We also believe that Phoenix Air had a part in 9/11," said Jayhan. "Phoenix Air is owned by Mossad and is the only company in America to have four planes outfitted with electronic warfare (EW) equipment. We believe these planes were used to create the false blips on the radar screens of the four aircraft."

Another area of concern now occupying Jayhan's time is the research he uncovered showing that Flight 11 and Flight 77, two of the alleged hijacked planes, never even existed in airline flight records on the morning of 9/11.

"I have found that both of those flights never existed on 9/11 but were strangely on the airline flight lists the day before and the day after," said Jayhan. "Also I have found out that many - too many - of the passengers on all the four airliners never were even entered on the Social Security Death Index.

And what about Flight 93? I have found that not even one of the families have ever applied for 9/11 compensation monies. Why?"

Jayhan, however, doesn't stop with a general look at the passenger list, but picks out one especially suspicious passenger, Daniel Lewin, listed as killed, but who also was a confirmed Israeli commando.

"So here we have an Israeli commando traveling as a U.S. citizen on the same hijacked plane with the supposed Arab terrorists," adds Jayhan. "Lewin was not only with Israeli intelligence but head of Akamai Industries, an Israeli internet routing company that received a two-hour advance warning of the WTC attacks.

"Now Akamai has hacked my hard drive many times and I have the paper work to back it up. Why? Isn't it odd that Lewin's company is regularly also hacking my personal PC and the last time was about three or four days ago.

"I believe Lewin is one of the perpetrators and that he is still alive. I realized a long time ago that some of the perpetrators of 9/11 put themselves on as passengers and we are in the process of methodically checking all the flight lists and cross-referencing names. Remember, Lewin was on Flight 11 and 11 never existed in the NTSB data base as a flight that day. Why?"

In cross-referencing other passengers on Flight 11, Jayhan noticed an inordinate number of defense contractor employees on board, a number of them from Raytheon, one of the larger defense contractors involved in sophisticated remote control flying technology.

And one of the most difficult questions being addressed by Jayhan and never sufficiently answered by 9/11 skeptics is if other planes were used, what then happened to four original jetliners and the passengers on board?

Although he admits it's only a theory, he bases his assessment on extensive research into this problematic issue:

"In a nutshell, I theorize that two flights didn't exist that day, which is verified. Of the two left, there are major issues with the passenger families of Flight 93 not accepting money from the Victims' Compensation Fund.

"Of the two flights remaining, I think they were morphed into one, with Flight 175 (if it existed) taking off and landing in Newark then becoming Flight 93, which later has been documented as landing in Cleveland. This would explain the 41 minute delay in departure of the last of the four jetliners supposedly involved.

"Nothing crashed or was shot down over Shanksville. Debris was dumped from the white C-130, which also flew over the Pentagon. A bomb was detonated in the Shanksville field, providing a pre-planned imprint to make it look like a jet crashed and this is obvious since no jet fuel or plane parts were ever found on the property."

And as the 9/11 mystery continues, Jayhan has no intention of stopping his pursuit for the truth, asking one more question to stimulate more researchers to take up what he calls a vital cause of protecting and preserving the American way of life:

"Please, someone tell me what happened to more than $167 billion of gold reported to be in the WTC buildings, including Building No. 7? It's a question that needs answering and may lead to eventually finding the real perpetrators of 9/11."

Federal Whistle Blower Claims Chicago Grand Jury Indicted Bush And Others For Perjury and Obstruction Of Justice; U.S. Attorney's Office Says 'No Comment,' Refusing To Confirm Or Deny Alleged Indictments
Special Prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald's investigation into the Valerie Plame-CIA leak has now spilled over into Bush administration lies involving 9/11 and the war in Iraq, according to sources close to the Chicago probe.

2 Aug 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Sources close to the Chicago federal grand jury probe into perjury and obstruction charges against President Bush and others said indictments were handed down this week, but a spokesman for the U.S. Attorney's Office of the Northern District of Illinois refused to comment.

"We are not talking about any aspect of this case and our office is not commenting on anything regarding the investigation at this time," said Randall Sanborn from the office of U.S. federal prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald, the attorney conducting the grand jury probe into whether Bush and others in his administration violated federal law in a number of sensitive areas, including the Valerie Plame CIA leak case, involvement in 9/11 and the illegal nature of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

In December 2003, Fitzgerald was named Special Counsel to investigate the alleged disclosure of the identity of who leaked information in the Plame case, but the present grand jury probe has expanded to include the wide-reaching crime allegations as new information surfaced.

Although the U.S. Attorney's office in Chicago is staying silent, it is well known that Fitzgerald is digging deep into an assortment of serious improprieties among many Bush administration figures based, in part, on subpoenaed testimony provided by former Secretary of State Colin Powell.

According to federal whistleblower Tom Heneghen, who recently reported on www.truthradio.com, Powell testified before the citizen grand jury that President Bush had taken the U.S. to war illegally based on lies, which is a capital crime involving treason under the U.S. Code.

"Regarding the Powell testimony, there is no comment," said Sanborn.

However, sources close to the federal grade jury probe also allegedly told Heneghen a host of administration figures besides Bush were also indicted, including Vice-President Richard Cheney, Chief of Staff Andrew Card, Cheney Chief of Staff I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby, Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez, former Attorney General John Ashcroft, imprisoned New York Times reporter Judith Miller and former Senior Cheney advisor Mary Matalin.

Heneghen, unavailable for comment and first reported by internet reporter Tom Flocco, allegedly also told sources White House Advisor Karl Rove was indicted for perjury in a major document shredding operation cover-up and that Prime Minister Tony Blair was also indicted for obstruction of justice charges.

Heneghen also claimed that Blair failed to honor a subpoena issued by Fitzpatrick and is now consulting with British legal counsel on how to avoid appearing in Chicago.

In recent weeks, there has been much controversy over Fitzgerald's wide reaching probe which is extending far beyond the Bush administration to include what some have called "a wholesale cleansing" of a crime-laden White House and Congress.

Fitzgerald's investigation is said to be also centered on members of the 9/11 Commission, members on both sides of the isle in the House and Senate and also select high-powered members of the media.

Needless to say, members close to the administration are 'fighting mad" with Fitzgerald and reports on Capital Hill are that Senate intelligence Committee Chairman Pat Roberts is trying to derail Fitzgerald's probe by calling him to testify before the Senate regarding his true motives behind the investigation.

Political observers are now wondering whether administration-friendly Republican legislators, some under investigation themselves, are conspiring like President Nixon did in Watergate with Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox, attempting to fire Fitzgerald in the same manner in order to cool the heat on further investigations into Bush administration crimes.

Last week, other sources close to the investigation said the recent bomb scare in the subway under the Dirksen Federal Building, coincidentally near where Fitzgerald was holding his grand jury hearings, raised serious questions as to whether government operatives loyal to Bush were sending the zealous prosecutor a "warning message" that he was entering murky waters with the extent of his investigation.

The bomb scare was reported to local police late Monday afternoon, July 18, causing the subway to be evacuated for approximately 45 minutes while bomb sniffing dogs and swat team members searched for what was reported to be "a suspicious package" left on one of the subway cars.

Besides Fitzgerald's probe into Bush administration lies relating to 9/11, the war in Iraq and the CIA- Valerie Plame leaks, he is also looking into a huge drug money laundering operation involving both the Clinton and Bush administrations with ties reaching all the way to Arkansas.

Fitzgerald began serving as the U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois in September, 2001. He was initially appointed on an interim basis by former Attorney General John Ashcroft before being nominated by President Bush.

The U.S. Senate confirmed his nomination by unanimous consent in October 2001. In December 2003, he was named Special Counsel to investigate the CIA- Valerie Plame case.

FBI Confiscates Personal Property Of Former U.S. Army Corporal Who Blew Whistle On 1976 Government funded "Perfect Terrorist Plan" To Topple Twin Towers

Timothy McNiven says he has been harassed by the FBI and now had DOD card taken without a warrant ever since trying to alert the American people about the government's prior knowledge of 9/11.

31 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A former U.S. Army corporal who blew the whistle on a 1976 government funded study to topple the Twin Towers using jetliners, Arab terrorists and box cutters on July 6 had four FBI agents threaten to "tear his apartment apart" if he didn't turn over his legally obtained Department of Defense ID card.

Timothy McNiven, who said he was threatened and harassed by agents in the hallway outside his Bellingham, WA., apartment, claims to be a part of a military unit stationed in Strasbourg, Germany, during the 1970s, assigned the task to brainstorm "the perfect terrorist plan" and what turned out to be the exact same scenario that took place at the WTC on 9/11.

McNiven said his military unit's 9/11-like assignment, lasting over six months and funded by Congress under the guise of airline safety preparedness, proves the government had "plenty of foreknowledge" about possible airline attacks at the WTC.

He even suggested what seemed like a harmless military airline safety study may have been used later to perfect a way to bring down the WTC in order to create another Pearl Harbor like event to facilitate a world wide climate of war.

And since 9/11, McNiven has tried in every way possible to alert the American people about his unit's mock military assignment, creating even more suspicion of the government's hand in 9/11, by first creating a web site and then telling his story in March to The American Free Press and The Arctic Beacon news web cast.

McNiven's accusations about the hidden purpose behind the Congressional study are also included in a signed affidavit as part of a 9/11 related federal conspiracy (RICO) lawsuit filed against President Bush and others in 2004 by Philadelphia attorney Phil Berg.

The publicized version of the study, commissioned by Congress, was to identify security lapses and submit corrective measures to lawmakers," said McNiven. "However, the real purpose of the study was to brainstorm how to pull off a terrorist attack using the exact same 9/11 scenario."

To back up his story, he passed a credible lie detector test, the same type of credible test taken by Daniel Ellsberg and other famous whistle blowers as well as providing many names of the men his unit who also participated in the mock WTC assignment.

McNiven claims, however, since going public and being a part of the law suit, his efforts have been met with government indifference, outright harassment and constant FBI monitoring, the July 6 FBI visit to his Bellingham home another example.

"Our commanding officer back in 1976, Lt. Michael Teague, gave our unit of about 100 a direct order and assignment to brainstorm how to bring down the Twin Towers using jetliners and even box cutters," said McNiven this week from his apartment in Bellingham about the study commissioned to C-Battery 2/81st Field Artillery, U.S. Army, stationed in Strasbourg, Germany.

"I remember Lt. Teague changed the scenario from a 100 story building to the Twin Tower, acting on specific orders from unknown superiors. He then said it was very strange to be asked to devise a plan to blow up your own home town as he was from New York.

"But as I watched the Twin Towers really collapse on the morning of September 11th, I realized I was watching the very same thing we devised in the 1976.

McNiven recalls at first Lt. Teague demanded strict silence regarding the assignment, but later took him aside, giving him a direct order to "never stop alerting the American people" about the government's obvious hand in working on a plan to bring down the Twin if it ever really happened.

"I still feel I am under this direct order and have no intention of disobeying it," said McNiven, adding he still feels his active military duty has not ended due to 9/11.

Regarding the FBI visit to McNiven's home on July 6, a spokesperson from the Bellingham, WA., office confirmed agent Lance Boyer and three others confiscated McNiven's DOD card outside his apartment on the date mentioned, but refused to comment further about the nature, legality or purpose for taking his personal property.

The FBI spokesperson added that his property was taken without a proper warrant, McNiven claiming he only gave it up after being "threatened and harassed" by the four agents in the hallway outside his apartment.

"Agents did go to Mr. McNiven's home and did take his ID card, but that's all we can say right now," said the Bellingham FBI spokesman several hours after the incident occurred.

Although the FBI refused to elaborate, McNiven said he has been singled-out, intimidated and harassed for going public about the mock 1976 "perfect terrorist plan."

"This visit was not to get information but to harass me. I got a reply from the ACLU and they said that I had a legal case but they did not have the resources to take it on," he said.

"In May 2004, I wrote to several FBI offices asking them to do some research for me and to help find the members of C-Battery 2/81st FA, US Army, the men who also worked on the 1976 mock terrorist study. I have kept a copy of the email to the FBI and this is the reason why they I think they showed up."

McNiven said in the past he has tried to relocate many of his former unit members, years ago finding one member, Sgt. Riggs, who was reluctant to talk since Riggs claimed he and his family members had already experienced death threats over going public about the 1976 airline safety study.

Elaborating further on the FBI visit, McNiven recalls in detail facts indicating agents had been tracking his movements for at least a year.

"We started talking in the hallway of my apartment and they asked me if I was a federal agent and I said yes I had an ID to prove it. We walked to my room and I showed them my DOD ID card," said McNiven.

"Then we talked a little more, with one guy doing the questioning, and then two of the other guys started to make smart-ass comments, one of these guys being Agent Boyer."

He said the agents then insisted on seeing his ID card again, McNiven giving it to Agent Boyer but then ripping it out his hand after the agents questioned the validity of his identification.

"One of the Hispanic agents then began to threaten me, saying if I did not give them my ID that they would go and get a bunch of Bellingham Police and come back and tear my place apart," said McNiven.

"So I gave them the ID after, although asking for a receipt, which they gave me. It was strange, though, they knew about my trip to the Pentagon in August 2004 and the letter I sent to the personnel office, which they asked me if the Bellingham Police had come to talk to me about and I said they hadn't.

"I told them that the only people I had ever contacted about getting a new DOD card, as I used to work under cover for them but recently stopped, were lawyers like Gerry Spence, DOD personnel and Federal Judge Coughenour from the Seattle Federal Court. I also gave them the envelope and letter that came along with the ID, saying that it was a federal judge who helped me get this ID in the first place."

McNiven said the FBI has not returned his DOD card or has not contacted him since the July 6 incident, saying he believes they are "waiting for my next move" which McNiven said will be made before a court of law.

Regarding the validity of his DOD affiliation, McNiven said he went through the proper official channels, needing to renew his ID card last year in order to officially carry out his orders given to him by Lt. Teague as a result of 9/11.

McNiven added he is no stranger to DOD as he worked in the late 1980s and early 1990s as an undercover agent on several drug related government investigations.

"A DOD card is a government agency ID just like any other, in this case giving me authority for my military mission to alert the American people about the 1976 plan to topple the Twin Towers," said McNiven.

"I also have the authority to arrest on federal charges like treason or espionage and through Interpol for crimes against humanity and war crimes, which were recently expanded when the International Criminal Court went into effect."

At the time of the FBI visit, McNiven had also just sent the first installment of a proposed book about his life and participation in the 1976 mock terrorist assault on the Twin Towers to an editor of First Amendment Publishing affiliated with The American Free Press.

Former British MI5 Agent Says 'Many Similarities' Between London Bombings And 9/11

Jailed in 2002 for blowing the whistle on payoffs by British MI6 to an Islamic terrorist group to kill Mu'ammarr al-Qadhafi of Libya, David Shayler this week talks openly from his home on the southern coast of England about how he feels both the London bombings and 9/11 were most likely staged government events. He claims the free people of the world are at war with an enemy within and either democracy will prevail or a fascist rule and martial law will take over.

29 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A former British intelligence agent, jailed in 2002 for linking the British government with paying an Islamic militant group $160,000 in a failed assassination attempt on Colonel Mu'ammarr al-Qadhafi of Libya, said this week the recent London bombings have all the earmarks of an inside job just like 9/11.

"It's amazing how many aspects of the two events are so similar," said David Shayler, the former MI5 agent and whistle blower, in a telephone conversation this week from his home in Eastbourne on the southern coast of England.

Shayler, a thorn in the British government's side ever since he blew the whistle in 1997 about rampant corruption within both arms of British intelligence, MI5 (domestic) and MI6 (foreign), said he has just began looking into the details of the 7/7 attacks, but what's being released through the press and government reports shows a strikingly similar pattern to what he calls "the same type of misinformation thrown out after 9/11."

"First, we learn about the training exercises going on here just like 9/11. Next, they release suspicious evidence left behind by the culprits as well as quickly releasing identifying pictures of the suspects just like the did after 9/11," he said.

Shayler added that what's even more suspicious is the private security firm in charge of the training drills prior to 7/7 had ties to former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani. Further, he also received information that one of the named suicide bombers, whose picture was released in the London press, has turned up alive and well in Pakistan.

"Just like in the United States, we here in England are being bombarded with what looks like a lot of misinformation in the press," said Shayler. "Apparently, one of the supposed suicide bombers has turned up alive just like six or seven of the 19 Arab hijackers turned up alive after 9/11."

Asked about the sentiment in Britain towards President Bush and Prime Minister Tony Blair's support of America's war on terror after the London bombings claimed more than 50 lives, he said:

"To put it politely, there is downright hatred for Bush here on the streets of London. Many Brits feel, as I do, that he led us into this war and is actually responsible for making England a more dangerous place to live now than before the illegal war in Iraq.

"And after the release of the Downing Street Memo, which clearly provides high-level documented evidence from the head of MI6 that Bush and Blair lied about the threat of WMD in Iraq, I think most of the British people are simply fed up but at the same time frightened at what might happen next.

"The British people would simply like to get rid of Blair, but unlike America, we have no political means set up to do this. However, most people here feel that Tony Blair actually acts more like the First Envoy to America rather than England's Prime Minister.

Besides believing the London bombing was an inside job, Shayler also believes 9/11 was a staged event, saying the cover-up of hard evidence and eye witness testimony contradicting the official story are the main ingredients first leading him to believe the U.S. government caused 9/11 in order to create a world wide climate of fear and war.

"It's a crime to obstruct justice and that is exactly what the American authorities did when they allowed FEMA to haul away all the steel from the World Trade Center, shipping it to China," said Shayler. "Now this type of cover-up tells me right-off the authorities are hiding something much bigger, something that needs answering.

"The more I look at 9/11, the more I am convinced it was a staged event. I am convinced the U.S. government manipulated events - let it happen - to create a trigger for the invasion of Afghanistan, the invasion of Iraq and of course what they're trying to do now with the imminent invasions of Iran and Syria."

Shayler said FBI intercepts, failed defense protocols and the suspicious activities of a number of officials in various government agencies days, weeks and months prior to 9/11 also directly point to an inside job.

Besides the government irregularities and cover-up, he also suggests 9/11 was most likely also intended to be, from an intelligence strategist's view, an attempt at a larger coup de'tat to take over the American government and bring martial law.

"You have to remember that there were weapons discovered on planes that didn't take off on 9/11. Now people have obviously postulated that they were going perhaps to attack the White House or Capitol Hill. That looks to me like an attempt to destroy American government and declare a state of emergency, in fact a coup de'tat, a violent coup de'tat."

Making analogies between explosives used in IRA bombings he investigated while working on the Irish resistance, he said it was virtually impossible for jet fuel, as the American government contends, to bring down the Twin Towers.

He compared the WTC to an IRA bombing in front of the Baltic Exchange Building in Bishopsgate, saying a thousand tons of homemade explosives were used without a much smaller building collapsing.

"So you are telling me the World Trade Center collapsed from jet fuel? It's highly suspicious if not impossible," said Shayler. "And then ask yourself about the suspicious nature of Building No. 7. It all looks to me like a controlled demolition."

Regarding the bigger intelligence picture and the state of the world with increased terrorism now erupting in London and Egypt, Shayler drew the battle lines facing both the people of Britain and America.

"Let there be no doubt that the people of the free world are engaged in a war," said Shayler, suggesting however that the enemy is within and not simply radical Islamic terrorists. "In the next few years, we are either going to see the people of the free world rise up against these fascists, now setting the stage for global war, or we are going to see the end of democracy as we know it with martial law the end result."

Shayler's troubles with the British government in 1997 after he voluntarily left MI5 and blew the whistle, allegedly taking sensitive documents and accusing two MI6 agents, David Watson and Richard Bartlitt, of plotting to assassinate Mu'ammar al-Qadhafi of Libya in 1996.

He also accused MI5 of failing to warn or react to an impending terrorist attack on the Israeli Embassy in 1994.

After fleeing Britain, he was arrested in France, spending four months in a French jail and being held without charges being filed. Upon release, he won an extradition battle in the French courts, but voluntarily decided to return to England in 2000.

Upon his return, he was charged with violated England's tough Official State Secrets Act, as a gag order was effectively placed on everything, including media coverage, surrounding his case.

"I was effectively never allowed to mount a defense or even show facts why I acted in the national interest," said Shayler, being convicted in November of 2002 and sentenced to six months in jail, but only serving seven weeks of the sentence as well as seven weeks of house arrest.

Shayler, who joined MI5 in 1991 unable to find work as a journalist, said he was an unlikely candidate for the job, never thinking he would get hired after answering an advertisement hiding the true nature of the position.

"I was a journalist and came from an unlikely background for this type of work," said Shayler. "I really didn't know what the nature of the job was until the final round of interviews and I was shocked when I was hired.

"I stayed with MI5 until I saw the lies and corruption. All I wanted was to tell the truth, nothing more."

Since his release from jail, Shayler has been busy on the lecture circuit and has released a book with author Annie Machon titled "Spies, Lies and Whistle Blowers."

The book chronicles his falling out with MI5, what took place after he blew the whistle, life on the run in Europe and his arrest and imprisonment.

Cheney Orders STRATCOM To Prepare Nuclear Attack Against Iran

Political activists and observers have sent out a "world wide red alert" in response to what they called Cheney's "Hitler-like" state of mind.

28 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A number of political observers and activists today sounded 'a red alert' after reports surfaced this week Vice President Dick Cheney directly ordered Strategic Command (STRATCOM) to make contingency plans for a nuclear strike against Iran in the aftermath of another '9/11 type attack' on America.

Cheney's orders first surfaced in an article by Philip Gerald in the Aug 1, 2005, issue of The American Conservative. Gerald was unavailable for comment, but excerpts of the article went on to say:

"Vice President Cheney's office has specifically told the Pentagon that the military should be prepared for an attack on Iran in the immediate aftermath of "another 9-11." That's "not conditional on Iran actually being involved in the act of terrorism directed against the United States," notes Gerald's article.

The statement was then distributed widely over the internet as a number of political observers have issued "world wide" warning statements," declaring Cheney's order to be interpreted as "sounding the bell for World War III."

In response to Cheney's order, outspoken political activist and former candidate for U.S. President, Lyndon La Rouché, Wednesday issued a "world wide" internet warning covering the time period of August 2005, saying:

"Vice President Dick Cheney, with the full collusion of the circles of British Prime Minister Tony Blair, to unleash the recently exposed plans to stage a preemptive tactical nuclear strike against Iran.

"The danger of such a mad, Hitler-in-the-bunker action from the Cheney circles would be even further heightened, were the United States Congress to stick with its present schedule, and go into recess on July 30 until September 4. With Congress out of Washington, the Cheney-led White House would almost certainly unleash a "Guns of August" attack on Iran."

In the warning distributed widely throughout the world on July 27, LaRouché based his alarming assessment on a series of factors reported to him over the recent days, beginning with the qualified report, from a former U.S. intelligence official, published in the American Conservative magazine.

The report claims that Cheney already ordered the Strategic Command to prepare contingency plans for a conventional and tactical nuclear strike against hundreds of targets in Iran, in the event of a "new 9/11-style attack" on the United States.

And as reported several months ago, La Rouche said the Bush Administration, under CONPLAN 8022, had already placed the relevant "mini-nukes" under the control of theater military commanders, as part of a new Global Strike doctrine, a doctrine originally conceived when Dick Cheney was Secretary of Defense under George H.W. Bush in the early 1990s.

"The recent bombings in London have provided Tony Blair with his own "Reichstag fire" incident, and the full resources of the British "liberal imperial" faction can now be expected to weigh in behind the brutish Cheney circles in Washington, added La Rouche.

"The most compelling evidence of this "Guns of August" plan in discussions I've had with colleagues is the pattern of eyewitness reports of Dick Cheney's state of mind. Cheney is living out an American version of "Hitler in the bunker," lashing out at Republican Senators who have dared to resist his mad tirades, accusing anyone who fails to follow his orders-including senior members of the United States Senate-of being "traitors" and worse."

Bin Laden Brothers Tip-Off Two NASA Research Scientists In 1987 About U.S. Government Plans To Cause 9/11; Now Third Person Comes Forward To Verify Scientists' Incredible Story

Besides the tip-off about 9/11, one of the researchers involved in a government-funded advanced brain development program says she uncovered a secret study called "Global Cleanse 2000" outlining U.S. Government strategies for initiating global war and population reduction.

27 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Rene Welch knew her life would never be the same when she went public about her two 1987 encounters with Saudi royals, including two of the bin Laden brothers, who claimed the U.S. government was actively involved in pre-arranging 9/11.

Although she knew she would meet government resistance and public skepticism, Welch went public anyway, trusting in her faith in God and knowing she was telling the truth.

Welch's incredible story, first made public in May, has already been verified by one other former NASA scientist. But this week another person present at the meeting also came forward to verify Welch's story.

The meetings with the Saudis took place in Sedona and Paradise Valley, Arizona, and lasted more than eight hours each time, the bin Ladens revealing in 1987 detailed plans how the U.S. government was planning to attack the World Trade Center, kicking off a global catastrophe, including a massive war in the Middle East.

Besides being verified by Ronald Logsdon, 49, of Philadelphia, a scientist who worked in a NASA program with Welch and also present at the bin Laden meetings, this week long time Sedona resident, Naomi Niles, also verified the Sedona meeting took place.

"Yes, I was there at one of the meetings back in 1987," said Niles this week from her Sedona home, adding the details of the story should be left for Logsdon and Welch to describe since she was not a part of the NASA program.

And Welch not only learned about the U.S. government's pre-planning of 9/11 from the bin Ladens back in 1987, but this week from her Albuquerque home Welch added more, saying when working for NASA as a scientist on brain development research in Phoenix, she obtained a secret computer code and was able to uncover the findings of a government-funded project titled "Global Cleanse 2000," a study outlining strategies for global war and population reduction.

After learning of the government's evil intentions almost 20 years ago and being a government target ever since, Welch said she always knew going public was one of the most difficult decisions she ever made in her life.

But two months ago Welch decided to tell America what she learned about the U.S. government's pre-planning of 9/11, saying although the story's a hard pill to swallow and "may sound unbelievable," she felt the need to risk public humiliation, government harassment and warn Americans anyway.

"Just like before, they'll be after me again now that I went public," said Welch who has been drugged and beaten on several occasions by government operatives.

And since she went public in May the harassment started again, starting in the similar subtle manner it did after she was unexpectedly approached by the Saudis, including the bin Ladens.

But Welch, instead of running and hiding, is now prepared to fight back hard, making public a 200 page document detailing information obtained about the staging of 9/11, Global Cleanse 2000 and about FBI and CIA civil rights violations.

"I'm naming names and want justice," added Welch.

She also said she wants to document her story in a book, starting from the time she was a 'military brat,' her father being an Air Force B-52 pilot, when at the age of three she displayed exceptional ESP abilities and channeling powers, powers that eventually led her into the NASA program as an adult.

Concerning the 200 page diaries documenting her FBI troubles and knowledge of 9/11, copies of the documents have previously been sent to several members of the former Clinton White House, including Hillary Clinton, as well as to Taos, NM. former district attorney John Paternoster, who Welch approached in 1995 about government death threats.

Paternoster, now in private practice in Taos, recently said he couldn't remember ever meeting Welch or hearing about the bin Laden story.

"He knows me and an investigator named Martinez was even assigned to my case," said Welch this week in a telephone conversation from her New Mexico home. "I saw him several times and even have kept receipts from his office, given to me regarding the 200 page document I gave him. He just wants the whole thing to go away and is probably afraid to tell the truth.

Regarding possible FBI and CIA further retaliation, she added:

"What's the difference if they're planning global war and mass population reduction," said Welch. "When I worked for NASA Application Technical Center In Phoenix, involved in brain development and mind control projects, I accessed the code for the computers and read a secret project they were working on called "Global Cleanse 2000," outlining certain strategies like 9/11 to start a global war and how other strategies regarding how to reduce the world's population.

"Now, again, after I went public, the harassment has started, my phone is tapped and they are starting to mess with my life. This time I am really frightened since they are very serious about keeping people like me, who know too much, quiet since they are getting closer to their objective of destroying this country.

"In the past I noticed when I stayed quiet, they left me alone. But when I started talking, the harassment then followed. That's how I know they are still watching me and have always been watching me."

Welch's claim that two of the outspoken bin Laden brothers, not Osama, told her about the U.S. government's plans to stage 9/11 in 1987 is not an idle fantasy or a story made up by a hyper-sensitive person's imagination.

Logsdon, the other NASA employed scientist who worked along side Welch, verified her story this way:

"Two of the bin Laden brothers came some 90 miles from Phoenix, Arizona, and stopped at our doorstep unannounced. Their bodyguards set up a surveillance parameter around our property and others came into our house, taped up the windows and set up a film projector. The people in this motorcade seemed very scared, and presented this as a matter of life and death," recalled Logsdon, who said at the time in 1987 the couple had no idea about the eventual 9/11 implications.

"These men told us to be very cautious and to assume that we were under surveillance by our government. For several hours they showed us films of meetings of key Arabs and U.S. government officials discussing the oil issues. The bottom line was that if the Arabs did not do it their way, the U.S. would simply take their oil by force. They also explained that they have been manipulated into setting up bank accounts where oil profits were siphoned off and were no longer under their control.

"They then explained why the World Trade Centers were the ideal target for this purpose. The two bin Ladens showed us this film because they made it very clear how they did not want to be involved with any U.S. plot to manipulate the Arab governments or start a war."

Regarding the ongoing government harassment to keep her quiet, Welch said a two year period in the mid 1990s was most troubling when an agent infiltrated her life, finally using drugs and other types of physical harassment to get information after gaining her trust.

"I wouldn't be honest if I didn't tell you I was scared again and I know some people have a hard time believing this story, but it's true," said Welch, recalling the years when she said the agent who used the name Alfred Hermendorf injected her with several types of different drugs.

"But I am going to release the information and tell my story in a book because these people are evil and want to destroy America. There is a global catastrophe right around the corner and they may even make it look like a natural disaster. But I saw the plans back in the 1980s and after 9/11. I know it is going to happen unless we quickly get Bush out of power."

Welch and Logsdon became aware of this radical element in our government, trying to create this new world order, when they worked together as scientists at NASA's Application Technical Center Institute in Phoenix.

Together with over 100 "think tank" participants, Logsdon, an engineer, and Welch, a licensed hypnotism - therapist and head of the Global Elite Scientist's Club, were developing technology to better understand the brain's memory and psychic ability capacities.

The pair came up with they called the "light and sound" machine, receiving much praise during the 80s for what was thought then to be ground breaking work. It was this project that eventually brought them in contact with the bin Ladens, creating the backdrop for why they both know 9/11 was a staged U.S. government event.

"They (at NASA) ended up stealing our work and then after the bin Laden incident denied knowing that Rene and I even existed," said Logsdon.

Kay Griggs, Former Marine Colonel's Wife, Talks Again About Military Assassin Squads, Drug Running, Illegal Weapon Deals And Sexual Perversion Deep Within The Highest Levels Of U.S. Military And Government

For 11 long years, Kay Griggs heard all the messy details from her military husband, usually while he was drinking before going into one of his drunken stupors. First going public in 1998 in an eight hour video interview with a truth-seeking Michigan pastor and FM radio broadcaster, she now is back after 9/11 to warn Americans to beware of the evil lurking within the highest levels of government, bound and determined to destroy America.

By Greg Szymanski

Katharine 'Kay' Griggs knows what it's like to have a gun pointed in her face. She knows what it's like to have her face slapped, her bones broken and her nose bloodied by her former bully of a husband, an active Marine Colonel and a man who she claims is "above the law and literally gets away with murder."

Virginia court documents and photos of her battered arms and legs tell the sad and brutal physical story of her failed marriage, a tumultuous 11 year roller coaster ride ending in 1999.

But the real story for public consumption isn't the private divorce court details. It is the secret military information about drug running, weapon sales, sexual perversion and assassination squads she learned firsthand from her husband, U.S. Marine Corps Col. George Raymond Griggs, now remarried and living in Mirror Lake, NH.

This isn't the first time Griggs is going public with her story about government mob-like hit squads and the sexually perverted secret "cap and gown and skull and bone society" her husband belonged to along with other high-ranking Marine officers and public officials.

She first went public in 1996 after receiving death threats, being rescued by Sarah McClendon, former senior member of the White House press corps, who believed her story and took Griggs under her wing, giving her a place to stay and important advice about how to stay alive when dealing with military operatives.

"I became a whistle blower and received death threats," said Griggs this week in an extended telephone conversation from her Tidewater, VA. home. "I finally wound up living for safety reasons with Sarah, the dean of the White House Press Corps, who had been with every president since FDR and was in Army intelligence and also an attorney's daughter from Texas."

Advised by McClendon to go public without being able to get the mainstream media to listen, she traveled to Adrian, MI on the advice of a friend to do a long extended taped interview with Pastor Rick Strawcutter, a preacher and owner of a 500 watt pirate FM station at 99.3 on the dial in Lenawee County.

Strawcutter, who believed in free speech radio and empowering the public with the truth, produced two extended interviews finally released in 2000, one being a two hour version called "Sleeping With The Enemy" and the other an unedited eight hour version available at www.kaygriggstalks.com.

Since then Griggs said she went back to her Virginia home, tried to piece her life together and essentially talked to private groups or anybody who would take the time to listen.

Now this week Griggs decided to tell her story again, saying "I will keep repeating it to anyone" and adding after 9/11, the war in Iraq, the London bombings and the fear of terrorism, the "American people are at a point where they are ready and willing to hear the truth."

Although they may be shocked, Griggs said the "truth will set you free," even if it means facing up to the highest form of corruption, including sexual perversion and government sponsored mob-like hits orchestrated by high-ranking military and government officials.

"My former husband George, who is a trained assassin, calls the people he is involved with the members of The Firm or The Brotherhood. If you are in the clique, you are above the law and literally can get away with murder. For years, mostly when he was drinking, he told me how he and others in this elite military group would kill people," said Griggs, as she mentioned name after high-powered name and story after-detailed story about sexual perversion, murder, military hit squads, brainwashing and mind control, all activities sanctioned, participated in and condoned by a group of military and political elite.

"There were many other things and people he told me about which were startling, things I'll tell you later. But George is like a robot, glazed eyes and all. While he drinks, he sort of comes alive. It is hard to explain unless you actually see him. He told me he was the No. 1 shooter for a long time for a group of powerful people at the top. If a guy is too honest, for example, they get rid of him."

When asked how large an inside group it was and how she survived after going public with such damning information about so many high powered names, she added:

"I just keep myself and my story in the public eye. I am a decent, honest person who believes in telling the truth. I have a deep, abiding faith and trust in God. I also come from a strong-minded, strong-willed family and I am not afraid of generals and admirals.

"As far as the sheer numbers of people involved in this cap and gown, skull and bones secret society, it's hard to say. But it is based on old friendships, college and prep school relationships, covering up secrets and sexual perversion.

"My husband told me about all the sexually perverted rituals, like anal and oral sex in coffins at drunken parties and running naked in the woods at Bohemian Grove. Then there was the last time I saw George, which was in 2001 and he was telling me to keep quiet, but I think he knows I will never stop telling the truth."

During numerous drinking binges over many years, one of the main things that sticks out in Griggs' mind was how easily her husband rationalized killing a small number of innocent people and how he was able to somehow justify the killings if it accomplished a strategic goal for the elite group involved.

"Who are these people?" Griggs repeated after being asked the same direct question. "In general, they are first generation German sons, mostly who run things in the military through tight friendships made in Europe and at war colleges. Psyops is a controlling group and Paul Wolfowitz is a major player, as are the many Zionists on this side of the Atlantic.

"Truth is light. And these guys are anxious to collect the global power now in the few hands of their Freemasonic (French Masons) brotherhood's elite hands. It is a very, very small group and a rather homogenized group of global top down existentialist Zionists and socialists. In short Nazi's who came to the U.S. when Hitler, their boy, turned on them in 1933.

Griggs said other recognizable names and major players she learned from her husband's arrogant ramblings besides Wolfowitz and other nondescript military and civilian names, involved in what she called a Zionist global takeover, included Donald Rumsfeld, George H. Bush, Dick Cheney, Henry Kissinger and Andy Fine, to name a few.

"After what I learned from George about "Rummy," as he called him and idolized him and the others, is that they all operate from this secret little, sick society and are all basically cowards and bullies. And I don't believe I should ever keep quiet about who they are because the only way we are going to change their behavior is to shed light on what they are doing and show how ludicrous, sick and inept their behavior really is.

"My husband George just idolized "Rummy" and thinks he is just wonderful when basically he is nothing more than an in the closet-Nazi. Also, George liked to brag how he and Wolfowitz were down in Indonesia in the 1970s, down there training young assassins.

"After what I heard all those years and now putting it into perspective after 9/11, I think they are trying to destroy America. Their whole game is all about war, selling weapons and creating a militaristic society. I know first hand from listening to my husband, they will do anything - I mean anything including murder - to get what they want."

Although Griggs said her husband never mentioned anything specific about 9/11 during their marriage, she claims he hinted several times that "war-gaming and airplane crashes" were necessary elements to control and manipulate the American population.

Putting many of her husband's comments together with other acquaintances made through him, she had this to say about 9/11:

"Before 9/11, there were some things which let me know that it was involved with war gaming going on at ACT Commands center in Suffolk. War games and diversions and manipulations of American public opinion he said are "necessary." George explained some examples such as airplane "crashes" and the bombing by the Israeli Lebanese Bekka valley recruits who blew up the Marine Corps barracks. I believe my husband knew ahead of time 9/11 was going to occur.

"I know that there was a war game going on via Tampa, I think it was called Bright Star, which was being run on 9/11 by a weird and insecure USMC General who was in charge while the Army head was conveniently away in the Near East.

"I am sure 9-11 was a joint and combined military operation, using boys who were recruited via A.Q. Khan's Israeli network in Pakistan and South Africa through Zionists in Hamburg. I believe that certain MI6 British Zionists with the Ian Goodwin-Peter Goodwin-Basil Cardinal Hume Yorkshire network were also involved in funding and recruiting these guys. It was a large and ongoing operation to set up and involved lots of CIA Zionists and lots of funny money."

The Early Years

Griggs grew up in the elite Virginia Southern class, the child of a Reserve Military family of Scottish and French Huguenot descent. Raised with strict Christian ideals, moral character, deep faith and impeccable ethics, she carried with her the headstrong outspoken nature of her father and the truth-seeking characteristics of her mother.

However, a victim of old Southern male chauvinism and backward traditions, she was married young in an arranged fashion to John Garland Pollard III, the wealthy grandson of a Virginia Governor, who lived off his inheritance in a typical aristocratic Southern-style plantation.

"Looking back it was just horrible and suffocating," said Griggs, who after getting a divorce in 1983 went on to teach after getting a degree in history with a specialty in Virginia history and the Scottish Reformation.

After resettling in a Virginia Beach home and working as an Asst. Director of the Chamber of Commerce, she was about to meet a dashing Marine Colonel who would forever change the course and direction of her life.

Second Marriage To Col. Griggs

After renting the main portion of her house to Col. Griggs, the couple dated for two months and were quickly married, a speedy decision the young bride would quickly learn to regret.

The story of the couple's courtship is of little importance, but what happened afterwards regarding the colonel's drunken ramblings takes center stage.

"He started drinking, did a lot of heavy drinking and at first I thought I could change him," said Griggs, who listened closely over the years about her husband's role as a military assassin and his role as a military trainer who brought new, young assassins into the fold. "He started talking openly about murder, corruption, assassinations and lies. It was just incredible the names that were involved and the people who were being killed.

"He gave me very detailed and graphic descriptions about how Waco was carried out, as well as how many other hits went down, including Malcolm Kerr, the head of the American University in Beirut and Ron Brown, who was trying to take away the State Department's monopoly on drug money and arms deals.

"My husband would get into these crazed stupors where he would be running around the house naked and there were times I would find him lying in the grass that way.

"I learned about how he was sexually molested by homosexual teachers at the elite Hun School, where a lot of the others in this small elite group also attended, including the members the Saudi Royal family. He told me how sex is used to control, intimidate and groom boys into this type of military service from a young age.

"He mentioned how many of The Brotherhood, as he liked to call them, are members of the "Cap and Gown" Princeton group or the "Skull and Bones" Yale crowd and how they performed sexually perverted induction ceremonies with anal and oral sex performed inside coffins."

During the final two years of the marriage, Griggs said her husband basically disappeared. When she finally decided to blow the whistle on her husband's activities and others surrounding him, she met privately with attorney and former CIA Director William Colby, seeking advice.

"I really thought I would get some help, but Colby was later found dead," said Griggs about Colby whose body was found eight weeks after he disappeared on April, 27, 1996, while canoeing near his Rock Point, Maryland, vacation home.

"Then I started getting death threats, had my house burglarized, my car messed with and every time I would try to get the FBI or police to act, strangely nothing would be done. They would do things like steal my underwear, leave black dots on all my blouses and leave twelve screw drivers on my kitchen counter. They would do strange things like this, which if you think about it, is really hard to explain to the police without them thinking you are crazy.

"I later found out I was flagged by Marine General Al Gray, my husband's boss who put the wheels in motion on much of the criminal activity. He flagged me as a trouble maker knowing I was a free thinker who was not about to keep quiet like all the other military wives who knew too much. Finally, I sought help from Sarah McClendon, who basically saved my life."

After weathering the storm of harassment in Washington D.C., she was encouraged by friends to publicize her story nationally through the alternative media since major publications wouldn't touch it with a ten foot pole. In 1998, she then met Pastor Strawcutter who believed in her and who basically told the same story Griggs is telling today but in much more detail.

Pastor Strawcutter's 1998 Taped Interview

Besides running a ministry in Adrian, MI., Strawcutter's main passion is truth-telling, his philosophy turning out to be a perfect match for Griggs when she finally contacted him one morning in 1998 as he broadcasted live during drive-time on his pirate FM radio station.

"I remember one morning getting this call during a commercial break and then we put Kay on live for about 45 minutes. I couldn't believe what I was hearing," said Strawcutter this week by telephone from his Michigan church. "After the show, I arranged for Kay to come to Michigan with her documentation and photos of the story."

When Griggs arrived with her husband's diary and photos providing credible documentation for some of what she claimed, Strawcutter taped her story for over eight hours.

After the taping session, he recalls out of all the controversial stories he worked on, the Griggs story was one of the most troubling and difficult to deal with due to the sensitive nature of the allegations and the number of high-ranking names involved.

Finally, after sitting on the story for a year, Strawcutter decided to release it in two forms, the first being a 2 hour edited video version of the interview which he distributed under the title of "Sleeping With The Enemy" and the other being simply the longer unedited eight hour version.

And like Griggs recounted this week from her Virginia home, the Strawcutter tapes are even more detailed about how members of The Brotherhood operate in a world of treachery, deceit, lies, murder, drug running, sex slavery and illegal weapon sales, all in the name of forming a new world order.

"People need to know the truth about 9/11, Waco, the Oklahoma City bombing and, of course, what Kay Griggs is saying," said Strawcutter, who for a long time on his FM station had been testing the waters of truth by broadcasting controversial stories, many coming from the likes of Michael Collins Piper and other American Free Press writers, an alternative paper that also delves into subjects taboo in the mainstream media.

"I basically believed she was telling the truth and decided to go with the story as she told it."

Asked if he was ever harassed for bringing the Griggs tapes public, he added:

"No, not really. I never worry about things like that. But I do know after winning a landmark federal case to stay on the air in the 1990s, the feds came down real hard on me about three months after 9/11 with another legal challenge to my station which had become wildly successful, becoming the second top rated show in the county."

Shortly, thereafter, Strawcutter was forced to take his brand of truth-telling radio off the air waves in the wake of legal roadblocks and challenges designed by the government to bankrupt his efforts.

Katharine 'Kay' Griggs Today

The head strong, truth telling woman who first provided America with her shocking story in 1996, is really no different today although she readily admits the government is still trying to ruin her financially and still monitors her closely.

Although still under the government microscope, her energy and curiosity remain strong as ever.

"With all that's happening in the world, the time is right now for truth," said Griggs. "I think America can handle the truth now and I basically want people to know that my husband and the people involved with him are really nothing but cowards and bullies. But they are, at the same time, dangerous, evil people that must be stopped. I am not a vindictive person and I also am not seeking publicity. I simply want people to know the truth about how these people are trying to destroy this country."

And still trying to "connect the dots" in an attempt to expose The Brotherhood, she added:

"I'm in the midst of research on the headmistress of my Episcopal girls' school, St. Margaret's, who spent years working with MI6 at Cheltenham!! This is Victor Rothschild's group with 6 representing the six-sided star and MI5 being more Masonic but still not sure about all of this yet."

Single and living in the same home she shared with her former military husband, Griggs still holds firm to her strong Christian beliefs, saying she will talk to anybody who is interested in listening since she firmly believes "truth is light and only the truth will set you free."

How To Listen To The Kay Griggs Tapes

There are three video versions of her story in distribution. The first is Pastor Strawcutter's original two hour version called "Sleeping With The Enemy" available at his web site at www.kaygriggsvideo.com.

The second is the raw, unedited eight hour version, Strawcutter saying rights being obtained by a third party and available at www.kaygriggstalks.com. And the third is a two-part video, taken from Strawcutter's original interviews and edited by Eric Hufschmid located at www.hugequestions.com.

Jailed Israeli Whistle Blower Claims Israel's Hidden Stockpile Of 200 Nuclear Weapons He Knew About In The 1980s Has Grown Even Larger Today
Although Mordechai Vanunu was finally released from prison last year, he still is under "a restricted travel" arrest and a government imposed gag order to speak about nuclear weapons. Fighting for his complete freedom, he said this week if President Bush is looking for nuclear weapons in the Middle East, 'he can find them right here in Israel.'
23 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

All Mordechai Vanunu ever wanted was to live in peace without the threat of nuclear weapons. What he got instead was 9 years in 'the hole' and 18 years in an Israeli jail.

And this week, released a year ago from prison and talking from his Jerusalem home even though under an Israeli gag order, he said "this is the thanks I got" for trying to bring peace and avert a nuclear disaster.

Forgotten and left for dead in a cold and dark Israeli jail cell, Vanunu ended up there almost 20 years ago by revealing what was termed "classified state secrets" when in the mid 1980s, he blew the whistle on secret Israeli intelligence information about a hidden arsenal of 200 nuclear weapon, an arsenal he claims that has grown larger today.

Sadly admitting he was disappointed the "world didn't do more" to come to his rescue, he said "all is forgiven now," as he plans to pick up the pieces of his life and vigorously continue speaking, writing and talking about world peace by trying to stop the spread of nuclear weapons before it's too late.

Although Vanunu is out from behind bars now, released April 21, 2004, he still remains a prisoner in a sense, the state demanding he be restricted from leaving Israel and from speaking to the press and public until at least April 2006. Recently, in March, the Israeli government tacked another year on his state prisoner status, as prosecutors continue to search for ways to put Vanunu behind bars.

However, on May 29, the long time peace advocate received his first partial legal victory of sorts when an Israeli magistrate ruled in his favor for the first time in more than 20 years, saying he wasn't in violation of the state imposed traveling restriction when he recently traveled to Bethlehem in the West Bank.

The judge also decided charges of talking to foreign journalists could not stand, which could have landed Vanunu in jail for two years.

Recently, Ernest Rodker, head of a UK campaign to free Vanunu, claimed the ruling was a breakthrough.

"It's the first time in his long history of persecution by the Israeli security services that their ridiculous charges against him have been seriously challenged," said Rodker.

But even though Rodker's hopeful, Vanunu isn't completely out of the woods since the government has been left a window open by the judge to reformulate the 22 count indictment, seeing if Vanunu's actions violated "Emergency Israeli legislation," carrying a nine month prison sentence.

At present, Vanunu is still waiting for new charges to be filed.

But like a true peace advocate on a mission more important than life itself, he brushed aside his legal problems and flaunted the Israeli gag order again this week, like he has done numerous times in the past year, speaking openly on the telephone about Israeli's growing nuclear threat and America's lopsided foreign policy, slanted toward Israel.

"I would like to tell George W. Bush that if he is looking for nuclear weapons in Iran and Iraq, he should start looking right here in Israel," said Vanunu in a telephone conversation this week from his Jerusalem home, adding Israel's nuclear stockpile will only lead to others in the region obtaining the same weaponry, eventually leading to outright war.

Regarding the American invasion of the Middle East, he said:

"Of course, I am against the war in Iraq and Afghanistan. I am against war period. But I want the American people to know that President Bush is lying to the people of the world about the motives behind this war and who really has the nuclear capability in the Middle East.

"Like I said, if he wants to find nuclear weapons in the Middle East, Bush should start looking right here in Israel because there is a huge stockpile."

Emphasizing his intention was never to harm Israel when he blew first blew the whistle in the 1980s on the Israeli nuclear program, he said instead he felt an obligation "to protect the people of the world" from an impending nuclear holocaust, since he was privy to the Israeli nuclear buildup while working as a scientist on the program.

And now he says nothing has really changed, as Israel still is a "very real" nuclear threat and he still feels the obligation to warn the people of the world of the consequential danger.

"I want to today tell the people of the world that absolutely, without question, Israel's nuclear capacity has grown since the 1980s when I knew then of 200 such weapons," said Vanunu, adding the gag order is nevergoing to keep him quiet.

"I really don't care about that (jail) as they have already taken much of my life away from already. I felt like I was dead so many times in jail, it doesn't matter anymore. And besides, I have talked to numerous journalists and activists during the last year about spreading peace and not war and will continue doing so.

"I simply am not going to stop talking about ending the proliferation of nuclear weapons and what I consider to be a major threat to peace in the world. This is who I am and what I believe."

Although Vanunu talks openly and wants to come to America, the Israeli government still monitors his words and movements closely, recently in March putting another one year restriction on his state prisoner status.

"I have suffered a lot for world peace. Sure I feel very bad that the world didn't do more to help me all the years I was in jail, but I also realize that I am just one human being that stood up against a number of very powerful people," said Vanunu.

Although it's difficult to imagine the pain and suffering of a man imprisoned for so long, Vanunu penned numerous poems while being locked away in solitary confinement. Recently on an American web site dedicated to his complete vindication, he released one entitled "Buried Alive," depicting what life in 'the hole' is really like:

Solitary confinement is living in a grave to live alone is living with yourself, talking to yourself in your mind remembering yourself in the past, living the past in the present, living the past many times,
In the present time you are Dead. A dead man walking in his grave. To be alive is to be free.
Here I am a blind man my eyes, walls, can see eight years far away from trees, flowers, sea, women, birds -freedom.
Now iron gates, doors, grills, cement in this concrete world solidifying me. Only my mind, my spirit is free-free to remember why I am in prison but not prison for my spirit, they cannot chain my mind.
And I am free to keep my belief in my action against all psychological brainwash until I can fly from this state prison - until my dead body will rise again from this tomb like an agent who came back from the cold to serve the world in the war against nuclear Holocaust, nuclear proliferation, against nuclear secrets... to be free to live to be alive...

Besides the movements in both the UK and America to release Vanunu, Daniel Ellsberg and numerous living Nobel Peace Prize winners have also publicly called for Vanunu's complete vindication and release.

Recently, famous American whistle blower Daniel Ellsberg released this statement about Vanunu's case:

"Nineteen years ago, Mordechai Vanunu, a technician at the secret nuclear weapons production facility at Dimona in Israel, did something that he was right to do, something that others with his knowledge of Israel's nuclear activities and their implications for Israeli security and democracy and for world order should have done earlier, or later. He revealed to his fellow citizens and to the world truths about these activities that had long been wrongly concealed and denied by his government.

"What he revealed was not merely that Israel was a nuclear weapons state; that had been known for more than a decade on the basis of widely-publicized leaks in the U.S. about official American intelligence estimates to this effect.

"Vanunu's photographs and interviews with the London Sunday Times revealed that Americans and all others had substantially underestimated the pace and scale of the Israel's secret and un-inspected production of nuclear materials and warheads, especially since the early '70's.

"New estimates on the basis of his revelations put the Israeli arsenal in 1986 at some 200 warheads (rather than 20), making it the third or possibly fourth largest nuclear power, ahead of Britain and probably ahead of France. After nineteen more years of production, that ranking remains valid, with Israeli probably possessing closer to 400 weapons.

"Did not Israelis, citizens of a democracy, and other nations of the world deserve to know this? Was not his example of truth-telling, at great personal risk, to be thanked and emulated?

Vanunu, who lives at the pilgrim's hostel of the Anglican Cathedral in Jerusalem, is now in the process of writing a book, waiting for the day he can finally leave Israel legally, his desired destination being America.

Former Auxiliary NY Fireman Is 'A One-Man Investigative Team' When It Comes To Finding The Truth About 9/11

New Yorker Paul Isaac was a block away when the Twin Towers collapsed, watching helplessly as many of his friends perished. Today the former auxiliary fireman and communication specialist is 'a man on a mission' who says after years of researching 9/11, he is positive a massive cover-up exists to protect an inside government job.

21 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Paul Isaac doesn't know the meaning of the word quit. From day one, the former auxiliary New York fireman and now self-proclaimed "auxiliary pain in the rear end," knew the Twin Towers was a controlled demolition.

And since day one, he has never quit trying to prove it.

Stack up all the major newspapers on a desk, city by city, across the entire country and there wouldn't be enough information about "what really happened on 9/11" to fill up a thimble.

But take all the information stacked up in Isaac's apartment and there would be enough to fill up a New York City library or enough to make the New York Times investigative reporters look Mutt and Jeff chasing after their tales.

When Isaac first watched the towers collapse from a block away, he said they "strangely came down like a house of cards, in their own footprints" and in what he called "a perfect demolition job."

Although Isaac isn't a scientist, engineer or explosives expert, it doesn't really matter. What matters is that someone invest the time and energy to investigate 9/11 in the wake of hasty conclusions arrived at by both government and the media.

It's really all the American people have left. All that's left are the efforts of people like Isaac who are not taking no for answer when it comes to further investigating the many unanswered questions about 9/11.

Some may wonder why Isaac's story is important? Why is a story about a man who is neither an eye-witness or an expert important? Other may say why does a humble auxiliary fireman's research merit coverage? Others may even selfishly say "if him, why not me?"

And the answer to all these questions is that Isaac's isn't just the "average Joe" on the street corner shooting off his mouth. He isn't just somebody with a hunch, trying to make a name for himself.

Instead, Isaac is a diligent researcher, a man on a personal mission who has dedicated almost every waking hour of his life to get justice for the hundreds of friends, both fireman and civilians, who perished in the towering 9/11 inferno.

The truth is Isaac has a giant hole left in his heart after 9/11, a hole he is trying to fill with information leading to the truth leading to the real culprits responsible for the mass murder of over 3,000 Americans.

In fact, if there were a 10 million other Isaac's in America, maybe the government literally wouldn't have been able to get away with murder and maybe the truth about 9/11 would be learned.

"If the 9/11 Commission and the media aren't going after the truth, then I am," said Isaac this week in a telephone conversation from his New York apartment.

"There are a couple of interesting facts, along with numerous other inconsistencies, which have led me to seriously question how the government claims the tower's fell by jet fuel alone.

"First, many people may not recall that on February 15, 1975, there was a blaze at the World Trade Center that took out six floors. In fact, the fire was much hotter than the one on 9/11 but it still didn't take down the entire building."

And like a true investigator who likes to answer critics with questions, Isaac added:

"Why did the same demolition company, Controlled Demolition Inc., the company that helped clean up at Oklahoma City and the WTC, also on July 15, 2001, bring down and demolish two 400 foot tanks not far from the twin towers? Was it a dry run?"

Trying to put the 9/11 puzzle together on a daily basis, Isaac also has spent countless hours trying to track down data and original building schematics in an effort to show, once and for all, the WTC was built to withstand much more impact than a jetliner crash at the top floors.

He said to his astonishment a complete set of structural floor plans was never released by the government supporting its conclusions. Instead, what he found were conclusions based without "the slightest bit of documented evidence."

"So I went on a personal search all over the city, a search to every government and private office imaginable to get accurate data about the WTC building plans," said Isaac. "Finally, in the old archives of the New York Fire Department, I hit the jack pot and now I think hold the trump card.

"I want to bring these documents to the public and I want to bring the culprits who caused this mass murder to justice. These blueprints have never been made public and it shows without question that the WTC is a whole lot stronger than the government would like us to believe. These blueprints show a very strong truss system and not a cardboard box like the government claims."

The data, floor plans and schematics found by Isaac not only reveal the WTC structural design but give an inside look at every nook and cranny of the building, including designs of the 99 elevators in the two buildings as well as giving an impression of the building's strengths and weaknesses from a fire department's point of view.

Besides being a man on a 9/11 information quest, finding out the truth has become personal mission, not only because Isaac lost many friends, but since he considered the Twin Towers his home away from home when he worked for Engine Company 10 located right across the street from the WTC.

When he worked as an auxiliary fireman specializing in emergency and disaster communications response, Isaac said after 9/11 he began monitoring all emergency units to see if any patterns or information about the perpetrators could be learned.

"I heard some crazy things over my radio in those days, things I can't repeat on the phone," said Isaac.

Isaac said over the last four years he's compiled information and names of civilians and firefighters, whose identities he keeps anonymous for their safety, who all claim to have either witnessed explosions in the towers or have information that a controlled demolition took place.

"It's just amazing how many people are afraid to talk for fear of retaliation or losing their jobs," said Isaac, regarding the FBI gag order placed on law enforcement and fire department officials, preventing them from openly talking about any inside knowledge of 9/11.

Although Isaac wasn't an eye-witness inside the towers on 9/11, he was about as close as anybody could get without actually being inside the building.

"When the first plane hit the tower, I was on my way to work on a train below the WTC," said Isaac. "The train made a quick stop and I saw all the people screaming and running. It then sped off, missing stops along the way until we got a couple of miles away. I knew something was terribly wrong so I ran back and was stopped by the police barricades about a block away.

"As I looked up, I saw the first tower come down. I couldn't believe it. From that moment on, I kept saying this is a war but against who is the real question. The Bush administration needed something to set in motion their global agenda for conquest and power and 9/11 was it."

Two books recommended by Isaac for anyone wanting to get up to speed on the neo-con movement and its imperialistic strategies are "Behold The Pale Horse," a 1988 release by William Cooper and "Divided We Stand" by Eric Darton.

Regarding the Bush administration, Isaac said: "It's really worse than a dictatorship!"

And like a true researcher with an eye for detail, he added: "Why don't you give Karl Rove a call and ask him what he thinks? His number is 202-456-5578. I'm sure he won't mind if you give him a call!"

Editor's Note: A story like Paul Isaac's is especially inspirational at a time when the government and media are leading Americans down a one way street to hell with no way back.

All signals point to another government orchestrated terrorist attack on American soil, this one larger and more deadly than 9/11. It's a helpless feeling to know the traitors are within and there are so few in Americans aware of the truth. It's like walking into church, knowing the devil is standing on the altar and everyone keeps on praying anyway.

And at this late date, with America's future spinning in the balance and so little time left, any person who has a story like Isaac's, any person who has compiled research about 9/11 or any other information about the neo-con agenda, is asked to write patriott2424@aol.com so your story can be told before it's too late.

Perhaps, if more Paul Isaac's come forward, we can uncover the one piece of information that may turn the tide back in the direction of democracy, freedom and peace. Remember, it's up to you and nobody else.

NY Fireman Lou Cacchioli Upset That 9/11 Commission 'Tried To Twist My Words,' A True Hero, He Vows To Stick To The Truth, Something Lacking In The 9/11 Investigation

Former veteran fireman recalls hearing three distinct 'huge explosions' while rescuing people in north tower between 23rd and 24th floors, testimony ignored in the 9/11 Commission's final report. Brave fireman recalls how he almost called it quits after losing his buddies, his job and his health. Now, four years later, he's finally on the rebound, making an emotional and physical recovery, adding he keeps active with the fire department and enjoys his life as a new grandfather.

19 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

New York fireman Lou Cacchioli looked the devil square in the eye the morning of 9/11. He stared him down, threw him aside and walked into the depths of hell like a true hero, knowing he may never walk out again.

Like a hero, he risked his life to save others, never once thinking about himself at a time when one wrong a turn, a slight move in the wrong direction, meant sure death.

Although he survived, a little bit of Lou Cacchioli died that tragic morning in the north tower.

A little bit of the Italian boy, born in northern Italy who came to New York at the age of 10, was left behind in the rubble along with thousands of unlucky souls who didn't make it out of hell that morning.

And if you look closely, a little bit of the Italian boy can still be seen hovering high above where the WTC once stood, flying high with the hearts and souls of his firefighter friends who perished that morning.

Look even closer through the clouds and you can probably still see a silhouette of Cacchioli and his best friend, Tommy Hedsall, both proudly wearing their FDNY uniforms and still rescuing people in the north tower's 24th floor, the last place Cacchioli ever saw his friend alive.

Four years later, Cacchioli hasn't talked much about the nightmare he lived on 9/11. First, he really didn't want to talk about. Next, he got tired of having his words twisted by the 9/11 Commission and finally, the New York media basically never sought him out to get the true account of what he saw and heard in the north tower right before the building collapsed.

Originally, on September 12, 2001, People Magazine ran a few short paragraphs about the 20-year veteran New York fireman hearing what sounded like bombs exploding in the north tower.

Short and sweet, that was it. A few short words about bombs exploding, but words that were repeated over and over again in story after story by writers and broadcasters who never even bothered to talk to him in the first place.

Furthermore, Cacchioli was upset that People Magazine misquoted him, saying "there were bombs" in the building when all he said was he heard "what sounded like bombs" without having definitive proof bombs were actually detonated.

After that unfortunate journalistic blunder, a little angry and a little disgusted, he pretty much disappeared into the New York landscape, his story only appearing in an obscure book released called "American Spirit," and his 2004 testimony given in private to the 9/11 Commission never released to the public in the commission's final report.

So, it's safe to say Cacchioli's story, the story of an American hero, is probably unknown to most Americans even though 9/11 will be forever etched in everyone's hearts and souls for all time.

In a humble effort to set the 9/11 Commission's record straight and put the correct version of hero Lou Cacchioli's story back in the history books, here is the unedited version, better late than never, as told by the man in an extended telephone conversation this week from his New York home:

THEN AND NOW

Losing his buddies, his job and his health, there was time after 9/11 he seriously considered suicide. But after counseling, a bit of soul searching and a loving family, the man who went through the depths of hell is now a happy grandfather.

Although he's finally able to cope with the horror and grief of 9/11 after four long years, the tough-talking Italian with a heart of gold, admitted:

"I still have my moments, I still break down sometimes and I still go to counseling. But I feel a lot better, a whole lot better. I have a wonderful wife of 30 years, three great children and now a little granddaughter. What more could a man want?"

And the man who almost lost it all after saving so many lives is back living safely on the "happy side of heaven," keeping close touch with the fire department he loves and vowing to never leave the streets of New York, the only life he really knows.

And like a true Italian, headstrong, independent and not afraid to speak his mind, he said:

"Nothing's going to push Lou Cacchioli out of this town, nothing!"

THE MORNING OF 9/11

Cacchioli was one of those tough New York firefighters, the kind of guy you'd like to have a coffee or beer with or the kind of guy who could talk your arm off about Yankee baseball.

For most of his career, "Tough Lou" was a Company 47 engine man in the equally as tough Harlem District. He was the type of fireman who you picture sitting around the firehouse dinner table, shooting the breeze and talking war stories about the last big blaze up on 42nd Street.

He was the type of fearless New York fireman who, up until 9/11, thought he saw it all, including the WTC bombing in 1993.

But that was before 9/11. That was before Cacchioli was thrown into depths of hell when the Company 47 bell sounded, telling the fire crew to head to the south tower of the WTC.

And like the sound of the bell marking the 15th round at Madison Square Garden, it was the last bell Cacchioli ever heard, as he never worked another day for the FDNY after 9/11.

Although it was like someone ripped his heart out on January 4, 2002, when doctors told him due a pulmonary condition from the 9/11 contaminants he'd never work as a fireman again, Cacchioli somehow still finds the strength to recall what he calls the most horrifying day a man could ever imagine.

But back on 9/11, Cacchioli was in true form, headstrong and ready to take on the blaze like he'd done so many times before. Although he readily admits "none of the finest fireman in the world were prepared for 9/11," he said never once did he think the buildings would topple, but at the same time, never did he think the fire could ever be contained.

CACCHIOLI AND ENGINE CO. 47 ARRIVE ON THE SCENE

When Co. 47 arrived with Cacchioli leading the way as the senior member of the crew, the second plane had already hit the south tower and they were told to head directly to the Marriot Hotel across from the WTC, since a fire was blazing from debris falling from the towers. Cacchioli recalls hearing radio reports of "people jumping" and when he got closer to the Marriot, the reports turned into reality.

"I looked up and there were about 6 to 10 people flying through the air coming down right on us," said Cacchioli. "It was horrible when they hit the ground, something you had to turn your eyes away from. One of the jumpers landed directly on fireman Danny Sur, killing him on the spot. I remember saying, 'Oh my God, what are we getting into?'"

Cacchioli then recalls entering the Marriot, trying to lead "the kids" as he called them, adding that words could not describe the screaming and chaos within.

"There was debris flying everywhere and it was just mass chaos," said Cacchioli. "At that point, orders were changing fast and furious and our company was directed to lend assistance in the north tower."

CACCHIOLI AND CREW ENTER NORTH TOWER AND GO UP TO 24TH FLOOR

Although the Marriot was a bad scene, the North Tower looked like a war zone. Originally, his crew was ordered to the South Tower, but was misdirected to the other one due to confusion, a twist of fate that saved his life.

When he finally entered the North Tower lobby, Cacchioli recalls elevator doors completely blown out and another scene of mass chaos with people running, screaming and being hit with debris.

"I remember thinking to myself, my God, how could this be happening so quickly if a plane hit way above. It didn't make sense," said Cacchioli.

At that point, Cacchioli found one of the only functioning elevators, one only going as high as the 24th floor, a twist of fate that probably saved his life.

"Looking back if it was one of the elevators that went higher, I wouldn't be here talking today," added Cacchioli.

As he made his way up along with men from Engine Co. 21, 22 and Ladder Co. 13, the doors opened on the 24th floor, a scene again that hardly made sense to the seasoned fireman, claiming the heavy dust and haze of smoke he encountered was unusual considering the location of the strike.

"Tommy Hetzel was with me and everybody else also gets out of the elevator when it stops on the 24th floor," said Cacchioli, "There was a huge amount of smoke. Tommy and I had to go back down the elevator for tools and no sooner did the elevators close behind us, we heard this huge explosion that sounded like a bomb. It was such a loud noise, it knocked off the lights and stalled the elevator.

"Luckily, we weren't caught between floors and were able to pry open the doors. People were going crazy, yelling and screaming. And all the time, I am crawling low and making my way in the dark with a flashlight to the staircase and thinking Tommy is right behind me.

"I somehow got into the stairwell and there were more people there. When I began to try and direct down, another huge explosion like the first one hits. This one hits about two minutes later, although it's hard to tell, but I'm thinking, 'Oh. My God, these bastards put bombs in here like they did in 1993!'

"But still it never crossed my mind the building was going to collapse. I really only had two things on my mind and that was getting people out and saving lives. That's what I was trained for and that's what I was going to do.

"I remember at that point in the stairwell between the 23rd and 24th floor, I threw myself down on the steps because of the smoke. It was pitch black, I had my mask on and I was crawling down the steps until I found the door on the 23rd floor."

When Cacchioli entered the 23rd floor, he found a "little man" holding a handkerchief in front of his face and hiding under the standpipes on the wall, used for pumping water on the floor in case of fire.

Leading the man by the arm, he then ran into a group down the hall of about 35 to 40 people, finding his way down the 23rd floor stairwell and beginning their descent to safety.

"Then as soon as we get in the stairwell, I hear another huge explosion like the other two. Then I heard bang, bang, bang - huge bangs - and surmised later it was the floors pan caking on top of one another.

"I knew we had to get out of there fast and on the 12th floor a man even jumped on my back because he thought he couldn't make it any farther. Everybody was shocked and dazed and it was a miracle all of us got this far."

When the group led by Cacchioli finally made it to the lobby level, he was unable to open the door at first, the concussion of the explosions or perhaps the south tower falling, jamming the lobby door.

Finally jarring it loose, the group entered the lobby finding total devastation with windows blown out and marble falling from the walls, but strangely no people. At that point, it was either left or right to an exit, Cacchioli, the man he originally found by the standpipes and another lady going right while the others went left, a move which by the grace of God saved his life.

"It seemed like every move I made that morning was the right move," said Cacchioli. "I should have been killed at least five times. The people that went left didn't make it out, but we came out alive on West Street."

OUTSIDE AND APPARENTLY OUT OF HARMS WAY

After making sure the two civilians were attended to, Cacchioli went to his fire truck finding Lance, the driver, who was attending to the truck and waiting for the crew to return.

Looking up at the North Tower directly above, Cacchioli recalls not having the slightest idea when he exited that the south tower had already collapsed. He also remembers wondering about the fate of his crew members, the driver telling him two were missing and two others injured and already taken to the hospital.

"Next thing, we look up and see the tower collapsing. We saw it starting to come down fast, Lance running towards the water to safety and I headed down West Side Highway."

Cacchioli said he remembers looking back at the North Tower antenna falling, at the same time trying to stay ahead of the huge ball of black smoke gaining ground. He then threw off his mask to make himself lighter, a move that allowed him to run faster and perhaps save his life, while eventually having to throw himself on the ground from the heavy sawdust-like air mixed with glass that was choking him to death and taking away his vision.

Landing in debris, he luckily fell by the wheels of another fire truck, another twist of fate that may have saved his life, where he then managed to find a compressed air breathing mask. He then passed out and recalls waking up some time later after another fireman pulled him to safety.

"I don't really know how much time passed, but once I felt better, I quickly went back to look for my friends and stayed till I couldn't walk anymore," said Cacchioli, who began crying when he talked about his close friend. "They finally found Tommy's body in the debris about 10 days later. I went back to Ground Zero every day for a long time, going AWOL, until I finally went to a doctor and was put on medical leave.

"They were very good about it. Everybody understood. It got to the point I couldn't breathe anymore and I lost a lot of vision due to the broken glass getting into my eyes. Finally, the doctors told me in January 2002, I couldn't work and I remember feeling devastated like my whole world was coming to an end.

"I couldn't tell this story for the longest time and I have to admit it is still difficult."

THE 2004 9/11 COMMISSION HEARINGS: WHAT A WAY TO TREAT A HERO!

Cacchioli was called to testify privately, but walked out on several members of the committee before they finished, feeling like he was being interrogated and cross-examined rather than simply allowed to tell the truth about what occurred in the north tower on 9/11.

"My story was never mentioned in the final report and I felt like I was being put on trial in a court room," said Cacchioli. "I finally walked out. They were trying to twist my words and make the story fit only what they wanted to hear. All I wanted to do was tell the truth and when they wouldn't let me do that, I walked out.

"It was a disgrace to everyone, the victims and the family members who lost loved ones. I don't agree with the 9/11 Commission. The whole experience was terrible."

HIS LIFE NOW

Cacchioli spends a majority of his spare time hanging around the firehouse, trying to stay in touch with the department he loves and trying to lend a hand to some of the younger kids in the department.

"I talk to the kids and I want to make sure they are keeping up to snuff so they're ready if something happens," said Cacchioli, who also plays softball in the FDNY league, something he regularly did when he was on active duty. "I don't want to lose this connection because the fire department is a part of who I am and who I always will be."

Asked if he ever was pressured to keep quiet about his 9/11 experience, he added:

"Nobody has bothered me. I don't think I should be bothered. I know what happened that day and I know the whole truth hasn't come out yet. I have my own conscience, my own mind and no one, I mean no one, is going to force Lou Cacchioli to say something that didn't happen and wasn't the truth."

9/11 Mysteries Show Big Hit In Hollywood; WTC Janitor, William Rodriguez, Brings Audience To Tears With Story Of Heroism And Government And Media Suppression

The two-hour visual performance provided an eye-opening look at what really happened on 9/11. The show continues at The Met Theatre in Hollywood every Sunday for the next five weeks.

18 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A jam-packed house at Hollywood's Met Theatre last Sunday broke into tears as William Rodriguez, the WTC maintenance worker and last survivor of the attacks, told his emotional life and death story and strongly criticized the Bush administration for actively covering up the 9/11 investigation.

Rodriguez was the headline speaker at a two-hour visual and interactive performance, the first of its kind in the nation to use a theatrical setting to depict, in a serious manner, the flimsy nature of the official 9/11 story.

Sponsored by American Free Press and others and titled "9/11 Mysteries," the show is presented by The 9/11 Roadies (Brad and Sofia). The performance encourages audience participation as well as offering solid evidence the official story isn't as airtight as the government would like people to believe.

By utilizing live voiceover narration, the show is a neutral look at 9/11 but highlights numerous inconsistencies in the government story, including how the buildings collapsed and how only an orchestrated event, with inside help, could have allowed "19 Arab hijacker with big planes and little knives" to outfox the entire U.S. military defense system.

After the show, Rodriguez took the microphone, breaking into tears himself as he recounted losing 200 friends that tragic morning and how the truth about 9/11 has been systematically suppressed by the Bush administration and the media.

"We just asked for one family member to be on the 9/11 Commission to make sure all voices were heard and they refused," said Rodriguez, who was named a national hero for saving numerous lives. "Instead, we got a group of 'Bozos' who never talked to the survivors and manipulated the 9/11 report to fit the official story."

Rodriguez, who flew in from New York to be part of the opening performance which runs five more Sundays, said his story about hearing a massive explosion in the north tower basement just prior to the jetliner strike above, verified by at least 14 others with him in a basement office, has been hidden by the media and the government for four long years, never being told to mainstream America.

"The American people have been denied the truth and I am a living example," said Rodriguez during his speech as he asked the American people to insist on opening a more truthful 9/11 investigation. "If the 9/11 Commission was serious about getting at the truth, why did they ignore my story and the story of many other survivors who also heard massive explosions in the towers prior to the airplane strike.

"They say it was only jet fuel that brought down the towers. That's a lie and they know it. They know if all the true stories about explosions are revealed to the American people, they will all be exposed as liars.

"Also, ask why all the evidence and the steel beams were hauled away by FEMA before anybody could investigate the cause of the collapse? Why did building No. 7 collapse hours later when there were only small fires burning?

"Why has the New York Times, NBC and others either manipulated my story or never mentioned it for four years?

"When the 9/11 Commission last year just left out my story in its final report, I was devastated, as were other victims and family members who lost loved ones. I thought it was the last chance to get the truth out, but now I am going to keep talking and try again.

In order to spread the word, Rodriguez announced plans to go on a national speaking tour, saying it's "the only way to mount pressure for a new 9/11 inquiry" since the media and government have locked out the main witnesses and evidence.

He is in the process of lining up financial support and already has received numerous invitations, including a September speech in Chicago lined up by American Free Press reporter Christopher Bolyn and another speech independently organized at the University of Wisconsin/Madison campus. If you'd like to contribute in any manner to Rodriguez's cause, contact him at patriott2424@aol.com.

Regarding the success of the '9/11 Roadies Show," Sofia said:

"I am very impressed by the people of Los Angeles. They are brave and curious and ready to learn, as shown by their wild response to the DVD "Loose Change", which we're giving away at our show.

"People in LA are primed and hungry for more on 9/11, and will hopefully set an example for the rest of the country. "9/11 Mysteries" is designed to supply the bigger picture, which many of us are surprisingly unaware of. Why am I doing this? Because it feels natural, and because, as I stand there in front of all those people, I feel they deserve it."

Sofia emphasized her intention was not to draw conclusions or take sides, but to present the facts surrounding the attacks as thoroughly and accurately as possible.

The two-hour show opened with a brief statement by American Free Press reporter Greg Szymanski, who documented recent conversations he had with the New York Times and NBC News, indicating an intention to keep the Rodriguez and other 9/11 stories quiet in order to mislead the American people, essentially perpetuating a government fraud.

The show then began and was broken down into four major visual segments, including "Demolitions, Hijackers and Planes, War Games and Who Benefits."

According to the creators the segments "connect the dots" in a show that Sunday glued people to their seats and raised eyebrows about the implausibility of the government's story, a story claiming 19 Arab hijackers outfoxed the American military and rammed jetliners into targets located in the most heavily guarded airspace in the world.

Besides eye-witness statements about the impossibility of the government story, one of the most rivoting portion of the show was the meticulous attention to detail, depicting the collapse of the WTC as an obvious controlled demolition

Included in the 'Demolitions' portion of the show, was what the creators called endless "woops footage" from major news networks, much of the video presented being aired the morning of 9/11 by the media giants but never aired again.

While shots of the plane strike were shown repeatedly to millions, Sofia said, the building collapses were not. Slowed down and analyzed, she added the collapses are the key.

Former Vietnam Combat and Commercial Pilot Firm Believer 9/11 Was Inside Government Job; An Experienced Boeing 757/767 Pilot, He Says 'No Way' Could a Novice Fly the 'Big Birds' He Knew So Well

Russ Wittenberg says America has turned into a police state with martial law on the immediate horizon. He said Americans need to 'wake-up' before it's too late and all constitutional rights are stripped away.

17 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

There was no fooling former Air Force and commercial pilot Russ Wittenberg the morning of 9/11. He knew it was an inside job from the get-go, knowing the 'big boys' were up to the same dirty tricks they played in the Kennedy assassination and Pearl Harbor.

The government may have fooled millions of Americans with its cockamamie official story, but the former fighter pilot who flew over 100 combat missions in Vietnam and who sat for 35 years in the cockpit for Pan Am and United, wasn't one of them.

Now, almost four years later, Wittenberg is still shaking his head in disbelief more than ever, saying the country he loved and fought so bravely 40 years ago has fallen in the deep, dark and sinister hands of fascist leaders who are quickly turning America into a military state.

Although back in the beginning he seemed like a lone wolf in the hen house, he's noticed, especially in the last six months, more Americans waking up to the cold reality that the U.S. government staged 9/11, started an illegal war in Iraq and basically is criminally responsible for killing hundreds of thousands of innocent lives here and abroad.

Even though it's a hard pill for some to swallow, Wittenberg says Americans need to "wake up and wake up fast," holding those in government responsible even though it may mean a total makeover of the American political system.

And for these despicable actions now taking place in the name of freedom, the former F-100 Vietnam fighter pilot, who knows what it's like to be in harms way, directed a little military jab toward the Commander and Chief, saying: "Oh, why doesn't he wake up and just fall on his sword."

Talking about his obvious disgust for the Bush administration, he bundles 9/11 into the neo con's "neat little contrived war package," saying it was the lynch pin needed to usher in a state of constant fear, a climate of war and a perfect setting for the unconstitutional Patriot Act and eventual martial law.

"If you would have told me back in the 1970s this was going to happen to America, I would have never imagined it. It's just not the same country I grew up in as all our Constitutional freedoms are being stripped away right before our very eyes," said Wittenberg in a telephone conversation from his home in Carefree

Az., a picturesque and serene place on the map near Scottsdale.

"The government story they handed us about 9/11 is total B.S. plain and simple. I also thoroughly went over the recent 9/11 Commission report, finding about 110 outright lies and numerous other half-truths and omissions in an obvious cover-up of not only the truth but of a criminal investigation.

"Condaleeza Rice lied through her teeth when she testified and if I would have had her on the stand for 10 minutes, I would have had her in tears."

Concerning 9/11, Wittenberg knew right off the bat the hijackers - who couldn't handle a Piper Cub - couldn't fly the "big birds" he flew for so many years, knowing the planes were also incapable of performing such high speed maneuvers as the government claimed.

He also knew the possibility of jet fuel bringing down the towers made no sense. In fact, he knew the whole 9/11 story made about as much sense as crossing the Atlantic in a row boat.

And right after 9/11 when it was unpopular and considered almost treasonous to question the government, Wittenberg became the first commercial airline pilot with experience flying the jets used in 9/11 to publicly denounce the government story.

Although speaking publicly on many occasions about the fictitious government account of 9/11, it wasn't until Sept. 16, 2004, his controversial remarks aired on Wing TV, sparking a heated debate among pilots and others clinging to the flimsy government account.

Knowing the flight characteristics of the "big birds" like the back of his hand, Wittenberg convincingly argued there was absolutely no possibility that Flight 77 could have "descended 7,000 feet in two minutes, all the while performing a steep 270 degree banked turn before crashing into the Pentagon's first floor wall without touching the lawn."

Wittenberg claimed the high speed maneuver would have surely stalled the jetliner sending it into a nose dive, adding it was "totally impossible for an amateur who couldn't even fly a Cessna to maneuver the jetliner in such a highly professional manner, something Wittenberg said he couldn't do with 35 years of commercial jetliner experience.

"For a guy to just jump into the cockpit and fly like an ace is impossible - there is not one chance in a thousand," said Wittenberg, recalling that when he made the jump from Boeing 727's to the highly sophisticated computerized characteristics of the 737's through 767's it took him considerable time to feel comfortable flying.

"I had to be trained to use the new, computerized systems. I just couldn't jump in and fly one," he added.

Finding more inconsistencies with the government story about Flight 77, Wittenberg recalled the recent statements made by a flight controller on an ABC 20/20 television program three months ago.

"If you listened to her carefully only an experienced pilot probably would have known that what she was saying was scripted," said Wittenberg. "Remember the transponder was turned off on Flight 77 and when this occurs, all the particular flight data like air speed and even the plane's flight identification goes with it.

"All that's left on the controller's screen is a green blip, that's it. But here you have this flight controller on 20/20 saying she was tracking the flight with specific air speed and other coordinates which was totally impossible once the transponder was turned off. How would she even have known the flight number? The whole story is a pack of lies and this is just another example."

And from the moment Wittenberg called attention to the lies, he's been in the cross hairs defending his story, defending it by using a little bit of psychology, a lot of history and asking critics to answer questions before drawing conclusions.

"I've learned over the years, it's hard to change anybody's mind when they really aren't listening," said Wittenberg. "So, I just decided to fire back a lot of questions to those people who believe the government story.

"I ask them explain how Building No.7 collapsed? I ask them why haven't the "black boxes" been recovered? I ask them to explain how jet fuel - fuel that burns cold not hot -- could bring down two high rise structures when more than 90% of the fuel on board burned outside the buildings?"

And Wittenberg has hundreds of other tough questions ready, but said it's also important to put 9/11 and the Iraq war in a historical prospective.

"Is 9/11 and the phony war on terror any different or more serious than Pearl Harbor and World War II?," asks Wittenberg. "The bottom line is all wars are contrived and it is these rich bankers and financiers who have pulled the strings and who have put these contrived events like 9/11 and Pearl Harbor into motion."

Turning to the recent London bombings, Wittenberg said he's tired of the "talking heads' trying to analyze how to counter terror when "the real cause and effect issues" about the root problems with America and the world are being ignored.

"It's simply bizarre. Maybe our one-sided foreign policy that keeps getting us into all this trouble around the world should be seriously questioned," said Wittenberg. "If we are really fighting terror, why are our borders just to the south completely wide open? It's a joke."

Claiming the entire neo con scenario now playing out in America and around the world is based on the attempt to establish a one world government controlled by a select few, he said it's difficult to figure out their true motives, adding he can only offer an educated guess based on what he's studied and read.

"Power corrupts, money isn't enough and these people want total control," added Wittenberg. "These elites actually think they are better than everybody else and basically want power and control over the diminishing resources by creating a one world government.

Regarding another terror attack on American soil coming on the heels of the London bombings, he said "it's not if but when," claiming the unconstitutional Patriot Act is waiting in the wings to silence those Americans who may not fall in line with the government's eventual takeover.

"They passed it for a reason. The problem with our two party system is that the same group of gangsters controls both parties," said Wittenberg, who didn't vote for Bush or Kerry in the last election and was the former Arizona state chairman for Pat Buchanan's failed presidential run in 2000.

Although Wittenberg remains politically active and abreast of world affairs, he has left the political forefront, trying instead to raise public awareness about the danger of the neo con agenda.

"More people are listening now, but it doesn't surprise me that still a lot of people just don't want to get involved, thinking things are just fine in America," he added. "These people are perfectly content to play golf, watch the ballgame and not get involved."

Wittenberg, who retired the day before 9/11 having a strange and unexplainable premonition, said high gas prices have led him to sell his private plane, saying it was getting too expensive to even "fly for fun" anymore.

WTC Maintenance Worker Announces Plans For Upcoming National 9/11 Truth Speaking Tour While Appearing As Guest On St. Louis Drive-Time Morning Radio Show

William Rodriguez, a man on a mission in memory of 200 friends lost at the WTC, is taking his story directly to the people as he looks for way to by-pass media and government censorship over his 9/11 story that blows the official account of how the towers collapsed "sky high."

15 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Four long years have passed since 9/11 and government officials and media heads are still throwing under the rug eye-witness testimony of WTC maintenance worker William Rodriguez and at least three other co-workers, all claiming a huge explosion rocked the lower levels of the north tower just before the jetliner struck the top floors.

The eye-witness accounts, in stark contrast to the government's story that burning jet fuel was the sole cause of the WTC collapse, has been ignored by the White House, Congress, the 9/11 Commission and all major media outlets, even though well-known since day one.

Not only are they ignoring the four workers, both the government and media have failed to take into account at least 14 other people with Rodriguez the morning of 9/11, all verifying his story that he heard a massive explosion coming from the north tower basement seconds before the jetliner struck the top floors.

Rodriguez, declared a national hero for saving numerous lives on 9/11, calls the government cover-up and media blackout a "national disgrace to the memory of all those who died," adding he plans to now organize a nationwide speaking tour to raise public awareness and money for a future film documentary depicting "what really happened on the morning of 9/11."

Fed up with being ignored by government and media fat cats who think they are above the law and public scrutiny, Rodriguez said the only option left is to take his story directly to the people in town hall meetings, churches and college campuses.

As Tribune Media Services columnist Bob Koehler so aptly put it in a recent column:

"The government isn't with us, the media isn't with us. It's just us..."

And Rodriguez this week made the announcement of a 9/11 national speaking tour while appearing as a guest on the Lizz Brown Morning Wake Up Call, 920 AM WGNU, a popular St. Louis drive-time radio show.

"Because of my responsibility to fight for the families right to know and the nation's need for transparency,

I feel that the truth of 9/11 needs to be heard by the nation from the actual people who were there and not puppets or heads of departments as the government erroneously has been feeding all of us," said Rodriguez in a telephone conversation after the morning radio show from his New Jersey apartment.

"I am organizing a nationwide speaking tour and invite all American colleges and churches to be the first ones to get the information so they can draw their own conclusion. I am also asking for the support of the nation to put together a victims' film documentary to be done by the actual people who were there and not a manipulated edited version of the facts like has been going on since day one."

For two hours on the popular St. Louis radio show, Rodriguez told his gut-wrenching story of survival and heroism, almost being killed several times, as he also commented on the basement explosions and other "suspicious activity and loud noises" on the 34th floor as he made his way through the stairwell on his way in a valiant attempt to rescue numerous friends who worked on the top floors.

"It's important to remember I had the only master key to the stairwell and the doors on each floor," recalled Rodriguez, adding he assisted fireman in opening doors and rescuing people on each floor as he made his way to the top.

"When I was going up I kept hearing more explosions, but there wasn't any fire like there was in the basement. On my up, something very strange happened on the 34th floor, which was a completely vacant floor, gutted for construction. As I was walking by the stairwell door, I heard these very loud noises like somebody moving heavy dumpsters or office furniture. I don't know what it was but it was very strange because I know it was supposed to be a vacant floor."

By-passing the 34th floor, Rodriguez continued his ascent in an effort to especially try and help friends working high above at Windows of the World Restaurant, a favorite eating place and coffee hangout for many WTC employees.

After hearing numerous small explosions and what he remembers as rapid fire 'pop, pop, pop sounds" in the mid level floors, as well as strong jolts from the jetliner striking the south tower, Rodriguez then recalls being turned back by a Port Authority officer on the 39th floor after learning the floors above had collapsed as far up as the 45th floor.

"They said it was just too dangerous to continue and so on my way back down I helped a man in a wheel chair on the 27th floor get down who was having an asthma attack. When we got to the Lobby level, it was just horrible. I was saying, my God, what has happening? In front of the building, there were bodies imbedded in the floor, unrecognizable bodies of those who jumped just smashed into the floor. There was this lady near me who all of a sudden was sliced in half by a flying piece of plate glass. My God, it was just horrible. The bodies looked like they had melted on the floor because of the force of the impact."

Rodriguez then told the St. Louis radio audience how he made his way to safety crawling under a nearby fire truck parked in front of the revolving entrance doors while the towers collapsed. Although conscious and covered with debris, dust and soot from the collapse of the buildings, he estimated being under the truck for a couple of hours before being rescued by fireman.

"I remember being under there when the building collapsed saying, please, God, let my Mom see my body in one piece. And no sooner did I get rescued, I noticed the fire truck collapse to the ground from the weight of the debris. When I think back, it was a miracle that I am still alive!"

On the radio as Brown, a lawyer and awarding-winning journalist, listened in astonishment to the entire story, she especially expressed disbelief over the government cover-up and media blackout of Rodriguez's credible and compelling story about the underground basement explosions.

"As a lawyer, it is amazing how articulate and credible an eye-witness Mr. Rodriguez really is and it is even more amazing how the government and the media could have ignored his most compelling story for so long," said Brown as Rodriguez continued to explain how his statements were finally taken reluctantly by the 9/11 Commission behind closed doors after publicly demanding to be heard.

"They never included my name or a word I said about the basement explosions or what happened on the 34th floor, never considered anything when they finally adopted the government story that only jet fuel brought down the towers. I know there was a massive explosion in the basement, not related to airplane. I was there but they never wanted to listen."

Previously in a telephone conversation this week, Rodriguez voiced his concern and displeasure while calling for a new investigation into "what really happened on 9/11."

"What really upsets me is that we have all these people coming forward with credible testimony about explosions and we have been completely ignored by the 9/11 Commission and the major media," said Rodriguez.

"They concluded jet fuel brought down the towers without even considering the testimony of people like Felipe David, who was burned badly in the basement, Salvatore Giambanco, trapped in a basement elevator, and co-worker Jose Sanchez, who heard the same explosion while working on sub-level 4. Why would they not take the testimony of these people unless they are covering up something?"

And what makes Sanchez, Giambanco and David's testimony so compelling is not only the timing and location of the basement explosions, but the fact that at least two of three experienced heavy wind gusts of debris and dust in the basement hallways, a fact which cannot be explained by those critics claiming fire raced down the elevator shaft in seconds after the plane struck 90 floors above.

Besides what Rodriguez calls a massive government cover-up, the stories of all the workers, including the 14 people with him in the sub-level 1 basement office, have never been reported by major news outlets in the U.S., a fact which he said is beyond belief considering the importance of the testimony.

And to make matters worse the media has ignored their stories even though a foreign television network in 2002 thought it important enough to air their stories unedited in a 9/11 documentary, appearing in Spanish in Colombia.

"The press and the government have known about our stories all along but have been suppressing our words in order to spread lies to the American people about what happened," said Rodriguez.

"I have been interviewed at least 4 times by New York Times reporters, but my story has been changed, manipulated to fit the official story or never printed at all. Even after the 9/11 Commission hearings, NBC sent out a film crew to my house on two occasions, shooting hours of film. But in the end, they never aired a word of what I said. Now, go figure, do you think they are trying to hide something?"

NBC, in response to Rodriguez's claims of censorship, issued a short one line response from Barbara Levin, director of communications, saying the network "doesn't comment on its news gathering."

However, when Doug Pasternak, head of the network's investigative unit in charge of getting the Rodriguez story, was asked why the basement explosion portion of his story never aired along with the entire story, he said like a novice reporter with absolutely no nose for news regarding what many consider to be earth shattering revelations about one of America's top stories:

"It wasn't the focus of our interview and didn't add anything new."

If Pasternak's answer appears troubling and evasive, the New York Times is even worse, its director of media communications, Katherine Mathis, failing to even respond to Rodriguez's claims of inaccurate reporting after numerous email and phone attempts.

Besides the hard news stories over the years botched by the Times, Rodriguez also was interviewed extensively by Kevin Flynn and Jim Dwyer, two New York Times reporters who published a best selling book titled "102 Minutes: The Untold Story in the Fight to Survive in the Twin Towers."

Although declared a national hero and hailed by authorities as the last survivor to exit the north tower before its collapse, Flynn and Dwyer unexplainably ended up publishing the book without mentioning Rodriguez's name or his story.

When Flynn was recently asked why he left out the heroics of the "last man standing" and the important statements about the basement explosion, like a true government hack wearing the shirt and tie of a reporter, he said:

"I don't think I should comment about any of this to a third party. If Mr. Rodriguez wants to know anything, tell him to contact me."

Accepting the invitation and sending an email to Flynn asking why he was left out of the book, Flynn answered Rodriguez on July 13, 2005, claiming he didn't have enough space for his story. In the email, he said:

"Thank you for your e-mail and for speaking to our researcher. Many people cooperated with us but, unfortunately, we did not have the space to use everything we were told. Nonetheless, it all helped to give us a better sense of what happened that day. Thank you again."

However, what Flynn fails to mention is that by leaving out the Rodriguez story, he grossly misinforms the public, perpetuates a likely government fraud and fails dramatically to give the American people a "better sense of what happened that day" by editing out the fact explosives could very well have brought down the towers, not burning jet fuel.

Rodriguez also claims Ed Beyea's story, the man in the wheel chair who he brought down to the Lobby level is also inaccurate in the book since Rodriguez is never mentioned as being the person who helped the man down 27 flights of stairs.

"The story about Mr. Beyea, the man I brought down in the wheelchair is incomplete," said Rodriguez about Flynn's shoddy reporting. "When you select the cast of people you will portray in a book, it's your responsibility to give definite and total accuracy of the events. It's your mandate as a reporter for historical and family reasons to get it right. When I was pulled from the rubble, I spoke about that poor man for weeks on every interview I gave, including the New York Times."

In direct response to Flynn, Rodriguez then wrote to members of The Hispanic Victims Group and other victims regarding how Flynn and the New York Times again were ignoring the truth:

"This is the answer I received to my "Open letter to the NY TIMES from last week. As you can see, they did not have a space for our experiences in the "102 minutes" 9/11 book. Again, we do not exist for the NY Times, as or our experiences "rocks the boat" too much. Go figure!!

"We believe that to report an event in a book, it needs historical accuracy, no space limitation. Make your own conclusions and feel free to email Mr. Flynn."

Rodriguez had even more criticism to level at Flynn, Dwyer and the New York Times for what he calls "selective editing," saying:

"If I was the last survivor out of the north tower, helped rescued hundreds of people, almost was killed three times and declared a national hero, how could they leave my story out of the book? Are they trying to hide something else I said? They mentioned nothing about the basement explosion, the other 14 people, Felipe David, the burn victim, and many others who all have important stories to tell about what really happened."

Even though the media and government hopes Rodriguez and others sounding off about a cover-up would quietly disappear, it seems Americans are finally starting to listen.

This week Rodriguez is on his way to Hollywood to appear at the Met Theatre to speak at the opening of the first theatrical performance about 9/11 called "9/11 Mysteries," a high tech visual presentation of the many facets about the intriguing story.

After his Hollywood appearance, he leaves for Amsterdam where he is in the process of having a book published in both Dutch and English, which he emphasizes is an unedited version of his 9/11 experiences.

This is Rodriguez's second trip to Europe in as many months as he took part in a recent overseas 9/11 tour, stopping in most major European cities, sponsored by Santa Barbara philanthropist, Jimmy Walter, a long time 9/11 truth advocate who has spent millions alerting Americans about a government cover-up.

"I was able, thanks to Mr. Walter, to get my story out unedited in Europe," said Rodriguez. "Now, I hope we can do the same thing here at home."

Upon his return from Amsterdam, Rodriguez will then be ironing out details for his speaking tour as he plans to tirelessly work and travel in order to take his story directly to the American people, unedited without censorship.

"The American people and especially those who died as well as their families deserve nothing less than the truth," added Rodriguez. "I believe that those who covered themselves with lies will be ultimately undressed by the truth."

Two More WTC Workers Come Forward, One Seriously Burned And The Other Hurt While Trapped In Basement Elevator, Both Claiming Massive Explosion Took Place In Lower Levels Of North Tower On 9/11

The two men's eye-witness testimony, never before released in America, aired as part of a Spanish 2002 television 9/11 documentary in Colombia; Total of four eye-witnesses have now surfaced, all claiming a bomb exploded in the basement of the north tower just prior to airplane strike 90 floors above. Although testimony is in the public eye, it has been completely ignored by 9/11 Commission and mainstream media.in what looks like a government cover-up aided by a media blackout.

13 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Two more WTC workers have come forward with eye-witness testimony that a huge explosion ripped apart the lower levels of the north tower at about the same time a jetliner rammed into the top floors.

The pair not only reported hearing an underground blast, but were both injured, one suffering severe burns to the face, arms and hands and the other cuts and bruises after being trapped in a stalled basement elevator.

Burn victim, Felipe David, employed by Aramark Co. and Salvatore Giambanco, a WTC office painter trapped in a basement elevator, were both unavailable for comment, but made their explosive testimony - never before released in America - to a Colombian television station in 2002 on the first anniversary of 9/11.

Their comments eventually aired in Colombia in Spanish on the Red Continental De Noticias (RNC) as a part of an in depth 9/11 documentary after the foreign station spent a month in New York in 2002 shooting the project.

A copy of the original interview tapes with RCN reporter Claudia Gurisatti questioning the WTC workers was made available this week by WTC maintenance worker William Rodriguez, the first eye-witness to go public about the north tower basement explosions.

Recently, Rodriguez, declared a national hero for helping save numerous lives on the morning of 9/11, including David and Giambanco, said he heard a massive basement explosion seconds before the jetliner struck the top floors when he, along with 14 other co-workers, were huddled in a sub-level 1 office.

Besides the trio, the taped statements of Jose Sanchez, another WTC maintenance worker, recently came forward, saying he heard an underground explosion at the same time the others reported it while working in a small sub-level 4 workshop.

"What really upsets me is that we have all these people coming forward with credible testimony about explosions and we have been completely ignored by the 9/11 Commission and the major media," said

Rodriguez in a telephone conversation from his New Jersey apartment about what he calls an obvious media and government blackout on any information contrary to the official story that only jet fuel brought down the towers, a theory adopted by the 9/11 Commission.

"They concluded jet fuel brought down the towers without even considering the testimony of people like David, Giambanco and Sanchez. Why would they do that unless they are covering up something?"

"And, concerning the American press, they have locked their doors on all of us, never allowing our stories to surface or even trying to investigate why the 9/11 Commission didn't bother to include our statements in the final report. Here we have a Colombian station in 2002 doing their work and three years later our story only has appeared in South America in Spanish. What does that tell you?"

In the 2002 Colombian television taped interviews where Rodriguez also adds his 9/11 account, both David and Giambanco, located in different basement locations, tell gut-wrenching and heart breaking stories of survival from what they both thought to be from a massive underground explosion, not an airplane strike 90 floors above.

David's Story

Standing in front of a freight elevator on sub level 1 near the office where Rodriguez and 14 others were huddled together when the explosion erupted below, David said in the taped interview:

"That day I was in the basement in sub-level 1 sometime after 8:30am. Everything happened so fast, everything moved so fast. The building started shaking after I heard the explosion below, dust was flying everywhere and all of a sudden it got real hot.

"I threw myself onto the floor, covered my face because I felt like I was burned. I sat there for a couple of seconds on the floor and felt like I was going to die, saying to myself 'God, please give me strength.'"

Although severely burned on his face, arms and hands with skin hanging from his body like pieces of cloth, David picked himself up, running for help to the office where Rodriguez and others were gathered.

"When I went in, I told them it was an explosion," said David, who was then helped out of the WTC by Rodriguez and eventually taken by ambulance to New York Hospital. "When people looked at me with my skin hanging, they started crying but I heard others say 'OK, good, good, you made it alive.'"

Giambanco's Story

At the same time David, Rodriguez and the others heard the basement explosion, Giambanco was in a completely different location on the opposite side of sub level 1 by another elevator.

In the taped interview, Giambanco told Gurisatti, the Colombian reporter:

"We heard the explosion and the smoke all of a sudden came from all over. There was an incredible force of wind that also swept everything away. I remember hearing a scream of a woman, but I couldn't see her. I had just gotten off the elevator and I was standing by it with another man but didn't know his name.

"The doors of the elevator were still open and, I don't know why we did, but we both jumped back in maybe because of the wind whipping everything around in the hallway. "Then, suddenly, the elevator doors closed in front of us and we started going down. It all of a sudden stopped and I could see through the cracks we were between B-2 and B-3. We were both screaming and afraid. I remember seeing through the slot of the elevator and seeing other people running and screaming.

"Then water started gushing in the elevator and I remember saying, 'God, please help us.' At that point, I was resigned to the fact I was going to die"

But like a miracle, Giambanco's plea to God was answered as all of a sudden he heard someone yelling from above, "How many people are down there?"

The miracle above turned out to be Rodriguez who had returned into the WTC after helping David to safety in order to help others after disobeying police orders to remain outside.

"I remember rushing past police, telling them to go to hell as I was going back to help my friends no matter what," recalls Rodriguez about his basement search for survivors before eventually only making his way to the 39th floor before being turned back in a desperate attempt to reach the top floors.

In the basement, Rodriguez managed to find a construction ladder, miraculously lowering it into the elevator after courageously entering the darkened shaft and opening the top hatch on the elevator where Giambanco and the other unidentified man now were standing thigh-deep in water from the broken or activated sprinkler system spewing water into the elevator shaft.

"I don't know he did it, but I felt him just pick me up and pull me out," said Giambanco about Rodriguez's rescue efforts. "I didn't know who he was then, but I do now and he definitely saved my life. If it wasn't for William Rodriguez, I wouldn't be here today."

For me, William is like my brother. He single handedly saved my life.

After Rodriguez brought him to safety, Giambanco remembers being taken to an ambulance and rushed to a hospital where in his hospital room, he received news reports that both towers collapsed.

"I threw myself on the hospital floor in tears and I finally had to get an injection to calm me down," said Giambanco. "For a long time after, every time I would try to go to sleep I would get nightmares about being trapped in the elevator"

Reflecting back on his 9/11 near death experience, he added:

"I remember riding in the ambulance that morning and looking back, thinking it had to be a bomb.

"Later they told me it was an airplane that hit the towers, but how could it just be an airplane? I know all the newspapers were saying that, but it was just too incredible to believe if you heard and experienced what I did. It had to be a bomb."

Second WTC Janitor Comes Forward With Eye-Witness Testimony Of 'Bomb-Like' Explosion in North Tower Basement

Jose Sanchez, while working in a sub-level 4 workshop of the north tower on 9/11, heard a bomb-like explosion, had his hair burned and rescued a co-worker who had his leg and knee broken from the basement blast taking place at the same time the jetliner struck the top floors.

12 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A second WTC maintenance worker has now come forward with eye-witness testimony that a massive explosion erupted in the lower levels of the north tower at approximately the same time the jetliner struck the tower's top floors.

Jose Sanchez, 45, of New Jersey in a never-released tape recorded statement made in early 2002 to William Rodriguez, the first WTC maintenance man to claim a bomb exploded in the north tower basement, said he heard what sounded like a "huge bomb," causing lights to flicker on and off, while he worked in a small sub-level 4 workshop.

Sanchez, who worked for American Building Maintenance Co. at the WTC for 14 years, was unavailable for comment, but made the taped 2002 statement to Rodriguez, recounting his 9/11 personal experience.

Sanchez, who fell on hard times after 9/11, revealed the details of a basement bomb-like explosion while Rodriguez and two CNN interns, Carolina Inojosa and Evita Zerebrinsky, interviewed victims and documented information for the many unfortunate people having trouble getting needed government assistance after 9/11.

Besides questioning the credibility of the official story that burning jet fuel was the only factor in bringing down the towers, Rodriguez formed an assistance organization called the Hispanic Victims Group instrumental in helping hundreds of people get help after 9/11 left many victims unemployed and homeless.

"I knew Jose very well since we worked for the same company," said Rodriguez in a telephone conversation from his New Jersey apartment. "At the time, I taped his statements, I was more concerned about getting people needed assistance and, anyway, back then I really thought the government was seriously investigating the WTC attacks.

"But since then I have learned otherwise. I realize now they are covering-up the real truth and that's why I want to release Jose's statement. What really upsets me and, you can take this message to the White House, is that people like Jose and many others like him who experienced what happened in the basement of the north tower were simply ignored and never interviewed by the 9/11 Commission.

"If they really wanted to get at the truth, these are the very people who should have been interviewed, not public officials who knew very little about what occurred inside the buildings that tragic morning.

"However, instead we all have been ignored in order to cover up the truth. The victims, those who died and the families who lost loved ones deserve nothing less than the truth and I intend to keep talking until the truth is finally told."

Sanchez's explosive comments, shooting another large hole in the government story, now adds even more credibility to Rodriguez's recent statements that he heard a massive explosion in the WTC basement just seconds prior to the jetliner striking above while working in a sub-level 1 office along side 14 others, all who heard and felt the very same thing as Rodriguez.

Since the outset, the government has stood firm that only burning jet fuel brought down the towers, but has ignored mounting eye-witness testimony and scientific data showing that a controlled demolition was an additional cause.

The government also has not fully explained why it immediately tampered with a crime scene, a criminal offense, by having all the hard evidence from the WTC removed and shipped overseas before independent investigators had a chance to study the structural components of the towers in order to help determine the real cause of the tower's collapse.

While arguments continue in the scientific community about the structural cause of the WTC collapse, Sanchez's eye-witness testimony adds more credibility that explosives were placed and detonated in the lower level of the north tower.

In the 2002 taped statement, Sanchez recalls, at the same time Rodriguez and the others heard the explosion, being in a small sub-level 4 workshop with another man who he only knew by the name of Chino when, out of nowhere, the blast sounded as the two men were cutting a piece of metal.

"It sounded like a bomb and the lights went on and off," said Sanchez in the tape recording. "We started to walk to the exit and a huge ball of fire went through the freight elevator. The hot air from the ball of fire dropped Chino to the floor and my hair got burned," said Sanchez in the tape recording. "The room then got full of smoke and I remember saying out loud 'I believe it was a bomb that blew up inside the building.'"

"I said 'Chino, let's go we gotta get out of here.' But Chino was wounded and told me he needed help. I remember him saying that the hot air came with such force that it broke his leg. We finally went out through another exit and his leg and knee were both broken."

Sanchez, all the time helping Chino, then recalls exiting into a parking lot on sub-level 4 where he encountered a group of other people also trying to flee. In the parking lot, a person assisted the pair, wrapping Chino's leg with a bandage from a first aid kit.

Chino was then driven in an SUV to safety while Sanchez decided to walk up four flights of stairs through the stairwell, trying to exit at the plaza level but being turned back by debris and falling glass.

"I went back down the stairwell to B-4 and encountered several people coming up. I told them to turn back around and then went across the parking lot up another stairwell, making a left and then finally getting outside," said Sanchez. "It took about 15 or 20 minutes to get outside and for me it was like a bomb with huge smoke all around. Then when I got outside, the other plane hit the south tower. It looked and felt like a war as I hid behind a wall to get out of the way of falling debris."

Saying that he felt disoriented and "didn't know what was happening," Sanchez eventually made his way to safety, arriving at his New Jersey home at about 3:30pm after fleeing down 34th St. and making his way to the ferry boat.

Asked how he felt in the aftermath of the attacks, he said:

"I felt a sense of loss and despair. I worked there 14 years and I worked through the whole complex, installing signs. I worked on all floors and that day I just happened to be in the basement.

"I think I was lucky to get out of the basement because I was near the stairwell."

American Author In London Talks About Subway Bombings And Anti-Bush Book Written in Arabic

Kenyon Gibson says he's 'flying with the eagles' to remain free from neo con control. Coming from a military family and seeing the corruption from within at an early age, he decided to leave America before it was too late, saying it won't be long before "everybody's micro-chipped" if people don't stand up to Bush and his cronies.

10 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Ever watch an eagle or falcon fly free? Ever wonder what those beautiful symbols of freedom were thinking this week when they looked down on London with bombs exploding?

High above it all, with wings extended majestically looking for a better world, they probably couldn't help but think the only safe place to land in Britain was on the shoulder of American author Kenyon Gibson who, like a bird in flight, migrated to London 10 years ago.

And if they were lucky enough to find him, they picked the right spot. They picked the right person because if there ever was a freedom-loving, free-spirited bird of the same feather, Gibson is the man.

Like his feathered friends he studies and writes about in his spare time when not ruffling the Bush family feathers with his hard-hitting political commentary, Gibson is in a constant free-flight search for a better world, saying London provides the perfect perch for his brand of hard-hitting criticism too hot to handle for most American publishers.

But the only problem with Gibson's perch, at least for the English speaking crowd, is that his latest 2003 book, titled "Common Sense: A Study of Bush, the CIA and Suspicions of 9/11," happens to be only available in Arabic.

"Yes, I had it rejected by American publishers, but I am not going to guess why. Finally, Arab Scientific Publishing in Beirut made the book available and I have had a very positive response with many people asking when an English version is coming out," said Gibson, 42, this week in a telephone conversation from his London apartment.

"My book delves into some pretty controversial topics, like the present administration's connections and involvement with pedophilia in America. I am a Christian and years ago I started researching this type of activity which led me to find out how the U.S. government planted pedophiles in the Catholic Church in order to benefit their political agenda.

"I also devote a chapter to the Bush connection to the Nazi Party as far back as his grandfather, Prescott, as well as the Bush connection to operation Northwoods in the 1960s, which was a precursor for the tragic events of 9/11.

"I also touch on 9/11 in my book and recently took part in a European 9/11 truth project where speakers and advocates tried to spread the word about the U.S. government's involvement in causing 9/11 to advance their imperialistic agenda.

"I met William Rodriguez, the World Trade Center janitor, who is trying to tell the truth about what really happened on that tragic morning. And I'm not surprised how he has been silenced because the powers that be do not want to open up the door to the Israeli and the Mossad connection to 9/11. I just would advise Americans, especially after the recent London bombing, to spend the time and listen to people like William Rodriguez, because listening is going to eventually lead to the truth."

Besides his strong political opinions, Gibson has a rather English Dr. Jeckle and Mr. Hyde way about him, bouncing back and forth from writing projects of varied topics, including the dark side of the Bush family politics, a serious book on ornithology and his most recent book in the making called "Hemp For Victory," a look at the physical benefits of hemp and how it should be legalized.

What also makes him a rather "unusual bird" is that it's hard to figure how he ended up such a rebellious and anti-establishment thinker when he came from such a well-bred, conservative and military-minded flock, going back to his grandfather who was a general and highly decorated in World War II veteran, as well as his uncle, an advisor to Alexander Haig who wrote the important Nato agreement.

"I come from military stock and I learned at an early age what was really going to happen in this country as far back as the Reagan administration. I knew this neo conservative group would eventually take over with their goal to take total control of America public and the rest of the world," said Gibson, who mentioned several chapters of his book published in Arabic is devoted to CIA's covert activity, including mind control and human micro chipping.

"So, early on, when I was still back in America, I remember wanting to remain free and independent like the eagles and falcons I study and write about today. I didn't want anything to do with what was going to happen in America so I made sure I didn't leave any possible way for the government to take control of me either mentally or physically.

"I didn't want a driver's license or anything else. Then I finally got out, left the country before it was too late."

And Gibson's fears about control and takeover are becoming all too real since 9/11 escalated what he calls a "tyrannical agenda" and the recent London bombings only reinforce how "timing is everything" in a war geared at fear and manipulation to advance the neo con imperialistic movement.

"After the subway bombings, a lot of people here are remembering the last time Bush visited England in 2003 when in the midst of massive protests, another supposed terrorist attack took place in Turkey. Back then Bush wouldn't speak in public or even go to the 9/11 memorial here," said Gibson, remembering how 2 million Brits protested Bush's last visit.

"Now, no sooner does he step off the plane in the UK and 50 people are killed and more than 700 wounded in order to take the heat off the criticism he was going to get at the G-8 meeting. You see, timing is everything for these people. When Bush was going to be asked tough questions in public before the entire world, he now simply uses the terror card.

"All I can say is that the sentiment here in London is that a lot of people are feeling manipulated by Bush and Blair. There is anti-Bush graffiti littered all through London and there was a recent cartoon in one of the paper's with Bush standing on a subway with a group of four men with the caption reading 'the real terrorist may be standing right next to you.'"

Concerning the subway and bus bombings, Gibson finds it hard to believe with the British obsession for security, especially in their mass transit system and in the wake of 9/11, that four large packages could go unnoticed unless it was a well-planned inside job.

"I ride the Piccadilly line and let me tell you that if someone left a large package, immediately four or five people would notice and if you didn't take it off the tube with you, they'd immediately call the police who are, in turn, very security conscious," said Gibson.

"I learned early on that London is very security conscious. After the bombings, the authorities said they were going to check every last second of the subway surveillance tapes to find the perpetrators but we will just have to wait and see if that really happens."

Regarding the infamous Downing Street Memo, a high-level British intelligence document showing Bush doctored WMD reports to justify an Iraqi invasion, Gibson said the public sentiment is to remove Blair from power, but Blair's own Labor Party is having trouble deciding just how to remove him without total collapse of the entire party.

"The British people are taking the Downing Street Memo seriously," added Gibson. "But you have to understand British politics. There are many parties here, not like the two party system at home.

"The Labor Party is looking for a way to distance itself from Blair in an attempt to salvage the party so the country doesn't fall into the hands of the conservative party. However, since many members of Blair's party backed him in the war movement, unpopular here, they are trying to figure out a way not to go down with a sinking ship."

Media Big Shots at NBC and New York Times 'Hush Hush And Evasive' About Why WTC Janitor Story Never Appeared, A Story That Blows The Official 9/11 Account Sky High

Although 14 eye witnesses verify WTC janitor's story about a massive basement explosion just seconds before the airline strike of the north tower, major media reps. refuse to discuss why the story never ran or claim the story provided nothing new, wasn't important or wasn't the focus of their attention.

8 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The media big shots, like a gang of school yard bullies taping shut a little guy's mouth, have placed a big, black curtain around the 9/11 story of WTC janitor William Rodriguez, silencing him as if he screwed up their fictitious plot in a television script already written.

Rodriguez has desperately tried to tell his story, but claims the "bullies with money and power" have kept him quiet, the reporters perpetuating a government fraud and the media bosses, acting like Tony Soprano, sending orders to keep his mouth shut or else!

Although it's impossible for a working man like Rodriguez to pierce the corporate veil and finger the top dogs, evasive comments by the underlings from places like NBC and The New York Times when questioned about the Rodriguez blackout, indicate somebody's hiding something since all lips are zippered tight like a bunch of street thugs protecting the "family name."

Across the board from all the major networks to all the so-called top notch daily newspapers in the country, the ghost of janitor William Rodriguez is now back alive, well and in the flesh four years later, reminding all the big shots everywhere it doesn't pay to tell a lie, especially with a man on a mission like Rodriguez.

Although the strange media blackout has left Rodriguez shaking his head in disappointment and wondering why he has more freedom of speech abroad than at home, he vows now, more than ever before, never to stop talking until every last American has heard his story, listening to the cold, hard facts how the north tower of the WTC came down from an underground explosion not just burning jet fuel as the government contends.

Admittedly perplexed by being written out of the tragic script by the 9/11 Commission and what he calls the media fiction writers even though he is one of the main characters, Rodriguez now thinks the American people are ready to listen since distrust for big media and big government has reached epic proportions, even creeping into the hinterland and heartland of America where the elite count on a passive following.

But most importantly, Rodriguez hopes his story will finally be told, every last single morsel of truth, in memory of the 3,000 killed and the 200 friends he lost at Ground Zero, adding they "deserve nothing less than full truth."

A Nightmare for Government Officials

Rodriguez's story, verified by at least 14 eye witnesses and a burn victim, has become a veritable nightmare for officials clinging to the official story, probably deciding the only way to handle him is to make the 'boogey man in the bad dream' go away.

And that's exactly how Rodriguez has been treated by the so-called big shots in high places, being treated like the "bad guy riding the black horse" instead of being heralded as the 'white knight' for saving hundreds of lives on 9/11 and sticking to the truth.

In faith walks a man on a mission, but the government's problem with Rodriguez doesn't lie in his moral convictions but rather in corroborated eye-witness evidence which, in this case, is much stronger than any scientific proof offered to support the government's burning jet fuel theory.

So, instead of openly dealing with Rodriguez he is conveniently hidden from the official 9/11 Commission record, even after testifying behind closed doors. He also has conveniently being hidden by the mainstream media, Rodriguez saying in countless interviews, his words have either been deleted, manipulated or made to fit the official government account.

And the reason why Rodriguez is a walking time bomb, waiting to explode the government story, is that his story makes complete sense, something the government story has been lacking from day one.

"I've never believed the government story that two planes brought down the towers. I know the truth because I experienced what happened that day. By all rights, I should be dead, but luckily I am alive to tell the truth if only someone would listen. I am here to tell the truth for all those who died and especially for my 200 friends who I feel a special obligation." said Rodriguez in a telephone conversation from his New Jersey apartment.

"The American people aren't stupid. They have just been deprived of the vital information. If they listen to me, the truth will set them free."

And for critics who doubt his honesty and sincerity, Rodriguez says may he be struck by a lightning bolt if he isn't 'telling the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help me God."

Rodriguez and 14 Other Witnesses Can't Be Wrong

In a nutshell, on the morning of 9/11 Rodriguez, 44, was huddled together with 14 other people in a sub level 1 basement office, preparing for a day's work like he did every day for 20 years at the WTC. Without warning, suddenly the frightened group felt a tremendous explosion emanating from somewhere below them in one of the five remaining WTC sub levels.

Not only did the group hear the explosion, all 14 felt the floor tremble and saw the walls crack just seconds before the group heard another distant explosion coming from high above. Although unaware of the cause, Rodriguez later learned the second explosion, occurring seconds after the first basement blast, turned out to be the jetliner strike.

Further evidence of a tremendous basement blast came moments later when a man by the name of Felipe David, burnt on his face, arms and hands, entered the office yelling "explosion, explosion, explosion!" David had been standing at a nearby sub level 1 freight elevator shaft when he was severely burned from fire coming up the shaft from the basement explosion.

As Rodriguez pulled David to safety outside the WTC, there is absolutely 100 per cent agreement and not one contradiction among the 14 people with Rodriguez, as to exactly what happened in those early minutes before and after the jetliner strike on the morning of 9/11.

"Now, what really upsets me is that my story never appeared in the 9/11 Commission report after I told it to them behind closed doors," said Rodriguez about his 2004 meeting with commission members. "They never followed up with verifying my testimony and basically when the report came out, there was no mention of my statements and the other evidence of a basement explosion when they decided only the airliner brought down the towers.

"This is totally unacceptable and shows they are trying to cover up something. How could anybody not believe there was a massive explosion below ground level after talking with me and the other 14 people who witnessed the very same thing. It refutes the government story point blank and that's why they wanted me behind closed doors and why they never mentioned my name or my story in their final report.

"I am asking the American people right now to demand another open and fair investigation not for my sake, but for the memory of all those good, innocent people who died. We can't allow the real perpetrators of this crime to get away and I believe my testimony, if allowed to be heard, will help bring the guilty parties to justice once and for all.

After Rodriguez's story first appeared two weeks ago in The Arctic Beacon web site at www.arcticbeacon.com and The American Free Press, two alternative news outlets, he has been deluged with interviews and appearances by other alternative media sources, but again categorically ignored by the mainstream press.

Summing up his feeling about the media blackout, Rodriguez this week in a letter written to Bypass Media, another alternative source, while trying to get an interview, wrote:

"Since I was pulled from the rubble after saving hundreds of lives, I had the only master key available on that day (see documentary about my experience at www.cinemar.com), I realized that my original story was changed constantly by the national networks. It was edited, manipulated, completely deleted, etc. Never once have I had my complete story told by a major news outlet in this country.

" I also testified behind closed doors to the 9/11 Commission and my testimony does not show up on the final report, mainly because I went against the official story. I was there, I was made a 'National Hero' here and in Puerto Rico. I have sued the President in an ongoing federal lawsuit after realizing a major manipulation of the facts that I experienced (see www.911forthetruth.com) . I have become, besides the spokesperson for the families of 9/11, an activist in search for the truth. My story has to be told."

Big Shots Respond To Media Blackout

When Doug Pasternak, head of NBC's investigative unit, was asked this week in a telephone conversation why not one single second of Rodriguez's story aired on the network after hours of footage was shot at Rodriguez's house in June 2004 after the 9/11 Commission hearings, he said:

"It simply didn't add anything new. The part about the basement explosion wasn't the focus of our story. We were concerned about his statements of a hijacker he supposedly encountered several months prior to 9/11 in the World Trade Center. Again, it wasn't the focus of our story and, like I said, his story didn't add anything new."

Asked why he didn't question the 9/11 Commission's overt error of leaving Rodriguez's statements out of the final report, Pasternak deferred all further questions to Barbara Levin, communications director for the network.

In an email response, dated June 29, Levin said:

"Wanted to let you know that NBC News does not comment on our newsgathering."

Besides NBC's reluctance to air Rodriguez's story, he was pinning his hopes of airing the truth in a recent NBC 9/11 mini series project headed by screen writer Graham Yost and Hollywood producer/director Ron Howard.

Although Rodriguez had spent a considerable amount of time interviewing and escorting Yost through out New York in an attempt to interview survivors, he was recently notified by Yost that NBC had pulled the plug on the project.

In an email sent to Rodriguez by Yost only weeks ago, he wrote in a disappointed manner:

"To refresh your memory, my name is Graham Yost. I was the writer/producer working on NBC's miniseries about 9/11. As you may have heard, NBC has decided not to proceed with the miniseries. It was primarily a financial decision. Dramatizing a story of this magnitude, scope and importance is an expensive proposition. If we were to do something like this at all, we knew we had to do it right. NBC, Imagine (Ron Howard and Brian Grazer) and I decided it would be better not to do it, than to do it in any but the best possible manner.

"The other writers and I had finished scripts for the first four hours, chronicling the events leading up to the attacks. I was half-way through writing a three hour section of the miniseries depicting the day of the attacks when it became clear that the project was not going to proceed.

"I am very proud of what we wrote and I was, of course, very frustrated and disappointed that we were not going forward. But, as upset as I was, it was one of the other writers (Chris Brancato) who gave me the best perspective. "Look at it this way," he said, "for eight months it was your job to learn as much as you could about the most significant event of our time." For that I am truly grateful.

"Going into this, Ron Howard said that doing a miniseries about 9/11 could well be the most important project of our lives. He was right. The fact that it wasn't produced doesn't change that.

"P.S. As far as I know, ABC is still working on their 9/11 miniseries. I wish them all the good fortune in the world. I know the writer, director and producers on their project take it every bit as seriously as we did."

Although Yost thinks ABC is taking the project seriously, Rodriguez thinks otherwise.

"I have made numerous attempts to get involved with the ABC project, but they don't want to have anything to do with me. They won't return my calls and I just wonder what kind of documentary they are doing?"

Rodriguez said not only has he been ignored by NBC and ABC, The New York Times has also shut its doors on the Rodriguez name and story.

Times reporter Kevin Flynn and Jim Dwyer, who interviewed Rodriguez numerous times before publishing their best seller called "102 Minutes: The Untold Story in the Fight to Survive in the Twin Towers," ended up publishing the book without using Rodriguez's name or fully recounting his story.

After the book hit the stands, becoming extremely discouraged and disillusioned with the hypocrisy and lying in American journalism, Rodriguez said this about Flynn and Dwyer's bestseller.:

"If I was the last survivor out of the north tower, rescued hundreds of people, almost killed three times and declared a national hero, how could they leave my story out of the book? They mentioned nothing about the basement explosion, the other 14 people or Felipe David who was burned with skin hanging from his arms from the basement blast.

"I even brought a man down in a wheel chair from the 27th floor to the lobby, although unfortunately he died there, but when the account of his story came out, they didn't even mention it was me after I specifically told them.

"Best seller! Right? Who are they trying to kid?"

Regarding the deletion of the Rodriguez story, Flynn in a telephone conversation this week from his office at The Times, said:

"I don't think I should comment about any of this to a third party. If Rodriguez wants to talk to me about it, have him call."

When Rodriguez was told about Flynn's invitation, he declined the offer, saying he had no need to talk with someone obviously perpetuating a fraud to the American people about a story of such social and political importance.

And to make matters worse, regarding at least four stories by Times reporters that Rodriguez said were either manipulated or changed, Flynn referred all questions by email to media communications director Katherine Mathis, who at the time of this writing did not respond to a request for answers.

Not to be left out of the Rodriguez blackout, Susan Chun of CNN on June 15, 2004, sent an email to Rodriguez, requesting an interview after he testified before the 9/11 Commission. After making arrangements for the taped session, Rodriguez said it was unexpectedly cancelled at the last minute without an explanation.

Regarding the cancelled interview, Chun failed to respond to several email requests and several phone messages asking for answers.

However, Francios Tonju of CNN's Latin broadcasting division in Miami, said some of Rodriguez's statements aired in Puerto Rico in Spanish, but added his story never appeared stateside in English.

And in the midst of the blackout continuing to date and remaining frustrated about an untold story, Rodriguez said he remains patient nonetheless and is still available for major network news and television coverage despite the media's unwillingness to listen.

"Throughout the years, I have been wined and dined at the White House and attended many official functions in an attempt to get me on their side so I would shut up. But I have never succumbed to the subtle intimidation over the years, even by reporters who have taken me aside and said it is better that I keep quiet because I didn't realize who I was dealing with.

"After they would take me aside, saying all those nasty things, I would always just look every one of them square in the eye, saying I would never waiver for one second from the truth in respect for my 200 friends who died. I am a man on a mission and I will never stop until the truth is finally uncovered."

Rodriguez, the lead plaintiff in a federal RICO lawsuit filed against Bush and others, is also on his way to Amsterdam, where he is going to publish a book of his heroic 9/11 story, complete with the basement explosion segment as well as other aspects of his story censored by the mainstream media. The book is to be published in English and Dutch and a publication date has yet to be finalized.

After pausing a moment about the difference between foreign and domestic accounts of his story, Rodriguez said even though CNN's Larry King has already been scooped by a number of third world country talk show hosts, he still is available on a moment's notice for a guest appearance, as long as he can tell his story in the unedited version, which would be a first for a major American news network.

Top GOP North Carolina Supreme Court Candidate Calls Bush Administration A Nazi Regime

Attorney Rachel Lea Hunter defects from party and wants Americans to protest against Iraq war, Patriot Act, lock down on free speech and silencing of neo con critics

7 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Cooler heads are prevailing, in public anyway, two weeks after a Republican North Carolina Supreme Court candidate compared the Bush administration to the Nazi regime.

But behind the scenes, the political back stabbing and name calling is just beginning.

In what looks to be shaping up as a good old-fashioned southern brawl, attorney and state Supreme Court candidate Rachel Lea Hunter, who made the statement, isn't backing off.

And the Republican faithful, loyal to President Bush, aren't either, going after her with guns blazing even though Hunter is recovering from a hospital stay and serious brain surgery.

"What happened is that individuals whom I had never met, who are filled with hate, wrote a story about my remarks," said Hunter by email since she was still too weak to hold long interviews or telephone conversations. "Therein, they twisted my words and filled the story with so many half-truths and falsehoods that I am not going to recount or rebut them. They even sent an email calling for my firing or a boycott of my employer."

Hunter said the Nazi comparison to Bush, made when she wrote a commentary on the Internet, scolding the administration for actively using heavy-handed tactic to silence its critics, branding them as traitors and comparing this type of activity to a famous German poem denouncing Nazi suppression.

Hunter added she no longer could keep silent, limiting her comments to local issues, since the erosion of civil liberties and the illegal nature of the Iraqi war merited immediate attention without the consideration of party politics.

And Hunter joins a growing list of former party loyalists, including high-ranking officials and military personnel who are publicly speaking out against Bush and his evangelical neo con movement that is putting a stranglehold on government and the free-flow of information in the press.

"What I said was I find disturbing is that we are criticized for nothing more than the exercise of our Constitutional rights," said Hunter about her remarks, adding her opinions did not reflect her employer. "Those who disagree with any aspect of the administration are branded as traitors and must be silenced. I thought the previous administration was bad because of the amorality. This is far worse.

"There is a famous poem about the Nazis of Germany - first they came for one group, then another, but the writer did not speak up. And then they came for him and there was no one left to speak up. The administration is acting like the Nazis. I will not be quiet."

In the wake of a huge response, Hunter now feels compelled to answer critics and fully explain why she disagrees with the direction of the Bush administration and its underhanded tactics.

Asking for answers about the war in Iraq, the Downing Street Memo, 9/11, the Patriot Act, the anthrax mailings, the recent Supreme Court eminent domain ruling and a host of other issues, Hunter said America is quickly heading down the road of fascism.

"But if someone had described some of the things I mentioned above and asked me to name a government, I would have thought of a third world dictator or some regime other than the U.S. And, yet, it is our own government that no longer respects property and liberty rights. Call it what you will, but it has all the hallmarks of a tyrannical government.

Concerning the war in Iraq, Hunter said the recent release of British documents, if authenticated, prove without question that President Bush lied to the American people and Congress about his motives behind the war, erasing any doubt of the war's illegal nature.

"There is no justification for a pre-emptive strike in this case," she added. "The government declared a war on Iraq unconstitutionally. And for the first time in history, it has led a preemptive war based on misrepresentations and/or faulty intelligence as we now know."

Hunter, a lawyer and student of the law, also has major reservations about the constitutionality of the Patriot Act, hurriedly passed into law after 9/11, saying many of its provisions take away long standing Constitutional rights detrimental to individual liberty.

She also maintains the administration's heavy-handed tactics at Guantanamo Bay, as well as criticizing the government for detaining American citizens at home, using Jose Padilla as an example, a detainee held in custody for over two years without official charges being brought.

"Mr. Padilla is an American citizen that is locked up in South Carolina. He is thought to have had something or other to do with the terrorists. No charges have been brought, yet the government is keeping him locked up," said Hunter. "The government is similarly detaining other individuals at Guantanamo. They have not been charged with war crimes or other crimes. How long will we keep them in prison? Indefinitely."

To encourage an open debate before the North Carolina elections, Hunter has initiated a question and answer page on her web site, where she responds to all comers, good or bad. In response to one supporter regarding the oppressive climate in Washington, she answered:

"You are right about the fascist regime in Washington, D.C. Our rights are steadily being eroded. I know there are like-minded people out there across the nation. It's not the like-minded souls that we must reach, but the majority of the people who mean well, but who have either tuned out, become disgusted, or those who are too dependent on government.

"You are right about special interests too. Big business got in bed with big government long ago. Big business does not care about property and liberty rights of the people, nor does big business ask whether an action is good for America. It is too busy making a profit. As Thomas Jefferson noted in one of his letters, they are the least moral class. Nothing has changed."

In an effort to explain why she defected from the Republican ranks, she hopes her motives will motivate more Americans from blindly following President Bush's misguided policies that are not in the best interest of freedom and democracy.

"I am not a traitor. I love my country. I don't want any more September 11ths," she added. "However, the Republicans cannot wrap themselves in the flag and scream 'traitor' and 'unpatriotic' and call for a person's resignation whenever someone asks a legitimate question about the war in Iraq. I and many Democrats simply do not need Karl Rove's therapy."

Mom, Who Lost Son In Iraq, Talks About 'Disgusting' White House Private Meeting With Bush; Claims He Was Arrogant, 'Totally Detached From Humanity' And Didn't Even Know Her Name

Founder of peace group to stop senseless murder of our children, Cindy Sheehan wants parents to 'wake up' to the illegal nature of the war and Bush's corrupt motives meriting impeachment. She tells parents to advise their children not to fight, saying it's better 'to spend a year in jail instead of an eternity in a coffin.'

5 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Cindy Sheehan has already had her heart ripped into a million pieces by the illegal Iraqi war, losing the son she loved more than life itself only five days after he arrived in Baghdad in April 2004.

There is nothing more painful or more heart breaking than a parent losing a child.

And for Sheehan to lose her 24-year-old son, Casey, must have been like someone taking her very own heart and soul and, without warning, ripping them out and throwing them into the depths of hell.

No one should have to experience such pain, but the cold reality of war is that someone's child actually dies and there are actual parents left living with the hopeless task of trying to cope with the pain.

And anyone with any semblance of a heart and soul knows a mother coping with such a loss needs all the help and understanding she can get.

Anyone with the slightest bit of compassion knows a kind word or a shoulder to cry on helps a mother, who experienced the ultimate loss, get through another day when every day feels like it could be the end of the world.

So when Sheehan received an invitation to meet privately with President Bush at the White House two months after her son died, the least she could have expected was a bit of compassion or a kind word coming from the heart.

But what she encountered was an arrogant man with eyes lacking the slightest bit of compassion, a President totally "detached from humanity" and a man who didn't even bother to remember her son's name when they were first introduced.

Instead of a kind gesture or a warm handshake, Sheehan said she immediately got a taste of Bush arrogance when he entered the room and "in a condescending tone and with a disgusting loud Texas accent," said: "Who we'all honorin' here today?"

"His mouth kept moving, but there was nothing in his eyes or anything else about him that showed me he really cared or had any real compassion at all. This is a human being totally disconnected from humanity and reality. His eyes were empty, hollow shells and he was acting like I should be proud to just be in his presence when it was my son who died for his illegal war! It was one of the most disgusting experiences I ever had and it took me almost a year to even talk about it," said Sheehan in a telephone conversation from Washington D.C. where she was attending a July 4th anti-war rally.

Sheehan said the June 2004 private meeting with the President went from bad to worse to a nightmare when Bush acted like he didn't even want to know her name. She said Bush kept referring to her as 'Ma' or 'Mom' while he "put on a phony act," saying things like 'Mom, I can't even imagine losing a loved one, a mother or a father or a sister or a brother.'

"The whole meeting was simply bizarre and disgusting, designed to intimidate instead of providing compassion. He didn't even know our names," said Sheehan. "Finally I got so upset I just looked him in the eye, saying 'I think you can imagine losing someone. You have two daughters. Imagine losing them?' After I said that he just looked at me, looked at me with no feeling or caring in his eyes at all."

Sheehan said what really upset her about the meeting is that Bush appeared to become annoyed and even angry at her daughter Carley, 25, who also attended the White House get-together.

"My daughter said to him directly 'I wish I could bring my loved one back' and he said something like 'so do we.' Later she told me that after he made his remark he gave her one of the filthiest looks she had ever had gotten in her life.

"I just couldn't believe this was happening. It was so surreal and bizarre. Later I met with some of the other 15 or 16 families who were at the White House the same day and, sure enough, they all felt the same way I did.

"It's interesting that they put us each in separate rooms. I heard this was done to prevent any type of group outburst and since it's easier to control a situation when people are separated. Looking back, all I can say is that the meeting with Bush was one of the most disgusting experiences in my life.

"And I even asked him: 'Why did you even bother to bring us here when I didn't vote for you and don't support the illegal nature of your war?' He said it wasn't political but I know it was just another one of his lies, as he probably wanted to be able to say out on the political stump that he wasn't afraid to meet with families who lost loved ones in the war."

Although Sheehan was opposed to the illegal nature of the war from the outset, it wasn't until January that she began to become politically active.

Besides speaking at rallies and becoming known in Washington for her outspoken criticism of Bush, Sheehan formed a group called Gold Star Families For Peace, joining together families who lost loved ones in an effort to expose the illegal nature of the war and to hasten the return of troops still fighting in Iraq.

Her involvement with the anti-war movement also led her recently to join forces with the After Downing Street movement, a civic, political and activist group seeking to open a Presidential impeachment inquiry based on the release of damaging British intelligence documents showing Bush doctored WMD intelligence reports to justify his war policy.

"Americans need to wake up and we need to put public pressure on our leaders to end this illegal war," said Sheehan, adding that if the public remains passive, recent statements by Donald Rumsfeld that the war may last another 12 years will come true. "We can't let these people continue to murder our children and also continue murdering innocent Iraqi citizens, now totaling more than 100,000.

"This is an immoral war based on a false premise. Iraq was never an imminent threat and the Downing Street Memo proves Bush went to war for oil, greed and all the wrong reasons.

Commenting on Bush's recent speech at Ft. Bragg intended to rally America behind an unpopular war, she said:

"He never mentioned the WMD threat and repeatedly brought up 9/11 in an attempt to scare and frighten everyone again. People have characterized the speech in many ways, but if I had to pick a few words, I would say hypocritical, manipulative, condescending, meaningless drivel."

After the speech, Sheehan was unexpectedly invited on the CNN Larry King Show June 28, but expressed concern and outright anger over the fact she was only given 82 seconds to be "the token anti-war peace speaker" in an hour show which essentially contained a pro war message from all the other guests.

In a recent rebuttal article placed on the Internet, expressing her displeasure with some of the CNN guests and the short time given for her anti-war message, she wrote:

"My absolute favorite guest of the evening was Sen. John Warner, powerful chair of the Senate Armed (Disservices) Committee. Of course, he fell in lockstep behind his Führer (Bush) and praised the speech.... I sat in the Green Room with Sen. Warner's entourage. I wondered (even out loud) what price they have paid for our administration's misdeeds in Iraq. They all looked like happy, well-fed, well-dressed, well-educated, and well-hydrated Americans....I sincerely doubt if any of them had a loved one ripped from their lives by a car bomb, IED, or bullet in an ambush.

"I spoke with John Warner after his interview and told him unless he was prepared to sacrifice even a good night's sleep over this senseless and criminal war, then he should work on ending it, not prolonging the carnage. He told me that I was "entitled to my opinion," but he would respectfully have to disagree with me. That was awfully Constitutional of him!

"I finally got to speak for my 82 seconds (all the time Larry King Live could spare for the peace message) about how this war is a catastrophe and how we should bring the troops home and quit forcing the

Iraqi people to pay for our government's hubris and quit forcing innocent children to suffer so we can allegedly fight terrorism somewhere besides America. How absolutely racist and immoral is it to take America's battles to another land and make an entire country pay for the crimes of others? To me, this is blatant genocide.

"After my brief advocacy for peace, my position was refuted by another mom whose son was killed in Iraq in 2003, saying she "totally disagrees" with me and "feels sorry" for me.

"Well, you know what? I ache for her blindness and for the millions of 'sheeple' who have had the wool pulled over their eyes by this bunch of hypocritical, bad shepherds who are running a disastrous herd over the world. I have distressing news for the 'Soccer Safety Moms' and the 'NASCAR Dads' who are such ardent supporters of this administration and war:

"Your grandchildren and children who will be entering Kindergarten this fall will be fighting George's endless war if he gets his way and is allowed to continue spreading the cancer of imperialism in the Middle-East....

"Think about it when you tuck your child into bed tonight."

Bush 'Down And Out' on Downing Street Memo; Caught Between Rock And Hard Place With No Answers

A majority of Americans believe President misled country into war. Congress one step closer to formal investigation as 52 members file Freedom of Information Act request, seeking needed documents and witnesses. Further complicating a White House response, Tony Blair confirmed authenticity of minutes of Downing Street war meeting.

4 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The infamous Downing Street Memo has suddenly grown wings in Washington, slowly floating through town like a feather in the wind during a two month media blackout but finally landing like a lead balloon on President Bush's desk.

But despite a Congressional demand from 123 House members and a letter signed by over 560,000 Americans demanding answers, Bush has decided to tuck the British memo conveniently away in his bottom drawer.

Normally he moves quickly with short quirky answers to silence his critics or has Karl Rove out cutting them in half. But when it comes to the accusations leveled by the Downing Street Memo, our plain speaking President, who often times has trouble putting together a coherent sentence, has remained strangely silent.

His silence, however, is not due to grammatical shortcomings, but due to the fact he doesn't want to put his foot in his mouth in what looks to be a fight to the finish over whether he doctored WMD intelligence reports to justify an Iraqi invasion.

For example, during Bush's recent national speech seeking support for the growing unpopularity of the war, he was careful not to mention the WMD issue instead referencing 9/11 at least seven times, as it became obvious his political arsenal of war justifications has been reduced to a single bullet.

And while the Supreme Court nomination will likely take the heat of the WMD issue for the time being, the battle lines are already being drawn as to whether a formal Congressional hearings are merited, paving the way for future impeachment proceedings.

In the Bush camp, they're of course hoping the issue will disappear like a bad B movie. But more than likely Rove and company are in a damage control mode, sealing internal leaks like an overworked plumber and taping shut media mouths like thugs in the old Chicago Al Capone gang.

A call to the White House this week to get an official response was like trying to ask a priest about someone else's confession, a White House spokesman saying "no comment at this time."

In the other camp seeking an honest investigation into Bush's war motives, the numbers of Americans in support is growing dramatically if recent polls are any indication.

A recent ABC/Washington Post poll reports 52 percent of Americans believe the President intentionally misled the country into war despite the fact a majority of people still are unaware of the serious implications of the Downing Street Memo due to a media blackout.

And a recent Zogby poll reported 42 percent of Americans favor impeachment if it can be proved Bush intentionally misled the country, again most without having any knowledge of the damaging British documents.

Although household words for Washington insiders, the beltway remains primarily unaware of the memo originally surfacing in early May after a British whistleblower leaked transcripts of a top level British meeting, including Prime Minister Tony Blair and Sir Richard Dearlove, the head of the British Intelligence Agency, M16.

Dearlove, fresh from high-level meetings in Washington several months prior to the Iraqi 2002 invasion, reported to Blair and others that despite the lack of credible evidence of Iraqi WMD capability, Bush was determined "to fix the (WMD) intelligence to fit the (war) policy."

Already Rove and company have tried to spin the meaning of the word 'fix,' saying it has a different connotation in the English vernacular. However, critics were quick to point out 'fix' has the same simple and clear meaning on both sides of the Atlantic.

Further complicating matters, Blair recently confirmed the authenticity of the meeting and the statements, leaving Bush between a rock and a hard place when it comes to an explanation of who said what during Dearlove's Washington visit.

Speculation is that Dearlove met with Condaleeza Rice and/or CIA Director George Tenet, considering his position as head of British intelligence.

Recently, Ray McGovern, a former CIA senior analyst and one of the top people leading the Capitol Hill charge to open congressional hearings, openly called Tenet to come out of the closet and tell what he knows about Dearlove's statements.

"Wouldn't it be nice instead of Tenet making $30,000 speeches, to have him come before the American people and explain what he knows about Dearlove's visit," said McGovern, adding the credibility of the documents demands a formal investigation with subpoena power to get at needed documents and witnesses.

Along with McGovern and the 560,000 Americans who signed a letter demanding Bush respond to the WMD allegations, on May 26 a coalition of veterans' groups, peace groups and political activist groups formally started a nationwide campaign at www.afterdowningstreet.org demanding the U.S. Congress launch an official investigation into the memo's allegations.

Since then 123 Congressmen are moving in that direction, led by Rep. John Conyers (D-MI), and 52 members have filed a Freedom of Information Act request to the White House, the Department of Defense, and the Department of State, seeking all documents and materials concerning the 'Downing Street Minutes' and the lead up to the Iraq war.

Asked how the After Downing Street movement was progressing, one of its co-founders, David Swanson, said this week:

"It's progressing beyond my wildest hopes, but we still haven't gone nearly far enough. We've forced the story into the media through public pressure and use of the Internet, progressive radio, and alternative publications. But we need this story to achieve a higher level and the level of respect the media gives to a Michael Jackson trial."

Another of the movement's founder's, John Bonifaz a well-respected Boston constitutional attorney, said,

"The recent release of the Downing Street Memo provides new and compelling evidence that the President of the United States has been actively engaged in a conspiracy to deceive and mislead the United States Congress and the American people about the basis for going to war against Iraq. If true, such conduct constitutes a High Crime under Article II, Section 4 of the United States Constitution."

Some of the organizations forming the AfterDowningStreet.org coalition include: Global Exchange, Gold Star Families for Peace, Democrats.com, Veterans for Peace, Code Pink, Progressive Democrats of America, and Democracy Rising.

One-On-One Interview With Ray McGovern, Former CIA Senior Analyst, Who Warns U.S. Headed Down A Fascist Road And Highly Critical Of President Bush and Neo Con Explanations OF WMD, 9/11 And Manipulation of Intelligence Gathering

McGovern says back in the 'old days' he told it straight,' an integrity trait sorely lacking at the CIA under the dogmatic Bush administration.

2 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Ray McGovern's Irish eyes were smiling the moment he joined the CIA as a young, principled and energetic analyst during the Kennedy administration.

The Fordham College graduate, born in the Bronx, went on to have an illustrious career, spanning seven Presidents and dealing with top Russian intelligence issues, saying he always "told it straight," an integrity trait he claims sorely missing under the dogmatic Bush administration.

But McGovern is a man blessed with integrity, a man born with the luck of the Irish and a four leaf clover in his pocket, considering he survived numerous one-on-one daily Presidential briefings and even toe-to-toe battles with Henry Kissinger.

That, however, was back in the 'old days' when he said CIA analysts still were allowed to present the truth, live up to the U.S. Constitution and not be sent packing if they did. That, he adds, was back in the days when a man was still able to go home after a long day's work, look at himself in the mirror and even crack a smile.

But after 27 years of distinguished service ending right after the cold war, the retired and highly decorated senior analyst isn't smiling anymore. He hasn't been smiling since the "crazies", as he calls them, returned to Washington.

In fact, he hasn't cracked a wide open Irish smile at all since the return of the neo-cons, returning like a bad B movie and putting a strange evangelical stranglehold on the two things he cherishes most: the CIA and the Constitution.

With the neo con invasion of political animals void of dignity and truth, the highly articulate and analytical thinker probably can't help himself from searching for that special four leaf clover in his pocket or wondering if the luck of the Irish finally has run out on America.

And he probably can't help himself from saying an extra prayer to St. Patrick at night, asking him to block the fascist path taken by the neo cons and to restore some semblance of honor, dignity and truth to the agency and country he loves dearly.

But at a time when emotions are running high and patience low, talking to McGovern is like talking to a breadth of fresh air and steady voice of reason, a calm and patient voice who insists on gathering all the facts but nevertheless demanding nothing less than the truth.

He is a man who analyzes first, talks later and never bends reality to fit a political policy, calling that "the cardinal sin" in the intelligence gathering community, a sin the Bush administration recently committed when assessing WMD intelligence concerning the Iraqi invasion.

Recently, McGovern has helped lead the charge, along with a number of Democratic Congressmen and other high-powered civic leaders, demanding an open and honest investigation into allegations President Bush doctored WMD intelligence reports to justify war and essentially lied to the American people and Congress.

The serious allegations, which could send our gun-slinging President down the lonely path of impeachment, are coming on the heels of authenticated - official documentation - from the chief of British intelligence, Sir Richard Dearlove, claiming Bush "fixed the intelligence reports (WMD) around the (Iraqi war) policy."

The controversy has created an uproar among millions of Americans seeking truth and at least 122 Congressmen seeking to open an official investigation with subpoena power, asking Bush, Condoleezza Rice, Dick Cheney, former CIA chief George Tenet and others to come clean about the allegations of doctored WMD intelligence data.

"Wouldn't it be better if rather than making $30,000 speeches, George Tenet came before Congress and the American people and told us about the conversation he had, or didn't have, with the head of British intelligence regarding the WMD issue," said McGovern this week in a lengthy telephone conversation regarding a wide variety of subjects, including the infamous Downing Street Memo, a document which has even been authenticated by Prime Minister Tony Blair.

"Other people ask me, well, maybe President Bush wasn't aware of Iraqi intelligence. What a question! To those critics I simply ask: What's worse, I ask you? A President who lied to the American people about what he knew or a President who made a decision to send innocent Americans to war without knowing or even bothering to uncover the truth? This is why we need to know the truth and set the record straight and nothing less is acceptable."

And when it comes to the war in Iraq, the Downing Street Memo, doctored WMD intelligence gathering, political compromising within the CIA, stolen elections, 9/11, the fall of the Fourth Estate and other assorted neo con scandals, McGovern really demands only two things: let the truth be told and those who don't be damned.

"It' a cardinal sin in the intelligence community to cook the books for a recipe of political power," said McGovern. "And that's what these highly sensitive documents are telling us. Thank god for the whistleblower that came forward and leaked the documents otherwise we may have never known the real truth.

Besides taking an active role in alerting America about a breach of ethics within the CIA and an abuse of Presidential power, McGovern never has changed course regarding his respect for the law and the importance of a President living up to the cherished words written buy our Founding fathers.

"I supported the impeachment of Nixon and took heat from my liberal friends for supporting Clinton's impeachment," said McGovern. "The allegations against President Bush are, in comparison, far more serious since they go to the heart of Article 1 of the Constitution and to the heart of what the Founding Fathers wanted to protect against. And, that being, a King or ruler, like existed in England at the time revolution, ever be allowed in America to declare war on a whim or by his own choosing.

"But if these highly credible documents prove true, this is exactly what President Bush decided to do when he lied to Congress and the American people, leading us into a war based on his own political agenda.

"It appeared he tried to use all agencies of government to trick Congress into declaring war. So, regarding impeachment, let the American people and Congress be the judge after an honest investigation is held."

Turning to the subject he holds most dear, McGovern offered his criticism and recommendations for cleaning up the CIA and protecting against organizational changes in the intelligence gathering community, claiming both problems need immediate attention.

"We are now left with people at CIA who now trim their sails with only what the administration wants to hear," said McGovern, adding the cream no longer rises to the top at the CIA, being replaced with government hacks intending to bend the department's will and integrity into to nothing but a political sounding board.

"And this type of politicking is dangerous, dangerous for our country and dangerous for the world. In my day, I would go toe-to toe with the likes of Kissinger before the end of the cold war. When I got back to the office, my boss would say, 'Did you win, Ray?' And I would tell him no, but then he would ask, 'Did you tell the truth, Ray?' And I would say of course I did and then he would smile and say, 'Good job, Ray. Give 'em hell!'"

McGovern then paused a moment, adding:

"This type of independent thinking, vital for the health of our nation, is gone. Now we have individuals bubbling to the top of the CIA who are being pressured right in the halls of the CIA with the likes of Cheney standing over their shoulders and, of course, bending to that political pressure and passing it down.

"In the 27 years I worked at CIA I never saw a sitting Vice President walk through our offices. But since the Bush administration, I personally know of at least seven trips made by Cheney to CIA obviously with the intent of pushing around his political muscle.

Regarding the recent 9/11 Commission's drastic recommendations for intelligence gathering methods adopted by the administration now bundling domestic and foreign services under one department head, McGovern claims the so-called reforms have made the situation worse.

"What you have is a body of former somebody's who know nothing about intelligence gathering now making recommendations about improving it," said McGovern, referring to the members of the 9/11 Commission.

Taking an enormous subject and condensing it down to its basic elements as only a true CIA analyst could do, McGovern said the words of retired Army Gen. William Odom, once head of Army intelligence, explains the flawed intelligence gathering design under Bush in a single sentence.

"No organizational design will compensate for incompetent encumbrance."

Bringing up 9/11 only since Bush referred to it repeatedly in his recent speech to the nation justifying the continuance of the unpopular Iraqi war, McGovern said it's the last policy strategy the administration has left in its political arsenal since the WMD threat looms as Bush's "Achilles Heel."

"This is really all they have left but even 9/11 presents another serious case of many unanswered questions," said McGovern. "Why are there so many unanswered questions that George W. Bush will not answer?"

"When you have so many loose ends and unanswered questions, it creates nothing but suspicion. In fact, I applaud all the serious people trying to get to the bottom of the truth about 9/11, despite the media blackout, which is another serious issue facing the American people."

Besides delving into the obvious inconsistencies in the government's official story about the manner in which the WTC fell and the breakdown of air traffic defense systems, McGovern turned to the actions of the President on the morning of 9/11 when he sat before a group of school children in a Florida elementary school.

"Why is it he remained for 25 minutes after being alerted about the attack," questioned McGovern, adding when in the background at first Secret Service agents could be heard saying 'let's get out of here.' "Obviously, they were overruled by somebody, somebody who knew something.

"Now, think about it, America is under attack and they have to be thinking, 'we need to get the President out for his own protection.' Why would they let him remain unless they knew he was safe and actually knew what was going on?"

Asked if this also put a group of school children and an entire elementary school also in danger, McGovern added:

"I never thought of that. But it's true. Why would he jeopardize the lives of innocent children unless someone knew something?"

Presently, McGovern is putting the finishing touches on a book titled "Neo-Conned published by Light in the Darkness Publishers. He recently released in advance a chapter prior to the book's August 2005 release date, regarding the Downing Street Memo called "Sham Dunk: Cooking Intelligence for the President.

In January 2003, he also formed a group called Veteran Intelligence Professionals for Sanity (VIPS) after realizing the CIA was being corrupted by political pressure.

VIPS now has more than 50 members, including former professionals from the CIA, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the Department of States Bureau of Intelligence and Research, Army Intelligence, the FBI, the National Security Agency as well as other U.S. intelligence agencies, all who have become extremely dissatisfied with the corruption now existing in the intelligence community.

McGovern now works at 'Tell the Word,' a publishing ministry of the ecumenical Church of the Saviour in Washington, DC. He writes and speaks for the arm of Tell the Word called 'Speaking Truth to Power' and many of his articles on intelligence issues have appeared regularly in national publications.

Reminding everyone what he stands for and what the CIA should embody, a statement in his biography provides an excellent clue:

"The ethos of intelligence analysis in those days (the days McGovern worked in the CIA) was reflected in the scripture passage chiseled into the marble entrance to CIA headquarters. 'You will know the truth, and the truth will set you free.'

'Down and Dirty' News And Dark Side Of Bush Family Taboo In Washington Press; Neo Con Thugs Intimidate Publisher To Pull Plug On Book Exposing Corruption And Treason Within The Administration

Washington writer finds new publisher after neo cons try to silence his work linking the Bush family and the administration to drug smuggling, gun running and the illegal diamond trade. Further, he claims the Bush administration is turning a blind eye and condoning the illegal activity of Victor Bout, a well-known Russian arms dealer.

1 Jul 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Not far from the White House, a man sits alone in a makeshift office, writing stories and covering the dirty side of Bush family politics. It's a lonely, thankless job, a job most people wouldn't touch with a ten-foot pole, especially in today's oppressive political climate.

But free lance writer and author Wayne Madsen likes news to be "down and dirty," likes pushing political dirt aside in an attempt to get at the truth.

He can't work for the mainstream media anymore since anything close to bringing down the neo con stranglehold on Washington is taboo in papers like the Washington Post and New York Times.

So he punches out stories on the Internet, primarily at www.waynemadsenreport.com and looks for alternative publications or foreign papers not afraid to uncover "dirt" and take on the powerful Bush family name.

And in a town where major newspapers simply ignore President Bush's dark side, Madsen has more than enough shoveling to do every day but very few places to unload it.

In a healthy country where diverse views are accepted and freedom of speech honored, Madsen's story wouldn't even be a story. But in a "Bush America" where a strange evangelical stranglehold has silenced critical thinking and writing, a spotlight now shines on his solitary literary story, serving as a stark example just how far down the fascist road we've traveled in such a short time.

After trying unsuccessfully to sell stories about 9/11 and other assorted neo con scandals and having lost a book publisher through intimidation by Bush political operatives, Madsen didn't quit or turn in his computer station into the local Gestapo unit.

He simply regrouped his journalistic forces, created his small "news shop" along side the big boys and set out on a personal mission, a mission dedicated to the old muck racking journalists like Drew Pearson and Jack Anderson, writers of the old and scandalous Washington Merry-Go-Round column

Madsen said these types of journalists, who made a living at digging dirt up on politicians and had a place to print it, have become dinosaurs since major news outlets seem to be protecting politicians instead of actively exposing their misdeeds.

And he claims papers like The Post, The Times and others have turned into nothing more than a government mouthpiece, slapping Bush on the hand every now and again but never giving him the body blows he truly deserves.

How can major newspapers remain oblivious to the glaring truth about a flawed government story about 9/11? How can they basically give the Bush family a free ride when it comes to their suspicious involvement with the bin Ladens and many other multi-national corporations and defense contractors cheating the American people?

How can papers ignore the illegal nature of the Iraqi war and ignore clear evidence showing Bush doctored WMD intelligence reports to justify the invasion? How can they continue to ignore mounting evidence that Bush stole the 2004 election by his operatives tampering with computers?

"It's easy," said Madsen in a telephone conversation from Washington D.C. "When a total of seven corporations control all the major news outlets, all of them in the pocket of the neo cons, it's pretty easy to quickly get rid of any major dissenting opinions.

"That's what has happened and that's why if you say anything contrary to Bush or the neo con agenda, you are immediately targeted, black balled and not allowed to publish or work. It's similar to how it was done in Nazi Germany and the old Soviet Union.

"I know because it happened to me. When I started breaking stories about the Israeli and Arab connection with the 9/11 hijackers, as well as solid stories that the FBI had prior knowledge of 9/11, most of my free lance writing outlets stopped mysteriously dried up and stopped carrying any of my stories.

"I know for a fact the Bush operatives applied pressure and intimidation since anything contrary to the official story put out by Dick Cheney and Karl Rove is off limits."

Madsen said not only where his stories suppressed in the mainstream publications, but the "Bush people" also applied pressure to his original book publisher about a year ago.

"When the administration received word I was working on a controversial book, linking the Bush family to acts of corruption and treason, using covert private, military and oil companies, my first publisher opted out of the project, bending to the political pressure," said Madsen who has since found another one.

His book in progress entitled "Jaded Tasks: Big Oil, Black Ops and Brass Plates" is set to be on bookshelves in early 2006. That is, he says, if the neo cons don't get their "dirty hands on my work another time."

Madsen claims if all goes well, readers will get a highly detailed book tracing an intricate web of corporate corruption, including drug smuggling, gun running and money laundering, all condoned and leading back to the Bush family and other high-ranking administration officials.

"Obviously, it's not something they want to see," added Madsen. "These are vicious people, led by Karl Rove, who will do anything and everything to stay in power. This is really neo-McCarthyism all over again. And, what's worse, if they are allowed to remain in power one more term, I don't give our country more than 20 years left before it breaks apart like the Soviet Union.

"To a lot of people this just sounds like "parlor talk" but there is a lot of truth behind these words if you look at the independent succession movements forming across the country in states like Vermont, the Pacific Northwest and on the Canadian borders

"You see, these evangelicals in power are guided by a destruction of the earth mentality in preparation of the second -coming of the messiah. 9/11 was like a wet dream to them and they want 7 billion people to die in order to realize their insane religious philosophies.

Commenting about 9/11, which he definitely feels was orchestrated by the U.S. government to further its empire-making agenda, Madsen claims the American people have been denied the truth by the administration's underhanded but effective tactics in manipulating the news and then silencing the truth-tellers and critics afterwards.

"I've recently read the story about William Rodriguez, the WTC janitor and the other eye witnesses with him who have evidence that the WTC came down from explosives," said Madsen about a story that recently surfaced in the American Free Press revealing eye witness testimony categorically refuting the official version of the WTC collapse.

"Rove through his operatives get to the major publishers, convincing them to publish only stories in line with the official version of 9/11," said Madsen. "Anybody like Rodriguez who goes against Cheney, Rove and the official story is put out to pasture and never heard from again. And it doesn't matter if you are a high-ranking official, Dan Rather or William Rodriguez. If you talk against the neo cons, you're simply out."

Regarding how he thinks 9/11 really occurred, he added:

"Oh, the neo cons definitely pushed the envelope, orchestrated it and allowed it to happen. But it doesn't surprise me if you look at the Bush family history and their willingness to negotiate with criminals. Prescott, the grandfather, had ties and negotiated with Hitler, George H. with Noreaga and George W. now with the Taliban and the Saudis."

Since Madsen enjoys following the "money trail" leading to corruption, asked what were some of the other most disturbing facets unique to the Bush administration besides the glaring problems of the Iraq war and 9/11, he said:

"When Bush first entered office one of the first things he did was change federal regulations, allowing defense contractors who bid on government contracts to be headquartered in offshore place like Bermuda. Haliburton is well-known but there now are many other 'little Haliburtons' operating under the radar screen difficult to uncover.

"Also, since Bush took over, the Department of Justice is turning a blind eye and not taking an aggressive approach at a network of criminal activity, going on in places like Iraq, by the Russian, Ukrainian and Israeli Mafia active in drug smuggling, gun running and the illegal diamond trade.

"I touch on this heavily in my book and remember the name of Victor Bout, well known by the administration as a worldwide Russian illegal arms dealer. Bout owns hundreds of aircraft companies, difficult to trace, but used to carry on his illegal war trade.

"I believe Bush and the neo cons are protecting Bout, allowing him to facilitate war, since recently only a small portion of his assets have been frozen, allowing him to continue his illegal activities."

Former Military Demolition Pro Now 'Blows Out' Neo Con Protest Songs; Inspired And Angry, He's Now Writing Song About WTC Hero-Janitor For Efforts To Get At 9/11 Truth

Although his songs haven't hit the charts, folk singer with political message wants to blast out truth about 9/11, illegal war in Iraq and all the Bush administration lies being told to the American people.

30 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Former Army Sgt. Mark Johnson of Philadelphia is finished blowing up buildings and bridges, finished with the ugly work of a military demolitions expert.

Instead of setting trip wires and booby traps, Johnson now "blows out" neo con protest songs with his guitar, synthesizer and raspy Bob Dylan-like voice.

Trained by Army Special Forces for jungle warfare in Panama during the 1970s, the message in Johnson's music is every bit as hard-hitting as his "explosive past."

"I have just finished a song about people needing to work together to regain their rights, especially rights taken away by the Bush administration and the neo con movement," said Johnson about his most recent song entitled "Let the Protesting Begin."

In this song, Johnson, attacks President Bush directly for committing numerous impeachable offenses, creating a climate similar to the old Soviet Union and thrusting America into an illegal war based on improper motives.

Mixing politics and music comes natural to the road musician, who once played for brief stints with such notable bands like The Drifters, The Platter and Chicago, saying his six years of military training makes him well-qualified to comment about what he calls "the evils of the Bush military regime."

"What our court-appointed President has been saying all along is a huge lie. He's taking our rights away from us in the name of keeping us safe from terrorism. Yeah right! I cannot believe people are actually buying into this story," said Johnson.

"I was trained to implode buildings, blow out bridges as well as being trained extensively in explosive booby traps of all kinds, but now the only thing I'll be trying to blow out is more music to expose the lies and deceit involved in the neo con message."

With his demolition training, Johnson has also taken up the cause of exposing the truth about 9/11, saying from his personal experience with explosives it appears the WTC fell from a controlled demolition, not burning jet fuel like the government contends.

"From day one on Sept. 11th, after seeing the footage of the airliner striking the WTC on CNN and seeing explosions happening on lower floors of both towers, I knew right then and there that the towers were purposely being imploded," said Johnson.

"What William Rodriguez, the janitor at the World Trade Center, recently said about explosions in the basement on 9/11 is true and indicates explosives were definitely used. Anyone with any kind of demolition training can see that!"

Johnson is referring to the recent statements made by Rodriguez, a WTC survivor and janitor on duty the morning of 9/11, statements indicating he heard a massive explosion rock the basement of the WTC just seconds prior to jetliner striking the top floors of the north tower.

Rodriguez's claims have become "big news" recently since he contends the government and the mainstream media have waged a concerted effort ever since 9/11 to keep his story from the American people, as it completely destroys government contentions that the WTC fell from only burning jet fuel.

What makes the Rodriguez story even more incredible is that it can be corroborated by at least 14 other eye witnesses, who were all huddled with him in a small basement office when a massive explosion below sub-level 1 of the north tower rocked the floors and cracked walls just prior to airliner hitting the top floors.

Adding even further credibility to Rodriguez's story is the fact that all the witnesses viewed Rodriguez even help a basement burn victim to safety immediately after the explosion.

Felipe David, severely burned on his face, arms and hands, rushed into the office where Rodriguez and the 14 others were located after his injuries occurred while standing in front of nearby freight elevator as flames shot up from the elevator shaft.

"What an incredible story and what a courageous man to still come forward with this story despite the tremendous odds against him," said Johnson who is now writing a folk song about Rodriguez.

"I'm now beginning a song about the Bush Administration ignoring William Rodriguez's true account of what he saw and heard in the basement of the north tower of the WTC. Now remember 14 other people witnessed what Mr. Rodriguez had seen that morning and I want this song to ring out the truth all across America.

"He deserves to be remembered forever as a true American hero and after reading his incredible story, it inspired me to write his song."

Johnson said once the Rodriguez song is complete he plans to send a copy to President Bush, his cabinet members and all Capital Hill lawmakers as well as making a trip to Washington himself to play his song live in front of the White House main gate.

"I want the message to ring out loud and clear throughout Washington, a message that the American people are sick and tired of being lied to about 9/11, the war in Iraq and everything else going on in Washington," said Johnson.

"However, what baffles my mind is that still after all the obvious lying, so many American citizens are still not getting it and still living with their heads in the sand. Hopefully my songs and the important song I am writing about William Rodriguez will wake them up before it's too late and before all our rights have been systematically taken away."

Reaction To Bush Insider Claim WTC Collapse Bogus Gets 'Huge Response' And Read By Millions Worldwide

After the dust settled, a former chief economist in Labor Department shocked by enormous support for his story and vows to keep writing about glaring inconsistencies in government's version of 9/11.

28 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

When Morgan Reynolds called the official story about 9/11 bogus, it seemed like the whole world stopped for a moment to listen.

It seemed like a lightning bolt hit the heart of the government story, cracking it into a million unexplainable pieces.

And when the dust settled from his explosive statements, the highest-ranking member of the Bush team to make such an accusation said he wasn't expecting any "invitations to the White House anytime soon."

Two weeks ago, the former chief economist in the Labor Department during President Bush's first term told the world he thought the WTC fell from a controlled demolition, indicating 9/11 was "an inside government job."

Reynolds, a respected economist and former Republican conservative, made his claims after researching many aspects of 9/11, including scientific and engineering data for and against the government story.

He presented his findings on the Internet in a long, detailed article, concluding:

"It is hard to exaggerate the importance of a scientific debate over the cause(s) of the collapse of the twin towers and Building 7. If the official wisdom on the collapses is wrong, as I believe it is, then policy based on such erroneous engineering analysis is not likely to be correct either.

"The government's collapse theory is highly vulnerable on its own terms. Only professional demolition appears to account for the full range of facts associated with the collapse of the three buildings.

"More importantly, momentous political and social consequences would follow if impartial observers concluded that professionals imploded the WTC. Meanwhile, the job of scientists, engineers and impartial researchers everywhere is to get the scientific and engineering analysis of 9/11 right."

Considering his place among the Republican faithful, once the media got its "claws into his controversial remarks," his words quickly spread with the help of cyberspace like an out of control wildfire.

Not only did millions read his story on the Internet, but Reynolds controversial comments then drew instant attention from numerous mainstream newspapers, radio and television stations, including UPI,

MSNBC, FOX News and over a dozen other major market local radio and TV stations.

It was a story that "grew wings," a story Reynolds never expected would get so much attention and such a large audience.

"I had a huge response and it really was amazing. I never expected so many people to respond so passionately," said Reynolds this week in a telephone interview. "I literally received hundreds and hundred of emails, some agreeing with me and others, of course, disagreeing.

"After it was all said and done, as things are starting to finally quiet down now, I would guess it was about 5 to 1 in favor of what I was saying. However, I never imagined how much support there was out there for what I was suggesting occurred on 9/11."

Without mincing words, as he did in his article, Reynolds quickly changed the subject, again placing the blame squarely on the government for not coming clean about what happened on 9/11, saying it's important to get to the bottom of a "story that dwarfs all others in comparison."

"What it boils down to is that the government and the mainstream media are not digging into the 9/11 controversy because they are hiding something," said Reynolds. "From a media point of view, it's the story of the century and they are not even trying to connect the dots."

Continuing to throw some punches at his former employer, he added:

"It's nothing new. The government has always lied about so many things. Look at the Downing Street Memo, for example, the document confirming that the Bush administration lied to us about its motives for getting into the war.

" If they lied to us about this, what else? Well, 9/11 is just another example."

To add more fuel to the hot 9/11 controversy, William Rodriguez, the WTC janitor who heard and felt a strong explosion in the basement levels of the north tower just seconds before the jetliner crashed into the top floors, recently came forward to tell his story, adding further credibility to Reynolds' conclusions.

Rodriguez claims a massive underground explosion brought down the towers. His story is strengthened further by 14 other eye witnesses who can verify his claims, as well as a burn victim from the basement explosion who he helped to safety.

Immediately following 9/11, Rodriguez tried to tell his story, but claims the 9/11 Commission and the mainstream media have systematically censored his words in order to protect the official government story, a story ignoring the possibility of explosives being used to bring down the WTC.

Commenting on Rodriguez, Reynolds said:

"It's not a coincidence that there was first an explosion below and then the jetliner explosion seconds later above. At least there should have been a thorough investigation since the timing of the explosions strikes me as an impossibility if you believe, as the government contends, that only a jetliner brought down the towers."

Reynolds added that nobody from the Bush administration has officially contacted him about his statements suggesting 9/11 was an "inside job," but said he was aware that "administration operatives" have carried his message into the halls of 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

"How high up it went, I just don't know," he added.

Asked if he was going to continue to research and write about 9/11, Reynolds said:

"Yes, of course, I see it as a citizen's duty and I hope to do some more writing on the subject very soon."

9/11 Conspiracy Now Subject of Hollywood Theatrical Performance
The 'Joan of Arc of 9/11' is the first to tackle the complicated 'mother of all conspiracy stories' in a stage performance set to open July 17 at Met Theatre in Hollywood.

27 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The 9/11 murder mystery, filled with conspiracy clues but no answers, is finally going Hollywood.

Known for the unusual and bizarre, this time a Hollywood theatre is the scene for a serious political and social event, a two hour high tech video dramatization of September 11th called "9/11 Mysteries."

The brainchild of Sophia Shafquat, called the Joan of Arc of 9/11, the play is the first one in the country to tackle the complicated 9/11 issue on stage. It opens July 17 at the Met Theatre in Hollywood and is set for a six week run with performances every Sunday.

"9/11 Mysteries" presents photographic and video evidence drawn from over 3000 web sites and 10 current documentaries, allowing viewers to create perspective and form conclusions by themselves," said Shafquat from her home in San Diego. "Without pointing fingers or making allegations, the show suggests that there is something very wrong with the 9/11 story we have heard so far.

The stage performance is broken down into four major segments, including "Demolitions, Hijackers and Planes, War Games and Who Benefits."

According to Shafquat the segments "connect the dots" in a show which should "glue people to their seats and raise eyebrows" about the implausibility of the government's story, a story claiming 19 Arab hijackers outfoxed the American military and rammed jetliners into targets located in the most heavily guarded airspace in the world.

Regarding the four segments, she explains what audiences can expect:

"The 'Demolitions' portion of the show reveals what we call "woops footage" from major news networks. Much of the video aired that morning by the media giants was never aired again. While shots of the plane strike were shown repeatedly to millions, the building collapses were not. Slowed down and analyzed, the collapses are the key.

"Hijackers & Planes' reveals anomalies about the destruction to the Pentagon, the Arab terrorists, the wandering planes, and the passenger cell-phone calls, leading into the question of why Air Force scramblers failed to intercede within minutes as standard operating procedure mandates. 'War Games' covers the numerous military drills in force that day.

"And the last segment 'Who Benefits' discusses the stock trades, the government's expanding geopolitical program, military as industry and the birth of the warfare state, connecting all the dots with clips from documentaries and the news."

She added the incredible story of William Rodriguez, the WTC janitor who heard explosions in the basement along with 14 other people seconds before the jetliner hit, is also a part of the show, adding eye witness testimony the north tower was brought down by a controlled demolition

Shafquat, an outspoken critic of the Bush administration, decided to use the theatre medium to tell the 9/11 story since the mainstream media has closed off discussion of the subject to the general public by what she called blatant censorship.

"Journalists have been censored from telling anything but the government official story," said Shafquat. "I thought this was a way to create interest and get in touch with many Americans who still have no idea about what happened on the morning of 9/11."

Called by many in the activist community the "packaging queen of 9/11" for her slick use of graphics and the visual medium, Shafquat has noticed a "second wave" of interest spreading across America about the many unanswered questions surrounding 9/11, an interest which she claims is beginning to reach America's heartland.

"The first wave were the original skeptics, who put out books, videos and web sites but had a limited audience due to national shock and horror in the wake of the tragic event," she said. "Our show and our audience are the "second wave," those who now have only begun to ponder the plausibility of what happened that day."

The show is being directed by Paul Koslo and KPFK 90.7 (Los Angeles) has agreed to promote the event by offering free ticket giveaways during its daily broadcast.

WTC Basement Blast And Injured Burn Victim Blows 'Official 9/11 Story' Sky High; Eye Witness Testimony Is Conclusive That North Tower Collapsed From Controlled Demolition

WTC janitor pulls burn victim to safety after basement explosion rocks north tower seconds before jetliner hit top floors. Also, two other men trapped and drowning in a basement elevator shaft, were also pulled to safety from underground explosion..

24 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

What happened to William Rodriguez the morning of 9/11 is a miracle. What happened to his story after-the-fact is a tragedy.

But with miracles and tragedies comes truth. And truth is exactly what Rodriguez brings to the whole mystery surrounding 9/11.

Declared a hero for saving numerous lives at Ground Zero, he was the janitor on duty the morning of 9/11 who heard and felt explosions rock the basement sub-levels of the north tower just seconds before the jetliner struck the top floors.

He not only claims he felt explosions coming from below the first sub-level while working in the basement, he says the walls were cracking around him and he pulled a man to safety by the name of Felipe David, who was severely burned from the basement explosions.

All these events occurred only seconds before and during the jetliner strike above. And through it all, he now asks a simple question everybody should be asking? How could a jetliner hit 90 floors above and burn a man's arms and face to a crisp in the basement below within seconds of impact?

Rodriguez claims this was impossible and clearly demonstrates a controlled demolition brought down the WTC, saying "Let's see them (the government) try to wiggle out of this one."

Well, they haven't wiggled out of it because the government continues to act like Rodriguez doesn't exist, basically ignoring his statements and the fact he rescued a man burnt and bleeding from the basement explosions.

His eye witness account, ignored by the media and the government, points the finger squarely on an official cover-up at the highest levels since the government contends the WTC fell only from burning jet fuel. And after listening to Rodriguez, it's easy to see why the Bush administration wants him kept quiet.

Bush wants him quiet because Rodriguez's account is 'proof positive' the WTC was brought down by a controlled demolition, not burning jet fuel. And Bush knows if he's caught lying about this or caught in a cover-up, it's just a matter of time before the whole house of cards comes tumbling down.

In fact, Rodriguez's story is so damaging - so damning - it literally blows the lid off the government story, literally exposing the whole 9/11 investigation as a sham and a cover-up of the worst kind.

And it appears the cover-up also extends to the media.

NBC news knew about his story several years ago, even spending a full day at his house taping his comments. But when push came to shove, his story was never aired. Why?

His eyewitness account, backed up by at least 14 people at the scene with him, isn't speculation or conjecture. It isn't a story that takes a network out on a journalistic limb. It's a story that can be backed up, a story that can be verified with hospital records and testimony from many others.

It's a story about 14 people who felt and heard the same explosion and even saw Rodriguez, moments after the airplane hit, take David to safety, after he was burnt so bad from the basement explosion flesh was hanging from his face and both arms

So why didn't NBC or any other major news outlets cover the story? They didn't run it because it shot the government story to hell and back. They didn't run it because "the powers that be" wouldn't allow it.

Since 9/11, Rodriguez has stuck to his guns, never wavering from what he said from day one. Left homeless at times, warned to keep quiet and subtly harassed, he nevertheless has continued trying to tell get his message out in the face of a country not willing to listen.

Here is his story:

The Miracle

It's a miracle Rodriguez, 44, who worked at the WTC for 20 years, is even alive. Usually arriving to work at 8:00am, the morning of 9/11 he reported 30 minutes late. If he'd arrived on time, it would have put him at the top floors just about the same time the jetliner hit the north tower.

"It was a miracle. If I arrived on time, like always, I'd probably be dead. I would have been up at the top floors like every morning," said Rodriguez about the quirk of fate that saved his life.

But since he was late, Rodriguez found himself checking into work in an office on sub-level 1 when the north tower was hit, seemingly out of harms way. However, the sound and concussion of a massive explosion in the sub-levels right below his feet changed that.

"When I heard the sound of the explosion, the floor beneath my feet vibrated, the walls started cracking and it everything started shaking," said Rodriguez, who was huddled together with at least 14 other people in the office.

Rodriguez said Anthony Saltamachia, supervisor for the American Maintenance Co., was one of the people in the room who stands ready to verify his story.

"Seconds after the first massive explosion below in the basement still rattled the floor, I hear another explosion from way above," said Rodriguez. "Although I was unaware at the time, this was the airplane hitting the tower, it occurred moments after the first explosion."

But before Rodriguez had time to think, co-worker Felipe David stormed into the basement office with severe burns on his face and arms, screaming for help and yelling "explosion! explosion! explosion!"

David had been in front of a nearby freight elevator on sub-level 1 about 400 feet from the office when fire burst out of the elevator shaft, causing his injuries.

"He was burned terribly," said Rodriguez. "The skin was hanging off his hands and arms. His injuries couldn't have come from the airplane above, but only from a massive explosion below. I don't care what the government says, what scientists say. I saw a man burned terribly from a fire that was caused from an explosion below.

"I know there were explosives placed below the trade center. I helped a man to safety who is living proof, living proof the government story is a lie and a cover-up.

"I have tried to tell my story to everybody, but nobody wants to listen. It is very strange what is going on here in supposedly the most democratic country in the world. In my home country of Puerto Rico and all the other Latin American countries, I have been allowed to tell my story uncensored. But here, I can't even say a word."

After Rodriguez escorted David to safety outside the WTC, he returned to lead the others in the basement to safety as well. While there, he also helped two other men trapped and drowning in the basement elevator shaft, another result he says of the explosives placed below the tower.

In fact, after leading these men to safety, he even made another trip back into the north tower, against police orders, in order to rescue people from the top floors.

"I never could make it to the top, but I got up to the 33rd floor after getting some of my equipment and a face mask out of the janitor's closet," said Rodriguez, adding he heard a series of small explosions going off between the 20th and 30th floors, unrelated to the airplane strike, while making his way through the stairwell to the top floors.

"Also, when I was on the 33rd floor, I heard strange sounds coming from the 34th floor, loud noises like someone moving and thumping heavy equipment and furniture. I knew this floor was empty and stripped due to construction work so I avoided it and continued to make my way up the stairs."

Rodriguez said he finally reached the 39th floor before being turned back by fire fighters and then, reluctantly, started his descent back down and his own flight to safety while, at the same time, hearing explosions coming from the South Tower.

The Tragedy

The concerted effort by the media and the government to silence Rodriguez is the tragedy behind this American hero's story. And there is no question, Rodriguez is a "silent hero" for saving so many lives and for having the courage to continue telling his story against tremendous odds.

In an effort to open a fair and honest investigation as to why the WTC collapsed, Rodriguez has been ignored by government officials, the 9/11 Commission and the National Institute of Safety and Technology (NIST).

NIST, an independent investigative group funded by the government, put the finishing touches this week on its 2 year $35 million 9/11 investigation. This week Rodriguez made his final plea to have his story heard while testifying at the final public hearing held in New York.

"I disagree 100% with the government story," said Rodriguez. "I met with the 9/11 Commission behind closed doors and they essentially discounted everything I said regarding the use of explosives to bring down the north tower.

"And I contacted NIST previously four times without a response. Finally, this week I asked them before they came up with their conclusion that jet fuel brought down the towers, if they ever considered my statements or the statements of any of the other survivors who heard the explosions. They just stared at me with blank faces and didn't have any answers.

"Also, The FBI never followed up on my claims or on the other part of my story when I told them before 9/11, I encountered one of the hijackers casing the north tower."

Besides the explosions, Rodriguez also has provided testimony to the 9/11 Commission that he stumbled across one of the supposed 19 Arab hijackers inside the WTC several months before 9/11

"I had just finished cleaning the bathroom and this guy asks me, 'Excuse me, how many public bathrooms are in this area?'" Rodriguez told the 9/11 Commission. "Coming from the school of the 1993 [Trade Center] bombing, I found it very strange. I didn't forget about it"

Rodriguez, claims he saw United Airlines Flight 175 hijacker Mohand Alshehri in June 2001, telling an FBI agent about the incident a month after the attacks. Never hearing back from the bureau, he later learned agents never followed up on the story.

"I'm very certain, I'll give it 90%" that Alshehri was casing the towers before the attacks," said Rodriguez.

Regarding the media's apathetic approach to his story, Rodriguez said immediately after 9/11 some newspapers picked it up but his words were never taken seriously and quickly forgotten.

"During the 9/11 hearings, NBC brought a crew out to my house and spent a day taping my story but they never did air a word of it," said Rodriguez. "Since then, some reporters and commentators have subtly warned me to keep quiet, told me my life could be in jeopardy and warned me that I really didn't understand who I was dealing with.

"I have been receiving this type of subtle harassment for years, but I keep telling everybody I can't be intimidated because I am on a mission. Whenever someone asks why I keep talking or warns me that I could be killed, I just tell them I have nothing to lose.

"I tell them I lost 200 friends and I am their voice now. I tell them I will do everything in my power to find out the truth since I am living on borrowed time since I probably should be dead anyway."

Besides trying to tell his explosive story, Rodriguez has been active raising money for 9/11 victims, being involved with charity groups that have raised more than $122 million. He says he has used over $60,000 of his own money, originally earmarked to buy a new house, in order to get at the truth behind 9/11.

Also seeking justice at the highest level, Rodriguez is the lead plaintiff in a federal RICO lawsuit filed against President Bush and others, alleging conspiracy to commit murder and other crimes in the deaths of more than 3,000 at the WTC.

The case, filed last November in a Philadelphia federal district court, recently was moved to New York in a change of venue after a government's motion to dismiss was overruled, allowing legal discovery to continue.

"Even if the case goes no farther, I feel we have scored a victory by winning this first battle," said Rodriguez. "At least the judge seems willing to listen which is a victory of sorts. However, I sincerely hope we can eventually take the case all the way to trial and reveal the truth to the American people about 9/11."

Former Asst. Sec. Of Treasury Under Reagan Doubts Official 9/11 Story; Claims Neo Con Agenda Is As 'Insane As Hitler And Nazi Party When They Invaded Russia In Dead Of Winter'

A former high-ranking Republican official, also a well-respected author, tells the American people to stop listening to Bush administration lies about Iraqi war and claims the mainstream media will not publish anything he writes against Bush or his policies.

22 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under President Reagan stepped back into the political spotlight this week, expressing doubt about the official 9/11 story and claiming "if they lied to us about Ruby Ridge, Waco and weapons of mass destruction in Iraq, why should we believe them now."

Paul Craig Roberts, listed by Who's Who in America as one of the 1,000 most influential political thinkers in the world, has evolved over the years into a major Bush basher as well as neo con critic. Roberts said he hasn't changed his political ideology or jumped from the Republican-conservative ship but "just can't respect a party leadership who doesn't respect the truth."

He is another in the long list of "Republican faithful," including top-ranking government and military officials who have left or been pushed out Washington, since Bush's neo con followers continue demonstrating a lack of desire and patience to compromise even with conservatives refusing "to toe the neo con line."

Expressing doubt about the government's official version of 9/11 but deferring detailed criticism to the experts, Roberts concerns come on the heels of recent criticism leveled by Morgan Reynolds, a former chief economist in the Bush I administration.

Reynolds is the highest-ranking public official so far to step forward and criticize the government account of 9/11, calling the government story "bogus" and saying the WTC most likely fell from a controlled demolition.

Saying 9/11 is only a part of a mysterious but deadly neo-con puzzle, Roberts looked back at history for some answers

"They (neo cons) are making such fatalistic mistakes and are about as insane as Hitler and the Nazi Party when they invaded Russia in the dead of the winter," said Roberts who now, as a hobby, syndicates a national newspaper column, adding to his long and impressive list of academic, journalistic and political credentials.

Serving under President Reagan in 1981-82, Treasury Secretary Regan credited him with having a major role in the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981. He was then awarded the Treasury Department's Meritorious Service Award for "his outstanding contributions to the formulation of United States economic policy."

Roberts is given much of the credit for structuring and drafting a major portion of the famous Kemp-Roth bill as well as having a leading role in developing bipartisan support for a supply-side economic policy. In 1987, the French government recognized him as "the artisan of a renewal in economic science and policy after half a century of state interventionism," inducted him into the Legion of Honor.

Even with his impressive background, Roberts, once a former columnist for Business Week and a thorn in the side of liberals back then, said "the times have drastically changed," adding his views are no longer welcome in the mainstream media if they are critical of Bush or any of his policies.

"It's like the Nazis removing dissent without using the Gestapo," said Roberts, whose articles are circulated widely on the Internet and appear regularly in the American Free Press, an alternative publication. "Most publications, like the Washington Times, for example, will not print anything critical of Bush, his strategies and, definitely, anything seriously opposing the war is off base."

Although professing to know "a little about engineering" from his undergraduate days at Georgia Tech, Roberts deferred formulating any serious conclusions about the fall of the WTC, but expressed doubt as to the credibility of the entire official version based on past government lies uncovered at Waco, Ruby Ridge and the threat of WMD in Iraq.

Roberts said the recent statements made by Reynolds, however, reveals just how flimsy and unbelievable the government story comes across.

"This is not some kind of conspiracy nut or kook talking. He is a man with extremely qualified credentials, whose opinions I respect," said Roberts referring to Reynolds' comments which have been highly publicized across the country.

"The real story is not Morgan Reynolds or myself, but why have so many former Republican conservatives and top ranking officials who disagree with the neo cons been systematically run out of Washington? And, also, why is the media so intent on covering up the Bush-neo con agenda and all the mistakes surrounding it?"

"I guess the real story about 9/11 is about what the people are actually saying. I've gotten hundreds of emails in response to my columns and many of them talk about not getting the truth from the government or the media about what really happened at the World Trade Center. I know many qualified engineers and scientists have said the WTC collapsed from explosives. In fact, if you look at the manner in which it fell, you have to give their conclusions credibility."

Besides 9/11 and blasting the neo con economic agenda as suicide for America, Roberts in his latest column seriously attacks the Bush Iraq war policy. Without mincing words, he wrote:

"The reasons they (the American people) were given by their president, vice president, secretary of defense, national security adviser, secretary of state, and the sycophantic media were nothing but a pack of lies."

Accusing Bush of also lying to the American people in his recent June 18 radio address, he added:

"Bush again lied to the American people when he told them that the U.S. was forced into invading Iraq because of the Sept. 11 attack on the WTC.

"Bush, the greatest disgrace that America has ever had to suffer, actually repeated at this late date the monstrous lie for which he is infamous throughout the world: 'We went to war because we were attacked, and we are at war today because there are still people out there who want to harm our country and hurt our citizens.'"

Roberts' other impressive credentials include being awarded a John M. Olin Fellow at the Institute for Political Economy, a Senior Research Fellow at the Hoover Institution, Stanford University, and Research Fellow at the Independent Institute.

In 1992, he received the Warren Brookes Award for Excellence in Journalism and, a year later, the Forbes Media Guide ranked him as one of the top seven journalists in the country. He was also Distinguished Fellow at the Cato Institute from 1993 to 1996 while also from 1982 through 1993, holding the William E. Simon Chair in Political Economy at the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

Millions Join Fight To Force Bush To Tell Truth Or Face Impeachment Over WMD Deception

White House keeps stonewalling about 'Downing Street Memo' while Democrats in Congress prepare formal resolution to investigate whether Bush doctored WMD intelligence reports and lied to the American people about Iraq's imminent threat to U.S. interests. If the allegations behind the explosive British memo prove true, it could lead to impeachment proceedings.

21 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

When David Swanson first heard about the 'Downing Street Memo,' he knew it was something big, knew it was something more than just a political arrow shot from one politician to another.

Previously only circumstantial evidence existed that President Bush concocted a WMD scare to fool Americans into war and critics like Swanson, once press secretary for the presidential campaign of Rep. Dennis Kucinich (D-Ohio), were left shaking their heads filled with suspicion but little proof.

But now with the release of the secret documents, Swanson claims direct proof surfaced in an official document from the chief of British intelligence, pinning the charge directly on Bush and saying he "fixed the intelligence to fit his war policy" months prior to the Iraqi invasion.

In the past, a serious charge like this would have immediately led to a by-partisan congressional investigation. But with Bush's neo con stranglehold on Washington, the allegations are being conveniently swept under a rug, the issue being treated by a majority in Congress like a minor nuisance instead of an issue of national concern.

To make matters worse, two months after the fact, major newspapers have ignored the story with only a handful even bothering to alert the people let alone use its resources to mount a serious investigation.

The smoking gun has arrived but nobody in America is seeing the smoke.

So in the face of media apathy and White House stonewalling, Swanson knew he had to do something, knew he had to alert the American people quickly before the issue died or was presented falsely with a neo con spin.

Together with John Bonifaz, a distinguished constitutional attorney and several other democratic loyalists, Swanson and the others recently co-founded a nationwide movement and launched their cause on a web site at www.afterdowningstreet.org.

The web site, seeking truth behind the Iraqi invasion, became an instant 'political hit,' similar in music terms to the release of a top selling album.

"We have received an incredible response and are not going away until the truth is uncovered," said Swanson from his Washington D.C. makeshift headquarters where he is trying to keep up with an ever-increasing number of supporters

Beginning May 26 with only a handful of people and organizations, the Downing Street truth movement has exploded across the American landscape. In less than a month, it has attracted hundreds of organizations and millions of interested Americans, who are all simply seeking truth and accountability from a government that some say has "gone mad with power."

"An endless list of organizations and people are joining our fight," said Swanson. "Up until now, the White House Press Secretary has been stonewalling. And it's interesting that all of the top ranking officials when asked by news commentators, are carefully avoiding direct answers."

Besides "After Downing Street," support on Capital Hill from Democrats is growing despite strong Republican opposition to any formal investigation of the charges. Republican dissent has been so strong that the majority party has even refused to allow Democrats adequate meeting room facilities on Capital Hill.

"What a disgrace. They forced us into the basement," said Rep. Maxine Waters (D-Ca).

Rep. Waters was referring to the recent hearings on the Downing Street Memo, organized and led by Rep. John Conyers (D-MI), held two weeks ago in a small basement room on Capital Hill after Republicans refused to give the group adequate meeting facilities.

At the meeting, a group of 123 Democratic Congressmen let it be known they are seeking a formal House Resolution to investigate the allegations, paving the way for Bush's impeachment if the charges prove true. After the meeting, law makers hand delivered a letter to the White House addressed to Bush, demanding accountability and signed by more than 560,000 Americans.

The letter, originally sent to Bush only days after the potentially damaged memo surfaced, went unanswered so Rep. Conyers re-delivered it, now with the added signatures showing a growing support across the country demanding Bush give answers.

A spokesman from Rep. Conyers office this week said Bush has failed to respond to the second letter. In the meantime, Rep. Barbara Lee (D-Ca) is preparing a formal resolution to be presented to the House to formally investigate the allegations made in the infamous memo.

Reps. Conyers and Lee and the other lawmakers contend the 'Downing Street Memo' clearly shows Bush misled Congress and the American people into war by fixing intelligence data to fit his war policy in order to present a case that Iraq presented an imminent threat to U.S. interests.

First reported as a memo from Matthew Rycroft, a British foreign policy advisor, further reporting showed the explosive statements were actually part of minutes of a top-secret meeting in Downing Street on July 23, 2002, when Tony Blair gathered senior ministers for a briefing on the Iraq situation.

Among those they heard from was Sir Richard Dearlove, the head of the UK foreign intelligence agency MI6, who just returned from a Washington visit and who said in the UK-Eyes-Only memo never intended to be heard by the public:

"There was a perceptible shift in attitude, military action was now seen as inevitable. Bush wanted to remove Saddam, through military action, justified by the conjunction of terrorism and WMD. But the intelligence and facts were being fixed around the policy."

"What we have now is not circumstantial evidence, but official and direct documentation by Dearlove, who is like the head of our CIA, saying President Bush fixed the intelligence reports to meet his war policy," said attorney Bonifaz, one of the speakers who met with lawmakers in the Capital Hill basement meeting.

Also speaking at the meeting was Mary Sheehan, who lost her son in Iraq and who subsequently organized the anti-war group called Gold Star Families for Peace.

"If President Bush has nothing to hide, he should be here right now telling us the truth about the war," said Sheehan. "If this war has been predicated on lies, all the families who have lost their sons and daughters deserve to know the truth."

Since the war in Iraq began over two years ago, more than 1,700 American troops have perished and more than 100,000 Iraqi civilians have reportedly died.

Eye Witness Hears Explosions at WTC; Scientific Group SPINE Provides Sophisticated Analysis

Most people admit, 9/11 is the 'mother of all stories.' Now from all corners of the globe, conservatives and liberals are mounting a growing campaign to alert the public that the WTC was leveled by a controlled demolition not burning jet fuel like the government contends.

20 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

William Rodriguez heard a series of explosions rock the lower levels of the WTC minutes before the north tower came crashing down, establishing further evidence the building collapsed from a controlled demolition not burning jet fuel like the government contends.

His eye-witness account adds a "personal and human touch" to the growing number of critics of the official government story, which have included well-known scientists, engineers, professors and even a Labor Department economist from President Bush's first administration.

Rodriguez, a maintenance worker on duty the morning of 9/11 and one of the last to leave the building, is also the lead plaintiff in a federal RICO lawsuit filed against Bush and others, alleging conspiracy to commit murder and other crimes in the WTC deaths of more than 3,000.

The case, filed last November in a Philadelphia federal district court, recently was moved to New York in a change of venue after a government's motion to dismiss was overruled, allowing legal discovery to continue.

Rodriguez's attorney, Phil Berg of Philadelphia, said his client doesn't know all the answers behind the 9/11 government conspiracy, but is prepared to testify he heard strange explosions far below the jetliner's point of impact, indicating a controlled demolition.

Besides the explosions, Rodriguez also has provided testimony to the 9/11 Commission that he accidentally stumbled across one of the supposed 19 Arab hijackers inside the WTC several months before 9/11.

"I had just finished cleaning the bathroom and this guy asks me, 'Excuse me, how many public bathrooms are in this area?'" Rodriguez told the 9/11 Commission. "Coming from the school of the 1993 [Trade Center] bombing, I found it very strange. I didn't forget about it."

Rodriguez, declared a 9/11 hero for leading a number of people to safety before the collapse of the towers, claims he saw United Airlines Flight 175 hijacker Mohand Alshehri in June 2001, telling an FBI agent in the family center at Ground Zero about the incident a month after the attacks.

Rodriguez said he never heard back from the bureau, but assumed agents were following up leads. Apparently never following up, hearings agents told the New York Daily News after the hearings they never heard of Rodriguez but did not discount his story.

"I'm very certain, I'll give it 90%" that Alshehri was casing the towers before the attacks," said Rodriguez.

Rodriguez's claim about hearing explosions just before the north tower collapse adds credibility to a growing amount of scientific research and an ever-increasing public outcry, discrediting the government's claim that jet fuel brought down the towers.

Voices demanding a further investigation have increased dramatically in the past year, seemingly coming from all corners of the scientific, academic and political spectrum. Even a growing number of conservative Republicans and a former Bush administration member have doubted the government story, saying 9/11 appears to be an inside job and the WTC most likely collapsed from a controlled demolition.

But in the face of mounting pressure, the Bush administration has remained steadfast in its official story, which remained the same from the outset, claiming the WTC collapsed from burning jet fuel and the 9/11 attacks were masterminded by 19 Arab terrorists.

Recently, a chief economist in the Labor Department in Bush's first administration, stepped forward claiming evidence points to a controlled demolition as the cause for the WTC collapse, indicating 9/11 was probably an inside job.

Morgan Reynolds, a professor emeritus at Texas A&M University and former Bush team member, said:

"If demolition destroyed three steel skyscrapers at the World Trade Center on 9/11, then the case for an 'inside job' and a government attack on America would be compelling. The government's collapse theory is highly vulnerable on its own terms. Only professional demolition appears to account for the full range of facts associated with the collapse of the three buildings.

"More importantly, momentous political and social consequences would follow if impartial observers concluded that professionals imploded the WTC. Meanwhile, the job of scientists, engineers and impartial researchers everywhere is to get the scientific and engineering analysis of 9/11 right."

Although Reynolds is not an explosives expert or engineer, the scientific community has also weighed in on the controlled demolition theory.

In June 2004, a large group of distinguished scientific thinkers, including scientists, engineers and other professionals, banded together from around the world to investigate the collapse of the WTC, looking at 9/11 from a scientific point of view.

After an exhaustive research project still ongoing, the group called the Scientific Panel Investigating Nine-Eleven (SPINE), provided the following general statement:

"We have found solid scientific grounds on which to question the interpretation put upon the events of September 11, 2001 by the Office of the President of the United States of America and subsequently propagated by the major media of western nations. Our analysis of the detailed evidence implies a staged attack employing a variety of deceptive arrangements. Indeed, every element of the September 11 attacks, including cell phone calls from fast-moving aircraft, has an alternate means of creation."

The panel of scientists then provided a further explanation based on their intensive research:

"We have found it to be a general principle that the closer one looks at the facts of 9/11, the less certain one becomes that the Bush/Cheney interpretation is true. Take for example the collapse of the World Trade Center twin towers. It was claimed by the White House (and subsequently propagated by the major media) that the towers collapsed because the intense heat of the burning jet fuel melted or weakened the steel columns that supported the twin towers. This sounded logical both to reporters and to the average citizen."

Spine then went on to list numerous observations pointed out by researchers, discrediting the government's jet fuel theory, including:

-- Jet fuel is basically kerosene and burns in free air at a temperature around 550 degrees Celsius, the exact temperature depending on the mixing rate with atmospheric oxygen.

-- Inside the trade center towers, the burning fuel quickly depleted the available oxygen and became an oxygen-starved fire, which subsequently burned at a lower temperature, below 400 degrees Celsius, which is typical for building interior fires.

--The temperature of the support columns was initially not greater than 30 degrees celsius. (The outside ambient air temperature was probably less than this.) During the relatively brief time that the building was invested with open fires on the floors affected by the impacting aircraft, it is unlikely that the temperatures of the beams rose more than, say 100 degrees. The steel in the World Trade Center twin towers would have had to reach 750 degrees celsius before a catastrophic collapse could have occurred.

-- When the NY Fire Dept. arrived on the scene, The fire director reported no excessive heat in the vicinity of the floor struck by the incoming aircraft. Fire crews doused the small remaining fires and assisted evacuees. By this time the support columns were probably cooling and not heating.

-- Building Seven, which was not struck by an aircraft, also collapsed. There was no massive diesel fire, as claimed, only a small office fire on one floor, clearly insufficient to cause the building's collapse.

Derrick Grimmer of Ames IA, a physics Ph.D. from Washington University and member of SPINE, wrote an extensive technical paper about the WTC collapse, expressing doubt about the government theory but doing it in a scientific manner. For those who may question the cursory approach taken by those who have criticized the government's story, Grimmer's approach is quite different and highly technical. The following are portions of his exhaustive research paper:

"What immediately struck some observers, this author included, is how much these collapses resembled a controlled demolition. Indeed, this was the first reaction of V. Romero of New Mexico Tech, until he recanted days later.

"The observed near free-fall times of the WTC towers (and WTC7) were a dramatic signature of a controlled demolition...Measured times are all around 10 seconds, which is close to calculated free-fall time, indicating the tower floors fell without much impediment. They essentially fell into air.

"The theory put forth by T. Eagar of MIT and other "establishment" engineers is that while no steel members actually melted or failed, the floor assemblies, bolted at their joists to the outer walls and inner core structures, did fail. The floor joists attachment bolts were weakened and gave way, twisting sideways and allowing the initial floor to "unzipper" itself all the way round and collapse to the floor below. The remaining floors then pan caked all the way down. Never mind that floor joist cross-members, placed to resist twisting, and additional support structures were not included in the MIT/FEMA/NOVA calculations and presentations (nor was the inner core collapse mechanism explained at all).

"Consider the following: if the pan caking effect caused the total building failure, why is it that no video of either of the WTC collapses shows any sign of stutter between floor collapses, which should have been very apparent especially in the first few floors of collapse when the speed of gravitational collapse was small? The implication from the above is that there were major energy sources other than gravitational involved in the WTC towers collapses.

"A discussion of the melted steel found at the base of the WTC complex, not explained by any official, forms the bulk of the remainder of this paper. The following discussion explores the possibility of whether it is possible to get sufficient volume of a relatively slow-reacting chemical compound, like thermite, either on or inside the inner columns to melt a section of them or otherwise weaken them to allow for the inner core to collapse.

"As Mark Loizeaux of Controlled Demolition, Inc., commenting on the pools of molten steel he observed at the bases of the towers' elevator shafts, said: "If I were to bring the towers down, I would put explosives in the basement to get the weight of the building to help collapse the structure. Controlled Demolition, Inc., incidentally was the company contracted to remove the debris from both the WTC and from the 1995 bombing of the Murrah building in OKC.

"Also, in Sam Smith's Progressive Review)] there is an excellent discussion of the collapse of the WTC buildings from the perspective of professional firefighters. Included is an excerpt of an article by Jim Malott, a San Francisco architect, in the Nov/Dec 2001 issue of Designer/ Builder magazine. Malott states regarding a WTC tower collapse: "The outside of the building did not fail, it did not get hot enough...It was the core that failed."

Tribune Columnist Causes Controversy Over Presidential Election Fraud Story
Robert Koehler likes to ask tough questions and tackle issues ignored by the press. When he asked if the 2004 Presidential election was stolen, it created a rift in the Chicago Tribune newsroom, providing an example about the sad state of media affairs existing today.

18 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Some people say Tribune Online columnist Robert Koehler works inside the belly of the beast, working inside a corporate media hungry for money but short on truth telling.

Able to spit out a few morsels of truth every now and again, Koehler describes his unique position a little differently, suggesting it's more like floating on top a gigantic whale's back instead of rumbling around inside it's belly.

Wherever he sits, one of his recent columns, hinting the 2004 Presidential election was stolen, caused the ugly beast to let out a fierce roar, leading to a heated controversy inside the Chicago Tribune newsroom.

"It was a definite body blow," said Koehler this week from his suburban home in Chicago.

To fully understand what Koehler means by a "body blow" and the ensuing controversy surrounding his April 14 column entitled "The Silent Scream of Numbers: The 2004 election was stolen," it's important to understand how Koehler is positioned in respect to the Chicago Tribune, the employer who cuts his paycheck.

Koehler basically wears two different hats. First, he's one of the Tribune Online Service's chief editors, meaning he manages and distributes the work of other columnists under contract by the Tribune, sending their stories to newspapers across the country who pay the Tribune-parent company for this service.

Next, Koehler has developed his own column, separate and apart from his editing duties. Over the years, he's generated about 12 newspaper accounts, including the Chicago Tribune. Each newspaper, however, is not obligated to run his stories, deciding what to print based on content.

"Only a few papers decided to run my stolen election piece and the Tribune wasn't one of them," said Koehler about his story that didn't get much action in the mainstream papers but spread like a wildfire on the Internet. . "I want to point out, however, the politics of the Tribune are different than mine, but that's ok. They are, of course, free to run whatever they'd like and I respect that."

But what Koehler didn't like was the way the Tribune bosses responded to his column even though it never appeared in their paper.

"Basically, they wrote a rebuttal column criticizing my point of view regarding something that never ran in their newspaper in the first place," added Koehler, saying this struck him as a bit strange to say the least. "Frankly, it made me a little angry and I wanted an explanation."

The rebuttal column, which treated Koehler like "Peck's Bad Boy" gone mad with conspiracy theories, ran in the Tribune shortly after the controversial story appeared to be gaining momentum in cyberspace, a place where independent thought still roams free without corporate control and censorship.

After the Tribune's response appeared, Koehler and his bosses engaged in an inner-office squabble, leading to Koehler's decision to write a rebuttal to the rebuttal, a decision Koehler later discarded after being convinced it was better to leave personal inter-office fights out of the newspapers.

"I really wanted to write a rebuttal, but later reconsidered sending it over the wires since I thought our office disputes may be leading the reader away from the real issue of potential election fraud," said Koehler.

To get some measure of intellectual satisfaction, Koehler decided to write a common letter to the editor, expressing his displeasure over the Tribune's reaction, which the Tribune printed without censorship.

After the dust settled and the parties made their peace, Koehler said he learned a valuable lesson about the true colors of the Tribune's editorial policy as well as an overall lesson about the mainstream media's obsession with controlling free speech by silencing diverse and controversial opinions.

"I understand it's the Tribune's call, but basically they made my story sound like a total conspiracy," said Koehler who has vowed to keep following the election fraud issue as well as other stories other mainstream journalists may not touch.

"My company (Tribune Online Services, a branch of the parent company) wants me to follow up on the election story and I am going to continue writing about it. But looking back at what happened, I can't help but think the media is now sacrificing its own relevance by refusing to print and be open to stories like mine.

"It's a modern day Jim Crow situation at heart, but I am a continual optimist. I keep believing this whole sad situation can be turned around some day. All I can say is I am going to keep writing about the controversial issues and stories, like election fraud, that have basically been ignored by the media.

But what also has been ignored by the Tribune and others, who are blaming the messenger while forgetting the message, is the sum and substance of Koehler's election story.

After returning from the National Election Reform Conference, in Nashville, Tenn., Koehler writes in his controversial column that it was "an extraordinary pulling together of disparate voting-rights activists - 30 states were represented, 15 red and 15 blue - sponsored by a Nashville group called Gathering To Save Our Democracy. It had the feel of 1775: citizen patriots taking matters into their own hands to reclaim the republic. This was the level of its urgency.

"Was the election of 2004 stolen? Thus is the question framed by those who don't want to know the answer. Anyone who says yes is immediately a conspiracy nut, and the listener's eyeballs roll. So let's not ask that question."

Instead of falling into the "conspiracy nut" classification by making blank accusations, Koehler then provided facts and details - food for thought - posing serious questions about voter disenfranchisement, electronic voter machine irregularity and ongoing disputes about exit polls not matching the election's final results.

Questions like:

"Let's simply ask why the lines were so long and the voting machines so few in Columbus and Cleveland and inner-city and college precincts across the country, especially in the swing states, causing an estimated one-third of the voters in these precincts to drop out of line without casting a ballot;

"This, mind you, is just for starters. We might also ask why so many Ph.D.-level mathematicians and computer programmers and other numbers-savvy scientists are saying that the numbers don't make sense (see, for instance, www.northnet.org/minstrel, the Web site of Dr. Richard Hayes Phillips, lead statistician in the Moss v. Bush lawsuit challenging the Ohio election results). Indeed, the movement to investigate the 2004 election is led by such people, because the numbers are screaming at them that something is wrong.

"And we might, no, we must, ask - with more seriousness than the media have asked - about those exit polls, which in years past were extraordinarily accurate but last November went haywire, predicting Kerry by roughly the margin by which he ultimately lost to Bush. This swing is out of the realm of random chance, forcing chagrined pollsters to hypothesize a "shy Republican" factor as the explanation; and the media have bought this evidence-free absurdity because it spares them the need to think about the F-word: fraud."

From Koehler's tough questions, it's easy to see why the Tribune bosses felt offended. Koehler struck an embarrassing nerve, reminding mainstream editors about the hypocrisy and folly they are actively pursuing on a daily basis.

Once a nerve like this is struck, it's human nature to strike back and criticize and this is exactly what Tribune editors did.

However, Koehler's questions have a much broader scope of importance besides a newsroom squabble. His hard hitting questions remind everyone the daunting task that lies ahead to restore some semblance of democracy in a government gone wild with power and a people feeling helpless to stop it.

Listen to the opening paragraphs of Koehler's controversial column as a shocking reminder of the task ahead:

" As they slowly hack democracy to death, we're as alone - we citizens - as we've ever been, protected only by the dust-covered clichés of the nation's founding: "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. It's time to blow off the dust and start paying the price.

"The media are not on our side. The politicians are not on our side. It's just us, connecting the dots, fitting the fragments together, crunching the numbers, wanting to know why there were so many irregularities in the last election and why these glitches and dirty tricks and wacko numbers had not just an anti-Kerry but a racist tinge. This is not about partisan politics. It's more like: "Oh no, this can't be true."

Historic Downing Street Meeting Provides Evidence For Bush Impeachment For Violation of War Powers Act

More than 500,000 Americans and 122 Congressmen present Bush with a formal demand to explain if he "doctored" WMD intelligence reports to justify Iraqi invasion. Formal meeting held in small basement room as Republican leadership refuses to give Democrats adequate meeting facilities. House Resolution now being prepared to pave way for formal testimony to see if impeachment proceedings are justified. Democrats say 'they won't go away and the battle has just begun.'

By Greg Szymanski

Huddled like a group of church mice in cramped basement quarters on Capitol Hill, the "Downing Street Patriots," led by Rep. John Conyers (D-MI), literally blew the roof sky high with allegations that may lead to formal impeachment proceedings against President George W. Bush.

Looking like the Founding Fathers trying to topple the tyrannical rule of Britain's King George, the panel of four speakers, led by attorney and constitutional expert, John Bonifaz, all presented compelling evidence that Bush may be guilty of high crimes or misdemeanors under Art. 1, Sec, 8, clause 11 of the war powers clause.

Democratic organizers used the meeting to draft a formal House Resolution, asking for authority to subpoena records and documents, the goal being to determine if President Bush lied to the American people and Congress about the necessity of going to war against Iraq.

"If President Bush has nothing to hide, he should be here right now telling us the truth about the war," said panel member Mary Sheehan, who lost her son in Iraq and who subsequently organized the anti-war group called Gold Star Families for Peace. "If this war has been predicated on lie, all the families who have lost their sons in daughters deserve to know the truth.

Since the war in Iraq began over two years ago more than 1,700 American troops have perished and more then 100,000 Iraqi civilians have reportedly died.

With so many lives lost, Bonifaz, who has started a nationwide truth movement at www.afterdowningstreet.org, is demanding accountability. He contends the Downing Street Memo clearly shows Bush misled Congress and the American people into war by fixing intelligence data to fit his war policy in order to present a case that Iraq presented an imminent threat to U.S. interests.

First reported as a memo from Matthew Rycroft, a British foreign policy advisor, further reporting showed the explosive statements were actually part of minutes of a top-secret meeting in Downing Street on July 23, 2002, when Tony Blair gathered senior ministers for a briefing on the Iraq situation.

Among those they heard from was Sir Richard Dearlove, the head of the UK foreign intelligence agency

MI6, who just returned from a Washington visit and who said in the UK-Eyes-Only memo never intended to be heard by the public:

"There was a perceptible shift in attitude, military action was now seen as inevitable. Bush wanted to remove Saddam, through military action, justified by the conjunction of terrorism and WMD. But the intelligence and facts were being fixed around the policy."

"What we have now is not circumstantial evidence, but official and direct documentation by Dearlove, who is like the head of our CIA, saying President Bush fixed the intelligence reports to meet his war policy," said Bonifaz to the group of about 75 assembled, representing more than 122 Congressmen, Sen. Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) and more than 500,000 Americans who have joined the movement by signing a letter demanding accountability from Bush.

After the 3 hour meeting, the signed letter was then hand-delivered to the White House, asking Bush to immediately respond to the allegations. Originally, on May 4, 2004, only days after the damaging memo first surfaced, Rep. Conyers and 88 other democratic Congressmen presented Bush with the exact same letter, but never received an answer.

"The White House originally sent us a reply that there was no need to respond to such a letter," said Rep. Conyers at the Capitol Hill meeting, further suggesting this was an outrage considering the magnitude of the charges and the authenticity of the evidence, which has not been disputed by the White House.

At the meeting, which was held in the basement since the Republican leadership refused to accommodate the group with suitable meeting facilities, Bonifaz, Sheehan and the other panel members, including a former CIA analyst and a former Iraqi U.S. Ambassador, fielded questions from about 20 Congressmen, many of whom openly suggested Bush's unchecked arrogance and power finally has gone too far.

"What we now have is a monolithic government with no checks and balances," said Rep. Maurice Hinchey.

Other lawmakers chimed in with similar statements, contending the very setting for the meeting, a small, dark and dank basement room, showed the arrogance and lack of concern by the Republican leadership for the true concerns of the American people.

Several lawmakers, including Rep Charles Rangel (D-NY), recalled Watergate and the impeachment of President Nixon. He said the political climate now has deteriorated beyond "a by -partisan search for the truth," which took place during Watergate, but has evolved into a clear "cover-up by one party to protect it's President who may have committed high crimes and misdemeanors."

Other lawmakers made comparisons to the Clinton impeachment proceedings, saying the allegations presented against Bush are far more "damning. " They added Clinton only lied about having sex with a young, female intern while Bush may have committed the ultimate political mortal sin: sending American troops into harms way without a legitimate reason.

"What kind of human being, let alone a sitting President, would do such a thing? It' just incomprehensible," said Rep Maxine Waters.

Although thanking the handful of journalists who attended the meeting broadcast on CSPAN 2, lawmakers also expressed displeasure over the lack of media coverage of the Downing Street memo, referring to a recently released Washington Post article where journalists provided excuses or shallow reasoning for not covering the story.

In the article, Post reporters said the story was left uncovered due to lack of authentication of the memo. However, lawmakers at the meeting suggested this thinking was flawed since even the White House has not disputed the authenticity of Dearlove's memo and the fact the meeting was held with Blair and other high-ranking London officials in Downing Street headquarters.

Since the release of the memo six weeks ago, the media coverage has been abysmal with only a handful of mainstream newspapers carrying the story and only one question is presented to Bush by the White House press corp.

Conyers said he hopes the 500,000 signatures collected "wakes up the press" and that it begins to alert the American people of the gravity and magnitude of the charges and allegations being leveled against Bush, who up until this week's Capitol Hill meeting has arrogantly dismissed the importance of Dearlove's comments.

Further charges against media bias or outright censorship have been made by the web magazine Salon, after it collected data indicating the mainstream press has done everything possible to keep the issue from readers.

Prior to the Downing Street hearing, a Salon Internet poll found less than 20 U.S. newspapers even bothered to cover the story. The web site went on to say that most of the stories centered on the lack of media coverage rather than substance of the memo, which could eventually lead to criminal charges as well as an impeachable offence for a sitting President.

Further, the web magazine, whose contributors include many former mainstream journalists tired of being censored, found that since the memo was first released only 2 of more than 900 questions addressed to White House Press Scott McLellan during 19 briefings referred to the document. In response, McLellan originally claimed to be unaware of the document.

Besides the original Dearlove memo, a handful of other official documents have surfaced adding to its credibility. Two of the secret documents indicated Secretary of State Condaleeza Rice and Britain's Foreign Minister Jack Straw knew intelligence reports lacked the necessary information to justify an Iraqi invasion and were desperately searching months prior to invasion for a strategy to justify war.

At the meeting, panel member Ray McGovern, a 27-year CIA analyst who also prepared regular Presidential briefings during the Reagan administration, provided a detailed timeline of official WMD "scare announcements" presented to the American people by Bush administration. He claimed these announcements seemed to fit perfectly with the timing and statements conveyed by Dearlove to Blair, adding to the credibility of the memo.

"If you look at the timing of all the statements made by the Bush administration and how the WMD threat was orchestrated to the American people, it is more than suspicious," said McGovern, who also commented the state of the American Intelligence community is in shambles and at an all-time low due to undue pressure and politicization by the present administration.

McGovern said in the 27 years he worked in government it was unprecedented for a sitting Vice President to ever visit CIA headquarters or try and influence CIA intelligence gathering, saying even Vice President George H. Bush never made a visit.

However, McGovern said Vice President Dick Cheney has made at least eight trips to CIA headquarters, an unprecedented move, and undoubtedly has tried to influence analysts in releasing information to benefit the administration policies.

"This is not only dangerous, but comprises the ethics of all those working in intelligence," said McGovern, adding the CIA leadership has become inept and nothing but a mouthpiece for the neo con movement.

Others who attended the meeting included panel member Joe Wilson, former Ambassador and WMD expert, who firmly believes President Bush lied to the American people as well as Rev. Lennox Yearwood of Progressive Democrats of America, Stephen Cleghorn of Military Families Speak Out and Kevin Zeese, director of Democracy Rising.

A Sherlock Holmes Type Twist To The 9/11 Murder Mystery

Author steps out like Socrates to do some 'independent thinking' about the 9/11 tragedy while using a Sherlock Holmes 'deductive reasoning strategy' to uncover the 'real culprits.' Called by some anti-Semitic for involving the Israeli Mossad in 9/11, author claims Israeli involvement cannot be overlooked due to their entanglement in the Middle East crisis.

16 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Everybody likes a good murder mystery or tries to play Sherlock Holmes once in their life. Dr. Albert D. Pastore PhD is no different.

Ever since 9/11, Dr. Pastore -- or should we call him Watson -- has been obsessed with leaving no stone unturned in trying to solve the biggest murder mystery in American history. Besides following leads and tracking down obscure facts, Dr. Pastore spent 10 months of exhaustive research before writing his own analysis of 9/11.

In a pure Sherlock Holmes manner, he disbelieves the government official 9/11 story and treats FBI investigations as inferior police maneuvers just like the pipe-smoking London super sleuth viewed Scotland Yard.

Always trying to stay one step ahead of the silver badge, Dr. Pastore started his quest to find the 9/11 killers before the smoke even settled at ground zero. Although his work hasn't led to any arrests or indictments, even Holmes would have had trouble solving this one.

"The architects who designed the WTC designed it to withstand the direct impact and fuel fire of a commercial airline crash," said Dr. Pastore in his book titled Stranger Than Fiction: An Independent Investigation of the True Culprits of September 11. "Aaron Swirsky, one of the main architects, described the collapse as 'incredible and unbelievable.'

"Lee Robertson, the project's structural engineer, said: 'I designed it to be hit by a Boeing 707. The 707 has a fuel capacity comparable to the Boeing 767.'"

The suspicious nature of the targets as well as a total breakdown of U.S. defense systems started Dr. Pastore on his ongoing research and investigation for the perpetrators. Although he researched most every aspect of the 9/11 mystery, he said it's very easy, due to the complexity of the possible conspiracy entanglements, to lose the real purpose of the search, and that is to find the "real killers."

And in a true Sherlock Holmes gesture, Pastore warned the path is filled with many false leads purposely placed by the "real culprits" in order to misdirect and trick those attempting to uncover the truth. Along the way, according to the German philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer, he reminds us that the truth always comes out in three stages.

First, it is ridiculed. Second it is violently opposed. And third it is accepted as self-evident. Dr. Pastore said it is also wise to recall the plight of Socrates when considered the task of uncovering the truth about 9/11.

"The ancient Greek philosopher, Socrates, taught his students that the pursuit of truth can only begin once they start to question and analyze every belief they ever held dear," said Dr. Pastore. "If a certain belief passes the test of evidence, deduction and logic, it should be kept. "If it doesn't, the belief should be discarded.

"The ruling elite have always tried to mislead the thinking of the masses. Socrates was tried for subversion, corrupting the youth and eventually forced to take his own life by drinking poison. As history tells us, it's never easy to be an independent thinker."

Dr. Pastore's independent thinking and research has also made him very unpopular with the present-day ruling elite since his list of 9/11 suspects also involves the Israeli Mossad (Israel's version of the CIA),

He claims the Israeli connection needs to be investigated since it is one of the major players in the Middle East conflict which provides the major backdrop for the WTC tragedy.

Labeled by many as anti-Semitic for researching the Israeli connection in 9/11, Dr. Pastore said the Mossad involvement is vitally important but has been ignored by most other independent investigators due to enormous pressure and heavy-handed politics.

One literary reviewer who looked closely at Dr. Pastore's book published by Carol Adler of Dandelion Books had this to say in comparison to some of the other leading 9/11 truth books.

"In their books, John Kaminski, Gerard Holmgren, and M. Desmoulins write out any Israeli connection, and do not point the finger at the Jewish lobby. This doesn't mean that their analysis isn't of value. But when one finds, for example, that they completely omit to discuss the evidence pointing to the Jewish lobby's long-term push for the war, and a possible Mossad implication in 9/11, one cannot endorse it.

"The New Pearl Harbor, by David Ray Griffin, doesn't even list "Mossad" in the index. Admittedly, other institutions, such as NORAD, were complicit or penetrated. But don't assume there are a large number of conspirators. A few key individuals in decision-making positions would suffice.

"But Dr. Pastore, in his book, writes Mossad back in to the picture. I recommend "Stranger Than Fiction" above all other books on 9/11."

And in his book, Dr. Pastore dedicates a significant portion in putting a Sherlock Holmes deductive reasoning twist to uncovering the real culprits. Besides the possibility of U.S. government foreknowledge or complicity in the events before, during and after 9/11, he limits the two main suspects to either Muslim terrorists seeking to avenge U.S. policies in the Middle East or Zionist terrorists seeking to frame their enemies as a pretext for involving the U.S. in a war against Arab/Muslim states.

"These are the only logical suspects if you look at the facts," said Dr. Pastore. "We know this because Bin Laden first strongly denied any involvement in 9-11 and even suggested that the Zionists were behind it. It is widely believed throughout the Arab and Muslim world (and even much of Europe) that Israeli and U. S. elements staged 9-11 as a pretext for a war against the Islamic world.

"On the other hand, the Zionists and the U.S. scoff at this idea and insist that Muslim terrorists were the culprits."

Taking a page from Holmes, he then tries not be tricked into finding guilty solely by the evidence trail left by 9/11, adding:

"Given that both Group (Muslim terrorists) or Group 2 (Zionist terrorists) would be in serious trouble if it were discovered to be responsible for 9-11. And given the fact that each group blames the other, we would therefore expect the true culprit to attempt to divert the investigation towards the innocent group and away from itself.

"This trick is as old as crime itself. As surely as night follows day, a phony evidence trail would have surfaced following the 9-11 operation."

Dr. Pastore then lays out the evidence trail, leaving the reader to judge which group may be framing the other. He is quick to point out that what he uncovered is not opinion but factual accounts reported by the media or released by the government. His evidence trail, detailed in his book, includes:

1. A few weeks before 9-11, Israeli Mossad officials flew to the U.S. and met with leaders of the FBI and CIA. The Mossad claimed that a major terrorist attack was imminent and that the culprits would be Osama Bin Laden and Iraq's Saddam Hussein. They gave no other details.

2. After the attacks, there were widely publicized reports that the government had a tape recording of Bin Laden calling his mother just a few days before the attacks and telling her: "Something big is about to happen and you won't be hearing from me for a while." This claim was broadcast repeatedly on every news network and convinced many people that Bin Laden was indeed guilty.

Weeks later, CNN corrected itself and revealed that the story turned out to be baseless. Although the story is now universally repudiated by even the mainstream media, far fewer people ever heard the repudiation than did the original claim.

3. Hours after the attacks, investigators received a report of a suspicious car left behind at Boston's Logan Airport by a group of belligerent Arabs. Inside the car, investigators find an Arab language flight manual.

4. Investigators then find a suitcase supposedly "forgotten" by Mohammed Atta, "ringleader" of the suicide hijackers (why would someone pack a suitcase for a suicide mission?) Inside the suitcase they find a Koran, a fuel consumption calculator, a suicide note, and more Arab flight manuals.

5. At the crash site in Pennsylvania, investigators find an incriminating letter written by one of the hijackers. The destruction at the crash site was so complete that the largest piece of human remains found was an 8-inch piece of spine. Yet the letter survived the awesome crash and incineration unscathed.

6. Days after the attacks, a slightly burned passport belonging to one of the "Saudi hijackers" is miraculously found just a few blocks away from the rubble of the World Trade Center.

7. FBI Director Mueller even admitted that identity thefts were used in connection with 9-11. As many as 7 of the 19 "Arab hijackers" are alive and well and some had reported their passports stolen in 1999.

8. Weeks after 9-11, Anthrax letters killed 5 people. The wording of the letters was designed to implicate Muslims. "Death to America. Death to Israel. Allah is great" It has long since been established that the anthrax came from a US army lab and was not mailed by Muslims.

9. The Pentagon claimed to have found a "confession video" from Osama Bin Laden. Why would a man clever enough to pull off 9-11 suddenly become so careless and leave a self-incriminating video laying around Afghanistan. Independent translations of the barely audible video later exposed the US translation as "manipulative and inaccurate." Other analyses of the video raises even more questions of fraud and doctoring.

10. It is then revealed that investigators also found a business card belonging to one of the hijackers at the Pennsylvania crash site. On the back of this miraculous business card is a telephone number linking one of the hijackers to the "20th hijacker" Zaccarias Moussaoui.

11. Also at the Pennsylvania crash site, another miracle passport belonging to "hijacker pilot" Ziad Jarrah was found.

12. The Friday before the attacks, three loud mouthed, drunken "hijackers" (Mohammed Atta and the Al-Shehhi brothers) make a memorable scene at are restaurant in Hollywood, Florida, The London Telegraph reported:

"Mohammed Atta, 33, who almost certainly was the Florida-trained pilot who rammed American Airlines Flight 11 into the north tower of the World Trade Centre, his cousin Marwan al-Shehhi, 23, and an Arab believed to be a brother of al-Shehhi, appeared to have been in a bibulous celebratory mood last week."

However, Tony Amos, the manager of Shuckums Oyster Bar and Restaurant in Hollywood(Florida) just north of Miami, was interviewed by the FBI and he and his barman and a waitress all identified Atta and his cousin as some hard drinkers who propped up the bar last Friday.

Atta's bill for three hours of vodka drinking came to $48. When he drunkenly disputed the charge, Mr Amos intervened. "Of course I can pay the bill,"Atta told him. "I'm an airline pilot."

Devout fundamentalist Muslim "martyrs" drinking vodka for three hours? And notice how "Mohammed Atta" purposely goes out of his way to tell the manager he was "an airline pilot". This is very similar to the way in which he purposely told his flight school instructor he was "leaving for Boston".

13. The night before the attacks, three loud-mouthed "hijackers" (one of them again being the "ringleader" Mohammed Atta) visited a Florida strip club where they again cause a scene and make a deliberate point of telling people about a pending terror attack. They then conveniently "forget" yet another Koran at the bar!

CBS News reported on September 14, 2001:

"The three men spewed anti-American sentiments in a bar and talked of impending bloodshed the night before the terrorist attacks on New York and Washington, a Daytona Beach strip club manager interviewed by the FBI said Thursday."

However, John Kap, manager of the Pink Pony and Red Eyed Jack's Sports Bar said:

"They were talking about what a bad place America is. They said 'Wait 'til tomorrow. America is going to see bloodshed,'".

Kap told FBI investigators the men in his bar spent $200 to $300 apiece on lap dances and drinks, paying with credit cards, adding he gave the FBI credit card receipts, photocopied driver's licenses, a business card left by one man and a copy of the Quran .

14. So who, if not Mohammed Atta and his friends, who could these drunken, womanizing, Koran-toting, "Muslims" in Florida actually have been? A May 7, 2002 story written by Christopher Ketcham of Salon Magazine provides a clue. Ketcham writes about the Israeli "art student" spy ring that was uncovered in 2001. In his article entitle "The Israeli Art Student Mystery", Ketcham writes:

"For almost two years, hundreds of young Israelis falsely claiming to be art students haunted federal offices... No one knows why -- and no one seems to want to find out.

"In HOLLYWOOD, (Florida) several students lived at 4220 Sheridan St., just down the block from the 3389 Sheridan St. apartment where terrorist mastermind Mohammed Atta holed up with three other Sept. 11 plotters. Many of the students, the DEA report noted, had backgrounds in Israeli military intelligence and/or electronics surveillance; one was the son of a two-star Israeli general, and another had served as a bodyguard to the head of the Israeli army."

15. A group of Israeli men were caught photographing the WTC right after 9/11, dancing and celebrating the attack. They later turned out to be connected with Mossad, and quietly deported. Other Mossad agents were also found with explosives in the Mexican Parliament, some with videos of the Sears Towers, some with nuclear U.S. Power plant plans and some posing as art students checking out Defense buildings.

Dr. Pastore's above attention to details provides many small pieces of the ongoing 9/11 mystery puzzle and as Sherlock Holmes would advise: "Every stone needs to be uncovered, My dear Watson, every stone. And, you'll see, under one of them when we least expect it, we will find the real culprit. It's just a matter of time, my dear Watson, just a matter of time."

New Mexico Tech Explosives Expert 'Flip-Flops' On WTC Controlled Demo Theory; Refuses To Explain Why

First, the doctor of physics right after 9/11 said WTC brought down by explosive devices but later abruptly recanted. Federal Lawsuit contends he may have been unduly influenced by government officials with statements only being cleared up through legal discovery methods.

15 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

An explosives expert from New Mexico Tech refused to answer questions this week regarding why he originally claimed the Twin Towers fell from a controlled demolition but then abruptly changed his mind.

Dr. Van D. Romero, a doctor of physics and vice president for Research and Development at New Mexico Tech, first made his expert opinion known in an Albuquerque Journal news article days after 9/11. He later recanted, giving no explanation.

In November 2004, Dr. Romero refused to comment on his "flip-flop," acknowledging through his secretary he had nothing to say about the 9/11 controversy. Again this week he refused to talk about the controversial issue as to whether jet fuel or a controlled demolition brought down the WTC.

Dr. Romero's "flip-flop" and his refusal to discuss why adds more fuel to the burning WTC 'collapse controversy' since recently a well-respected former economist in the first Bush administration brought the issue to light when he went public with a detailed analysis.

Morgan Reynolds, Ph.D, a former chief economist in the Labor Department during Bush's first term and a professor emeritus at Texas A&M, claimed the facts indicate a controlled demolition brought down the towers, not burning jet fuel like the government contends.

"If the official wisdom on the collapses is wrong, as I believe it is, then policy based on such erroneous engineering analysis is not likely to be correct either" said the former Bush team member. "The government's collapse theory is highly vulnerable on its own terms. Only professional demolition appears to account for the full range of facts associated with the collapse of the three buildings.

"More importantly, momentous political and social consequences would follow if impartial observers concluded that professionals imploded the WTC. Meanwhile, the job of scientists, engineers and impartial researchers everywhere is to get the scientific and engineering analysis of 9/11 right."

Dr. Romero was one of the first explosive experts to weigh in on the issue, but no longer appears interested. Government officials have also refused to comment on the highly respected demolition expert's reasoning.

But a lawyer, who filed a federal law suit against Bush for complicity in 9/11, contends he may have been "unduly influenced" to change his mind after officials got "early wind" of his expert statements contrary to the official jet-fuel theory.

Although steadfastly remaining silent when independent thinking is desperately needed to sort out the WTC collapse controversy, Dr. Romero may some day be forced to talk one day, despite his reluctance.

His comments, as well as comments from many other experts on both sides of the issue, are a part of a federal law suit filed October 22, 2004, by Philadelphia attorney Phillip Berg, accusing President Bush and 54 others of complicity or prior knowledge in the events surrounding 911.

The way the Twin Towers fell is one example given in the lawsuit of how the government officials may have lied or manipulated facts in order to hide the truth surrounding 911.

Berg's massive 237 page RICO action, filed on behalf of William Rodriguez, a maintenance worker at the WTC, claims a broad cover-up existed before, after and during 911, involving high ranking government officials complicit in the attacks in order to justify wars in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Berg cites that FEMA never allowed independent investigators a chance to analyze structural components of the WTC, which would have ultimately proven exactly how that the massive steel columns were brought down.

Before evidence could be gathered, the law suit claims FEMA obstructed justice by quickly scrapping the steel and shipping it overseas to China, far away from any independent prying eyes. Berg also wants to use Dr. Romero's statements to get at the truth behind a possible government cover-up.

"Although he would eventually recant his statements that explosives were used, perhaps there was some prodding by government officials, said Berg, eventually hoping deposition testimony will clear up the confusion behind Dr. Romero's conflicting statements.

"He is still on the record saying "the collapse of the towers was too methodical to be a chance result of airplanes colliding with the structures."

From the beginning, the Bush administration claimed that burning jet fuel caused the collapse of the towers. Although many independent investigators have disagreed, they have been hard pressed to disprove the government theory since most of the evidence was removed by FEMA prior to independent investigation.

Mainstream experts, speaking for the administration, offer a theory essentially arguing that an airplane impact weakened each structure and an intense fire thermally weakened structural components, causing buckling failures while allowing the upper floors to pancake onto the floors below.

Despite the numerous holes in the government story documented in the federal lawsuit, the Bush administration has brushed aside or basically ignored any and all critics.

Last month, however, Berg was successful in defeating a government motion to dismiss the case, but said a motion to change venue from Philadelphia to New York was granted.

More Leaked Documents Add Credibility to Downing Street Memo That Bush 'Doctored' WMD Reports

The new documents shed light on Bush's early decision to invade Iraq and force regime change without WMD threat and contrary to international law. More than 150,000 Americans and 89 Congressmen have signed a letter addressed to Bush demanding accountability and answers.

14 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The heat is on the White House to explain the infamous Downing Street Memo as President Bush may be tip-toeing on hot coals with the release of at least six more confidential documents, adding credibility he "doctored" WMD intelligence reports to justify an Iraqi invasion.

A letter signed by over 150,000 Americans and 89 Democratic Congressmen, led by Rep. John Conyers, is demanding answers. But six weeks after the explosive memo hit London newsstands and the underground American press, President Bush and the mainstream media have remained strangely silent regarding the accusations.

"The signatures are pouring in," said a spokesman for Rep. Conyers. "We expect to reach 250,000 soon."

Several other documents, listed as highly confidential, were released by the London press this week in an attempt to bolster credibility on the original memo leaked to The London Times six weeks ago, claiming Bush manufactured a WMD scare to fit his pre-arranged Iraqi war policy

First reported as a memo from Matthew Rycroft, a British foreign policy advisor, further reporting showed the explosive statements were also part of minutes of a top-secret meeting in Downing Street on July 23, 2002, when Tony Blair gathered senior ministers for a briefing on the Iraq situation.

Among those they heard from was Sir Richard Dearlove, the head of the UK foreign intelligence agency MI6, who was identified only as 'C'.

'C' then stated as written by Rycroft in a later memo:

"There was a perceptible shift in attitude, military action was now seen as inevitable. Bush wanted to remove Saddam, through military action, justified by the conjunction of terrorism and WMD. But the intelligence and facts were being fixed around the policy."

Since the beginning, President Bush insisted Iraq's possession of WMD presented an imminent threat justifying war. But now the release of the new documents further puts Bush's claims in serious doubt.

Adding credibility to the Downing Street Memo, a leaked "confidential" document entitled the "The Iraqi Options Paper," prepared in March 2002, quotes British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw as saying:

"The US administration has lost faith in containment and is now considering regime change... A legal justification for invasion would be needed. Subject to Law Officers advice, none currently exists. This makes moving quickly to invade legally very difficult. We should therefore consider a staged approach, establishing international support, building up pressure on Saddam, and developing military plans. There is a lead-time of about 6 months.

"But there is no greater threat now that he will use WMD than there has been in recent years, so continuing containment is an option. The US has lost confidence in containment. Some in government want Saddam removed. The success of Operation Enduring Freedom, distrust of UN sanctions and inspection regimes, and unfinished business from 1991 are all factors."

Straw's comment about the lack of an imminent WMD threat from years past clearly puts Bush's claims for war in doubt, especially when Straw refers to Washington's plans for regime change in Iraq.

Put these words together with the original memo, indicating in July 2002 Bush had already fixed intelligence reports to fit his war policy, and even a stronger case can be made that the Iraqi invasion was manufactured around a false threat..

This is further bolstered by Straw's admission that Iraq was not in violation of mandated WMD security sanctions imposed by the Gulf War cease fire agreement, making the accusation that Iraq was an imminent threat to U.S. interests even more tenuous.

"Currently, offensive military action against Iraq can only be justified if Iraq is held to be in breach of the Gulf War cease fire resolution, 687. 687 imposed obligations on Iraq with regard to the elimination of WMD and monitoring these obligations

"They (United Nations) would need to be convinced that Iraq was in breach of its obligations regarding WMD, and ballistic missiles. Such proof would need to be incontrovertible and of large-scale activity. Current intelligence is insufficiently robust to meet this criterion."

Another memo written by Prime Minister's Tony Blair foreign policy advisor, David Manning, indicates Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice had already made up her mind about regime change in Iraq as early as March of 2002, months prior to the invasion.

Manning's memo, written on March 25, 2002, refers to a dinner engagement with Rice where she purportedly expressed desire for a regime change, but expressed increasing concerns about the political risks. She also told Manning that President Bush was still unsure about how to justify an Iraqi invasion and was searching for answers.

"Condi's enthusiasm for regime change is undimmed. But there were some signs, since we last spoke, of greater awareness of the practical difficulties and political risks," said Manning to Blair about his dinner conversation with Rice

"From what she said, Bush has yet to find the answers to the big questions as to how to persuade international opinion that military action against Iraq is necessary and justified; what value to put on the exiled Iraqi opposition; how to coordinate a US/allied military campaign with internal opposition (assuming there is any);and what happens on the morning after?"

To add even more fuel to the WMD fire, another confidential memo obtained from P.F. Ricketts, a political advisor to Blair, dated March 22, 2002, purportedly advised the Prime Minister how to deal with the impending problems of an Iraqi invasion and how Blair could help influence Bush's final decision.

"First, the (Iraqi) threat:. The truth is that what has changed is not the pace of Saddam Hussein's WMD programs, but our tolerance of them post-11 September. This is not something we need to be defensive about, but attempts to claim otherwise publicly will increase skepticism about our case document. My meeting yesterday showed that there is more work to do to ensure that the figures are accurate and consistent with those of the US.

"But even the best survey of Iraq's WMD programs will not show much advance in recent years on the nuclear, missile or CW/BW fronts: the programs are extremely worrying but have not, as far as we know, been stepped up.

"The U.S. is scrambling to establish a link between Iraq and Al Qaida is so far frankly unconvincing. To get public and Parliamentary support for military operations, we have to be convincing that the threat is so serious/imminent that it is worth sending our troops to die for; and is it qualitatively different from the threat posed by other proliferators who are closer to achieving nuclear capability (including Iran)."

Critics of President Bush's lack of candor about his true motives behind the Iraqi invasion, claim the release of the new documents further illustrate the necessity for the White House to address the accusations beyond merely dismissing them as a "political vendetta."

Further, critics are calling for the media to take a more serious look at information presented by the leaked documents, as well as insisting Bush answer tough questions posed by the allegations.

Former Bush Team Member Says WTC Collapse Likely A Controlled Demolition And 'Inside Job'

Highly recognized former chief economist in Labor Department now doubts official 9/11 story, claiming suspicious facts and evidence cover-up indicate government foul play and possible criminal implications.

12 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A former chief economist in the Labor Department during President Bush's first term now believes the official story about the collapse of the WTC is 'bogus,' saying it is more likely that a controlled demolition destroyed the Twin Towers and adjacent Building No. 7.

"If demolition destroyed three steel skyscrapers at the World Trade Center on 9/11, then the case for an 'inside job' and a government attack on America would be compelling," said Morgan Reynolds, Ph.D, a former member of the Bush team who also served as director of the Criminal Justice Center at the National Center for Policy Analysis headquartered in Dallas, TX.

Reynolds, now a professor emeritus at Texas A&M University, also believes it's 'next to impossible' that 19 Arab Terrorists alone outfoxed the mighty U.S. military, adding the scientific conclusions about the WTC collapse may hold the key to the entire mysterious plot behind 9/11.

"It is hard to exaggerate the importance of a scientific debate over the cause(s) of the collapse of the twin towers and building 7," said Reynolds about his comments that first appeared June 9 on the web. "If the official wisdom on the collapses is wrong, as I believe it is, then policy based on such erroneous engineering analysis is not likely to be correct either. The government's collapse theory is highly vulnerable on its own terms. Only professional demolition appears to account for the full range of facts associated with the collapse of the three buildings.

"More importantly, momentous political and social consequences would follow if impartial observers concluded that professionals imploded the WTC. Meanwhile, the job of scientists, engineers and impartial researchers everywhere is to get the scientific and engineering analysis of 9/11 right."

However, Reynolds said "getting it right in today's security state' remains challenging because he claims explosives and structural experts have been intimidated in their analyses of the collapses of 9/11.

From the beginning, the Bush administration claimed that burning jet fuel caused the collapse of the towers. Although many independent investigators have disagreed, they have been hard pressed to disprove the government theory since most of the evidence was removed by FEMA prior to independent investigation.

Critics claim the Bush administration has tried to cover-up the evidence and the recent 9/11 Commission has failed to address the major evidence contradicting the official version of 9/11.

Some facts demonstrating the flaws in the government jet fuel theory include:

-- Photos showing people walking around in the hole in the North Tower where 10,000 gallons of jet fuel supposedly was burning..

--When the South Tower was hit, most of the North Tower's flames had already vanished, burning for only 16 minutes, making it relatively easy to contain and control without a total collapse.

--The fire did not grow over time, probably because it quickly ran out of fuel and was suffocating, indicating without added explosive devices the fires could have been easily controlled.

--FDNY fire fighters still remain under a tight government gag order to not discuss the explosions they heard, felt and saw. FAA personnel are also under a similar 9/11 gag order.

--Even the flawed 9/11 Commission Report acknowledges that "none of the [fire] chiefs present believed that a total collapse of either tower was possible."

-- Fire had never before caused steel-frame buildings to collapse except for the three buildings on 9/11, nor has fire collapsed any steel high rise since 9/11.

-- The fires, especially in the South Tower and WTC-7, were relatively small.

-- WTC-7 was unharmed by an airplane and had only minor fires on the seventh and twelfth floors of this 47-story steel building yet it collapsed in less than 10 seconds.

-- WTC-5 and WTC-6 had raging fires but did not collapse despite much thinner steel beams.

-- In a PBS documentary, Larry Silverstein, the WTC leaseholder, told the fire department commander on 9/11 about WTC-7 that. "may be the smartest thing to do is pull it," slang for demolish it.

-- It's difficult if not impossible for hydrocarbon fires like those fed by jet fuel (kerosene) to raise the temperature of steel close to melting.

Despite the numerous holes in the government story, the Bush administration has brushed aside or basically ignored any and all critics. Mainstream experts, speaking for the administration, offer a theory essentially arguing that an airplane impact weakened each structure and an intense fire thermally weakened structural components, causing buckling failures while allowing the upper floors to pancake onto the floors below.

One who supports the official account is Thomas Eager, professor of materials engineering and engineering systems at MIT. He argues that the collapse occurred by the extreme heat from the fires, causing the loss of loading-bearing capacity on the structural frame.

Eager points out the steel in the towers could have collapsed only if heated to the point where it "lost 80 percent of its strength," or around 1,300 degrees Fahrenheit. Critics claim his theory is flawed since the fires did not appear to be intense and widespread enough to reach such high temperatures.

Other experts supporting the official story claim the impact of the airplanes, not the heat, weakened the entire structural system of the towers, but critics contend the beams on floors 94-98 did not appear severely weakened, much less the entire structural system.

Further complicating the matter, hard evidence to fully substantiate either theory since evidence is lacking due to FEMA's quick removal of the structural steel before it could be analyzed. Even though the criminal code requires that crime scene evidence be kept for forensic analysis, FEMA had it destroyed or shipped overseas before a serious investigation could take place.

And even more doubt is cast over why FEMA acted so swiftly since coincidentally officials had arrived the day before the 9/11 attacks at New York's Pier 29 to conduct a war game exercise, named "Tripod II."

Besides FEMA's quick removal of the debris, authorities considered the steel quite valuable as New York City officials had every debris truck tracked on GPS and even fired one truck driver who took an unauthorized lunch break.

In a detailed analysis just released supporting the controlled demolition theory, Reynolds presents a compelling case.

"First, no steel-framed skyscraper, even engulfed in flames hour after hour, had ever collapsed before. Suddenly, three stunning collapses occur within a few city blocks on the same day, two allegedly hit by aircraft, the third not," said Reynolds. "These extraordinary collapses after short-duration minor fires made it all the more important to preserve the evidence, mostly steel girders, to study what had happened.

"On fire intensity, consider this benchmark: A 1991 FEMA report on Philadelphia's Meridian Plaza fire said that the fire was so energetic that 'beams and girders sagged and twisted, but despite this extraordinary exposure, the columns continued to support their loads without obvious damage.' Such an intense fire with consequent sagging and twisting steel beams bears no resemblance to what we observed at the WTC."

After considering both sides of the 9/11 debate and after thoroughly sifting through all the available material, Reynolds concludes the government story regarding all four plane crashes on 9/11 remains highly suspect.

"In fact, the government has failed to produce significant wreckage from any of the four alleged airliners that fateful day. The familiar photo of the Flight 93 crash site in Pennsylvania shows no fuselage, engine or anything recognizable as a plane, just a smoking hole in the ground," said Reynolds. "Photographers reportedly were not allowed near the hole. Neither the FBI nor the National Transportation Safety Board have investigated or produced any report on the alleged airliner crashes."

Bush And Media Ignore 'Downing Street Memo;' Millions Want Answers About WMD's And Illegal Iraqi War

Bush continues to deny he 'doctored' intelligence reports to justify Iraqi war while others say he is criminally liable and should be impeached for lying to the American people and killing thousands of innocent people.

10 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Six weeks after the infamous 'Downing Street Memo' hit London news stands, it has taken on a life of its own in cyberspace but mysteriously remains a dead issue in the American mainstream media.

Critics claim the media is again "covering up the misdeeds of the Bush administration," treating the story like a second-rate dog and pony show. And White House officials continue to ignore it, treating the memo like a work of fiction or an ugly political vendetta.

The memo, leaked to the London Times on May 3 and heavily reported by bloggers and in America's underground press, shows President Bush clearly 'doctored' intelligence reports, lied about WMD's in Iraq and could be liable for criminal conspiracy charges if the explosive memo proves credible.

First reported as a memo from Matthew Rycroft, a British foreign policy advisor, further reporting showed the explosive statements were actually part of minutes of a top-secret meeting in Downing Street on July 23, 2002, when Tony Blair gathered senior ministers for a briefing on the Iraq situation.

Among those they heard from was Sir Richard Dearlove, the head of the UK foreign intelligence agency MI6, who was identified only as 'C'.

'C' then stated as written by Rycroft in a later memo:

"There was a perceptible shift in attitude, military action was now seen as inevitable. Bush wanted to remove Saddam, through military action, justified by the conjunction of terrorism and WMD. But the intelligence and facts were being fixed around the policy."

Although the top secret meeting containing damning information for the Bush administration, including specific attack plans already drawn up eight months before the Iraqi invasion, Dearlove's WMD statements were the key element for American readers to judge whether President Bush lied to them about the motives behind the Iraqi invasion.

However, it seems the mainstream press has done everything possible to keep the issue from readers, as a recent internet poll organized by the web magazine Salon, found less than 20 U.S. newspapers even bothered to cover the story. The web site went on to say that most of the stories centered on the lack of media coverage rather than substance of the memo, which could eventually lead to criminal charges as well as an impeachable offence for a sitting President.

Further, the web magazine, whose contributors include many former mainstream journalists tired of being censored, found that since the memo was first released only 2 of more than 900 questions addressed to White House Press Scott McLellan during 19 briefings referred to the document. In response, McLellan claimed to be unaware of the document.

At a recent press conference with Blair and Bush together on the podium, only one question was asked about the memo, both leaders cavalierly dismissing it as false and aired as a political vendetta.

However, the quick dismissal s about Bush and Blair sinister plan to attack Iraq on 'doctored' intelligence reports, has not been so easily dismissed by Democratic Congressman and millions of American web readers who are now gathering momentum to make the Bush administration accountable.

Two days after report of the top secret meeting hit the London streets, 89 U.S. Democratic Representatives headed by Rep. John Conyers wrote a letter to Bush, demanding accountability and asking him to confirm or refute the authenticity of the memo.

Various web sites were quick to pick up on the story, including the Arctic Beacon and The American Free Press alternative paper, as well as filmmaker Michael Moore's influential blog. Technorati.com, which monitors a staggering 11 million web logs daily.

Internet reference statistics also reveal at least 3,300 sites have referenced or at least discussed the memo although most seem to be inconsequential rants about media incompetence.

Included in the mix are two sites dedicated solely to the memo at DowningStreetMemo.com and AfterDowningStreet.org. Also, Rep. Conyer's is inviting signatures to his letter addressed to Bush on his official web site. Thus far, more than 145,000 signatures have been added to the letter addressed to Bush by the Democratic lawmakers.

Besides the demand in the U.S. for accountability on the 'Downing Street Memo, Sen. John Kerry and Sen. Ted Kennedy have chimed in with their support. Consumer advocate and former presidential candidate Ralph Nader has also said Bush should be impeached for lying to the American people about the necessity and imminent nature for war in Iraq.

And the (London) Times Online, who first ran the story on its web pages, said this has been one of the most highly read stories in its online history. The news service reports it is still receiving hundreds of thousands of hits six weeks later even though the mainstream media has denied the Downing Street Memo's existence.

Whistle Blower Charged Criminally By IRS; Claims Charges 'Bogus'

Former IRS criminal investigator to stand trial June 14 in Federal Court. He claims charges were filed in retaliation to his own investigation, finding the IRS is illegally taxing and taking property from unsuspecting citizens.

9 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Joe Banister's life has been torn apart, ripped into shreds by the very government agency he served honorably for more than 10 years.

The former IRS criminal investigator has been criminally charged with tax fraud after blowing the whistle in 1999, alleging the IRS illegally took taxpayer money and property.

And for Banister's efforts to hold the IRS accountable, he has become the target of an all out "government smear campaign."

"The IRS and other agencies have waged an ugly campaign to discredit my name, my whistle blower charges and my livelihood," said Banister from his San Jose Ca. home, where he awaits a jury trial to begin June 14 in the U.S. District Court in Sacramento, Ca. before Federal Judge William Schubb.

Banister claims the upcoming trial is the legal culmination of the IRS's "brutal attempt to keep the sensitive information" he collected from public knowledge. He also believes if the "people knew what I know" it could easily cause a loss of billions in federal revenue as well as an "all out taxpayer rebellion," making the Boston Tea Party look like child's play.

Banister said IRS officials first tried to silence him internally, but after he resigned under "extreme pressure," the Department reverted to harassment and finally criminal prosecution.

"Not satisfied with locking me out of IRS buildings and destroying my professional credibility, the IRS wielded yet another weapon from its arsenal and initiated a grand jury investigation seeking to indict me for assisting a client with a dispute with the IRS over a refund the client believed was owed and a dispute over withholding requirements," said Banister.

"The grand jury investigation began in 2001 and lasted until November, 2004, ending in an indictment against me for preparing false income tax returns and conspiring to defraud the United States. The IRS and their enforcers in the U.S. Department of Justice have apparently decided that the only suitable response to silence a whistleblower once and for all is with a criminal prosecution."

Banister claims the IRS is accusing him of "bogus illegal conduct" for coming to the aid of a client who asserted his due process rights against the IRS and who honestly and sincerely disputed what he thought the law required.

Unfortunately, he said, it appears "that expecting and pursuing one's First Amendment rights and one's due process rights has become grounds for criminal prosecution if the Internal Revenue Service is involved."

As the former investigator pondered his fate in the upcoming trial and looked back over years of government service, including work as a CPA, he added:

"I earned a reputation for being a very diligent and competent investigator, even garnering complimentary letters from the prosecutors I worked with. I expected to spend the rest of my professional career as an agent for the U.S. Treasury.

"But my career was cut short when I encountered, investigated, and confronted IRS management, finding evidence that the agency was illegally administering the federal income tax system and thereby violating the rights of ordinary Americans. This has all led up to what has been trumped up criminal charges to silence my allegations of IRS impropriety."

The specific IRS improprieties alleged by Banister cover a two year period from early 1997 until the early 1999, when he conducted a thorough off-duty investigation at his own expense into claims made by various researchers and activists that the IRS was administering and enforcing the federal income tax beyond what was authorized by law.

He claimed that once his evidence became public knowledge it would clearly demonstrate that most Americans were not liable to pay federal income tax, but were actually deceived and intimidated into paying it.

"Such claims seem to be preposterous and unbelievable and I initially thought so too," recalls Banister. "My expectation was that the falsity of such claims would be manifested quickly because false claims rarely withstand close scrutiny."

Once Banister collected enough evidence, he presented the documentation to his supervisor in the IRS San Jose office. But immediately he was met with a wall of resistance, the likes of which he never expected.

"I think I struck a nerve," he added.

After he presented his detailed information of IRS violations, the Chief of the San Jose IRS Criminal Investigation Division responded with a memorandum, encouraging Banister to resign. Immediately, he was placed on administrative leave, his duty firearm taken and sent home for 7 days to decide whether he wanted to continue working for IRS.

Banister decided to resign from the agency on February 25, 1999, presenting his letter of resignation to IRS Commission Charles Rossotti. Since resigning, he has taken his fight to the people, appearing on numerous radio and television shows. He has also traveled to Washington D.C. to alert lawmakers, testifying before the Senate Finance Committee.

"Although the IRS, the U.S. Department of Justice, the House of Representatives, the U.S. Senate, President Clinton's administration, and President Bush's administration were all well aware of my whistle-blowing efforts, none of the officials from those agencies or administrations has stepped forward to address the problem. But these same officials were apparently closely monitoring my activities nonetheless," said Banister, adding he and his family have sacrificed a great deal to bring the truth to the American people.

"Americans certainly have a right to honesty in taxation and I have encountered and accumulated enough evidence to prove to my satisfaction that the IRS has been dishonestly administering and enforcing the federal income tax system beyond what the law authorizes for a very long time. The public deserves to have the IRS adhere to at least the same standard of honesty and obedience to the law that that the IRS expects from the public."

Asked what has sustained him through the criminal allegations and what motivated him to take on the IRS in the first place, he said it was his deep devotion to God and Country and the help from "other like minded patriots" who also believed in his cause.

An organization called The Save-A-Patriot-Fellowship based in Maryland, a group who recently won its own IRS battle, has come to Banister's rescue, helping him raise money for his defense fund as well as publicize his fight.

"I am not now nor have I ever been "anti-government" or "anti-tax". In fact, government service has been an integral part of my family life with many of my close family members serving as public servants and police officers," said Banister. "I have spent thousands of hours trying to expose, and put a stop to, IRS abuse, putting myself at great personal and professional risk, and my wife and children have endured significant uncertainty and hardship."

Hussein's Lawyers Cry Foul: Claim 'Kangaroo Court' Is U.S. Idea Of Justice
Trial only weeks away, but defense attorneys say no charges have been filed, they have not been allowed to see their client and all international rules of criminal justice have been violated.

7 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

With the trial of Saddam Hussein only weeks away, his defense attorneys are "crying foul," saying the former Iraqi dictator has been illegally interrogated, deprived of adequate legal representation and denied basic rights normally given prisoners under international law.

The Iraqi Special Tribunal this week announced final preparations to put Hussein on trial are underway, but defense attorneys claim they have been prevented from "adequately representing him and that statements to the contrary made by the Iraqi and United States governments are deceptive and irresponsible."

One of Hussein's lead attorneys, Curtis Doebbler, an American citizen and well-known international human rights advocate, said the defense team has not even been allowed to visit Hussein and that formal charges have never even been filed.

"I recently went to Baghdad to try and file some legal papers and there isn't even a courthouse or a clerk to accept the papers," said Doebbler. "We have never been served any official papers on the charges pending against Mr. Hussein so how can we even begin to mount a defense with a trial supposedly only weeks away? It's ridiculous and a clear violation of accepted practices of international law."

Although defense attorneys have never been allowed to see Hussein, the 20-lawyer defense team including former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, has been selected and hired by Hussein's immediate family members.

Defense attorneys claim the only information regarding their client's health, well-being and ability to stand trial have come from several letters sent to them by Hussein wife.

Clark said three second-hand letters in the span of more than 18 months of detention does not begin to meet standards of justice and fair play normally accorded a defendant ready to stand trial for his life.

Clark drew attention to numerous violation of international criminal law, saying repeated interrogations have taken place without a lawyer of choice present, no evidence or charges have been presented and Hussein's due process rights have been irreparably violated.

"Irresponsible statements by Iraqi Interim Government officials demonstrate," said Clark, "that continued interrogations or a trial under these circumstances will be a serious violation of the standards of security of person and fair trial that are shared by almost every country in the world."

Regarding the upcoming trial, Doebbler chimed in where Clark left off, adding:

"When considering a defendant's right to an impartial and fair trial, nothing could be farther from the truth regarding Hussein

"Whatever is coming out of Baghdad, just isn't true. When I hear the press reports about his upcoming trial, it is a nothing but a legal joke. It is absurd to even begin to call what is going on in Baghdad a legal proceeding. We have been left completely in the dark and basically have learned about our client's case through what is reported in the press, which is the U.S. government's side of the story."

And the government's side of the story has been assisted by a whopping $75 million set aside to prosecute Hussein while the defense has been hard pressed to raise more than $100,000.

"One of the basic principles of law is that prosecution and defense operate with relative equality," said Doebbler. "As you can see from the financial unbalance in the case, this equality is impossible here."

Critics claim there are many reasons why the American government wants the former dictator out of the picture quickly. One reason, they say, is a long and drawn out defense might expose the sordid details of how America actually backed Hussein in the war against Iran and the other atrocities committed against his own people.

International legal observers also contend the Bush administration handling of Hussein is extremely unusual since attorneys in a typical international law case, or any case for that matter, are always given the right to privately communicate with their clients.

They add that normally charges are filed, the accused is given the right to mount an impartial defense and there is an established legal procedure as well as an international administrative organization set up to hear the case.

Critics point out that all the above standards of justice have been abandoned by the Bush administration in the Hussein case.

Justice Department Labels 'One Of Its Own' Common Criminal For Having Legal Ethics And Upholding Constitution

All Jess Radack wanted to do was make sure John Walker Lindh, the so-called American-Taliban, was interrogated with counsel present. For this, she was sent packing from DOJ, criminally investigated, placed on a 'no fly list' and labeled a common criminal by the oppressive Bush administration.

5 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Jess Radack left Yale Law School with high hopes of making a difference, defending justice and upholding the Constitution. She was a woman on the legal fast track, destined for greatness, destined to attract the big shots in Washington D.C.

And Radack did just that in 1995 when she landed a cushy job in the Department of Justice (DOJ), entering on the honors program and tagged as one of the "best and brightest" young legal stars in the department.

For six years, she worked hard and played by the rules. For six years, she buckled down to business, as the rising star in 2001 landed a position in the newly formed Professional Responsibility Department of the criminal division as an ethics advisor.

Everyone knows trying to advise lawyers what is right from wrong is a touchy subject. But Radack's job presented more than just a touchy subject, it was downright tough as nails.

It was tough because DOJ criminal lawyers aren't the most easy going, happy-go-lucky people to be around. It was tough because what is considered right or wrong in DOJ often is determined by partisan politics not ethics.

In fact, Radack's job was so tough - so filled with legal landmines - it could be compared to trying to convince a group of sharks to release its prey during a feeding frenzy.

However, despite the difficulties, despite the many conflicts of interest, she persevered. She persevered, clinging to her idealistic hopes that in the end justice would prevail and the Constitution would be upheld.

But then came September 11th, the day in American history that abruptly changed everything. And like so many others who saw their lives torn apart, Radack's tidy and cushy legal world came crashing down just as fast as the Twin Towers. It crashed so fast it was as if a lightning bolt struck her legal star, shattering it into a million pieces right before her very eyes.

Radack's legal demise didn't come from the actual WTC attacks, but it came in the form of a legal file thrown her way two months later with the name John Walker-Lindh written on the cover.

Lindh, the 20-year-old American-Taliban, had been taken into custody by U.S. forces in Afghanistan and Radack was asked to give her ethical opinion on whether he could be interrogated without having an attorney present.

Radack immediately advised John De Pue, a counter terrorism prosecutor, that since Lindh's father had hired attorney James Brosnahan of Morrison & Foerster in San Francisco, she didn't think it appropriate the FBI question Lindh without counsel.

However, others at Justice including recently appointed Homeland Security Chief, Michael Chertoff, disagreed. Subsequently, Lindh's statements, taken without counsel present, became the basis of a 10-count indictment and a 20-year plea bargained prison sentence, a lopsided agreement where Lindh also signed away his rights to any future appeal on his conviction.

Working at DOJ at the time, Chertoff denied ever knowing about Radack's ethical advice. He said at his 2003 confirmation hearings for an appellate judgeship that he and his deputies in the criminal division did not have an active role in the discussions about ethics warnings from lawyers elsewhere in the Department

But Radack tells a different story. She claims Chertoff not only knew about her advisory opinions, but was involved in a cover-up preventing her opinions from ever being presented to the criminal court. She claims by doing this, Chertoff and others in the Department, were not only in caught in an ethical dilemma, but also in direct violation of a mandatory federal discovery order.

"I told them point blank not to interrogate him without counsel and that's when all my troubles started," said Radack, recalling the case that dramatically changed her life. "I was trying to do the right thing, trying to make sure his rights were not violated and trying to make sure officials didn't overstep their bounds.

"Under the ethics rules governing contact with a represented person, I had, as has been reflected in the public record, advised that he should not be interviewed without his counsel, and that it would be a pre-indictment custodial interview which was not authorized by law. That email was circulated on a Friday.

"And then the counter-terrorism prosecutor called me back on Monday saying that the FBI had interviewed him anyway. I then advised that the interview might have to be sealed, and only used for intelligence gathering purposes -- not for criminal prosecution, which, of course, is how it ended up.

"That, however, was not my complaint. I mean, the FBI was free to disregard my advice at its own peril. My main concern was that later I was given a job performance evaluation that was baseless and basically told to find another job in February of 2002."

After being told to leave, Radack then discovered all her inter-office emails had been strangely purged from the system in what she determined was an attempt to protect Chertoff and cover-up any DOJ improprieties.

She later learned that her emails were ever given to the criminal court and defense attorneys never given the opportunity to use this as legal ammunition to discredit the manner in which Lindh was interrogated.

"When I learned my emails were taken and that a cover-up was going on, I had to leave," said Radack. " Luckily, I resurrected the missing email from my computer archives with the help of technical support and gave them to my boss.

"I knew I had to leave DOJ when I heard public statements being made by the Attorney General John Ashcroft himself, about the fact that the department believed -- never believed, that Lindh was represented by counsel. Now, I knew for a fact that wasn't true because it was contradicted by the advice I gave.

"And that led me to reasonably conclude, which has been verified by investigative journalist Jane Meyer in a New Yorker piece, that my emails had not reached the court under a direct violation of a federal discovery order.

"Why Chertoff denied this during his judicial confirmation hearing, denied the Professional Responsibility Advisory office had never been consulted is beyond me. I don't feel it's my place to accuse him of perjury, but I think the public record of his testimony speaks loud and clear."

After being pushed out of DOJ, Radack landed a job at the D.C. branch of the New York firm of Hawkins, Delafield & Wood. With the Lindh matter in her past, little did she realize that her troubles were only just beginning.

Feeling abused and forced out of what she thought would be a lifetime career, she attempted to protect her legal reputation by giving her controversial emails to Newsweek reporter Michael Isikoff. After the story appeared, she was immediately contacted by Ronald Powell, a special agent for the Justice Department's Office of Inspector General.

Powel refused comment, but according to Radack, he asked probing and antagonistic questions about her contacts with Isikoff, trying to pin her down on the specifics of her contacts with the reporter. In order to protect herself, Radack then hired Frederick Robinson, a partner in the Washington office of Fulbright & Jaworski.

"That's when Powell really put on the squeeze," she said. "In mid-August, 2002, about four weeks after the Lindh case settled in a plea agreement, Powell called my offices and began questioning staff and lawyers, saying I was under criminal investigation. He wanted the firm to turn over my phone, fax and e-mail records.

"When I was initially forced out of my job, basically blackmailed with an unsigned, untimely, unprecedented performance evaluation, at that point, I didn't have trouble finding another job. I took the job with Hawkins, Delafield and Wood, worked there for about seven months but now they were trying to get me blackballed there.

"During this time, the Justice Department told my new firm that I was under criminal investigation, and that they had just hired a criminal. The government was leaning very heavily on the law firm to fire me and they finally placed me on an unpaid indeterminate leave of absence.

"Thereafter, there was a criminal investigation. It was never specified what I would be charged with, but a criminal investigation for about the next ten months made it very difficult to find a job. Finally, when the criminal investigation concluded, ironically on September 11 of 2003, with no charges being brought against me, the Justice Department, immediately referred me to the State Bars in which I'm licensed as an attorney."

Two years later, Radack is still fighting to retain her good name and reputation with the D.C Bar Association while recently being exonerated of any wrongdoing in Maryland.

Suffering from the affects of MS and also the mother of a small child, Radack is making ends meet by writing articles and doing part time legal research for an online web site called Find Law.

In attempt to fight back and pay for over $50,000 in legal fees, she also has started a legal defense fund and civil rights group called "The Coalition for Civil Rights and Democratic Liberties (CRADL)" at www.cradl.info. The idea for the group is to alert Americans about the oppressive policies of the Bush administration as well as asking for signatures from people who, like her, fear losing their civil liberties.

"The double whammy of legal bills and the hardship of not being able to work has made it difficult," said Radack. "It has been on all out attack by government agents, who still to this day are making my life a living hell. Besides being pushed out of two jobs, I am still on a 'no fly list' despite my repeated complaints to the ACLU and other civil rights organizations."

Recently in an open letter written to President Bush, she had this to say about the oppressive climate existing in America today:

"In responding to terrorism, we must adhere to the principles of political freedom, free association, due process and privacy that constitute the core of a free and democratic society.

"The Coalition for Civil Rights and Democratic Liberties (cradl) was formed to register the discontent of ordinary Americans with the infringement of their civil rights and liberties in the name of fighting terrorism...

"Indefinite detention, imprisonment without charge, secret deportation proceedings, ethnic profiling, surreptitious black bag searches and wiretaps, military tribunals, and citizens denied counsel and judicial review . . . these things sound a lot like the hallmarks of the rogue nations and backward regimes we are trying to defeat. In responding to terrorism, we must not trample upon the very freedoms for which we are fighting."

'Christians Against Bush' Say Our President Is The 'Force Of Evil' That Needs To Be Stopped

Sometimes 'little people' do big things; It seems Californian John Conner, just an 'Average Joe,' is taking on the world powers in his new book called 'The Resistance Manifesto.'

4 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

President Bush prides himself on being a Christian, often saying he has been called upon by God to stop the "forces of evil" dead in their tracks.

Californian John Conner, not a President but just an "Average Joe," also prides himself on being a Christian, but says the "forces of evil" he wants to stop are President Bush and his neo-con band of warriors.

To stop evil, Bush has decided to go to war, killing thousands of innocent people in the process. Conner, on the other hand, has formed a group called "Christians Against Bush," a peaceful organization made up of thousands of Christians who feel war is not the answer.

Conner got the idea to try and stop Bush's war movement "dead in its tracks" two years ago after losing his job as a mattress salesman and feeling disillusioned with the direction America was headed under the neo-con leadership.

Sometimes it's the so-called "little people" who do "big things" and Conner appears to be doing just that.

Just as Bush felt a calling from God, Conner said he felt the same thing, but his calling told him to "gather up the Christians of the world to stop the needless killing of innocent people in the name of God."

"It's something the President doesn't like to mention," said Conner. "But in the process of his so-called religious reawakening, more than 1,600 American troops have been killed as well as an estimated 200,000 innocent Afghani and Iraqi citizens, many being women and children.

"I think there are millions of Americans who feel that we have been deceived by a President who has lied to us about most everything."

Recent figures indicate more than 50 million people Americans oppose the war and polls last week saw Bush's job approval rating dip to 46%. Besides the low approval numbers, a recent Zogby Poll found 50% of New Yorkers believe the government was complicit in bringing about 9/11 in order to justify the Iraqi invasion.

And as the President's war mongering is losing appeal with the American people, it has been average citizens like Conner who have been bannng together to voice concern over the needless killing.

Conner's idea, or as he says "his calling," started on a small web site and has now grown to thousands of Christian supporters across the country who he claims are "simply fed up with Bush's fascist attitude and failure to admit that he is wrong."

"I just woke up one day and felt the calling to do something to stop these madmen from destroying our country," added Conner. "The supporters come from all walks of life and inspire me on a daily basis to keep fighting to end the needless killing in the name of God."

Spending countless hours researching and claiming to feel the hand of God guiding his pen, he has written a book called "The Resistance Manifesto" as a guide to lead the Christian masses against Bush's neo-con movement to take over the country.

Conner said the book is due out this summer and provides a detailed "Christian message" on how to overcome the evil within the White House and the evil of the New World Order. He added that both groups, working together, seek to destroy the American way of life as they attempt to dominate the world under one oppressive and centralized leadership.

And who is to say that Conner is acting with anything but good intentions since it appears history and even Seymour M. Hersh, one of America's top investigative journalist's, seem to agree with his thinking.

As religious scholars would attest, history has shown that more people have been slaughtered and killed in the name of God than for any other single reason and Bush appears to be proving this unfortunate fact to be true.

And as for Hersh, he has shown us the "dark side" of the neo-con movement with story after bloody story, claiming Bush cares little about how many body bags return from Iraq since he is convinced to a point of obsession that he is doing the right thing.

Even Hersh admits Bush is under some kind of strange neo-conservative spell, spinning the world in a dangerous direction of continual death and destruction to satisfy a flawed imperialistic agenda.

"Essentially, the New World Order has been gaining strength, manufacturing terrorist attacks, destroying America, and implementing oppressive tactics that must be stopped before it's too late," said Conner. "Everyone, no matter how big or small, must do their part in order to save our country."

"The signs are all there. The phony war on terror and the illegal war in Iraq have been used to instill a sense of fear in the American people, and are being used to create a police state, circumventing the constitution while using Nazi-like security methods to keep track of every person."

"Christians across the globe are now galvanizing to resist. The Resistance Manifesto I am writing is a small part of this worldwide resistance. It basically outlines our goals, but is also an in depth examination of the New World Order, including a look at the people, institutions, and powers involved."

Conner said his book is being published with the help of a worldwide network of Christians, who believe in peace not war. He said the group is also attempting to expose the corruption existing in the American government, starting with the staged terrorist attacks at Oklahoma City, 9/11 and continuing with the illegal invasion of Iraq.

Speculation Exists Lawmakers Getting Ready To Bring Back The Draft Due To Low Army Recruiting Numbers

A House Bill to bring back the draft is now before the Armed Services Committee; Lawmakers reluctant to act due to unpopularity and until White House decides whether it's needed.

3 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A House Bill to reinstate the draft finally made its way to the Armed Services Committee last week where a vote is expected only when President Bush decides whether he is for or against conscription.

Bush has failed to make clear how he plans to restock the Army in light of dwindling recruiting numbers and consequently, Congress is reluctant to make a decision due the draft's unpopularity among voters.

A White House spokesman this week said Bush has "always firmly opposed the draft," but would again have to reassess the issue in light of the Army's failed recruiting efforts, made known in recent figures released.

Emile Milne, a spokesman for Rep. Charles Rangel (D-NY) who sponsored the controversial draft bill, said this is the type of bill "no one likes to touch" without a consensus of all branches of government.

"The draft is especially unpopular now because of the mounting death toll in Iraq," said Milne. "Rep. Rangel is, of course, opposed to the war, but believes if we are going to have to fight it, then the military should have enough soldiers to do the job properly."

Rep. Rangel, originally in favor of the draft in order that "rich and poor equally share the burden of the war," now feels the draft may also become a necessity due to the Army's difficulty in meeting recruiting numbers.

Since the war has become less popular with the American people and the death toll in Iraq has risen to over 1,600, the Army is now reporting recruiting levels down as much as 50% of its projected needs.

The issue of "enough boots on the ground" is further complicated by the added strain put on the National Guard troops, many having to serve two or three tours of duty in Iraq.

"There is no doubt that the military is undermanned," said Milne. "Rep. Rangel feels if the war is going to continue, the only way to solve the problem is to bring back the draft."

Although Rep. Rangel's bill mounted very little support when it was first introduced last session during an election year, critics claim now that the election is over and the military is crying for more warm bodies that a reinstatement of the draft is "inevitable and only a matter of time."

"No one likes to hear it, but if things keep going the way they are with less recruits and re-enlistment numbers down, the draft may be the only way to solve the problem," said Milne.

Whether the draft becomes a reality is still in political limbo, however, no one would argue that President Bush's aggressive foreign military policy dictates the need more troops.

In a recent Los Angeles Times article, former security advisors Brent Scowcroft and Zbigniew Brzezinski were quoted as saying the U.S. requires at least 500,000 more troops to sustain the war in Iraq and reinstatement of the draft may be unpopular but necessary.

"At best, Rangel's bill merely plays into Bush's hands," said Bill Galvin, head of an anti war group called The Center of Conscience and War. "At worst, it's a stealth measure intended to supply progressive political cover for pro-draft democrats."

Galvin said he also fears President Bush is just waiting for the right moment "to spring the draft back on the American people" since he no longer has to worry about getting re-elected.

NY Attorney General Ignores Citizens' 9/11 Criminal Petition

Eight months after outraged NY citizens demanded a criminal probe into Bush's 9/11 ties, virtually nothing has been done; Citizens now may have to convene their own grand jury in order to get the wheels of justice turning.

2 Jun 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Eight months after outraged citizens handed a petition to New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer to probe criminal charges against the Bush administration's complicity in 9/11, there has been little effort made to get to the bottom of the citizens' complaint.

A spokesman from Spitzer's office said the petition presented Oct. 28, 2004, is still under investigation. However, those close to the investigation said Spitzer has no intention to actively investigate corruption in the Bush administration since it may disrupt his plans to run for Governor in 2006.

"I've been told that the petition is just sitting on his desk and nothing has been done for eight months," said one of the 9/11 activists who signed the petition.

The 27-page complaint and petition, seeking an independent grand jury probe, presents a compelling case that the official government 9/11 story lacks credibility and is seriously flawed.

Those who signed the petition, including many victims and first responders to the WTC attacks, were hoping Spitzer would present their independent findings to the grand jury since previous government investigations have been unsatisfactory.

To further complicate matters, petition supporters also claim the recent 9/11 Commission investigation failed to even address the possibility of government foreknowledge or complicity in 9/11.

They added that since Spitzer now appears to also be ignoring them, it may be necessary to form and organize independent citizen grand juries in order to get at the truth.

Although specific allegations are cited, the petition claims the terrorist attacks were an inside job and that government officials should be investigated for a series of crimes, including murder, enterprise corruption and obstruction of justice.

Supporters cite a massive conspiracy and government cover-up aided by the Bush administration, who they say has attempted to block efforts to uncover the truth about 9/11 from the very beginning.

A recent Zogby Poll regarding 9/11 seems to also back up the need to further investigate the events before, during and after 9/11. The poll, mentioned in the petition, reported that 66% of New Yorkers wanted the 9/11 Commission investigation reopened.

Furthermore, it found that 49% of those polled believed high-ranking government officials knew about the impending attacks and stood by without doing anything to stop them.

Since day one, after the official 9/11 story aired, speculation mounted as to its credibility, critics citing numerous common sense errors and blatant inconsistencies.

Suspecting a cover-up, independent investigators began attacking the official story, first on web sites such as www.911truth.org and several others. These web sites continued to multiply with cyber space critics emerging daily, despite a mainstream media that to this day still ignores their claims as it continues to essentially echo the official story without mounting any type of credible journalistic investigation.

More recently, though, the attacks on the government story have become organized, surfacing not from the media but from federal lawsuits, numerous conspiracy theory books and grass roots civic campaigns to raise public awareness.

After three years, critics have compiled a virtual library of information, including specific facts about government complicity with terrorists, detailed timelines citing an ordered stand down of defense systems on the morning of 911, meticulous data on the explosions and structural demise of the WTC, Pentagon and Flight 93 as well as a thorough analysis of the FBI and FEMA's efforts to quickly eliminate evidence.

The five original signatories of the petition handed to Spitzer, which now has grown to thousands of names, include Dr. Faiz Khan, a first responder to 911; Robert McIlvaine Sr., father of Robert McIlvaine, Jr., who lost his son at Ground Zero; Jenny Orkin, chairwomen of the World Trade Center Environmental Organization; Megan Bartlett, 911 EMT and founder of Ground Zero for Peace; and Santa Barbara businessman, Jimmy Walter.

Neo-Con Web Site Claims Iran 'Imminent Threat' With Nukes Ready To Fire; Others Say Reports 'Fudged' Giving Bush Reason To Invade
Peace activists say Bush is again concocting imminent threat strategy to falsely justify June invasion of Iran

28 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

As Yogi Berra would say "it's déjà vu all over again," the only difference being this time President Bush has his itchy trigger finger pointed toward Iran instead of Iraq.

Remember the faulty intelligence reports and media stories circulated before the Iraqi invasion, describing how Saddam Hussein was an imminent threat and possessed WMD armed and ready to fire. Remember how these reports proved false and how it's now pretty much a forgone conclusion that Bush "doctored" these reports to illegally invade Iraq.

Bush basically sold America a used car with a blown engine and now he is trying to do the same thing all over again. The only question remaining is will America allow this "two bit war provocateur," posing as a peace-loving, born-again Christian President, the opportunity to sell them another "doctored-up" used car.

And just like before the Iraqi invasion, the first story appeared this week from a neo-con based web site and newsletter called Geostrategy Direct, trying to lay the ground work for Bush's "imminent threat" strategy to be used now toward Iran.

The story said CIA intelligence reports uncovered that North Korea recently sold nuclear components to Iran, making it now an "imminent threat" with nuclear warheads already assembled and ready to fire.

Previous reports all have indicated Iran was two or three years away from nuclear capability, as talks were underway with European countries to provide some kind of peaceful resolution.

However, now comes the "imminent threat" intelligence reports, the story claiming the CIA believes Iran could immediately assemble several nuclear warheads for the Shihab-3 arsenal.

"This means that U.S. forces in Iraq and southern Europe are under immediate Iranian threat," Geostrategy says. "Israel and Saudi Arabia are already under Iranian nuclear threat."

"U.S. intelligence officials say Tehran already has completed all of the elements required for an atomic bomb. It's an incredible piece of intelligence that overshadows everything we thought we knew on Iran's nuclear program."

"The intelligence information asserts North Korea this year transferred components to Iran to assemble a plutonium-based nuclear warhead. The components were believed to have originated in Pakistan."

The story went on to say that Bush was "stunned" by the news, but probably should have substituted the word "delighted," seeing that as far back as February, reports indicated that our peace-loving President already "signed off" on a military proposal to bomb Iran in June 2005.

Of course, the Geostrategy report conveniently left this trivial fact out, failing to mention that former Iraqi weapons inspector Scott Ritter made this incredible announcement on 2/19/05 to a crowd assembled at Washington State University.

Ritter warned Americans that he had credible information that Bush already had decided to bomb Iran and the only thing needed was a "way to sell it to the people like he did in Iraq."

Ritter said Bush's goal is the destruction of Iran's alleged program to develop nuclear weapons, but added neo-conservatives in the administration also expected that the attack would set in motion a chain of events leading to regime change in the oil-rich nation of 70 million.

"Although the peace movement failed to stop the war in Iraq, it now has a chance to stop the expansion of the war to other nations like Iran and Syria," said Ritter. "I hope it doesn't come true, but if Bush has his way, the Iraq war might be remembered as a relatively minor event that preceded an even greater conflagration. "

Besides Ritter's ominous warning, New Yorker columnist Seymour Hersh also reported on 1/17/05 in an article entitled "The Coming Wars" that the Bush administration's next strategic target is Iran.

According to Hersh , "The Administration has been conducting secret reconnaissance missions inside Iran at least since last summer. Defense Department civilians, under the leadership of Douglas Feith, have been working with Israeli planners and consultants to develop and refine potential nuclear, chemical- weapons, and missile targets inside Iran.

"Strategists at the headquarters of the U.S. Central Command, in Tampa, Florida, have been asked to revise the military's war plan, providing for a maximum ground and air invasion of Iran. . . . The hawks in the Administration believe that it will soon become clear that the Europeans' negotiated approach [to Iran] cannot succeed, and that at that time the Administration will act."

And if Ritter's correct, Bush may be planning to act soon since June is right around the corner and his puppeteers at Geostrategy are right on cue with the "imminent threat" script in order to sell another "bad used car" to the American people.

As Bush himself once tried to say and, of course, verbally mangled in a public speech:

"Once fooled, shame on you! Twice fooled, shame on me!!

A-3 Military Jet Secretly Re-Fitted With Missiles Just Prior to 9/11; Places More Doubt On Official Story That A Boeing 757 Hit The Pentagon
Former Republican Washington insider speaks with employees who worked on secret jet project and who now fear for their lives since others who worked on the project have mysteriously turned up dead

27 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A one time Republican insider, now turned party rebel, said he has uncovered more damaging evidence, proving the government's official story about 9/11 is "nothing but a pack of lies."

Karl Schwarz of Georgia, who was one of the main architects of the Republican takeover of Congress during the Clinton Presidency, has made finding the truth about the WTC attacks his passion and his new mission.

Recently he uncovered an obscure piece of video footage, clearly showing a 757 jetliner did not strike the WTC as reported by the government.

Now Schwarz said he has uncovered explosive evidence that will eventually prove "something other than a 757 jetliner hit the Pentagon" also contrary to government reports.

"I have been told by two civilian defense contractors employees that they and others retro-fitted missiles and remote control systems onto A-3 jets at a Colorado public airport just prior to September 11 in a highly secretive government operation carried out under the cover of darkness," said Schwarz, who added the employees asked to remain anonymous in order to protect their lives.

The men told Schwarz that recently several suspicious suicides and fatal car wrecks, involving others who worked on the A-3 project at the Fort Collins-Loveland Municipal Airport, have made them uneasy and fearful about "going public" with their story.

"What makes this testimony important is previously A-3 parts were uncovered in the Pentagon wreckage, parts that are much smaller than those of a Boeing 757," said Schwarz, who has been extremely critical of the Bush administration's handling of 9/11.

Recently, over his distrust of Bush and the general neo-con takeover of America, Schwarz has decided to throw his own hat in the Presidential ring in 2008 under the banner of new independent party yet to be named.

Regarding the Pentagon crash, when Schwarz refers to the A-3 parts found at the 9/11 crash site, he is referring to the Federal Emergency Management Administration (FEMA) photographs taken immediately after the attacks. The photographs clearly indicated that the few aircraft parts found at the Pentagon did not fit the description of Boeing 757 parts but rather fit the description of a small jet, very similar to an A-3

Sky Warrior

The Pentagon crash has always been an 'Achilles Heel' in the government's 9/11 official story as independent investigators have compiled strong evidence revealing the improbability if not impossibility of a large Boeing 757 causing the strike.

The 16-foot entry hole left from the Pentagon impact has been the subject of much debate with investigators, who have been denied access to most of the remaining evidence, including aircraft parts and surveillance photos immediately confiscated by agents after the crash. Investigators nonetheless speculate that an air-to-ground missile (AGM) possibly fired from a small military jet caused the hole.

Besides the several parts recovered after the crash resembling parts from a A-3 Sky Warrior jet, investigators call attention to the fact FBI agents within minutes after impact confiscated surveillance tapes and even a tape from a gas station across the street from the Pentagon, which had a clear view of the incoming object.

Further, they cite initial reports made by air traffic controllers, who reported the incoming object headed towards the Pentagon was a small military jet instead of a commercial Boeing 757. Since the initial report, controllers, however, have been silenced by official gag orders and subpoena or even have not sought their testimony by the recent 9/11 Commission.

"It's all very suspicious," said Schwarz, who also said the government agents quickly removed most of the wreckage evidence from the scene, obstructed justice and basically tampered with a murder scene investigation. "To date none of this evidence has been inspected or used to determine what hit the Pentagon."

Highly suspicious over the obvious government cover-up, Schwarz said his personal investigation led him to the Ft. Collins Municipal Airport and his discussions with the employees who re-fitted the A-3 Sky Warrior with AGM missiles just prior to 9/11.

"The two witnesses say that separate military contractor teams working independently at different times refitted the military jets with updated missiles, Raytheon's Global Hawk unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) remote control systems, fire control systems, engines, transponders, and radio-radar-navigation systems-- a total makeover, seemingly for an operation more important than just a simple missile testing platform for defense contractor Hughes-Raytheon," said Schwarz, who interviewed the employees in February.

"It is very interesting that the Hughes division manufactures the AGMs while the Raytheon division maintains the last few A-3 Sky Warriors in operation and also manufactures the Global Hawk UAV remote control systems."

Schwarz said he began researching Raytheon records for any connections to 9/11, finding out that only Raytheon executives and the Air Force would have known any inside information on the A-3 systems as well as who was involved in the re-fitting operations.

Coincidentally, five key Raytheon executives died onboard three of the four doomed 9/11 flights, a mystery that Schwarz claims is more than just a coincidence. The executives who perished on 9/11 include: Stanley Hall, director of the Electronic Warfare Program (American 77); David Kovalcin, senior mechanical engineer for Electronic Systems (American 11); Peter Gay, vice president of Electronic Systems on special assignment at the El Segundo, CA division office where the Global Hawk UAV remote control system is made (American 11); Kenneth Waldie, senior quality control engineer for Electronic Systems (American 11); and Herbert Homer, a corporate executive working with the Department of Defense (United 175).

"Why were they all on these planes? Nobody's ever bothered to find out," asked Schwarz. "They all died without a grand jury investigation into their records, visits or calls to Ft. Collins-Loveland airport or testimony related to other related matter involving the re-fitting of the A-3's prior to 9/11"

Schwarz said the men were unaware of the A-3 jets destinations after the work was completed, but said each was placed in a small, separate hanger just big enough for a work crew and one A-3 Sky Warrior.

"The men told me specifically they were instructed and under strict orders not to discuss what the military teams were doing or what they saw," said Schwarz.

According to available government records, the Air Force has at least four A-3s in current operation and Hughes-Raytheon has 12-14 Sky Warriors operating, according to available records.

"The plane used at the Pentagon on 9/11 may have been brought in from Tucson, Arizona from Davis-Monthan Air Force Base, which has numerous decommissioned planes taken out of service and stored there in an arid environment," said Schwarz, adding that using an out-of-service plane would erase any paper trail identifying the actual jet.

"Whoever did this had about a billion dollars to work with, according to my intelligence sources who have come forward. One crew came in to fit the jet for remote-UAV systems, another crew put in the fire control systems and another installed the new jet engines, another the AGMs, etc., and all at different times to spread out the information flow on who did what."

Schwarz said the military's likely response to the whole story is that the A-3's were being fitted with system platforms to test-fire missiles. However, he added the timeline for the re-fittings and the recovery of A-3 parts at the Pentagon crash site makes the government possible response highly speculative if not totally unbelievable.

Whistle Blower Says U.S. Officials Aided WTC Hijackers To Remain In Country Illegally Prior To 9/11

Former immigration officer for Homeland Security incriminates Ashcroft and others with obstruction of justice regarding the WTC attacks. Mary Schneider will testify that 'bigwigs' new about phony marriage licensing scam and also aided Osama bin Laden's half-brother to leave states days after 9/11, knowing he had terrorist connections

26 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A woman works 31 years for the federal government, finds out crucial evidence about 9/11 and tries to report the bombshell news to her bosses. But instead of being given a medal of honor, she's immediately fired and told point blank to keep her mouth shut.

She then launches a highly critical web site, providing solid evidence that the Bush administration aided Osama bin Laden's brother, Khalil, out of the country on September 16, 2001, before he could be questioned, even though top officials knew he had terrorist ties and had funded terrorist organizations abroad.

Further, she gives explicit details how U.S. officials accepted bribes for giving phony marriage certificates to illegal Muslims prior to 9/11 in order to allow them to remain in America unnoticed.

The evidence she provides links the marriage scam to Mohamed Atta, named by the government as the ringleader of the 9/11 terrorists. Her evidence further shows that government officials not only knew that Atta resided in Florida as early as 1997, but that officials even assisted him financially in remaining in America illegally.

To add more fuel to the fire, she names "big time names," revealing that former FBI Director Louis Freeh, Attorney General John Ashcroft, FBI Director Robert Mueller and numerous U.S. senators and congressmen knew before the September 11 attacks that U.S. immigration officials were bribed by an illegal Moroccan Muslim linked to Osama bin Laden's half-brother, Khalil.

Mary Schneider of Orlando, a former citizenship and immigration officer for the Department of Homeland Security, thought she was doing the right thing and thought she acted with good intentions. She thought she was being patriotic, thought she was acting for God and country when she blew the whistle on rampant corruption within the immigration division of the newly formed Homeland Security Department.

Instead, Schneider walked right into the middle of a hornet's nest. Instead she walked right in the middle something high level officials like Ashcroft and others desperately have tried to keep quiet.

So, instead of being encouraged to testify about what she knew about 9/11, government agents were instructed to "put the screws" to Schneider. They were instructed to keep her quiet at all costs, even if it meant harassing her and discrediting her to the point of complete social, emotional and financial ruin.

And one year after Schneider blew the whistle, the government has pretty much succeeded. One year later she finds herself in seclusion, the victim of harassment, left penniless and over $200,000 in debt from legal bills.

Her only marginal victory thus far came in March when a federal appeals court kept alive her case against the Department of Homeland Security, remanding it back to the lower court for further testimony. Whether it's a victory for the underdog or just delaying the inevitable, remains to be seen. But in the meantime, Schneider fights on from her only remaining battle station, her web site, trying to raise needed money for her defense.

"After suffering unending illegal punishments of continuous retaliations and reprisals, I am being severely punished, again, by these traitors, fired without compensation, $200k in debt from continuing forced litigation, soon to be out on the street penniless, destitute after 30 years of federal service, for working around the clock 24/7 trying to protect you, your loved ones and all of our beloved Americans," said Schneider as she not only tries to get her job back but tries to alert her fellow citizens about rampant government corruption concerning the events surrounding 9/11.

"My greatest concern and deepest heartache is realizing that, after all of my efforts, these on-going, extensive, insidious treason conspiracies by traitors to our constitution, to our rule of law, reneging on their sworn oath to protect and defend the American people, of corrupt federal officials giving aid and comfort to illegal Muslims with green cards and United States citizenship after they have committed numerous felonies, will not be exposed and stopped until further innocent blood is shed on our soil and more innocent blood is shed on foreign soil.

"And still to this day, three years after the September 11 attacks, ongoing bribes and cover-up conspiracies continue unabated, in blatant, egregious violations of Title 18 of the United States Code, sections 1001 and 1425(b)."

After first learning of the possible government connection with the 9/11 hijackers and Khalil bin Laden, information that has subsequently been verified by numerous sources, Schneider immediately notified the FBI New York City Joint Anti-Terrorism and the Ft. Lauderdale, Florida Department of Justice Inspector General's (IG) office.

But instead of holding her supervisors accountable, they were all exonerated without serious investigation as Schneider was first put on leave and then fired for her whistle blowing. Feeling betrayed, she contacted almost every lawmaker on Capital Hill but still to this day nobody has mounted a serious campaign to get to the bottom of her story.

Schneider said even the mainstream media ignored her, adding that their refusal to "cover her story" is the main reason most Americans remain unaware of her plight as well as the "real truth behind 9/11 and the Bush administration."

Recently Schneider had this message to give to the owners of the New York Times, The Washington Post and all the other major newspaper publishers and television broadcast owners:

"We, the people of the United States deserve much, much more from the media, " she boldly said. "Yet for the almighty dollar and spotlight, you bow down and succumb to the very few worldwide ruling elite who own the media and decide what few hyped truths will be divulged and what secrets and truths will be kept hidden from us.

"After more than 3,000 innocents were murdered or maimed, and while our men and women overseas are, on a daily basis, being killed or having their hands, arms and legs blown off, what are your feigned excuses in failing to expose and stop these insidious treasonous conspiracies from threatening the national, home and personal security of all the people of the United States.

"For over a year, almost all of you have been apprised and provided these documents posted at www.maryschneider.us and you have chosen to ignore them. What justification and fear do you have in failing to engage in your own investigative journalism to expose this extensive corruption to prevent, or at the very least, minimize the impending, further shedding of innocent blood?"

In hopes of moving public opinion in her direction, Schneider turned to the alternative media and underground internet press, providing names, facts and dates to countless web sites across the country.

Her first story, detailing the illegal marriage licensing scam and government involvement with the Khalil bin Laden, was reported by Tom Flocco in late 2004, her revelations later spreading through cyberspace like wildfire as her words were translated in numerous languages and broadcast on several underground radio shows.

However, six months later, her words still remain "floating in cyberspace" while government officials treat her like a criminal, lawmakers ignore her allegations and the media covers her story with about as much importance as a third rate horse and pony show.

"I don't know what it is going to take," Schneider added. "But I am going to keep fighting until the truth is finally revealed and the real criminals in our own government are finally put behind bars."

Worldwide Tribunal To Meet In Istanbul Over U.S. War Crimes In Iraq Bush and Blair invited to defend war decision but not expected to attend

24 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

As President Bush "jet-sets" around the world, there is one overseas meeting in June he will avoid like the plague.

Bush and England's Prime Minister Tony Blair this week received personal invitations to attend a session of the World Tribunal on Iraq (WTI) in Istanbul from June 23-27. A White House spokesman said he was unaware of the meeting or any such group.

The WTI, made up of thousands of people worldwide including many pre-imminent foreign leaders and dignitaries, seeks to reclaim justice regarding the Iraqi invasion since Bush and Blair have failed to recognize international law as well as the International Criminal Court.

The group was formed two years ago with the intent to document the war crimes orchestrated by Bush and Blair with the intent to eventually bring both heads of state to justice despite what group leaders say is "an arrogant flaunting of world opinion and established law."

WTI media spokesman Hilal Kuey said many countries around the world are not as kind towards the two leaders as America and England, viewing the Iraqi invasion as an overt act of aggression.

"Since the U.S. administration does not recognize the International Criminal Court and the U.K. government has used its power to avoid being prosecuted for an illegal and illegitimate war, the citizens of the world have undertaken an initiative to reclaim justice," said Kuey from her office in Turkey. "The world is calling for Bush and Blair to be held accountable for the crimes committed in Iraq."

The Istanbul conference is a culmination of two years of investigating and documenting the occupation and destruction of Iraq, as numerous sessions have been held in many foreign capitals around the world.

The Istanbul conference marks the third anniversary of the Iraqi invasion and seeks to hold Bush and Blair accountable for severe violations of international law.

The formal letter sent to Bush is highly critical of the Iraqi invasion and asks him to defend his position to the world, something WTI leaders say Bush has avoided for three years.

"We, on behalf of the peoples of the world who believe in justice, start from the conviction that you have been acting in violation of common values of humanity, international treaties and international law," stated the letter sent to the White House and numerous American and British Embassies around the world, asking both Bush and Blair to defend their positions.

Since the organization claims Bush has ignored worldwide pleas to respect international law, the WTI has spread to almost every capital in the world in an attempt to fight what it calls "a war of aggression launched despite the opposition of people and governments all over the world."

"There is no court or authority that will judge the acts of the U.S. and its allies. If the official authorities fail, then authority derived from universal morals and human rights principles can speak for the world," said Kuey, the WTI spokesman.

"Our legitimacy derives from the failure of official international institutions to hold accountable those who committed grave international crimes and constitute a continued menace to world peace. We have a duty to take action against wars of aggression, war crimes, crimes against humanity and other breaches of international law.

"The WTI will not end in Istanbul as it is to be considered a continuing process. The investigation of what happened in Iraq is of prime importance to restore truth and preserve collective memory against the constant rewriting of history. We are challenging the silence of international institutions and seeking to put them under pressure to fulfil their obligations under international law."

Besides the Iraqi invasion, the WTI is also investigating the growing clamor of what has been called America's effort to create a "new world order" to dominate the world under a single leadership.

"The WTI initiative seeks to be part of a broader movement to stop the establishment of the new imperial world order as a permanent 'state of exception' with constant wars as one of its main tools," added Kuey. "We hope to bring a moral, political and judicial judgment that contributes to build a world of peace and justice."

The WTI has been endorsed and signed by such notable worldwide figures as Richard Falk, professor of International Law at the University of Santa Barbara; Ken Coates, chairman of the Bertrand Russel Peace Foundation; Baskin Oran, former European member of parliament and professor of International Relations at the University of Ankara and Denis J. Halliday, former Asst. UN Secretary General 1994-1998.

Atrocities of 'Illegal War' Lead Veteran Army Sergeant To Become Conscientious Objector

10-year Army veteran says firing on civilians caused him to resist going back to Iraq; Kevin Benderman faces 5 year jail term and general court martial

23 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Stray dogs feeding on corpses piled-up in a roadside ditch. Children lying helpless burned beyond recognition. Body parts scattered over the desert sand like confetti thrown at a New Year's party. A bullet the size of a snowball rips the chest open of an old gray-haired woman. A bomb falls on the home of an unsuspecting family, leaving ten dead just as dinner is being served.

These are only some of the truly horrific after-effects of the U.S. military invasion of Iraq. To recount them all would take several volumes filled with thousands of bloody pages.

But for most Americans stateside one death or a thousand matters little. It matters little since the sights, sounds, horrors and atrocities of war observed from a distance are no different than going to a Hollywood movie.

It seems like a fantasy. It seems like child's play. It seems like a game of paintball where the weapons are fake and the blood is cold and made of colored corn syrup.

But put yourself in the boots of Sgt. Kevin Benderman of the Army's 4th Infantry Division, who served a tour of duty in Iraq in 2003, and the blood immediately becomes hot and the weapons instantaneously deadly.

War wasn't a Hollywood movie for Sgt. Benderman. It wasn't a game of paintball. It wasn't a fantasy. Everyday for seven months it was all too real, as he witnessed firsthand the stray dogs feeding, the children lying helpless, the body parts scattered and a gray-haired woman being ripped apart.

Then, after experiencing all the horrors of war one could handle, in September 2003 he returned to the states. He returned on leave to his wife and children in Georgia, thinking back on the time his unit was ordered to fire on school children and thinking finally the nightmare he lived was, at last, only a bad memory.

But his hopes were short lived as in today's Army soldiers are pushed to a breaking point, asked to serve two and sometimes three tours of duty due to extreme military shortages. So in January 2004, the 10-year Army veteran from a military family dating back to the Revolutionary War, was ordered to return to Iraq.

His orders came, but for the first time in his military career he said no. Sgt. Benderman, 40, looking every bit the part of the soldier's soldier at over 6 feet tall and 220 lbs, refused to return to Iraq, officially informing the military he was a conscientious objector.

As expected, his legal request was denied and he was charged with desertion. On May 11, Benderman's general court martial trial was dropped on a legal technicality, but the military quickly re-filed charges, again seeking an Article 32 hearing and general court martial where he faces five years in jail.

"As I went through the process which led to my decision to refuse deployment to Iraq for the second time, I was torn between thoughts of abandoning the soldiers that I serve with, or following my conscience which tells me that war is the ultimate in destruction and waste of humanity," said Benderman.

"Thoughts that we could consider better ways to solve our differences with others in the world have crossed my mind on numerous occasions. And this was the driving force that made me refuse deployment to Iraq a second time. Some people may say I am doing it out of fear of combat. I am not going to tell you that the thought of going back to that place isn't scary, but that is not the reason for my decision to not return.

"I just want the truth to come out. My opposition to the war is based on my firsthand experience. Since the government wants the war so bad then why don't we let the government officials fight the war? All of the politicians that want to fight a war are free to trade places with me at any time."

And it appears many others in the Army's 4th Infantry Division feel the same way as Benderman. Records show 17 others in his unit have gone Absent Without Official Leave (AWOL) and two others are hospitalized after attempting suicide.

"I decided not to go since U.S. military personnel are increasingly killing non-combatants," said Benderman. "On my last deployment in Iraq, elements of my unit were instructed by a captain to fire on children throwing rocks at us."

Prior to his military court martial, Rep. Cynthia McKinney (D-GA) came to Benderman's defense and on April 28 said this on the floor of the House of Representatives about his conscientious objector's status:

"Sgt. Benderman's opposition is not the theoretical opposition of a student peace activist. Kevin Benderman has seen things that none of God's children should have to endure. He was present when his superior ordered his unit to open fire on small children who were throwing rocks at the soldiers of his unit. He chased the hungry dogs from an open mass grave filled with the bodies of young children, old men and women. Kevin saw the burned child, crying in pain, while all around her ignored her injuries."

Besides Rep. McKinney, a group called "Courage To Resist," made up of concerned community members nationwide, have banded together to support military objectors to illegal wars. On May 10, to recognize Benderman and others who have been sent to prison for their anti-war views, a National Day of Action in Support of GI Resistance was held in 20 major U.S. cities drawing thousands of military protestors.

"There are thousands of other resisters. While many of them keep their resistance private, all of them are taking courageous stands against the war and in support of international law," said a spokesman for the group that can be found at www.couragetoresist.org. "GI resistance has the power to stop the war and occupation in Iraq. The Bush Administration can't fight war or maintain an occupation without obedient troops. Nor can they begin new wars without enough compliant soldiers."

Figures compiled by "Courage To Resist" show the numbers of soldiers refusing to fight or refusing to enlist have been growing, a number the military desperately has been trying to keep silent.

"Much of the last year's resistance to the war has come from within troops themselves and their families," said a recent statement released by members of the war resistance movement. "For example, the entire 17 member Army Reserve platoon-the 343rd Quartermaster Company, refused an order to go on a "suicide" supply mission in Iraq. Thousands of soldiers are fighting what has been re-enlistment under "the backdoor draft" and recently hundreds of soldiers defiantly scoffed at Rumsfeld during one of his public addresses.

"In November 2004, 1,800 of 4,000 people notified in the ready reserves are requesting exemption or appealing deployment. And of 2,500 ordered to report to military bases 733 never showed up; hundreds have applied for conscientious objector status and the military has admitted that over 5,500 have gone AWOL since the Iraq invasion. In addition to this, resistance within the ranks and military families have become public anti-war spokespeople and frontline activists."

It should be remembered that GI resistance within the military, together with massive desertion and draft resistance, is widely credited with being a key element in forcing the U.S. out of Vietnam.

Steve Morse, a former U.S. Army soldier who was active in the anti-war movement during Vietnam and today coordinates the GI Rights Program of the Central Committee of Conscientious Objectors recalls the anti-war movement in the late 1960s.

"This was an unprecedented event in U.S. history. Underground newspapers, GI coffeehouses, petitions, demonstrations, black armbands, stockade revolts, the FTA (F... The Army Show), leaflets, discussion groups, civilian/veteran support and counseling, combat refusals of riot control training and duty, revolts on ships; these all occurred many times."

Morse said that by 1970, the Army had 65,643 deserters, adding he sees the same pattern forming in the Iraq resistance today, predicting the number of deserters will grow accordingly like they did in Vietnam.

Bush Seeks To Expand Patriot Act, Using Terrorism As A Reason To Spy On Ordinary Citizens

Called 'another Hitler' by some U.S. Senators, Bush again tries to rip apart the Constitution

22 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

It appears our Texas gun-slinging President again has taken a page out of the law of the Wild West as he continues to pistol-whip the U.S. Constitution like an out-of control frontier sheriff with no respect for the law.

Last week he publicly called for an expansion of the much-maligned Patriot Act, seeking to further eliminate Fourth Amendment search and seizure protections under the guise of terrorism.

Instead of listening to the growing public outcry to eradicate the draconian powers of the Patriot Act, Bush seeks to further increase his "Gestapo like hold" on civil rights by bolstering police powers over ordinary citizens.

But in the face of much criticism, he appears once again to have turned a deaf ear while using the word 'terrorism' to fend off critics, making them sound unpatriotic if they oppose his views.

In response, the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) quickly called Bush "out of step with reality" since government agents have been caught red-handed on numerous occasions, using the unconstitutional powers of the Patriot Act to snoop on private citizens with no ties to terrorism.

Complaints of abuse have come from every corner of the country, including incidents involving high school children, grandmothers, librarians, small business owners and others who have unsuccessfully tried to use their First Amendment free speech rights to oppose the President's policies.

In one 2003 case, two Oakland Ca. high school students were held for two hours by agents of the "Terrorist Task Force" after a teacher became unnecessarily frightened during a classroom discussion. Reports indicate the only crime the students committed was to voice strong opposition against the war in Iraq and call for the removal of President Bush.

Several stunned teachers on the scene said what is even more disturbing is that a climate now exists were a situation as "fundamental to free expression as a classroom discussion" can result in such fascist-type actions.

"When one student asked agents if they had the right to remain silent, I remember them responding: 'You don't have any legal rights, we own you,'" teacher Larry Felsen recalled.

And teacher Cassie Lopez, also stunned by the "Gestapo-like activity," said the teachers union, parents and others who tried to get an official explanation have been stonewalled, essentially given nothing more than a general response: "necessary for national security concerns."

In another abuse case, a Portland Or small business owner had her store searched and records seized as FBI agents rushed to judgment on a faulty terrorist lead. Legal observers said agents acted because they feel they no longer have to adhere to proper search warrant procedures, thinking they have the power to invade privacy on mere suspicion and not probable cause.

In a more high profile case, a recent 2004 report to Congress by the Justice Department's own watchdog group, cited the FBI's blatant disregard for Brandon Mayfield's civil rights after the Oregon lawyer was mistakenly linked to the March 2004 attacks on trains in Madrid that killed nearly 200 people and wounded 2,000.

After being held three weeks in FBI custody, he was released after authorities admitted they made a mistake and rushed to judgment after finding his fingerprints did not match those found at the scene in Madrid.

According to the report, the "FBI inappropriately conducted (under the Patriot Act) a surreptitious search of his home potentially motivated by his Muslim faith and ties to the Muslim community."

After the Mayfield report was presented to Congress, Rep. John Conyers, (D-Mich), senior democrat on the House Judiciary Committee, said the report clearly demonstrated how the secrecy used in terrorism investigations can be excessive, leading to the arrest and detention of many innocent people in direct violation of the Constitution.

"What this tells us is that, without an open and accountable government, we will never really know how many people have had their rights violated by federal agents and how many people have been held without legitimate charges being brought," said Conyers during debate on the House floor regarding the report.

Besides the hundreds of reported abuses, Bush has also seen fit to ignore the growing grass roots movement, called "American Safe Zones," where states, counties or municipalities have passed resolutions or ordinances officially denouncing the Patriot Act.

Presently four states and over 3,700 counties or municipalities nationwide have rejected the draconian powers associated with the Patriot Act.

And in the Senate, Bush has failed to recognize a bill to limit the Patriot Act introduced by conservative Sen. Larry Craig (R-ID) and Sen. Dick Durbin (D-IL). The bill, only providing "window dressing limitations" has not garnered much Senate support and is languishing since it has not been supported by powerful Republican Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman, Orrin Hatch.

A press spokesman for Sen. Durbin said the bill would most likely be introduced this term, depending on support gathered. The bill has a total of 19 co-sponsors, including Republican senators Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, Mike Crapo of Idaho and Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania.

"I believe it is possible to combat terrorism and preserve our individual freedoms at the same time," said Durbin. "The Patriot Act crossed the line on several key areas of civil liberties and this legislation restores the necessary checks and balances to the system."

What most Americans are never told about the history of the Patriot Act is that it was written many years before 9/11 and was routinely rejected by Congress as blatantly unconstitutional. However, magically after 9/11, no longer did the Constitution matter as Congress quickly passed it 45 days after the WTC attacks without even as much as reading the fine print.

"The Bush administration basically rammed it through Congress, knowing the terrorism scare would force a quick passage since anyone who opposed it would have been labeled as unpatriotic," said an ACLU spokesman last week.

One of the most troubling portions of the act is Section 215, which permits law enforcement to conduct unlawful searches and seizures without a warrant or without the necessary probable cause. This section allows the government to obtain records on clients and customers from libraries, bookstores, doctors, universities, internet service providers and other public entities and private sector businesses.

What is most troubling about Section 215 is that it imposes a gag order prohibiting an organization forced to turn over records from disclosing the search to their clients, customers or any other third party.

The result is vastly expanded government powers to rifle through an individual's finances, medical histories, internet usage, library usage, school records, travel patterns and through records of everything imaginable concerning the target of the investigation.

Worldwide Christian, Muslim, Jewish Alliance Pray Every Friday At Noon For Truth To Be Revealed About 9/11

While Bush prays against 'forces of evil,' thousands around the world pray Bush reveals truth about conspiracy behind 9/11; Wisconsin college professor ignites unity among faiths against corruption in U.S. government, leading to war and worldwide destruction

20 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

While President Bush is praying against the "forces of evil," tens of thousands of people worldwide are praying every Friday at noon that our Texas gun-slinging President "come clean" about government complicity in 9/11.

A Wisconsin college professor, disgusted with the Bush administration and the war in the Middle East, has formed a worldwide alliance of people from all faiths who have banded together to stop American imperialism by first getting to the bottom of the 9/11 story.

Here is how the group began:

Kevin Barrett looked out the window of his Wisconsin home, took a deep breath and made a decision in January 2004 that changed the rest of his life.

Although the familiar countryside view remained the same, his feelings about the post 9/11 world he lived in had changed drastically. Once content with America, he now was restless, uneasy and dissatisfied.

And his feelings reached a boiling point on that cold and snowy January morning after reading a book written by David Ray Griffin entitled The New Pearl Harbor: Disturbing Questions about the Bush Administration and 9/11.

"After reading the book, I knew I had to do something to change this climate of war and hate started by the Bush administration," said Barrett, a 1992 convert to the Muslim faith and a former college English Literature professor who recently received his PhD from the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

But little did he know his idea "to do something" would quickly grow into a nationwide movement, uniting high-powered figures from the Christian, Jewish and Muslim world in what he calls "an organized worldwide alliance" of all faiths to find out the truth behind 9/11.

"I've always been more interested in literature and spirituality than activism, but post-9/11 events have forced my hand. I have two children, and a world under the sway of the 9/11 big lie is not an acceptable one for them to grow up in," said Barrett.

"After the Fallujah holocaust, I began MUJCA-NET, which is basically a web site and an organization to unite all faiths to seek the truth about 9/11. Our biggest project so far was a speech at University of Wisconsin/Madison featuring author David Ray Griffin that was picked up by C-Span."

Explaining the idea behind his organization, which includes many high-profile names from all corners of the world, he added:

"MUJCA-NET is a group of scholars, religious leaders and activists dedicated to uniting members of the Jewish, Christian and Islamic faiths in pursuit of 9/11 truth. We believe that the process of joining together in search of the truth about 9/11 will bring enormous benefits, regardless of what truths we may discover.

"While our endorsers and supporters have different views about the probable level of U.S. government complicity in 9/11, all of us agree that a new, honest investigation of the possibility of official complicity is a matter of the most urgent national and global importance."

Barrett's idea quickly spread, even attracting Catherine Austin Fitts, former Republican Assistant Secretary Housing in the Bush I Administration. Fitts, an avid supporter and a Christian, left the cabinet post after trying to expose corruption in HUD when she discovered criminal syndicates manipulating big city housing markets and other HUD monies being underhandedly dished out to the CIA.

Also suspecting government complicity in 9/11, Fitts let her thoughts be known in a 2003 letter sent to now Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, asking for a honest and thorough 9/11 investigation as well as accusing higher-ups in the Bush administration with complicity in 9/11.

"It is Catherine Austin Fitt's, commitment and faith that led her to expose the oil-guns-drugs mob of corrupt spooks who currently rule America," said Barrett. "She wrote a blistering public letter to Condi Rice charging Rice and the rest of the Bush II foreign policy mob with complicity in 9/11."

After writing her scathing letter to Rice, Fitt's then wrote Barrett, asking:

"Is there any way that we could start a prayer and meditation for 9/11 truth. I was recently very moved by the video, Transformations, available from www.sentinelgroup.org about the power of community prayer. If we could reinvent this notion on a non-denominational basis, it could be very powerful."

Barrett said Fitt's idea gave birth to MUJCA-NET's Day of Prayer for 9/11 Truth where every Friday afternoon participating Muslims, Christians and Jews, along with well-wishers from other faiths and traditions, spend a few minutes praying or meditating for 9/11 truth.

It's impossible to put an exact numbers who participate each week, but based on group membership and the group's rough calculations, it is estimated to be in the tens of thousands worldwide.

"The Friday Day of Prayer for 9/11 Truth began with the New Year of 2005 and will continue until 9/11 truth issues are resolved," said Barrett. "To participate, simply take a few minutes from your lunch break on Fridays to pray or meditate for 9/11 truth. Muslims who participate in Friday congregational prayers can offer a petition to God, for 9/11 truth at the appropriate moments during the services. Those from other faiths can support Muslims, also victims of the official myth of 9/11, by offering the same prayer or meditation according to the custom of their own traditions.

Once limited to a small number of internet and journalistic skeptics, the 9/11 truth movement has grown dramatically over the last year, as new facts and information have placed much doubt in the minds of many Americans about the credibility of the Bush administration's official version of 9/11.

It is estimated in a recent Zogby Poll that more than 50% of New Yorkers believe the government was complicit in 9/11 and is not telling the whole truth about the events before, during and after 9/11.

And the list of supporters to Barrett's Mujca-Net is a good indication of the growing mistrust of the government's account of 9/11, as members are joining from corners of the world.

Besides Fitts and Griffin, others who endorse Barrett's cause as well as seeking truth from the Bush administration regarding possible complicity or foreknowledge of 9/11 include Faiz Khan, M.D., New York

City: 9/11 first responder; Israel Shamir, Russian-Israeli intellectual, writer, translator and journalist; Rev. George Pixley, retired Baptist minister and Professor of Biblical Studies (Ph.D. University of Chicago); Rev. David E. Roy, Ph.D.; Rosemary Radford Ruether, Carpenter Professor of Theology, Graduate Theological Union, Berkeley, CA; Kent Mayfield, Unitarian Minister; Amir Salih Erschen, Madison Muslim Dawa Circle; and Dr. James Goulding, Adjunct Member of Religious Studies Faculty at Edgewood College and Professor of Religion Emeritus at MacMurray College in Jacksonville, Illinois.

Regarding Griffin, who was the inspiration behind his project, Barrett said:

"David Griffin, also a Christian, is one of the most respected theologians in America. The author more than twenty books on philosophy and theology, Griffin risked his life and reputation by publishing The New Pearl Harbor and The 9/11 Commission Report: Omissions and Distortions. Together, these two books present a solid prima facie case that 9/11 was an inside job, and that the Kean-Zelikow Commission 9/11 report is pure fiction"

Presently, Barrett's organization is preparing 9/11 awareness projects all across America, including speeches and rallies featuring the top names in the 9/11 truth movement. He is also in the finishing stages of his own book entitled The Myth Behind 9/11.

Author's Addiction Led Him To 'Angel's Doorstep' Where U.S. Government Plays The 'HAARP'

Is the secret government program based in Alaska changing the weather, altering our thinking patterns and set-up to cause a global nightmare??

18 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

After years of fighting the "dark forces" in the world, Reno author and lecturer Jerry Smith has finally been diagnosed with an incurable addiction. The diagnosis has come after countless articles, lectures and books and after years of social activism, starting in the turbulent 60s.

Smith's addiction isn't gambling, boozing or anything else normally associated with the 60s or the nightclub town he lives in. But rather it is an insatiable appetite, an unstoppable desire to find answers to some of the world's most complex and difficult questions.

After publishing his first article in 1969, Smith has dabbled in most everything labeled conspiratorial or controversial. He is the perfect definition of a "jack of all trades and a master of none," as nothing appears too far out of range for his type of unique exploratory and inquisitive mind.

Mention a conspiracy like JFK, Ruby Ridge, Waco, Oklahoma City or 9/11 and Smith has probably written about it. Mention a political controversy like Watergate the neocon movement, globalization or nuclear proliferation and Smith has probably commented about it. Mention a scientific dilemma like chemical and biological warfare and Smith has lectured about it.

Even mention a UFO sighting and Smith probably knows about it, since he once headed up the UFO Museum in Reno in 1991-92.

Although he has no fancy titles or degrees following his name, Smith is the perfect example of the new "New Age Technological Renaissance Man," self-educated and self-taught, using his computer as a lightning rod to "touch all things possible and imaginable."

So besides all the high brow intellectual rhetoric, who is Jerry E. Smith and what has he accomplished?

"I am not a scientist, nor a technician -- I am a writer, a researcher, and occasionally an activist. I don't know how to build weapons, only how to put sentences and paragraphs together," said Smith from behind a mountain of paperwork at his home in Reno.

"I have spent my life reading and thinking about technology and how it has changed our society. As a youth I read voraciously, from wild science fiction novels to the ancient classics, to American history to global politics. But the books I really liked, and read over and over, were the ones that dealt with how societies came to grips with, or were destroyed by their science."

And whether America eventually will be destroyed by an "out of control science" unleashed by an "out of control" government is a tough question. Nevertheless it is a tough question that Smith chooses to tackle, as he presently is hard at work on an update to his 1998 book entitled HAARP: The Ultimate Weapon of the Conspiracy.

In fact, when the word harp is mentioned, most people think of angels. But Smith says this "HAARP" is anything but angelic, having the potential to one day destroy the planet.

The topic that now occupies Smith's inquisitive mind is actually named "The High Frequency Active Auroral Research Program (HAARP)" and is the largest and most powerful Department of Defense (DOD) facility of its kind in the world.

Located in southeastern Alaska, HAARP consists of a gigantic field of antennas working as if it was one big antenna. When completed in 2007, it will be the world's largest radio broadcasting station with an effective radiated power of 3.6 billion watts, which is more than 72,000 times more powerful than the largest legal commercial radio station in the United States.

However, Smith and other researchers claim the government has no intention to compete with Rush Limbaugh or Air America as its plans are not even remotely intended for human ears. In fact, its purpose is to inject the high-powered radio frequency energy into a "spot" at the very top of the atmosphere, in a region called the ionosphere, a spot about 12 miles across, 2 miles deep, and about 50 to 90 miles up.

Trying to answer the $64,000 question concerning why the government wants to inject all that energy into the atmosphere, Smith said:

"The United States government, its military and many academics, say that it is a pure science research station, one intended to increase our understanding of the upper atmosphere, and nothing more. Detractors are not convinced.

"However, some researchers think HAARP is a prototype for a ground-based "Star Wars" weapons system. It may be an over-the-horizon type radar ... or it may exist to destroy incoming ICBMs ... or perhaps to fry out the electronics of enemy spy satellites ... or it might be used to disrupt enemy radio communications.

"The folks at HAARP deny any military connections, but that of course has led to much controversy, debate and claims of conspiracy and cover up."

And once the government begins "denying and lying," Smith said the possible uses for HAARP became even more strange and sinister.

"Many researchers have looked into what HAARP is really intended for - and some have come up with some very strange sounding things! Some think it will be used to control the weather. Others say it could be used to set off volcanoes, or trigger earthquakes," said Smith.

"Still others see its potential for "Wining the Hearts and Minds" of our enemies by beaming emotions or commands directly into their brains. And some few even speculate that it will be used by the New World Order to take over the world by projecting holographic images into the sky while beaming thoughts directly into our heads, telling us to accept the new "god" of their design. And still others think it is part of a planetary defense system to protect us from invading aliens from outer space. And there are even wilder ideas about what "they" want to do with HAARP!"

Smith said his new book entitled CHEMTRAILS, HAARP & WEATHER WARFARE: The Military's Plan to Draft Mother Nature, due to be out in 2006, updates the government's progress on the Alaskan project, its change in management and anything new about its possible destructive nature uncovered since his last book.

"I began writing my 1998 book HAARP: The Ultimate Weapon of the Conspiracy with the intent to sort out truth from fiction. I quickly learned that HAARP was but the tip of a very nasty iceberg," said Smith. "I soon learned more about the down side of electromagnetic (radio frequency) technologies than I ever wanted to know. And that things are far worse in the Military-Industrial-Educational Complex than even I, as a "peacenik" from the '60s, imagined.

"My book became an examination of two major questions: what is the fundamental flaw in how we fund and conduct science, and how can a democracy defend itself from its own military and covert intelligence agencies?"

Asked about his biggest fears about HAARP, he added:

"Initially, my greatest fear was that HAARP would accidentally trigger mental or emotional dysfunction across a large portion of the planet, as HAARP is intended to bathe the world in extremely low frequency (ELF) radio waves at exactly the same frequency that the human brain works at.

"As I learned more about HAARP an entire Pandora's Box of potential dangers came to view. Clearly, HAARP is a ground-based "Star Wars" weapons system. The Soviets objected to Star Wars (SDI) on the grounds that it would give the US First Strike capability. That has not changed, although the dynamics of the Cold War has. HAARP still has the potential to destabilize international relations, only now with the Chinese, rather than the former Soviet Union."

And from an environment point of view, Smith said there is no end to the potential horrors of HAARP.

"Oddly enough, my greatest fear now is that HAARP might be exactly what they say it is -- an experimental base from which clueless civilian scientists are manipulated into performing questionable experiments on vast planetary systems with unknown potential outcomes," said Smith. "Its primary avowed purpose, stated most simply, is to find out if the atmosphere can be made into some kind of weapon; or if portions of it, such as the ionosphere, can be "tweaked" so as to advance military objectives. Common sense tells us that "weaponizing the atmosphere" could be a serious mistake -- even if it works. If we achieve this technology, how long will it be before one of our enemies gains it too? What happens when they go head to head in a war using geophysical weapons? Nukes are nice in comparison to the hell that could be unleashed."

Concerning whether HAARP, now in its initial stages, has already caused any noticeable damage, Smith had an interesting analysis.

"HAARP is a functioning ground-based "Star Wars" weapons system. It was successfully used against an incoming ICBM in 2003. The North Koreans, in pique over deadlocked talks, pitched a missile at the US. It was brought down, its Chinese warhead found in Alaska. Unfortunately, the space shuttle Columbia was reentering earth's atmosphere at the same time. Collateral damage, destruction by "friendly fire," all carefully covered up, which I will be working on finding the answers in a new book I have planned."

Besides HAARP, Smith's impressive resume includes scores of articles, reviews and two non-fiction books. He is also putting the finishing touches on a book entitled Secrets of the Holy Lance: The Spear Of Destiny In History & Legend (2005), a project with co-author George Piccard, author of Liquid Conspiracy: JFK, LSD, the CIA, Area 51, AND UFOs (1999).

Unsuspecting Couple Approached by Two bin Laden Brothers Not Once But Three Times; Also Told in 1987 About U.S. Plans for Destruction of Twin Towers and Eventual U.S. Global Takeover

The couple, working as scientific researchers for NASA, have been harassed by government agents for years in order to keep their story quiet; Couple made aware of 9/11 years before towers toppled and were told it was the catalyst to takeover the Middle East and create worldwide atmosphere of war

By Greg Szymanski

The unsuspecting American couple told by two bin Laden brothers in 1987 about the U.S. government's plan to topple the WTC now claims to have been approached by them not once but on three separate occasions.

The couple, working in the NASA scientific community, said neither of two brothers looked like Osama, but both emphatically said they were the 'mavericks' of the family, not wanting to participate with others in helping facilitate corrupt U.S. interests in Saudi Arabia.

The two scientists' first encounter with the Saudi aristocratic family members came in 1987 when the bin Ladens and others barged their way into the couple's Sedona Arizona home.

They said the bin Ladens were seeking general information about an advanced brain development project the couple worked on, as well as possibly trying to alert Americans about the U.S. government's intentions to control the Middle East and blow up the WTC in the process.

"I was shocked and didn't know what to make of them when they entered. Remember, back then, no one had an idea about 9/11 so I didn't know what to make of it," said Rachel Welch, 51, of Albuquerque. "Looking back, I think they thought we may have had a way to alert those inside NASA, sympathetic to Saudi interests, about U.S. intentions to takeover precious resources and oil reserves."

In 1987, Welch and Ronald Logsdon of Philadelphia, the other present at the first bin Laden meeting, were both working indirectly for NASA on a $12 million government grant at NASA's Application Technical Center Institute in Phoenix.

Together with over 100 "think tank" participants, Logsdon, an engineer, and Welch, a licensed hypnotism - therapist and head of the Global Elite Scientist's Club, were developing technology to better understand the brain's memory and psychic ability capacities.

The pair came up with they called the "light and sound" machine, receiving much praise during the 80s for what was thought then to be ground breaking work.

"They (at NASA) ended up stealing our work and then after the bin Laden incident denied knowing that Rene and I even existed," said Logsdon.

During the first bin Laden encounter, the couple said those showed them sensitive documents and film, revealing the pre-planning for blowing up the WTC and intentions in government for a global takeover.

They said they were told that these sinister and deadly plans included an eventual catastrophic de-population of the world while at the same time taking control of the world's diminishing natural resources.

"Two of the bin Laden brothers came some 90 miles from Phoenix, Arizona, and stopped at our doorstep unannounced. Their bodyguards set up a surveillance parameter around our property and others came into our house, taped up the windows and set up a film projector. The people in this motorcade seemed very scared, and presented this as a matter of life and death," recalled Logsdon, who said at the time in 1987 the couple had no idea about the eventual 9/11 implications.

"These men told us to be very cautious and to assume that we were under surveillance by our government. For several hours they showed us films of meetings of key Arabs and U.S. government officials discussing the oil issues. The bottom line was that if the Arabs did not do it their way, the U.S. would simply take their oil by force. They also explained that they have been manipulated into setting up bank accounts where oil profits were siphoned off and were no longer under their control."

Continuing as if the incident occurred yesterday, he added:

"Looking back, it was incredible the key information they shared with us concerning how the events of 9/11 actually played out. One key film showed several people who presented themselves as U.S. advisers explained how they had come up with a plan how to accomplish this eventual takeover. Using Pearl Harbor as an example, they explained how you needed a trigger even to initiate a war to get the U.S. people on your side.

"They then explained why the World Trade Centers were the ideal target for this purpose. The two bin Ladens showed us this film because they made it very clear how they did not want to be involved with any U.S. plot to manipulate the Arab governments or start a war."

After the first meeting, Welch said she was approached twice more by the bin Ladens, the last time in Los Angeles in 1988. She said at all three meetings, she learned more of America's corrupt plans as well as being asked once to try and revive the memory of a wealthy Saudi Prince.

However, it wasn't until after the bin Laden encounters that the drama began for Welch and Logsdon.

Shortly after the couple parted company, Logsdon ending up in New York where he tried desperately but with out success to alert the FBI and the United Nations as well as others to what he learned from the tapes shown to him by the bin Ladens.

"Whenever I would try to explain this plot to others, I very quickly learned others did not want to hear of it. Having no evidence or time line, I disappeared in Manhattan and kept looking for some proof," said Logsdon.

"René, on the other hand, has had a much more challenging experience. In the early '90s, René met someone who told her we had been under surveillance the whole time. As evidence, the person showed René several file cabinets filled with transcriptions of our bugged house conversations."

Furthermore, he said Welch has been aggressively apprehended several times by agents of the U.S. government, being subjected to extreme interrogation techniques and constant harassment.

"Then, in 1996, in an effort to protect herself, she created a 150 page document telling all she had experienced, sending it to the Clinton White House by registered mail," said Logsdon. "She has also worked with several local authorities in Arizona and New Mexico and given them copies of the document. They, in fact, have been involved in protecting her several times and some of these agents are also willing to testify if it ever comes to trial."

Welch said she also gave her extensive documentation in 1996 to John Patternoster, district attorney of Taos, NM, who now is a private attorney still practicing there.

"I gave him everything and he said I had one heck of a case against the government," said Welch about one her meetings, claiming if the allegations could be proven true, there were more than 50 abuse violations, including death threats and physical violence.

She added that she received "no help" from the Clinton White House or FBI officials in Santa Fe after visiting on numerous occasions. She is now considering to write "a tell-all" about her experiences with government agents, who she claims have threatened to kill her and tried to take her life to keep her from talking about what she learned in 1987 from the bin Ladens.

"It has been a nightmare and I am lucky to still be alive," said Welch, who is now weighing the factors about her safety in relation to releasing the details about the government's criminal attempts to keep her quiet.

Logsdon, on the other hand, has experienced less direct abuse, but knows firsthand the government keeps close tabs on his movements,

In an attempt to tell the couple's incredible story and alert others about what lies ahead in the future, he has contacted the 9/11 Commission on two occasions but never received a response.

"I emailed them twice back in 2004 about what we learned about 9/11 in 1987, but they never bothered to return my messages," said Logsdon. "After emailing the Commission, my computer was "hacked into" by the Defense Department and agents have followed me on numerous occasions.

Since 9/11, Logsdon in particular has been trying to spread the word about the couple's strangemeeting with the bin Ladens and how this meeting related to 9/11. As expected with a story such as this, it has been greeted mostly with deaf ears and disbelieving eyes.

"In August of 2003, I finally went to the FBI and offered myself as a witness so they could contact others to verify my story," said Logsdon. "By about my fourth meeting it became very clear that the FBI had been informed to discard any information about the 911 attacks, and that they had not made no effort whatsoever to contact any of the other witnesses.

"Since then I have been accumulating key documents to verify our story and wish to get them to the proper media sources. It is a reasonable assumption that the media has been aware of the truth for quite some time but has been shackled and are unable to get it to the general public. I still trust in the freedom of the press as one of our key rights in this country."

Logsdon said the couple is willing to testify in court or before Congress under oath in order to help bring the truth to the American people about what really occurred before, during and after 9/11.

"We have offered ourselves as willing to testify under oath in court if this ever goes to trial," said Logsdon. "Even though all other 9/11 related court cases have been silenced by the Bush administration, I still remain optimistic that one day justice will prevail."

Philadelphia Lawyer, Who Filed RICO Case Against Bush and Cronies, Embarks on European Speaking Tour to Spread Word About Government Complicity in 9/11

Phil Berg says media has ignored his lawsuit but federal judge recently ruled against the government's motion to dismiss; However, case now transferred from Philly to New York federal court.

15 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Philadelphia lawyer Phil Berg has never tried to climb Mt. Everest. In the past, he's always attempted "legal mountains " within his reach.

But since filing a 2004 federal RICO lawsuit against President Bush and others for complicity in 9/11, the former Pennsylvania District Attorney, finally knows what it's like to try and scale the world's tallest peak.

"I thought it was going to be tough, but I didn't think this tough," said Berg from behind a mountain of legal paperwork in his one-man Philadelphia office. "I am under-manned, overworked and under-financed, but still optimistic that justice will prevail.

"Either our government made 9/11 happen or let it happen. I am going after them for foreknowledge, failure to warn and actively covering up the crimes they committed. Remember, Nixon was thrown out of office only for a cover-up. These people, including Bush, have done much more.

"We need to bring these criminals in government to justice for killing over 3,000 Americans, not to mention the thousands who have needlessly died in Iraq and Afghanistan."

Without much support or media attention at home, Berg this week is leaving on a 7-stop European tour to try and raise money and public awareness about the U.S. government's involvement in 9/11. The speaking tour begins in Amsterdam then continues to Berlin, Paris, Madrid, London and Vienna.

Berg is joining American entrepreneur Jimmy Walter, the tour's sponsor, who has taken up residence overseas after spending millions here to alert the public about the truth behind 9/11. Berg and Walter together hope to combine efforts to raise needed money for the 9/11 lawsuit, as well as showing Europeans that many Americans disagree with Bush and his imperialistic foreign policy agenda.

Although millions of Americans now agree with Berg about the U.S. government's complicity in 9/11, Berg said the movement hasn't gained momentum because the media together with the government has hidden the truth from the American people.

"Hopefully the foreign press will be more receptive to our cause and the word will get back home," said Berg, who claims the American media has purposely ignored his lawsuit against Bush in order to protect the administration against any type of public backlash.

"This is a major lawsuit with major world wide implications, but the media has chosen to ignore it. Why?" asked Berg, saying the lack of public attention has not dampened his efforts at getting at the truth behind 9/11.

And the extensive 237 page complaint, filed in November 2004 on behalf of WTC maintenance worker William Rodriguez, attempts to get at the truth while unraveling the complicated fact-scenario involving the government's hand in 9/11 before, during and after the attacks.

Although Rodriguez doesn't claim to know everything about the government's complicity, he is going to testify that he heard strange explosions before and after the jetliner struck one of the towers.

Rodriguez, working at the WTC on the morning of 9/11, claims to have heard detonated bomb explosions go off before and after the airliner struck the tower. Besides the timing of the suspicious bomb blasts, Rodriguez claims they occurred on lower floors of the high rise, "nowhere near where the jetliner struck the tower."

Independent investigators said both towers suspiciously fell "like a house of cards," claiming that what Rodriguez probably heard pre-arranged detonated bomb blasts, strategically placed and timed to make it appear that the jetliner was the cause of the collapse.

From the beginning, the government has always held firm to the story that burning jet fuel after impact brought down the towers. However, critics claim the government's theory is impossible since much more was needed in order to bring the towers down so quickly. They claim it is more likely that explosive devices were placed in towers and detonated when the jetliners made impact.

Besides trying to disprove the government's theory behind the WTC collapse, Berg's suit goes much farther, attempting to prove that a 9/11 conspiracy began years before the incident.

"The beauty behind a RICO case is that we are allowed to use as admissible evidence, facts and events that occurred many years before and even years after 9/11," said Berg about his choice to use the federal RICO laws against Bush and his cronies. "The government normally uses RICO for Mafia probes, but in this case it's a conspiracy within the government itself that the RICO laws can help expose."

After filing the case, government lawyers were quick to go on offensive, filing a motion to dismiss on grounds of national security, among a number of other legal maneuvers in order that the case never see the light of day.

"They have tried everything to stop this case from being heard," added Berg.

The case now is still in the early stages with full-blown discovery and depositions not yet taking place. However, Berg said he "can't wait to depose" Bush and other higher-ups regarding the tough questions about 9/11 never asked answered or answered previously.

"I just got word the judge didn't dismiss the case, but has changed venue to New York," said Berg, who finally received notice from the court regarding the hearing to dismiss the case held several weeks ago in Philadelphia.

Asked what motivated him behind taking on such an enormous challenge, he said:

"I never realized I would get this involved, but the more research I did, the more it became clear that Bush and his cronies knew about 9/11 then actively covered up their participation and foreknowledge.

"Right after 9/11 occurred, I knew something was strange when I saw Andy Card tell Bush about the second plane hitting the towers. There was absolutely no reaction on the President's face and it was then, I understood he must have known about the plan all along.

In order to raise money at home for the lawsuit and raise public awareness, Berg operates a web site at www.911forthetruth.com, a site where a transcript of the entire RICO complaint can be found as well as updating viewers about the latest news behind the 9/11 truth movement.

Berg's extensive complaint seeks relief for Rodriguez based on 13 counts, including Misprision of a Felony, Misprision of Treason, relief under the Anti Terrorism Act, relief under the War Crimes Act and relief for and from Crimes Against Humanity.

Specifically, it attempts to show a web of government conspiracy dating back to the late 1970's when Osama bin Laden was first put on the government payroll as a CIA operative to fight the Soviets in Afghanistan.

Berg claims this web of government deceit and financial backing continues all the way up to days just preceding 9/11 as witnesses will testify and records will reveal that the alleged hijackers were actually on the government payroll. The complaint goes on to say that the defendants deliberately concealed the fact that they had ample warnings of terrorist attacks and failed to act on them in order to carry out a full-blown war on terrorism as a means to justify their neo-conservative political goals.

"It is time for a non-violent revolution by the millions of Americans who are tired of their rights being diminished by the Bush administration, tired of the lies of the Bush administration, tired of the lies about Iraq and tired and disgusted with the lies about 911," said Berg in a plea of unity to those seeking the truth about 9/11.

"Now is the time to stand tall together and bring back our freedoms as they stood under the Declaration of Independence, Bill of Rights and the Constitution of the United States."

Regarding 9/11 itself, the Rodriguez action aims to prove the following main points:

-- The World Trade Center, as well as WTC Building #7, were destroyed by a controlled demolition, as clearly proven by the laws of physics and that this demolition could have only been an "inside job."

-- An unprecedented nationwide "ground stop" order and stand down of NORAD must have had White House approval since it prevented even the military from flying, allowing the 9/11 attacks to proceed without interruption.

--The defendants conspired to and did allow the attacks to happen by delaying military interceptions of the hijacked planes in the following manner:

Flight 11 (North Tower) and Flight 175(South Tower) could have been intercepted by fighter jets before collision, but were not due to an ordered "stand down" of NORAD defense systems on the morning in question. Evidence will also show the flight patterns taken and the manner in which the sophisticated jets were handled could not have been accomplished by untrained, novice pilots with only box cutters. The evidence will further show that Flight 11 and Flight 175's transponders may have been dismantled by government insiders, making them both invisible on radar screens and thus allowing for the airplanes to be guided by a remote control into the WTC by a government system called Global Hawk.

Flight 77 not only could have been intercepted by fighter jets but was allowed to fly uncontested a full 50 minutes before striking the Pentagon. Evidence will further show that the object that hit the Pentagon was not a commercial airliner but in fact a government guided missile.

The crash of Flight 93 in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, raises serious additional questions which will show that it was actually shot down by government fighter jets and not brought down due to a terrorist struggle in the cockpit.

FEMA, which quickly removed the WTC, Pentagon and Flight 93 debris before they could be independently examined, maintains a "Black-Op" shadow government designed to replace the elected government of the United States.

The "insider trading on American Airlines and other 9/11 affected stocks was subject to an ongoing cover-up to conceal the identities of those who had actual prior knowledge of the 9/11 attacks.

Three Big Stories Show U.S. Government Planned to Bring Down The Twin Towers Many Years Before 9/11

Stories the government would like to forget, the mainstream media will never report and the 9/11 Commission ignored

13 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The U.S. government has always firmly denied having any concrete evidence or warnings about 9/11. And after the attacks, President Bush was quick to point out officials were caught completely off guard and totally unaware of any plans to topple the Twin Towers.

However, three separate stories surfaced, showing President Bush and others most likely are lying about what they really know. These three bombshell stories, ones the government would like to forget and the media will never report, not only show the government had prior warnings, but that it actively participated in planning how the jetliner strike would take place.

The watered-down 9/11 Commission investigation, of course, never checked out the stories and never even addressed the possibility of inside government planning in the first place. The investigation assumed government officials were blameless, carelessly assuming 9/11 took place just like the government reported.

The 9/11 Commission essentially put a giant rubber stamp on the official government version, a story repeated so many times that most Americans probably can recite it by heart:

"Nineteen Arab terrorists with box cutters flew four jetliners into the most highly secured airspace in the world without detection, toppling the Twin Towers, crashing into the Pentagon and killing over 3,000 Americans."

But recent evidence, especially contained in the following three stories, clearly demonstrates it may be wise to investigate further regarding government complicity in 9/11 instead of blindly believing or being duped by the simplistic explanation given by the government.

These stories do not touch on evidence showing government complicity in the actual events of 9/11, but strongly suggest the government actually took part in plans and preparations to bring about another Pearl Harbor event in order to justify the ongoing war in the Middle East.

In 1987, two of the many bin Laden Brothers told an unsuspecting American couple about U.S. government plans to topple the Twin Towers and bring about war in the Middle East.

Rene Welch of New Mexico and Ronald Logsdon of Philadelphia tell an incredible story of how they were approached and held captive for several hours in their Arizona home by a group of men, including two of the bin Laden brothers.

The bin Ladens apparently heard of the couple's highly innovative technology and thought it might help them in their effort to stop the U.S. government's plans to take over the Middle East and its oil reserves. The two brothers, mavericks of the family, apparently did not agree with the course and direction of American colonialization as well as others in their large family, who were helping America achieve its goal.

During the course of the meeting with the bin Ladens in 1987, Logsdon said he was shown film of secret U.S. intelligence briefings, mapping a strategy for an eventual Middle East takeover. He said the strategy included creating a Pearl Harbor like event in order to scare the American people, paving an easy path to war with immediate public approval.

Incredibly, the bin Ladens told Logsdon the Pearl Harbor event planned, as a prerequisite to war in the Middle East, was the destruction of the Twin Towers by using aircraft as weapons.

In 1976, a U.S. Army private said his unit was asked to create the "perfect terrorist plan," using the Twin Towers as its target and box cutters and airplanes as weapons.

Timothy McNiven of Washington reported that his army unit, stationed in Germany, was ordered to devise the "perfect terrorist plan" way back in 1976, using the Twin Towers as the main target.

McNiven said his unit, including about 100 other soldiers, spent months trying to come up with the perfect scenario to bring down the towers. He said what they devised closely resembled the 9/11 attacks right down to using box cutters as weapons and Arab terrorists flying jetliners smack dab into the towers.

Since 9/11, McNiven has been trying to spread the word about the 1976 plan, his story appearing in alternative newspaper accounts and radio show.

McNiven said the American people have a right to know that their government actually planned 9/11 "way in advance. "

He claims to be still acting on ongoing orders, given by his unit's commander, telling him that "in the event the Twin Towers were attacked to alert the American people of the 1976 plan."

During the 1960s and the Cuban missile crisis, secrets documents were recently leaked, revealing "Operation Northwoods," a secret plan to blame Cuban leader Fidel Castro for a "Pearl Harbor" event to take place in Miami Beach.

Although the plan to demolish high-rise hotels was blocked by President Kennedy, it shows the military had already figured out and planned to use another "Pearl Harbor" to justify war against Castro.

The secret documents, never fully explained by the government, show how a terrorist event was to be staged in Miami and then carried out with help by our own government in order to justify attacking Castro.

Critics claim this exact same manner of military deception used in "Operation Northwoods" eventually played out for real on September, 11, 2001, when terrorists were blamed for the destruction, paving the way for the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq with virtually no dissent from Congress or the American people.

Two of the bin Laden Brothers Tell Unsuspecting American Couple in 1987 About U.S. Government's Plan to Topple the Twin Towers

Since then, they have been the target of CIA surveillance, interrogations and harassment in order to keep their story quiet; Lawmakers and the 9/11 Commission have failed to assist or even listen

12 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Without warning, like a flash out of the blue, a string of black limousines pulled up to the quiet Arizona home of Rene Welch and Ronald Logsdon.

Their house in the desert was immediately surrounded by an intimidating group of foreign-looking men, four or five barging through the door and taking over the living room. The ones who entered quickly taped the windows black, set-up a motion-picture projector and told the frightened couple to pay attention closely.

What happened next to the unsuspecting couple in 1987 could have come right from an old James Bond movie. But, unfortunately, the scene was all too real as years later they still carry the emotional scars of the ill-fated incident

They also carry the bad memories of repeated CIA/FBI harassment, bugging, interrogations and physical abuse, stemming from the encounter with the men in the black limousines.

During the years that followed, Welch, the recipient of most of the CIA's physical abuse, wrote a 150 page account of the 1987 incident to protect her life, sending copies to the Clinton White House and Arizona law enforcement officials. And, still to this day, she has a copy safely tucked away in a bank vault just in case "something happens."

Although Welch and Logsdon have since parted company, they claim the CIA bugging and snooping is ongoing and, in fact, intensified after 9/11.

After years of soul searching and facing many nonbelievers, Logsdon, 49, now living in Philadelphia, has again decided to go public in an attempt to alert others about what the couple learned in 1987 about the government's plan to bring down the WTC to justify war in the Middle East.

There are as many stories about 9/11 conspiracy theories as there are stars in the sky, but this one somehow shines brighter and larger than most. It starts out as a simple story about a young couple who crossed paths in 1986 while getting their degrees in clinical hypnosis. It very well could end, having world wide implications, since their story could provide hard evidence that the U.S. government was planning to bring down the Twin Towers as early as 1987.

As they say in Hollywood, what happened in between is "the stuff movies are made out of," as fact is sometimes stranger than fiction.

"Both of us were interested in advance learning and brain development and worked together on several mechanical devices involved with dream enhancement and foreseeing the future," said Logsdon, an engineer by trade who previously had government security clearances when working for Motorola. "We worked on several devices which put people into a hypnotic state and became well-known for our advanced techniques and use of this type of technology.

"Our work spread quickly through the scientific community and become known to some very wealthy people who were quite interested in exploring development for healing purposes as well as visions of the future."

Looking back, Logsdon said their advanced techniques and the use of what he called "a light and sound machine" inducing sensitivities to foresee the future while under a hypnotic state, was the main reason behind attracting the attention of the men in the black limousines.

Logsdon said what makes the story even more incredible, however, was that two of the men that forcefully entered his home introduced themselves as two of the bin Laden brothers, but neither of the two being Osama.

And from a quiet Philadelphia park bench, a place where our Founding Fathers once walked and were probably still listening intently today, Logsdon continued with the detail of his story, a story that could change the course of American history if anybody bothers to listen or believe.

"Two of the bin Laden brothers came some 90 miles from Phoenix, Arizona, and stopped at our doorstep unannounced. Their bodyguards set up a surveillance parameter around our property and others came into our house, taped up the windows and set up a film projector. The people in this motorcade seemed very scared, and presented this as a matter of life and death," recalled Logsdon, who said at the time in 1987 the couple had no idea about the eventual 9/11 implications.

"These men told us to be very cautious and to assume that we were under surveillance by our government. For several hours they showed us films of meetings of key Arabs and U.S. government officials discussing the oil issues. The bottom line was that if the Arabs did not do it their way, the U.S. would simply take their oil by force. They also explained that they have been manipulated into setting up bank accounts where oil profits were siphoned off and were no longer under their control."

At one point during the meeting, Logsdon said the two bin Laden brothers made it clear they were the "mavericks" in the family, not wanting to see American colonialism take a firm hold over their country's values and vital resources. He also said they were very curious as to whether his "light and sound" machine could help pinpoint dates and times about when a future U.S. takeover of the Middle East would occur.

"Looking back, it was incredible the key information they shared with us concerning how the events of 9/11 actually played out," said Logsdon. "One key film showed several people who presented themselves as U.S. advisers explained how they had come up with a plan how to accomplish this eventual takeover. Using Pearl Harbor as an example, they explained how you needed a trigger even to initiate a war to get the U.S. people on your side.

"They then explained why the World Trade Centers were the ideal target for this purpose. The two bin Ladens showed us this film because they made it very clear how they did not want to be involved with any U.S. plot to manipulate the Arab governments or start a war.

"After 9/11 occurred, it was very obvious to me why the Bush administration would take the extraordinary step of taking the bin Ladens out of the country on September 13th after the towers fell and all planes were grounded. They did not want them to talk and for some reason they still haven't.

Shortly after the strange meeting, the couple parted company, Logsdon ending up in New York where he tried desperately but with out success to alert the United Nations as well as others to what he learned from the tapes shown to him by the bin Ladens.

"Whenever I would try to explain this plot to others, I very quickly learned others did not want to hear of it. Having no evidence or time line, I disappeared in Manhattan and kept looking for some proof," said Logsdon, all the time keeping in close contact with Welch, who now lives in New Mexico.

"René, on the other hand, has had a much more challenging experience. In the early '90s, René met someone who told her we had been under surveillance the whole time. As evidence, the person showed René several file cabinets filled with transcriptions of our bugged house conversations."

Furthermore, he said Welch has been aggressively apprehended several times by agents of the U.S. government, being subjected to extreme interrogation techniques and constant harassment.

"Then, in 1996, in an effort to protect herself, she created a 150 page document telling all she had experienced, sending it to the Clinton White House by registered mail," said Logsdon. "She has also worked with several local authorities in Arizona and New Mexico and given them copies of the document. They, in fact, have been involved in protecting her several times and some of these agents are also willing to testify if it ever comes to trial."

Logsdon said he has also tried to testify before the 9/11 Commission, but never received a response after repeated attempts. After emailing the Commission, Logsdon's computer was "hacked into" by the Defense Department as well as being followed by agents on numerous occasions.

Since 9/11, the couple has been trying to spread the word about their peculiar meeting with the bin Ladens and how this relates to 9/11, but their story has been greeted mostly with deaf ears and disbelieving eyes.

"In August of 2003, I finally went to the FBI and offered myself as a witness so they could contact others to verify my story," said Logsdon. "By about my fourth meeting it became very clear that the FBI had been informed to discard any information about the 9/11 attacks, and that they had not made no effort whatsoever to contact any of the other witnesses.

"Since then I have been accumulating key documents to verify our story and wish to get them to the proper media sources. It is a reasonable assumption that the media has been aware of the truth for quite some time but has been shackled and are unable to get it to the general public. I still trust in the freedom of the press as one of our key rights in this country."

Logsdon said the couple is willing to testify in court or before Congress under oath in order to help bring the truth to the American people about what really occurred before, during and after 9/11.

"We have offered ourselves as willing to testify under oath in court if this ever goes to trial," said Logsdon. "Even though all other 9/11 related court cases have been silenced by the Bush administration, I still remain optimistic that one day justice will prevail."

Federal Whistle Blower Harassed and Hauled Into Court By Homeland Security
Left penniless, homeless and searching parking lots for spare change, a former Federal Maritime Officer does an 'about face' on his government, claiming America has turned into a fascist state

11 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Eric Shine once stood tall and proud as a Federal Maritime Officer, his white officer's hat brimming with loyalty, a crisp right-handed salute directed squarely at serving his country. He was the picture of steadiness and honor, someone who could easily have stepped in and played the part of a military poster boy used to rally the troops.

He came from a family with a military tradition, his father and brother both attending West Point. He had every reason to love his country, every reason to salute the flag. He had every reason to pledge lifetime loyalty to his government since military service ran through his body like blood ran through his veins.

From childhood, Shine had all the ear markings of the "All American" boy, first becoming an Eagle Scout, then attending a Catholic high school and finally graduating from the University of San Diego. After college, he was appointed by Rep. Dale Hunter (R-CA) to the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, one of the five federal service academies, including West Point and Annapolis.

In 1991, Shine finally became a federal U.S. Merchant Marine Officer and was personally appointed by President George H. Bush into "special duty" in the U.S. Naval Reserve and Merchant Marine Reserve programs. For years, he also held a Republican Party membership card, even voting for President George W. Bush in 2000.

But after serving on ships all around the world and always holding firm to Republican Party loyalty, Shine in 2004 did a complete 'about face' on his country, his government and the military.

Doing a complete political turn-a-round, Shine is now sending a much different message, a message "loud and clear for all to hear" that America has quickly turned into a fascist state where the Bill of Rights and freedom of speech are a thing of the past.

How does one so loyal turn so sour so quickly?

Shine said his transformation came after constant personal attacks from Homeland Security and repeated prosecutions "for bogus charges" by the U.S. government. He said these retaliations came after filing internal grievances as a federal whistle blower, citing safety violations and toxic dumping incidents aboard U.S. ships as well as trying to secure a paid leave of absence to be at his fathers bedside when he was sick and dying.

"The Department of Homeland Security has pulled me out of civil court and prosecuted me for my civil complaints, my underlying union grievances as a Federal Officer and my whistle blower letters to Congress," said Shine from his Huntington Beach, Calif., home where is trying to make ends meet working as a handyman.

"The government seized medical records, falsified medical records, denied me so much as a due process hearing and prosecuted me under false military tribunal and denied me pay, benefits, counsel, and more only so they could then strip me of everything including my two homes.

"Even now the United States is attempting to use its influence in the Bankruptcy Courts to trump up charges of perjury so as to lock me away so that I may never live to tell the true story of the gross human rights violations that have been carried out upon me by overwhelming parties that are all representing the interests of the United States of America in one, way shape or form."

The government's excessive retaliatory behavior came after Shine blew the whistle on a Maritime Administration vessel named the SS Comet in the mid 90s, a ship operated by American President Lines in conjunction with the government. In his formal complaint, Shine tried to stop the hazardous dumping of toxic materials as well as alert officials of a possible boiler room explosion caused by company negligence in order to save time and money.

Further Shine claims he was denied adequate leave to care for his sick father and eventually fired from his onboard ship duties for his whistleblower complaints and underlying union grievances. And when he decided to fight back legally, he claims the government systematically mounted a campaign denying him due process rights under the law.

The government has been fighting Shine "tooth and nail," every step of the way, using big Law firms like Gibson, Dunn and Crutcher, the firm who represented George Bush against Al Gore in U.S. the Supreme Court in 2000. are involved.

After writing numerous lawmakers, including Sen. Diane Feinstein (D-CA) and trying to be heard in every federal venue imaginable for over five years, he still has not been able to get a judge to listen to his case.

"Homeland Security, on trumped up charges that I am mentally incompetent due to a drug addiction in my youth, actually pulled me out of civil court where I was trying to have the matters adjudicated under my rights as a federal maritime officer. They did this to effectively block me from voicing my complaints in any and all venues and jurisdictions," said Shine, who has been clean and sober for many years. "It's a fascist state and we have a one party system controlling everything. I know this firsthand from what's happened to me.

Confusing terrorism with the right to file a grievance against the government, Shine said Homeland Security impugned his reputation by distributing defamatory written material.

" Homeland Security even put out and distributed a wanted poster, also known as a "Be On the Look Out" poster or "BOLO" on me saying that I 'may be dangerous' somehow. And of course they did so without any specifications as to why," he said.

More importantly, Shine said his whistleblower complaints also are trying to bring attention to the larger problem of excessive privatization of the U.S. Merchant Marines and its impending takeover by foreign interests.

"Our entire U.S. Merchant Marine is being overrun by foreign flags and private interests and what are supposed to be enormous public assets are being destroyed," said Shine. "Most people do not understand what is going on and need to be alerted of this new danger poised against our sovereignty as a nation and as a free and democratic people."

The one time "All American" boy, who once sang the praises of his government, has now been left penniless, homeless and at times relegated to searching a Costco parking lot for spare change in order to make it through the day.

Although the ongoing legal battle and suppression of what he calls his Constitutional due process rights to be heard in court have left him in financial shambles, he still has enough energy left to warn others of the oppressive hand now controlling our government.

"People do not understand just how far over the edge these guys have gone and they must be stopped. There are many, many more than you can care to imagine and these fascists are targeting and attacking anyone who complains, anyone who "blows the whistle" or asserts their First Amendment rights," said Shine.

"These guys have been planning this since the 1950's and doing everything to position themselves and get everything in order. The game afoot right now has been, again, to get all of the 'laws' in order so that they can get away with anything they want. These guys are crazy and have much more up their sleeves right now and are just months away from the D-Day event."

Friendly Federal Court Judge Doubles WTC Insurance Recovery to a Whopping $7.2 Billion

Shareholder of major insurer that stands to lose billions files grievance for failure to investigate fraud in the future recovery by Larry Silverstein, who acquired the lease on the WTC only six weeks prior to the attacks

9 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A shareholder has filed a grievance against one of the world's largest insurers, charging company bigwigs with failing to investigate possible insurance fraud in relation to a $7.2 billion pay out being litigated over the 9/11 attacks.

John Leonard of California claims management of the Allianz Group, a German-based company carrying a significant portion of the insurance coverage on the WTC, relied on faulty government 9/11 reports and then negligently failed to mount any significant fraud investigation to protect stockholder interests against future excessive pay outs.

"The managing and supervisory boards have taken a passive attitude toward the insurance claims and the suspicious aspects of the WTC insurance loss," said Leonard, whose grievance was to be heard at a May 4 stockholders' meeting. No official word from the company has yet been released.

He added, "The WTC catastrophe was doubtless one of the biggest insurance incidents in history. The investigation of insurance losses and insurance damage claims against the company is naturally one of the chief duties of the management of every insurance firm. The suspicious irregularities of the WTC attach just have not been addressed.

After the attack, Silverstein Properties and Westfield America, the partnership who leased the WTC just months prior to the attacks, commenced litigation against its insurers, including Allianz one of the major policy holders. Leading partner, Larry Silverstein, boldly asserted he was entitled to twice the insurance policy value because, according to a spokesman for Mr. Silverstein:

"The two hijacked airliners that struck the 110-story twin towers Sept. 11 were separate 'occurrences' for insurance purposes, entitling him to collect twice on $3.6 billion collective worth of the policies."

The ensuing legal battle between the insurers and leaseholders then began one month after the attacks, ending with a favorable ruling for Silverstein by U.S. District Judge John S. Martin in December 2004. The judge by agreeing with Silverstein that the two planes that hit the WTC were actually two separate occurrences for insurance purposes actually doubled Silverstein's possible future recovery from $3.6 billion to $7.2.

The case is now on appeal and in order to protect any adverse ruling against Allianz, Leonard has attempted to instigate management to initiate fraud investigations with his shareholder grievance. In his proposal, the California native and a publisher of books on 9/11, pointed to reports that building WTC 7 apparently collapsed by demolition unrelated to the 9/11 attacks as well as many other irregularities.

"Numerous observers and researchers find the WTC case very suspicious. For example, in a public opinion survey, 49.3% of respondents in New York City agreed that 'some of our leaders knew in advance that attacks were planned on or around September 11, 2001, and that they consciously failed to act,' wrote Leonard in his grievance.

"When this belief is so widespread among unrelated parties, haven't the affected insurance companies ever asked whether perhaps the US Government instead of the insurers is responsible for the damages, or whether the possibility of insurance fraud has been investigated?

" From reports in the media about the trial in New York between the insurers and the insured WTC leaseholder, no sign of such motions has been made public. The dispute has been mainly over the question, whether to pay out $7 billion or only $3 billion, whereby the shareholders are supposed to be relieved at the latter sum as a victory of the lesser of two evils."

In his shareholder grievance, Leonard lastly called management to pay strict attention to the strange collapse of WTC Building No. 7.

"WTC-7, as is well-known, was never struck by airplanes, and photographs of it show only insignificant fires. Nevertheless, the 47-story building at WTC 7 suddenly collapsed at around 5:28pm on 9/11. This fact, however, was not even mentioned in the report of the official 9/11 commission."

Besides the enormity of the possible insurance pay outs, independent 9/11 investigators have also called attention to the peculiar timing and control of ownership made by Silverstein only months before the WTC attacks.

The WTC came under the control of a private ownership of Silverstein for the first time on April 26, 2001, having been built and managed by the Port Authority as a public resource since its creation.

Silverstein, then acquired a handsome insurance policy for the complex, including a clause that would prove extremely valuable in the not too distant future. The clause specifically read that "in the event of a terrorist attack, the partnership could collect the insured value of the property, and be released from their obligations under the 99-year lease."

Don Paul, in his 2002 book that investigated the nature of the Silverstein transaction, provided some interesting background information highlighting the incredible deal and low bidding price the new owner was able to negotiate with friendly New York government officials.

"Silverstein's winning bid was $3.2 billion for holdings estimated to be worth more than $8 billion. JP Morgan Chase, a prestigious investment-bank that's the flagship firm of its kind for Rockefeller family interests, advised the Port Authority, another body long influenced by banker and builder David Rockefeller, his age then 85, in the negotiations," Paul wrote.

"The lead partner and spokesperson for the winning bidders, Larry Silverstein, age 70, already controlled more than 8 million square feet of New York City real estate. WTC 7 and the nearby Equitable Building were prime among these prior holdings. Silverstein also owned Runway 69, a nightclub in Queens that was alleged 9 years ago to be laundering money made through sales of Laotian heroin."

The lease deal on the WTC finally was transferred to Silverstein, officially closing on July 24, 2001, just 6 weeks prior to the 9/11 attacks.

One of the 19 WTC Hijackers "Alive and Well" in Casablanca; British WMD Memo Shows President Bush Manipulated Intelligence Reports to Justify Iraqi Invasion

Mainstream media stays silent on stories, 'scooped' by foreign press and internet news hounds; Has the U.S. press become 'government's lapdog' on stories of explosive importance to the American people?

7 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

If Americans want to find out the truth about the war in Iraq and other important stories like the 9/11 scandal, they'll have to rely solely on the foreign press or alternative sources on the internet.

Two major news stories broke this week, bringing this sad state of media affairs to light as the British press acted like America's "leading news hound" while the heavyweights of the U.S. journalism looked like "the government's lapdog."

Supposedly the shining light of free expression throughout the world and able to leap tall journalistic buildings in a single bound, the U.S. press resembled the state-controlled, communist-run propaganda media machine of the past with its nonchalant posture of news reporting.

While the foreign press was busy shooting over two "scoops," equivalent to the military's Silver Star for excellence in reporting, our own press seemingly sat on the stories like a fat hen on an egg and then casually followed-up with second-hand accounts downplaying the importance.

In fact, regarding one major story, Congress heard about it first from foreign sources and shot off a letter of concern to President Bush prior to any major stories appearing stateside. In the past, journalists' heads would have rolled for such a lackadaisical approach. But today sleeping through stories of major concern to the American people seems to be rewarded.

Five of the 19 alleged 9/11 hijackers are "alive and well."

First, a major story broke last week in Casablanca, Morocco, being reported by the Saudi and British press then circulated. To date major American newspaper and television stations have not said a word, covering it like a second-rate dog show in Hoboken, NJ.

It concerns the controversy over whether 19 Arab hijackers, without help, outfoxed American intelligence and defense systems when they rammed jetliners into the WTC and Pentagon. This story, of course, goes to the heart of the truth behind the WTC attacks and should be focus of media attention and investigation. But it isn't, the mainstream media again covering it like a beauty contest held for the 55 and over crowd in Miami Beach.

Since 9/11 is the "mother of all stories" and the identity of the perpetrators one of the main elements of the case, the mainstream media should be following-up on important events like bees on honey. But instead they appear to be purposely ignoring any type of evidence contradicting the government's official version of how 9/11 took place.

In the case of the recent Casablanca story, alleged hijacker Waleed Al Shehri surfaced "alive and well," claiming his innocence after the government quickly reported days after 9/11 that he perished, being one of the five hijackers that deliberately crashed Flight 11 into the WTC.

He recently told journalists there that he had "nothing to do with the attacks" on New York and Washington, and had been in Morocco when they occurred. He has contacted both the Saudi and American authorities, according to Saudi press reports but not a word surfaced in the mainstream press about any of this.

Although the alleged hijacker acknowledges attending flight training school at Daytona Beach in the United States and is the same Waleed Al Shehri to whom the FBI has been referring, he vehemently denies any part in 9/11. He adds, "If I was one of the hijackers how could he still be alive."

To bolster his story and lay incredible suspicion to Homeland Security's and the FBI's efforts to uncover the truth, he claims leaving the United States in September of last year then becoming a well-known pilot with Saudi Arabian Airlines. He currently is in Morocco on a further flight-training course.

Besides the media not uncovering Al Shehri's whereabouts since he has a rather high profile, what does this say about the 9/11 investigation efforts and Homeland Security if one of the alleged hijackers can remain stateside up until last September - three full years after the tragedy - without being found?

It says there's a "fox in the hen house." It says people in the media and government are turning a "blind eye" for their own self-interests. It appears to say this since this goes way beyond any type of gross negligence or incompetence imaginable.

Not only has the media and the government ignored Al Shehri, but what about the four other hijackers who have come forward with similar stories?

For example, Abdulaziz Al Omari, another of the Flight 11 hijack suspects, has also been recently quoted in Arab news reports as being "alive and well." Al Omari claims he lost his passport while studying in Denver and is now an engineer with Saudi Telecoms.

Meanwhile, Asharq Al Awsat newspaper, a London-based Arabic daily, says it has interviewed Saeed Alghamdi, who has been listed by the FBI as a dead hijacker in the United flight that crashed in Pennsylvania.

And furthermore the Arabic daily reported there are suggestions that another hijacker, Khalid Al Midhar, may also be alive, adding to the credibility of the famous words of American writer Mark Twain when he said: "The accounts of my death have been greatly exaggerated."

However, four years after the biggest tragedy in America history, all that FBI Director Robert Mueller can say is that "the identity of several of the suicide hijackers is in doubt."

Conversely, though, why hasn't there been a better effort by the American press to cover the "doubtful identities" of the hijackers while, at the same time, admitting there is much doubt in the credibility of the official government story about 9/11?

But, sadly, stories about Al Shehri and others are left off the front pages, either ignored or hidden on back pages. At the same time, Americans are left uninformed, essentially ignorant of the major issues facing our country.

And, through the whole mess, the mainstream media continues to collect billions in advertising revenues or should it be called "legal hush money" while it gives the government, in return, a free ride to lie, steal and cheat both at home and abroad.

President Bush manipulates intelligence reports about WMD to justify Iraqi invasion

Further evidence of this corrupt manipulation of the news came this week when the London press broke an explosive story with credible evidence and documentation that President Bush "doctored" intelligence reports concerning WMD in Iraq to justify an invasion.

The explosive British intelligence memo leaked to the press made its way to the London papers, but strangely again the U.S. London bureau was a sleep at the wheel. Since the story broke last week, internet accounts first surfaced on www.arcticbeacon.com and www.globalnewsmatrix.com as well as making their way stateside by way of reporters like American Greg Palast, who is able to have more freedom in reporting by working for the British press.

All of this internet and foreign based reporting came prior to the mainstream media echoing a single word about an explosive story which should have been front page news and considered one of the biggest "scoops" in a long time.

To date there has been no television coverage of the potentially damaging memo by Former British foreign policy aide, Matthew Rycroft, who sent a message to British officials of Bush's deceptive posture towards WMD in Iraq only months prior to the invasion.

The memo also reveals how Prime Minister Tony Blair was aware of the deception needed to sell the war idea to both the American and British population and signed onto the deal lock stock and barrel.

What's even more troubling is that the U.S. Congress acted first before a major newspaper here picked up the story. Acting on foreign press accounts, eighty-eight congressmen led by Rep. John Conyers (D-MI), authored a letter of serious concern, demanding an explanation from President Bush on May 5, 2005, a day before any U.S. newspapers even bothered to run the story.

Consider the importance of the WMD issue and then ask how could the mainstream media be "scooped" by the British press and local internet reporters if there isn't a conscience decision being made to "hold off" on news damaging to the war effort and the Bush administration.

Here is a portion of the story the mainstream media can now join in on as a "Johnny Come Lately" instead of leading the way in exposing government corruption:

Just prior to U.S. invasion of Iraq, Rycroft, a foreign policy aide privy to highly classified U.S. intelligence reports, wrote an internal memo to Blair and other British officials clearly revealing a deceptive strategy on the part of the Bush administration to topple Sadaam Hussein by any means necessary and skirting international law. He wrote in the highly classified memo:

"As reported in recent talks in Washington, there was a perceptible shift in attitude. Military action was now seen as inevitable. Bush wanted to remove Sadaam, through military action, justified by the conjunction of terrorism and WMD.

"But the intelligence and facts were being fixed around the policy. The NSC had no patience with the UN route, and no enthusiasm for publishing material on the Iraqi regime's record. There was little discussion in Washington of the aftermath after military action."

Regarding the memo, the Bush administration refused to comment specifically on the allegations, saying it was unaware of its authenticity and contents.. Critics, however, claim this memo clearly rebukes the justification of Bush's war on Iraq, resulting in a clear violation of international law as well as possible criminal violations against the President.

The memo, verified as authentic by the British press, goes on to warn all recipients that it should remain "secret" to all others in light of the highly sensitive material..

"This record is extremely sensitive. No further copies should be made. It should be shown only to those with a genuine need to know its contents," writes Rycroft to Blair.

He further added " The Defense Secretary said that the US had already begun "spikes of activity" to put pressure on the regime. No decisions had been taken, but he thought the most likely timing in US minds for military action to begin was January, with the timeline beginning 30 days before the US Congressional elections."

The memo went on to delineate two possible U.S. war strategies, Iraq's most likely response and Bush's personal awareness of the whole plan.

Explosive English Foreign Policy Memo Clearly Indicates President Bush lied to American People about WMD in Iraq to Justify War

Former foreign policy aide warned British officials of America's deceptive war strategy just months prior to the Iraqi invasion. However, Britain followed America's lead anyway, knowing it was wrong, resulting now in the death of more than 1,700 American troops and more than 100,000 Iraqi innocent civilians

By Greg Szymanski

An explosive memo sent to England's Prime Minister and others by a former foreign policy aide clearly shows President Bush "doctored" intelligence reports prior to the Iraqi invasion in order to justify war based on weapons of mass destruction.

The potentially damaging memo was leaked to the London press this week, revealing an internal memo sent on July 23, 2002, by Matthew Rycroft, a former defense policy aide. Rycroft addressed his concerns about America's deceptive "rush to war" to England's heads of state, including the Prime Minister, Defense secretary, Foreign Secretary and Attorney General.

Since the U.S. invaded Iraq based on an imminent threat of WMD, the Bush administration has stood firm on its decision to topple Sadaam Hussein, claiming it should not be now blamed for faulty intelligence reports. To date no weapons of mass destruction have ever been uncovered in Iraq and serious questions have been raised about America's "rush to judgment" in attacking Iraq.

The memo, which has been verified as "Secret and Personal - For UK Eyes Only," clearly shows the Bush administration lied to the American people about its basis for going to war in Iraq. To date over 1,700 American troops have been killed in the fighting and estimates of over 100,000 innocent Iraqi civilians have also perished.

The London press claims to have verified the authenticity of the memo before publication, also blaming its own government for following America to war even though it had solid evidence no weapons of mass destruction existed in Iraq.

Just prior to U.S. invasion, Rycroft, who was privy to highly classified U.S. intelligence reports, clearly reveals a deceptive strategy on the part of the Bush administration to topple Hussein when he wrote:

"As reported in recent talks in Washington, there was a perceptible shift in attitude. Military action was now seen as inevitable. Bush wanted to remove Sadaam, through military action, justified by the conjunction of terrorism and WMD.

"But the intelligence and facts were being fixed around the policy. The NSC had no patience with the UN route, and no enthusiasm for publishing material on the Iraqi regime's record. There was little discussion in Washington of the aftermath after military action."

Regarding the memo, the Bush administration refused comment saying it was unaware of the specific allegations. Critics claim this memo clearly rebukes the justification of war, resulting in a clear violation of international law.

The memo goes on to warn all recipients that it should remain "secret" to all others in light of the highly sensitive.

"This record is extremely sensitive. No further copies should be made. It should be shown only to those with a genuine need to know its contents," writes Rycroft to the Prime Minister.

He further added that " The Defense Secretary said that the US had already begun "spikes of activity" to put pressure on the regime. No decisions had been taken, but he thought the most likely timing in US minds for military action to begin was January, with the timeline beginning 30 days before the US Congressional elections."

The memo went on to delineate two possible U.S. war strategies, Iraq's most likely response and Bush's personal awareness of the whole plan.

"U.S. military planners are to brief CENTCOM on 1-2 August, Rumsfeld on 3 August and Bush on 4 August (2002). The two broad US (war) options were:

" (a) Generated Start. A slow build-up of 250,000 US troops, a short (72 hour) air campaign, then a move up to Baghdad from the south. Lead time of 90 days (30 days preparation plus 60 days deployment to Kuwait).

" (b) Running Start. Use forces already in theatre (3 x 6,000), continuous air campaign . Total lead time of 60 days with the air campaign beginning even earlier. A hazardous option."

Critics of the Bush administration war strategy, claim this shows clearly Bush "lied to the American people and should be held accountable," giving a full explanation about the contents of the Rycroft memo.

U.S. Congress "hot on heels" of Bush about explosive British WMD memo Eighty-eight Congressman write "letter of concern" to Bush, demanding accountability and answers immediatly; Some in Congress say memo indicated impeachable offense if contents prove true

6 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Congress is "hot on the heels" of President Bush after an explosive memo released to the London press this week clearly shows he "doctored" intelligence reports about WMD in order to justify attacking Iraq.

Eighty-eight members of Congress have quickly authored a letter to Bush, demanding answers regarding the memo clearly showing the administration's "deceptive posture" and "outright determination" to topple Sadaam Hussein despite credible intelligence reports WMD existed.

The Bush administration has not officially commented on the congressional letter, dated May 5, 2005, and sent directly to the White House.

The potentially damaging memo was leaked to the London, revealing an internal memo sent on July 23, 2002, by Matthew Rycroft, a former defense policy aide. Rycroft addressed his concerns about America's deceptive "rush to war" to England's heads of state, including the Prime Minister, Defense secretary, Foreign Secretary and Attorney General.

To date over 1,700 American troops have been killed in the fighting and estimates of over 100,000 innocent Iraqi civilians have also perished.

The letter sent to Bush was authored by Rep. John Conyers (D-MI), who is demanding accountability and is expressing deep concern the mainstream American media has not picked up on the British reports.

"Unfortunately, the mainstream media in the United States was too busy with wall-to-wall coverage of a "runaway bride" to cover a bombshell report out of the British newspapers," Conyers writes in his letter. "The London Times reports that the British government and the United States government had secretly agreed to attack Iraq in 2002, before authorization was sought for such an attack in Congress, and had discussed creating pre-textual justifications for doing so Conyers continued: "The Times reports, based on a newly discovered document, that in 2002 British Prime Minister Tony Blair chaired a meeting in which he expressed his support for "regime change" through the use of force in Iraq and was warned by the nation's top lawyer that such an action would be illegal. Blair also discussed the need for America to "create" conditions to justify the war."

The London press claims to have verified the authenticity of the explosive memo before publication, also blaming its own government for following America to war even though it had solid evidence no weapons of mass destruction existed in Iraq.

Just prior to U.S. invasion, Rycroft, who was privy to highly classified U.S. intelligence reports, clearly reveals a deceptive strategy on the part of the Bush administration to topple Hussein when he wrote:

New Self-Defense Law Could Cause 'Bloodbath' on Florida Streets

It's back to the 'Old Wild West' as new law encourages people to shoot first and talk later

4 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Self-defense law, a solid and deeply thought out legal concept, aims to protect a victim against deadly force by giving the victim the right to return the same deadly force. It also aims to protect the assailant from the same deadly force being returned if the victim makes a mistake, basing this on an objective standard of how a reasonable person under similar circumstances would react.

Florida has now wiped away hundreds of years of legal thinking by replacing the objective standard with one of subjectivity, meaning one can shoot and kill if he simply "subjectively feels" threatened. The law codifies this subjectivity into law and no longer takes into account how a reasonable person would react in determining if self-defense was used properly.

It is a deadly legal concept to live with, according to critics who claim the new self defense law actually will kill more innocent people than it protects.

Florida lawmakers have pushed back the legal clock, sending their state back into what critics call the "good old Wild West" by recently passing a law giving people the right to shoot first and talk later.

At first glance, the law appears to protect innocent bystanders against deadly assault, but in reality many legal scholars say it actually will backfire, leading to a bloodbath on the streets with many innocent people mistakenly killed for no reason.

How this law now works is, of course, a matter of legal interpretation. How it actually will play out in the courts is a matter of legal speculation.

But everyone agrees the message sent out last week by lawmakers and Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, who is looking more like our Texas gun-slinging President every day, is that would-be deadly assault victims can use deadly force without fear of prosecution.

The state claims the revised self-defense law is enhancing victim rights while sending a clear message to violent criminals that they are not welcomed on Florida streets. However, critics contend the law fails to consider how trigger-happy citizens may "shoot first and think later," killing innocent people in the process.

Some Democratic lawmakers said they were "railroaded and manipulated" into signing the Republican sponsored bill, not wanting to appear "soft on crime" because self defense in one's home and automobile are considered reasonable places to expect privacy and be free from criminal threats.

However, the third part of the bill, extending the new self-defense provisions to "street encounters," is where Democratic Sen. Steven Geller draws the line.

"I hate this bill and I voted for it," said Geller. "Here's the problem the first two parts of the bill are mom and apple pie and American flags and Chevrolet, so you can't vote against it and the third part is terrible."

To strike a better balance and in the spirit of compromise, Geller previously tried to remove the street self-defense provision from the legislation but was unsuccessful, saying the Republicans wanted all or nothing.

"A group of people drinking at a sporting event, could easily get into a deadly confrontation and then claim self-defense merely because they felt threatened," said Geller. "Does this really sound like the 'Wild West' and like some bad western you've seen?"

To better understand the new Florida law, consider it takes into account three major areas of self-defense:

First, it codifies into law a long-standing common law principle that a homeowner has the right to use deadly force against an intruder if he feels that he or his family's life is in danger.

This part of the new law is relatively the same as before, since the common law has always given the homeowner a more lenient use of self-defense, not implementing a strict objective standard and allowing the homeowner the latitude of being the "king of his castle" so to speak.

However, critics complain the second and third part of the legislation, extending this privilege to one's car and anyplace outside the home, creates the so-called "Wild West" atmosphere.

The Florida law in these two circumstances changes the benchmark of using proper self-defense drastically from an objective to a subjective standard. Further, it also completely eliminates the "duty of retreat" principle, a very important legal concept.

The law has always recognized that person has a "duty to retreat" from a confrontation, saying that if it is reasonably foreseeable that a person can retreat before using deadly force that a person has a legal duty to do so.

And it is this drastic change in the law that worries critics the most, contending it sends a message of promoting violence first and solving an altercation peacefully second.

Arthur Hayhoe, executive director of the Florida Coalition to Stop Gun Violence blames the National Rifle Association for "helping to slam" the bill through the Florida Legislature, adding that the law simply encourages gun ownership, gun use and gun violence.

"How are you going to reduce crime when you embolden gun owners to act?" he said.

However, Florida Republican Rep. Dennis Baxley, chief sponsor of the bill, has a different view. He said the law is intended to give would-be victims added rights and protections, adding he hopes the law "grows wings" and is adopted by other states.

"We're standing with the people and I truly think it will make a safer society," said Baxley "To me, this reasonable self-protection bill defends innocent life."

Distinguished World War II Vet Calls Media Barons the 'Enemy Within'
Former Republican Party organizer cites media bosses as masters of propaganda bent on destroying America at home and abroad

2 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A distinguished World War II veteran and former Republican Party supporter calls the mainstream media the "enemy within" and is using all his resources to expose media owners for being manipulators of truth and masters of propaganda.

Bill Gibbons of Arizona left the Republican faithful "a long time ago" when he realized firsthand how "both parties were destroying America" along with rich media barons, who he claims actively control both foreign and domestic policy tilted at representing the interests of Israel not America.

Since leaving politics and once being the head of statewide campaign to elect Barry Goldwater, Gibbons has authored two fiction books entitled the "New American Revolution" and "The American Gestapo" as well as running an anti-government/media website loaded with facts and figures about media and government corruption.

Going full time at what he calls "saving the Republic," his website also encourages true Christian values, not "phony ones espoused by most politicians on the left and on the right."

"How can a real Christian rejoice in the death of so many innocent people as we see in Iraq? How can anyone consider George Bush a Christian after what he has done?" said Gibbons, a veteran of two wars, including WW II and the Korean War where he served in Okinawa when his ship, the USS Rall, was attacked by Japanese fighter planes.

Returning to his main goal of exposing the corrupt media, Gibbons said the owners are the real culprits and should be labeled "as traitors" for their part in the destruction and manipulation American policy at home and abroad.

"The media controls the foreign policy of the U.S. and permits Jewish interest rather than American interest to decide questions of war and peace," said Gibbons. "We would not be in the mess we are in if the media was on the side of the American people."

What makes these media barons even more despicable, he said, is they hide behind the 1st Amendment and the U.S. Constitution, waiving the American flag in everyone's face as if their corporate-driven empires were the bastions of freedom, protecting the citizenry from the evils of government.

He added the evils of government, the evils of corporate power and the evils of a deceptive media should not be confused as separate entities, but one well-oiled group of criminal thugs working together to advance the goals of a small but wealthy minority.

This small minority, he said, consists of rich and powerful bankers, corporate bosses, government leaders and media barons, together controlling most of the world's wealth and resources, the world's governments and the world's most influential media outlets.

Gibbons further rationalizes that together they form a "tight-knit mostly Zionist group" who have the American people firmly locked into their way of thinking, their way of doing business and their way government.

Although America is supposedly a melting pot with diverse opinions and views, Gibbons said this diversity is not apparent in newspapers, television news and government policy. He added these media barons have everyone talking in one voice, one distorted and lying voice intended to manipulate the masses so that their rich empires prosper without dissent and political barriers.

Further, he claims what makes these media owners even more despicable is that they hide behind their employees, the reporters and news commentators who usually take the blame for what's wrong with the distorted and biased news coverage.

Looking back into history, he said the words of Jonathan Swinton, the former Chief of Staff for the New York Times and called by his peers "The Dean Of His Profession," fully explains the dismal state of media in America today. Although Swinton's comments were made over 150 years ago to the New York Press Club, Gibbons said they "ring true and could have been made yesterday."

"There is no such thing, at this date of the world's history, in America, as independent press. You know it and I know it. There is not one of you who dares to write your honest opinions, and if you did, you know beforehand that it would never appear in print.

"I am paid weekly for keeping my honest opinion out of the paper I am connected with. Others of you are paid similar salaries for similar things, and any of you who would be so foolish as to write honest opinions would be out on the streets looking for another job. If I allowed my honest opinions to appear in one issue of my paper, before twenty-four hours my occupation would be gone.

"The business of the journalists is to destroy the truth; to lie outright; to pervert; to vilify; to fawn at the feet of mammon, and to sell his country and his race for his daily bread. You know it and I know it and what folly is this toasting an independent press?

"We are the tools and vassals of rich men behind the scenes. We are the jumping jacks, they pull the strings and we dance. Our talents, our possibilities and our lives are all the property of other men.

"We are intellectual prostitutes."

To expose the corrupt media owners and what he calls their "corrupt political agendas," Gibbons has compiled an extensive list of the names of all the world media barons in an attempt to bring the "faceless and nameless cowards" front and center to the American people.

The list, including the heads of Disney, Time Warner, Fox and many others, is in the process of being posted on a new political page on his website.

"Now let us admit that these faceless owners have a name and we need to know their names and expose them for what they are," said Gibbons. "Commentators spend a lot of time dancing around about media bias and accuse the anchormen and women of being the problem.

"But the real problem is the men and women that own the media. The anchors are only puppets, willing puppets for sure but puppets nonetheless. Why don't we tell the people who the owners are and get right to the nitty-gritty of the whole issue? The owners of the major media are the real enemy; so for starters let's tell the people in America who they really are."

CIA 'Black Budget' Estimated at Over $1.1 Trillion Per Year; Scheme to Fund Spy Group Unconstitutional But Lawmakers Don't Care
Citizens who fund 'secret money' have no legal recourse to sue; no one has even challenged the constitutionality of the CIA's budget methods since 1967

1 May 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Secret money given to the CIA for operations home and abroad is a topic most government officials avoid like the plague. They avoid it since the amount of money and where it comes from remains a guarded mystery.

Over the years, many mere mortals have attempted to unravel it, but all have failed. Even Indiana Jones and his Lost Crusaders of the Arc would probably find tracking the CIA's "black budget" impossible, since it's like trying to find a pot of gold at the end of a rainbow or trying to pinpoint the exact location of the Holy Grail.

Why is it so difficult? It's difficult because the CIA has the unique ability to generate funds through appropriations earmarked for other federal agencies, collecting money secretly without regard for any provisions of law or the intent behind public disclosure of congressional expenditures.

Critics of the CIA "black budget" call the process grand theft, a rip-off of taxpayer money and a blatant violation of Article 1, Section 9, Clause 7 of the U.S. Constitution. Supporters claim the "black budget" process is legal by the passage of the 1949 CIA Act and a subsequent 1974 U.S. Supreme Court decision.

Whatever the case, no one will argue that the CIA funding process is unorthodox at best, out-of-control at worst and at least ripe for debate since billions upon billion of hard-earned taxpayer dollars makes the whole process possible in the first place.

"Every year billions of dollars of Congressional appropriations are diverted from their sanctioned purposes to the CIA and DOD based intelligence agencies without knowledge of the public and with the collusion of Congressional leaders," said PhD Michael Salla, who authored an extensive 2003/04 CIA funding analysis for the Center of Global Peace in Washington D.C.

"The covert world of 'black programs' acts with virtual impunity, overseen and regulated by itself, funding itself through secret slush funds and it's free of the limitations that come from congressional oversight, proper auditing procedures and public scrutiny."

Salla's report was the first serious attempt to revisit the "black budget" issue since the CIA in 1997 was forced by a Federal Judge to disclose its budget based on a Freedom of Information lawsuit filed by the Federation of Atomic Scientists. Also backed by the Clinton administration, arguing full disclosure would not hinder national security, the CIA reluctantly for the first time was ordered to release the size of its official "black budget."

Under then CIA Director George Tenet, a figure of $26.6 billion for 1997 was released based solely on appropriations drawn from single line items in the Department of Defense (DOD) budget.

However, Salla makes a convincing argument that the figures released are grossly inaccurate and are intended to steer analysts, Congress and the general public away from the true size of the CIA's actual budget.

"The main purpose of the CIA is to act as a funnel for the combined black budgets of the intelligence community and the DOD. This is the reverse of the conventional wisdom that the DOD is the only source that funds the CIA," said Salla. "In Fact, it is the CIA that funds secret projects run by various military and intelligence services in the DOD.

"Using the testimony of whistleblowers and the report of the DOD's independent Inspector General, I have found the CIA's actual annual budget exceeds a trillion dollars in a given fiscal year.

"I have found that the CIA surreptitiously extracts this money from a variety of federal agencies, including HUD and then siphons the money to the many military intelligence agencies within the DOD. The money is then distributed to 'deep black projects' outside the regular appropriations and oversight process mandated by Congress for 'black projects'."

Although figures are not available after 2000, the Inspector General calculated the CIA has siphoned $1.7 trillion in 1998, $2.3 trillion in 1999 and $1.1 trillion in 2000. This entire CIA funding process, of course, has dubious constitutional authority, but is allowed by various Congressional enactments and secret approval given by the Executive branch and high-ranking congressional leaders.

"The size of the CIA budget is much larger than reported and is shrouded in secrecy," said Salla. "The extent by which senior officials go to targeting individuals and companies that threaten to reveal where Congressional appropriations are ultimately going, suggest a vast network of 'deep black projects' that collectively form a highly classified second Manhattan Project whose existence, goals and budget are kept secret."

In 2002, investigative journalist Kelly O'Meara agreed with Salla after investigating the CIA budget and sifting through the Inspector General's report.

Elaborating on its significance and pointing to huge sums of missing money, she wrote: "The eight page summary by the Inspector General clearly shows the DOD fiduciary failures. He admitted in the report that $4.4 trillion in adjustments to the Pentagon's books had to be cooked to compile the required financial statements and that $1.1 trillion of that amount could not be supported by reliable information. In other words, at the end of the last full year on Bill Clinton's watch. More than $1 trillion was simply gone and no one can be sure when, where or to whom the money went."

Using the Inspector General's reports and O'Meara's allegations of missing money, the CIA's annual actual budget is estimated by Salla and others to be in the vicinity of $1.1 trillion a year, a truly staggering figure when considering the DOD's entire 2004 budget was $380 billion dollars.

Salla refers to the CIA's enormous 'black budget' as Manhattan II, claiming its vast network of funding dwarfs the original funding for the original Manhattan Project conducted at Los Alamos Laboratories during World War II.

Since the original project was set up to fund the development of an atomic bomb, Salla said the present CIA budget is also used to fund advanced weapons systems and intelligence capabilities for use against adversaries whose existence and identity remain unknown.

He adds that since 9/11 the amount of CIA funding has gone virtually unreported, but probably has grown by "leaps and bounds" due to the cumbersome addition of the Homeland Security Department as well as overlapping of intelligence community responsibilities both home and abroad.

Besides the push in the late 90's to bring CIA accountability, which has only complicated matters, the Senate decided in 1976 for the first time to intensely scrutinize the CIA's covert activities and "black budget" in the wake of the Vietnam war.

In a final report released by the Church Committee, it found the CIA budget process unconstitutional and recommended public disclosure when it stated:

"The CIA budget procedures prevent most members of Congress from knowing how much money is spent or even how much money is spent on the intelligence as a whole. In addition, members of the public are deceived about the appropriations and expenditures of other federal agencies whose budgets are inflated to conceal funds for the intelligence community.

"The failure to provide this information to the public and to Congress prevents either from effectively ordering priorities and violates Article 1, Section 9, Clause 7 of the Constitution."

Unfortunately, the Church Committee recommendation was never implemented as the CIA Director at the time, George H. Bush, successfully convinced the committee to hold off on its recommendations due to national security concerns. The committee eventually voted 6-5 in favor of Bush and its recommendations were never brought before the Senate for a full vote.

Since the birth of the CIA "black budget" in 1949, the courts have rarely touched on the issue. In fact, William Richardson in 1967, an ordinary citizen troubled by the CIA's secrecy over the "black budget," has been the only person to file a case challenging its constitutionality.

After being refused access to the CIA's budget, Richardson filed a federal case, claiming the CIA Act "was repugnant to the Constitution since it operates to falsify the regular statement and account of all public money."

The case was first dismissed by a Pittsburgh federal court after three years of legal wrangling, the judges finally skirting the main issue and finding Richardson lacked legal standing to sue the government since he was not directly effected by the government's spending procedures.

In 1972, Richardson was vindicated briefly by a favorable Federal Appellate decision overturning the lower court ruling, the court saying in part:

"A responsible taxpayer and citizen, of course, wants to know how his tax money is spent. Without this information, he cannot intelligently follow the actions of the Congress and the Executive. Nor can he properly fulfill his obligations as a member of the electorate."

However, before the merits of the case could ever be litigated, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned the appellate court on the standing issue, agreeing with the lower court that Richardson was not directly effected by the spending and did not have a legal right to have his case heard in court.

Adopting the conservative legal position, which has not been challenged since 1967, the court ruled that Richardson's suit was nothing more than a generalized political grievance that needed to be dealt with through the political system, rather than the legal system.

And the old adage adopted by Richard Nixon, who once said "if the President does, it's not illegal" or "if it's secret, it's legal" still appears to be the political system we are operating under today.

Critics claim it is a corrupt system that still allows the CIA to siphon off trillions of dollars without public knowledge or awareness, a system which does not even allow the citizens who fund it the right to a legal avenue to challenge its validity.

Sibel Edmonds, Wearing the 'Scarlet R' and Labeled by the Government as a 'Rat,' Only Wants Truth Told About 9/11 Information

She was called a 'whore' and told 'to rot in jail' by supervisors before being fired by FBI
28 Apr 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Whistleblower Sibel Edmonds sits in her quiet Virginia home with a "Scarlet R" on her back, branded by the government as a "rat" for her attempt at helping uncover the truth behind the 9/11 attacks.

Before being fired as an FBI translator for trying to report serious security breaches, she was even called "a whore" by one of her supervisors and told by another she'd "rot in jail if she ever opened her mouth."

Edmonds didn't take their bullish advice, filing a federal whistleblower suit to make known the FBI irregularities concerning the post 9/11 investigations as well as alleging wrongful termination on the part of the bureau.

So far it hasn't done much good as the Bush administration has pounced on Edmonds like a mafia boss sicking the attack dogs on someone trying to divulge family secrets.

First former Attorney Gen. John Ashcroft had her lower circuit court case dismissed last year using the "state secret's act" claiming Edmonds entire claim threatened national security.

A three judge federal panel agreed with Ashcroft, saying every bit of her case, including the wrongful termination based on her whistleblower case, was a matter of national security. The court went further, ordering Edmonds' testimony made to Congress and any related congressional hearings about Edmonds be kept silent.

In other words, the mafia boss told his lawyer to tell the justices who are on the government payroll to keep the "little lady's mouth shut or else!" Or else what? Or else the truth be told? Or else the government be exposed for having a hand in causing 9/11?

"Usually when the government goes to such extremes to keep someone quiet, it's not because it wants to save money or protect its image over losing a lawsuit," said another Washington whistleblower who prefers to remain unknown. "The government has plenty of money and its image is already hopelessly tarnished for this to be its motive. Usually the motive is to hide something very damaging or incriminating."

And in the case of Edmonds, critics believe her information, if made public, would show government complicity in 9/11 through communications she heard between terrorists involved in the attacks and U.S. government officials.

Much has been said and written about Edmonds with attorneys on both sides fighting over technicalities blurring the main issue: Edmonds heard something she shouldn't have and the government is doing everything, short of having her killed, to keep her quiet.

In the meantime, the government's quest to keep Edmonds silent continues stronger than ever, as last week the ACLU's appeal to have her case reopened before the Federal Court of Appeals took on the appearance of a hearing taking place in Nazi Germany.

In a last minute legally unprecedented move, the Court of Appeals announced the hearing would be held behind closed doors with attorneys and Edmonds present but under a gag order to keep silent about the proceedings.

Again the mafia boss gave his orders and everybody in the organization listened. For the time-being it appears the government bosses are winning, Edmonds forced into silence about the particulars of her complaints in fear of facing jail-time and the public left with only speculation about the government's hand in 9/11.

However, the fight to remove the court's gag order and to open up the proceedings goes on in earnest, as Edmonds and many other federal whistleblowers united last week in a Washington rally to bring attention to the abuse of power and secrecy employed by the government.

The federal court's surprise move to close the Edmonds hearing also brought emergency motions filed in opposition by the ACLU and other public interest groups, as well as several media organizations including The Washington Post, The New York Times, Reuters America, the Associated Press and The Hearst Corporation.

Several 9/11 family member advocacy groups have also signed on in support of Edmonds cause in a "friend of the court" brief filed, advocates using the national security argument against the government., saying "if government employees do not report security breaches for fear of retaliation, then national security in turn suffers by silencing the truth."

And in another interesting twist, it appears the Justice Department's own Inspector General in a January 2005 summary now agrees the major thrust of the Edmonds case does not really concern national security.

"The Justice Department's own Inspector General has now concluded publicly that the FBI fired Edmonds for reporting agency misconduct," said Ann Beeson, Associate Legal Director of the ACLU, who argued on behalf of Edmonds. "Clearly the FBI is using secrecy not to protect national security but to avoid accountability for its own mistakes

"Edmonds' case is not an isolated incident. The federal government is routinely retaliating against government employees who uncover weaknesses in our ability to prevent terrorist attacks or protect public safety. From firing whistleblowers to using special privileges to cover up mistakes, the government is taking extreme steps to shield itself from political embarrassment while gambling with our safety."

In light of all the legal wrangling, Edmonds remains isolated and for the most part silent in her Virginia home. Numerous calls and emails sent by the American Free Press during the last week have been unanswered, suggesting she fears violating the gag order and being sent to jail for commenting specifically about her case.

Bush Administration Seeks to Dismiss Federal RICO Lawsuit Alleging Complicity in 9/11

Plaintiff's attorney cites the government's 'pack of lies' and calls for the American people to peacefully rise up against the Bush fascist state.

24 Apr 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A motion to dismiss the Federal RICO lawsuit against President Bush and others, alleging complicity in 9/11, met heavy resistance last week by Plaintiff William Rodriguez. He urged the court to allow the case to proceed as defendants, including Bush, have lied repeatedly about any advance warnings of the WTC attacks.

Rodriguez's attorney Phil Berg cited "lie after lie," urging the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District to hear the case despite strong government pleas, citing national security concerns as well as the court's lack of jurisdiction to hear such a conspiracy claim.

The court listened to oral arguments and took written briefs from both parties under advisement on April 22 in Philadelphia, where the cases is filed, and is expected to make a ruling in the coming weeks.

Berg said the government's legal motions are baseless and just another attempt to silence "anyone trying to get at the truth behind 9/11."

"I am swamped, overworked, understaffed and way under funded," said Berg from his Philadelphia law office. "Despite the Bush administration efforts to keep this case silent or change venue to New York where I am not licensed, the judge gave me great latitude in allowing me to argue my case and permitted me to state critical evidence. However, until these various motions are resolved, we cannot enter in the nuts and bolts of the official discovery process."

Some of the critical evidence allowed by the judge at the motion hearing involved Berg's allegations about the incessant lies told by Bush and other government higher-ups concerning pre-9/11 warnings.

Berg told the court bluntly: "If there was no government complicity in the 9/11 attacks, why have defendants lied repeatedly about abundant advance warnings?"

He added that many of the defendants have lied publicly, including President Bush in a statement made to NATO just days after the attack on September 16, 2001, his statements now proven to be categorically misleading and false.

"Never did it occur in anybody's thought process about how to protect America, did we ever think that the evildoers would fly not one, but four commercial aircraft into precious U.S. targets . . . never," said Bush.

Berg added that Press Secretary Ari Fleischer also lied in a May 16, 2002, press statement when he announced: "The President did not receive information about the use of airplanes as missiles by suicide bombers. This was a new kind of attack that had not been foreseen."

Adding to the enormity of the lying, Berg cited a statement made by Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld made to the entire nation on September 30, 2001:

"Never would it have crossed anyone's mind that a commercial airline would be used as a missile. Usually a hijacker who takes an airplane, of course, wants to get someplace or wants to make a statement or wants to go on television or wants to hold hostages, but this [suicide attacks using hijacked airplanes] is a distinctly different behavior pattern than we have seen previously, and now, obviously, something we have to be attentive to."

Further, Berg added that Transportation Secretary Norman Mineta also lied to the 9/11 Commission, on May 23, 2003, when he said: "I don't think we ever thought of an aircraft being used as a missile. We had no information of that nature at all."

In a passionate plea, Berg called the court's attention one more obvious lie made to the 9/11 Commission.

"Shockingly, in light of very recent revelations, is the following false testimony to the Commission by FAA Administrator Jane Garvey, as reported by UPI: 'I was not aware of any information about airplanes being used as weapons that was credible.'

Berg then in his written brief attacked the Bush Administration in a more general terms, citing a climate of arrogance existing throughout the halls of government.

"The above lying was done, no doubt, with absolute confidence on the part of the liars in their own impunity, as the same was not done under oath. However, the brazenness of senior Administration defendants is not deterred by the penalties of perjury. Both houses of Congress are under Republican control. A majority of the United States Supreme Court has shown its partisan colors, in installing George W. Bush as President in the first place.

"The major media, owned by a handful of corporations, some of which like General Electric, the owner of NBC, is even profiting from the war in Iraq. The only way to now get at the truth is by the legal process, which the government also seeks to silence."

Rodriguez, a maintenance worker on duty at the WTC on 9/11, originally filed the lawsuit in October 2004 against Bush and 52 others in government, alleging they had prior knowledge or actively planned the attacks in order to launch wars against Afghanistan and Iraq.

The extensive 237 page civil complaint, under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), claims Bush and others engaged in racketeering activity in violation of 18 U.S.C. Section 1962c.

The complaint seeks relief for Rodriguez based on 13 counts, including Misprision of a Felony, Misprision of Treason, relief under the Anti Terrorism Act, relief under the War Crimes Act and relief for and from Crimes Against Humanity.

Since the case has been opened the government has attempted at every turn to dismiss the action, hoping Berg, who is working alone, runs out of energy or financial resources to continue.

"It is time for a non-violent revolution by the millions of Americans who are tired of their rights being diminished by the Bush Administration, tired of the lies of the Bush administration, tired of the lies about Iraq and tired and disgusted with the lies about 9/11," said Berg in a plea of unity to those seeking the truth about 9/11.

"Now is the time to stand tall together and bring back our freedoms as they stood under the Declaration of Independence, Bill of Rights and the Constitution of the United States."

In the main RICO action under special pleading rules, Berg is allowed to specifically state facts showing a conspiracy among the defendants in the events before, during and after 9/11. The detailed complaint attempts to show a web of government conspiracy dating back to the late 1970's when Osama bin Laden was first put on the government payroll as a CIA operative to fight the Soviets in Afghanistan.

Berg claims this web of government deceit and financial backing continues all the way up to days just preceding 9/11 as witnesses will testify and records will reveal that the alleged hijackers were actually on the government payroll. The complaint goes on to say that the defendants deliberately concealed the fact that they had ample warnings of terrorist attacks and failed to act on them in order to carry out a full-blown war on terrorism as a means to justify their neo-conservative political goals.

Regarding 9/11 itself, the Rodriguez action aims to prove the following main points:

-- The World Trade Center, as well as WTC Building #7, were destroyed by a controlled demolition, as clearly proven by the laws of physics and that this demolition could have only been an "inside job.

-- An unprecedented nationwide "ground stop" order and stand down of NORAD must have had White House approval since it prevented even the military from flying, allowing the 9/11 attacks to proceed without interruption.

--The defendants conspired to and did allow the attacks to happen by delaying military interceptions of the hijacked planes in the following manner:

Flight 11 (North Tower) and Flight 175(South Tower) could have been intercepted by fighter jets before collision, but were not due to an ordered "stand down" of NORAD defense systems on the morning in question. Evidence will also show that the flight patterns taken and the manner in which the sophisticated jets were handled could not have been accomplished by untrained, novice pilots with only box cutters. The evidence will further show that Flight 11 and Flight 175's transponders may have been dismantled by government insiders, making them both invisible on radar screens and thus allowing for the airplanes to be guided by a remote control into the WTC by a government system called Global Hawk.

Flight 77 not only could have been intercepted by fighter jets but was allowed to fly uncontested a full 50 minutes before striking the Pentagon. Evidence will further show that the object that hit the Pentagon was not a commercial airliner but in fact a government guided missile.

The crash of Flight 93 in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, raises serious additional questions which will show that it was actually shot down by government fighter jets and not brought down due to a terrorist struggle in the cockpit.

FEMA, which quickly removed the WTC, Pentagon and Flight 93 debris before they could be independently examined, maintains a "Black-Op" shadow government designed to replace the elected government of the United States.

The "insider trading on American Airlines and other 9/11 affected stocks was subject to an ongoing cover-up to conceal the identities of those who had actual prior knowledge of the 9/11 attacks.

Hypocrite Gingrich To Possibly Run For President; Imagine Ann Coulter As His First Lady!

He once stold money from inner city kids to advance his own political agenda and while having a secret extra-marital of his own, he jumped on the Republican family values wagon to criticize the Clinton-Lewinsky affair.

23 Apr 2005

By Greg Szymanski

There are only two things left for Newt Leroy Gingrich to do in order to solidify his position as the biggest hypocrite ever to grace the American political scene:

Run for President of the United States and have a juicy affair with Ann Coulter.

As for the Presidency, rumors surfaced in the media last week that he was throwing his hat in the presidential ring. And, as for Coulter, it's not too far fetched to think that Gingrich hasn't at least tried to get into her conservative pants, considering his past track record for chasing after Washington women.

Imagine for a moment if the affair grew serious. Imagine the vision of President-elect Gingrich taking the oath of office with Coulter by his side as First Lady.

Luckily, for the Republic, it's only an imagination. And hopefully for the salvation of the American people, the rumors about Gingrich running for President will remain only rumors.

There are so many reasons why Gingrich is not qualified to run for President, it's hard to know where to begin. Here are a few of his political blunders:

Gingrich Bounces 22 Checks in House of Representatives Banking Scandal

Remember the House Banking scandal in the early 90s, when Congressmen got their hands caught in the cookie jar and Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-III) was sent to jail for writing rubber checks on government money.

Gingrich, however, probably hopes all is forgotten since he bounced 22 checks himself, almost costing him reelection in 1992.

During this same time period, Gingrich also should be remembered for his vote for the secret House pay raise as well as being caught driving around Washington in a chauffeur-driven Lincoln Town Car.

Lucrative and Questionable $4.5 Million Book Deal With Rupert Murdoch

Gingrich probably wants everyone to forget about his 1995 book scandal when he was offered $4.5 million by Harper Collins, a publishing company owned by Rupert Murdoch, who also owns the Fox TV, newspapers and other TV stations around the world.

During this same time, Murdoch had been having problems with a complaint lodged by NBC, claiming Fox was operating illegally in the U.S. due to foreign ownership since Murdoch is Australian.

It was learned that in the past, Harper Collins had offered million dollar book contracts to several other conservative politicians in countries where Murdoch was also experiencing regulatory trouble, including England's Margaret Thatcher and Jeffrey Archer.

Looking to the American public like he was being bribed by Murdoch in return for a political favor, Gingrich decided to give up the $4.5 million advance but still accepted a lucrative deal based on royalties.

This, however, wasn't the first controversial book deal involving Gingrich. In 1983, he established a limited partnership in Atlanta called COS Limited, which pulled together about two dozen of his biggest campaign contributors to finance another book.

The former administrator of his Georgia Congressional offices, Dolores Adamson, eventually resigned over the deal said, "The manuscript was put together in the district office using office equipment He would just come in and say 'This is what I want to do.' I would say, 'This is not ethical,' but after a while he didn't listen."

Taxpayer Money Used for Gingrich's Personal and Political Gains

Gingrich was the king of using taxpayer subsidized donations for his personal and political purposes. He reportedly even stooped so low as to hijack two charities for poor inner city kids and use their donations for his personal goals.

GOPAC, Newt's longtime political action committee, was the centerpiece of a complex network of non-profit, and mostly tax-exempt organizations that Newt has used to support himself and other conservative candidates.

In an act of incredible hypocrisy, this supposed public tax crusader used taxpayer money for his personal and political goals, by misusing these tax-exempt groups.

For example, one GOPAC document said that its goal for the 1990s was "to create and disseminate the doctrine of a majority Republican party." In another GOPAC document, titled "Key Factors in a House GOP Majority," Gingrich wrote:

"It is more powerful and more effective to develop a reform movement parallel to the official Republican party, instead of using the party structure, because it would get more attention and be more credible."

Shortly thereafter, GOPAC paid for a television program promoting a "grassroots" movement to reform government; publicly claiming it was nonpartisan, but privately internal documents made its partisan goals extremely clear.

In 1990, Gingrich transferred the GOPAC program to the "Abraham Lincoln Opportunity Foundation," a tax-exempt group to help inner city kids. Using this as a front, Gingrich used $260,000 for his partisan politics instead of using the money to help the poor.

He is best known, however, for using a college course, titled "Renewing American Civilization" at a second-rate college, as a front to recruit and organize conservative candidates, feeding them his carefully constructed ideology and political slogans.

For his actions, several House Ethic's Committee complaints were lodged and Gingrich ended up paying a $300,000 fine for misusing public money and abusing the public trust.

In return for resigning his position as House Speaker, the Ethics Committee dropped its charges despite clearly finding that he violated House rules by repeatedly using a political consultant paid by GOPAC to develop the Republican political agenda.

Draft Dodger:

Although he was a relentless hawk throughout his term in office, pushing heavily for military spending, Gingrich actually went out of his way to avoid the Vietnam War through a combination of student and family deferments

Besides Gingrich's sleazy politics and obvious draft dodging, his public stance regarding family values and his actions in private life prove he is the ultimate hypocrite. Here are a few examples:

Gingrich Has Affair While Criticizing Clinton-Lewinsky Scandal

In an act of amazing hypocrisy, Gingrich had the audacity to publicly criticize Clinton while he dated and basically lived with Callista Bisek, a blond congressional aide 23 years his junior.

As Gingrich jumped on the Republican family values bandwagon while smearing Clinton's affair with Monica Lewinsky, newspapers reported Bisek, 33, had been spending nights at Gingrich's apartment near the Capitol.

In 1995, Vanity Fair magazine described Bisek as Gingrich's "frequent breakfast companion." Gingrich was married to Marianne Gingrich during all of that time, filing for divorce in August 1999.

Gingrich Caught Cheating With His First Wife, Jackie

"It was common knowledge that Newt was involved with other women during his [first] marriage to Jackie. Maybe not on the level of John Kennedy, but he had girlfriends -- some serious, some trivial," said Dot Crews, his campaign scheduler throughout the 1970s.

Verifying Crews statements, Anne Manning came forward, confirming a relationship with Gingrich during the 1976 campaign.

"We had oral sex. He prefers that modus operandi because then he can say, 'I never slept with her,'" said Manning.

And even more revealing, Kip Carter, his former campaign treasurer, once caught Gingrich in a rather embarrassing situation. As he escorted Gingrich's daughters from a local football game, he saw their father engaging in extracurricular activities of his own in the school's parking lot.

"As I got to the car, I saw Newt in the passenger seat and one of the guys' wives with her head in his lap going up and down. Newt kind of turned and gave me this little-boy smile. Fortunately, Jackie Sue and Kathy were a lot younger and shorter than and didn't see what was going on," said Carter in several newspaper accounts.

Gingrich Presses First Wife for Divorce While in Hospital Suffering From Cancer

"He walked out in the spring of 1980.... By September, I went into the hospital for my third surgery. The two girls came to see me, and said, 'Daddy is downstairs. Could he come up?' When he got there, he wanted to discuss the terms of the divorce while I was recovering from my surgery," said Jackie, his first wife.

Gingrich was also quoted as saying this about his first wife:

"She isn't young enough or pretty enough to be the President's wife."

Second Marriage Ends In Divorce

Gingrich's second marriage to Marianne also ended unhappily with allegations flying in the 1999 divorce proceedings about his repeated infidelity and his attempts to hide marital assets.

Perhaps Marianne's statement about her husband's chances for the Presidency, made during the height of his political career in the mid-90s, is a good indication of how many Americans feel today about his renewed interest for the White House.

"I don't want him to be President and I don't think he should be!"

Economic Hit Man In Tell-All Book Points Finger at CIA for Assassinations in Ecuador and Panama

Americans need to know why we are hated outside our borders; U.S. foreign policy operates through extortion, loan sharking, murder and, as a last resort, war and military occupation

21 Apr 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A former Washington insider who once acted as a pimp in order to get a wealthy Saudi Prince to play "economic U.S. hardball" has finally come clean in a tell-all book entitled "Confessions of an Economic Hit Man."

But pimping a beautiful blonde is only the beginning of John Perkins' incredible story. His startling book, a must-read for anyone who wants to know why America is hated around the world, reveals how foreign governments are intimidated and uncooperative leaders assassinated while the U.S. masquerades as a benevolent benefactor.

For more than 15 years, the former corporate consultant, acting as a third party intermediary between the U.S. and foreign leaders, lived in a dangerous "political underworld" of deceit, bribery, loan sharking and murder while advancing America's shady foreign policy interests.

Perkins finally went public, detailing how the U.S. "gets what it wants" by using a mafia-style tactics, after being guilt-ridden from taking a half million dollar bribe from the Stoner-Webster Corp. to keep silent and being haunted by the memory of the 9/11 tragedy. He adds 9/11 is the result of foreign retaliation based on years of U.S. aggression.

His book clearly shows the ugly side of America's empire building and provides a firsthand account why the "jackals" in the CIA were responsible for the assassinations of President Omar Torrijos of Panama and President Jaime Roldas of Ecuador.

Perkins said the pair was killed after they failed to accept U.S. sponsored bank loans. Essentially, these inflated loans were geared to bankrupt both countries, leaving behind a sea of poverty while forcing them to use American corporations who would have profited greatly.

"It's the way the game is played," said Perkins. "When both leaders didn't play ball, mysteriously they died in plane crashes several months later."

How the "game is played" provides the main thrust of Perkins' book and his role as the government's "economic hit man" provides the credibility behind the shocking details. Page by page, every step of the way, he portrays America as a greedy villain, never taking "no" for an answer when it comes to raping a country of its wealth and natural resources.

"In Indonesia, Panama, South America, Saudi Arabia, Iraq and Iran, the U.S. has used the same system of economic intimidation, assassination and then ultimately war as a last resort to get what it wants," said Perkins.

Perkins remembers first recruited by the Boston consulting firm of Chas T. Main in 1971 after a two year stint in the Peace Corp. The firm worked closely with the National Security Agency and CIA, recruiting Perkins for his knowledge of languages while working in Ecuador.

After being trained and given his first assignment in Indonesia, Perkins describes his 10 year tenure with the consulting firm as "technically legal, but morally and ethically bankrupt."

Essentially, no matter where he traveled or what leader he was hired to manipulate, the modus operandi was the same. Perkins would meet with a leader of a targeted country, encouraging him to accept a large loan for an inflated project that both the CIA and the leader knew the country could not afford.

When the loan was accepted, usually through U.S. connections at The World Bank, the money would be transferred to a bank in the U.S. and then funneled back to U.S. companies through massive construction and engineering projects.

Perkins's job was to provide inflated loan estimates, saddling the underdeveloped country with a massive debt, impossible to repay and leaving the country at the mercy of the U.S. to dictate repayment terms. These terms often times included the right to construct a strategically important military base, a favored U. N. vote in support of U.S. policy or cheap access and usage to a country's natural resources.

"Once the third world country was economically indebted to the U.S., the CIA would then have its hooks into manipulating the course and direction of the country's political agenda," said Perkins.

Perkins added that if this type of loan was arranged between private parties, it would be called extortion, but in the international arena it's simply dismissed as economic development.

In cases where leaders refused to be bribed by U.S. bank rolls, Perkins reminded them of the fate of others like Torrijos of Panama or Roldas of Ecuador, who were either killed or the victims of a CIA orchestrated coup.

In the case of Iraq, Perkins said failed assassination attempts on Saddam Hussein led to the Gulf War and the recent Iraqi invasion blamed on the war on terror.

"Saddam could not be convinced to sell out and the jackals at the CIA could not get to him. This left the U. S. with only one option: war," said Perkins. "The choice was simple for most other leaders. Either they accepted our terms and our money or the U.S. would remove them from office."

Perkins said the "same extortion game" is now being played with Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez, as the U.S. seeks to control the resources of the oil-rich country. Chavez recently survived a failed coup and he openly denounced the U.S for its involvement. Perkins now fears the "jackals of the CIA are now planning to have the popular leader killed.

This type of U.S. extortion was also used by Perkins in Saudi Arabia after the 1973 oil embargo when Washington offered to take the oil-rich nation into the 20th century with technical support and military hardware as long as the oil kept flowing at a modest price.

"My job was to ensure that large amounts of petro dollars went back to the U.S. by inflating loans and justifying the infusion of hundreds of millions of dollars into the Saudi economy as long as the U.S. engineering and construction companies benefited," said Perkins.

"The money laundering by the Saudis, in turn, caused the U.S. to turn a blind eye as the Saudi government bankrolled Osama bin Laden's fight against the Soviets. And later, the Saudis became the epicenter for financing terrorist groups, including Al Qaeda."

Besides Saudi Arabia, Perkins relationship with President Torrijos of Panama during the same time period provides another good example of the crooked back door policies of American foreign policy.

Perkins said Torrijos knew U.S. foreign aid was a sham and refused to cooperate from the beginning, saying he would only accept legitimate loans which would benefit his people not U.S corporations.

"When he forced the U.S. to relinquish the Panama Canal, I had a vision that his plane would one day drop from the sky in a giant fireball, which came true in 1981," said Perkins, adding it had all the markings of a CIA assassination. Torrijos was then replaced by Manuel Noriega who, at the time, was on friendly terms with the U.S.

It was right after Torrijos' death that Perkins left the consulting firm, having a change of heart since he had established a personal friendship with the Panamanian leader. He then started an alternative energy company and also began working with a number of environmental movements to preserve the Amazon rain forests from oil companies, trying to perhaps atone for what happened in the past.

During the years that followed, however, he succumbed to bribes and threats by corporate insiders who kept him from telling his story until the events of 9/11 finally convinced Perkins to write his book.

"I wanted and needed to expose what was going on," said Perkins. "Most Americans have no idea. I think that what we have is a world empire that's controlled by a few men I call the corporatocracy. These are the heads of the big banks, the corporations and the government. You now they jump across these lines and it is very dangerous, very undemocratic. MacNamara was a good example. He was President of Ford and then became Secretary of Defense and then President of the World Bank. Today we've got Dick Cheney who's basically the same picture. This has been going on for a long time and it not simply a republican issue but it goes across party lines.

"I think our aggressive position of bringing other countries to their knees has created a tremendous economic imbalance where now out of the 100 largest economies in the world, 52 are corporations and 47 of those are American. Here we have 5% of the world's population reaching out like a giant octopus and sucking in 25% or more of the world's resources.

"But it's not really 5% of the world's population or the American people. It's really 1% of our population controlling more than 90 % of the wealth while the rest of us support them through taxes, our purchases, through our silence and through going along with the system."

After writing his book, Perkins was turned down by most every major publishing house until a small family-owned company named Berret-Koehler in San Francisco took the risk and published his book.

Although the book reached the New York Times best seller list in it's fifth week of publication and now is in its fifth printing, Perkins has still been relegated to getting his story out in the alternative media and by filling his calendar with speaking engagements.

"None of the major corporate radio or television stations will have me on," said Perkins. Isn't that interesting? Nobody who is owned by a big corporation or depends on big corporations for advertising has interviewed me at this point."

Former RNC Insider and Bush Strategist Says He Has 9/11 'Smoking Gun,' Proving Government Complicity

A conservative who once 'rubbed shoulders' with the Washington neo-cons also says America is now under a fascist rule and Bush must be impeached

16 Apr 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A former Republican Party insider turned Bush basher thinks he has "stumbled across" what may be the "smoking gun," proving the U.S. government's official story about the WTC attacks is an "unequivocal lie."

Karl Schwarz of Little Rock, Ark., who several years ago began exposing corruption amongst the neo-conservative movement in a book entitled "A One Way Ticket to Crawford, Texas," now has set his sights on proving government complicity in 9/11.

For years, the successful business entrepreneur and conservative republican, once asked by the RNC to run against President Clinton for Arkansas governor, has been using his inside political and business clout to expose corruption among the neo-cons in the Bush administration.

He strayed away from the Bush agenda two years after being one of the lead orchestrators in the Republican Party takeover of Congress during the Clinton administration.

"I designed the strategy that took the House and Senate from Clinton," recalls Schwarz, also a strong supporter and strategist for President George H. Bush. "I designed that takeover two years before I realized the Republican "Contract with America" was actually a "Contract on America."

After his political reawakening, he began blasting the neo conservatives where it hurt most - in their pocketbooks - coming forward with shocking evidence regarding shady oil deals and government involvement with the Taliban and Pakistan.

In his book and his ongoing seven-part series of articles entitled "Pop Goes the Bush Mythology Bubble," he provides inside information about countless financial scams, essentially revealing the Bush motive behind the Middle East invasion was more about oil profits than the war on terrorism.

Saying the neo-cons within the government are destroying America for their own corporate-global benefits, Schwarz doesn't mince words and is calling for the outright impeachment of President Bush, as well as removal of any member of Congress who aids and abets the corrupt powers within the executive branch.

Now, moving away from financial corruption, he has turned his attention to the 9/11 truth movement, saying he has found a piece of obscure video footage which will conclusively show that the government lied about what type of plane struck the South Tower of the WTC.

As most detectives and investigators will readily attest, uncovering incriminating evidence involves 90 percent perseverance and 10 percent luck, Schwarz admits he had a "whole lot" of the later when running across the video footage in a French foreign film entitled "The Barbarian Invasion."

Contained in the film unrelated to 9/11, is a 1:52 second video segment, shot by an unknown amateur photographer at the WTC, which Schwarz says clearly shows a 737 airliner striking the south Tower, not a 767 Boeing jet as previously reported by the government.

"We tracked down the filmmaker and he acquired the original WTC segment from the Canadian News Service," said Schwarz, adding that he has had the tape analyzed by experts proving it's not a fake. "We are tracking down the original photographer and want to get to him before the government does in order to prove its authenticity.

"This segment, however, conclusively shows a 737 hit the South Tower, not the 767 like previously reported. This in itself should be the smoking gun, which proves the whole story given to us by the government about 9/11 is untrue."

Originally, the government claimed the second jetliner en route to Los Angeles was a 767 Boeing. However, Schwarz said the video will not only show the airline dimensions to be that of a 737, but that he also has evidence that the engine recovered in the WTC wreckage was a model type CFM56, which propels a 737 not a 767.

"Not even two CFM56's could get a 767 off the ground," added Schwarz.

Besides 9/11, Schwarz said the three major areas that need to be thoroughly investigated regarding the Bush administration's present policies, include:

- The administration ties with Afghanistan, the Taliban and the Bidas Corp. Schwarz claims a high ranking Bidas executive is one of his main sources, implicating the Bush administration with corruption involving the Taliban and the Afghan invasion, involving numerous breaches of contract due to military invasions.
- Information implicating 9/11 Commission members with direct and indirect financial benefits due to the Bush policies in the Middle East.
- The Bush administration's creation of financial, social and military chaos in order to undermine the Bill of Rights and the U.S. Constitution.

"Whistleblowers Sibel Edmonds, Karen Kwiatkowski and others that I cannot disclose without jeopardizing their safety, including many members of the Armed Services have acted as my main sources," said Schwarz. "I've also had my own investigators working on issues regarding corporate fraud and that, in turn, uncovered the 9/11 related fraud on the part of the Bush administration."

Asked how he would describe himself, since many critics may consider him a disgruntled Republican with an axe to grind, he said:

"I am conservative, fiscally responsible, an ecumenical Christian and an American Patriot that clearly understands fascism and clearly sees this is exactly what is going on within the Bush administration.

"To answer my critics, they can say whatever. However, those that read my book will clearly see that the main problem now facing America has been caused and amplified by the last three Presidential administrations, Bush I, Clinton and Bush II."

Hussein's Pre-Trial Proceedings Turn Into 'Three Ring Circus'
Human rights defense attorney says due process rights of Hussein and Guantanamo Bay detainees irreparably damaged, making a fair and impartial trial impossible.

11 Apr 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Dr. Curtis Doebbler took a lawyer's oath years ago to make sure that everyone is seen as equal in the eyes of justice. He took a pledge that all people, no matter how despicable, have a right to a fair trial.

He made these promises as a young and naïve attorney fresh out of New York Law School in 1988. He made these promises as he embarked on a career of representing the oppressed and downtrodden in the international law arena, a place where human rights often-times takes a back seat to the oppressive will of corrupt governments.

For more than 18 years, the American born and educated attorney, has represented literally millions of people around the world who have been "battered and abused."

He has represented an estimated two million displaced persons in the Khartoum State, about 3,500 Ethiopian refugees in the Sudan, dozens of political activists in the Republic of the Congo, Peru and Afghanistan and hundreds of other human rights defenders in countries around the world too numerous to mention.

Always standing tall in defense of basic human rights, he has more or less acted like a legal shield against corrupt governments that normally determine justice at the point of a rifle instead of the sound of a judge's gavel.

Through all the difficult legal battles in all the faraway places, there were times he won and times he lost. There were times the travesties of injustice were overcome and there were times the travesties were insurmountable.

But never in his long and distinguished career of fighting the so-called "good fight," has he been up against a "mountain of injustice" like what he faces as the defense attorney for Saddam Hussein and several other Guantanamo Bay detainees. The most notable detainee he now represents is a former Taliban Ambassador, who has been held for more than two years in U.S. custody without official charges being filed.

Like the Guantanamo detainees, Doebbler has been struggling to properly represent the former Iraqi dictator since international law principles have not been followed. U.S. authorities have not filed charges or given Doebbler access to Hussein since taken into custody more than a year ago.

Under these unusual conditions, Doebbler is acting as one of his lead attorneys along with a group of 20 others, including several Americans, the most notable being Ramsey Clark.

However, only once during Hussein's long detention has he been granted access to counsel. The visit took place in December 2004 and was closely monitored by U.S. officials who insisted on being present during the discussions.

Critics contend this is extremely unusual since attorneys in a typical international law case, or any case for that matter, are given the right to privately communicate with their clients.

And normally in an international law case, charges are also filed. Usually, the accused is given the right to mount a fair and impartial defense. Usually, there is an established legal procedure and an international administrative organization set up to hear each case.

But there is nothing usual about the Hussein case. In his case and those of the detainees, none of the customary and usual international law protections exist. It's like the U.S. has established its own "legal limbo" where anything goes as long as it benefits the U.S. It's like the U.S. is holding court for Hussein and the detainees in a three-ring circus with the government acting as ringmaster calling all the shots.

Last week while on business in Washington D.C., Doebbler had a chance to comment on these obvious international law violations and said it is "the worst travesty of justice" he has ever witnessed. He added that because of these irregularities, Hussein and the Guantanamo detainee's due process rights "have been irreparably damaged" by U.S. international law violations.

"When considering a defendant's right to an impartial and fair trial, nothing could be farther from the truth regarding Hussein and those at Guantanamo," said Doebbler. "I recently tried to file some papers on behalf of our client in Baghdad and there isn't even a courthouse or even a court clerk to take the papers.

"Whatever is coming out of Baghdad, just isn't true. When I hear the press reports about his upcoming trial, it is a nothing but a legal joke. It is absurd to even begin to call what is going on in Baghdad a legal proceeding. We have been left completely in the dark and basically have learned about our client's case through what is reported in the press, which is the U.S. government's side of the story."

And the government's side of the story has been assisted by a whopping $75 million set aside to prosecute Hussein while the defense has been hard pressed to raise more than $100,000.

"One of the basic principles of law is that prosecution and defense operate with relative equality," said Doebbler. "As you can see from the financial unbalance in the case, this equality is impossible here."

Doebbler also pointed out that the last "supposed hearing" as he calls it, held in July 2004, did not point to any provisions of law and basically violated every standard of justice normally practiced in the civilized world.

"This should not be allowed," said Doebbler, who has now filed cases on behalf of Hussein and the detainees with the Inter-American Court and Commission on Human Rights. "Hopefully, this commission can help in some way since this same group ruled against the U.S. and its aggression is Panama and Grenada. Also, the balance of representation on this council is international, not strictly members from the U.S., which should help our cause."

Concerning the Guantanamo Bay detainees held in Cuba, Doebbler said he is hesitant to take part in the regulations set by the U.S. to interview witnesses and propound discovery.

He feels uncomfortable by the U.S. restrictions since they possibly led to the arrest and conviction of Lynn Stewart, the New York attorney who is now appealing her conviction for aiding and abetting terrorist activities a result of representing other war on terror detainees.

"I think Lynn Stewart may have fallen into this trap," said Doebbler. "I will not take part in any discussion with my clients according to the ground rules set out by the U.S."

Although the total number of detainees at Guantanamo has been hard to determine due to secrecy, Doebbler estimates the figure at 400, basing it on discussions with other defense attorneys who are privy to inside information. At the height of the detentions, he said the number may have risen to 700.

"You have to understand that this is a difficult question to accurately answer because people are coming and going in secrecy at all times," said Doebbler, adding the total number of detainees has been in the thousands.

Besides his legal practice and law professor duties, Doebbler has been an outspoken critic of the U.S. invasions of Afghanistan and Iraq, citing the preemptive strikes as blatant acts of aggression and outright violations of international law against over 26 million innocent civilians.

"The consequence of the United States' failure to respect international law's basic principle of sovereignty, could, in the future, lead other states to act in similarly unlawful ways, citing the U.S. as precedent," wrote Doebbler in an article entitled "Responding to Options: American Options and International Law."

Regarding the military actions after the U.S. Iraqi invasion, he added:

"International laws require first and foremost that civilians not be targeted, that only discriminating weapons be used and that civilian objects not be attacked. There are many more rules, but these are the basic ones that form the core of customary international humanitarian law. The U.S. has violated all three of these principles in the first week of the war."

Doebbler said the only question remaining is who will try to bring America to justice for their violations of international law. Unfortunately, he said it will probably not occur in a court of law, but more likely with future terrorist activity seeking revenge for U.S. aggression.

Japanese Freedom Fighter Calls on Bush to End Atrocities at Guantanamo Before dying last week, Fred Korematsu, recipient of the Presidential Medal of Freedom, denounced Bush's detention policies in the name of the war on terror. He says Bush is making the same mistake made by President Roosevelt when 120,000 Japanese were held in detention camps during World War II.

8 Apr 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Fred Karematsu knows what it's like to be "locked away and thrown to the dogs." He knows what it's like to be stripped of his freedom in the name of liberty and justice. He knows how ugly people can get in a time of war. He knows how human dignity is lost at the sound of the first gunshot.

Karematsu lost it all in 1942 when Japan bombed Pearl Harbor. He lost his livelihood. He lost his dignity. He lost his soul. He lost everything right after President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed an executive order, authorizing the internment of 120,000 individuals of Japanese ancestry living on the West Coast.

One day Karematsu, then 22, was laughing and eating dinner with his girlfriend, the next day he was being arrested by FBI agents, after refusing to be sent to a San Francisco internment camp set up at a local racetrack.

He never saw his girlfriend again. He never saw much of anything again but a barbed wire fence. After being arrested, convicted and sent to a Utah internment camp, he and his family remained confined for the duration of the war. But Korematsu was a fighter. He knew he was wronged and he knew oneday he'd get his day in court.

That day finally came in 1983 after a long drawn out legally battle against the government ended favorably for the Japanese freedom fighter when the U.S. Supreme Court overturned its 1944 ruling. In that case the Supreme Court upheld Korematsu's internment on the grounds it was "considered a military necessity at a time of war.

However, after 39 years of appeals, Korematsu was vindicated, the Court finally admitting the government's case was based on false, misleading and racially biased information

As quickly as Karematsu was jailed, he now was immediately transformed into a hero. In 1988, primarily based on his legal efforts, Congress passed legislation apologizing for the internment of Japanese-American citizens, awarding each survivor $20,000.

Ten years later, President Clinton awarded Karematsu the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the citation reading in part: "Fred Korematsu challenged our Nation's conscience, reminding us that we must uphold the rights of our own citizens even as we fight tyranny in other lands."

Korematsu, 86, died last week, but his never ending struggle to uphold basic civil rights still lives on. Not only will he be remembered for his personal struggle, but more recently he challenged President's Bush's detention of civilians at Guantanamo Bay.

Even during his final days, Korematsu urged Bush to learn from the past and end the atrocities and illegal detention of innocent civilians at Guantanamo. On numerous occasions after the Iraq war began, he has accused the Bush administration of using the same illegal tactics employed against innocent Japanese-American citizens during World War II.

In an effort to help in 2003, he again decided to use legal remedies to demonstrate his disfavor of the Bush policies.

To prove his point, he filed an "amicus" (friend of the court brief) in the cases of Khaled Odah v. United States; Shafley Rasul v. George W. Bush and Yasir Hamdi v. Donald Rumsfeld, asking the high court to review the constitutionality of extended executive detentions under the Bush administrations war on terror.

Geoffrey Stone, the attorney who assisted Korematsu, said Odah and Rasul are being held at Guantanamo in Cuba while Hamdi, possibly a U.S. citizen, is being detained in a military brig in Virginia.

"All three plaintiffs are being held without any fair hearing to determine guilt or innocence, without any assistance of counsel and without any judicial review," said Stone.

"The extreme nature of the governments position in these cases is reminiscent to what happened to Fred and the other 120,000 Japanese detainees. It is just another example of how the United States too quickly sacrifices civil liberties in the rush to accommodate overly broad claims of military necessity."

In Korematsu's "amicus" brief, Stone argued in order to avoid repeating the mistakes of the past, the Supreme Court should make clear in these cases that the U.S. respects fundamental constitutional and human rights even in times of war.

Yemeni Businessman Held at Guantanamo for Over Two Years Merely on Suspicion

No charges have ever been filed or legal counsel afforded as captive finally smuggles out letter from prison to tell of U.S. abuses

6 Apr 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A Yemeni businessman, snatched off the street and trapped in a web of CIA and Egyptian terrorist surveillance, is "crying out for help" after being held in U.S. custody for more than two years without being charged with a crime or having access to legal counsel.

The case of 'Abd al-Salam 'Ali al-Hila recently came to the attention of Human Rights Watch, a worldwide watchdog group who is now pleading with the Bush administration to review his case. But the administration has turned a deaf ear, as al-Hila remains "out of sight and out of mind" in a cold and dark Guantanamo prison cell.

"Al-Hila was essentially kidnapped on the streets of Cairo and then disappeared into U.S. custody," said John Sifton, a researcher for Human Rights Watch, who has been documenting cases of abuse at Guantanamo. "Whatever the allegations against him, he should have been charged and given an opportunity to challenge his detention."

The al-Hila case unfortunately is not unique. Since September 11, 2001, human rights activists claim many other detainees captured in non-combat zones have been transferred to Guantanamo without criminal protections.

It is hard to know the exact numbers since security is tight, but they estimate hundreds have been detained from countries all over the world under the guise of the war on terror.

"The Bush administration continues to believe that by invoking the word "terror" it can detain anyone in the world without oversight," said Sifton. "Many of the cases I found there suggest that the United States has no commitments to legal principles. Turning your back on the law is not the way to stop terrorism."

Previously unknown, the facts behind al-Hila's capture and incarceration are now finally surfacing after he was first taken into Egyptian custody on September 19, 2002, and then transferred into the hands of U.S. authorities.

Details of his whereabouts were unknown, even to his family, until a letter somehow was smuggled out of Guantanamo, the letter finally being released by Yemeni authorities in April 2004.

Addressed to the Yemeni Ambassador, the letter calls attention to the abuses inside Guantanamo:

"I am in CIA custody, together with a Yemeni brother in another cell. He was a merchant who was arrested in Thailand and brought to Afghanistan. There are also seven other Arabs that I know of that are detained here.

"I am writing this letter from a cold and dark prison cell and I don't know why I am in jail. I am a businessman with a good reputation, who did a lot for my country. I am asking for help from God and the president of Yemen to have me released as I have done nothing wrong.

"The CIA conspired with the Egyptian Muuukhabarrat, making false allegations and then locking me up in prison. For many months, I didn't even know where I was imprisoned. My interrogation took place about a year ago and by now the American authorities know that I have not been involved with any terrorist activities. My only crime is that the Americans wanted information from me, but I didn't have any to give so I remain imprisoned.

"The Americans cannot imprison me in America because they know I am not a criminal. However, they are violating laws outside their country. I don't know what the Americans have told you, but I urge you to request my immediate release and my safe transfer home. If they accuse me of anything, then I should at least be given the right to defend myself and allow me to confront the charges in a public, fair and civilian court.

"Please help me as I do not want to be unjustly forgotten in prison."

Although al-Hila's letter was written in December 1, 2004 and released in April 2004, still more than a year later there has been no evidence that he has been released from Guantanamo.

Prior to his detention, al-Hila, the father of three, was in daily contact with his family and conducting business as usual as a manager of a pharmaceutical firm in Yemen.

U.S. authorities never specifically said why they are holding al-Hila, but it is suspected that it relates to his former duties as a Yemeni intelligence colonel in charge of Arab and Afghani relations during the Soviet conflict in Afghanistan in the 1980s.

During this time the Yemeni government had welcomed thousands of "Arab Afghans" to join the fight against the Soviets. During that time, Al-Hila was an intelligence officer in charge of transferring scores Arabs to other countries, including Western Europe in order to seek asylum.

Although the CIA may have suspected foul play, al-Hila's brother said he had no terrorist ties and his military contacts made over 25 years ago are totally unrelated to the present day war on terrorism.

"The U.S. authorities have no right to hold my brother on suspicion and without bringing specific charges," added al-Hila's brother, who is actively trying to secure his release despite many failed diplomatic attempts.

Possible Bush Conspiracy in 9/11 Now A College Course
PhD at North Carolina Wesleyan College offers 9/11 course for college credit and is looking for answers government has never given

4 Apr 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The Bush administration's complicity in the events surrounding 9/11 has now made its way into the curriculum of a college political science course taught at Wesleyan College in North Carolina.

The course, entitled "9/11: The Road to Tyranny", was the brainchild of college professor Jane Christensen, who saw the social need to explore the many questions about the WTC attacks and the war on terrorism.

Being taught this spring, the course explores the validity of the government's official 9/11 story, the many alternative theories advanced and the way the war on terrorism has drastically changed American life.

"The events of September 11, 2001, indisputably changed the course of American politics and history. In particular, this course will focus largely on the specific destruction in lower Manhattan and the Pentagon," said Christensen in her course outline.

"We are examining the official story and will analyze it critically. We will consider alternative explanations of what occurred on 9/11 and how it became a catalyst for the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, as well as the attack on civil liberties in the United States.

"The goal of this course is to arrive at a solid understanding of how 9/11 and we will examine it with a critical eye."

Christensen said the course is outside the traditional scope of most political science courses since it is unscientific, relying mostly on eyewitness accounts and speculation. She added that literature is just emerging on 9/11 and she is relying somewhat extensively on alternative news media accounts, documentaries and videos.

"I think this course is the first of its kind in the country," added Christensen. "Students will be given two exams and be required to write a 10-12 page formal paper, focusing on on some aspect of 9/11 or the war on terrorism. Hopefully, we can provide some insight in the many questions left unanswered about 9/11."

The truth regarding what occurred on 9/11 has long been sought by a small group of independent investigators who have thus far found many discrepancies in the government story.

As the evidence keeps mounting, those who view the government as complicit in the WTC attacks are hoping the movement catches on at the grassroots level, the new 9/11 course indicating this may be the case.

Christensen said the purpose of the course is to "question all theories about 9/11 and get at the truth."

Along the way, the Bush administration has stonewalled many investigation attempts, basically relying on the 9/11 Commission report which essentially adopts the government story.

However, the 9/11 Commission has been severely criticized for overlooking important evidence and critics have called the commission panel assembled biased toward the government's view.

Skeptics of the government's account said the recent course offered at Wesleyan College shows that the government's complicity in 9/11 is being questioned by many others besides internet conspiracy theorists and those in the alternative media.

The required and suggested course readings of POL 495, which began in January and ends in May, are also a good roadmap for others interested in learning more about the events before, during and after 9/11.

Some of the required texts and website readings include:

-- Michael Collins Piper, "FBI Admits No Evidence Links Hijackers to 911", American Free Press. FBI Admits: No Evidence

-- Michael Parenti, The Terrorism Trap. San Francisco, City Lights Books, 2002.

-- Infowars 911 archive, Alex Jones. Alex Jones' Infowars.com.

-- Michael Chossudovsky, The Mysterious Breakfast Meeting on Capitol Hill, Global research, August 4, 2003. Mysterious September 11 Breakfast Meeting on Capitol Hill, Michel Chossudovsky.

Burmese Villagers Say Unocal Officials Were Complicit in Torture, Rape, Murder and Using Slave Labor

Villagers use little known Alien Torts Claim Act to sue Unocal in U.S. Federal Court; Bush administration supports Unocal and wants to erase one of the oldest American human rights laws so that foreigners can't hold corporations responsible for overseas atrocities.

1 Apr 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A group of Burmese citizens claim Unocal, an American corporation, forced them to work as slaves on a 1992 pipeline project and aided Burma's military dictatorship in torturing and raping innocent women and children.

The villagers, having little hope of getting justice in a Burma court, filed suit in 1996 against Unocal in California under the little known Alien Tort Claims Act (ATCA).

The case, filed by 15 Burmese villagers named as John and Jane Does, is presently being heard by the full Ninth Circuit Federal Court Appeals after Unocal with support from the Bush administration failed in its first attempt to get a dismissal in the trial's early stages.

A three judge panel for the Ninth Circuit found enough evidence to move the case forward, showing Unocal may have been complicit in the torture, rape, murder and slave labor of many innocent Burmese villagers.

Unocal has denied any wrongdoing and the Justice Department, through an "amicus" (friend of the court) brief, is now attempting to convince the court that ATCA, historically used for human rights violations, no longer applies to American corporations acting abroad.

Passed in 1789, ATCA allows foreign victims of serious human rights abuses abroad to seek compensation from the perpetrators in U.S. courts. The human rights law grants U.S. courts jurisdiction in any dispute where it is alleged that the "law of nations" or international laws are violated.

The Unocal case is significant for two reasons: First it cites an unprecedented use of violence directed against foreigners by an American corporation. Second, the Justice Department has intervened, taking issue with using ATCA for any human rights violations whatsoever.

Legally, this has been an unprecedented move. Politically, what makes it so significant is that the Bush administration is the first in our country's history to openly seek support to repeal the law in Congress. Along with some international business groups, the Justice Department is now waging a strong campaign against ATCA so that corporations no longer can be sued for human rights violations as alleged in the Unocal case.

Since 1979, only 25 cases have been brought against American corporations using ATCA. Cases are difficult to bring because most plaintiffs can't afford lawyers and even if they prevail, judgments against corporate violators are rarely collected.

However, it appears the Bush administration wants to reduce any chance of corporate liability by abolishing the law entirely, clearing the way or perhaps even implicitly condoning alleged actions like in the Unocal case.

In Unocal, the villagers allege representatives of the American company openly aided and abetted the Burmese military in collecting a pool of captive labor to construct a 1992 pipeline project across the interior of the country leading to Thailand.

Further, the complaint alleges that on a daily basis a large numbers of villagers were rounded up and forced to perform exhaustive labor, including clearing roads, serving as porters and cleaning the military camps. Those who refused to work either were killed, beaten or tortured. The suit also tells how the Burmese soldiers routinely raped women at knifepoint as families stood by helplessly and watched.

In response, Unocal argues that it cannot be held responsible for the indiscriminate actions of the Burmese military. But the Burmese citizens allege not only did Unocal know what was going on, but was actually complicit in the human rights atrocities. They allege Unocal officials met with the notoriously savage Burmese army on a daily basis, having meetings with military commanders in order to give them precise marching orders and specific work assignments.

The complaint specifically points out that Unocal executives toured the pipeline's route using a network of roads carved out of the wilderness by a terrorized band of slave labor.

The villagers also claim they will produce written documentation showing Unocal condoned the use of this captive labor force as well as the torture, rape and murder of many innocent villagers.

In response to a 1997 New York City Counsel investigation, Unocal declared that "no human rights violations have taken place in the vicinity of the pipeline route."

Arguing before the court, Unocal attorneys asked for an immediate dismissal based on a lack of evidence, but the three judge Ninth Circuit panel allowed the case to go forward, saying there was "significant evidence showing that the company may have provided knowing practical assistance or encouragement that had a substantial effect on the perpetration of the alleged acts of rape, murder and the use of forced labor."

The full Ninth Circuit is now hearing the case while the Bush administration has again asked for a dismissal based on a legally radical interpretation of ATCA, saying that it 'point blank' does not grant foreign victims the right to sue American corporations for violations committed abroad.

Besides Unocal, in recent years ATCA has been used in a handful of other cases brought against U.S. corporations accused of knowingly violating serious human rights issues.

Human rights observers say these violations are probably just the tip of the iceberg. They say most cases are never filed since documenting crimes in faraway countries can be difficult and very expensive to litigate.

Although the intent of the 1789 law was to initially persuade Europeans that America was not going to be a haven for pirates, human rights activists say today it is just as important that American not be considered "a haven for corporate human rights abusers."

They add that the Bush administration's push to repeal ACTA basically condones human rights abuses by telling the whole world that American corporations will not be held accountable for their actions even when they involve rape, torture and murder.

F.B.I. 'Chaperones' Influential Saudis Out of U.S. After 9/11 Without Asking Any Questions

Key documents released last week by Judicial Watch show Saudis were allowed to fly when Americans were grounded. Documents seem to contradict the Bush Administration accusations that the documentary Fahrenheit 9/11 was 'politically motivated.'

29 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The Bush administration has never fully come clean as to why influential Saudis were allowed to fly unimpeded immediately after 9/11 when the rest of America remained officially grounded.

But now classified government records conclusively show that the F.B.I. took an active role in escorting more than 160 Saudis out of the country, including members of Osama Bin Laden's family.

The documents obtained and released last week by Judicial Watch, a legal watchdog group, also disclosed documentation of flights taken by the Saudis from Las Vegas and other points, previously unknown to investigators.

Obtained under the Freedom of Information Act and released to the media, the documents indicate a trend by F.B.I. agents, who seemed to be acting more like chaperones at a high school dance than law enforcement agents concerning their assistance with the Saudis quick departure after 9/11.

The reports specifically reveal F.B.I. agents personally escorting two prominent Saudi families to flights leaving Los Angeles and Orlando immediately after 9/11, as well as being thanked by a Saudi Royal Prince for their obedient and loyal work.

Previously, the Bush administration vehemently denied lending any assistance to the Saudis, but these documents obtained after much legal wrangling, seem to categorically contradict the administration account.

It also seems to bolster administration critics, who have accused the Bush administration of protecting the Saudis from investigations regarding their knowledge and involvement in 9/11. The new documents also give credence to filmmaker Michael Moore, who brought the issue to light in the documentary film, Fahrenheit 911.

The Bush administration originally dismissed Moore's accusations as politically motivated, but may be hard pressed now to stand by their statements after the new information surfaced, catching them in what appears to be inconsistent behavior if not outright lying.

The documents appear to also question The Sept. 11 commission report last year, finding that no Saudis had been allowed to leave before national airspace reopened on Sept. 13, 2001, as well as no evidence of cooperation by the White House and the F.B.I.

The new information adds much speculation to the commission findings, and opens the door to new questions as to why so many more Saudis than originally suspected were allowed to leave the country before being questioned and investigated in what was the biggest criminal investigation in U.S. history

The documents showed that Saudis left the country on a number of flights not previously disclosed, including a chartered flight from Los Angeles, Orlando, Providence, R.I., on Sept. 14, 2001, and three other flights from Las Vegas between Sept. 19 and Sept. 24. Although airspace was officially reopened on Sept. 13, flights remained grounded for many days afterward.

Christopher J. Farrell, director of investigations for Judicial Watch, said about the release of the documents: "It seems as though the F.B.I. was more interested in achieving diplomatic success than investigative progress. "

After the reports surfaced last week, several democrats including Senator Charles E. Schumer (D-NY), called for a new and thorough investigation.

"This lends credence to the theory that the administration was not coming fully clean about their involvement with the Saudis and we still haven't gotten to the bottom of this whole affair, " said Schumer

It should be noted that the documents were provided with many sections blacked-out only after Judicial Watch was successful in a lengthy legal battle with the Justice Department attorneys, who opposed the release of any information every step of the way regarding the Saudis quick departure from the U.S. after 9/11.

Millions Join At Grassroots Level to Denounce Draconian Powers of The Patriot Act

Media stays silent and critics claim legislation resembles what happened in Hitler's Germany

28 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A grassroots movement to repeal the Patriot Act has been burning across the country like an out of control wildfire. The fire of dissent has even spread to many of President Bush's "red states," where conservative Republicans want to become part of what has been called "America's free zones."

A "free zone," coined by the Bill of Rights Defense Committee, a watchdog group formed to protect the Bill of Rights and the U.S. Constitution, is a place where citizens openly denounce the Patriot Act through a public resolution or ordinance supported by a vote of the city, county or state government.

Although the mainstream media has covered the story like a flicker not a flame, presently 4 states, 375 municipalities and approximately 60 million Americans have joined the "free zone" movement. The movement openly denounces the oppressive Patriot Act and the Bush administration's tactics of spying on the American people.

Many critics have compared the Patriot Act to legislation passed by the Nazi Party to quell dissent and even Senator Robert Byrd (D-WV), a well-respected constitutional scholar, has compared President Bush to Hitler in what he calls a one voice, one party ideology.

The Patriot Act, which has a chilling effect on freedom of speech and other constitutional protections against unlawful search and seizure, right to counsel and right to a fair trial, was hurriedly passed into law 45 days after September 11, most legislators not even reading the bill and frightened into signing it due to the threat of terrorism.

Since the act was passed, widespread abuse has been reported due to an overzealous FBI and Justice Department using its overly broad powers against the American people for non-terrorist related activities.

One typical community disgusted with the loss of civil rights is Paonia, Colorado, a town of 1,600 located 200 miles from Denver. Last February, the Paonia Town Council voted 4-2 to pass a resolution denouncing the Patriot Act, joining the growing list of municipalities who openly oppose it.

Leader of the Paonia "free zone" movement, longtime resident Rand Kokernot, said he finally became "fed up with Bush politics" and organized the petition drive along with the help of the Bill of Rights Defense Committee, who lends assistance to local communities.

"I am opposed to the Patriot Act because parts of it open up the door to the gutting of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights," said Kokernot, who operates a bed and breakfast near Paonia. "If one person's freedoms can be taken away by a 'mad' attorney general, anyone's freedoms become as fragile. I began the movement because I felt we needed a victory. Lately, fighting the system has been like banging one's head against the wall."

Although the town's support is split in half with the mayor opposing the "free zone" movement, Kokernot wanted Paonia to be an example for other communities who feel that efforts to end terrorism should not be waged at the expense of essential civil rights and liberties.

To illustrate Paonia's concerns, reports surfaced in 2003 that the FBI had collected extensive information on the tactics, training and organization of anti war demonstrators by using the Patriot Act to circumvent normal 4th Amendment search and seizure guidelines.

In response to the civil rights violations similar to those used against Martin Luther King in the 1960s, former Attorney General John Ashcroft said the September 11 attacks made it essential that the FBI be allowed to investigate terrorism more aggressively.

However, concerning Ashcroft's comments, Kokernot said to think about the words of Benjamin Franklin in 1759, "They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."

"Kokernot then added: "In the future, I plan to lead a local campaign to end the unjust war in Iraq. I think Bush wants to control dissent under the guise that he is protecting America. He is disguising colonialism and exploitation in the guise of democracy, something our government through its foreign policy has been doing for quite awhile."

Other recent additions to America's "Free Zone" communities include Farmington and Exeter, NH. Some larger cities also officially denouncing the Patriot Act include Albuquerque, NM., Milwaukee WI., Boise, ID., Savannah, GA., Seattle WA., Washington D.C., Alexandria VA., Kansas City, MO., Jackson MI., and Denver, CO.

Crosses In Santa Monica Sand Remember Iraqi War Dead
LA war protesters call to "Impeach Bush' and claim "American Freedom is Fascism."

24 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Marcus Erickson looked through the ocean mist while the ghosts of more than 1,500 dead Iraqi war veterans hovered over the California surf.

Every Sunday morning for over a year, Erickson and other members of the nationwide organization, Veterans For Peace, have come to mourn the dead, placing white crosses in the Santa Monica sand as an ongoing memorial for those who have paid the ultimate price.

The number of crosses now totals more than 1,500 with over 5,000 people paying their respects on any given Sunday at the beach site called "Arlington West" after the military cemetery in Arlington, VA.

As the crowd gathered last Sunday morning, it was no different than any other, except it marked the second anniversary of the Iraqi invasion. The solemn gathering also came a day after millions around the world, in both large cities and small, staged organized protests to end the Iraq war in a day of solidarity.

Erickson, a Gulf War veteran and former U.S. Marine sergeant, joined in the Los Angeles march with an estimated 6,000 anti-war protesters who gathered at the famous corner of Hollywood and Vine in downtown Hollywood on a cold and rainy California morning.

The march, which coincided with marches held around the world, lasted for several hours, ending at the famous Chinese Mann Theatre on Hollywood Blvd., where a number of speakers began sending a harsh anti-war message to President Bush and others backing his war efforts.

Signs declaring "Impeach Bush" and "American Freedom is Fascism" set the tone for the rally while Erickson and other Vets For Peace carried coffins draped with American flags.

Referring to the coffins, those at the rally claimed it "may be the only visible sign of the brutality behind the war," since the Pentagon has not allowed pictures to surface of the returning war dead. The government has also implemented "a behind closed door policy" concerning the wounded, only bringing them back to the states by the cover of night on flights from Germany.

At the Los Angeles rally, a host of speakers including injured Iraqi war veterans and several local politicians, took up the cause to "end the bloodshed" in what they called a war based on "President Bush's lies and deceit."

Most notable among them was former Vietnam War veteran, Ron Kovic, the soldier portrayed by Tom Cruise in the famous anti-war movie "Born of the Fourth of July."

"This is an unjust war based on greed, not patriotism," said Kovic, adding the Iraq war is not one of last resort but of first resort to acquire oil. "More importantly than protesting today at the rally, we must make our voices heard everyday throughout the year in order to end the unnecessary bloodshed and brutality."

It seems like only yesterday when American troops stormed Baghdad with guns blazing, tanks rolling and flags waving on the false premise that Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction presented an imminent threat.

"I didn't believe it from day one. I believe Bush also knew Iraq wasn't a real threat and I can't believe he isn't being held accountable," said Erickson, turning his attention to the white crosses in the Santa Monica sand.

"We kept adding a white cross for every fallen soldier and stopped at 1,000. Now we place a red cross for every 10 fallen soldiers and we are up to 52 red crosses. The blue ones over there mourn those who have fallen during the previous week. We are now averaging about two blue crosses every day."

After two years in Iraq, as Erickson illustrates using crosses, the cost of war in terms of military casualties is high, but military casualties only tells part of the Iraq tragedy. Behind the numbers of the fallen soldiers, lies 11,000 more injured and an estimated 100,000 dead Iraqi civilians.

A study regarding the high cost of war recently completed by the Institute for Policy Studies, points out that over half the troops returning from Iraq, return home with low morale. It is also estimated that over 100,000 returnees now are in dire need of mental health care.

The study also cites a failed war strategy since after two years, the number of insurgents and terrorists in Iraq have actually increased to an estimated force of over 35,000.

And in terms of strict dollars, the study estimates the war is costing each American family more than $3,000 yearly, money the Policy Institute states could be used at home to hire 3 million new school teachers or provide health care for more than 27 million Americans.

Serge Louchnikov, a former U.S. Marine who served six months in Iraq and among the troops that originally stormed Baghdad, said after the Los Angeles rally that he is holding President Bush personally responsible for "all the needless deaths" as a result of the unnecessary Iraqi war.

"I didn't see a just cause when I fought in Iraq. What are we defending? Are we defending the misplaced ideas of a few political leaders in Washington?" said Louchnikov, who is now dedicating much of his time to the anti-war movement as a member of Veterans For Peace.

"I feel sadness in my heart. I have lost close friends in Iraq. Personally, I don't know the man but I am holding President Bush personally responsible for all those who died needlessly. I believe he has lied to the American people about the real reasons behind this war and I will not rest until the truth is finally told."

As a part of an ongoing war protest, Erickson, Louchnikov and other members of the Los Angeles Chapter of Veterans For Peace, now numbering more than 100, are leaving on a seven week cross-country protest.

They are scheduled to display their 1,000 white crosses at college campuses en route to Washington D.C and then New York in hopes of gaining additional support to end the war while, at the same time, remembering the fallen soldiers.

"We'll be making about 10 stops on our way to New York," said Erickson, adding they are scheduled to begin the nationwide protest April 2. "We will be visiting Kent State University on the 35th anniversary in remembrance of the students who were shot and killed protesting the Vietnam War, as well as putting up our crosses in memory of those who have died in Iraq."

Threats Don't Stop Information Leak About Our Military's 1976 Plan to Blow Up WTC

Former GI not concerned about death threats and releases names of others who participated in what has been called 'the perfect terrorist plan' devised by our own military to bring down the WTC with airplanes and box cutters.

23 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A former U.S. Army corporal and Department of Defense (DOD) operative has received a number of death threats after releasing information his military unit in 1976 was commissioned by Congress to create the perfect terrorist plan to level the WTC with airplanes and box cutters.

Timothy McNiven, under contract with the DOD, claims the threats were transmitted by email and snail mail from unknown origins in what he calls on ongoing harassment campaign to keep him quiet about the government sponsored "perfect terrorist plan," almost identical to what happened on 9/11.

McNiven, however, disregarded the threats, telling his story to the AFP. His account first appeared in last week's edition.

Besides personal threats, he also claims other members of his 1976 unit, including one named Sgt. Riggs, were also threatened. Sgt. Riggs and more than 100 of McNiven's unit members have not come forward or spoken publicly about his accusations.

"I am just one of the enlisted men who took part, but I can confirm it took place and our plan was just like what went down on 9/11," said McNiven. "There were about 100 people from my unit involved and I am actively seeking help to find them.

"Sgt. Riggs told me one day that he and others had their wives and children threatened by the U.S. Government with retaliatory acts if they were to release their information to the media. But he said if I could break the censorship and get to the media first, he then would come forward and tell what he knows."

The study, commissioned to C-Battery 2/81st Field Artillery, U.S. Army, stationed in Strasbourg, Germany in 1976, specifically devised the scenario of the Twin Towers being leveled by Middle Eastern terrorists using commercial airliners and even plastic box cutters to bypass security.

McNiven first went public with the hidden purpose behind the Congressional study in an affidavit included in a 9/11-related federal conspiracy (RICO) lawsuit filed against Bush and others in 2004.

The publicized version of the study, commissioned by Congress, was to identify security lapses and submit corrective measures to lawmakers. However, McNiven claims the real purpose of the study was to brainstorm how to pull off the perfect terrorist attack using the exact same 9/11 scenario.

To back up his story, he passed a credible lie detector test, testified in a sworn affidavit contained in a federal 2004 RICO lawsuit file against Bush and provided the names of the men in his 1976 unit.

McNiven claims to have lost contact with the members of his unit, but he especially is interested in finding Lt. Michael Teague, the officer in charge of the unit who gave the specific orders to devise the mock 9/11 plan.

"I remember Lt. Teague changed the scenario of the supposed study from a 100 story building to the Twin Towers," said McNiven, emphasizing that Lt. Teague was acting on specific orders from unknown superiors.

"He then said he thought it was very strange to be asked to devise a plan to blow up your own home town. But as I watched the Twin Towers really collapse on the morning of September 11th, I realized I was watching the very same thing we devised in the 1976."

McNiven said he was originally told by Lt. Teague "never to go public" about the contents of the details and findings of the mock terrorist plan. But later for unknown reasons Lt. Teague changed his mind, perhaps due to guilt feelings, giving him direct orders to go public if anything like 9/11 ever occurred in the future.

"I was given the direct order, which I feel I am still under, that if the Twin Towers were ever attacked the way we discussed in the 1976 study, I was to do everything in my power to bring the similarities to the attention of the American people," said McNiven..

"I have no idea why they changed their minds, but I was then emphatically told that this order was never to be rescinded - never - because those who would rescind it, would be the very same people who turned against the American people."

Besides Lt. Teague and Sgt. Riggs, he is hoping others in his unit will come forward with more details in order to verify his story.

"I am willing to take additional polygraph exams to prove I am telling the truth until other participants in the study come forward," added McNiven.

Some of the other members of his unit, names provided by McNiven, include Col. Robert Morrison, Maj. Joe Dipiero, Sgt Maj. McKay, Sgt Middleton, Sgt Arroyo, Sgt Murray, Sgt Edwards, Sgt Broder, Sgt Steadman, Sgt Wolford, Sgt Jackson, Sgt Garza, Sgt Meralas, Sgt Taraza, Sgt Spears, 1st Sgt Ray, Sgt Terry Henderson, Sgt Barber, Cpl Picket, Cpl Wisner, Richard Seanz, Berni Domoski, George Cinch, Harry Waldren, Tom Kimber, Rick Lyons, Michael Hubbert, Dan Henderson, Martian Seals, Jake Asuit, Bruce Levine, Thomas Gumbs, Rick Bruns, Dennis Montoya, Phlash Richardson, Fetch, Bob Bender, Johnson, Drew Cousins and Terry Cook

Bush Tries To Change Longstanding Senate Rules And Push Through Neo-Con Judges

Sen. Robert Byrd (D-WV), fights back, comparing Bush to Hitler.

22 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The fight going on in the U.S. Senate over the re-nomination of 12 right wing extremist federal judges is shameful, embarrassing and a mockery to the principles of democracy. It is also a perfect example of the "give 'em an inch and they'll take a mile" mentality of the arrogant GOP leadership.

Outspoken Sen. Robert Byrd (D-WV), went one step farther with his criticism, calling President Bush's move to violate long-standing Senate rules to re-nominate the "12 Angry Judges" as "parallel to Hitler's ramming fascist legislation through the Reichstag."

"Hitler never abandoned the cloak of legality," said Byrd. "He at least recognized the psychological value of having the law on his side. Instead he turned the law inside out and made illegality legal. And that is just what is happening in our government now."

Byrd is considered to be one the few remaining voices of strong dissent on Capital Hill and one of the only advocates stressing adherence to the Bill of Rights. Although his remarks have been called "reprehensible and beyond belief" by GOP Chair Ken Mehlman, Byrd points out that like Hitler, Bush is putting together a strategy designed to win absolute rule by one party, one government and one leader.

Other observers emphasize that when the conservative Sen. Byrd equates Bush to Hitler, his words should be heeded since they come not only with great sadness, but with a great sense of history and scholarship.

Sen. Byrd's harsh comparisons came after President Bush decided to try and re-nominate the right wing judges, rejected previously by the Senate in his first term. In what appears to be a deliberately provocative political gesture, Bush is now trying to have GOP Senators rewrite longstanding Senate rules in order to give the GOP absolute power to push through the nominations.

Even though President Bush has a 95% success rate in judicial nominations in his first four years, compared to President Clinton's 84%, he still appears unsatisfied.

At the end of 2004, the federal appellate bench was 97% full with only 12 nominees being rejected by a Democratic filibuster. Many of the candidates, now being re-nominated, had been previously rejected by Senators from their home states.

By Senate tradition, if a judge is rejected by a Senator from his home state, it is honored by the opposing party and the nomination is not pushed through.

For example, under Clinton, Democrats honored the Republican rejection of liberal judges who were opposed by home state Republican Senators. But now with the situation reversed, Republicans have double-crossed the Democrats by not honoring the same longstanding tradition. Even worse, they are now threatening to rewrite the Senate Rules of Procedure in order to get their ultra-conservative judges appointed.

For this reason Sen. Byrd and other Democrats are crying foul and threatening a long, hard fight over the issue.

The battle over the make-up of the federal bench has particular interest for conservative evangelicals and others at the core of the President's base who see judges as crucial to succeeding in efforts to outlaw abortion and make way for a larger religious presence in the daily life of all Americans.

Liberals seem to be finally fighting back and taking a stand on this issue, but it may be too late since President Bush in his first term has already flooded the federal judiciary with a number of rightwing ideologists.

The People For The American Way, a judicial watchdog group that evaluates the judiciary on legalistic merit not partisan politics, had this to say about President Bush' s re-nominations for the federal appellate bench:

"These people are, without exception, unqualified for positions of responsibility. They are ideological hacks, chosen for their hostility to individual rights and liberties, and for positions so far to the right that other extremists find them extreme!

"Bush's arrogance, and contempt both for the law and the citizens of this country, is repulsive. He has nominated to federal courts directly below the Supreme Court a group of reactionaries who have all been rejected once, in some cases twice - some have so little experience they do not meet Bar Association guidelines for judges - one is not even licensed to practice law! They have records of outspokenly extremist positions; many have been frequently overturned by higher courts and even openly criticized by other Bush appointees noted for their own far-right views.

"This should be the moment of decisive rejection of Bush's contempt for the law and the country. What the Democrats can do under Senate rules remains to be seen. We need a public outcry to preserve the rights of the people and the values that make America a decent place. Shout loud and long against this arrogant, vicious, and extremist attack on rights and liberties."

The watchdog group as well as other legal critics, both conservative and liberal, have assessed the Bush nominees as follows:

oCharles W. Pickering, Sr.

As a Mississippi state Senator, Pickering supported voting-related measures that helped perpetuate discrimination against African Americans.

For example, in 1973, Pickering voted for a partial Senate redistricting plan that harmed minority voting rights by continuing to provide for county-wide voting in a populous county rather than creating single-member districts. In 1975, Pickering voted for a broader Senate-passed measure that similarly provided for county-wide district voting.

Pickering co-sponsored a Mississippi Senate resolution calling on Congress to repeal the Voting Rights Act review of voting regulations in Jim Crow states or apply it to all states, regardless of their discrimination history.

Pickering voted twice as a Senator (in 1972 and 1973) to appropriate state monies to fund the notorious Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, created by the state after Brown v. Board of Education to resist desegregation.

While Pickering denied under oath at his 1990 hearing of having had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission, a subsequently released Commission memorandum dated January 5, 1972 stated that he and two other state legislators were deeply involved.

As a law student, Pickering wrote an article advising the Mississippi legislature how to fix a loophole in the state's law making interracial marriage a felony punishable by up to ten years in prison. The loophole had rendered the law unenforceable and Pickering's advice, which the legislature promptly used, enabled the law to be enforced.

In a speech made in 1984, before he became a judge, Pickering stated that the Bible should be "recognized as the absolute authority by which all conduct of man is judged."

oClaude Allen

Allen has been the Bush administration's point man on highly controversial and unproven abstinence-only sex education. Allen has also been harshly criticized for the removal of condom information sheets from the CDC web site, a move that was criticized as having more to do with ideology than with health concerns.

Allen was also a key figure in a fight to prevent Michelle Finn from having her husband, Hugh, disconnected from life support after a car accident left him in a Persistent Vegetative State. After a court ruling determined that Mrs. Finn had the right to determine the course of her husband's treatment, Allen sought to intervene to stop the action.

Allen also worked to defeat legislation that provided health insurance for children of the working poor, largely because the program covered abortion services for rape and incest victims under the age of eighteen.

When the law was ultimately enacted, Allen was faulted for not enrolling children quickly enough. He admitted abortion was the reason he delayed the enrollment of children.

oJanice Rogers Brown

Brown was nominated to the California State Supreme Court in 1996. She was found incompetent by the California State Bar Evaluation Committee based not only on her relative inexperience, but also because of concerns that she was inserting conservative personal views into her appellate opinions.

Her dissent in one case argued for abandoning Supreme Court precedent and giving greater protection to even allegedly misleading commercial speech by corporations. Her dissent in another case claimed that a drug and alcohol testing program for current city employees should be permitted, despite established precedent to the contrary.

She advocates natural law in place of reasoned argument, and is frequently the lone dissenter with opinions that inject her own ideology into cases. She has been described as a "loose cannon" and "to the right of Scalia and Thomas."

oThomas Griffith

Griffith, President Bush's nominee for the federal appeals court in Washington, has been practicing law in Utah without a state law license for the past four years, according to Utah state officials and a report in The Washington Post.

Griffith, the general counsel for Brigham Young University since August 2000, had previously failed to renew his law license in Washington for three years while he was a lawyer based in the District.

oWilliam Haynes II

Haynes played a central role in formulating the Bush administration's policy regarding the detention of American citizens and foreigners as enemy combatants.

Haynes has also been an ardent defender of the policies he helped draft. In a Federalist Society speech, he belittled those raising important civil liberties questions in connection with Bush Administration policies.

Haynes also has very limited legal experience. In response to the Judiciary Committee questionnaire asking for the ten most significant cases he personally litigated, Haynes listed only two cases he had personally handled and listed eight cases in which he only reviewed the briefs written by the Department of Justice.

oJ. Leon Holmes

Holmes' views about reproductive rights and other issues of critical importance to women fall far outside any mainstream understanding of constitutional values. His anti-abortion rhetoric compares pro-choice advocates to Nazis and abortion to slavery.

He has served as president of Arkansas Right to Life, helped form the Pro-Life Educational Alliance in Fayetteville, Arkansas, and served as a Secretary for the Unborn Child Amendment Committee.

He is unequivocal about his belief that a woman's right to choose should not be protected, writing that abortion is the simplest issue this country has faced since slavery was made unconstitutional. And it deserves the same response. As part of his crusade to criminalize abortion, Holmes has argued repeatedly in favor of granting personhood rights to fetuses.

oBrett M. Kavanaugh

Kavanaugh has shown a stunning willingness to twist and shift legal theories and philosophies to best serve partisan interests. During the Clinton administration, Kavanaugh spent five years as part of Kenneth Starr's Office of Independent Counsel, where one of his roles was to gain unprecedented access to the records of the President of the United States. In his role in the Bush administration, however, Kavanaugh seems to have radically changed his views on presidential privilege.

Kavanaugh served as White House Counsel Alberto Gonzalez's main deputy on the subject of judicial nominees. In particular, Kavanaugh personally coordinated the administration's extremely controversial and unsuccessful nominations of right-wing extremist Priscilla Owen to the Fifth Circuit and Miguel Estrada to the D.C. Circuit.

oCarolyn Kuhl

Kuhl has a history of horrendous rulings, most unanimously overturned. For instance, she held that a woman had no reasonable expectation of privacy when her doctor allowed a drug company sales agent to observe her breast exam and misled her into thinking it was another physician;

She has dismissed other suits where citizens civil rights had been blatantly violated as well as attempting to invalidate part of the Superfund Toxic-Cleanup law holding polluters responsible for costs.

At the Reagan Justice Department, Kuhl helped orchestrate the reversal of long-standing IRS policy withholding tax-exempt status from private institutions that practice race discrimination, including Bob Jones University.

She also advocated for and co-authored a brief in a U.S. Supreme Court case calling for the outright reversal of Roe v. Wade.

Kuhl also testified before Congress opposing legislation to give military veterans the right to appeal benefits denials to a judge.

oDavid McKeague

The Court of appeals reversed a McKeague ruling that had allowed a Forest Service project called Rolling Thunder that would have produced significant logging and clear-cutting to go forward in Michigan's Upper Peninsula.

According to the unanimous appellate court decision, approving the project without the environmental analysis required by statute was arbitrary and capricious.

McKeague also has ruled that under the Americans with Disabilities Act a hospital was free to fire an HIV-positive employee rather than try to accommodate his disability by adjusting his job responsibilities.

And in United States v. Michigan in 1994, McKeague refused to permit the Justice Department to investigate under federal law possible abuses at two state prisons for females, despite the fact that several other courts had specifically permitted such investigations and that the department had not been denied such access in more than a decade.

oWilliam G. Myers III

Myers has spent most of his career challenging or undermining, rather than defending laws and rules that seek to protect our environment, even while at the Department of the Interior.

He has shown over the years an alarming insensitivity to the heritage and traditions of Native Americans and demonstrated a strong hostility toward federal environmental protection, including the power of Congress to enact laws to protect the environment, leading to a recent rebuke by a federal judge.

As Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, Myers aggressively advocated on behalf of miners, cattlemen, ranchers and others who wish to exploit public lands for their own benefit. In evaluating his career at Interior, an Idaho Statesman editorial found that "Myers sounds less like an attorney, and more like an apologist for his old friends in the cattle industry."

oPriscilla Owens

Owens has a long series of dissents, often alone, arguing extremist positions against workers' rights, reproductive autonomy, environmental protection, etc. She is often overruled by judges appointed by former Governor Bush - meaning she is too extreme even for Bush's own appointees.

oWilliam H. Pryor, Sr.

The Atlanta Constitution in its May 6, 2003, edition, said Pryor was a right wing "zealot and unfit to be a judge since his speeches displayed a disturbingly politicized view of the role of courts."

Other newspaper accounts reported that Pryor has used the power of his office in an effort to push the law in an extreme far right direction harmful to the rights and interests of ordinary Americans.

He personally has been involved in key Supreme Court cases that, by narrow 5-4 majorities, have hobbled Congress' ability to protect Americans' rights against discrimination and injury based on disability, race, and age.

Pryor has advocated the view that the Constitution should not apply to some of the most critical issues pertaining to individual rights and freedoms, including reproductive choice, gay rights, and school prayer" and that these matters should be decided by the states, based on majority vote, regardless of whether constitutional rights are violated. . .

Pryor has also tried to undermine the separation of church and state, urging the courts to uphold a judge's official sponsorship of sectarian prayers before juries as well as religious displays of the Ten Commandments.

Most recently, Pryor has supported the efforts of Alabama Chief Justice Roy Moore to display a nearly three-ton granite monument of the Ten Commandments in the rotunda of the state Judicial Building, a display ruled unconstitutional by a federal district court.

oHenry Saad

Judge Saad dissented from the majority's ruling in favor of a woman who claimed that she had been subjected to a hostile work environment based on sexual harassment. After a jury trial, the trial court directed entry of a verdict in favor of the employer, taking the case away from the jury. Saad's dissent would have prevented the woman from having a jury even determine the factual merits of her case.

.Judge Saad wrote the majority opinion in a 2-1 ruling reversing the trial court's decision in favor of a woman who had been repeatedly beaten by her former boyfriend when he got drunk at a bar he owned. The boyfriend was criminally convicted, and the woman filed a civil lawsuit against the bar and the boyfriend, . . . the Court of Appeals reversed. In an opinion by Judge Saad, he held that this interpretation of the statute was wrong and would "encourage fraudulent and collusive lawsuits."

In a strong dissent, Judge Jansen explained that the controlling statute was "clear and unambiguous" and there was a "shred of evidence of collusion or fraud" on the part of the women.

Former Civil Rights Commission Chairperson Leaves Scathing Report of President Bush's Civil Rights Record

Mary Francis Berry has left Washington, but her words may eventually haunt Bush.

21 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

How quickly everybody in Washington D.C. forgets.

Only three months after Mary Francis Berry, former head of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, was shown the door by President Bush, it all has been forgotten like it never happened.

Civil rights has always been a thorn in Bush's side so when the liberal-minded Berry left, he probably felt relief. He felt relief since there was one less critical voice to deal with in what appears to be an ongoing strategy to create absolute rule by one party, one leader and one voice.

Berry, a staunch advocate for the poor, oppressed and underprivileged, has the distinction of being escorted out of Washington by two Republican Presidents, Bush and Reagan.

Although Bush is rid of Berry for good, Reagan's firing of Berry was short-lived after she won a lawsuit to be reinstated for indiscriminate firing practices on the part of the former president.

Even though Berry's out and the Republicans now have firm control of the Civil Rights Commission, she left behind a scathing 500 page report harshly criticizing almost every aspect of the Bush administration's posture and handling of civil rights issues.

The report, entitled Redefining Rights in America, never was adopted by the Commission, but is a good indication of Bush's lack of priority and interest in civil rights.

Although the GOP has put its traditional spin on how minorities prosper under its rule, Berry's report points out that Bush has provided proportionately less money for civil rights programs than any other President in modern history.

"The Bush II administration is bad or worse than the Reagan administration in terms of its civil rights record, but much more sophisticated at media spins that deflect criticism away from the administration," said Berry recently from her office at the campus of the University of Pennsylvania where she resides as a professor.

Asked about some of the main controversies with the Bush administration, she cited her dealings with former Attorney General John Ashcroft, saying he basically acted as if the Civil Rights Commission never existed.

"Dwight Eisenhower established the Commission to challenge Presidential policies on discrimination and civil rights, mandating that the Justice Department investigate Commission reports," said Berry. "However, Ashcroft refused to address our reports and only acknowledged receiving one. In past administrations, while the Justice Department didn't always agree with the Commission, at least it functioned with us an equal partner.

"Under Bush, however, I believe the relationship between the Justice Department and the Commission, envisioned by Eisenhower, has broken down completely."

Regarding the future of the Commission and concerning the recent conservative appointments, Berry felt it was now becoming Bush's lapdog not its watchdog.

"I'm not hopeful in the least," added Berry. "Bush has appointed bombastic, black conservative, Gerald Reynolds, as chairman and a group of commissioners who support Bush administration policies to the letter. They have already made inflammatory comments against affirmative action while expressing public support for all of Bush's conservative judicial nominees.

"I believe the Commission now will operate as a cheerleading squad for the President and will downplay its own role as an overseer and watchdog of government abuse."

According to Berry's report, her last official duty after 24 years as head of the Commission, the Bush administration received an F in every area concerning civil rights.

Concerning voting rights, the report states that "despite promising to unite the nation and improve its election system, the President failed to act swiftly toward election reform."

In Education, the report criticizes the No Child Left Behind Act, stating in theory the program sounds like a worthy goal but in reality the President has under funded the program, creating a bureaucratic nightmare for local school districts.

For example, recently in Santa Barbara, CA., the city intends to pull out of the program, citing funding shortages that are hindering not helping education.

Regarding fair housing and environmental justice, the report cites diminished housing for the poor and a lack of caring and concern for protecting the environment.

The report was most critical about President Bush's emphasis on expanding the ability of religious groups in receiving federal funds through what is termed as Faith-Based or Community initiatives.

"Although the initiatives constitute a retreat from civil rights, President Bush has consistently presented the program as an extension of civil rights," cited Berry in the report.

Faith-based funding has been criticized by many as being unconstitutional or just a slick GOP program to gain votes by paying off conservative religious groups with federal funds.

Nominations of Bolton and Wolfowitz Just Don't Make Sense

At least it doesn't make sense to anyone outside the small neo-conservative world created by President Bush

18 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

It's a done deal. Paul Wolfowitz will be named President of the World Bank and John Bolton will be appointed Ambassador to the United Nations.

And with these two rather strange nominations, President Bush once again continues his trend of showing how not to win friends and influence people.

In fact, nominating Wolfowitz and Bolton to their respective positions is like asking David Duke to head up the NAACP or asking Jesse Jackson to lead the Klu Klux Klan.

It just doesn't make sense to put a non-diplomat like Bolton in such a highly sensitive diplomatic position. And, likewise, it doesn't make sense to put someone as hawkish and disliked internationally as Wolfowitz into one of the most influential financial positions in the world.

But then a lot of things about President Bush don't make sense, especially to those outside the little neo-conservative world he has created.

Regarding the war terrorism, Bush once proclaimed to the world "you're either with us or against us, you're either good or evil." And his nominations of Wolfowitz and Bolton again shows the world how little he cares about those outside his realm of thinking.

For example, at a time when unity is needed, Bolton brings to the world stage a history of divisiveness and conflict. His crude and harsh public statements about the United Nations have cultivated far more enemies than friends with statements like he'd like to "dismantle the entire body."

At a 1994 formal discussion sponsored by the World Federalist Association, Bolton ignorantly proclaimed, "There is no such thing as a United Nations. If the U.N. Secretary building in New York lost 10 stories, it wouldn't make a bit of difference."

Regarding North Korea, Bolton doesn't mince words either, sounding more like a war provocateur than a diplomatic statesman.

"A sounder U.S. policy, " said Bolton, referring to Korea in a Los Angeles Times 1999 article, "would start by making it clear to the North that we are indifferent to whether we will ever have normal diplomatic relations with it. Achieving that goal is entirely in their interests, not ours. We should make clear that diplomatic relations will only begin when North Korea becomes a normal country."

Two years ago while in Seoul, the day before international talks with North Korea commenced, Bolton publicly denounced its leader Kim Jong-il as "a tyrannical dictator."

In response, the North Korean dictator referred to Bolton as "human scum," refusing to accept Bolton as a member of the U.S. diplomatic delegation.

Along with his North Korea and U.N. criticisms, Bolton has also denounced and offended those involved in the International Criminal Court system, referring to their work in the human rights arena as "trivial and meaningless."

In a statement made to the House International Relations Committee in July of 2004, he said, "Support for the International Criminal Court concept is based largely on emotional appeals to an abstract ideal of an international judicial system."

Rick Barton, an expert on international security at the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington D.C., said Bolton's nomination is sending a confusing message to the international community.

"It is unclear if this is the type of person that believes in the core values of the United Nations," said Barton. "And it comes right after President Bush made his European trip, stressing the U.S. was not interested in a strictly unilateral approach to foreign policy. So, it must be quite confusing for those abroad who know Bolton's past track record."

Bolton is expected to undergo harsh questioning by Democrats during the upcoming confirmation hearings but is expected to be confirmed in a straight party line vote like he was four years ago when he narrowly passed Senate scrutiny as Undersecretary of State.

Concerning Bush's selection of Wolfowitz as head of the World Bank, it has been met with widespread opposition and skepticism abroad. In Germany, Michael Muller, deputy leader of the Social Democratic Party, called the selection "simply horrifying."

"Wolfowitz is a hawk who would put the world economy at risk of being taken over by a military mindset of suppression and supremacy," said Muller hours after President Bush's announcement.

Current World Bank President James Wolfensohn is stepping down from his position this summer. Traditionally, the U.S. nominates the World Bank president while Europe selects the head of the International Monetary Fund.

But observers claim Wolfowitz's nomination will put trans-Atlantic relationships to the ultimate test. Bush, however, paints an entirely different picture of Wolfowitz, saying he is the best man for the job since he has devoted his entire life to the cause of freedom.

"He is a proven leader, experienced diplomat and will lead the World Bank, during a critical time in history, in an effective and honorable manner," said Bush. "He is a man who believes deeply that lifting people out of poverty is critical to achieving that goal."

Critics at home and abroad, however, see Wolfowitz in an entirely different light, since he has been one of the main architects of the Iraq invasion and considered to be one of the most hawkish neo-conservatives of all Bush subordinates.

He is the primary author of the "Wolfowitz Doctrine" or better known as the "Bush Doctrine," which promotes imposing democracy and free market economy on others by applying strong U.S. pressure, whether by force or financial influence, in order to achieve the ultimate goal.

Criticized for leading America into the Iraq war by manipulating intelligence information to justify an illegal occupation of a sovereign nation, Wolfowitz has strong ties and financial connections to the ammunitions company, Northrup Grummanm, a company that has richly profited from the Iraqi invasion.

As World Bank president, Wolfowitz would oversee a $9 billion dollar annual budget and lead a worldwide staff of 10,000.

Bush To "Fence IN And Contain" Populist Venezuelan President President Chavez says containment is just another word for assassination

16 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The Bush administration has run out of patience with Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez and plans to "contain his activities," a senior U.S. Department of Defense (DOD) official said this week.

What is meant by containment is unclear, but last week the populist leader accused President Bush of planning his assassination. The Bush administration dismissed Chavez's claims as "wild" but is keeping a close eye on the popular leader considered to be disrupting U.S. influence in the region.

Chavez made the assassination accusations last week in his weekly radio broadcast, saying Bush is angered over his recent purchases of Soviet and Brazilian military hardware as well as selling oil to Fidel Castro at discount rates.

Roger Pedro-Maurer, deputy assistant secretary for Western Hemisphere affairs at the DOD, said President Bush and Secretary of State Condoleeza Rice have ordered a tighter leash be put on Chavez since he was employing what the Bush administration is calling a "hyena strategy" in the region.

Pedro-Maurer said Bush wants Chavez "fenced in," signaling a renewed interest in a region neglected in recent years.

Venezuela is the world's fifth largest oil producer and one of the largest exporters to the U.S., shipping more than 1.2 million barrels of crude daily.

Since Chavez was elected six years ago, Venezuela's oil profits have skyrocketed due to high prices. In part due to the oil bonanza, Chavez now enjoys a 70% approval rating among his countrymen and claims to be trying to raise the standard of living in a country where poverty is the rule not the exception.

Forty years ago, Venezuela enjoyed a per capita income higher than Japan, but now more than 70% of the population is mired in poverty. Chavez claims he is trying to redistribute the wealth as well as the property ownership, causing a frenzy among the country's aristocratic minority.

And it's these aristocrats who are appealing to the Bush administration to oust Chavez after a coup attempt failed in 2002. The administration has denied any knowledge or involvement in the coup, where Chavez was removed from power for two days. He then returned to office with a renewed vigor to end poverty in his country, blaming the U.S. for the temporary disruption of his government.

CIA documents recently uncovered, however, reveal the Bush administration had prior knowledge of the planned 2002 coup, but did nothing to stop it. These sensitive documents clearly showed the administration lied since it publicly announced in a news conference in April of 2002 that it had no prior knowledge of the Chavez coup.

Chavez not only has accused the U.S. of involvement in the 2002 coup, but now claims the Bush administration is targeting him again, this time with a bullet and not just political banishment. He also has threatened to discontinue U.S. oil shipments if the Bush administration attempts an assassination.

Consequently, Chavez has become a 'marked man' in the eyes of the Bush administration since he is trying to "subvert" the most vulnerable and least stable Latin American countries, using his influence and money to bully politicians from other poorer countries.

"He's picking on countries whose social fabric is the weakest," said Pedro-Maurer. "In some cases it's downright subversion."

However, Chavez has categorically denied aiding insurgent groups in countries like Bolivia, Columbia and Peru. He claims the U.S. is now beginning its "smear campaign" in order to turn public opinion against him in an attempt to create a climate where his eventual ouster appears justified.

"If anybody knows the U.S., this is how they operate before striking a country," said Chavez regarding the possibility of an eventual U.S. sponsored overthrow of his government.

Venezuelan Leader On President Bush's 'Hit List'

President Hugo Chavez says he'll stop shipping oil to U.S. if Bush attempts to assassinate him

14 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Don't expect to see Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez attending any black tie affairs at the White House any time soon.

Attending parties thrown by Fidel Castro and Saddam Hussein, has put Chavez on President Bush's "black list" or should it be called his "hit list."

It's no secret: Bush doesn't like Chavez and Chavez doesn't like Bush. And the only thing keeping the pair from headlining a Madison Square Garden boxing event is that the U.S. desperately needs oil and Venezuela, the fifth largest exporter and our fourth largest supplier, provides more than 1.2 million barrels of crude to U.S. ports daily.

In an era where Washington diplomacy looks like an episode of the Soprano's, the relationship between Venezuela and the U.S. has sunk to an all-time low. Now, if Chavez attended a Washington party, he'd probably be escorted out in a body bag and then conveniently stuffed in the trunk of a black limousine.

Under President Clinton, relations with Chavez were civil, at least he was tolerated and not publicly criticized as long as the oil kept flowing. But as soon as Bush entered the White House, he employed a strict hard line approach with the populist Latin American leader, who now enjoys a 70% approval rating in his home country.

Besides Bush and Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice's public denouncements, aides like Elliot Abrams, who presided over the Contra war in Nicaragua, and current Homeland Security Chief, John Negroponte, alleged to have orchestrated savage repression in Honduras, have driven Chavez to the boiling point.

Both sides have basically thrown diplomacy out the window and if words are any indication, they are planning to settle their differences in a good old-fashioned street fight.

Last week, Chavez sent shock waves through Latin America when he bluntly said he had obtained credible information that the Bush administration was planning his assassination. In his weekly radio broadcast, he accused the U.S. government of explicitly trying to kill him. He added if an attempt was made, oil shipments to the U.S. would be immediately cut off.

"Bush knows he cannot stage a coup since there is no Pinochet here," said Chavez, referring to Chile's former leader. "We have generals, commanders and soldiers here who are patriots and will not bend their knees to the U.S Empire. They know there are people here with a mass consciousness and that they cannot be confused by the American propaganda machine through the controlled media.

"If I am assassinated, there is only one person responsible: the President of the United States."

Targeting his next comment directly at Bush, he added: "If anything happens to me, forget about Venezuelan oil, Mr. George W. Bush!"

Chavez further hinted at a continent-wide rebellion if he became the target of a U.S. assassination attempt.

"As a group of Latin American workers and industry leaders told me recently, 'if something happens to you (Chavez), we will assume the rules no longer apply and will make every effort to fight back.'"

The Bush administration has not commented publicly but has denied any involvement in a foiled 2002 coup attempt to oust Chavez's populist regime.

However, sensitive CIA documents recently have been leaked, showing the U.S. was "knee deep" in the planning and failed execution of the Chavez coup.

Furthermore, The Washington Post in April of 2002 reported members of Venezuela's diverse aristocratic opposition had been visiting the U.S. Embassy, hoping to enlist U.S. help in toppling Chavez. According to The Post, the visitors included active and retired members of the military, politicians and media heads.

Following the failed April 2002 Venezuelan coup, the Wall Street Journal in its April 15th edition, commented:

"The turmoil is also a reminder of Latin America's dangerous deterioration. Most U.S. media haven't noticed, but half of the continent is in political or economic trouble, or both, following a decade of U.S. mistakes and neglect.

Maybe the Chavez fiasco will alert American elites to stop indulging Cold War grudges and start addressing current problems in the region."

Besides selling oil to Cuba for discount rates, Chavez has angered the Bush administration in many ways. Recently, the U.S. has strongly criticized Chavez for buying arms from Russia with revenues derived from skyrocketing oil prices.

The Venezuelan government has recently approved the purchase of 40 Russian helicopters, 100,000 Kalashnikov rifles and some propeller-powered light attack airplanes from Brazil in a move that is seen to protect against a future attack at destabilizing Venezuela.

Recently both CIA Director Porter Goss and Secretary of State Rice have added fuel to the fire by strongly criticizing Chavez.

Goss has publicly accused Chavez of undermining democracy and cited Venezuela as a 'potentially unstable country in 2005,' adding that Chavez is "consolidating his power by using technically legal tactics to target his opponents for meddling in the region."

In light of Venezuela's 17.4% economic growth in 2004, Chavez said any instability in the region is being planned by Washington. He added that recent statements by Rice show an intention to personalize the conflict between the two countries.

"They do not address the Venezuelan government, but just Hugo Chavez. She (Rice) said that I am a threat to the continent, a threat to democracy and a threat to peace," he said.

In his recent radio address, he specifically listed many other U.S. officials who had been characterizing him as a menace to the region. They included Asst. Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere affairs, Roger Noriega, Secretary of State for Political affairs, Marc Grossman, Deputy Sec of State, Robert Zoellick and Florida Governor Jeb Bush.

Also, Fox News recently aired a series of news stories tilted against Chavez. The series was entitled "The Iron Fist of Hugo Chavez," portraying him as a dictator who uses violence to remain in power and invests his country's oil wealth into weapons instead of helping the poor. The news documentary on numerous occasions called Chavez a dictatorial strongman even after he has won the democrat vote of his people in victories certified by foreign observers.

"Don't make the mistake. Mr. Bush, of ordering my assassination because you will regret it," said Chavez, who is a vocal critic of American imperialism throughout the world and the Bush administration's lack of commitment to worldwide environmental protections. "Be assured that the people will make you regret it. Not only our people but many others from all around the world. The time of cowards is over. In this era we live, people are rising up everywhere and there isn't an imperialistic power strong enough to stop it."

Besides Chavez's close relationship with Castro, he has come under scrutiny by the Bush administration for a number of other reasons:

__ His outspoken criticism of the U.S. invasions in Afghanistan and Iraq caused Bush to temporarily withdraw the American Ambassador after Chavez publicly held up pictures of slain Afghani and Iraqi children killed in U.S. bombing attacks. Chavez then outraged Bush even further by calling for the end of "the killing of the innocent" since the attacks had no legal justification.

__ His lack of cooperation with the U.S. in its war with the Columbian guerrillas.

__ His denial of Venezuelan airspace to U.S. counter-drug flights.

__ His refusal to give U.S. intelligence agencies information about Venezuela's large Arab population.

__ His frequent visits with Sadaam Hussein in Iraq and Moammar Gaddafi in Libya.

__ His questioning of the advantages and justification of globalization.

__ His proposals for a regional trade-bloc and his attempts to unite Latin America petroleum operations as a way to break away from U.S. dominance.

Chavez first came to power six years ago when the Venezuelan masses were increasingly disgusted with traditional aristocratic political parties, such as Democratic Action and the pro-Catholic COPE Party.

Chavez created what he called an "agrarian revolution," driving the large landowners into turmoil in a country where 3% of the farmers own 70% of the tillable land. Chavez's popularity increased dramatically as the people became disgusted by the enormous income generated from the oil industry going directly into the pocket books of the rich and powerful in both Venezuela and Washington.

Forty years ago, per capita income in Venezuela was higher than Japan.

However, today, more than 70% of the people live below the poverty line even though oil industry profits and the country's gross national product have dramatically increased.

With his populist movement gaining support all across Latin America, Chavez warns that the U.S. is preparing to invade Venezuela and is now preparing the landscape for the eventual takeover.

"As anyone who studies the behavior of the U.S. empire during the last century discovers one common factor: every time the U.S. goes to attack someone, they don't do it right away. They start by first preparing the terrain and trying to manipulate public opinion. Public opinion is what worries the U.S. the most and that is why the U.S. government has become an expert in media and public opinion manipulation.

"Look at Iraq , for example: There was a public opinion campaign waged, accusing Saddam of having chemical weapons of mass destruction and accusing him of being a menace by presenting what turned out to be false evidence. This way, no matter what the truth really is, when an attack is finally launched, they have the support of public opinion and consequently everything appears to be justified."

However, also at home, the Bush administration's hard line policy toward

Venezuela and specifically Chavez has not gone without criticism. Democratic Senator Christopher Dodd urged Secretary of State Rice at her recent confirmation hearings to take a more moderate approach to Venezuelan diplomacy since he felt the Bush administration had unnecessarily strained relations,

"This is an important relationship. It is important for everyone in the hemisphere. We need to work at it," said Dodd.

Even Republican Senator Lincoln Chafee came to Chavez's defense recently when he said the Rice may be acting hypocritical by treating some undemocratically leaders like Pakistan's Musharraf with respect while, at the same time, offending democratically elected ones like Chavez.

Ticket Agent's 9/11 Encounter With Muhammad Atta Leaves Him Emotionally Devastated

U.S. Airways agent says he checked-in Atta and another hijacker on the morning of 9/11 in Portland, ME. Critics claim the pair may have been imposters or FBI plants.

11 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

He sat silent for years, keeping a secret Americans were dying to hear.

Not able to talk, there were days he cried uncontrollably, days he pounded his fists on the table like a madman, wondering if he could have prevented so many people from dying the morning of September 11, 2001.

For years, his days were filled with agony and his nights remained sleepless.

For years, he tossed and turned, cursing himself for letting Mohammad Atta and Abdul-azziz Alomari, two of the alleged 19 hijackers, slip through his fingers at 5:40am on 9/11.

There's an old saying in life that "a moment can change a lifetime." And the moment that changed U.S. Airways ticket agent Michael Tuohey's life was when he came face to face with the alleged hijackers, one being Atta the suspected ringleader of the entire operation.

Tuohey's brief encounter took place at the U.S. Airways ticket and baggage check-in at the airport in Portland, Me. early on the morning of 9/11. Working the ticket counter as he did most every morning for 37 years, he remembered two clean shaven Arab-looking businessmen with tickets in hand approaching his workstation, both looking elegant and wearing suits and ties.

He remembers they were running late for their flight as they presented prepaid, one-way tickets from Portland to Boston and then onto Los Angeles on the infamous Flight 11. Looking back, he recalls nothing unusual about the alleged hijackers, saying both appeared calm, the younger Alomari even acting in a very happy-go-lucky mood.

"Not like you'd expect from someone knowing he is going to die," recalls Tuohey, now retired and living near Portland. "There are certain things in my job you are trained to look for that red flags danger. One is adult males with a one-way ticket paying in cash.

If they had paid in cash, we probably would have run them through security, checked their bags and they may have never gotten on the flight.

"I can't tell you how many nights I have seen their faces in my dreams and how many nights I second guessed myself for not stopping them get on the flight."

Tuohey said his guilt and remorse became so unbearable, so out of control that he finally sought professional help, although he readily admits it didn't help much.

"I found myself at home sobbing uncontrollably. I just lost it," he said. "I never felt so helpless in my life and I never want to feel that way again. I think finally after going public with the story about a month ago, I have come to terms with what I did and no longer feel guilty."

Asked why he waited so long to tell his story, which came to public attention on the CNN's Paula Zahn Show as well as in an article in the Portland Press Herald, he added: "No one really ever asked. However, looking back, I probably wasn't ready to face the public since I had asked the FBI to keep my name out of the papers. Thank God they kept their word."

Behind the emotions and the human interest Tuohey's story evokes, there is an ulterior motive behind those now questioning him about his encounter with Atta and Alomari. Those now asking questions are hoping his eye-witness accounts and recollections help clear up a controversy brewing over the only airport surveillance photo ever released of Atta and Alomari.

The government claims the surveillance photo released in the Portland airport conclusively shows them walking through the security clearance gate about 100 yards away from where Tuohey checked the pair's tickets and bags.

Critics claim the government altered the photos since they were not a clear match of other independent mug shots released of Atta and Alomari. These same critics claim Atta and Alomari never boarded the 19-seat airplane from Portland to Logan International as well as never boarding Flight 11. This, they claim, is just another small piece of the larger 9/11 government conspiracy puzzle.

And now since Tuohey was one of the last to see the alleged hijackers before the controversial surveillance photos were taken, his words are being dissected and interpreted, perhaps misinterpreted, with the obvious goal of trying to establish if Atta and Alomari actually boarded Flight 11.

"I know about the conspiracy theories and about the surveillance camera shots released, but all I can tell you is what I saw. I'll tell you what I told the FBI agents when I was interviewed on 9/11," said Tuohey. "I believe the two men in front of me on 9/11 were Atta and Alomari. I have no reason to believe otherwise. They looked like the same two guys that were in the mug shots shown to me by the FBI agents the same morning."

As for details, Tuohey is very precise about the appearance, demeanor and attitudes of the alleged hijackers even after four years when memories fade and prior visions become cloudy.

"You don't forget something like this," he added. "I remember looking into Atta's eyes like it was yesterday. He spoke good English and the other one never spoke. Looking back, they appeared to have rehearsed the proper way to act and the proper things to say. Atta appeared to understand everything I said.

"When I asked how many bags they were checking in, Atta simply said 'two.' He then asked for a one-stop boarding pass, which means he wouldn't be again checked at Logan if I gave it to him.

"It was customary back then to give one stop boarding passes on connector flights, but I never did it because I figured I worked for U.S. Airways and not for American, which was their connector flight.

"When I didn't give it to him, he became noticeably agitated. But he stopped short of making a scene and hurriedly left in order to catch his flight."

One of the major discrepancies between Tuohey's description of their appearance and the surveillance photo released was that the two men in the photo were dressed casually in shirts without suits, ties and the white shawl over Alomari's head.

"They left my workstation in suits and ties. I didn't see them take their coats off," recalls Tuohey. "Atta left carrying a small duffel bag and the other had a very small bag. I guess they could have placed the jackets, ties and shawl in Atta's bag. I just don't know."

Asked if a surveillance camera was posted by his workstation, he said he was told by the FBI on 9/11 that the video camera had been out of order for several weeks and no other pictures were available.

"I had worked there a long time and never knew the cameras were broken until I was told by the agents," said Tuohey, adding they were installed by airport officials and not U.S. Airways.

To shed light on Tuohey's vivid recollections, an independent 9/11 researcher, who prefers to remain anonymous due to prior government harassment, added these important details after numerous interviews and countless hours of researching the two hijackers movements in and around Portland prior to 9/11:

"Mohammed Atta and Abdul-azziz Alomari were conveniently captured on video cameras at three different locations in Portland the night before 9/11. Yet none of the stills taken from those locations, Jetport Gas, the ATM machine and Walmart, were clear enough, as posted on the FBI website, to confirm that they were the same two men whose FBI mug shots were displayed prominently on the major networks for weeks along with the other 17 hijackers.

"The Portland Press Herald article that came out back in October of 2001, the first publication to print the now famous Atta and Alomari surveillance photo, was also too fuzzy to make the confirmation that they were the same two men.

"When I interviewed "Jerry" the attendant at Jetport Gas in early 2002 who saw the hijackers, he told me that the 'second one could not have been the Alomari the FBI showed on TV because he was too tall.' He also told me that 'they spoke such poor English that I had to give them directions to Walmart three times.' This clearly contradicts Tuohey's statements that Atta spoke perfect English.

"The eyewitness quoted in the original Portland Press Herald article, who put Atta and Alomari on the 19-seater to Logan, was Jane Eisenberg of Cape Elizabeth, ME. I interviewed Eisenberg around the same time as Jerry, and she told me when asked if she could confirm if the two men she saw on the 19-seater were the same two men the FBI was displaying all over the major networks, 'No, I can not.'

"And remember it was the FBI who told Tuohey the camera he worked under everyday hadn't worked for some time! They knew that, but a guy who worked directly under it every day didn't know?

"Also, a friend of Tuohey's, who also took that flight to Boston was quoted as saying, he recalled seeing the two leaving the plane in Boston in suit coats and ties.

"Like Tuohey mentioned Alomari also wore a shawl of some type that is also missing in the famous photo. Although he assumed they must have placed these articles of clothing in their carry-on bags, his friend on the plane didn't mention them dressing up again on the flight.

"It should be mentioned that the short distance between Tuohey's workstation and the security check-in, the size of Alomari's carry-on piece and the fact that they were running late for the flight, makes it very suspicious that they would first take off their jackets and ties before boarding."

The Perfect Terrorist Plan to Level The Twin Towers Created In 1976
Our own U.S. Army devised a plan commissioned by Congress to bring down the WTC using commercial airliners and box cutters as weapons

9 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The laundry list of terrorist warnings handed to the Bush administration prior to 9/11 makes the President and others look like "bumbling idiots or a bunch of conniving criminals" responsible for the mass murders at the Twin Towers and in Afghanistan and Iraq.

These are the harsh words of Timothy McNiven, an outspoken critic of the President's handling of 9/11 and a 29-year U.S. Defense Department operative still under contract with the government

He says not only did the Bush administration purposely ignore Al Queda in the months preceding the WTC attacks, but the situation is even more disturbing, considering his military unit way back in 1976 devised a mock terrorist attack of the Twin Towers exactly like what occurred on 9/11.

McNiven, who first went public in an affidavit included in a 9/11-related federal conspiracy (RICO) lawsuit filed against Bush and others in 2004, claims his unit was ordered to create the "perfect terrorist plan" using commercial airliners as weapons and the Twin Towers as their target.

The publicized version of the study, commissioned by Congress, was to identify security lapses and submit corrective measures to lawmakers. However, McNiven claims the real purpose of the study was to brainstorm how to pull off the perfect terrorist attack using the exact same 9/11 scenario.

The study, commissioned to C-Battery 2/81st Field Artillery, U.S. Army, stationed in Strassburg, Germany in 1976, specifically devised the scenario of the Twin Towers being leveled by Middle Eastern terrorists using commercial airliners and even plastic box cutters to bypass security.

To silence critics, McNiven has successfully passed a credible lie detector test regarding his participation in the study as well as other specific orders given to him by his superiors in case of a real attack on the Twin Towers.

The head of the 1976 mock terrorist plan was Lt. Michael Teague of Long Island, who McNiven says was given specific orders by higher-ups in the military to use the Twin Towers as the terrorist target.

McNiven said he has been unable to contact Lt. Teague, but was interested in his opinion now that "the 9/11 attacks happened the way we planned them in 1976."

"I remember Lt. Teague changed the scenario of the supposed study from a 100 story building to the Twin Towers," recalled McNiven, emphasizing that Lt. Teague was acting on specific orders from unknown superiors.

"He then said he thought it was very strange to be asked to devise a plan to blow up your own home town. But as I watched the Twin Towers really collapse on the morning of September 11th, I realized I was watching the very same thing we devised in the 1976."

Since that ominous realization, McNiven has devoted his entire life to alerting the American public about the similarities between 9/11 and the 1976 study without much success, his story basically being ignored by politicians and the mainstream media.

"Why am I doing this? Why have I spent every waking hour trying to bring this story to the American people?" asked McNiven, claiming he still is following a strange direct military order given to him more than 25 years ago.

"During the course of the terrorist plan we were devising, I made the statement to Lt. Teague that if the WTC was ever attacked like we planned, I'd go public. I was then physically assaulted and told never to reveal anything we were doing regarding the Twin Towers."

However, about a week later a strange turn of events occurred. For no apparent reason, McNiven claims his superiors completely changed their minds.

"I was given the direct order that if the Twin Towers were ever attacked the way we discussed in the 1976 study, I was to do everything in my power to bring the similarities to the attention of the American people.

"I have no idea why they changed their minds, but I was then emphatically told that this order was never to be rescinded - never - because those who would rescind it, would be the very same people who turned against the American people."

Besides taking a lie detector to verify his story, McNiven has made public a detailed list of about 40 names of those individuals who took part in the mock terrorist plan, including Col. Robert Morrison, Maj. Joe Dipiero, Sgt. Middleton, Sgt. Arroyo and many others.

"There were also people from the Defense Department and the CIA who were monitoring the study, but I wasn't able to get their names," he added.

Some of McNiven's most recent assignments with the Defense Department include work on the Northwest Drug Task Force and various other drug smuggling and weapons trafficking cases.

Virginia Peace Group Wants 9/11 Pentagon Video Tapes Released
Bush administration suspected of withholding crucial 9/11 Pentagon evidence

5 Mar 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A Virginia based peace organization is calling for the government to release

9/11 video tapes in order to show conclusive proof that American Airlines

Flight 77 crashed into the Pentagon.

"I have sent a letter to The Washington Post, urging the paper to examine the suspicious Pentagon evidence," said Enver Masud, an engineering management consultant and head of The Wisdom Fund, an Arlington, Va. based non-profit organization promoting peace and justice.

A spokesman at The Post said the letter has not been published and first must go through the proper screening process as all other letters to the editor.

"After three years of investigation, I still can't offer an alternative theory," added Masud. "But I have collected sufficient evidence to show that it is very unlikely a Boeing 757 crashed into the Pentagon."

Citing national security concerns, the Bush administration has withheld most of the sought-after Pentagon video tapes, only releasing five short frames that raise more questions than answers.

Critics claim this is nothing but an attempt to whitewash the American people. The short segment released by the Pentagon shows no evidence of a Boeing 757 hitting the Pentagon and even displays the wrong date (September 12) as well as the wrong time in the bottom portion of the tapes.

And Masud claims in a time when most every corner department store video tapes suspected shoplifters, how can the Bush administration expect the American public to believe no surveillance exists at the Pentagon, one of the most highly monitored and protected areas of airspace in the world.

However, his attempt to get the Pentagon video tapes released is nothing new.

Advocates right after 9/11 have been attempting to get their hands on the surveillance videos taken between 9:35am and 10:15am on 9/11. They contend at least one, if not many, of the numerous cameras positioned in and outside the Pentagon must have had a clear view of the oncoming Boeing 757.

Further, they contend it is incomprehensible to think tapes were unavailable unless the Bush administration was involved in a massive cover up to keep the facts from what really hit the Pentagon from the American people.

"After analyzing evidence, the first question I asked was 'where's the plane?'" said Masud, who lives only a mile from the Pentagon. He added that after canvassing the area not one single person saw a Boeing 757 flying low the morning of September 11th.

"Photos and videos held by the government could very well refute my conclusion. I would welcome that because the alternative is far more disturbing. However, why hasn't the government released the footage unless they were hiding what really crashed into in the Pentagon."

Besides the surveillance tape issue, Masud's open letter to The Post highlights other suspicious events surrounding the Pentagon crash, including the size of the hole made in the structure and little or no airplane debris recovered after the crash.

"Arlington County Fire Chief, Ed Plaughner, at a news briefing right after 9/11 said there were only small pieces of the aircraft recovered but nothing resembling a fuselage," said Masud. "Wouldn't the engines have survived in some recognizable form? An engine from one of the plane's that struck the World Trade Center was shown lying on the street on network television. Why nothing at the Pentagon? "

Masud's letter then asks a more disturbing question, a question about why the major media outlets, including The Post, have failed to adequately investigate and follow up the entire 9/11 situation.

"The media just hasn't done its job," he added. "There are so many suspicious photos and events at the Pentagon left unanswered. For example, one photo reveals office furniture and a computer monitor that survived the fire that is alleged to have vaporized the entire Boeing 757. This is highly improbable, if not impossible."

Masud's letter ends by calling to attention that since September 11th, more than 5,000 foreign nationals have been detained by the United States and denied basic constitutional rights in the name of wartime expediency even though acting FBI Director Robert Mueller said on April 19, 2002:

"In our investigation regarding the arrests, we have not uncovered a single piece of paper in the United States or elsewhere that has mentioned any aspect of the September 11th plot."

Hussein's American Lawyer Threatened by U.S. Military;
Former Iraqi leader denied International law rights. No official charges have yet been filed and he has been denied access to counsel.

28 Feb 2005

By Greg Szymanski

There is an old saying in the legal profession that everybody deserves a fair trial. But easier said than done when it comes to the former Iraqi dictator

Saddam Hussein.

After being captured over a year ago by American forces, Hussein has been held in a military detention center without charges being filed and without access to legal counsel even though his family has hired over 20 lawyers, including several Americans.

But what good are lawyers if you're not allowed to talk with them? What good is a defense team if the prosecution never presents its case?

In fact, Hussein has never been afforded any of the rights normally mandated by the Geneva Convention and International law, these technicalities being ignored by the U.S. government since he has never been officially categorized as a prisoner of war.

The American government claims Hussein is nothing but a terrorist and basically can rot in jail until hell freezes over. Critics contend he either should be given prisoner of war status or immediately released since the invasion of Iraq was a violation of International law.

But if you think the American government is going to let something so insignificant as International law stand in the way of Hussein's eventual execution, think again. Let there be no doubt that Hussein will eventually be killed or will rot in jail and that everything in between is merely legal gamesmanship, a plan set up by the Bush administration to make it appear that Hussein is receiving at least a semblance of justice.

There are many reasons why the American government wants Hussein out of the picture quickly, one being a long and drawn out defense might expose the sordid details of how America actually backed Hussein in the war against Iran and the other atrocities committed against his own people.

In other words, when it served American interests, Hussein was allowed to play dirty. But when our interests were no longer served, he needed to be removed. So now he sits in jail, the only question being how can he be removed without too much ill will being spread across the world.

It would be an international nightmare to just shoot him in front of a firing squad. And it would be too cumbersome to give him prisoner of war status since that would bring up complicated issues of whether the U.S. actually violated International law by the Iraqi invasion in the first place.

So the Bush administration decides to skirt International law, decides to violate humanitarian principles of law by creating a bogus Iraqi tribunal to hear Hussein's case, while at the same time, giving him no ability whatsoever to defend himself.

In other words, the "fix is in," a "kangaroo court" is at work and America is no longer the shining example to the world that everyone - even our most feared enemies - deserves a fair trial.

And if it wasn't for international human rights lawyer, Curtis Doebbler, perhaps no one would ever be able to make any sense about what is going on with Hussein and the "kangaroo court" gathered in Baghdad.

Doebbler, an American citizen and respected human rights attorney, has been hired by the Hussein family to represent the former dictator. He is one of the lead attorneys in an international group numbering more than 20, who are trying to piece together a defense even though the prosecution has never officially presented charges.

Doebbler has acted all over the world as an expert consultant and teacher/trainer in the field of internal human rights law. His clients have included an estimated two million internally displaced persons in the Khartoum State, approximately 3,500 Ethiopian refugees in the Sudan, dozens of political activists in the Sudan, the democratic Republic of the Congo, Peru, Afghanistan as well as hundreds of other clients from countries too numerous to mention.

This week, from his headquarters in Jordan, Doebbler answered questions updating the latest aspects of the Hussein case:

Q. In a nutshell, what motivates you to take on such a case? Have you had any physical threats made to you since becoming part of the Hussein defense team?

A. I am an international human rights lawyer and have a responsibility to protect human rights in any cases where I can within the limits of my abilities and resources. As this case arose in the aftermath of one of the most serious violations of human rights to take place in recent times, the violation of the right to life of 26 million Iraqis by the act of aggression carried out against them by the United States, a country whose nationality I hold, there is a special responsibility to act.

Many of my colleagues around the world as well as in the United States respect the fact that every individual has the right to legal representation and the right to a fair trial. Unfortunately, I have received both explicit and implicit threats from members of the US military and some other individuals who do not understand this. I have also been several times harassed by the Israeli immigration and IDF authorities who do not like my work either as the representative of Mr. Saddam Hussein or as a professor of law at An-Najah National University in Palestine. If human rights are to become a reality and if we are to defend the rule of law from the violent and in recent times unprecedented attack that has been launched against human rights by the Bush administration and its allies, individuals must have the courage to stand up against injustice. We must particularly stand up for the human rights of the individuals that society shuns. My work as one very small piece of the very immense effort that is needed if we are to preserve a society living under the rule of law for future generations.

Q. When was the last time you visited Hussein and can you shed light on his mental and physical condition without violating the attorney/client privilege?

A. We have not been allowed to visit him in an appropriate manner that allows the facilitation of his defense. The single visit of one of the lawyers took place on December 16, 2004. This visit, however, was conducted with guards present and it was impossible to discuss the details of the case with our client.

Q. When is the next formal court hearing? Are you satisfied with the procedural and substantive due process given your client?

A. The lawyers have been provided neither the charges nor the evidence nor access to their client. For more than one year Mr. Saddam Hussein continues to be denied access to lawyers of his choosing with the view to facilitating his defense and several other due process rights that international humanitarian and human rights law require be respected. Furthermore, he is threatened with trial before an incompetent court that is neither independent nor impartial. These violations constitute irreparable violations of his right to fair trial.

Q. Is Ramsey Clarke joining the defense team? Have you had conversations with him regarding the Hussein matter?

A Mr. Clark is supporting the efforts of the legal team that has still not been able to have contact with our client in order to mount a proper defense.

At the moment, we are simply instructed by the family. However, Mr. Clark is in contact with the lawyers working on this case, including myself.

Bush Turns Country Into 'Banana Republic'
War profiteering among Bush Administration is the rule not the exception

25 Feb 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Never in our country's history have so many power brokers close to the President been allowed to privately profit so handsomely by foreign policy decisions directly coming from the White House.

A list of those in the Bush administration, who have profited financially from the war in Afghanistan and Iraq, puts America in the same league as other rogue "Banana Republic" states where a mixture of corporate and government greed runs rampant.

Those who benefited from corporate connections with defense companies like Haliburton, Boeing, Northrop-Grumman, Bectel and other corporate subsidiaries involved in the war effort include Vice President Dick Cheney, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, Secretary of State Condoleeza Rice, former Secretary of State Colin Powell, Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz, Pentagon advisor Richard Pearle and former President George H. Bush.

What's even more troubling and highly suspicious is that profit earnings from the above-listed corporations, all who acquired no bid government contracts, have skyrocketed from as much as 40 to 80% since the beginning of the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq.

And more recently, former President Bush's brother, William, a stockholder in a St. Louis based ammunitions company involved in building armor reinforced vehicles, reported stock sale earnings of over $425,000 after the company's profits skyrocketed due the war effort,

Most of these shocking insider-profiteering revelations first came to light two years ago in a French documentary film entitled "The World According to Bush."

Since its first showing, the film has received a Canadian Film Festival Award for top documentary, but has been simultaneously banned from the Cannes Film Festival as well as all other major media outlets in the United States.

"Essentially, the people in America have been deprived of this important information about their present political leaders by the corporate media decision to ban distribution of our film," said William Karel, the film's producer in a recent PBS interview.

"Despite independent screenings and sales on the internet our film has been outlawed in this country even though the Canadians gave it higher praise than Fahrenheit 911 for its factual content and depth of subject matter."

Besides featuring corporate profiteering by members of the present administration, the film delves into the history of the Bush family patriarch, President Bush's grandfather Prescott Bush. Here the film notes that official documents reveal that while former president George H. Bush was flying fighter pilots in World War II, Prescott Bush was secretly helping Hitler and the Nazi party funnel money out of Germany into foreign banks.

In his role as an investment banker, documents reveal that the elder Bush's close connections to the Nazi's finally were uncovered stateside, forcing him to give up his banking activities as well as substantial holdings in a German company located in Poland that used slave Jewish labor in its workforce.

The film's producer claims the American corporate media has never reported this sleazy side of the Bush family even though the story merits national coverage for obvious reasons since it is the foundation for the rest of the family's rise to power,

For example, the documentary brings to light official documents recently declassified, catching former President Bush in a bold-faced lie regarding false statements made about his involvement in the CIA prior to being named its director in 1974.

One declassified document reveals a memo written in 1963 by then CIA head J. Edgar Hoover to a member of the department named George H. Bush. The memo, written in Hoover's hand, asks Bush about how strategy and planning was progressing in the infamous Bay of Pigs debacle finally thwarted by President John F. Kennedy.

The film goes a step further to prove the Bush connection in the Bay of Pigs by citing a little known fact that one of the clandestine ships used in the covert operation was named "The Barbara." The film then suggests that this shows a Bush connection since the former President had named his two World War II fighter planes the "Barbara I" and the "Barbara II" after the former First Lady.

When confronted with this memo in 1988, Bush senior denied he was in the CIA prior to 1974, saying Hoover's memo must have been "written to another George H. Bush" in the department.

"It's just amazing that this family has been allowed to get away with so much without the American public even bothering to question the integrity and background of their leaders," added filmmaker Karel.

Besides the obvious war profiteering and sordid past of the Bush family, the filmmaker spends the remainder of the documentary discussing the Bush family connection to the Royal Saudi family and their mutual interests in obtaining Iraqi oil reserves, the world's second largest next to that of Saudi Arabia.

ACLU Claims Bush and Gonzalez Misleading Americans About True Intent of The Patriot Act

The administration is waging on all out propaganda campaign to save the Patriot Act while civil rights groups are mounting support to dismantle what they call a law that is unconstitutional on its face.

20 Feb 2005

By Greg Szymanski

President Bush and Attorney General Alberto Gonzalez are waging a tough "hard sell" campaign aimed at misleading the American people about the true nature and intent of the Patriot Act, according to a recent press release issued by the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU).

Bush claims the new surveillance law is needed to fight terrorism while critics contend it is being used to spy on American citizens opposed to the Bush imperialistic agenda.

The pair are currently "hitting the airwaves hard" in a nationwide public relations pitch, trying to sell the Patriot Act before many of its main provisions expire at the end of 2005 under previously enacted sunset provisions within the law.

As soon as Gonzalez was officially sworn in last week, President Bush used the occasion to insist the Patriot Act should not be allowed to expire. He urged America to "get behind the act" in order to give law enforcement the tools necessary to fight terrorism.

Bush's plea, however, has been strongly denounced by the ACLU as government propaganda in what the civil rights group call "an assault on the very freedoms Americans treasure."

Just six weeks after the September 11 attacks, a panicked Congress passed the Patriot Act into law, which amounted to an overnight revision of the nation's surveillance laws vastly expanding the government's authority to spy on its own citizens while drastically reducing judicial oversight and public accountability.

The ACLU and other civil rights groups have even gone farther, calling the act unconstitutional on its face and bordering on tactics used by the old Soviet Union and Nazi Germany.

Most of the controversial changes to surveillance laws made by the Patriot Act were part of a longstanding law enforcement wish list that had been previously been rejected by Congress numerous times due to its unconstitutional nature.

Congress, however, reversed its course, many lawmakers not even reading the controversial legislation, because it was bullied by the Bush administration during the frightening weeks following the WTC attacks.

The ACLU claims Congress and the Bush administration acted "without careful or systematic effort" to determine whether weaknesses in our surveillance laws had contributed to the attacks or whether the changes they were making would help prevent further attacks.

"Indeed, many of the act's provisions have nothing to do with terrorism and have been used in other domestic areas to spy on the American people," said the ACLU in a recent press release.

Thousands of complaints from ordinary citizens have surfaced since passage of the act and three states and more than 180 local municipalities have passed official resolutions denouncing the widespread powers given the government. Even the passive and unassuming National Association of Librarians has publicly denounced the act, putting out public warnings that the government may be spying or reading materials of its patrons.

Section 215 of the Patriot Act has been at the center of controversy and is set to expire at the end of the year. This section allows the FBI unprecedented power to order any person or entity to turn over "tangible things" so long as the FBI says it is "for an authorized investigation to protect against clandestine intelligence activities" whether these activities involve terrorism or not.

Critics claim this overly broad provision places too much discretion in the hands of unscrupulous government agents who have no regard for privacy or protection of constitutional rights. Section 215 vastly expands the government's authority to spy on ordinary citizens in the following ways:

- ⌘ The FBI need not show probable cause or even reasonable grounds to believe that the person whose records it seeks is engaged in criminal activity.
- ⌘ The FBI can now spy on a person simply because it does not like the books he/she reads, the websites visited or letters written to editors criticizing government policy.
- ⌘ The provision violates the First Amendment by effectively authorizing the FBI to investigate U. S. citizens based solely on their exercise of fundamentally protected rights of free speech.
- ⌘ The provision violates the Fourth and Fifth Amendments by failing to require that those who are the subject of the Section 215 orders be told that their privacy has been compromised.

Prior to Gonzalez, former Attorney General John Ashcroft, one of the act's main proponents, went to great lengths to convince the American people of the value of the Patriot Act. However, his failure to effectively silence criticism may be one of the main reasons he decided to resign after only one term.

Ashcroft's hard line approach and unwillingness to compromise made him fodder for late night jokes, depicting him in the same light as Stalin and Hitler. He was also the brunt of the attack mounted by civil rights groups who had been calling for his resignation ever since the Patriot Act became law.

It appears, however, that his successor as well as President Bush are taking over where Ashcroft left off, again leading the fight to save the Patriot Act in light of growing pressure to dismantle it completely or allow its main provisions to sunset by year's end.

FBI Abuses Patriot Act in Political Corruption Probe
Las Vegas strip tease club owner claims feds violated his Constitutional rights

18 Feb 2005

Greg Szymanski

Everyone agrees Las Vegas striptease club owner Michael Galardi is anything but a model citizen. But no one argues even someone like him deserves Constitutional protection.

However, FBI investigators found a way to bypass that technicality and subpoena Galardi's financial records without probable cause, using the Patriot Act even though terrorist allegations never surfaced.

FBI agents used Section 215 of the act to gather information on mere suspicion and with little judicial oversight, violating the spirit of the law and using it against citizens suspected of common crimes.

Galardi's case is a good example why civil libertarians have criticized the Bush administration for abusing the act and blatantly violating the Constitution.

"The Patriot Act was used appropriately by the FBI and was clearly within legal parameters of the statute," said Special Agent Jim Stern of the Las Vegas FBI office about the records taken from Galardi concerning a political corruption probe.

Apparently Stern and his FBI agents consider the Patriot Act also includes investigations unrelated to terrorism, verifying the abuses critics claimed would occur with the wide-ranging act.

"The Patriot Act was clearly not intended to investigate political corruption," said Dominic Gentile, a Las Vegas lawyer who represents one of Galardi's supposed accomplices, former Clark County Commissioner Lance Malone.

Gentile called it an outrage and a clear violation of due process guaranteed by the Constitution when FBI agents used the Patriot Act against his client to investigate illegal payoffs and public corruption in southern Nevada.

"The case eventually went to a grand jury over a year ago in an ongoing investigation that still has not brought any charges," added Gentile.

Gary Peck, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Nevada, said the Patriot Act included provisions "that in no way had anything to do with the threat of terrorism, but is helping prosecutors getting information in more garden variety crimes."

Abuses evident in the Galardi case serve as ammunition for critics who are calling for the eradication of the Patriot Act at a time when President Bush and his newly appointed Attorney General, Alberto Gonzales, are initiating a campaign to gain public support.

At Gonzales' official appointment this week, President Bush used it to rally support behind defeating the "sunset provisions" within the act, which expire at year's end and would eliminate many of the act's main features, including the much maligned Section 215.

Although the Bush administration claimed the government "uses the Patriot Act wisely" and only "to combat terrorism," a litany of cases prove otherwise.

In one case prosecuted in 2004, investigators used a provision of the Patriot Act to recover $4.5 million from a group of telemarketers accused of tricking elderly citizens into thinking they had won the Canadian lottery.

Tim Lynch, director of the Project on Criminal Justice at the Cato Institute, a liberal think-tank, said police and government surveillance have dramatically overstepped their constitutional bounds under the Patriot Act.

"We have already heard of stories and compiled information about local police chiefs who have compiled dossiers on people who have protested the Iraq war," said Lynch. "The government is constantly trying to expand its powers and it needs to be watched very closely."

Other Patriot Act abuses of non-related terrorist activity include Terrorist Task Force Agents harassing a local Portland, Oregon, toy store owner, numerous citizens being illegally held as enemy combatants, records confiscated from BlackBoxVoting.org and a FBI investigation into a 12-year-old school boy's research project on the Chesapeake Bay Bridge.

To combat these abuses, three state legislatures and over 180 local municipalities have passed resolutions publicly denouncing the Patriot Act.

Woman claims ex-husband and alleged 911 hijacker still alive
Her testimony to be included in 2002 federal lawsuit filed against Bush administration for prior knowledge of 911 attacks

17 Feb 2005

By Greg Szymanski

An American woman married to one of the alleged 911 hijackers claims her ex-husband is still alive, in good health and contacts her on a regular basis. She also claims to have personally met Mohamed Atta and his younger brother, two of the alleged 911 ringleaders.

The woman made these statements last year to San Francisco attorney Stanley Hilton, who filed in June 2002 a $7 billion law federal lawsuit against President Bush and other government officials for "allowing" the terrorist attacks to occur.

The case is presently stalled in the pre-trial discovery stage as government attorneys are refusing to hand over requested documents, hiding behind what Hilton calls a phony blanket of national security.

"They can claim to hide everything, to hide everything they do as national security," said Hilton, a former Republican advisor and counselor to Sen. Bob Dole. "National security is just a word. What does it really mean? Especially when we are accusing the very same individuals of sabotaging the national security of this country to pursue their own political agenda."

Despite the magnitude of the story, mention of the law suit, filed on behalf of the families of 14 911 victims, has been ignored by the mainline media, except for a small article in the June 11th edition of the San Francisco Examiner.

Information about specifics of the woman's relationship with the alleged hijacker and facts about his being on the FBI or CIA payroll have only been given slight attention by alternative radio broadcaster, Alex Jones, in a March 2003 interview with Hilton, aired for his small underground following.

"My witness has personal knowledge and will testify that her ex-husband and at least six of the other alleged hijackers are still alive, received regular government payments and were originally recruited by the CIA, FBI and counter intelligence," said Hilton, who wants the woman's whereabouts to remain unknown fearing for her safety.

Hilton claims other evidentiary material in his possession reveals the alleged Arab hijackers were essentially double agents operating in "cells" within the United States for the past 15 years, dating back the Oklahoma City bombings. He claims the woman has information linking her ex-husband to the 1993 World Trade Center bombing as well as the bombing in Oklahoma City.

To document her claims, Hilton has obtained a marriage certificate, photographs and other physical evidence showing the FBI gave the hijackers homes, paid their rent and exchanged information with U.S.

government agents about various terrorist activities.

"In my view, these individuals are nothing more than government patsies," said Hilton. "That is, they were first paid by the government, wrongly portrayed as Arab zealots working on their own and eventually used to carry out terrorist acts secretly planned by our own government.

"How could the person who is still contacting my witness be killed in the 911 crash? This is the kind of stuff we are dealing with now. These individuals were groomed by the U.S. government and they were protected."

Furthermore, Hilton adds there has never been any "hard evidence" that the 19 hijackers were actually onboard any of the four airplanes that crashed on 911.

"It's hard to say," added Hilton, who makes this judgment based on the lack of airport security photos, official flight manifests and body identifications. "It's all a planned cover-up from beginning to end."

Hilton also has deposition testimony from another eye witness who can place several of the alleged hijackers talking with government agents on board the very same aircraft departing from Newark enroute to San Francisco four days before September 11.

Hilton wants to keep the identity of his witness unknown, but said he was not the famous actor, James Woods, who supposedly witnessed a similar incident and has been subsequently threatened by the FBI with jail if he went public with the incriminating information.

Woods was unavailable for comment and the government on several occasions has denied the Woods story.

Hilton claims point blank that the alleged 19 hijackers must have been under government controls. He said further deposition testimony taken has identified some of the FBI and CIA agents who basically "pulled the strings" for the puppets to operate.

"These agents operated in cells alongside the hijackers," added Hilton. "The cells are from six to twelve individuals who move around on orders from places like Portland and San Diego. Again this is from direct eye witnesses verified with documents and photographs.

"Look back to the 1993 WTC bombing and Oklahoma City and you say, well, Clinton was in power, whereas now it's Bush. It doesn't make a difference who occupies the White House since the shadow government, as I call it, essentially transcends presidential administrations. These bureaucrats stay on from administration to administration pursuing a political agenda. I think it's all part of a pattern with the latest manifestation being 911."

Hilton's legal attempts have not come without harassment, claiming that his co-workers have been threatened and his San Francisco office broken into with important files being stolen.

"Luckily, I keep duplicates of everything," he said.

His class action suit has named 10 defendants, including Vice President Cheney, National Security advisor Condoleeza Rice and Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld.

Hilton claims the Bush administration ignored intelligence information, allowed the hijackers to carry out their plans and cleared the way for the attacks by an ordered "stand down" of all radar and NORAD defense systems on the morning of 911.

He adds that the government has since benefited by installing a puppet Afghan government and waging a war against Iraq to further oil interests abroad.

SAFE Act Stalled in Senate

Bill to limit oppressive powers of the Patriot Act getting little support in Congress

14 Feb 2005

By Greg Szymanski

A senate bill to limit the draconian powers of the Patriot Act is expected to be introduced this current Congressional session, but supporters say it will be "an uphill battle" since it doesn't have the support of Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman, Orrin Hatch.

A spokesman from Hatch's office this week declined comment, saying the senator didn't lend his support last session and wasn't aware of the present status of the legislation.

The bill has garnered little support and has been languishing in the Senate since being introduced last October by Senators Dick Durbin (D-IL) and Larry Craig (R-ID). It is designed to impose only minor restrictions on the antiterrorism law without hampering efforts by law enforcement to investigate terrorists.

A press spokesman for Senator Durbin said the bill would most likely be introduced this term, depending on support gathered. The bill has a total of 19 co-sponsors, including Republican senators Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, Mike Crapo of Idaho and Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania.

"I believe it is possible to combat terrorism and preserve our individual freedoms at the same time," says Durbin. "The Patriot Act crossed the line on several key areas of civil liberties and this legislation restores the necessary checks and balances to the system."

However, critics claim the measure, entitled the Security and Freedom Ensured Act (SAFE), only scratches the surface in reforming the much maligned Patriot Act.

Ever since the Patriot Act hurriedly passed through Congress 45 days after 9/11 without discussion or debate, critics have cited numerous civil rights violations, including unwarranted investigations of American citizens in matters unrelated to terrorism.

One of the most troubling portions of the act is Section 215, which permits law enforcement to conduct unlawful searches and seizures without a warrant or without the necessary probable cause. This section allows the government to obtain records on clients and customers from libraries, bookstores, doctors, universities, internet service providers and other public entities and private sector businesses.

What is most troubling about Section 215 is that it imposes a gag order prohibiting an organization forced to turn over records from disclosing the search to their clients, customers or any other third party.

The result is vastly expanded government powers to rifle through an individual's finances, medical histories, internet usage, library usage, school records, travel patterns and through records of everything imaginable concerning the target of the investigation.

Critics claim The Patriot Act has "torn the Constitution to pieces" and its powers totally obliterate freedom of speech, protection against unlawful search and seizure, right to counsel and right to a speedy trial after being informed of charges.

To combat civil rights abuses, three states and over 180 cities and counties nationwide thus far have passed resolutions expressing concern or modifying the act. The state legislatures of Alaska, Hawaii and Vermont have passed resolutions opposing provisions of the Patriot Act.

The American Library Association has also taken steps to warn patrons and protect them against unwarranted government surveillance of library records and usage, allowed without a warrant under the Patriot Act on mere suspicion, not probable cause.

Unfortunately, the Department of Justice (DOJ) first under John Ashcroft and now under Alberto Gonzalez has waged a media campaign to mislead the American people, according to representatives of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU).

In a recent Chicago Tribune article, spokesman Mark Corallo of the DOJ, said:

"We don't have any interest in looking at the book preferences of Americans.

We don't care, and it would be an incredible waste of time."

In the Washington Post, he added : "We're not going after the average American. We're only going after the bad guys. We respect the right of privacy. If you're not a terrorist or spy, you have nothing to worry about."

However, the ACLU warns that democratic societies are based on "checks and balances," not blind faith in the good intentions of government officials.

In one of the ACLU's recent responses to the government propaganda campaign waged in newspapers across the country, it said:

"With all due respect the Justice Department, it is not enough for the government to assure us that they go to great lengths to protect our privacy, don't have interest in spying on innocent people and are not going after average Americans.

"The wisdom of the Founding Fathers, the historical record of abuses by the FBI and common sense all point to the same conclusion: we can't rely on the FBI or any other federal law enforcement agency to police itself.

"It's time for the FBI and the Justice Department to quit misleading the American people. It's time to end the abuses caused by the Patriot Act and again stand by the principles established in the Constitution."

Hicks' Terrorism Trial Delayed Till March

Young Australian cries out for help and undergoing brutal treatment at Guantanamo prison camp

11 Feb 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The trial of Australian David Hicks, charged with terrorism offenses and held at Guantanamo Bay, has been delayed until March 15, giving defense attorneys a chance to interview witnesses and review evidence.

Previously scheduled for January, attorneys were allowed to prepare their case since Hicks had been denied access to legal counsel until officially charged in June 2003. Attorneys also complain the military tribunal has been uncooperative by concealing evidence and not providing a complete witness list.

Hicks, 29, held in solitary confinement for the past 22 months, initially was captured by Northern Alliance forces in Afghanistan in December 2001. He was then turned over to U.S Forces and has been held at the military base in Cuba since January 2002.

Hicks is charged with conspiracy, attempted murder and aiding the enemy. During his long confinement, he has complained of inhumane treatment, telling his family and attorneys that he was tortured on an U.S. Navy ship before being imprisoned. British prisoners released this year from Guantanamo, also on the navy ship with Hicks, have confirmed his story.

In a recent letter to his father, Terry, he said he was "losing his sanity" from his legs being chained to the ground and the months of solitary confinement in a tiny cell.

"I spend an average of 350 hours by myself between visits. I can no longer picture what exists outside of Camp Echo. My entire life has become this tiny room and everything else is no longer reality. I feel as if I am teetering on the edge of losing my sanity after being in such a long ordeal," he wrote in a recent letter to his father.

He also mentioned military authorities conduct all interviews under brutal interrogation conditions with him chained to the floor.

"The military is intent on keeping me depressed and I am presently suffering from serious mood swings," he added.

However, after Hicks was given a postponed trial date to strengthen his case, Bush Administration and Australian government officials were quick to point out how this indicated he was being treated fairly, ignoring questions concerning prison conditions and treatment.

A spokesman for Australia's Attorney General Phillip Ruddock said: "This shows the responsiveness of the system and another indication he is being treated fairly and the system is working."

Critics observing the military proceedings disagree, calling both the claims from American and Australian officials as "outright lies." They claim the proceedings looked more like a "kangaroo court" than a court of law.

They also point out that two of the three commissioners heading the proceedings have no legal training or experience, claiming they have less legal knowledge than most first year law students.

"The so-called commissioners are struggling to grasp basic legal concepts and the hearings in the Hicks case resembled an introductory law class," said James Ross, a senior legal advisor for a judicial watchdog group called Human Rights Watch.

"They are unfamiliar with the laws of war, including a legal meaning of basic concepts and the difference between an international and non-international armed conflict.

Although lacking legal expertise, Ross said the commissioners were quick to dismiss defense attorneys' legal motions, sometimes using crude and informal language.

He said that motions to call six expert witnesses, including Antonio Cassese, former judge at the International Criminal Tribunal for former Yugoslavia and Michael Schmitt from the U.S. Defense Department, were categorically dismissed without proper legal reasoning.

"The commissioners then decided to use experts only of their special choosing without consideration for the defense," he added.

Despite the obvious biased forum, defense attorneys have attacked Bush administration claims that U.S. laws do not apply to Guantanamo prisoners, saying double standards are being used to try other people who have been accused of the exact same crimes.

Critics have long argued that the tribunal used in the Hicks case violates the U.S. Constitution, American military law and basic legal rights established over centuries.

They say the U.S. government is indiscriminately defining the Guantanamo prisoners as "enemy combatants" in order to by-pass the rights given to prisoners of war by the Geneva Convention.

Under present terms defined by the Bush administration, prisoners have no access to a civil court of appeal and if found guilty, still can be held indefinitely by the military.

The rules of the tribunal hearing the Hicks' case can also allow hearsay evidence and evidence gained through interrogations of torture. The only avenue of appeal against Guantanamo Bay tribunals is the President of the United States.

Hicks has been barred from his own pre-trial hearings, the government claiming he should not be privy to "classified information." Defense attorneys, as legally absurd as it sounds, have also been barred from communicating with their client at this stage based on the same so-called "classified" information.

Former Nixon District Campaign Director Says 9/11 Conspiracy Exists
Former conservative Republican says Pentagon wreckage proves Bush Administration is hiding evidence

10 Feb 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Right wing conservatives would probably say "it'll be a cold day in hell" before one of their own portrayed President Bush as a fascist and a bold-faced liar about the 9/11 attacks and his motives behind the Iraq war.

But that's just what Jim Hanson of Columbus, Ohio, a longtime Republican and former district campaign manager for Richard Nixon, thinks of our bible-totting, gun slinging President.

To prove his point, the 70-year-old retired attorney recently spent $9,000 to place a ½ page add in the Columbus Dispatch, denouncing the Bush administration specifically concerning one photo of the Pentagon crash, which he claims will prove government complicity in 9/11.

A registered Republican for more than 50 years, Hanson claims he has no "axe to grind" with the GOP, but after spending three years researching the events surrounding 9/11, he is convinced the government is either complicit in the attacks or had prior knowledge.

"They needed something big, something to instill fear into the American people," said Hanson. "The WTC attacks was their Pearl Harbor and I'm positive it didn't occur the way the Bush administration claims. I've concluded the story lacks credibility and makes little sense.

"After researching 9/11, I finally felt obligated to come forward, especially about a military photo taken of a piece of wreckage off Flight 77. After blowing up the photo and matching rivets to those of the 757 that supposedly crashed into the Pentagon, I found there wasn't a match. This piece of wreckage was from a different plane.

"If it can be proved that this piece didn't come from Flight 77, it would open the door, exposing the rest of the government conspiracy."

The key photo of a four-foot section of the plane's body was snapped by Army Times staff photographer, Mark D. Faram right after the crash. It was then quickly distributed to the media and remains the only piece of wreckage of Flight 77 ever made public.

After thoroughly investigating the matter, Hanson said the Bush administration has gone to great lengths to keep hidden any trace of the plane that hit the Pentagon since he believes it wasn't Flight 77.

"Not only didn't the rivets match in the photo I blew up, but also there was a curious piece of wood or what I have determined to be a liana vine, imbedded into the aluminum piece of wreckage," said Hanson, who has gone to great pains to study this aspect of the photo.

"Why would there be vines or branches imbedded into the aluminum when the plane hit a brick wall? Logically, it must the piece must have come from another 757. I then found out that another 757 went down in the South American jungle in 1995, where liana vines (similar to wicker) grow abundantly."

Hanson then called the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) and was told the wreckage of the 757 that crashed in the jungle was being held in a military disposal site for investigation. The specific location of the wreckage site, however, was unknown.

"I think the military substituted this piece of wreckage in an attempt to deceive the public, in an attempt to make them believe Flight 77 hit the Pentagon when it didn't.

"If it can be proven that the piece of wreckage in the photo came from another plane, the only piece of hard evidence that Flight 77 actually hit the Pentagon can be refuted," added Hanson. Why hasn't the photographer been questioned or why didn't Farem testify before the 9/11 Commission?"

Attempts for several weeks to reach Farem have been unsuccessful by telephone or email.

Critics from the outset have doubted the government story that Flight 77 actually hit the Pentagon. Independent investigators found the lack of physical evidence, contradictory eyewitness testimony as well as size and point of impact discrepancies have indicated a smaller type of military plane or missile crashed into the Pentagon, not a 757.

"I think this one mistake regarding the military photo, could bring down the house of cards and expose the entire conspiracy," said Hanson, who said he is continuing his investigation until the truth is discovered. "I am no longer affiliating myself with the Republican Party considering the outrageous acts that have been perpetrated on the American people. This is beyond politics. This is outright fascism."

As other 9/11 conspiracy advocates contend, Hanson also believes the Bush administration used the attacks as a way to frighten and convince Americans that the pre-emptive war in Iraq was justified under the name of terrorism.

"One day the truth will be told and it will show the deception of the Bush administration. The WTC attacks, the war in Iraq and the Patriot Act are all apart of this administration's scheme to radically change our foreign and domestic policies, which will have grave consequences for years to come.

"I believe we must continue to investigate and demand questions about 9/11 since the Bush White House is built like a house of cards. One day, when the truth be told, it will all come crumbling down."

Horror Stories Mount Over Patriot Act
Oregon lawyer arrested and detained without justification; FBI admits rushing to judgment under authority of the Patriot Act

7 Feb 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The horror stories surrounding the Patriot Act continue to mount and civil liberties may be a thing of the past if the Bush Administration continues to have its way.

A recent report to Congress by the Justice Department's judicial watchdog office illustrates just how far out of control the FBI conducts business in respect to Constitutional protections like proper arrest procedures, search and seizure methods and detainment interrogation policies.

Critics claim the report is just the "tip of the iceberg" since it came from a partisan internal policy body, the Justice Department Office of Professional Responsibility headed by Inspector General, Glen Fine.

Fine's report, handed to Congress in September 2004, cited the FBI's blatant disregard for Brandon Mayfield's civil rights after the Oregon lawyer was mistakenly linked to the March 2004 attacks on trains in Madrid that killed nearly 200 people and wounded 2,000.

Mayfield, a devout Muslim convert, was arrested in May 2004 on a material witness warrant after the FBI mistakenly determined his fingerprints matched prints found on a bag containing explosive detonators like those used in Madrid.

After being held three weeks in FBI custody, he was released after authorities admitted they made a mistake and rushed to judgment after finding the fingerprints did not match Mayfield's.

According to Fine's report, the "FBI inappropriately conducted (under the Patriot Act) a surreptitious search of his home potentially motivated by his Muslim faith and ties to the Muslim community."

Mayfield and his attorney were unavailable for comment this week, as attempts to reach them at their Oregon homes by telephone and email were not answered.

Fine released no other details on Mayfield's case or other potential civil rights abuses tied to the Patriot Act, hurriedly passed by Congress after the September 11th attacks to give the government broader surveillance and prosecution powers to use against terrorists.

Critics, however, suggest the loose definition of what constitutes a terrorist combatant unduly exposes innocent citizens to unnecessary government surveillance previously protected by the U.S. Constitution.

After the Mayfield report was presented to Congress, Rep. John Conyers, (D-Mich), senior democrat on the House Judiciary Committee, said the report clearly demonstrated how the secrecy used in terrorism investigations can be excessive, leading to the arrest and detention of many innocent people in direct violation of the Constitution.

"What this tells us is that, without an open and accountable government, we will never really know how many people have had their rights violated by federal agents and how many people have been held without legitimate charges being brought," said Conyers during debate on the House floor regarding the report.

Since the passage of the heavily criticized Patriot Act, FBI agents and federal prosecutors have been criticized for overzealously bending the act's intent to place surveillance on citizen's for possible violations not involving terrorism.

In particular, the Justice Department and former Attorney General John Ashcroft have been heavily criticized for circulating interoffice memos to various federal offices, instructing federal prosecutors and agents how to stretch the Patriot Act to encompass surveillance for non-related terrorism investigations.

Regarding the Justice Department's internal report, it comes from a provision within the Patriot Act itself, which authorizes the inspector general to review complaints about civil liberties and civil rights abuses involving federal personnel.

Critics complain such an internal investigation lacks credibility since the policing agency should come from a non biased outside source, not internal justice department investigators.

The latest report given to Congress, including the Mayfair case, covered a period from Dec.16, 2003, to June 21, 2004. During that time, 1,613 complaints were filed, however, only a handful have merited further investigation by the inspector general.

Approximately 1,000 were immediately dismissed as frivolous without any follow-up investigation whatsoever, most termed as "far fetched claims." Another 410 complaints involving government workers were determined to be not under the Inspector General's jurisdiction.

Concerning the remaining 208 complaints, only 13 including Mayfield's, warranted further review, causing critics to complain about a biased selection process due to the low number of investigated complaints.

Besides Mayfield's incident, another case under investigation involves an Egyptian man stopped by the FBI after the 9/11 attacks. The man claims he was denied the right to counsel and given promises of a quick release only if submitted to a lie detector test.

Another case involves the lengthy detention of four people of Arab descent, who claim they were handcuffed, taken to FBI headquarters for questioning and subjected to unnecessary humiliation.

The remaining 10 cases were turned over to other government agencies for investigation. Most of the complaints involved the Bureau of Prisons, involving verbal and physical abuses of Muslim inmates, who alleged they were denied food, family visits and kept in isolation for no apparent reason.

'Tall Whites' Living Among Us in Nevada Under Military Cover
Former serviceman recounts incredible story about 'out of this world' encounters

5 Feb 2005

By Greg Szymanski

When aliens or UFO's are mentioned, some people say it's just a hoax or somebody's "imagination gone south."

Others when they hear the "magic words" just shut off the television, reserving judgment for the next time they belly up to the bar.

Still others, deep down inside, believe they exist, but don't have the courage to admit it publicly.

And, finally, there are those true believers, those who have seen the light and have personally made contact.

Charles Hall of Albuquerque, NM, says he is one of those true believers. The following is his story.

Some stand more than 8 feet tall, run 40 mph and live 800 years. They speak like a dog barking or a bird chirping, write similar to Egyptian hieroglyphics and have learned English quite easily.

They have large blue eyes that wrap part way around their heads, small noses and tiny ears pressed tight to their scalps. Their thumbs are small with four long slender fingers and two claw-like appendages instead of fingernails.

They all have thin, straight blond hair, usually worn short and the women can be distinguished by a feminine looking short cut. Their hips are shaped liked ours, but they walk quite differently since they are used to a stronger gravity pull.

They typically can be seen wearing aluminized chalk white jump suits resembling a canvas-like fabric with gloves of the same material and an open white motorcycle helmet.

What's unusual is the suit emits a three-inch field of white fluorescent light, the intensity varying from soft to bright, a brightness that can actually hurt the human eye.

They are extremely intelligent and process information speed several times faster than humans. However, secretly they fear our intuitive ability and extra sensory perceptions.

They have individual talents, differing intellectual capabilities and physical traits, a race definitely not carved from a cookie-cutter. Some are teachers, some are pilots, some are workers and some are leaders. When bored, they like to go star gazing on hot summer nights, take weekend trips to the strip in Las Vegas or visit the Lincoln Monument in Washington D.C.

They like to recreate, procreate and their children, considerably shorter in size, are fun loving, energetic and inquisitive. The children enjoy hide and seek but they also like to play catch with soft objects since their bodies are frail, bruising easily. Mothers are highly devoted to their children to the "Nth" degree, existing solely for the purpose of meeting the needs of their offspring.

They believe in a "tit for tat" system, believe their word is their bond and place a special importance on honoring agreements, especially verbal or written. However, it is unknown whether they believe in God per se or form religions to advance their beliefs.

Although they are highly individualistic, one similar characteristic is they all have white chalky complexions - very white chalky complexions. For this reason, they have been called the Tall Whites. And for this reason, most people think they are nothing but fictional characters conjured up from a past Star Trek episode.

But the Tall Whites are more than just fiction, says Charles Hall, an educated man with a master's in nuclear physics and former weather observer for the United States Air Force.

According to Hall, who claims to have communicated with the Tall Whites, they are very real, very complex and very much a part of the community living at Nellis Air Force Base, a highly secretive 5,000 square mile "no fly zone" military compound in the southern and central Nevada desert.

Nellis is so secret, so secluded, so guarded by military police, according to Hall, an attempt to enter, an attempt to locate the Tall Whites, who live under the sand dunes in concrete and steel bunkers, would be like committing suicide.

"You can't go hunting for them or approach them. They have to come to you and the children are especially curious by nature," said Hall from his home in Albuquerque, NM., saying he hasn't attempted contacting the Tall Whites since his tour of duty ended in the Air Force in 1967 when he left to serve in Vietnam. "It was a traumatic experience being isolated in the desert, alone with someone so different and obviously more advanced than us.

"At first I thought I was going insane. But I learned over time how to communicate, how to approach them and to never try and force them to do anything. Their nervous systems operate very quickly and they are very protective, very suspicious of our intentions."

Asked why he never returned to Nellis, he simply said: "I just don't feel the need to go back. If you went through what I did, as I have meticulously recorded in my three books, you probably wouldn't want to go back either as it was at times frightening and emotionally draining."

Hall's "out of this world" recollections are not the product of an overactive imagination or drug-induced hallucinations, but from personal experiences and actual face-to-face contacts with the Tall Whites while stationed at Nellis from 1965-1967. He claims to have spent two years interacting with this alien race countless numbers of times, but only recently went public with his "earth shattering" statements in a set of three books entitled Millennial Hospitality.

"I just decided to wait all these so as to not jeopardize the well being of my children while they were in school," said Hall, adding the accounts in his books are true with only names and places changed to protect the innocent.

"Along the way I confided with my wife and friends, but now that the children are on their own and grown up, I've decided to tell my story to the public."

And he says the facts in his book are just the tip of the iceberg in what just may turn out to be one of the most detailed, most convincing and most sought after alien stories of all time.

"Just read my books and you'll see what I mean," added Hall, referring to the time they wanted to impress him with their technology superiority by having him throw a rock and then stopping it in mid air. "They also are able to suspend bullets or other faster moving objects."

Academic Heavyweight Lends Support

Not only is Hall convinced about the Tall Whites alien origin and their exceptional powers, but so is academic heavyweight Michael Salla, a doctor of political science and former head of a Washington think-tank after extensively interviewing Hall in December 2004.

What is even more astounding is that Salla has put his otherwise impeccable reputation as a political researcher and thinker on the line, to stray off an "earthly path" for the first time in his career.

Salla has held academic appointments in the School of International Service, American University, Washington, D.C. and the Department of Political Science, Australian National University, Canberra, Australia. He also has taught as an adjunct faculty member at George Washington University. He is the author of The Hero's Journey Toward a Second America Century and Why the Cold War Ended, as well as Essays on Peace.

"I have never before researched the UFO phenomena, but after talking to Charles I am a believer," said Salla on recent radio interview.

Salla's in depth discussions were revealing, giving Hall's previous books and writings third party independent credibility instead of just biased approval from UFO groupies.

Besides the obvious questions concerning alien quirks, characteristics and intentions, Salla centered on the cooperation and agreements supposedly entered into by the Tall Whites with the U.S. government through military liaisons at Nellis Air Force Base.

"I found Charles Hall to be very credible and compelling in his response to questions. He displays great integrity and is quite sincere in describing solely the facts concerning his experiences," said Salla, who never before delved into UFO stories but has admitted he has come to be a believer. "The emotions that Charles objectively described in great detail conveyed the extent which what he was experiencing shook his world view and the views of those around him."

Government Agreements with the Tall Whites

However, the relationship between the Tall Whites and our government, explained by Hall, is mind boggling, shocking, revolting and seemingly impossible in a democratic society. But Hall insists these agreements exist, insisting the Tall Whites have been exchanging technology for earthly resources since the early 1950s and maybe even sooner.

Hall recalls in one of his books that in the late 1960s the military provided over $600,000 in clothing from Sears, having seen the shipment being hauled with military trucks into the desert compound where the Tall Whites lived. He also recalls the military providing food, aluminum, titanium and other commodities, perhaps used for interstellar trading as the Tall White's roam the universe, contacting other civilizations.

In his interview, Salla ventures to guess what has transpired since the 1960s and whether the military has been involved in more sinister deals and agreements without public disclosure.

Regarding nondisclosure, Salla effectively argues that the military may be compromising America's resources and its future survival by not allowing a public debate on issues concerning the welfare of its own people concerning issues involving trade agreements with the Tall Whites.

"The American people have a right to know and the knowledge Charles brings regarding the Tall White's interaction with the U.S. Air Force generals is very enlightening in terms of the way agreements were followed to the letter," he said.

"It appears that the Tall Whites are quite legalistic and this seems to be something that the U.S. military finds to be helpful in working with them. According to Charles, the Tall Whites were quite clear that only certain categories of technology would be shared, categories that presumably would not give the U.S. military deep space capability. They apparently pride themselves in being trustworthy and expect the same in return. A broken promise to a Tall White is the worst kind of evil and dealt with very harshly."

Hall also emphasizes the Tall Whites have no ulterior designs regarding Earth in terms of colonizing it or taking over governments with their obvious advanced technology.

However, in his books he details how the Tall Whites would threaten to kill humans who disobeyed or scared them. Hall cites one frightening incident where an American general allowed a serviceman to be killed by a Tall White after one of their children was threatened.

"I think the American military felt the servicemen were expendable and of little importance in comparison with keeping the Tall Whites satisfied," said Hall.

Other Unique Characteristics of Tall Whites

As previously mentioned, the Tall Whites can grow to be over 7 feet tall. However, most the adults in the first half of their lives usually range in size from 5'10 to 6'5".

"Their life span is ten times greater than ours," said Hall, adding that it takes them 10 times longer to heal, too. "They do not age as we do, but at about 400 earth years, they undergo a second stage of growth, eventually reaching about 8 feet tall. They then die of organ failure at an age of approximately 800 years. Since on their planet, days are longer so are they sleeping patterns, usually staying awake for two earth days and then followed by sleeping the same amount of time."

"Although they can be quite friendly, they are at times arrogant and insulting. But they appear sensitive and understanding to our social structures and have cultivated relationships with high-ranking military officials, some of who have worked side by side with the Tall Whites. They held lesser ranking persons with disdain and I got a long with them by letting them treat me as their pets."

Asked what the Tall Whites thought was unique about humans, he said "they couldn't get over how we interacted with animals. They commented several times that we were the only life form they met that kept animals as pets. They appeared to be extremely frightened of our animals and couldn't figure out why we would interact with something so potentially deadly."

Where Are They From?

Hall said he learned very little about the origin of the Tall Whites during his two-year encounter.

"They really shared very little about their history and origins," recalls Hall.

However, one incident took place with a Tall White he called "the Teacher" which revealed they may have come from near the star Arcturus about 36 light years away.

In a passage from one of his books, he said: "A ripple of emotion passed through the crowd when I mentioned the star Arcturus. After a short pause, the older lady asked with some surprise, 'Teacher, does Charlie know where we come from?'

"The Teacher replied: 'No, not quite, but he's close.'"

Hall believes the reason they are here is that earth provides a perfect way station for the Tall Whites in their interstellar travel routes. And Nellis Air Force Base provides a perfect location since the remoteness of the desert provides excellent cover for takeoffs and landings.

"They arrive with new replacements on one of their larger spaceships every month at the time of the full moon," said Hall. "I've seen the ship arrive and have gotten as close as the outside entrance of the hangar but never inside."

How do they travel?

Hall witnessed three different types of spacecraft, ranging in size from a small nuclear powered scout craft and a large interstellar craft able to travel faster than the speed of light. This large black craft was approximately 70 feet high and 360 feet long. Hall said the technology of the small craft was shared with the military but the large craft remains a mystery.

Regarding their hangar and living facilities, he added, "I was able to observe the repair facilities from a short distance and to the best of my knowledge I am the only person to have been allowed to view these facilities.

"The American generals would do anything to maintain good relations with the Tall Whites in order to get their technology," said Hall, who maintains he saw them together many times and even sat together across negotiating tables. "The exchange was done on the basis of what would benefit the Tall Whites and they sometimes participated in classified meetings, helping with technology development."

What do they eat?

Hall said the military definitely supplied the Tall Whites with any type of food requested, but noticed them carrying prepared bags of what looked like mushroom pudding.

"I saw them once inspecting the food storage rooms in Indian Springs chow hall," he said. "And once I saw a couple of them in a Las Vegas restaurant with a full meal but they didn't touch their plates before leaving the restaurant."

Hall surmised they were plant eaters, as he noticed them collecting seeds on various occasions.

"They are not meat eaters. That I know for sure," he added. "The food that I saw packaged and sealed in plastic bags on the scout craft, looked like mushroom pudding. I was told by one of them it was prepared primarily for the children or for when they were out in the desert hiking.

"I was also told it wasn't a good idea to eat their food as it would have adverse affects on my body. It was my understanding that eating those foods made a person feel very high and somewhat similar to drinking large amounts of liquor."

Have Others Seen Them?

More than seven years prior to Hall's arrival at Nellis, log books showed 41 weather observers had been compromised while trying to perform their duties in the Nellis ranges. Some required medical attention, others were given medical discharges from the air force and some were killed.

In fact, the weather observer who preceded Hall deserted his duties and moved away from the area. So how did Hall survive when others before him didn't?

He attributes this to his ability to understand their habits and essentially being adopted by one of the Tall Whites called the Teacher, who seemed to take a special interest and liking to him.

Although he was never able to take photos, he said a New Jersey housewife traveling through Nevada had acquired a number of authentic looking photos which she included in a paperback book published on the Tall Whites. Even though this would have provided third party corroboration, he was unable to recall the name of the lady or title of the book.

"It always has upset me that I couldn't remember her name, but I know the Tall Whites were viewed by many other servicemen on the range. I think someone there must have given her the photos," said Hall.

Did President Harry Truman See Them?

Encountering Tall White's at close range was such a shock to the servicemen at Nellis, frequently the sightings were reported as ghosts, angels or other types of fantastic creatures.

Official accounts reported also revealed that President Truman in the late 1940s thought he encountered ghosts in the White House usually before retiring to bed. The reports go on to say he thought he was mistakenly seeing the ghost of President Lincoln, telling White House employees of his sightings on a number of occasions

"My suggestion is that you research the stories of Lincoln's ghost and the ghost of Donna Anna county in Las Cruces near the White Sands Missile Range," said Hall.

He suggested President Truman most likely encountered Tall Whites in the White House instead of ghosts. "Remember, many of the range maintenance men who saw the Tall Whites actually thought they were seeing ghosts."

Are the Tall Whites in India?

Credible news reports this month from the New Delhi Times and several other Indian dailies have reported their government is in the midst of an internal debate on whether to go public with alien encounters.

Many in the largest democracy in the world are eager to explain to its citizens and to the world about the ongoing contacts with UFO's and aliens. However, there are others who want to bend to the will of the world's super powers who are now trying to convince India to keep quiet about UFO contact.

According to overseas news reports, America and other super powers are engaged in "economic bribery" in order to keep the Indian government silent about alien contact.

How Can You Meet Them?

Asked this question, Hall suggests:

"Drive to Indian Springs Nevada during the hot part of summer in late May through early September. They like it hotter than we do. On the south side of town, there is a large open vacant section of desert. Pick a location where you can see the mountains located in the distance at the north end of Indian Springs Valley (that means they can see you).

"Make sure your having fun - get involved with your work such as painting a picture, etc. That is very important - they're bored - they like entertainment .Be very conscious of the passage of time. If you have any missing time, such as 20 minutes, remember any "dreams" that you might have had during this missing time.

"Take note of any florescent light that you see at night no matter how far up in the valley it might be. The Tall Whites used to like to come out between 11:30 and 12:30 at night and return up the valley sometime after 4:30 a.m. Take note of any fuzzy white flying craft that you see just after sun comes up along the western side of the Indian Springs Valley.

"If they come, they prefer to approach you from behind so sit out in the open where you have a good view. Never, never panic - I know talk is cheap but never pursue them. Just stay standing or sitting in one place It's OK to walk (not run) away if you become frightened.

"NEVER NEVER NEVER try to touch their children no matter how close they come. The children are willing to come right up to you, closer than arm's length. If you touch them, the mother will kill you. Sing quiet songs to yourself. I used to sing Ricky Nelson's song, "It's Up to You" and I'd pray a lot. It calmed me down and I have no idea what it did for them. But It seemed to calm most of them down too.

"Good Luck."

Concluding Thoughts

Whether Hall's story is true, of course, is debatable. However, no one can argue it is compelling, detailed and filled with interesting facts.

If there are lingering doubts, they come from lack of corroboration, lack of physical evidence and Hall's inability to provide the names of those persons who may also have first hand knowledge.

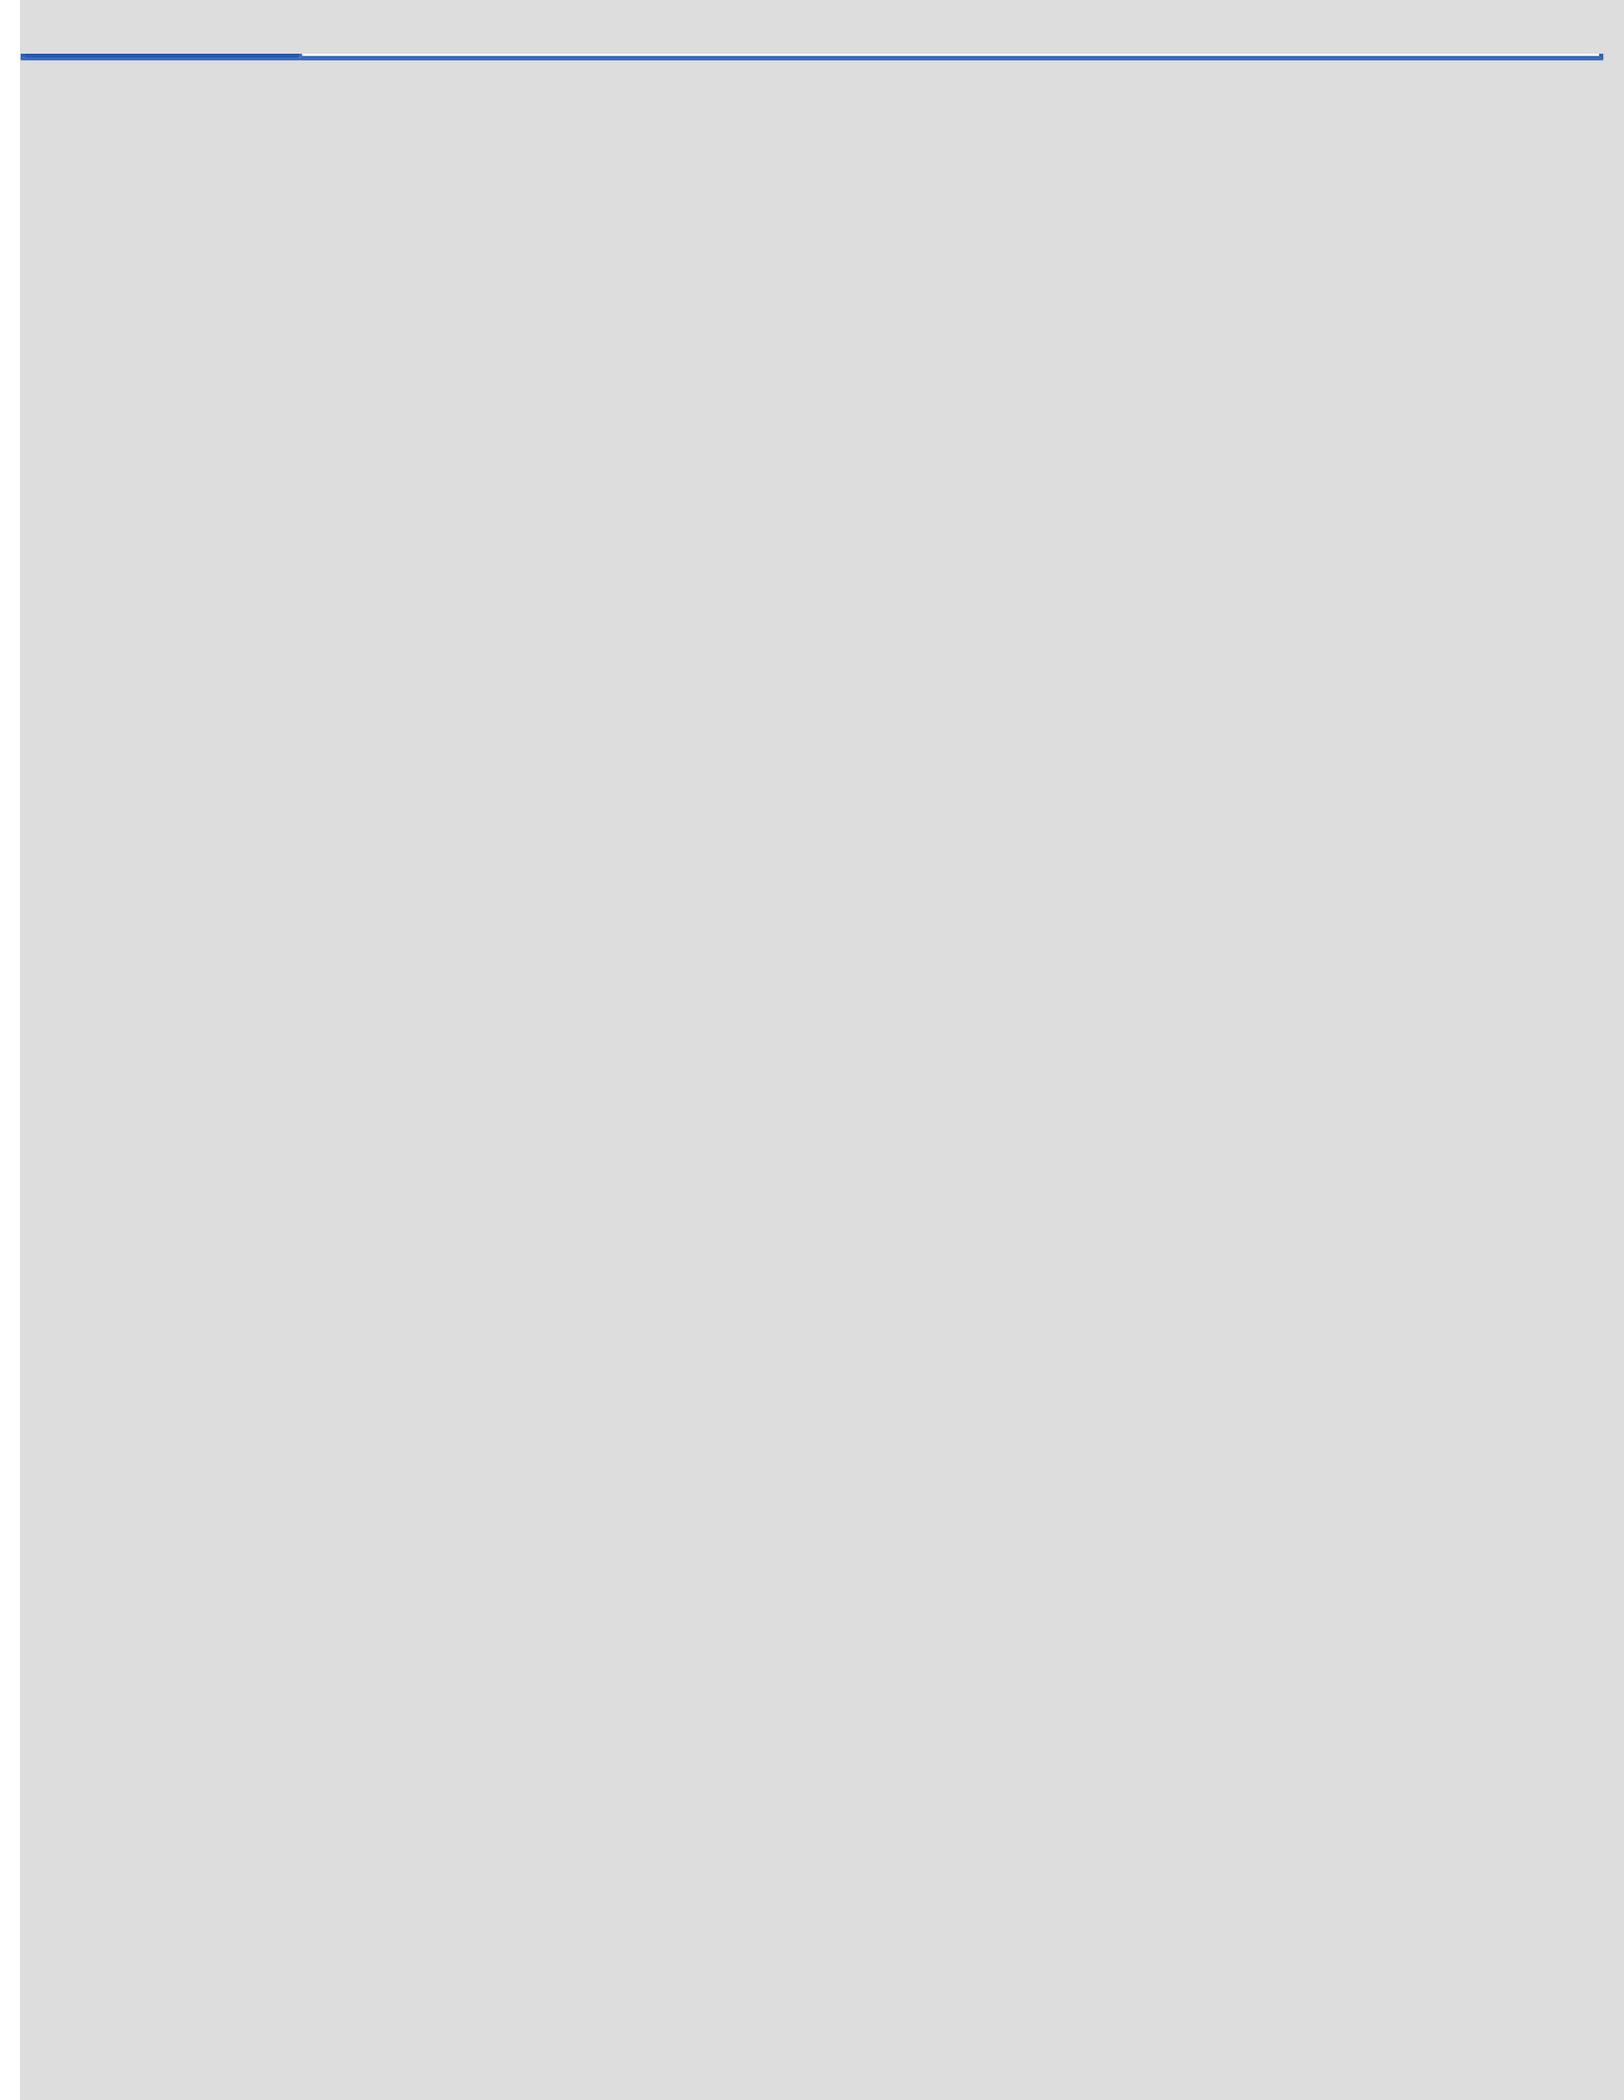

If he is telling the truth, this added information would only give credence to his incredible story.

And as they say, until further evidence comes forward, the jury is still out!

But for those too impatient to await a final verdict, maybe a trip to Indian Springs Valley is the next logical step.

GOP Disregards Constitution; Majority No Longer Needed to Vote on the People's Business

Law passed without media attention and under the cover of darkness

2 Feb 2005

By Greg Szymanski

No longer do Capital Hill lawmakers need a quorum to do the people's business.

Now, under a piece of hotly contested legislation, passed without media attention a few weeks ago, only 12 members of Congress are needed to do official business instead of the usual 218.

Critics claim the law paves the way for tyranny, allowing "only a few to decide for so many." And constitutional experts say the law is blatantly unconstitutional and ripe for challenge.

But supporters claim the bill, passed "under the cover of Congressional darkness," is intended to allow the government to "continue operating" in the event of a catastrophic emergency or terrorist attack.

Normally, 218 lawmakers out of the 435 members are needed to declare war, pass laws and validly conduct the people's business.

However, under the new rule a majority is no longer needed when circumstances arise, including natural disaster, attack, contagion or terrorist attacks rendering Representatives incapable of attending House proceedings.

"It's another measure brought up by the GOP majority that shows their callous disregard for democracy," said one California attorney who preferred to remain anonymous.

GOP House leaders pushed the controversial "doomsday legislation" through for passage as a part of a hefty and voluminous rules package. It drew little attention and was probably not even discovered by many who voted on it since the rules package centered on recent ethics violations.

"I think the new rule is disgusting, terrible and unconstitutional," said Norm Ornstein, of an independent, bipartisan panel called the Continuity of Government Commission who is studying the issue.

"I believe the way it was passed was deceitful and the intent behind the legislation was very foolish."

Rep. Brian Baird, (D-Wash.), agrees arguing that the rule change violates the Constitution, which specifically calls for "a majority of each Chamber shall constitute a quorum to do business."

"Allowing for as few as 12 lawmakers to make vital decisions and to possibly declare war on another nation is not what this country is all about."

President Bush Ignores Crucial 9/11 Evidence Critics call government efforts to investigate WTC attacks "a half Baked farce."

29 Jan 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Top government officials, including President Bush, have either purposely ignored or failed to order investigations into two critical areas involving the 9/11 attacks, leading critics to believe there exists a massive cover-up and a strong probability of government complicity.

Critics, including a U.S. Senator and an editor of a fire engineering magazine, claim the two main areas of concern are the breakdown of military defense systems the morning of 9/11 and the crucial structural steel evidence whisked away by Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) after the towers collapsed.

"Did they throw away the gas can used at the Happyland Social Club fire? Did they cast aside the pressure regulating valves at the Meridian Plaza fire?" said Bill Manning of Fire Engineering Magazine. "But essentially, that's what they are doing at the World Trade Center.

For more than three months after 9/11, Manning said FEMA cut up and sold structural steel for scrap before independent investigators had a chance to look at crucial evidence which may have conclusively determined the reason for the collapse.

He added that the official investigation, blessed by FEMA and run by the American Society of Civil Engineers, is nothing but "a half-baked farce" that may have already been commandeered by political insiders whose primary interests, to put it mildly, lie far afield from full disclosure.

"Crucial evidence that could answer many questions about high-rise building design under fire conditions is on a slow boat to China, perhaps never to be seen in America until you buy your next foreign car," said Manning who claims FEMA's actions violate national standards for investigating fires.

"I have combed through our national regulations for investigating fires, but nowhere does one find an exemption allowing for the destruction of evidence for buildings over 10 stories tall."

Manning said the government has never fully explained why the potential evidence was hidden or destroyed and if President Bush were serious about finding out the truth about 9/11, he would have insisted on complete exposure.

Instead, he added the Bush Administration has hidden behind a veil of secrecy, leaving independent investigators to draw conclusions from paper and computer-generated hypotheticals.

Although the recent 9/11 Commission report adopted the official story that burning jet fuel caused the ultimate demise of the WTC, Manning said respected members of the fire protection community have drawn other conclusions.

"Red flags have been raised and a theory has emerged that the damage from the planes and the explosive ignition of jet fuel was not enough to bring down the towers," said Manning. "Based on the incident's magnitude alone, a full throttle, fully researched forensic investigation is imperative, but that is impossible now since the government conveniently discarded the evidence."

Regarding the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) and North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD) defense breakdowns, six months ago Sen. Mark Dayton, D-Minn., called for President Bush to launch a serious investigation into the "catastrophic failures" but to date nothing has been done.

He received little support from his democratic colleagues, including influential Connecticut Sen. Joseph Lieberman, who seemed to support the 9/11 Commission findings when Dayton voiced his concerns on the Senate floor during hearings held before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

The 9/11 Commission recently adopted the NORAD timeline, which essentially vindicated all parties involved of any negligence on the morning of 9/11.

However, during the hearings, Dayton boldly stated that NORAD officials "lied" and that their statements were "grossly misleading" to the American people.

"NORAD officials have lied to the American people, they lied to Congress and they lied to the 9/11 Commission to create a false impression of competence, communication and protection of the American people," said Sen. Dayton. "President Bush should launch a serious investigation or should fire whoever at the FAA or NORAD who have betrayed the public trust by not telling us the truth.

However, instead of reprimanding those involved, President Bush has seen fit to promote them instead. Dayton added he could not understand why a President has rewarded such incompetence and has not completely been forthright about uncovering the truth.

"The failures by the FAA and NORAD are examples of the most gross incompetence, dereliction of duty and negligence that I've ever witnessed in the public sector," added Sen. Dayton.

A spokesman at NORAD headquarters in Colorado Springs this week said they stand by the version of their story given to the 9/11 Commission and declined to answer further questions regarding the timeline of events on that tragic morning or address Sen. Dayton's recent allegations.

Although Sen. Dayton has not publicly linked his statements regarding 9/11 to the recent terrorist threat directed at his office, he was the only Senator to publicly announce the evacuation of his staff from the Senate Office Building during a recent Congressional break.

However, the terrorist threat was suspiciously directed at Sen. Dayton not long after his anti-administration comments on the Senate floor.

Draft Proposal on the Legislative Horizon

If politicians have their way, we may see another Vietnam draft before the end of the year.

25 Jan 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Within a matter of weeks, Rep. Charles Rangel (D-NY), plans to try and re-institute the military draft, saying the present voluntary system places an unfair burden of war among lower and middle class Americans while giving the rich a free ride from military service.

Rangel's statements are unpopular among most lawmakers and government watchdog groups but nonetheless came on one of the bloodiest days of the Iraq war with over 35 Marines killed, bringing the total military casualties to more than 1,400 with over 10,000 injured or maimed.

Although the liberal democrat has been an outspoken critic of President Bush's war policies, he said this week "the burden of war should be shared among all social groups," including the children of the wealthy and privileged."

"Some time soon Rep. Rangel is preparing to reintroduce legislation to re-institute the military draft since he strongly feels everyone should share the burden of war," said Emile Milne, Rangel's press representative and legislative director Wednesday from his Washington office.

"He is essentially reintroducing legislation that failed to gain support last session, however, this time around I think it has a better chance of passing."

Milne was referring to HR 163, Rangel's previous pro-draft piece of legislation, which became a democratic embarrassment and a political football during the 2004 Presidential campaign.

When charges started flying that President Bush would bring back the draft if elected, Rangel's bill became an obvious political liability for Sen. John Kerry, who was taking a strong anti-draft position.

In a political move, democrats quickly rushed the bill to the House floor where it was summarily rejected by an overwhelming majority, Rangel even voting against his own piece of legislation for obvious tactical political reasons.

With the election now over, opponents of the draft claim the path is now clear for politicians from both sides of the aisle to get behind the draft with Rangel obviously leading the charge.

In the face of strong criticism, Rangel still strongly supports a nationwide military draft, saying it is both a deterrent to war and a mechanism to force privileged Americans to share the war's burden.

However, Bill Galvin, head of an opposition group called the Center of Conscience and War, said both arguments are totally wrong since the draft has never made the Armed Services more equitable, racially or economically.

Galvin points to the Vietnam War where mostly minority draftees disproportionately served on the front lines while the rich and privileged found loopholes to avoid serving.

"The affluent had and still have the means to gain medical deferments or to serve soft, safe positions," Galvin said, referring to people like President Bush who served stateside in the National Guard and Vice President Cheney who avoided service completely in Vietnam by obtaining a deferment.

"If Rep. Rangel and other pro draft progressives really wanted to fix social and racial inequities, they'd be advocating for jobs, education and opportunity, not equal opportunity war making."

Whether the draft becomes a reality is still in political limbo, however, no one would argue that President Bush's aggressive foreign military policies needs more warm bodies and boots on the ground.

In a recent Los Angeles Times article, former security advisors Brent Scowcroft and Zbigniew Brzezinski were quoted as saying the U.S. requires at least 500,000 more troops to sustain the war in Iraq and reinstatement of the draft may be unpopular but necessary.

"At best, Rangel's bill merely plays into Bush's hands," said Galvin. "At worst, it's a stealth measure intended to supply progressive political cover for pro-draft democrats."

A White House spokesman this week refused to comment on Rangel's initiative, but said President Bush has publicly opposed any legislation to re-institute the draft.

Privately, however, Galvin and others fear President Bush is just waiting for the right moment "to spring the draft back on the American people" since he no longer has to worry about getting re-elected.

SLATS GROBNIK GIVES THE TRUE INAUGURAL ADDRESS FOR THE PRICE OF A FEW DRINKS AT A LOCAL CHICAGO TAVERN

Famous Friend of the Late Mike Royko, Famed Chicago Journalist and Satirist, Takes the Podium as King George on Truth Serum.

21 Jan 2005

By Greg Szymanski

The minute King George finished his coronation speech Thursday hard liquor sales dramatically shot up, especially in democratic places like the north side of Chicago and midtown Manhattan.

Several Chicago bartenders reported heavy drinking continued well into the early morning hours with outrage over Bush silenced only when many customers passed out from too much booze and beer.

A speech by King George has a funny way of making people turn to the bottle, a funny way of making everybody want to pop a quick shot and a beer to drown away their sorrows.

"It's good for business," said one Chicago bartender, referring to King George's second term. "I know the beer and booze companies are lovin' it. I have a lot of customers who probably won't think about sobering up at least for another four years!"

Since I grew up in Chicago, I thought I'd track down some of the old barflies who are a lot easier to stomach than the lapdogs over at CNN, CBS and Fox news.

In fact, when I want straight talk, there is no one better than Sam the bartender over at the Countryside Tavern on Chicago's north side. And if Sam's not around, I like sipping a shot and a beer with Slats Grobnik, probably the most astute political pundit to come along since Ralphy the butcher died in 1988 from siroccos of the liver.

If you don't remember Slats Grobnik, he was the famous drinking buddy of the late Mike Royko, a long time Chicago journalist who became famous for his hard hitting investigative reporting and satirical commentary of Mayor Daily and Chicago politics.

Since Mike passed on to a better place, Slats' political wisdom has been left off the news pages, but when I saw him sitting on his favorite stool at the Countryside Tavern with Sam standing right next to him pouring a whiskey, I knew he was ready to talk politics.

"I knew Mike Royko," I said pulling up a stool while ordering a beer "Sure you did, kid. Everybody knew Mike," said Slats while he slugged down a shot. "Sam, give the kid a shot and beer on me."

We drank for awhile, Slats never once allowing me to pull out my wallet as he loosened up his shirt collar and began talking about King George, his favorite political character since the old Mayor Daily died.

And before I could tell him I was a reporter, he looked me square in the eye and said:

"Now, kid, this is a big responsibility."

"What is?"

"Mike, used to print everything I said in the biggest Chicago papers and when he got syndicated, his stories went all over the country. So, you gotta get it straight. Print it right? Print every word just like I say it."

I told him I'd do it right just for Mike and together we had a shot and a swig of beer, toasting what he called "those Bushy boys, those sons-a-bitches."

As I looked up over my glass, Sam and Slats starting ranting and raving, using every swear word in the book while the booze kept flowing and the conversation turned to serious politics.

I figured I'd ask a question, but it was obvious Slats had his own agenda, his own inauguration speech prepared.

With Sam's introduction, the whole tavern turned in Slats direction while he jumped on the bar right in front of all the beer spigots. Sam made Slats take off his shoes and it was curious to see how he walked in between all the drink glasses and pretzel bowls without knocking them over as he made his way to the makeshift podium.

As Slats prepared to give his inauguration speech while everybody started clapping, I couldn't help but think how much better this was going to be and how much cheaper it was going to cost than the $40 or $50 million King George needed for his coronation the day before.

"What are you going to give us this time, Slats?" someone yelled out from the crowd, obviously referring to his well-known acting ability and political expertise.

"I think I'll give yah what George Bush would have said if he had a few shots of whiskey in him. I'll give you George Bush without a script. I'll give you the truth."

While Slats started in just like a real President thanking everybody known to man, I recalled the lies advanced by King George as he spoke the previous morning.

Words like:

"We will widen retirement savings and health insurance.

"It is the policy of the United States to seek and support the growth of democratic movements and institutions in every nation.

"America will not pretend that jailed dissidents prefer their chains.

"Our country must abandon all the habits of racism.

"Then came the day of fire (9/11)...You have seen that life is fragile, and evil is real and courage triumphs."

Remembering his lying words and thinking the real evil lies in the Bush agenda, I slugged down another whiskey, turning my complete attention to Slats who now was in true form with hands waving and speaking in a voice that suspiciously sounded like King George.

"King George after a few whiskeys and a shot of truth serum." added Sam the bartender as he leaned over the bar keeping my glass full. "He sounds just like Georgie boy, doesn't he?"

"Power is like this glass of Kentucky bourbon," said Slat's in a Presidential voice while holding his glass up like a priest would hold up a chalice of wine at a Catholic Mass. "It's very, very addictive. Once you've had a taste of it, you'll do anything to get more."

"But I'm just the puppet you see, so don't blame me. They wind me up, tell me what to say and America is on its way to hell in hand basket."

"To hell in a hand basket that's where we're all going and let me tell you all how we gonna get there."

Everybody in the bar now started screaming in unison "Slat's, Slat's, Slat's, give us more, more, more" and the shouting continued for several minutes until he reminded the crowd about the Bulls game coming on TV in a few minutes.

He was now ready for his grand finale and I remembered the words of a psychic who said King George's second term would be marked by accountability and revelation of truth .

"I, George W. Bush, lied and cheated about everything from the day in 2000 I was appointed president by a stacked deck in the Supreme Court."

"I lied and cheated in 2000 and then everybody lied and cheated in 2004 with the electronic voting scam. I really didn't get elected. They just figured out a way to change the votes since there is no paper trail for voting in at least 30 states."

"Pretty good scam. But that's what this whole administration is based on. It's based on a scam against the American people. It's a scam to get everybody scared to death while at the same time believing and defending freedom as we tear the country apart piece by piece."

"Right now we are all laughing all the way to the bank. But since I am telling the truth tonight for the first time in my life, I think it will all come to an end in my second term."

"As the Rev, Martin Luther King once said, 'I had a dream' but I had a nightmare the other day. I had a nightmare where Cheney, Rumsfeld and all of us finally got caught in our own lies."

"We finally got caught and there I was back on the bottle again, stripped of my Presidency and sitting in some AA meeting going over the 12 Steps again."

"And in the dream, I was stuck on Step 9, stuck on that damn Step 9 which means I have to apologize individually to everybody I offended."

And if he has to confront everybody individually, he'll be busy for a long, long time since by my calculations, he'll be apologizing not only to over 300 million Americans but to billions of people around the world affected by his imperialistic and tyrannical rule.

President Bush "Raked Over Coals" and Called a Hypocrite in U.S. Commission Civil Rights Report

Authors of the 166 page report, highly critical of the President, are no longer with the Commission. Chairman now replaced with "Bush mouthpiece" appointed to tone down criticism of his failure to back civil rights causes.

13 Jan 2005

By Greg Szymanski

President Bush recently was "raked over the coals" and called a hypocrite by two leading civil rights officials, saying his administration has "missed the boat" when it comes to embracing civil rights initiatives.

The sharp criticism didn't come from a fringe minority group with a "chip on its shoulders," but from deep within the heart of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, often called the civil rights watchdog established to monitor executive and legislative branches of the federal government.

The highly critical 166 page report, three years in the making, was delivered to the White House last month, accompanied by a written plea from Commission Chairperson Mary Francis Berry and Vice Chairperson Cruz Reynoso, asking for a stronger civil rights pledge from the President.

In their letter to the President, the two main authors of the report claimed his adopted civil rights policies instead of building a common ground, "have further divided a deeply torn nation." They urged the President to embrace civil rights with "actions instead of just words" in political stump speeches.

"The credibility and soundness of this review is grounded in careful research that concluded you (President Bush) have failed to exhibit leadership on pressing and important civil rights issues," added Berry and Reynosa in the letter that accompanied the report.

The findings are the culmination and examination of hundreds of pages of presidential speeches, policy documents, scholarly papers, executive orders and other relevant data.

"Sadly, the spiraling demise of hope for social justice and healing has deepened over the past four years, largely due to a departure from and marginalization of long established civil rights priorities, practices and laws," added Berry and Reynosa.

Both democrats, the six year terms of Berry and Reynosa expired this January. Highly respected, between the two, they have more than 30 years of civil rights experience on the Commission, working in the past for both Republican and Democratic Presidents alike.

Although critics claim the two commissioners were "shown the door" due the negative report, the White House has failed to comment on the reason why the two were not asked back for a new term.

President Bush, responsible for four of the eight Commission appointments with the others left to Congress, opted to replace Berry and Reynosa with two Republican appointees, both starting their tenures in January.

The two new appointees started with a clean slate, since the previously completed report, potentially damaging to Bush, was not officially adopted by the Commission. It was rejected in a 4 to 4 vote, the negative votes all coming from Republican members previously appointed by Bush.

"Of course, I think you will see a change in policy and direction of the Commission with the new appointments," said Kenneth L. Marcus, also recently appointed by President Bush as the chief executive officer of the commission. "We are having our first policy meeting this Friday (January 7th) and after that our course and direction will be made public."

Asked if Berry and Reynosa were replaced due to the negative marks given to the President, Marcus said he was unaware of any political animosity. He also mentioned that he was unaware if the White House had take any action on the unofficial report handed to the President last month.

"You'll have to ask the White House about that," added Marcus. "As to the new members, they have just taken over and have not made any official announcements."

The new chairman, appointed by Bush, is Republican Gerald Reynolds, presently an assistant general counsel of Great Plains Energy, Inc. of Kansas.

Reynold's appointment has been met with harsh criticism due to his corporate background and his failure in the past to support such civil rights programs such as affirmative action.

Previously, Reynolds met stiff opposition before being appointed as assistant secretary for civil rights at the Department of Education. He was criticized for his failure to support affirmative action as well as his support of English-only laws and opposition to bilingual education.

Despite his opposition to the above programs, critics said the President had no business putting a man such as this in charge of formulating policy on affirmative action, supervising desegregation, monitoring compliance with civil rights laws and ensuring equal educational responsibilities for children with disabilities and limited English proficiency.

Critics contend the new appointment of Reynolds will weaken the Commission's watchdog role since he is viewed as an administration mouthpiece, given the chairmanship position in order to tone down criticism of the President's policies as seen in the recent report issued by Berry and Reynosa.

Asked if the President has even bothered to read the critical civil rights report, a White House spokesman declined to comment about the changeover at the Commission as well as the status of the report.

The report entitled Redefining Rights in America: The Civil Rights Record of George W. Bush Administration, 2001-2004, accuses the President of not being clear with his commitment to civil rights as well as ignoring advice from mainstream civil rights leaders.

"He does not invite them to the White House to discuss policy concepts, nor does he regularly attend their events." cited Berry and Reynosa in their report.

"He points to the people of color in his Cabinet as a substitute for collaboration and evidence of a civil rights agenda. but then does not consider their civil rights views.

"For example, his national security advisor and secretary of state both stated unequivocal support of affirmative action, but the President has not.

"The President's appointments say much about his commitment. A number of his policy makers are diverse in race, ethnicity and gender but have poor civil rights backgrounds. His statements reveal that he oversimplifies the matter equating color with civil rights expertise. In significant instance, irrespective of their race and other characteristics, his appointees do not favor, and some are on record as opposing, prevailing civil rights law."

Bush CIA Appointee Blocks Search for Truth Surrounding 9/11

Critics claim Porter Goss, head of the CIA, has been told by President Bush to keep an internal document secret, listing the names of individuals who may lead to the truth about 9/11.

5 Jan 2005

By Greg Szymanski

An internal CIA report, naming individuals who may have been responsible for intelligence failures leading up the September 11th attacks, has been kept secret despite public outcries and congressional demands to release the incriminating evidence.

The delays began last July on orders from CIA Acting Director, John McLaughlin, and have continued since Porter Goss took charge last September.

Critics claim President Bush has personally directed Goss, a Republican partisan, to keep the names from "prying eyes" in order to hide the truth exposing either government incompetence or outright complicity.

Ever since 9/11, the public has called for government accountability, the Bush Administration trying to block truth-seeking efforts at every corner. The lack of government cooperation began with obstructing justice at ground zero by FEMA's quick removal of hard evidence and continues now by keeping the CIA report secret.

In between, critics have compiled a laundry list of government cover-ups concerning 911, but answers have been slow in coming due to a complacent media and lack of government cooperation.

The reluctance to provide the internal CIA report is just another example why a Zogby Poll recently found that more than 60% of New Yorkers believe the government was complicit in bringing about events before, during and after 9/11.

However, the public clamor still remains hidden on cyberspace conspiracy websites and in alternative publications, but recently two federal lawsuits surfaced, one concerning FBI whistleblower, Sybil Edmonds, and the other a RICO conspiracy action filed against President Bush and 56 other defendants, alleging conspiracy and corruption in the events surrounding 9/11.

The Edmonds lawsuit has been dismissed by a partisan Federal judge appointed by Bush and the RICO action is still in the pre-trial discovery stage.

"We are in the process of serving all the defendants, including President Bush, his father and many others. It's not going to be easy and expect a long hard fight," said Phillip Berg, the attorney who filed the federal action on behalf of William Rodriguez, a World Trade Center maintenance worker who claims to have evidence showing government complicity.

Besides the two lawsuits, a citizens' petition has also been handed over to New York Attorney Gen. Elliot Spitzer last November, alleging criminal action be taken against Bush and his cronies for complicity in 9/11. An official spokesman for the attorney general's office said no action on the petition has been taken.

And regarding the recent CIA internal report kept secret from congressional leaders and the public, this week a CIA spokesman failed to comment about the status of the report or when it would be released.

To date the names in the report remain unknown. They were compiled by the CIA's inspector general who began an independent investigation in December 2002 after a joint 9/11 congressional task force sought answers for obvious intelligence irregularities surrounding the attacks.

The purpose of the report was to get the bottom of the intelligence breakdowns and to determine who should be held accountable for mistakes made. To date no one has been held accountable or even reprimanded for obvious intelligence breakdowns.

Further, the CIA has not provided a reason for its reluctance to turn over the report, even after a letter was directly sent by top House leaders on the Intelligence Committee to former director McLaughlin, demanding accountability.

The letter, sent last September, has not been made public and has essentially been ignored by CIA officials.

Last October, the top democrat on the Senate Intelligence Committee, John D. Rockefeller IV (D-W.Va), personally asked Goss to turn over names in the report but his demand has also been ignored by the CIA.

Members of Congress expressed concern over the CIA's failure to cooperate, saying it was a definite departure from normal procedure. House and Senate members are expected to further prod the CIA in turning over the sensitive report when the 109th Congress convenes.

This time help is expected to come from an outspoken critic, Cynthia McKinney (D-Ga), who returned to the House after being ousted two years ago.

McKinney is one of the few elected officials who publicly claimed the Bush Administration had prior knowledge of the events leading up to 9/11, saying the administration allowed the events to occur in order to reap huge profits from the invasion in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Political insiders claim McKinney, who was the first black woman ever elected to Congress from Georgia in 1992, was then targeted by the GOP for defeat in 2002 due to her anti-Administration public expressions.

McKinney recently won re-election and is expected to fight hard for those involved in the 9/11 truth movement despite its unpopularity on Capital Hill.

President Bush Takes Aim at the Endangered Species Act
If he had his way, our corporate-minded President would "asphalt over the entire country."
Bush tired of animals blocking industry; He's looking for a way to derail 30-year-old cornerstone of all EPA laws.

4 Jan 2005

By Greg Szymanski

Environmental protection laws have always been a thorn in President Bush's side, annoying him like a swarm of flies on a hot summer day.

And during the last four years, critics claim our President has been "swatting flies" like no other President in modern history, as his cronies in the Department of Interior and on Capital Hill continue to run roughshod over the American landscape.

Critics complain Bush views protecting the environment as a business nuisance and probably would "asphalt over the entire country" if given the opportunity. He is expected to mount a more vigorous assault on environmentalists during his second term.

As environmental laws continue to "drop like flies," our corporate-minded President now has taken aim on the "mother of all" environmental laws, the Endangered Species Act (ESA).

In 2004, the Bush Administration substantially weakened the 30-year-old law by changing Department of Interior (DOI) administrative rules foregoing consultation by the U.S. Forest Service on endangered species when determining fire protection plans. Other new rules now allow the DOI to use pesticides without first consulting with the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

With the above ground work established, the stage is now set for a 2005 heated congressional battle, the Republicans hoping their increased numbers will once and for all derail the ESA, which has been targeted for over a decade.

Congressional allies of the Bush Administration are waiting in the wings with two bills, previously introduced in 2004, directly aimed at piercing the heart of the ESA, one centered on restricting and renaming critical habitat areas and the other effectively delaying species protection.

Both bills are expected to be "pushed hard" when the 109th Congress convenes. In the interim, Richard Pombo (R-Ca), chairman of the House Resources Committee, has solicited support for the bills, especially with governors from western states where 70% of all endangered species are located.

The issue is of particular importance in the West, where clashes between industry and environmentalists have been more common and contentious.

"I see this as one of the best opportunities we've had to achieve some common sense reforms, especially with the new make-up of the Senate," said Brian Kennedy, a spokesman for Rep. Pombo. "But were not overly confident because it is not going to be easy."

Kennedy added that one of the reasons changing the ESA has been so difficult is that most of the country, besides the West, takes little interest in the law.

"A western voice in the discussions is essential," said Colorado Gov. Bill Owens at a recent San Diego Western Association Governors' meeting that discussed the Endangered Species Act among other issues. The Republican governor has been a strong voice of change, trying to eliminate animal protections in favor of big business.

For example, a battle is now underway with environmentalists and industry in Wyoming and other Rocky Mountain states over the Western Sage Grouse, long considered a nuisance standing in the way of oil and gas interests.

Governors are anxiously waiting for a ruling on the sage grouse and a decision by Gail Norton, Secretary of the DOI, on whether to list the bird on the endangered species list. Industry leaders claim the grouse would severely hinder oil and gas drilling and exploration the Rocky Mountains if not removed from the list. Norton's decision is expected this month.

"If these bills are passed this year, it basically means the end to the Endangered Species Act," said a representative for the League Of Conservation Voters, a political watchdog group formed to protect the environment. "The Bush Administration has been trying to dismantle the law and I think now they finally see their chance to get it done with the recent election turning in favor of the Republicans."

Critics also claim Norton, a Bush appointee, is at the center of the ESA controversy. If the sage grouse is taken off the protected list, they said it will be another example of the relentless siege on wildlife by the Bush Administration.

"She has had no fewer than three federal courts say her position on the Endangered Act is untenable," said an LCV spokesman. "Secretary Norton's dismissive attitude toward the Endangered Species Act in general and her callous attitude at designating critical wildlife habitat, in particular, have created the problem."

Also, in Wyoming, pending removal of grizzly bears and wolves from federal protection has generated hot debate. In New Mexico, industry and environmentalists have entered federal court to resolve a battle between Rio Grande water rights and the silvery minnow.

And in Washington and Oregon, farmers are struggling with restrictions on pesticides considered harmful by environmentalists to human consumption as well as to salmon and steelhead trout.

Business and industry leaders complain the law overly protects the more than 1,264 species now on the endangered list. Environmentalists, however, claim without the law many of the animals now protected would have long ago been wiped out.

They point to the many ESA success stories, including the resurgence of the bald eagle, the symbol of the United States of America. Recently de-listed from endangered to threatened, the bald eagle numbers are steadily increasing and is returning to parts of the Northeast and other regions.

Other notable success stories include the resurgence of sea turtles, Florida manatees, Louisiana black bears, California sea otters and black footed ferrets in the Northern Plains States.

Religious Author Turns Attention to 911 Government Conspiracy Theory
The recent 567 page 911 Commission Report should be called a "National Disgrace" not nominated for a National Book Award

2 Jan 2005

By Greg Szymanski

It's getting pretty scary when a professor of religious philosophy thinks President Bush has his sticky fingers involved in the 911 attacks. It's even scarier when he accuses those involved in the follow-up investigation as being outright liars.

But that's exactly what Professor David Ray Griffin, a faculty member of the Claremont University Theology Department in California, thinks about our Texas gun-slinging President and others, including the 911 Commissioners appointed to investigate the attacks.

Griffin, who is known for his religious and philosophical books, including one entitled "God Power and Evil," now has turned his scholarly attention to the political world, accusing the government of complicity in the events before, during and after 911.

In the last two years, Griffin has published "The New Pearl Harbor: Disturbing Questions about the Bush Administration and 911" and his latest book entitled "The 911 Commission Report: Omissions and Distortions," both accusing high-ranking officials and 911 Commission members of outright lying and distorting the truth.

This week from his California home he put on his fighting gloves, calling the recent 911 Commission report nothing but a "567 page pack of lies." He blasted Commissioners for dereliction of duties and a failed attempt at conducting a serious investigation into who really caused 911.

From the outset, critics like Griffin were suspicious, never expecting to get a fair hearing in the first place. They claimed the Commissioners were biased, never really wanting to "rock the boat" with tough questions.

According to Griffin, their suspicions proved to be true.

"Instead they (911 Commissioners) simply presupposed the official conspiracy theory, according to which the attacks were planned and carried out solely by Al Qaeda members," said Griffin, referring to the recently published Kean-Zelikow 911 Commission Report. "The Commission entirely ignored all evidence for the alternative conspiracy theory, according to which the attacks succeeded only because of complicity by members of the U.S. government. Having written a book that summarizes much of the alternative theory evidence, the 911 Commission Report simply omits much of the evidence and distorts the rest.

"For example, the report simply repeats the official story about the 19 Arab hijackers, failing to mention that at least six of the named men have shown up alive. It even suggests that Waleed al-Shehri stabbed a flight attendant on American Airlines Flight 11 before it hit the North Tower - even though he visited the U.S. Embassy in Morocco after 911.

Griffin goes on to say that the report is even more unreliable when it addresses such issues as the structural collapse of the Twin Towers and Building 7, the Pentagon, the FBI and why fighter jets were unable to intercept any of the incoming flights.

Griffin said the report failed to mention that fire had never caused steel-frame high rise to collapse in the past as well as suggesting the Twin Towers collapsed so easily since the core of each building consisted of "hollow steel shafts."

"In reality, the core of each building consisted of 47 massive steel columns, the collapse of which cannot be explained by the accepted theory," said Griffin. "While mentioning the South Tower collapsed in 10 seconds, the report fails to mention the fact that the collapse manifested 10 standard features of controlled demolitions.

"The report handles the collapse of Building 7, which even FEMA admitted it could not explain, by simply failing to mention it altogether."

Griffin gets even more critical when he talks about the Pentagon strike, emphasizing that the West Wing was the least likely target for terrorists and that it didn't collapse until 30 minutes after it was hit.

"There are just so many facts in tension with the idea that Flight 77 hit the Pentagon that were just overlooked," added Griffin. "And while claiming that Al Qaeda operatives did not strike a nuclear power plant for fear of being shot down, the report fails to mention that Pentagon is even better protected, so that any aircraft without a military transponder would have automatically been shot down."

With regard to FBI inconsistencies, Griffin said the report draws a narrow line simply omitting all stories that may shed a bad light on FBI activities before, during and after 911.

"They simply ignore everything inconsistent with the previous official account," he added, "including the damning allegations made by former FBI translator, Sibel Edmonds, in her three hour testimony to the Commission."

However, Griffin saves his most harsh criticism for the way the Commission dealt with the failed interception of the jetliners and the revised timeline adopted, placing blame on the FAA for not contacting military command headquarters in time to intercept the jetliners.

"The report handles the problems created by NORAD's previously announced timeline by simply creating a radically revised timeline, according to which the FAA never notified the military about Flights 175, 77 and 93 until after they crashed," said Griffin, who stressed this was in conflict with previous reports by air traffic controllers.

"This new and distorted timeline also changes all previous statements about when the teleconferences between the FAA and the military actually began, thereby seeking to establish that the military could not have learned about the flights from these teleconferences.

"Perhaps most outrageously, the report, seeking to bolster the claim that the shoot down order was not given until after Flight 93 had crashed, contradicts by 45 minutes all prior testimony, including that of Secretary of Transportation, Norman Mineta's eyewitness testimony to the Commission itself as to when Vice President Cheney descended to the Presidential Emergency Operations Center."

These and other report omissions are well documented in his latest book. Griffin said that 911 Commission Report nominated for a National Book Award should have instead been designated as a "National Disgrace."

Bush's Stance on the Environment "Is One Big Fat Lie"

PR man hired with tax dollars to teach President how to lie about his environmental platform; Sensitive "eyes only" memo shows Bush intentionally created a false image to deceive Americans about the environment.

30 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

When President Bush claims he wants "a safer, cleaner and healthier America," don't believe a word he says.

Don't believe a word of it since it's all a big fat lie, designed to hide his real intentions.

Don't believe a word he says because it's nothing more than a PR blurb designed to create an environmentally friendly public image, nothing more.

The truth is when it comes to the environment Bush is like the anti-Christ.

The truth is when it comes to a nature walk Bush even makes the animals run for the hills.

The truth is when Bush wants to a rest on a hot sunny day even the trees silently hate to give such a hypocritical man the comfort of a shady resting spot.

The truth is even the trees have our President pegged when it comes to his environmental devotion: "A hypocrite who "talks the talk" but can't "walk the walk."

And the more he stumps around the country spouting out "a safer, cleaner and healthier America," the more and more evident the lies become.

With a four-year record of environmental disaster, most people wouldn't have the nerve to talk in public. Most people would be afraid to look at themselves in a mirror. Most people would be afraid of being struck by lightning.

But most people aren't like our President. Most people aren't as arrogant, hypocritical and morally paralyzed as our "tree chopping and oil drilling" President. Most people aren't like our PR-minded President who, faced with a problem, decided to solve it the "Bush way" instead of the right way.

Instead of actually working to help save the environment, Bush spent tax dollars to hire a PR man to fashion a few slick words together, saying the hell with the facts, the hell with the record, the hell with the environment!

He just hired a PR man to make it seem like he was doing something, make it sound like he was championing a great cause when, in fact, he was doing nothing.

And that's just what Republican strategist Frank Luntz did when asked to resurrect Bush's image on the environment. In essence, Luntz was asked to do a complete make-over. He was asked to turn the anti-Christ into a champion of the environment. He was asked to turn water into wine. He was asked like a magician to pull a rabbit out of a hat.

He was asked to part the Red Sea and, like Moses standing with his hands spread wide, as soon as the President said: "a safer, cleaner and healthier America" then did the sea part and the President's image change in the minds of many voters.

It all happened rather magically and without the President even having to plant one tree or clean-up one toxic dump. Luntz basically performed a political miracle. He gave the President a means by which he remained firmly in the pocket of the nation's largest polluters and at the same time seeming like an environmental champion in the eyes of public.

And if it wasn't for a stroke of luck, the President's image change may have just been chalked up to political savvy or public ignorance, not outright intentional deception.

In 2003, Luntz's sensitive "internal eyes only" memo given to President Bush was leaked to the League of Conservation Voters (LCV), a governmental watchdog group that critiques politicians on a yearly basis regarding their environmental issues

The memo has been given little media attention just like much of President Bush's environmental destruction during his first term.

The memo clearly is an embarrassment. It clearly reveals Bush's plans to intentionally deceive and fool Americans. It clearly reveals his complete lack of sincerity and caring, treating the environment like a political game not something meriting serious attention.

The memo instructs Bush to ignore facts and appeal to emotion. It instructs him to stay away from specifics and always talk in glowing generalities. It instructs him to "think of the environment in terms of a story, even if factually inaccurate, it can be more emotionally compelling than a dry recitation of the truth."

Enclosed in the memo, along with key words and phrases to create a fictitious image, is a statement that shows how Bush is instructed to fake his honorable intentions and true concerns about the environment:

"I don't have to remind you how often Republicans are depicted as cold, uncaring, ruthless, even downright anti-social....Therefore, any discussions of the environment has to be grounded in an effort to reassure a skeptical public that you care about the environment for its own sake even if you don't - that your intentions are strictly honorable.

"The good news, amidst all the doom and gloom, is that once you are able to establish your environmental bonafides, once you are able to show people that your heart is in the right place and make them comfortable listening to what you have to say, then the conservative, free market approach to the environment actually has the potential to be quite popular."

What these instructions tell Bush is to fake sincerity and caring, something our President has mastered during his first term.

What it fails to mention is that the conservative, free market approach to the environment actually means no environmental protections whatsoever.

And that in a nutshell is what the Bush environmental plan is really all about:

It's really about nothing!

Media Gives President Bush "Free Ride" Over and Over Again Never has a President failed so overwhelmingly but subsequently rewarded so handsomely.

27 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

President Bush this week sounded like a broken record, saying for the second straight year "the troops in Iraq will be home before next Christmas." And the media again, like an obedient dog given a large bone, went along with the story without even asking any tough questions..

It's like watching an old vaudeville show over and over again, the scenes and lines memorized before the actors get on stage: President Bush saying "jump" and the Washington press core answering "how high?"

It's been going on like this for years, ever since Bush got a "free ride" into The White House by an obedient Supreme Court that twisted the law in favor of a neo-conservative movement, now in complete charge of the American corporate and political agenda.

There is little doubt that things in America have "gone south" since Bush and his war profiteering posse took over the White House. At least it's "gone south" for those who haven't bought into their agenda of war profiteering, human rights violations, economic downturns and environmental disaster.

Never in American history has a President performed so poorly but been rewarded so handsomely. But never in American history has democracy been manipulated in such a devious and deceitful manner.

With the coming of the New Year, let's take a brief look at America after September 11th and after the "Bush Gang" put its "sticky fingers" all over the country:

September 11th

President Bush was reluctant to fully investigate the tragedy and only bowed to pressure when the 911 Commission was obviously "in his political pocket." The recent report never asked tough questions which point towards government complicity in the attacks, President Bush again given a "free ride" by those neo-conservatives in and out of government who are pulling the strings.

Preemptive Strikes

Like clockwork, President Bush orchestrated attacks on Afghanistan and Iraq in an attempt to control valuable Iraqi oil in a diminishing market as well as a clear avenue for a lucrative natural gas pipeline through Afghanistan.

The reason for the strikes was masked by a phony war on terrorism when all evidence now clearly indicates neither Iraq or Afghanistan presented an imminent threat to U.S. National security.

Even though thousands of innocent lives have been lost, the media continues to "roll over and play dead" while the drums of war continue to sound across the land. Again President Bush has been given a "free ride" to terrorize the world through a misguided and imperialistic foreign policy.

Economic Chaos

The American job market has dramatically suffered under President Bush with more jobs being lost under his watch than any other President in our nation's history. Besides the loss of jobs to foreign markets and a record national deficit, again President Bush has been rewarded for his ineptitude and been given a "free ride" by the media.

Presidential Re-election Campaign

The President's campaign looked more like a right wing religious revival gathering than a serious attempt to deal with the problems facing America.

President Bush offered no solutions to a failed 1st term and was inarticulate and unprepared during all three Presidential debates, losing all three to a marginal challenger.

However, again President Bush's ignorance and negative campaign strategies were rewarded as he was given a "free ride" by the media.

2004 Voting Irregularities

The recent U.S. election had striking similarities to the fraudulent elections in the Ukraine. However, two different results occurred. In the Ukraine, the media hopped on the bandwagon, calling for a new election that took place this week. In America, voting fraud and electronic voting machine irregularities were overlooked by the media, as President Bush waltzed into office with a "mandate" given by the people.

Despite baffling exit pollsters by winning traditionally democratic strongholds, President Bush was again given a "free ride" by the media and rewarded for his campaign efforts in what some are calling "the electronic rigging" of democracy by neo-conservative loyalists who own and operate the voting machine companies.

A Laundry List of Failures

It appears the more President Bush fails, the more he is rewarded. The laundry list of his first term failures makes it all the more astounding he is again sitting in the Oval Office.

Add to above-mentioned items, his positions on the environment, global warming, foreign policy, social security, health care, minimum wage, gun control, education and human rights and, basically, what you have is a recipe for failure.

A neo-conservative recipe that proved successful once before. However, a second-helping that this time may prove fatal, "choking us all to death" before another four years is all over.

Bush and Blair Turn Their Backs on Peaceful Solutions Just Prior to Iraqi Invasion

Iraqi 'olive branch' ignored according to former CIA head of counter-intelligence.

26 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

As the war in Iraq slogs on with no end in sight, a London-based newspaper recently reported that President Bush and Tony Blair had "many opportunities for a peaceful solution" several months before the war began but chose the path of war not peace.

This last minute Iraqi "olive branch" was flatly rejected by President Bush and totally ignored by the American media, paving the way for what some call an illegal American invasion of Afghanistan and Iraq, The Guardian reported early in 2004.

In the article, Vincent Cannistraro, the CIA's former head of counter-terrorism, said he was approached by Iraqi intelligence officers several months prior to the coalition invasion with an offer proving Iraq was not linked to the September 11th attacks.

He added that Iraqi officers also wanted to allow several thousand US troops the opportunity to search for weapons of mass destruction. And if regime change was the American objective, the offer also included Saddam Hussein's willingness to submit to internationally monitored elections within two years.

However, according to Cannistrano, these proposals reached the White House but were categorically turned down by the President and Vice President, both determined to go war at all costs.

As time drew nearer to the expected invasion, the London-based daily further reported Saddam's negotiators softened their position even more, offering free FBI access to search for WMD's, support of the US position on Israel and Palestine and rights to Iraqi oil.

This offer was made two more times, once on September 20, 2001, before the war launched in Afghanistan, and again on October 1, both times again rejected by President Bush.

Although reported overseas, the Iraqi "olive branch" was never mentioned in the American mainstream media, leaving a population ill-informed about the American war effort.

But not addressing important issues facing America is to be expected from the mainstream press. It basically has been accused of shirking its duties with shallow news stories and invidious entertainment segments designed to placate an ill-informed electorate.

The story published by The Guardian, but left off the American news wires is just another example of a corporate controlled media that generally displays the same similar news themes and complete lack of competing opinions.

Critics point out if the media was doing its job, the following banner story would have appeared all across the country prior to the Afghanistan and Iraq invasion:

Even though the charter of the United Nations points out that "the parties to any dispute...shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation," President Bush is preparing to invade foreign countries not as a last resort but as a matter of choice.

To bolster media criticism, critics point out only nine major corporations control the major world media outlets, making it ripe for government and corporate corruption to blossom. As the year draws to an end, here are just a sample of other fundamentally important stories ignored by the American Press during 2004:

What is the real reason 50 million Americans are without healthcare?

Who owns the electronic voting machine companies?

Will the military draft be re-instituted to provide more warm bodies for the war profiteers?

How does the rich and powerful Bilderburg Group determine the course and direction of American foreign and domestic policy?

Why has the media not called for a truthful accounting of the attacks on September 11?

Why is the minimum wage at 60% of its value in 1968?

Why is poverty increasing at an alarming rate?

Where have all the living-wage jobs gone in America?

Why has the media allowed election rigging to deteriorate democracy at home why calling for reform in the Ukraine when essentially the same thing has happened in both countries?

What is the truth behind global warming and extreme weather conditions?

Why has the Bush family connections with Saudi Arabia and Osama bin Laden been ignored?

These are only a few examples. But these are good examples of how the corporate media is weakening democracy by not addressing relevant issues, instead opting to line its pockets with advertising dollars.

Basically, the media has chosen to "sell out to the devil" why democracy burns and rots on the front porch of every American house where the newspaper awaits its daily reading.

Alaska Military Base Hotbed for Illegal Testing and Dumping
President Bush tries to hide the truth about chemical testing and toxic dumping to save the Department of Defense; His actions show he cares little for the health and welfare of military rank and file.

25 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

President Bush as usual extended holiday greetings to military troops this Christmas, but one gift he'll never open is the Executive Order he signed, keeping sensitive documents secret about biological and chemical testing at Fort Greely near Fairbanks, Alaska.

Although the President likes to maintain a compassionate public image, privately his actions show a man who could care less about the health and welfare of servicemen.

This lack of concern is evident in the Fort Greely case. Here the President, by sealing important documents, obviously feels military health concerns were of secondary importance to protecting the Department of Defense (DOD) against potential exposure for injuries resulting from chemical testing and dumping.

DOD officials this week refused to comment, but the Veteran's Administration (VA) verified benefits have been denied for any claims regarding toxic exposure at Fort Greely.

What little is known about chemical and biological testing at Fort Greely has surfaced from leaked documents, eye witness accounts and other general information provided reluctantly by the DOD after health problems began to surface by those living near the base.

Other information, scratching the surface of what really happened, has also appeared in Seymour Hersh's book "Chemical and Biological Testing: America's Hidden Arsenal," a historical account of the base by Norman Chase and a March 2003 article entitled "Northern Exposure" in The Nation magazine by Corey Capozza.

"The real story of what went on is in the classified documents kept secret by the DOD and President Bush," said Capozza, a critic of the recent Executive Order signed in by Bush "They have yet to give veterans a clear definition of possible causes of their health problems. The DOD also refuses to grant any of the veterans' health care based on exposure to agents used in the secret site's experiments."

Records show that Fort Greely, as far back as 1952 and continuing to at least 1970, was used for the explicit purpose of testing deadly chemical and biological weapons. The base, located 100 miles southwest of Fairbanks on 640,000 acres, originally began operating in 1942 as a staging area for planes ferried to the Soviet Union during World War II.

However, seven years later a nuclear reactor was built to serve as the military's power plant. Then in 1966, the Army began testing biological, chemical and other various weapons. The reactor was dismantled in 1973 and in 1995 the base was scheduled for closure.

But recently, under the Bush Administration, the DOD proposed Fort Greely be used as a storage site for interceptor missiles in support of the much criticized space-oriented Missile Defense program.

However, what transpired on the base during the 60s and 70s is still heavily debated as veterans are now surfacing with what amounts to "chemical horror" stories. According to several veterans who spoke to VA officials, between 1962 and 1967, the Army blasted hundreds of rockets and bombs containing sarin and VX nerve gas into the region heavily populated by forests and wildlife.

Veterans recall canisters of VX nerve agents being indiscriminately buried approximately a mile from the Alaskan Highway or tossed in a nearby frozen lake in the winter of 1966, where the canisters later sank to the bottom when the ice melted in the spring. Supposedly, regular dumping expeditions were carried out until 1970 when the testing discontinued.

Now, 30 years later, veterans and civilians are coming forward with serious health concerns, but since no records are available due to Fort Greely's top secret status, VA officials at first had a hard time believing the veterans' credibility.

However, after heavy pressure was applied by the VA and other civil rights groups, the DOD released some documents revealing the test site may have been operated with a blatant disregard for human and environmental safety. The documents also suggest that some of the deadly materials used may still be unaccounted for and buried somewhere beneath the pristine Alaskan wilderness.

Critics suggest the Executive Order signed by President Bush was designed to protect the DOD against conclusive evidence, hiding a massive cover-up of illegal chemical and biological testing.

FEMA, the 800 Pound Gorilla, Ready to Pounce on America

Funded with hidden tax money and by illegal drug profiteering, FEMA has spent billions on "black operations." With one stroke of a Presidential pen and without Constitutional protections, martial law can be mandated with FEMA having the tools to carry out the Executive Order.

20 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

The term "martial law" has very little practical meaning to most Americans. It has very little significance since the term isn't used much in a democratic society.

Perhaps it could be a "show name" for an upcoming HBO sitcom, but it's definitely not a "real term," one used for anything made in America.

Martial law is essentially a foreign phrase, one used only when talking about third world, uncivilized places. It's a term used to describe what goes on south of the border or some other "god-awful" place. But not here, not in America!

To be more precise, martial law is used by government officials against targeted dissidents, social reformers, human rights activists, nuns, priests, pacifists, journalists, psychologists, students, teachers, housewives and children, all who reside far, far away from the homeland.

Never in America could martial law be imposed. Never could it interrupt our passions for important things like NBA Basketball, the Super Bowl, The Oscars or the Emmy Awards.

Doesn't everyone know by now, we have a schedule printed in TV Guide here in America that can't be interrupted?

There's a full slate of television shows on over 300 satellite channels presented 24 hours a day that cannot be randomly stopped by something so trivial as martial law. It's simply something that can't happen here! Something that can't happen now, especially when we are on the brink of a new season of The Sopranos!

Here's a thought, though:

Provide a Direct TV satellite in a barbed wire detention center and Americans may enter willingly. But deprive them of a weekly dose of Donald Trump's, The Apprentice, and watch everybody scream bloody murder.

In fact, just try to tell an American that martial law will be imposed and the first thing out of his mouth is: "Impossible, I have to go bowling Friday night." Tell an American he already has "one foot inside a gulag" and he'll look at you kind of funny and ask: "What have you been smoking?"

Nevertheless, while Americans are busy living life in general, billions of taxpayer money has been quietly spent since the early 1970s to set up the tools and internal mechanisms necessary to institute martial law in the blink of an eye.

How? Enter the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), the 800 pound gorilla, poised to bounce on Americans at the drop of hat or by a host of Executive Orders already signed into law unknown to the public.

What makes this so troubling is that all the internal arrangements have been made secretly, without public debate and without Congressional oversight. Essentially, the Executive Branch has taken it upon itself since the early 70s, even using illegal drug money at times, to establish a "shadow government" with the power to institute martial law.

And as the law is presently written, Congress can not even intervene until six months after martial law has been instituted.

Without dwelling on particulars, FEMA has been given the tools and authority to turn America into a police state on the orders of our "Texas gun-slinging President" without Congressional oversight or Constitutional protection.

It's a scary thought, especially with a man like President Bush in charge for another four years. Listen how a former assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania described our imperialistic-minded President in recent court documents.

"There has been a concerted campaign by the Republican Party to create and to maintain the illusion of George W. Bush, a corruptly-installed President with an under-reported history of serious, long term alcohol and cocaine abuse, whose successes in life had been attributable to amiability, amorality, and family connections, as a strong leader in a phony war against terrorism, a significant part of such terrorism to be created by government insiders themselves."

So, we have a man at America's helm who could "fall off the wagon" anytime. We have a man who probably couldn't navigate a 16-foot pleasure boat in a time of crisis without his co-pilot, Dick Cheney, by his side.

We have a man who already has proven to be trigger-happy, short-tempered and marginally intelligent. We have a man who is despised overseas and hated at home. We have a President who lacks the ability to think on his own two feet, sounding like untrained actor who can't even read his cue-cards right every time he speaks in public.

It's a sobering thought that a man like this, with one simple Executive Order, could have FEMA, the 800 pound gorilla, swoop down with the power to suspend laws, move entire populations, arrest and detain citizens without a warrant or due process, seize property, food supplies and entire transportation systems.

All this can be done legally, it's on the books right now and it's about time Americans understand how this 800 pound gorilla grew so large.

THE GROWTH OF THE 800 POUND GORILLA

FEMA is the single-most powerful entity in the United States, more powerful than the U.S. military, FBI and the CIA. It is more powerful since it is not created under Constitutional law by Congress, but a product of Presidential Executive Order.

Though FEMA wields tremendous power, few people understand its true function. FEMA was originally conceived in the Nixon Administration, refined under President Carter and given considerable teeth under Reagan, Bush I, Clinton and Bush II.

It's important to remember FEMA was originally created to assure survival of the U.S. government in the event of a nuclear attack. Also, it was given authority to be the federal coordinating body during domestic disasters like hurricanes, floods and earthquakes.

However, its awesome powers have grown over the years, first under the guidance of shady people like Lt. Col. Oliver North and General Richard Secord, the architects of the Iran-Contra scandal and the looting of America's savings and loan institutions.

Unbelievable as it may sound, FEMA has even been given total control of State Defense Forces with an unorganized, often considered neo-Nazi civilian army intended to substitute for the National Guard, if the Guard is called to duty overseas.

Critics of FEMA's vast and underground powers are especially worried now since most of America's National Guard forces are now deployed in Iraq.

Besides earthquakes and hurricanes, FEMA's vast authority extends to urban fires, forest fires, homeheating emergencies, refugee situations, urban riots, and emergency planning for nuclear and toxic incidents.

Since its inception, however, approximately only 6 per cent of its budget has been used for natural disasters while the remaining billions have gone for secret underground facilities to assure continuity of government in case of emergency, foreign or domestic.

FEMA's deceptive funding irregularities did not come to Congressional attention until the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew drew public attention to the agency. What came out of a critical look at FEMA was that it was spending 12 times more for "black operations" than for disaster relief-related activities.

For example, it was uncovered that FEMA spent $1.3 billion for building secret, underground bunkers throughout the United States in anticipation of situations calling for martial law.

Critics contend these situations are too easily triggered and, in fact, can be manufactured by abusive Executive authority. For example, under emergency plans already in existence, the power exists to suspend the Constitution, seize people property and turn the reins of the country over to FEMA by Executive Order.

Once power is transferred to FEMA, it then has the authority to appoint military commanders to run state and local governments, order detention of any people considered dangerous and establish camps for to hold citizens for undetermined periods without probable cause or the right to counsel.

And if you think it almost hasn't happened before, think again. Situations calling for martial law have occurred at least three times since 1984, once under President Reagan and twice under President Bush I in 1990 and 1992. Although each time the situation fell short of martial law, each time it came perilously close.

But these close calls, of course, took place in a pre-911 world. Now, FEMA and martial law experts warn that America has been psychologically prepared to accept a complete government takeover in the name of a war on terrorism.

In fact, as early as 1987, The Miami Herald published reports on FEMA's underhanded goals to suspend the Constitution in the event of a national crisis or national opposition to a military invasion abroad. As opposition mounts to our recent invasion of Iraq, critics warn FEMA is preparing to counter any widespread dissent.

They further warn the main problem is that FEMA has been given the power to turn the country into a police state by an apparatus that virtually allows for a dictatorship.

As noted by Harry Martin in a 1995 article discussing the potential abuses of FEMA's power, Diana Reynolds of the Edward R. Murrow Center, added:

"It was James Madison's worst nightmare that a righteous group would someday be strong enough to sweep away the Constitutional restraints designed by the framers to prevent the tyranny of centralized power, excessive privilege and arbitrary government authority over the individual."

With one stroke of a pen, here are some of the Presidential Executive Orders concerning FEMA that would bring James Madison many sleepless nights:

Executive Order 10990 let's the government take over all means of transportation and control, railways, highways and seaports.

Executive Order 10995 allows the government to seize and control the communication media.

Executive Order 10997 allows the government to take over all electrical, power, gas, petroleum, fuels and minerals.

Executive Order 10998 allows the government to take over all food resources and farms.

Executive Order 11000 allows the government to mobilize citizens into work brigades under government supervision.

Executive Order 11001 allows the government to take over all health, education and welfare functions.

Executive Order 11002 designates the Postmaster General to operate a national registration of all persons.

Executive Order 11003 allows the government to take over all airports and aircraft, commercial aircraft.

Executive Order 11005 allows the government to take over all railroads, inland waterways and public storage facilities.

Executive Order 11004 allows the government to relocate communities, build new housing with public funds, designate areas to be abandoned and establish new locations for populations.

Pentagon Hides More Iraqi Prisoner Abuse

ACLU probes deeper into war files as 13 more Marines are court martialed. One of Saddam Hussein's defense attorneys speaks out against American imperialism. Over 400 other American and European lawyers express interest in helping in Hussein's defense.

16 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

More evidence of torture surfaced this week inside Iraqi jails and Pentagon officials reluctantly announced eight more detainees in U.S. custody died in Afghanistan.

These admissions came on the heels of a scathing report issued by the Human Rights Watch, severely criticizing U.S. human rights violations and violations of international law.

After the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) this week used the Freedom of Information Act to obtain evidence of Iraqi-prisoner torture, military officials announced at least 13 Marines were court-martialed for participating in the abuse.

Although the Marines' names were blacked-out on the documents, none of the cases had previously been reported.

An ACLU Washington D.C. spokesman said this week the documents revealed Marines were involved in mocked executions, applying electric shock and burning Iraqi captives. Further, the ACLU accuses the Pentagon of hiding even more abuse, the extent and brutality of which may never be known.

Critics claim widespread prisoner abuse by low-ranking members of the military is the result of tacit approval from top-ranking officials, including President Bush and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld.

Officials have denied condoning the brutality, saying they are isolated incidents common during wartime.

The controversy, however, has resulted in complicated legal wrangling between the Bush Administration and world-wide civil rights groups over international law violations, critics claiming the U.S. is engaged in an imperialistic takeover of the Middle East in order to control coveted oil resources.

The U.S. government has resolutely defended its actions based on national defense concerns triggered by 911, claiming U.S. security and sovereignty are at risk.

And while the legal wrangling continues, prisoners held in detention centers like Guantanamo have been basically held without due process in what some are calling "a legal limbo" lasting months or in some cases years.

At the forefront of trying to help many of these refugees and captives, many held without official charges being brought or POW status being given in accordance with the Geneva Convention, is defense attorney and international human rights expert, Curtis Doebbler

A member of the faculty at the prestigious University of Cairo, Doebbler also is one of the attorneys representing Saddam Hussein. His assessment of the American invasions and subsequent handling of Iraqi and Afhani prisoners might shock many Americans, who have been fed a steady diet of the U.S. government's side of the story but virtually nothing of Hussein's defense.

Many Americans might also be surprised at the number of lawyers and other world wide activists who have come to the fallen dictator's defense. Doebbler said he was one of a 21 member defense team of lawyers selected by Hussein's wife, adding over 400 American and European attorneys expressed interest in helping as well as 200 others pledging their support from around the world.

"It's a massive effort and something you might not expect under the circumstances, " said Doebbler, adding public support against U.S. imperialism outside American borders is widespread.

Doebbler, in fact, paints a grim picture of America's declining global stature, saying the consensus now of more than 50 countries is that the U.S. government has "flaunted international law in a no holds barred game of war profiteering."

The well-known international defense law specialist recently spoke very candidly about his personal views regarding America's war on terrorism as well and his controversial role as Hussein's defense attorney, a man viewed by many as a ruthless tyrant and mass murderer.

"He (Hussein) is only one defendant among many refugees and war captives I represent around the world," said Doebbler. "It's important to understand that everyone deserves due process and a fair trial. That is what America used to represent, but I fear this is no longer the case."

Doebbler tried to explain his philosophy behind representing one of the most hated men in the world.

"When countries violate international law, I believe all steps must be taken to ensure the offending governments be held accountable, "said Doebbler about U.S. imperialism in the Middle East and elsewhere.

"I am committed to ensuring that all people have their human rights respected, this includes Saddam Hussein, as well as those on the other side of the spectrum who are most vulnerable and disenfranchised.

Asked whether he thought Hussein could receive a fair trial in an Iraqi tribunal under U.S. control, he added: "Many lawyers feel as I do that the only place he will be able to receive a fair and impartial hearing is in a recognized international court of law outside of Iraq."

Regarding his feelings about the recent U.S. invasions, Doebbler, a Dutch and American citizen, held back no punches:

"I ardently oppose American and more broadly western neo-imperialism which is being imposed through the exploitation of the majority of the world and the economic and military dominance of the United States.

"I believe all people have a right and a duty to take all necessary measures to end U.S. exploitation and its inhumane dominance of the lives of billions of people."

President Bush and His Thugs Need "Tails Whipped With a Hickory Stick" Over 911 Lies
Hell's official new address is now listed in the Yellow Pages as 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.
15 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

The lies told by President Bush and his cronies about 911 are so annoying it would make a Sunday School teacher whip their tails with a hickory stick before reading the "riot act" about telling the truth.

But like any skilled liar, there's a justification for everything, a reason for every rhyme. So proficient are these government thugs at spinning a tale, the truth gets lost somewhere between here, Hell and back.

And after four years of the Bush Gang running things, Hell is now listed under the Yellow Pages at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

But what gets "under your skin" the most is the arrogance in which 911 lies are told.

What's so troubling is that everyone lies smiling directly into the camera.

What's even more disturbing is that all the television screens across the country don't crack into a million pieces.

And what finally adds injury to insult are the spineless Democrats and 911 Commissioners who now conclusively joined forces with the Bush thugs, telling the same lying stories about 911.

In light of it all, probably the best way to describe the whole bunch is to picture a large group of people standing with their pants down and their heads placed where the sun don't shine.

However, what stands out the most is the abundance of lies told. In fact, there are so many lies out there about 911, it's hard to determine where to begin sorting out the truth.

For lack of a better way, let's pick a subject in a Jeopardy Game. Why not start with $100 in the "Lying" category "What did top government officials know about the possibility of terrorists using airplanes as missiles prior to 911?"

The answer: Nothing.

What is the question: What did Condaleeza Rice officially say about 911?

Second answer: Absolutely Nothing

What is the question: What did Donald Rumsfeld say about the same subject?

Next answer: Most Definitely Nothing.

What is the question: What did Vice President Dick Cheney admit to knowing?

Final answer: Absolutely, Positively, Most Definitely Nothing.

What is the question: What did President Bush add that was helpful?

However, based on information gathered by hard-working investigators and journalists, look at what the four thugs above should have answered.

Even without mentioning President Bush's fishing trip after hearing about Osama bin Laden's intentions "to strike in U.S." in an August 6, 2001 Presidential Daily Briefing(PDB), here's some facts the Bush thugs have conveniently forgot to mention:

In late July 2001, as reported by Fox News, Russia's President Putin warned the U.S. that suicide pilots were training for attacks on homeland targets.

In late July 2001, Egyptian Intelligence learned from Afghan operatives that 20 Al Qaeda members had slipped into the U.S. and four of them had received flight training. CBS News reported this was passed onto CIA sources, but they never followed up on it.

As reported by the New York Times and the Associated Press, at the end of August 2001, Egyptian Intelligence followed up with a warning that Al Qaeda was in the advanced stages of executing a significant operation against an American target.

The Jordanian government in July 2001 passed on a message that a major attack, code named "Big Wedding" was planned inside the U.S. and that aircraft would be used. Later, "Big Wedding" was claimed to be Al Qaeda's secret code name for the 911 attacks.

A Frankfurter daily paper, Allgemeine Zeitung, reported in June 2001 that Middle Eastern terrorists were planning to hijack commercial aircraft to use them as weapons for an attack.

Reported by the Daily Telegraph and the Los Angeles Times in mid-August 2001, the government of Israel warned that 50 to 200 Al Qaeda terrorists had slipped into the U.S. and were planning an imminent "large scale target" attack. The CIA has denied receiving this warning.

On August 23, 2001, the government of Israel gave the CIA a list of 19 terrorists within the U.S. who were planning to stage an attack. This list is said to contain at least four of the named 911 hijackers, including Mohamed Atta.

This information was reported in two German daily papers, the BBC and an Israeli daily paper. Apparently, Israeli intelligence went so far as to monitor "around the clock" some of the hijackers, months prior to 911.

Until just a few months prior to 911, U.S. officials were negotiating with the Taliban for rights to construct a pipeline across Afghani territory. Late in July 2001, Wakil Ahmed Mattawakil, the foreign minister of the Taliban, tried to warn the U.S. that Al Qaeda was planning a huge attack that would kill thousands.

Shortly before 911, as reported in the Sunday Times, there was an intercept communication overheard by CIA officials involving Osama bin Laden and an associate, talking about an incident to take place in the U.S. on or about 911.

In early August 2001, The London Sunday Herald reported that Britain gave categorical warnings that the U.S. should expect multiple airline hijackings. This warning was reportedly passed on directly to President Bush.

In April 2000, Senate Intelligence Hearing reports indicated a man told FBI agents specifics of 911. His information was later verified by a lie detector test, but the FBI did not bother to verify his story or check out his contacts within the U.S. The man stated he was supposed to meet five or six other individuals in the U.S. and participate in a hijacking of a 747 airplane.

In July 1999, as reported by Cox News and the Palm Beach Post, an agent of the Pakistan's intelligence service in the U.S. to buy illegal weapons for Al Qaeda and the Taliban, pointed to the WTC and said: "Those towers are coming down." An FBI informant recorded him saying this and similar threats against the WTC on two separate occasions. This information supposedly reached higher official, including Sen. Bob Graham, the chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

In August 1998, the New York Times reported a confidential CIA intelligence report asserted that Arab terrorists were planning to fly a bomb-laden aircraft from a foreign country into the WTC. Later this was connected to Al Qaeda.

In the autumn of 1998, U.S. intelligence heard of an Al Qaeda plot that involved aircraft in New York City and the Washington D.C. This was documented in Senate Intelligence Committee reports and later reported by the New York Times.

Late in December 1998, even a Time Magazine cover story entitled "The Hunt for Osama" reported that intelligence sources had "evidence that bin Laden may be planning his boldest move yet - a strike on Washington or possibly New York City."

Further discrediting the claim that government officials "never thought of an aircraft being used as a missile" are a litany of warnings of that nature going back to 1996. In January 1996, U.S. Intelligence received information concerning a planned suicide attack allegedly connected to Al Qaeda on targets including the Pentagon.

U.S. Medicine Magazine reported that in May 2001, Department of Defense medical personnel had been trained to respond to missile like attacks in the form of a 757 airliner crashing into the Pentagon.

On June 1-2 of 2001, NORAD sponsored a multi-agency planning exercise called "Amalgam Virgo 01", which involved the hypothetical scenario of a cruise missile launched by a rogue government. In fact, Osama's picture was on the cover of the proposal for the exercise. It is interesting to note that 911 occurred while the sun was in the astrological sign of Virgo in the year 01, as noted by the chosen name for the military exercise.

Perhaps most astonishing of all is a report by the National Law Enforcement Security Institute. It reported that on the very morning of 911, John Fulton and his team at the CIA were running a pre-planned simulation to determine emergency response times if a plane were to strike a building. The simulation was to start at start at 9:00am just four miles from where one of the real hijacked planes took off.

Also on 911, NORAD was conducting one of its periodic war games only miles from the WTC, this one known as "Vigilant Guardian." Details have been withheld from public scrutiny, but leaked information shows it was an exercise simulating exactly what occurred at the WTC the same morning. According to one NORAD employee, as reported by Aviation Week and Space Technology, everybody at NORAD initially thought that the real hijackings on 911 were a part of Vigilant Guardian.

Added Aviation Weekly: "If top U.S. government personnel, civilian and military, were complicit in the attacks, then having a war game in progress, involving a scenario very much like what transpired on 911, was an ingenious way to confound first responders and delay an effective response to the attacks."

Sen. Chambliss (R-Ga.) "Miraculously" Wins 2002 Senate Bid; GOP Copies Same 'Cheating Ways' in 2004.

President Bush steals 2004 Presidency like an 'underhanded Texas poker player' with four aces hidden under his sleeve.

13 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

The name Saxby Chambliss means nothing to most Americans.

And after reading the freshman Senator from Georgia's voting record, it should mean even less.

How he made it to the Senate is even less impressive? In fact, he might have been the GOP's first "test monkey" to see if electronic voting fraud really worked?

In November 2002, then U.S. Congressman Chambliss, decided to challenge the popular democrat and Vietnam war hero, incumbent Sen. Max Cleland. He had long been a thorn in the Republican side, the GOP looking for any possible way to silence Cleland's anti-administration voice.

A three-prong strategy was then set into motion:

First, run a republican loyalist like Chambliss who will vote the party line. Next, wage a highly negative campaign to discredit Cleland's patriotism even though he was a triple-amputee and highly decorated war hero.

Lastly, if the first two don't work, then like any good "underhanded Texas poker player," stack the deck, pull an ace from under your sleeve and cheat!

And it appears the GOP finally stacked the deck to get Chambliss elected.

Like a totalitarian dictator once said "the power doesn't really lie in the people who cast the votes, but in the people who count them," the GOP somehow rallied in the 9th inning to upset Cleland.

In baseball terms, Chambliss came from 10 runs down to win it in the bottom of the 9th.

From the conservative viewpoint, they called it an impressive hitting attack.

Others called it something much different. They called it cheating. They called it electronic voter fraud. They called it manipulating the democratic system with a flip of an electronic switch.

But like any sly poker player accused of cheating, Chambliss just stared his opponents down with a typical poker face and boasted: "Show me the proof?"

And Critics complain there never can be any proof, since the electronic voting system approved for use in Georgia, provided absolutely no paper trail to check the final results.

The absurdity of such a thing actually taking place is beyond belief in a democratic system based on checks and balances. It's basically like allowing high school kids to take a test without a proctor or saying no one's entitled to a receipt on a credit card purchase. It's simply absurd!

But that's the way the Chambliss election went down: No paper trail or possible way to verify the official results.

And the absurdity actually worked so well for Chambliss, why not do it again in the 2004 Presidential election.

Look at the case of Chambliss first:

Although lagging badly in the polls only days prior to the election and the exit polls indicating a decisive Cleland victory at hand, Chambliss somehow pulls out a miraculous 11th hour victory.

How could the polls be so wrong?

How?

The poll-takers simply didn't take into consideration who counted the votes. The polls simply made the mistake of putting the power in the hands of the voter instead of the vote counter. Then to make matters worse, they take the blame for the errors, since there is no way to prove otherwise.

Although no proof exists, if this type of thing went down at a wild west Texas poker table the accused culprit - Chambliss - would have been shot dead proof or no proof, the cheating so obvious it baffles the mind.

But, instead, everybody asks "how" and looks at the results dumbfounded like a bunch of city slickers sipping on a Tom Collins in a hard-drinking Texas bar.

The "how" lies in the simple fact the Republican controlled election rules allow for a vote tabulation without a paper trail. It allows for no credible way to check the results. It allows for the possibility of easy cheating. It allows, like the totalitarian dictator proclaimed years ago, for the power to be in the hands of the vote counter not the voter himself.

In this case, not only was there a lack of a paper trail, but Diebold Inc., the company who made the machines and installed the software, had been reported to be deeply loyal and firmly in the pocket of the Republican Party.

Although no hard evidence exists, Chambliss obviously had the deck stacked in his favor, not only having one ace but four aces under his sleeve during the whole election.

He had Republican partisans make the rules, make the machines, count the votes, provide for no verifiable results and then declare him the winner?

And now almost two months after the Presidential election, we are seeing the same system used all over again with underhanded Republican companies providing the voting machines that counted an estimated one-third of the entire vote, as well as a majority of votes tabulated in the so-called crucial battleground states..

In fact, a new Harris poll now indicates one in five Americans don't believe the election was legitimate, citing electronic voting without a paper trail as the main reason.

Also, University of Pennsylvania Professor Steven Freeman in a recent article entitled "the Unexplained Exit Pole Discrepancy, claims the chance that exit poles were all wrong in Ohio, Florida and Pennsylvania comes to about 250 million to one.

Even Dick Morris, a Republican consultant for Fox News, said:

"Exit polls are almost never wrong...They cannot be wrong across the board as they were on election night and I suspect foul play."

And it's interesting to note that the Associated Press has reported on numerous occasions that the exit poll irregularities are "clear examples of voter fraud in the Ukraine" but failed to allege the same took place in our own elections.

The Associated Press has also failed to mention that American democracy has been cheapened, almost destroyed, by privatized Republican-owned voting companies that have been allowed to function without any meaningful federal or state regulations.

It has also failed to mention that Republicans have blocked legislation requiring that electronic voting machines produce a back-up paper trail as well as trying to sponsor new legislation outlawing any type of exit polling due to obvious irregularities.

And as journalist Colleen Redman pointed out in a recent voting fraud article, it's hard to imagine Presidential 2004 election results have not been manipulated by the Republican Party after listening to what Pulitzer Prize winning author and journalist David Suskind said a top White House official told him:

"Your part of the reality based community, one who believes that solutions emerge from your judicious study of discernible reality.

"That's not the way the world works anymore. We're an empire now and when we act, we create our own reality. And why you are studying that reality - judiciously as you will - we will act again, creating other realities, which you can study, too."

With this in mind, the suggested course of study is as follows:

Closely study the moves of the underhanded Texas poker player as he pulls out four aces from under his sleeve.

And the next time you catch him at his "dirty tricks," call him a cheat before the votes are counted since this poker player never leaves hard evidence or any paper trail whatsoever.

Official ' 911 Double Talk" Reaches Epic Proportions Over Flight 93
Like 'buzzards over a dead carcass, lions keep chasing birds away' when it comes to conspiracy talk. Critics claim Flight 93 shot down by military planes; Official position 'deny, deny, deny...'

10 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

The lies, deception and double talk by those officials hiding the truth about 911 reach epic proportions when it comes to the "black flight path" taken by United Airlines Flight 93 before it crashed in rural Pennsylvania.

The case has been picked apart by investigators over the last three years like hungry buzzards flocking over a dead carcass. It seems every second, every minute of the doomed flight has been dissected until it can't be dissected anymore.

The verdict: Government guilty.

The reality: Life goes on like 911 never happened. The government keeps governing. The suspicious writers keep snooping. The poor people keep crying conspiracy. The middle class keep working. The rich keep finding amusement. Everyone goes to sleep either angry, exhausted or amused. And everybody wakes up the next morning to do the same thing all over again.

In light of reality, solid and commendable efforts have raised serious questions about a government cover-up, especially when discussing Flight 93. But it seems every time someone gets too close to the truth, the government comes charging on the scene like an angry lion, chasing the birds away.

All the talking in the world doesn't scare away a lion, but this 911 talk stinks so bad even the poor lion wants to run for the hills and disassociate his good name with this conspiracy story.

Like a famous German dictator once said: "Tell a big enough lie and they are bound to believe it, but tell a small lie and you are bound to get caught."

And this logic is evident when it comes to the official government account of the doomed path of Flight 93,

According to the official story, Fight 93 took off from Newark 41 minutes late at 8:42am and crashed in rural Somerset County at 10:03am after four heroic passengers attacked the same number of Arab hijackers in a valiant attempt to gain control of the airplane.

The plane crashes in an open field before it hits the Capital, the intended target of the terrorists. Thirty-eight passengers, five flight attendants and two pilots, including the hijackers all die in the crash. All die, except the hijackers of course, as heroes.

The debris is first found at the main crash site in an open field, but more and more is uncovered as the search goes on in several smaller debris fields a short distance away. As the search continues, one of the main engines is found over a mile away from the crash site. Other debris fields were then uncovered 2, 3, and as far as 8 miles away.

The debris is then quickly collected by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and kept under lock and key for national security reasons. The hijackers on the plane were quickly named, included with the 15 others on the other three flights involved in the 911 attacks, two at the WTC and one at the Pentagon. Osama ben Laden is quickly pegged as the ringleader.

The Flight 93 story is now pieced together with the other three airplanes and the official story is pretty well complete, the only thing left is to deflect criticism and think of credible ways to fill in the details before the war in Afghanistan and Iraq can begin.

Enter the critics. Enter some who doubt the story from day one. Then enter those who listened to the early critics, discovering one government lie and distortion after another, which, of course, covers over the big 911 lie. More and more disbelievers join in, mostly on the internet, and the ping-pong match is in full swing.

Now it's three years later, both groups essentially still playing an intellectual 911 ping-pong match. But like all previous conspiracy theories, it's far out of the earshot of mainstream America and left virtually ignored by the mainstream media..

The game is being played much like all conspiracy games have been played in the past:

The conspiracy theorists chatter away at the government, trying to convince the masses to chatter with them. They fail, but keep trying. They just can't seem to get over the hump, the masses staying quiet and the mainstream media acting like intellectual prostitutes only reporting what keeps their weekly paychecks rolling in.

The government listens quietly, hiding the evidence, hiding the truth. It waits for the heat to blow over, issues an official story and says nothing more. They know mainstream America isn't listening to wild 911 conspiracy theories. They know the mainstream media doesn't ask tough questions, doesn't want to lose advertising dollars. They know the media will print what's it told.

They know from past experience the above method works since it has been "test-proven" time and time again. Essentially they know it pays to "lie big" and the way the game is played, they know they'll never get caught anyway.

But when it comes to the holes in the government story regarding Flight 93, officials are getting pretty close to the edge, pretty close to blowing the whole phony 911 story.

So what have the writers, experts and eyewitnesses found so damaging to the government story this time?

Opening Statement

Author David Ray Griffin, in his revealing book entitled "The New Pearl Harbor," devotes Chapter Three to presenting a good overall presentation of the flaws in the official story.

Griffin uses timelines and other evidence compiled by researcher Paul Thompson, who has devoted countless hours at tediously recording events before, after and during 911, much of his information showing glaring inaccuracies in the entire government story. For more information than one could digest in a lifetime see his website at www.cooperativeresearch.org.

Griffin, much like a lawyer giving an opening statement, presents a concise case, placing more than reasonable doubt in the minds of readers regarding the official story of Flight 93.

By citing obvious inconsistencies, he lays a good foundation for a strong theory that Flight 93 was actually shot down by a government-fired missile since "it became evident that the passengers - among whom were a professional pilot and a flight controller- might gain control of the airplane."

Griffin aptly points out Flight 93 shows the irony of 911 when he says in the opening words of the chapter:

"The main problem raised by the first three flights...was the fact that the three aircraft that should have been shot down were not. The fate of Flight 93, say critics,presents us with the opposite problem: A plane that should not have been shot down was."

Details Discrediting Official Story

Three minutes, four possible coincidences, and one piece of missing evidence...

Writer Robb Marley points to the last three minutes of Flight 93 to find answers. He calls on a September 2002 Philadelphia Daily News story, written By William Bunch, who discussed seismology reports indicating the plane when down at 10:06am, three minutes earlier then earlier government reports.

Other inconsistencies show even family members allowed to listen to cockpit voice recordings were repeatedly told the tape ended at 10:03am, three minutes earlier then seismology reports indicate the plane hit the ground.

What happened in those last three minute? Why has the government repeatedly try to hide this fact?

Observers surmise the recordings were not released by the FBI since they indicated the passengers in fact had subdued the airplane and were attempting to land it safely. At this point, officials realized the plane had to be shot down and orders were then given to do just that. Thus, critics said, the last three minutes had to be hidden or the real truth about a military shoot down would have become too obvious.

The problem continues to get worse, writes Marley:

"Shortly before striking the ground, Flight 93 made a dramatic course change. The doomed airliner suddenly turned nearly 90 degrees clockwise. The turn, according to aircraft tracking records occurred at 10:03am, three minutes before impact."

Then there's another event, adding:

"The third event took place when the plane's transponder signal, which during the course of the flight had been turned off, and then on again, ceased transmitting...Air traffic controller Stacy Taylor said she assumed the worst when the signal finally stopped - that Flight 93 had crashed."

Marley points out Taylor said the transponder went out at 10:03am, three minutes before impact.

Further, Marley brings up a fourth occurrence, which compounds the missing three minutes hidden by the government, calling attention to a power outage at a nearby Shanksville-Stoneycreek Elementary School, In the days to come, photographs of the scene showed a newly repaired power line stretching over the scene, leading to the conclusion that the airliner severed the power lines as it hit the ground.

Strangely, the time of the outage, remains unverifiable. Why would this be unverified, he asks, when power companies keep meticulous records about outage times, especially in a case leading to evidence of a national tragedy.

Marley reminds everyone about the importance of this three minutes of inconstency when he writes:

"Understanding the possible occurrence of these four events requires the understanding that time, when measured by those involved here, is a matter of fine precision. Flight recorders, seismologists, air traffic controllers and utility companies all depend upon the accuracy of their clocks tremendously, and even use tools such as satellites to keep errors to a minimum. These clocks, if not exactly synchronized, should at most be off by a matter of seconds, not minutes."

Eye Witness Accounts

Numerous people say they saw another aircraft flying near Flight 93 when it crashed

At least six eye-witnesses, including an important one named Susan Mcelwain, said they noticed a military plane flying near Flight 93 before it crashed. The FBI denies its existence, Mcelwain, who lives two miles from the crash site, said she is positive a white military-type plane rocketed directly over her head just prior to the crash of Flight 93.

"It came right over me, I reckon about 40 or 50 feet above my minivan," she recalled in a London Daily Mirror article a year after the crash. "It was so low I ducked instinctively. It was traveling very fast, but hardly made any sound.

"Then it disappeared behind some trees. A few seconds later I heard this great explosion and saw this fireball rise up over the trees, so I figured the jet had crashed. I'd heard nothing about the other attacks and it was only when I got home and saw the TV that I realized it wasn't the white jet, but Flight 93."

Mcelwain goes on to give a very detailed description of the airplane, saying it had two rear engines, a big fin on its back like a spoiler on a car and two upright fins at the side.

"The FBI came and talked to me and said there was no plane around at the time, added Mcelwain. "Then they tried to change their story, saying it was a plane taking pictures of the crash flying about 3,000 feet up."

Mcelwain further added the full truth is yet to be determined since a call from the wife of air force friend of the family made her even more suspicious.

"She said her husband had called her that morning and said 'I can't talk now, but we just shot down a plane,'" adds Mcelwain. "I presumed she meant Flight 93. I have no doubt those brave people on board tried to do something, but I don't believe what happened on the plane brought it down."

And Mcelwain is not alone. Numerous reports have surfaced, including information contained in a federal lawsuit accusing President Bush and others of a conspiracy, providing substantial evidence that either F-16s from the "Happy Hooligan" National Guard Unit shot down Flight 93 with sidewinder missiles or military C-130s brought it down with high-tech microwave powered weaponry.

Cell Phone Calls Made From Flight 93

Numerous calls supposedly made, but two are of special interest; one recipient gagged by FBI.

There were numerous calls allegedly made from Flight 93. Nearly all were said to be made from cell phones and all relatively short calls. Critics have questioned these calls since technical reports indicate cell phone technology prohibits transmission from an airliner traveling at high speed, especially in a remote area.

However, of importance, is a sometimes forgotten but most revealing call from Edward Felt, made frantically from a bathroom at 9:59 am. Felt spoke to operator Glen Cramer, saying he heard an explosion, saw white smoke and that the plane was going down.

Subsequently, , the FBI has put a gag order on Cramer for national security reasons, not allowing him to speak publicly or privately about the phone call he received from Felt.

The other call of interest was that made by Todd Beamer, who provided President Bush with his much heralded war charge in the months to come when Invading Iraq: "Let's Roll."

Beamer's call, the only one of any length, lasted more than 15 minutes. Critics, however, seriously question the veracity of the call, saying it might have been simulated by FBI voice experts.

They seriously wonder why Beamer would have spent the last minutes of his life talking to a Verizon operator instead of his wife, who he easily could have contacted if the call was, in fact, made in the first place.

Other Flight 93 Evidence

The Debris

The official government story insists that Flight 93 exploded on impact when it crashed in an open field. However, a one-ton section of the engine was found over a mile away. Other light debris was scattered as far as eight miles away, critics saying inconsistent with a crash, but more likely from a shoot-down.

The Black Boxes

The FBI has never publicly revealed the full contents of the flight data and cockpit recorders, providing information on a piecemeal basis after editing them like a Hollywood movie.

Sources, however, claim the last thing heard on the voice recorder was the sound of wind, suggesting the plane had been holed from missile fire.

A Sonic Boom

The FBI to date insists there was no military plane in the vicinity, but as previously reported and verified, a sonic boom was picked up at 9:22am caused by a supersonic jet. This boom was recorded by an earthquake tracking device in southern Pennsylvania about 60 miles from the crash scene.

The tragic irony raised by the compilation of the above evidence, hard to swallow by many Americans, is the thought that Beamer and his fellow passengers may have regained control of the cockpit only to see their efforts quashed by an F-16 missile or other microwave military weaponry?

This theory is more than just speculation.

The credibility and weight of the facts uncovered by diligent investigators appears to have risen to a preponderance of evidence or even beyond a reasonable doubt. Accordingly, in a civil or criminal court respectively, there would be a good chance of conviction.

However, knowing the conservative judiciary would never allow such a case to get that far, the only thing that remains a speculation is how deep and how high-up the 911 cover-up.

With this in mind, the efforts of the hardworking investigators, researchers and writers searching for the truth about 911 have not been wasted. Future efforts will also prove worthwhile since this time -- perhaps if we're lucky -- the government just may lose the 911 ping-pong match going on right now.

Perhaps, if we're lucky, the truth about 911 will surface in our lifetime. If not, at least we can all gain satisfaction knowing that we died trying to find out.

President Bush Ready to Shoot Horses in the Back
Republican Senator hides slaughter of thousands of wild horses in little known, unrelated federal spending bill; Animal rights groups stage 11th hour protest, but trigger-happy President expected to sign legislation in days.

9 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

Our Texas gun-slinging President now has his sights set on the symbol of the great American West, the wild mustang.

In a matter of days, he's set to pull the trigger and sign a little known bill, opening the slaughter house gates on 28,000 wild horses grazing on Bureau of Land Management (BLM) property in California and other western states.

Animal rights critics said the "trigger-happy" President is expected to turn his back on the "cowboy's best friend" despite an 11th hour plea to stop the carnage.

The amendment to kill the horses slipped into an obscure federal appropriations bill sponsored by Senator Conrad Burns (R-Montana), a friend to ranchers seeking more grazing land for cattle now used by wild horses.

Critics said the "hidden move" comes as pay back to meat packers as well, both groups making campaign contributions to President Bush and Sen. Burns.

Sen. Burns quietly added the amendment in an unrelated spending bill in hopes of gaining little attention from critical animal rights activists. The law removes all protection for wild horses over the age of 10 or that have failed to be adopted after three attempts.

Critics said the law will also lead many younger horses to slaughter since age determination in wild horses is sometimes confusing and difficult. The legislation, they assert, is designed to wipe-out the entire wild horse herd, paving the way for open grazing for land-hungry cattle ranchers who view horses as a nuisance.

"No one knew about this until the last minute. It was kept a secret for obvious reasons," said Jerry Finch, head of the Habitat for Horses, a nonprofit Texas horse rescue group. "Don't turn your back on this President for one minute. He's now even going to shoot the horses in the back. This amendment means death by slaughter for tens of thousands of horses and a lot of profit for those who kill and transport the meat overseas.

"It's a sad reflection on our government process to know that one man can silently by himself order the death of so many horses."

Under the amendment, older horses, burros and those younger horses deemed not able to be adopted will be sold at auction then killed. The law overrides the longstanding 1971 Wild Free-Roaming Horse and Burro Act, which offered protection against this type of wholesale slaughter.

It clears the way for horses to be slaughtered at one of three United States equine slaughterhouses, two located in Texas. American horse meat is then sold to France, Italy, Belgium and Japan, where it is viewed as a delicacy.

Celia Bodington, a spokesman for the BLM, said the agency did not actively support the hidden legislation, but will support its ramifications if passed into law.

Animal rights groups across the board have voiced last minute opposition to the potential slaughter, including the Society for Animal Protective Legislation, the Animal Horse Defense Fund and the Human Rights Society.

"This provision was kept secret since it never would see the light of day otherwise," said Chris Hyde, an analyst for the Animal Protective Legislative group, referring to the fact that many legislators were completely unaware of its inclusion in the otherwise unrelated federal spending bill.

Trina Bellak of the American Horse Defense Fund said this sets the stage for a major battle with the environmentally unfriendly Bush Administration and Republican Congress.

"This is abominable, outrageous, disingenuous and unethical," said Bellak.

Sen. Burns, a rancher himself, denied allegations he is sponsoring the bill to help his rancher friends gain needed grazing land for cattle or to line the pockets of the meat packing industry that helped him get re-elected.

"The amendment focuses on the proper management of horses and burros on public land," said Sen. Burns in defense of bill's passage, adding horses are now living in poor conditions.

Critics said Sen. Burns statements should be categorically dismissed since his idea of proper horse management is to "kill them all off."

Despite mounting criticism, President Bush is expected to sign the bill, including the amendment, since he has failed to veto one piece of legislation during his first term. Critics suggest why should he suddenly change that pattern now.

Federal Appeals Court Judge Says There's Legal Justification for Torture and War Crimes

Despite well established domestic and international law forbidding torture, Judge Jay Bybee of the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in a 50 page memo to President Bush found 'a creative way' to skirt the law, justifying torture and other war crimes. His crafty legal memo earned him a pat on the back from President Bush and a lifetime appointment to the federal bench.

8 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

Federal Appeals Court Judge Jay S. Bybee has a strange definition for cruel and unusual punishment. Apparently, the good judge thinks it's normal to torture and inflict great bodily harm.

Usually, someone with such a radical opinion is thrown off the bench. Usually, a judge like this is patted down to see if he's hiding a whiskey bottle.

But Judge Bybee's "tortuous views" sat well with President George W. Bush. They sat so well with our "Texas gun-slinging President" that in March 2003 Bybee was given a life-time six figure post on the influential Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, the largest judicial circuit in the land serving California among other states.

"His arguments could have been made by Hitler or Stalin," said attorney Phillip Berg, who recently criticized Bybee's appointment to the bench in an October 22, 2004, federal lawsuit filed against President Bush and others for conspiracy involving 911.

His comments about Bybee were included in a 237 page complaint, accusing President Bush of being involved in a systematic neo-conservative takeover of the government by using 911 as the lynchpin to justify fear, terrorism, war and imperialism.

The suit, filed against Bush and 55 others, accuses them of violating the Racketeer Influenced Corruptions Act (RICO). The pre-trial pleadings in such a case allow for an exhaustive presentation of facts, Berg using the opportunity to present a massive neo-con conspiracy case allegedly taking place before, after and during 911.

Berg's comments concerning Bybee are just one small portion of the case, but illustrate what he calls a "Hitler type" takeover of the judiciary.

He notes that Bush has appointed over 200 federal judges since taking office, more than any other President and mostly all of them aligned far to the right of civil rights, worker rights and the environment.

Berg said, like Bybee, most of the appointees share Bush's "slanted view of justice," which by itself is "a very scary thought."

In his lawsuit, he added: "Instead of being fired or better yet disbarred, in the present political climate, his views so hostile to the Constitution and to humanity have been rewarded with a lifetime position.

"That such men are allowed to now sit on the federal bench suggests that the American judiciary is being debased by President Bush, much as the German judiciary was debased in the years of the Hitler."

The case filed on behalf of WTC maintenance worker William Rodriguez, Berg refers to a "despicable and reprehensible" memorandum written for Bush when Bybee was working in Washington as an assistant attorney general in 2002 after 911.

At a time when the administration was being heavily criticized for torturing prisoners in Iraq and Afghanistan, Bybee crafted a creative legal argument justifying the harsh military tactics.

His memorandum essentially gave Bush legal authority to order torture and war crimes, notwithstanding international and domestic laws forbidding it universally condemned at Nuremberg.

His legal creativity, praised by President Bush, further went on to justify the infliction of torture and other war crimes by military underlings, so long as the torture was not life threatening and so long as it was not administered specifically with that intent.

"The logic of Bybee's memo is the logic of totalitarianism," said Berg. "That he was confirmed to such a high office shows that Congress, too, lacks the integrity and courage to defend the U.S. Constitution.

"That the major media has but matter-of-factly reported on his appointment, in light of his reprehensible views, shows that they, too, are snugly in the pocket of the neo-cons behind this obvious debasement of the judiciary."

Bybee's August 2002 memo, legally justifying torture, drew only minor opposition. The 49-year-old was approved by 74-19 margin in the Senate without very little meaningful debate, even though heavily criticized by outside judicial watchdog groups.

Besides his views on torture, critics labeled him an extremist with an overly narrow view of individual rights, particularly in regard to abortion. He was also castigated for a law review article in which he criticized the Supreme Court's decision striking down Colorado's constitutional amendment barring enactment of gay rights laws.

The National Council of Jewish Women strongly opposed Bybee's nomination, writing:

"His views are far outside the mainstream of legal thought and threaten our fundamental constitutional rights. If his theories were to prevail in our courts, Americans would lose vital protections, including our First Amendment rights, the right to privacy and reproductive freedom."

Other pending judicial nominees for federal circuit court positions include Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owens, who is most remembered for voting to benefit Haliburton and Enron after taking campaign contributions from them.

Also nominated is California Supreme Court Justice Janice Rogers Brown, whose decisions have always come against affirmative action, the rights of workers, gays, senior citizens, protecting children from lead poisoning and the right of choice.

Both the nominations of Brown and Rogers are still pending Senate Investigation after being nominated in 2003.

The Alliance for Justice, a judicial watchdog group who monitors Presidential appointments, has opposed both nominations, stating they failed to demonstrate a commitment to protecting the rights of ordinary Americans, one of the standards used by the group in determining a judge's qualifications.

The Alliance also said that many of Bush's nominations failed to meet the above criteria and other standards, including a commitment to civil rights, reproductive freedom, individual liberties and a general respect for the Constitution.

"Bush has sought out ideologues who meet a litmus test for pleasing his right-wing religious backers," said attorney Marjorie Cohen, a supporter of the judicial watchdog group. "Since he was re-elected, we can expect him to mold the federal judiciary - and probably the Supreme Court - in his own image. A frightening thought!"

Hitler's SS Gestapo Unit Alive and Well Under The Patriot Act
High School students interrogated for anti-Bush classroom discussion; University professor detained for two days for suspicious art project; Teen webmaster spends 1 year in jail for anti-government website.

6 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

Path to Fascism: The Patriot Act

The following examples of paranoia and injustice are not taken from the archives of Hitler's "SS Gestapo Unit," but from actual cases involving the U.S. Homeland Terrorist Task Force. The similarities are remarkable and made legally possible by the passage of The Patriot Act.

Called by the Bush Administration a "necessary legal tool to root out terrorists," critics claim the Patriot Act is nothing more than a "dagger thrust in the heart of the Constitution," leading America down the path of fascism.

Despite how hard former Attorney General John Ashcroft tries to mislead Americans about the Act's new powers, it contains provisions that literally strip away 4th, 5th and 6th Amendment rights on mere suspicion of terrorist activity or being an enemy combatant.

The problem lies in the loosely defined meaning of the above terms, which can be stretched to mean almost anything the government wants them to mean as shown in the three actual cases below.

As these cases illustrate, the Patriot Act's draconian powers have not only angered civil libertarians, but more than 130 local communities and state legislatures in Alaska, Hawaii and Vermont have opposed provisions of the Act. Even the peaceable and non-controversial National Library Association has taken steps to warn patrons about the act's overbroad powers.

One of the primary issues is Section 215, the so-called "business records" or "tangible things" provision. This section allows the government without a criminal subpoena, search warrant or without probable cause to rifle through an individual's finances, medical histories, internet usage, bookstore purchases, library usage, school records, travel patterns or through records of basically any other activity.

High School Class Discussion Leads to Terrorist Task Force Interrogation of Two Teens.

Oakland High School teacher Larry Felson has bitter memories about a "dark day" back in May 2003 when Terrorist Task Force agents barged into school and interrogated two innocent high school students.

They had no warrant, no probable cause. But yet agents held students for hours without legal counsel, without parents or teachers present. They held students based on remarks the teens made criticizing President Bush in a classroom discussion about the Iraq War.

The teacher in charge of the discussion thought the statements were a "direct threat", calling the task force into action. But other teachers emphatically said the teacher "rushed to judgment" over 911 paranoia. They said what is even more disturbing is that a climate now exists were a situation as "fundamental to free expression as a classroom discussion" can result in such fascist-type actions.

"When one student asked agents if they had the right to remain silent, I remember them responding: 'You don't have any legal rights, we own you,'" Felsen recalled.

Teacher Cassie Lopez, also stunned by the "Gestapo-like activity," said the teachers union, parents and others who tried to get an official explanation have been stonewalled, essentially given nothing more than a general response: "necessary for national security concerns."

Terrorist Task Force Mistakes University of Buffalo Professor's Art Project for Biological Weapons Laboratory

University of Buffalo art Professor Steven Kurtz also has bad memories about a "dark day" last May when terrorist task force agents barged into his home, confiscated his belongings and held him for two days without legal counsel.

The reasons turned out to be bizarre and frivolous, but not before subpoenas were issued to three friends and a grand jury probe initiated in June to see if the peaceable art professor violated Section 175 of the U.S. Biological Weapons Act.

Of course, the illegal search and seizure, as well as illegal detainment of the professor, was justified by overreaction prompted by 911 paranoia made possible by The Patriot Act. As it turned out, agents mistakenly thought the professor's art project was a bio-weapons lab, but even after realizing the mistake, continued the investigation under the guise of national security.

Simply put, Kurtz is an artist dedicated to education, peace and freedom of expression, everything the Bush Administration diametrically opposes despite its false public image.

Otherwise, how can any sense be made out of what happened to the professor on the morning of May 11, 2004, the day he called paramedics to revive his wife from a heart attack. His wife died the same morning and it was officially found unrelated to anything involving his art project and the terrorist task force.

And a story such as this reveals how things can spin totally out of control when confusing events mix with overly broad governmental powers.

Paramedics, who arrived to revive Mrs. Kurtz, noticed laboratory equipment used in his artwork. Upon suspicion, they called agents who, within hours, rifled through his house, seized his books, personal papers, computer and art work, which to date has not been returned.

Kurtz is well-known in his progressive art community and a member of the Critical Art Ensemble, a group dedicated to exploring the intersections between art, technology, radical politics and critical theory.

His art, displayed nationwide, often involves blending biological and agricultural issues. For example, in 2002 one of his exhibits called "Molecular Invasion" portrayed an exhibit against genetically modified crops with a life-like display of small soy, corn and canola plants growing under large incubator lamps.

One of his other exhibits, trying to raise public awareness against plant and food contamination, allows viewers the chance to see bacteria growing in petri dishes.

"It's a complete fishing expedition,' said his Buffalo lawyer, Paul Cambria. "When they came to his house the FBI found equipment used for extracting and amplifying DNA and three types of bacteria, all used in his art work.

"He is obviously not somebody trying to make a weapon and the equipment seized by agents can be found in any university biology lab as standard equipment. Everything taken in the house has been already exhibited in public."

Two of the Kurt's artist friends served subpoenas, also members of the internationally-acclaimed Art Ensemble, could not explain why the government has pursued this case so strongly.

"It was shocking that the investigation was ever launched," said Beatriz da Costa, one of the artist's subpoenaed. "It just shows how vulnerable the Patriot Act has made freedom of speech in this country. Our art is intended for peace by raising awareness to possible environmental contaminants in our food."

Member of the Art Ensemble suggest the only possible reason for this type of government harassment is its hidden agenda to silence their message displayed through their artwork.

The equipment seized by the FBI consisted of Kurt's latest project, consisting of a mobile DNA extraction laboratory to test store-bought food for possible contamination by genetically modified grains and organisms.

University officials said this equipment is used in school labs, even found in some high school science departments.

The FBI this week was unavailable for comment.

Teen Webmaster Jailed for 1 Year Under Patriot Act Now Released.

A young Los Angeles webmaster made headlines two years ago when he was arrested for operating what the government called an anarchistic website called "Raise Your Fist."

Legal observers said Sherman Austin, 18, may have been entrapped by Terrorist Task Force agents in order to shut down his website. He was considered one of the first casualties of the Patriot Act, his residence raided and ransacked after issuance of a flimsy warrant filled with political accusations.

Sherman was tagged an enemy combatant for his website activities, which turned out to be nothing more than what the government thought to be a radical political agenda.

In this case, the government was able to use the overly broad Patriot Act to stop Austin's activities. Innocuous objects such as iced tea bottles and toy cars were described in legal proceedings by FBI agents as terrorist devices.

Added to the questionable charges was the fact that elementary bomb making information was posted on his server, although court documents show it was not posted by Sherman but by an Orange County teen who was not charged in the crime.

In order to get a stiff sentence, the Prosecution applied sentencing standards under the Terrorism Enhancement Clauses, meaning that Sherman was looking at a mandatory 20 year sentence unless he pled down to a 1 year sentence with three years probation.

Sherman is presently in Los Angeles on probation under terms forbidding him from using a cell phone, computer, or other digital devices. Needless to say, his website has been permanently removed from cyberspace.

Terms of his probation also forbid him from associating with any anarchist groups who the government maintains "advocate violence as a means of disrupting order and achieving social, economic and political change."

Critics said in light of the above travesty of justice the only thing that needs to be changed after reading Austin's case is the Patriot Act itself, not Austin's behavior.

FBI Tells 911 Rescue Worker to 'Shut Up' Over Finding Airplane "Black Boxes."

Two ground zero workers go public about finding cockpit and flight data recorders from Flight 11 and 175. Government claims 'black boxes' from the doomed 911 flights were never found. 911 Commission ignores information and fails to interview rescue workers.

4 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

A 911 rescue worker said this week he was told by FBI agents to "keep his mouth shut" about one of the "black boxes" found at ground zero, contradicting the official story that none of the flight and cockpit data recorders were ever recovered in the WTC wreckage.

Honorary firefighter Mike Bellone claims he was approached by unknown bureau agents a short time after he and his partner Nicholas DeMasi, a retired New York firefighter, found three of the four "black boxes" among the WTC rubble before January 2002.

The pair first claimed to find the data recorders in an August 2003 book entitled "Behind The Scene: Ground Zero" when DeMasi said the "black boxes" were found while he traversed ground zero in his ATV with three federal agents.

FBI and New York fire officials have denied ever finding the voice and data recorders.

Now Bellone claims agents were adamant about keeping the discovery a secret.

"They confronted me and told me to not to say anything," recalls Bellone, referring to one of three reddish-orange boxes with two white stripes he saw in the back of DeMasi's ATV. "I said give me a good reason? When they couldn't, I told them I wouldn't shut up about it.

"Why should I? I have nothing to hide and nothing to gain. It's the truth and Nick and I are sticking to our story as we always have."

Bellone said he and DeMasi were not the only 911 rescue workers to see the black boxes. He said there were several other witnesses and knows first hand they have been silenced by federal agents.

"I know two or three others saw what went down, but they are not talking," added Bellone. "They got to those guys after they talked to me. The only reason I can figure they are trying to hide the truth is that the government knows it screwed up and the recorders would prove it."

Asked to give names of the other witnesses, he said he wouldn't break a fellow-worker's confidence, privacy and firm desire to remain anonymous.

"I can tell you this, though, it was all very strange. I worked on the spaceship Columbia clean-up and you know when something important is found and when something is not" he recalled, saying the day the 'black boxes' were secretly carted away agents acted like "something big was going down."

Bellone also recalled never learning the FBI names as this type of personal contact and information wasn't exchanged between the civilian workers and government officials working side-by-side at ground zero.

"We worked together, but nobody knew their names," added Bellone. "They had on their FBI jackets, but I'm sure I could pick them out of a line-up or recognize their pictures."

The pair's bombshell accusations blows a big hole in the official story as well as the findings in the recent 911 Commission report. In Chapter 1, footnote 76, there is the sole but definitive reference to the airline "black boxes":

"The CVR's and the FDR's (voice and flight data recorders) from American 11 and United 175 were not found."

Asked if DeMasi and Bellone were questioned or subpoenaed, Commission spokesman Al Felzenberg said:

"I can't tell you now if he was is one of the 1,200 people we interviewed or if the book was one of the countless ones we researched. We explored every lead, but I will try to find out if we talked with him and get back to you"

However, Bellone said he and DeMasi never were contacted by Commission members or asked to appear regarding their statements even though the book was published well before the hearings commenced.

And it's amazing with a story of such importance that in over a year since the book surfaced almost nobody else has called them either. It's hard to imagine a story with such magnitude has not been thoroughly checked out unless the mainstream press purposely ignored it.

"I have been contacted by only one newspaper reporter from the Philadelphia Daily News. That's it," he said, referring to an October 2004 story by reporter William Bunch, recapping DeMasi's book statements as well as the usual official denials.

Those close to the 911 investigation said the recovery of the "black boxes" is important, holding vital clues and leading to the truth of what really happened on the morning of 911.

The cockpit voice recorder uses a pair of microphones to capture all cockpit sounds for the last 30 minutes of a doomed flight. The flight data recorder is also significant since it records altitude, heading and airspeed.

Both recorders are designed to withstand enormous impact and heat. National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) officials said they should have withstood the conditions at the WTC.

And finding the boxes after a crash seems to be standard procedure, according to the NTSB.

"It's extremely rare that we don't get the recorders back," said NTSB spokesman Ted Lopatkiewicz. "I can't remember another case which we did not recover the recorders."

Bellone is retired and was made an honorary New York fireman for his efforts after 911. DeMasi also recently retired from Engine Co. 261, nicknamed the "Flaming Skulls," after serving a brief stint after 911 with the fire department's marine unit.

Black Box Bombshell: NY Firefighter Claims FBI Recovered Data Recorders at Ground ZERO

Officials across the board deny ever finding the boxes and 911 Commission agrees, maybe ignoring the firefighter's and one other rescue worker's statements. 911 truth activists, however, hope this is the one revelation that finally breaks the Bush Administration's bubble of lies and cover-ups.

3 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

Three of the four airline "black boxes," officially never found in the WTC wreckage, are said to be under FBI control since January 2002, according to New York Fireman Nicholas DeMasi in a book entitled "Behind The Scenes: Ground Zero."

DeMasi's "bombshell accusation" blows government claims sky-high, including statements given to the 911 Commission. Buried in Chapter 1, footnote 76, of the Commission Report is the sole but definitive reference:

"The CVR's and FDR's (voice and flight data recorders) from American 11 and United 175 were not found."

Al Felzenberg, an official spokesman for the Commission said this week about DeMasi and the book published well-before the hearings:

"I can't tell you now if he is one of the 1,200 people we interviewed or if his book was one of the countless ones we researched. We explored every lead, but I will try to find out if we talked to him and get back to you."

DeMasi has remained unavailable for comment since his account appeared in the August 2003 book, featuring numerous heroic efforts and personal accounts of Ground Zero complete with over 200 colored photographs.

Since the book was dedicated to the memory of the 343 New York firefighters, 37 Port Authority officers and 23 NYPD officers who died on 911, it's hard to imagine he would have lied about something so critical in determining the truth behind why so many brave men and women perished.

It's also hard to imagine why a story of such magnitude and importance has remained "a well-kept secret" unless the mainstream media purposefully has ignored it.

Besides several internet accounts, the story has surfaced in only one mainstream publication, an October 2004 edition of the Philadelphia Daily News. The story, by reporter William Bunch, essentially recaps DeMasi's book statements along with the usual official denials, including those by New York fire and FBI spokesmen.

Almost two months later, bureau and fire officials again this week have denied finding any trace of the black boxes.

However, what should have been done long ago has not been:

What's needed is a thorough investigation of any possible on or off-the-scene witnesses, including other firefighters, rescue workers, civilians, FBI officials, 911 Commissioners and FAA authorities who may have vital information to add.

Potential sources up until now have virtually been left in the dark, left talking to themselves by the mainstream media seemingly content with echoing government denials and refusing to dedicate necessary resources to "pound home" the facts on a daily basis.

Thus far DeMasi's claim has been verified by another book contributor and Honorary Firefighter Michael Bellone, who claims he saw a reddish-orange device with white stripes in the back of DeMasi's ATV used during the 911 clean-up.

Internal National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) flight recorder photos reveal devices of the same color with two white stripes exactly like Bellone described, seemingly verifying his eye witness account.

Bellone said he was on the scene when DeMasi and three FBI agents found one of the boxes but said the other two were uncovered in different locations, adding the agents left the scene with all three boxes.

On page 108 of the book, referring to a routine clean-up assignment, DeMasi said:

"At one point I was assigned to take federal agents around the site to search for the black boxes from the planes. We were getting ready to go out and my ATV was parked at the top of the stairs at the Brooks Brothers entrance.

"We loaded up about a million dollars worth of equipment and strapped it into the ATV. When we go in to take off, one of the agents accidentally pushed me forward. The ATV was already in reverse. We went down the stairs in reverse. Fortunately everything was okay. There was a total of four black boxes. We found three."

And finding the boxes appears to be standard procedure when it comes to past airplane crashes, according to Ted Lopatkiewicz, a spokesman for the NTSB:

"It's extremely rare that we don't get the recorders back. I can't recall another case in which we did not recover the recorders."

With both DeMasi and the NTSB's ammunition in their arsenal, this could be the one big revelation needed for those in the battle weary 911 truth movement, a group looking for a way to sway popular opinion in their direction.

And they hope this is the straw that breaks the camel's back or the one chink in the king's armor, finally forcing the Bush Administration to come clean.

The 911 truth movement has compiled a laundry list of supposed Administration cover-ups, lies and inconsistencies pointing to a 911 cover-up in order to justify wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

The "black boxes," though, could be the one that finally bursts the bubble, activists said.

At least, they add, Bush himself needs to go public and claim responsibility and accountability. If he doesn't, they said it's just one more red flag showing the President is purposefully concealing prior knowledge or active participation in the events surrounding 911.

Brian Sacks and Nicholas Levis, two 911truth movement representatives, are passing out free copies of DeMasi's book and encouraging journalists to start investigating the entire story.

Although DeMasi's personal account was contained within the book along with many others, it was actually written by Gail Swanson with help from Bellone and retired fireman Robert Barret.

"If DeMasi's story is true, then there has to be others at Ground Zero who may have witnessed the recovery of the black boxes, " said Sacks and Levis. "There may even be pictures or video of the recovery since FEMA and OSHA monitored the entire site.

"A trail demonstrating the truth of his statements would almost certainly exist, for example, the FBI agents who supposedly took the boxes need to testify. However, the question remains: Will enough journalists and public officials be willing to pursue this story, wherever it leads, until the truth is finally revealed?"

The importance of the black boxes is significant, each airplane having a cockpit voice recorder and a flight data recorder located in the tail of the plane.

A 2002 CBS news report said concerning 911:

"The efforts to better understand the day (911) isn't being made so easy by the fact that the voice data recorders aboard the two hijacked jetliners that hit the towers haven't been recovered. The four devices and the clues they would hold have failed to turn-up so far in the 1.25 million tons of steel, concrete and other material taken from Ground Zero."

The cockpit voice recorder uses a pair of microphones to capture all sounds of the cockpit for at least the last 30 minutes of a crashing aircraft. Concerning 911, the recorder should have copied any conversations and radio transmissions concerning what really happened to the flight crew, the hijackers and possibly even the passengers.

The flight data recorder is also significant since it records heading, altitude and airspeed. Both recorders are designed to withstand enormous impact and force of at least 3400 Gs and fires of 1,100 degrees Celsius. Both these criteria were not exceeded using official estimates made at the WTC.

Also, these recorders are designed to transmit "loud pinging or ringing noises" so that they can even be located in crashes occurring over large bodies of water.

DeMasi, who at the time of 911 was assigned to Engine Company 261 in Queens, is now working in the fire department's marine unit.

The Strange Collapse of Building 7 Still Remains a 911 Mystery
Proprietor Larry Silverstein says "pull the plug" but 911 Commission never fully investigates. FEMA again whisks away evidence before "prying eyes" have chance to view hard evidence. Critics claim evidence taken to hide sensitive information behind 911 government conspiracy plot.

2 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

Although the official story about the collapse of the WTC is filled with errors, the often-ignored fall of nearby Building 7 is even more troubling.

It is generally overlooked because flimsy government theories used to dismiss the Twin Towers collapse cannot explain away the demise of Building 7 without sounding completely ridiculous.

In fact, there has never been an official explanation why the 47-story steel high-rise fell.

Located more than a football field away (355 feet) from the South Tower and farther from the North, it collapsed about 8 hours later at approximately 5:20pm even though it was not struck by one of the hijacked planes and only small fires burned on the 7th and 12th floors from cross-over debris.

There are other suspicious facts:

For unknown reasons, why did the sprinkler system suddenly fail?

Why did the building collapse when Buildings 4 and 5 stood tall after much larger fires raged all day long and were put under control?

Why did it collapse when the other two buildings were much closer in proximity to the WTC?

Why? The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) reports it could have occurred from large amounts of diesel fuel stored in the basement, but the sketchy report also claims this hypothesis "has only a low probability of occurrence."

Why? Independent investigators point directly to a controlled demolition.

After looking at both, it seems the demolition conclusion is far more credible since the collapse began at the bedrock with much of the pulverized concrete found at the building's base.

Further, the interior of the building collapsed first, followed by the inward implosion of the outside walls, indicating the placement of pre-arranged explosives.

Again, like occurred with the WTC steel columns and debris, it was shipped overseas by FEMA, sold for recycling and quickly put out of sight before investigators had a chance to inspect any hard evidence.

In the case of Building 7, however, officials weren't able to conveniently use the excuse for the quick removal used at the WTC since there was no need to search for survivors. There were no survivors and no loss of life because the building had already been completely evacuated hours before the collapse.

Even more puzzling are statements from a September 2002 PBS documentary featuring Larry Silverstein, the WTC and Building 7's lessor. He can be heard saying to a fire department commander to "pull it" most likely referring to a controlled explosion. Coincidentally, immediately after he spoke, the building collapsed in such a manner.

In all fairness, it is not completely clear what Silverstein meant by "pull it," but there is no doubt what control demolition experts mean by that statement. They mean pull the outside walls in through timed implosions.

Taking into consideration Silverstein also received $7 billion in insurance money from the losses at the WTC complex, it would seem reasonable for the 911 Commission to then ask him tough questions, especially regarding Building 7.

However, they never did.

Silverstein, a well-connected New York real estate investor, won a coveted 99-year lease on the WTC from the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey less than two months prior to 911.

He received the lease worth an estimated $8 billion for a mere $3.2 billion, some observers saying because he had immense influence over politicians and government bureaucrats who owed him numerous favors.

Tenants in Building 7 on the morning of 911 reads like a list of government agencies involved in a John Clancy novel of intrigue and espionage, including the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), the Department of Defense (DOD), the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and the New York Office of Emergency Management (OEM).

Strangely, the department heads made very little effort and remained publicly silent about investigating exactly why their agency offices were destroyed.

Critics contend, although little proof exists, that one of the reasons was to make sure sensitive information was destroyed, which would have implicated high-ranking officials to a 911 conspiracy plot.

More outspoken critics even suggest Building 7 acted as "underground command headquarters" where the hijacked airplanes were remote controlled into their targets instead of being flown by the 19 alleged hijackers.

Critics Claim Officials Obstructed Justice and Destroyed Vital Evidence in WTC Investigation

Why did FEMA quickly ship steel out before prying eyes could look in? Independent 911 investigators claim structural steel was hurriedly shipped overseas and sold for recycling in order to cover-up hard evidence of government involvement in a controlled demolition of the Twin Towers. But the 911 Commission turned a deaf ear to this theory, essentially "rubber stamping" the official story that burning jet fuel caused the collapse of the towers.

1 Dec 2004

By Greg Szymanski

The government remains steadfast in its claim burning jet fuel caused the Twin Towers to collapse like a "house of cards" even though mounting evidence makes it clear that position makes little sense.

Critics, angered by the improbable theory, claim the official story is flimsy, unsupported by the facts and as far-fetched as a forest fire in the middle of the Mojave Desert.

Instead of burning jet fuel, independent investigators said the towers fell in a matter of seconds - within its own footprints - by a well planned, controlled demolition.

However, the 911 Commission's sees it differently, essentially "rubber stamping " the official story. Angry critics want the Commission to reopen hearings, but silently claim it will do little good.

But if you really want to raise eyebrows, mention the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and it's like throwing a can of gasoline on the flames to put out the fire.

Instead of coming to the rescue, critics suggest FEMA acted like it owned Ground Zero, controlling the clean-up, concealing the debris and quickly shipping the structural steel overseas for recycling before it could have been used as evidence.

To add more fuel to the fire, a recent federal lawsuit has put FEMA's actions under scrutiny by alleging obstruction of justice and destruction of evidence related to a mass murder investigation.

The question must then be asked:

If officials were really serious about getting at the truth behind the collapse, why did they control, conceal and hide critical evidence in such a methodical fashion?

The following is a compilation of facts from various experts who try to explain how the towers fell:

The North Tower (NT) was first hit at 8:46am and collapsed 1 hour and 45 minutes later at 10:28am. The South Tower (ST) was hit at 9:03am but actually fell first, 56 minutes later at 9:59am.

Why did the ST fall 29 minutes before the other one if it was hit last? Why did it actually fall quicker than its twin if it was struck by the airplane at an oblique angle instead of a direct hit like occurred to the NT?

Before moving on, it's a scientific fact that jet fuel is capable of burning up to a maximum of 1,600 to 1,700 degrees Fahrenheit. To melt steel, however, a temperature of 2,770 degrees is needed.

How then could jet fuel be the cause?

How could the ST collapse first when the fire there was actually smaller than the one burning in the other building?

How could it collapse when most of the jet fuel burned outside the ST as evidenced by the huge orange fireball shown in videos of the strike?

How could both structures collapse when previously to 911 not a single other high-rise structure had fallen solely due to fire?

Critics claim the answer is a controlled detonation of explosives, strategically placed at all levels of the towers.

And even FEMA's own internal report strengthens this claim when it stated:

"The structural density of the towers was very complex and substantially more redundant than typically found in most high rise buildings. The quality of steel used in the buildings exceeded standard requirements and after the initial impact, the towers were determined stable."

As of June 2002, FEMA further reported the "collapse remained undetermined" but stopped short of discrediting or even questioning the official jet fuel theory.

Further, experts claim, even if the so-called government "pancake theory" was true, referring to the argument that the towers collapsed in its tracks due to enormous weight, the buildings would have only fallen as far as the 20th or 30th floors since the central steel columns there would have been strong enough to keep the bottom portion from falling.

Considering all the above, experts claim the only other alternative is explosives. To further strength their case, they add:

The unusual sequence of the collapse also suggests explosives. Since the fires in the ST were actually going out more quickly than in the NT, they claim the ST had to be demolished first in order to give some semblance of credibility to the jet fuel theory.

More astonishingly is the fact that over 100,000 tons of concrete in each tower was quickly reduced to nothing more than dust and powder, indicating explosive forces not burning jet fuel.

Watching the towers collapse, it becomes even more clear that burning jet fuel was incapable of pulverizing concrete so as to toss debris more than 200 feet outward from the windows, creating dust clouds more than three-times the size of the width of the towers themselves.

Molten steel was found in the lower-basements at the bedrock, indicating high-point flames of more than 2,770 degrees Fahrenheit, a level of heat unattainable by solely burning jet fuel.

Seismic readings taken 20 miles away at the Columbia University Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory also indicate timed explosions took place the morning of 911. Seismic measurements recorded that morning indicate a 2.1 and a 2.3 jolts were registered respectively at the exact time each tower fell.

Coincidence?

Critics claim: "Impossible!"

DISTURBING COVER-UP QUESTIONS REMAIN

Why was all the salvageable debris and steel, including trusses, beams and columns quickly sold to foreign countries for recycling?

Why would officials be so reckless when the New York Times even reported "now definitive answers will never be known."

Why would officials get rid of vital evidence that could have help determine the real plans and motives of the alleged 19 hijackers?

Why would officials obstruct justice when even the most novice investigator is trained not to tamper with a routine crime scene let alone the mass murder of thousands of people?

If you believe there needs to be truthful answers given to any of the above questions, join the growing numbers of Americans who want to make President Bush and others accountable for what really happened on 911.

For a thorough scientific and structural analysis of how the towers fell, read Eric Hufschmid's revealing book entitled "Painful Questions: An Analysis of the September 11th Attacks."

Disturbiing Timeline Shows F-15's Should Have Intercepted Flights 11 and 175 Before Striking Towers

NORAD claims jets didn't have time; FAA claims otherwise. Critics say someone is lying and should be held accountable as 911 Commission ignores everybody.

30 Nov 2004

By Greg Szymanski

Evidence clearly shows air defense standard operating procedures were ignored on 911, allowing jetliners a "free ride" smack dab into the Twin Towers.

What's more disturbing is for three years officials at the Federal Aviation Association (FAA) and the North American Aerospace Command Defense (NORAD) have lied about why military fighter planes weren't able to intercept the hijacked planes even though they had plenty of time.

This analysis doesn't only come from uninformed conspiracy theorists but also from Sen. Mark Dayton (D-Minn.) in July statements made on the Senate floor and before the 911 Commission.

This analysis also comes from numerous aviation experts, both civilian and military, who dedicated countless hours studying second-by-second 911 flight patterns and the military's late response to an obvious national emergency.

However, everybody might as well have been "whistling in the wind" since nobody on Capital Hill or the Pentagon ever listened. In fact, as we speak, the best explanation given by Gen. Richard Myers, the chairman of the Joint Chief of Staff, is that everybody simply "goofed."

This "goofy" explanation has been accepted by the 911 Commission and seems to have been naively accepted by the mainstream media, who has dedicated little time and effort at trying to pierce the veil of a flimsy government explanation.

The following is the actual timeline of events involving Flight 11 and Flight 175 on the morning of 911. Judge for yourself whether Gen. Myers explanation is sufficient or whether officials are putting up a smokescreen to hide what really happened?

911 TIMELINE AND OFFICIAL STORY

At 8:14am, 15 minutes after leaving Boston's Logan Airport, American Airlines Flight 11 failed on repeated occasions to respond to FAA ground control. Only six minutes later at 8:22am, known to be well off-course, a flight attendant reported the aircraft hijacked.

Seven minutes later, at 8:28am, ground control was well aware the plane was headed to New York City. Eventually it crashed into the North Tower of the WTC at 8:48am, the collision occurring 32 minutes after Flight 11 had been presumed hijacked and 25 minutes after it was definitely known to be taken.

If standard FAA operating procedures had been followed, Flight 11 should have been intercepted by F-15 fighter planes within 10 minutes or, giving the military the benefit of the doubt, no later than 8:30am.

If FAA regulations had been properly followed, ground control would have contacted NORAD at 8:14am when radio contact had been lost with Flight 11. In fact, ground controllers have testified they repeatedly tried to contact NORAD, but for some reason could not make radio contact

In response, NORAD never could explain why, but Gen. Myers finally said first notification came at 8:40am. This obvious contradiction between the FAA and NORAD has never been fully explained or investigated.

Without knowing the truth, we must assume if ground control signals had been received at 8:14am like the FAA claims, NORAD should have immediately scrambled jets from the nearest airport. F-15s should then have intercepted Flight 11 with time to spare, arriving a full 16 minutes before it crashed into the North Tower. Why didn't they?

It should be noted that normally when a commercial airliner goes off course by even 2 miles, ground control is instructed to notify NORAD of a pending emergency. This standard FAA operating procedure should verify that NORAD was notified since Flight 11 was way more than two miles off-course unless, of course, there existed gross negligence on the part of ground control. If so, why haven't any ground controllers been fired or, at the least, reprimanded publicly?

Also, it must be considered normal operating procedure for a fighter jet to first escort an off-course plane and then warn it of a possible missile strike. Official records indicate off-course airplanes are intercepted and escorted on average of 100 times per year.

Why then on the morning of Sept. 11, in one of the most highly protected and sensitive sectors of American airspace, wasn't Flight 11 intercepted? Was it a "goof-up" like Gen. Myers said or was NORAD ordered on "stand down" and purposefully not responding to FAA warnings?

According to the official story, NORAD wasn't notified until 8:40am, only six minutes before the North Tower was hit, making it impossible for any fighter jet to arrive in time to intercept Flight 11. But if NORAD responded properly at 8:14am, fighter jets should have arrived no later than 8:30am, 16 minutes prior to impact. Military experts confirm this could have been accomplished in the following manner:

Normally, F-15s go from take-off to 2,900 feet in 2.5 minutes and then fly at 1,850 (nmph). Timing the distance from the nearest airport, experts verify jets should have intercepted Flight 11 about 22 minutes before impact or, at the very least, at 8:30am, 16 minutes prior to impact.

However, what about Flight 175, which struck the South Tower at 9:03am?

While the hijacking of Flight 11 was already in progress, American Airlines Flight 175 left Boston at 8:14am. Contact was lost by ground control at 8:42am, as the plane veered drastically off-course.

Records show NORAD was notified at 8:43am, three minutes before Flight 11 crashed into the North Tower. Using the same flight speed and distance as stated above and giving NORAD the benefit of a late 8:40am "scramble notification," F-15's still should have arrived no later than 8:53am, 10 minutes before Flight 175 plowed into the South Tower.

Why didn't they? Further if NORAD responded at 8:14am to the first plane, fighter jets should have been ready and waiting for the second plane, having been called into action and in the vicinity 49 minutes before the South Tower was hit.

Furthermore, why were the people in the South Tower repeatedly told not to evacuate the building, when the North Tower had already been hit and authorities were aware that Flight 175 was well off course and heading to New York 17 minutes before impact?

DISTURBING QUESTIONS

Why have either FAA or NORAD officials ever been held accountable for the failure to respond to the hijackings of Flight 11 and 175?

Why or who prevented standard operating procedures for emergency response not to be followed?

Did someone deliberately order a "stand-down" of NORAD defense systems or was it a mix-up like Gen Myers claims?

No official explanation has been given to answer these questions and what is even more disturbing, the 911 Commission has failed to ask the tough questions in order to find out what really happened on the morning of Sept. 11.

If they won't answer it, then ask yourself:

What really happened on the 911?

If a preponderance of the above evidence leads you to believe government officials are lying or withholding the truth, then demand answers by joining the millions who now believe your government allowed 911 to take place in order to justify wars in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Santa Barbara Multi-Millionaire spearheads 911 Truth Movement

A passionate philanthropist with an eye for the truth, has put "his money where is mouth is" concerning government complicity in the events surrounding the terrorist attacks. Saying the Bush Administration has lied, Jimmy Walter has led the petition drive to have New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer begin a criminal investigation in what he calls a massive government conspiracy and cover-up behind 911.

29 Nov 2004

By Greg Szymanski

His house sits high on a mountaintop overlooking the Pacific Ocean. It's a perfect place to spend the day chatting with the gardener or talking with the neighbor about the latest stock market trends.

It's a perfect place to endlessly stare out at the ocean through the plate glass window while occasionally checking the monthly bank statement for how much interest accrued.

It's a rich man's house, surrounded by many just like it in a hilltop Santa Barbara neighborhood with a Bush and Cheney smell in the air.

But that Republican aroma isn't allowed on Jimmy Walter's property. It isn't allowed since Jimmy Walter is to George W. Bush as blood is to water. It isn't allowed since Walter and the Republican Party have about as much in common as God and the Devil.

And when asked to discuss the Bush Administration agenda, it's obvious he thinks the "Devil's in the details."

"Our only hope is impeachment or if not, force Bush to resign under pressure for all the crimes he has committed," said Walter, a long time political and social activist/multi millionaire.

He has used his wealth over the years to spearhead such movements as prison reform in Florida, solutions for world hunger, increased job growth and, most recently, the ever-growing 911 truth movement.

Tagged by some in media as the "loon tycoon," Walter has spent over $3.5 million in a media advertising blitz to spread the word that the Bush Administration had prior knowledge or actively planned the 911 terrorist attacks to justify wars in Afghanistan and Iraq.

As unbelievable as it sounds, Walter said a close look at the facts and evidence gathered makes the "unbelievable suddenly become all too real." He now believes members inside and out of the Bush Administration have literally "gotten away with murder."

"When I first saw the devastation on television and later listened to the official government story about Osama and the 19 hijackers with box cutters, I too believed it like everybody else," said Walter, adding it didn't take long before he began having doubts.

Although he remained neutral about the events of 911 while America prepared for the Iraq invasion, he strongly disagreed about the premise behind the war based on weapons of mass destruction.

Upset by the mainstream media's wholesale acceptance of WMD's, he launched his first media blitz, calling for the ouster of Colin Powell and others while spending $1.5 million for full page ads in such notable papers as the New York Times, New York Daily News and the Wall Street Journal.

At a time when popular opinion was strongly on the side of the Bush Administration, Walter's ads were accusing officials of lying and exaggerating the truth in order to justify war to gain control of vital oil supplies in a diminished world market.

"I tried to expose the truth before it was popular and now everyone is in agreement that there were no WMD's in Iraq," said Walter, pointing out the media has turned a deaf ear to one of the most important stories in American history. "History will one day prove us right about the government's involvement in 911. When it does, I just want to be remembered as someone who stood up for what was right and just against a government who got it all wrong."

After the WMD issue ran its course and Walter was eventually proved right, he turned his finances and his complete attention to the struggling 911 truth movement championed on the internet by a small group considered by outsiders as nothing but partisan conspiracy theorists.

"In July, after reading the book "Painful Questions" about the controlled demolition of the towers, I had an awakening," pronounced Walter, as he began to pinpoint why he so strongly believes there exists a massive conspiracy and government cover-up regarding 911. "If you put all the hundreds of pieces of the puzzle together about that unforgettable morning, I am 110% sure the government planned the attacks with CIA, FBI and military assistance.

"It was a masterful plan both on a military and psychological level, designed to bring about the maximum amount of fear by the sheer timing of the crashes. First the North Tower, then later the South Tower while all the TV cameras were poised and ready, Then finally the Pentagon...what a display!

"They had planned this event for a long time and the neo-cons knew the American people would never buy into their future war plans unless there was some catastrophic event to create a high level of fear and vulnerability.

"It worked. It is still working, but I feel compelled again to force the truth to be told. More and more people are beginning to put the pieces together and see that 911 was an inside job and could not have happened like President Bush would like us all to believe."

In order to stimulate public awareness in a movement out manned and under funded, Walker again turned to a media blitz. His full page ads denouncing the Bush Administration for lying to American people about 911, have again appeared in many of the top market daily newspapers.

He also recently appeared on CNN's Anderson Cooper 360 show as well as an appearance on Fox with Geraldo Rivera.

"They pretty well cut me off before I could adequately explain my position, especially on Fox, but it was better than nothing," said Walter about his TV experience. "I basically think the media has been grossly negligent and has let down the American people by not dedicating enough resources and manpower to one of the most important stories in American history. When I saw the media basically parroting the government story about 911, I felt obligated to put my money to work in order to get at the real truth."

Although he admits it's been a "tough road," Walter is pushing forward stronger than ever. He recently spearheaded and helped fund a formal 37 page Petition signed and presented on Oct. 22 to New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer. The petition presents a compelling case, asking Spitzer to open a criminal investigation into the Bush Administration regarding the events of 911.

At present, a spokesman for Spitzer said a full evaluation of the allegations is underway, but no decision to bring charges has yet been made.

"We are still gathering signatures and evidence in this on going effort to bring the culprits in government to justice," said Walter, expressing hope that Spitzer will empanel a grand jury to begin the wheels of justice moving.

Besides the petition movement, Walter has publicly offered up to a $100,000 prize to anyone who can adequately support the government's version of 911. He is in the process of working out the details for a national contest to be held among college engineering, students, the first prize going to the student who can substantiate the government's story.

At present, the legal and technical details are being worked out for a planned summer contest promotion to culminate with a large media event in New York.

Since Walter's enthusiasm has been matched by his monetary contributions, it is appropriate to look at exactly what the government has spent on getting at the truth behind the attacks.

"Why have they only spent $600,000 investigating the WTC collapse versus $40 million spent on Clinton's sex life," he adds. "The entire 911 Commission only spent $15 million while all expenditures on Clinton's indiscretions exceeded $65 million. Now just ask yourself, does that add up? If the government was serious at getting at the truth, the Bush Administration would have put its money where its mouth was like I have."

In order to gain momentum for his petition handed to the New York Attorney General, Walter has begun a website at www.reopen911.org. There you can find his open letter to concerned Americans, listing numerous documented reasons why the government is lying about 911.

"One thing for certain is that the cold hard facts surrounding the collapse of the towers and the Pentagon attack prove our government is not telling us the whole truth," Walter said. "We recently commissioned a Zogby Poll that reported 66% of New Yorkers wanted the 911 investigation reopened. Moreover, 49% thought the VIP's in government knew about it and did nothing."

Walter said his main goal is to force the reopening of the 911 Commission and to have the New York Attorney General begin a criminal investigation.

Asked if he felt his money was well spent, he added: "The truth will one day be told and anytime money is spent for truthful purposes, it is money well spent."

Allegations of Government Complicity in 911 Have Crept into the Federal Halls of Justice

Two suits pending, one dismissed and headed for appeal as litigation heats up in 911 government conspiracy plot. A citizens' petition is also on the desk of NY Attorney General to investigate criminal allegations against the Bush Administration.

29 Nov 2004

By Greg Szymanski

Three federal lawsuits are pending and criminal charges are being considered by New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer to determine if President Bush and others in and out of government were complicit or had prior knowledge of the 911 terrorist attacks.

In the beginning, conspiracy theorists were relegated to the internet, but as evidence mounted, allegations of government involvement crept into the halls of justice.

Thus far, however, the federal cases have met stiff opposition from Republican judges or government lawyers who have thrown up a "national security blanket" to block pre-trial discovery.

PETITION SEEKS CRIMINAL CHARGES

Besides the lawsuits, a formal 27- page petition was handed on Oct. 28 to Spitzer, asking the state of New York to investigate possible criminal charges against President Bush and others regarding the mass murders on 911. At present, the allegations are under investigation and no decision has been made to pursue charges.

Supporters of the petition, signed by some 911 victims and others, cite a massive conspiracy and government cover-up, saying the official story lacks credibility and is seriously flawed.

A copy of the entire petition and other background information can be located at www.justicefor911.org.

RODRIGUEZ V. BUSH, ET AL

The most recent lawsuit was filed by attorney Phillip Berg on Oct. 28 in a Philadelphia federal court on behalf of a maintenance worker on duty at the WTC on the morning of 911.

The 237 page civil complaint, filed under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), claims President Bush and 55 others in and out of government engaged in racketeering activity in violation 18 U.S.C. Section 1962c.

The complaint seeks relief for plaintiff William Rodriguez based on 13 counts, including Misprision of a Felony, Misprision of Treason, relief under the Anti-Terrorism Act, relief under the War Crimes Act and relief for Crimes Against Humanity.

Berg admits that this case will "shock and offend" many Americans, but he urges critics to first read the compelling allegations contained in the RICO complaint posted at www.911forthetruth.com.

A former Deputy Attorney General of Pennsylvania for 8 years and long-time civil rights activist, Berg previously filed a federal suit against Bush and his cronies on behalf of 911 widow, Ellen Mariani. Mariani has recently dropped her suit citing health concerns.

CLASS ACTION SUIT FILED AGAINST BUSH AND OTHERS BY 14 FAMILIES WHO LOST LOVED ONES ON 911

Another federal lawsuit has been filed in 2002 by San Francisco attorney Stanley Hilton seeking $7 billion in damages from the Bush Administration by more than 400 victims of 911.

The case is presently stalled in the pre-trial discovery stage as government attorneys are refusing to turn over documentation, hiding behind what Hilton calls a phony blanket of national security.

"We have some compelling testimony from the former wife of one of the hijackers that incriminates the CIA and FBI with involvement in 911, said Hilton, a former Republican advisor and counselor to Sen. Bob Dole. "National security is just a word. What does it really mean especially when we are accusing the very same individuals of sabotaging the national security of this country to pursue their own political agenda."

To read more about the lawsuit, go to www.prisonplanet.com to get a transcript of a March 2003 radio interview with Hilton and alternative broadcaster Alex Jones.

FBI TRANSLATOR'S WHISTLEBLOWER LAWSUIT

Sibel Edmonds, a translator who worked at the FBI's top language division two years ago "blew the whistle" in a federal lawsuit, claiming officials ignored highly sensitive information heard on wiretaps which would have tipped-off the terrorist plans prior to 911.

Edmonds was fired after reporting her concerns to FBI officials. Although she told her story behind closed doors to Congress, the Justice Department and the 911 Commission, nothing has been done to investigate her allegations.

Recently her federal lawsuit was dismissed by Judge Reggie Walton, a Bush appointee, after orders were sent down from former Attorney General John Ashcroft to have the case dismissed based on national security concerns.

In what some legal analysts call a shocking move, Judge Walton dismissed her case on July 6 without even listening to Edmonds side of the story. The case was dismissed "ex parte" after only allowing government attorneys to present their case in a closed-door session with Judge Walton without even having attorneys for Edmonds present.

Legal analysts claim this is a blatant example of judicial indiscretion without concern for Edmonds' due process Constitutional rights.

Even more disturbing and suspecting that Edmonds may seek relief in Congress, Judge Walton placed a gag order on the Legislature, prohibiting any members from discussing allegations made in Edmonds whistle blower lawsuit.

For a copy of a letter sent to the Chairman of the 911 Commission by Edmonds go to www.911truth.org and search out her story.

Federal Lawsuit Calls Attention to the "Darkside" of FEMA

Hidden bunkers and unconstitutional powers are mandated through little known Executive Orders without Congressional oversight, giving FEMA totalitarian control over the citizenry. As quickly as flicking a light switch, the President can place the country in the hands of FEMA, leaving citizens without constitutional protection. These claims are included in a recently filed federal lawsuit, accusing President Bush and others of using FEMA to obstruct justice after 911.

24 Nov 2004

By Greg Szymanski

President Bush and others are accused of obstructing justice in a recent federal lawsuit by using the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) to whisk away evidence from Ground Zero before independent investigators had a chance to analyze it.

Allegations in the RICO lawsuit, filed Oct. 22, in a Philadelphia federal court, claim structural steel and rubble from the destroyed buildings were kept under FEMA's exclusive control, quickly removed from the site and shipped to China with exceptional haste.

Openly voicing their opinions on the internet and known by members of the 911 Commission, independent investigators remain angered and shocked by FEMA's actions, since many still want to examine the structural steel columns in order to categorically prove exactly what caused the massive buildings to fall so rapidly.

Critics claim a cover-up is behind FEMA's swift removal of evidence in an effort to hide proof that a controlled demolition brought down the buildings, not burning jet fuel as said by the government.

"Called by its right name, this was a destruction of evidence, an obstruction of justice, brazenly carried out in plain view," said attorney Phillip Berg in his lawsuit, filed on behalf of a maintenance worker on duty the morning of 911. "This evidence was taken away to cover-up the truth of how the buildings came down and is just more proof that the government had prior knowledge of the events surrounding 911 or actively had a hand in planning it in order to justify wars in Afghanistan and Iraq."

In an attempt to show a massive government conspiracy, Berg's 237 page complaint documents a web of clandestine government affairs, including financial ties to the suspected hijackers, dating back to the Oklahoma City bombing, as well as a shadow 'black-op government' within FEMA funded by drug trafficking and gun running.

Although the public view of FEMA is that of a lethargic agency performing disaster relief, its main purpose has been hidden from the American people. Shockingly, its main purpose was hidden from Congress until 1975 when it finally learned that a 'shadow government' was operating in a fortified bunker located in Mount Weather Virginia that still exists today.

This bunker is essentially a 'hidden White House' capable of running the country in the event of martial law due to either domestic violence or foreign aggression. More troubling, it was found that secret dossiers were kept on computers containing the names of hundreds of thousands of Americans who may pose a threat to what was called "domestic tranquility."

For many years, FEMA denied the existence of its primary bunker in Mount Weather but even after admitting its existence, FEMA refused to disclose its purpose at Congressional hearings held in 1975.

"I am not at liberty to describe precisely what is the role of the mission and the capability that we have at Mount Weather or at any of our other bunker locations throughout the United States," said retired Air Force General Leslie Bray, former director of the Federal Prepared Agency, FEMA's predecessor.

Since Gen. Bray's 1975 comments, Congress delved into irregularities within FEMA after Hurricane Andrew, finding that only 6% of its budget is actually used for disaster relief, while the remainder goes to fund this "black-op shadow government." Government accounts estimate FEMA spends billions on these sordid affairs, much of the money being hidden expenditures within loosely worded appropriation bills.

Congress learned that hidden FEMA monies has been used over the years - which still goes in accelerated fashion under the Bush Administration - to subsidize the building of secret bunkers located throughout the United States, the purpose and location of which remains a mystery cloaked under the blanket of national security.

Although much about the hundreds of bunkers constructed remains a mystery, military information leaks indicate they are large enough and fully capable of acting as domestic detention centers.

Critics complain that it is long overdue to expose FEMA for what it really is and statements within Berg's lawsuit attempts to do so:

" FEMA is nothing more than an unconstitutional "parallel government" created without Congressional authority and by Executive Order to bypass Constitutional protections.

FEMA's real mission is to wait, prepare and then take over control when some situation, at the discretion of those executives in charge, is considered serious enough to declare martial law and turn the United States into a police state."

Further, Berg poses the troubling question that the time may be fast approaching due to recent events hyping war and terrorism triggered by 911. The lawsuit warns the Bush Administration can at its discretion "flick a switch" by Executive Order and institute martial law, FEMA being fully prepared to carry out control of the citizenry free from constitutional protections.

Some of the Executive Orders passed into law since the Nixon Administration, granting FEMA unconstitutional powers include:

To take over all modes of transportation and control highways and seaports (EO 10990).

To seize and control the communications media (EO10095).

To take over all electrical power, gas, petroleum, fuels and minerals (EO 10998).

To take over all food resources and farms (EO10998).

To mobilize citizens into work brigades under government supervision (EO) 11000).

To take over railroads, inland waterways and public storage facilities (EO 11005).

To put all Executive Orders into effect in times of increased international tensions and economic or financial crisis through FEMA.

To develop plans to establish control over the mechanisms of production and distribution, energy resources, wages, salaries, credit and the flow of money in U.S. financial institutions in any undefined national emergency. (EO 11921). This EO further provides when the President declares a state of emergency, Congress cannot review the action for six months.

Further, General Frank Salzedo, chief of FEMA's civil security division in the 80s, went on record stating he saw FEMA's role as including the denial of "access to U.S. opinion" to "dissident groups" in times of crisis virtually suspending First Amendment rights whenever the President declares a state of emergency, which could include suppression of domestic dissent.

The Berg lawsuit warns that the present "war on terror" can be used as a pretext for draconian powers only imagined in science fiction books or used by the former Nazi regime in pre World War II Germany.

To emphasize how close we are to a FEMA takeover, a March 16, 2003 Gannett News Service article reported that Sid Caspersen, director of the New Jersey office of counter-terrorism, stated: "If the nation escalates to 'red alert' which is the highest color-coded readiness against terror, you will be assumed by authorities to be the enemy if you so much as venture outside your home.

"A red alert would also tear away virtually all personal freedoms to move about or associate. You literally are staying at home, unless you are required to be out."

Besides hidden government expenditures, text in the Berg complaint cites the dirty hands within FEMA stretch all the way back to 1980 when Army Colonel Edward P. Cutolo tried to blow the whistle, but instead met an untimely death in a one-car accident in Skullthorpe England.

Col. Cutolo, however, left behind an affidavit, contained as Exhibit D in the lawsuit, which accuses FEMA of receiving illegal funds for 'black op purposes' generated from drug smuggling in Columbia and Panama in what was secretly known as "Operation Watchtower."

His affidavit goes on to state that agents associated with "Operation Watchtower" were knowingly protected by CIA Director Stansfield Turner and George H. W. Bush, along with Washington military authorities, all secretly approving the drug trafficking operation in order to fund FEMA.

Former President Bush and other high-ranking Bush II Administration members are also included as defendants in the Berg federal lawsuit.

Explosives Expert 'Flip-Flops' on how Twin Towers Fell

Critics claim government officials may have coerced him in changing his mind. The Doctor of Physics from New Mexico Tech refuses to comment. His statements are the part of a recently filed federal lawsuit claiming President Bush and 54 others were complicit or had prior knowledge of the events surrounding 911.

23 Nov 2004

By Greg Szymanski

The day after 911, a Doctor of Physics and well-known explosives expert, claimed the Twin Towers fell from a controlled demolition instead of burning jet fuel as advanced in the official government story.

Dr. Van D. Romero, vice president for Research and Development at New Mexico Tech, first made his expert opinion known in an Albuquerque Journal news article days after 911. He later recanted, giving no apparent reason why.

Dr. Romero's flip-flop, harmless at the time, now lies at the heart of an ongoing controversy between government officials and critics who are both trying to use his opinions to gain credibility for their differing theories. The government claims only burning jet fuel caused the collapse while opponents claim the towers fell from detonated explosives.

Further, critics suggest Dr. Romero may have conveniently changed his mind after government officials coerced him in an effort to cover-up a flimsy and unscientifically sound story.

Government officials and Dr. Romero have refused to comment on the allegations.

Contacted Monday at his New Mexico Tech office, Dr. Romero again refused to comment, refused to even answer the telephone, saying through his secretary that he had nothing to say about 911 ever again.

"Are you a lawyer? He has nothing to say right now," said his secretary while abruptly hanging up the phone.

However, Dr. Romero may some day be forced to talk, since his comments are a part of a federal law suit filed October 22, 2004, by Philadelphia attorney Phillip Berg, accusing President Bush and 54 others of complicity or prior knowledge in the events surrounding 911.

The manner in which the Twin Towers fell is one example given in the lawsuit of how the government officials may have lied or manipulated facts in order to hide the truth surrounding 911.

Berg's massive 237 page RICO action, filed on behalf of William Rodriguez, a maintenance worker at the WTC, claims a broad cover-up existed before, after and during 911, involving high ranking government officials complicit in the attacks in order to justify wars in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Berg's suit claims one example of complicity is how the government created a false story about how the towers fell and then covered their tracks by concealing evidence.

Berg cites that FEMA never allowed independent investigators a chance to analyze structural components of the WTC, which would have shown "proof-positive" that the massive steel columns were brought down by "high heat" generated by explosives and not "low-heat" producing jet fuel.

Before this could be done, however, he claims FEMA obstructed justice by quickly scrapping the steel and shipping it overseas to China, far away from any independent prying eyes.

Besides FEMA's actions, Berg also wants to use Dr. Romero's statements to get at the truth behind a possible government cover-up.

"Although he would eventually recant his statements that explosives were used, perhaps there was some prodding by government officials," said Berg in the federal lawsuit, eventually hoping deposition testimony will clear up the confusion behind Dr. Romero's conflicting statements. "He is still on the record saying that 'the collapse of the towers was too methodical to be a chance result of airplanes colliding with the structures.'"

Besides Dr. Romero, the Berg lawsuit cites numerous other facts in the extensively researched complaint, which may raise serious questions as to patterns and actions of government complicity in 911. A copy of the entire text of the lawsuit, as filed in federal court, can be read online at www.911fortheworld.com.

Although the "911 truth movement" has been relegated to a small group of "internet warriors," recently the movement is attracting more attention since the 911 Commission's recent report has been criticized by many in mainstream America for not tackling the "hard issues" and seeking out the real truth behind 911.

Critics, including some 911 victims, claim the 911 Commission merely "rubber stamped" the government story without answering serious questions that may rest at the heart of a massive government cover-up. By setting an overall agenda of "not wanting to assess blame," critics add the Commission essentially failed to do its job.

The Commission members, as well as most in Congress, remain steadfast behind the results of the report, claiming an honorable civic duty has been performed in the face of ongoing terrorist threats.

Mystery Still Surrounds Collapse of Twin Towers

Critics claim towers fell from a controlled demolition not burning jet fuel as stated in the government's official story. Hard evidence, eyewitness testimony and seismic activity on 911 seem to give credence to claim made by critics.

22 Nov 2004

By Greg Szymanski

Three years after 911, it remains a mystery why major media outlets virtually have ignored compelling evidence that a controlled demolition brought down the twin towers instead of burning jet fuel as advanced in the official government story.

It remains a mystery why critics of the "official story" are called crackpots or unpatriotic when the government's version is starting to look like a piece of Swiss cheese.

It remains a mystery why the "mother of all stories" takes a back seat to Martha Stewart or Scott Peterson.

It remains a mystery why the "big boys" of journalism have not been battering away every news day like they did on Watergate or Whitewater.

"Not only is there compelling evidence the towers were brought down by explosives, the entire 911 official story before, during and after is implausible and stinks to high heaven," said attorney Phillip Berg, who has recently filed a federal RICO law suit against President Bush and others alleging complicity in 911.

Furthermore, media critics, who have grown into a virtual internet army of thousands, claim newspapers and television stations are deliberately keeping America in the dark by turning a deaf ear and a blind eye to one of the most important stories in American history.

And if one takes an objective look at the enormous amount of evidence refuting the "official story," the only logical explanation is that Richard Nixon or Bill Clinton should have been so lucky?

For a moment let's play lawyer or big city editor and look at just the facts surrounding the collapse of the towers.

Let's see if the "official story" of the WTC collapse, as well as the fall of nearby Building 7, can hold up to scrutiny?

Let's first see if a preponderance of controlled demolition evidence leads to a guilty verdict against the government?

Let's see if there is enough hard evidence to at least merit a full scale journalistic investigation, not just a token story every now and again, usually echoing the government's version?

OFFICIAL STORY: The Jet Fuel Theory

Only two days after 911, without a thorough investigation of the steel trusses and columns, FEMA produced a technically worded engineering report, claiming the burning fire from the jet fuel caused the collapse of the towers.

This general theory essentially remains the same today, as does the government story about the collapse of WTC #7 caused by debris from the towers.

In a technical nutshell, the government basically said the burning jet fuel so weakened floor trusses or angle clips that the towers pancaked and fell like a perfectly stacked house of cards.

So the government puts out a fancy worded technical report two days after 911 without a thorough investigation of the evidence and sticks with its story throughout. FEMA then whisks away the physical evidence before outside investigators can have a look, the steel being scrapped and shipped to China out of the reach of prying eyes.

Critics are quick to point out that if the government was serious about proving its case, why did it conceal, remove and essentially destroy the physical evidence? Critics claim even "Andy of Mayberry" would have had enough sense to tape off a crime scene so evidence would be preserved. Or critics point a more direct finger saying: Was it a concerted effort to obstruct justice, knowing the government's flimsy story wouldn't hold up under the weight of hard physical evidence?

Critics suggest that this action alone by FEMA should have been enough to "shake the halls" of government let alone all the other thousands of inconsistencies within the "official story." Furthermore, they point out that instead of heads rolling at FEMA, the head of the 911 clean-up project was promoted by the Bush Administration to a cushy corporate job.

UNOFFICIAL STORY: The Controlled Demolition Theory

Some information offered by proponents of this theory follows:

When constructed, the WTC was built with a safety factor of 600%, easily able to withstand an isolated jet fuel fire. Experts estimate jet fuel could only have reached 360 degrees Celsius, far lower than the temperature needed to weaken the elasticity of the steel columns.

Molten steel was found at the bedrock, seven stories below street level and 80 stories below the point of impact. The melting point of steel is 1500 celsius and burning jet fuel does not produce flame temperature high enough to produce molting.

The official story claims the building collapsed because there was no sufficient lateral support of the walls against wind loading due to so-called "angle clips" that held up each floor. The unofficial story points out this is not accurate since the walls were affixed to 24"x 18" metal plates with shear studs set in concrete slabs at 13'x4" intervals. In addition, to provide further support, pairs of 6-foot long steel bars connected directly on the perimeter columns to prevent collapse in the event of a natural or man made disaster.

In the event that one truss failed, its load would be distributed to the concrete slab as would all other trusses associated with that slab. Accordingly, critics assert, the WTC could not have collapsed as the official story claims.

Infernos are inconsistent with the sooty, oxygen-starved fires especially observed in the North Tower.

Most of the jet fuel burned outside the buildings, especially in the case of the South Tower which produced a glowing orange fireball as the building was struck at an oblique not a direct angle.

The jet fuel fires would have been brief, most burning off or evaporating within 30 seconds and all of it within 2 or 3 minutes. The energy produced by the jet fuel, not absorbed by the concrete and steel, would have been vented to the exterior, allowing for fire crews to extinguish the blaze prior to total structural collapse.

Had the temperatures within either towers reached 700 degrees Celsius like the official story claims, the glow produced by such steel-melting heat would have been clearly visible, but nothing has been filmed or video taped to support such intense heat within the towers.

The government stated there was never a previously recorded fire in the WTC to make any comparison of how the building would have reacted to such a massive fire like on 9/11. However, critics are quick to point out that "official story" historians neglect to mention a February 23, 1975 fire in the North Tower that burned for 3 to 4 hours, demonstrating the truss-slab support system worked under similar conditions that took place on 9/11.

The "official story" does not offer any explanation of how the 47 massive central core columns, which held up a major portion of the weight of each building, failed even though they did not experience a direct hit.

Experts have calculated that even if the entire 10,000 gallons of jet fuel was injected into one floor of the WTC burning at maximum efficiency, it would have only produced temperature of 280 degrees Celsius, far below what is needed to melt sturdy steel columns that supported the WTC.

Dr. Van Romero, an explosives expert and former director of the Energetic Materials research and Testing Center at New Mexico Tech, said right after 9/11 that based on his expertise "after the airplanes hit the World Trade Center, there were some explosive devices inside the buildings that caused the towers to collapse." However days later he recanted his story, never giving a sound explanation why.

Dr. Romero, contacted at his office at New Mexico Tech Monday, refused comment, his secretary saying he is no longer speaking publicly on the subject.

Eye witness accounts

Proponents also offer eyewitness testimony to disprove the jet fuel theory. Whereas the government claims temperatures were hot enough to cause the trusses of the South Tower to collapse, eyewitness survivors reported that temperatures were cool enough at the point of impact for them to have walked away. Some of the following evidence is offered:

Donavan Cowan, an elevator operator on the 78th floor, said: "We went into the elevator and soon as I hit the button, that's when there was this big boom. This was well after the planes hit. I got knocked down and remember this intense heat. It lasted for about 10 or 15 seconds then it stopped."

William Rodriguez, a maintenance worker, stated he distinctly heard explosions coming from well below the point of impact on the 78th through 84th floors.

Ling Young, who worked in an office on the 78th floor, said: "Only in my area were people alive and they were in my office. I sat around there for 10 or 15 minutes after the plane hit and that's how I got burned."

Critics claim she could not have survived if there was such intense heat near the point of impact like the official story claims.

Photographs of the North Tower impact area also show a survivor peering out inconsistent with that of an inferno at 800 degrees Celsius as claimed by the government.

FDNY audio tapes from 9/11 reveal fires were believed to be under control and fireman on the scene had no indication that either of the towers were unstable and might fall. Suspiciously, critics to the official story claim, certain segments of the audio tape are missing or have been classified by the government.

Seismic evidence indicates explosions

The Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory in Palisades, NY, located near the WTC, showed seismic events at the beginning of the collapse of each tower. There was a 2.1 magnitude earthquake just as the South Tower began its 10-second collapse at 9:59.04 and a 2.3 magnitude earthquake as the North Tower began its collapse at 10:28.31.

Experts claim the only logical explanation for this unlikely pattern of seismic activity was that detonated explosives were charged below ground level beneath each of the towers where the massive steel columns affixed to bedrock. They also said this is why both towers fell so quickly and within their respective footprints like a planned implosion rather than from burning jet fuel.

Questions

Without delving into other circumstantial evidence, ask yourself what theory seems more credible? Ask yourself why the government removed the evidence critical in establishing proof-positive of exactly what caused the WTC to collapse when no other modern high rise structure of similar size had ever completely collapsed before?

Ask yourself why the recent 911 Commission refused to address these issues in detail, saying its purpose was not to assess blame but to learn from our mistakes and avoid future such disasters?

Ask yourself if the events before, during and after 911 stink from the stench of government secrecy and cover-up?

Ask yourself if the mainstream media has conveniently "dropped the ball" leaving most of America uninformed and in the dark?

Conclusion

If the answer to any of the above questions is yes, then say a quick prayer to whomever you consider "The Almighty" since it appears up until now none of the "earthly powers" in charge are listening or paying any attention to the evidence presented.

Retired Marine Colonel Attacks "Official Story " of 911 as Impossible

A 24 page report by military and civilian experts in the hands of top Pentagon Brass and The White House documenting 911 was an "inside job." Report ignored and unreported thus far.

19 Nov 2004

By Greg Szymanski

He talks in military jargon, using words like cold coup and counter coup d' tat like most of us ask for coffee and a sweet roll in the morning.

He chooses words carefully, as if "yes, sir" or "no, sir" will pop out at any second.

It's obvious from his rhythm and cadence, he's a military man. It's obvious he's the type who deals in order and details, looking for the military angle with each breadth he takes.

It's been more than 25 years since retired Marine Col. Donn de Grand Pre toed the military line, but since 911 a sense of duty and honor or what he calls in Marine lingo "Sempre Fi" or "Always Faithful" thrust him back into public service.

It was that ill-fated black September morning in 2001 that put the Colonel back in Donn de Grand Pre's name and pulled him off his favorite quarter horse on his peaceful Virginia ranch. As he sat watching the jetliner crash into the tower, it was like the morning trumpet sounded, signaling him to put on his uniform and get back to work

"When I saw the fireball, I knew the cold coup had begun," said the Colonel mysteriously, explaining that this is when the civilian hierarchy creates a movement to topple the government in order to advance a planned political agenda. "The neo-cons involved, like Rumsfeld and Wolfowitz, had been planning 911 for years. They needed something to justify their war plans and advance the globalists' plan to control wealth and power by essentially controlling America.

"They were saying, so to speak, let the games begin! I might add, though, there are those in the military, those in the Pentagon who want to stop these bastards. Surprisingly, it's the military who will be our last resort and only savior against the globalists and their patsies in government, who want to essentially destroy this country as we know it in order to advance their wealth and power."

The picture the Colonel paints is chilling, almost unbelievable. Critics might even say he is just another retired "military crack pot" or one of those frustrated military fiction writers focusing on calamity, horror and death.

However, when you look in his eyes, you see a man searching for the truth. When you look at his past, he is anything but a fiction writer, but rather a man who has spent a lifetime dealing with fact not innuendo.

So, why now? Why did he allow the events of 911 to thrust him back into "devil's den?" He's already served his military time, served his country well since entering the military in 1944 as an 18-year-old radio operator. Working his way up the military ranks, his tour of duty first took him to Burma, China and then to Korea as a commissioned airborne-infantry officer where he was seriously injured. After two years recuperating stateside, duty called again, this time being tagged by then Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara to enter "the dark side of the military" as chief arms negotiator in the Middle East.

When reminded, he quickly laughs, sounding much like a corporate CEO:

"We were known as the super salesman in the ISA or in International Security Affairs. And over a 10-year period, we sold over a hundred billion dollars worth of military equipment to all comers, including the so-called good ones and bad ones."

Fast forward the time clock now to 911 and the events following, including the puppet regime installed in Afghanistan and the ongoing war in Iraq, not to mention the swift passage of a dictatorial-fashioned Patriot Act and a level of fear placed on the American population by our "color-coded" homeland security system.

Perhaps what is needed now more than anything is an "inside military perspective" of what is really happening to America post 911? Perhaps the man to help piece the puzzle together is the "Virginia Cowboy Colonel" who likes riding quarter horses just as much as he likes delving into the dangerous world of governmental intrigue and espionage.

"Remember, Sempere Fi," that's why I'm back," quips the Colonel.

And when it comes to the Middle East, he knows the turf, he knows the so-called good guys from the bad guys, even when they sometimes change the color of their hats for political convenience. He knows the dangerous "ins and outs" behind the secret policies of big shots like Rumsfeld, Wolfowitz and Richard Perle. He especially despises Perle, calling him a "madman" who openly rants at Washington parties about the power of the "New World Order" and the coming of World War III.

Although his disdain is evident for those he calls the neo-con civilian hierarchy, he still is probably on a first name basis with them, as the games played within the halls of the shadow government go much deeper than words.

"They let you talk, let you go on knowing that you will be dismissed as a fanatic," explains the Colonel. "But if you get too close, too close to exposing the real truth, all I can say is 'watch your back.' I still visit the Pentagon regularly, more now since 911 took place. It's never easy to really tell who are your friends from your enemies. But that's a part of military service, sorting out the wheat from the chaff."

Once a Marine, always a Marine, but when it comes to the "Official Story" about the 911 attacks, the Colonel and his Pentagon comrades come down on completely different sides of the fence. At least, publicly, emphasizes the Colonel.

"I've personally talked with the Chairman of the Joint Chief of Staff, General Myers, and he is total agreement, at least privately, that 911 was an inside job," said the Colonel. "He agrees with my assessment and the assessment of other experts who all say that the "Official Story" is way off base. Of course, he will deny it publicly as will the other higher-ups in both the military and civilian sectors. They will, in fact, publicly deny ever talking to me. That's the way the game is played.

"But they can't deny, if someone would just dig deep enough to push the issue, that I along with a group of civilian and military expert-pilots presented a 24- page report to Gen. Myers after 911, detailing our theory of what really happened. He agrees with our assessment that it was an inside job. He just won't admit it publicly and, you see, the games continue!"

The 24-page report given to Gen. Myers was compiled by a group of distinguished commercial, civilian and military pilots after a 72-hour marathon symposium organized by the Colonel just days after 911.

The results were shocking, but only to those not privy to how the neo-cons and their wealthy supporters operate.

The report basically warns the American public that the government's official version does not hold up to scrutiny. It concludes military defense systems were suspended and standard operating procedures ignored, allowing for the airplanes on 911 to strike their targets without interruption.

Furthermore, the report concludes that flight crews on all four passenger jets involved in 911 had no control over their aircraft and were either remote-controlled into their targets or substituted by military drone look- a-likes. The report adds that Flight 93, flying over Somerset County, Pa., was the only plane that should not have been shot down, but most probably was brought down on specific orders with missiles fired from a fighter squadron called The Happy Hooligans.

"Our written report ultimately got into the hands of the Vice Chairman of the Joint Chief of Staff, Gen, Peter Pace, on Jan. 23, 2002," said the Colonel. "I then got a call on March 5 from one of the General's horse holders that there would be no official comment at this time.

"Now, the situation surrounding my report remains as follows: The mainstream American media has failed to publish or broadcast any details regarding the independent inquiry. I have solid evidence that 500 copies of the report were immediately distributed to the higher-ups, including General Myers, Rumsfeld and the White House. Not surprisingly, I have not been officially approached regarding our findings and there has been no official word mentioned whatsoever by any of the parties mentioned above.

"In fact, the only people to give it any mention at all has been a very long and detailed report in the Portugal press as well as an interview that aired earlier this year with alternative radio broadcaster, Alex Jones.

"At present, I have put 911 behind me, as I am now able to ride my favorite quarter horse again after being hit with a heart attack which I think was the result of stress related to the whole 911 affair. Don't get me wrong, I have not forgotten or given up hope. I just want to move forward and perhaps circumvent what these neo-cons have planned next. However, I don't want to speculate as I prefer staying on a straight forward factual course."

It's been said that a military man awaits retirement so his first amendment rights can finally kick-in. And that's exactly what the Colonel has done, writing an extensive three-volume trilogy entitled The Barbarians Inside the Gates.

His books, on sale in limited bookstores and by mail order, essentially document the rise of the globalist and neo-con movement that seeks to establish a "New World Order" through militarizing and federalizing in perpetuation of a classic takeover of the United States government.

A quote from his second book, entitled the Rattler's Revenge released in October 2002, puts 911 into perspective in relation to the globalist movement:

"The trigger for the 911 activity was the imminent and unstoppable world wide financial collapse, which can only be temporarily prevented by a major war, perhaps known as World War III. To pull this off, I eventually see that they are planning to impose martial law in the United States."

The only way to stop them, concludes the Colonel, is for our military to react with a counter coup. In his first book, called The Serpent's Sting, written in 2000 before 911, the Colonel talks of this counter coup brought against the neo-con movement.

"This is our only salvation now after 911," he warns. "I figure about 70% of the military at the Pentagon are with us on this, but it's hard to tell since they have placed so many minions loyal to the civilian hierarchy within the ranks. However, the signs are all there: first the attack to create fear, then the Patriot Act to control the masses, then martial law and then the takeover. They can be stopped, but it is not going to be easy."

The Colonel emphasizes the neo-conservative movement is personified by Assistant Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz.

"Wolfowitz has been in this game since 1974," said the Colonel. "I was still on active duty when I met him in 1974 and he was coming on strong even then, as was Richard Perle and a couple of others.

"From watching the globalists, it obvious they had a well thought out plan of attack on 911. However, I also know from the evidence that a lot of things post 911 haven't gone according to schedule and, so I think, they don't really know what to do now."

And if the Colonel has his way, he'd like to stay one-step ahead, stopping the neo-conservative movement in its tracks before more innocent lives are lost at home and abroad.

"I have faith justice will prevail in the end, but it's going to be a long, hard fight with our salvation basically resting in the hands of the faithful fighting those barbarians already inside the gates.

"Remember, Sempre Fi, Sempre Fi."

Petition handed to NY Attorney General to start 911 criminal probe
Disgusted citizens unite to get at the truth from the Bush Administration. Complaint and petition filed Oct. 28, 2004, to get at the truth behind 911.

18 Nov 2004

By Greg Szymanski

A petition to open a criminal investigation into the 911 attacks has been given to New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer by a group of outraged citizens "seeking justice and deeply dissatisfied" with the recent 911 Commission Report handed to Congress.

The petition claims the terrorist attacks were "an inside job" and that government officials should be investigated for a series of crimes, including murder, enterprise corruption and obstruction of justice.

Supporters cite "a massive conspiracy and government cover-up" by the Bush Administration, who they say has blocked efforts to uncover the truth about 911.

The 27-page complaint and petition, seeking an independent grand jury probe hand delivered on Oct 28, presents a compelling case that the "official government 911 story" lacks credibility and is seriously flawed.

"The petition is still being reviewed and will be turned over to the proper agency when the review is complete," said an official from the attorney general's office Wednesday, giving no definite date when the review process would be complete or even if it had begun.

Since day one, after the "official story" aired, speculation mounted as to its credibility, critics citing numerous common sense errors and blatant inconsistencies.

Suspecting a cover-up, independent investigators began attacking the "official story," first on websites such as www.911truth.org and several others. These websites continued to multiply with cyber space critics emerging daily, despite a mainstream media that ignores their claims and continues to echo "the official story."

More recently, however, these attacks have become organized, surfacing in federal lawsuits, numerous conspiracy theory books and grass roots civic campaigns to raise public awareness.

After three years, critics have compiled a virtual "library of information," including specific facts about government complicity with terrorists, detailed timelines citing an ordered "stand down" of defense systems on the morning of 911, meticulous data on the explosions and structural demise of the WTC, Pentagon and Flight 93 and a thorough analysis of the FBI and FEMA's efforts to quickly eliminate evidence.

"A culmination of basically three years of under-funded and uncoordinated investigation efforts concerning a government conspiracy involving 911 has now been turned over the New York Attorney General's office in hopes that this is the first real concrete step at getting at the truth behind 911," said a spokesman for the 20 supporters and 5 signatories behind the 911 petition.

However, as recently as Wednesday, the Bush administration, at least publicly, has basically "laughed in the face" of all the criticism.

On national television, when pardoning the annual turkey on the White House lawn, President Bush casually joked the turkeys now have a "truth movement" as well as a new movie entitled "Fahrenheit 357," both crude and obvious swipes at those seeking the truth about 911, including some who lost loved ones on that ill-fated morning.

Although supporters present a compelling case in the face of government laughter, they said independent investigators have been hindered by a lack of money and an inability to use subpoena powers to call witnesses and verify vital 911 documentation. Further, plaintiffs attorneys said the government has stalled litigation by throwing up a "phony blanket of national security" to hide incriminating evidence."

"It's all a big cover-up from beginning to end to initiate war for oil in Afghanistan and Iraq," said Philadelphia attorney Phillip Berg, who recently filed a federal RICO action against President Bush and others on behalf of William Rodriguez, a maintenance worker at the Twin Towers as well as one of the 5 signatories backing the recent petition given to the New York Attorney General.

To verify their concerns, Rodriguez and other petition supporters cite that the 911 Commission was drastically under-funded from the outset, starting with only $3 million and increased to $15 million over strong White House resistance.

Supporters complain the money allocated to the 911 Commission was grossly inadequate when considering that the Challenger crash was immediately granted $30 million and the Clinton Whitewater investigation spent $60 million.

And recently, Jimmy Walter, a wealthy Santa Barbara, Ca., real estate investor and long time 911 truth advocate, has spent millions trying to offset a lack of government funds by initiating a nationwide 911 newspaper advertising campaign. His full-page ads have appeared in such notable publications as the New York Times and New York Post.

He has also been a driving force behind the recent petition and is using his private resources to continue gathering signatures nationwide in order to reopen the 911 Commission and encourage the New York Attorney General to initiate a criminal investigation.

"One thing is for certain. The facts surrounding the Twin Towers collapse and the Pentagon attack prove our government is not telling us the whole truth," said Walter from his Santa Barbara home. "I am now convinced it was not just an error of omission. It seems clear to me after looking at all the evidence that someone executed a deceptive planning killing thousands of innocent people.

Walter's recently commissioned a Zogby Poll, mentioned in the petition, reporting that 66% of New Yorkers wanted the 911 Commission investigation reopened. Furthermore, it found that 49% of those polled believed high-ranking government officials knew about the impending attacks and stood by doing nothing about them.

"If you want to join our cause, just go to www.reopen911.org to include your name on the petition, added Walter.

The four other original signatories of the petition handed to the Attorney General of New York include Dr. Faiz Khan, a first responder to 911; Robert McIlvaine Sr., father of Robert McIlvaine, Jr., who lost his son at Ground Zero; Jenny Orkin, chairwomen of the World Trade Center Environmental Organization; and Megan Bartlett, 911 EMT and founder of Ground Zero for Peace.

The Rise of New Global Activism

16 Nov 2004

The Rise of the New Global Activism

by Eve Hillary © 2004

In the wake of 911, governments have been cracking down on the freedoms of individuals, but new activist movements are growing around the world and people are making determined stands for human rights and justice.

MEET THE GLOBAL CORPORATE POLICE STATE

Only a totalitarian society would even claim absolute safety as a worthy ideal, because it would require total state control over its citizens' lives. Freedom is not defined by safety. Freedom is defined by the ability of citizens to live without government interference.

- US Congressman Ron Paul, in his "Texas Straight Talk" column, August 2004

Society Unravelling

It's a short visit to the USA, but already I'm getting used to standing in endlessly long airline boarding lines. I'm a white middle-aged woman in amongst people of all colours, waved into a line destined for special attention because of my "foreign" ID. Once American, I long ago adopted and was adopted by Australia, "the Lucky Country".

We wait, all of us stockinged or barefoot, looking pained and embarrassed, surrounded by black-suited, unfriendly, paramilitary-looking men and officials wearing rubber gloves. Up ahead an Hispanic child of barely three is being searched, her teddy bear falling to the ground. Rough hands retrieve it and probe the bear deeply for contraband. None is found. The child cries. The line is painfully slow. The linoleum chills my feet. My facial expression must be betraying my distaste. People talk in whispers. People glance around to spot the camera, careful to hide their mouth from the prying lens. A black man helps me to understand. "Nine-eleven," he whispers barely audibly. Others join in.

Stories cautiously seep out whenever I stand in line with others. We begin an impromptu Sociology 101 lesson. Somebody's friend with an Arabic name was arrested and disappeared for weeks, but was never charged. Somebody else knows of a teacher who taught the Constitution in her classroom and was censured. A student shared his political views in a classroom and was visited by the FBI. A person was detained for reading an airport novel that featured a gun on its cover. While somebody's sister was in jail for a minor offence, her child was put into a foster home by the authorities. "Surely that can't be right," I say from my white middle-aged Australian perspective. Laughs all round. "You got no money, you go to jail, man. It's da rules," explains a brown man with dreadlocks.

I later discover that of the 80,000 women now in US jails, about 70% are nonviolent offenders and 75% of them have children. Entire archipelagos of prisons all over the world are owned by private corporations. Business is booming. Share prices are going through the roof-a good investment for the rich. Multinational prison corporations have built and operate Australian detention centres where we, in the once Lucky Country, incarcerate refugees from the Third World. There are two million people in US prisons, the highest prison population in the world-more than in Russia.(1) Of those, 70% are illiterate, 50% are African Americans, and 80% are drug users and alcoholics mixed in with the homeless, the mentally ill and nonviolent offenders. The prison corporations offer no treatment for the sick or help for the homeless. On the contrary, the sick and poor are mixed in with a general assortment of sociopaths.

My boarding call is announced. I'm relieved when the line shortens. It's my turn. I am waved up to a table by two rubber-gloved uniformed persons. I notice that rubber gloves are very popular these days. I am motioned to stand with my legs wide apart, my arms extended. The large male spills my bag's contents onto a nearby table. My money purse bursts open and coins spill out. A dime rolls and stops at my bare feet. On it I see the word "Liberty". I reflexively reach out to prevent the contents of my bag from scattering on the floor. The large male shoots out his hand, motioning me to stop. His other hand dives toward his belt, which bristles with some kind of paraphernalia. I stand to attention again. The trigger-happy moment is over.

The female begins her search. She pats me down thoroughly, pausing at my crotch to ensure I haven't stashed a weapon of mass destruction there. After she is satisfied, she produces a cotton swab, the kind used to remove makeup. She swabs carefully around the perimeter edges of my rucksack and places the swab into a machine nearby. I am told to stand there. No one explains what is happening. I wonder what they're looking for. I make a brief inventory. Have I visited a botanic garden recently? Could I have traces of fertiliser on my bag? Has my bag been contaminated by someone else's? And what happens to the millions of passengers who are now driving instead of flying? Have road blocks and barricades been erected? Are grandmothers and little girls being frisked at the roadside?

Still standing to attention, I wonder what has happened to the America of my childhood and teenage years; family picnics in the park. There was terrorism in the world then, but Kennedy presided over a White House without barricades. Now, 9/11 is the answer to all questions. But no one yet has satisfactorily answered the question about who really caused it. One thing is for sure: it has unleashed a global siege.

Powers of the Patriot Act

The more laws that are written, the more criminals that are produced.'

- Lao Tzu, Tao Te Ching

I ponder on my rights and wonder by whose authority I am required to stand here in a hostage position when I have done nothing wrong. I'd boarded scores of flights before 2001, but suddenly everything has changed. Now I'm being treated like a suspect, and so is the little three-year-old girl with her teddy bear ahead of me.

Then I remember that within barely 45 days of 9/11, the 350-page Patriot Act was written and passed by Congress without anyone but Ron Paul and a few African American congressional representatives reading it. Politicians may be exempt from reading laws, but citizens are required to memorise the 100,000 new laws passed each year in the United States because "ignorance of the law is no defense". The long arms of the Patriot Act claim to have powers over not just Americans but over all people in all countries of the world. The people of the world need to start reading. Now seems like a good opportunity for me to recap the legislation.

I remember that the Patriot Act requires me to refrain from attacking, setting fire to or disabling mass transportation systems, and spreading toxins or biological or radioactive weapons of mass destruction. The Act states that I must also refrain from attacking nuclear facilities and from carrying a weapon, including a nail clipper, onto an airplane. So far that isn't going to be difficult for me.

The Patriot Act II, however, exempts corporations from the penalties of those very acts. And they are not required to disclose information about toxins or biological or radioactive substances. Furthermore, any person found interfering, even unintentionally, with any supply, computer or pipeline to US facilities in or around any of the thousands of US bases (or US corporations) stationed around the world on the sovereign soil of other countries is classed as an "enemy combatant" and deemed guilty of terrorism. They may be indefinitely detained, without charge, trial or reasonable cause. This also includes people who happen to be in the wrong place at the wrong time, such as the under-sixteen-year-old children who find themselves indefinitely captive in Guantanamo Bay.(2) It is dawning on me that the networks of prisons around the globe for "enemy combatants", just like Guantanamo, are courtesy of the Patriot Act. It seems there are no more prisoners of war under the Geneva Convention. And torture is now allowed.

The Patriot Act also requires me to report anyone I know who may be intending to do anything "intimidating" to the US Government, or even thinking about it. This requires special clairvoyant skills, but the penalty for not knowing what others are thinking is a stiff 10 years in a US federal penitentiary. In addition, if anyone in any other country in the world thinks about those things, I am required to report them to the US authorities. They can then be spied on in their own country with the aid of local-version anti-terrorist legislation which many countries have now passed through their Parliaments. It is designed to dovetail perfectly with the Patriot Act, empowering it over the peoples of other countries without anyone having discussed it, voted for it or consented to its powers. It seems that the sovereign nations of the world are deemed to be ruled under a foreign power. Perhaps it's time for a referendum to find out what the people say-while it's still legal to vote.

"Police State: a nation whose rulers maintain order and obedience by the threat of police or military force; one with a brutal, arbitrary government." - Dictionary of Cultural Literacy, 3rd edition.

Suspects under the Act can be removed from their own country to the United States or to any unknown whereabouts and have their assets seized. (Echoes of Guantanamo again: creating a prison planet for thought crimes, as foretold by Orwell.) If I should reveal the location where persons are secretly held without a trial, I could also be deemed a terrorist and the penalty can be death. If I fail to report anyone thinking or talking about "intimidating" the US, I can have my own assets seized under section 806 of the Patriot Act, no matter where I live in the world.

Suddenly I realise we have all been recruited as part of the global police. I'm supposed to look out for any action that "could result in a foreseeable risk", any time before the Act became law (my emphasis). I'm beginning to realise, as I stand barefoot in the airport, how high-maintenance this law really is. I'd have to think back 40 years or so; it would take some time. Oh, but wait, there's more. The Act requires a DNA sample from anyone thinking about conspiring. That means a person is guilty of a crime by the mere thought of it. That's a lot of samples.

Then there's the ban on "domestic terrorism". That is any act that "appears intended to intimidate or coerce a civilian population" (my emphasis). (I wonder whether that search of my groin could be classed as "intimidating".) The Act also prohibits influencing government policy by "intimidation". Theoretically, that includes the activities of Greenpeace. However, it is still legal for corporate lobby groups to "influence government policy" by buying politicians.

"Domestic terrorism" is also defined as "affecting government conduct by mass destruction, assassination or kidnapping". I wonder whether the invasion of Iraq was in breach of the Patriot Act. Patriot II, the horror sequel to Patriot I, in section 403 expands the definition of "weapons of mass destruction" to include any activity that affects US interstate commerce or US exports. Looks like corporations moved into the seat of government when nobody was looking.

The machine gives my swab a green light and I am free to gather the dishevelled contents of my rucksack and board the aircraft. Thanks to the Patriot Act, my fellow travellers and all Americans can feel so much safer now that my groin has been searched.

You know, a long time ago being crazy meant something. Nowadays, everybody's crazy.
- Charles Manson, serial killer and one-time cult leader

IF PAIN PERSISTS, SEE YOUR SPIN DOCTOR

We live in a dirty and dangerous world. There are some things the general public does not need to know, and shouldn't. I believe democracy flourishes when the government can take legitimate steps to keep its secrets and when the press can decide whether to print what it knows.
- The late Katharine Graham, owner of the Washington Post

Meeting Dr Spook

The commercial flight was full and heavy, but the pilot executed a perfect takeoff. I was seated next to a terse-looking man in his early 40s with a slightly grown-out US military buzz-cut. We were in it for the long haul.

Before too long, I realised he knew more about flying's effects on the human body than even a commercial pilot. The hours ticked by. He consumed a bottle of Aussie red. He seemed familiar with Australia; not Sydney or Melbourne, but the remote terrain of central Australia, near the bases. We talked about the Iraq invasion.

"The liberation? It's good for the Aussies...we don't buy French wines anymore,"

It was the first time he'd laughed.

"But polls show that the Australian public doesn't want the war," I argued.

But I knew by now that we spoke a different language. He gave another brittle laugh as though I'd just made a joke. It was clear he considered the concept of electors as ludicrous and irrelevant. In his view, there was no connection between what the voters want and what the government does.

"What's the problem?" he asked. "We [the US] paid for the Aussie planes anyway, and they [the Aussies] get the reconstruction contracts."

Silence. We retreated into our corners for a while, pretending to sleep. Both of us had already quite accurately sized up the other.

He asked me where my ultimate destination was. I lied. And he knew it. I told him. I'd been invited to give a talk.

That part was true. He asked me about my work. I told him, "I'm a writer on the politics of the health care industry, among other things; exploding the myths."

"What do you mean?" His interest was sparked. Briefly overcome by the pointlessness of sharing my views with him, I continued anyway.

"How strange is it that 'they' tell us the world population is still growing out of control, when the West has had close to zero population growth for many years now and up to 80% of the African population is infected with HIV and dying of AIDS, famine and war."

"The Terrorism Information and Prevention System, or TIPS, means the US will have a higher percentage of citizen informants than the former East Germany through the infamous STASI secret police. The program would use a minimum of 4% of Americans to report 'suspicious' activity." - Sydney Morning Herald, 14 July, 2002

He pretended disinterest, but cocked his head toward me. I continued. "How strange is it that 'they' tell us that our life expectancy is increasing because of good health care, when cancer is raging in epidemic proportions, nearly 42% of Americans will die of heart disease, and Western medical care has moved up to being the number-one killer in the West. (3, 4, 5) Asthma, allergies, autoimmune disorders have risen by 40%; AIDS and other epidemics old and new rage out of control. Obesity, mental illness, Alzheimer's, addictions and suicides are epidemic, and a quarter of children in the West and most in the Third World now live in poverty without basic necessities and medical care. Doesn't anyone die from these? In addition, 86% of US children cannot pass a standard fitness test. Isn't it manifestly obvious that life expectancy is increasing neither in the US nor the world?"

He had developed a slight facial twitch.

"You're wrong he said, "Dead wrong."

"I'm right," I said stubbornly.

"No you're not," he said. "I was an analyst for the Pentagon. I analyse information."

There, he actually said it. I stopped awhile to take it in.

"What do you do to the information?" I asked, not expecting a reply.

"Where did you get your information from?" he asked, ignoring my question.

"It's out there in the public domain." I quoted a few studies. "Since Big Pharma and corporations took over health care, it's been killing people. Millions", I said defiantly.

"Are you out there saying that in public?" he demanded.

"Sure," I said.

"You can't go out there and say that," he repeated.

"But it's true," I insisted.

"You've got no proof," he challenged.

"Consider some proven facts about US health care and join the dots," I said. I quoted sources showing that the US, whose health care system is monopolised by corporations, has the worst infant mortality rate compared to 23 other wealthy countries, whose health care system is still partly in public hands. "US health care corporations are powerful lobbyists and generous financial benefactors to politicians on Capitol Hill. The US has 5% of the world's population and it spends 45% of the world's health dollars.

Despite this, Americans' life expectancies are the lowest of 23 other wealthy nations' and lower than some Third World countries like Costa Rica. (6, 7, 8, 9) "But not for long," I speculated.

"Globalisation is exporting, this model to the rest of the world." He seemed agitated, but I had to finish. "This can only mean that corporate health care creates sickness, disability and death, and profits from it," I said.

"You can't say that," he hissed.

"Yes I can," I answered.

"No you can't," he repeated more grimly.

"Why not?" :

"Because..." He hesitated, searching for the right words. "It's classified."

A long silence came between us. He sipped the last drop of red from his plastic airline cup. I sat back in my seat, trying to look relaxed. Perhaps it was foolish of me, I thought. But at least I found out who "they" are.

But that's the whole point of corporatisation: to try to remove the public from making decisions over their own fate, to limit the public arena, to control opinion, to make sure that the fundamental decisions that determine how the world is going to be run-which include production, commerce, distribution, thought, social policy, foreign policy, everything-are not in the hands of the public, but rather in the hands of highly concentrated private power. In effect, tyranny unaccountable to the public.

- Professor Noam Chomsky interviewed in Corporate Watch

NEW SOLUTIONS FOR A SICK SOCIETY

Taking on Social Justice Issues

Each day the silent, global epidemic of official crimes of brutality escalates. Such crimes are seldom reported, but citizens' groups now track their numbers.

On my return from overseas, I was determined to track the people's response to the emerging global police state and its volumes of oppressive statute legislation. I soon discovered a rising tide of activism that already far exceeds the 1960s decade: citizens' grassroots activism, social justice and human rights activism, student activism, scientist activism, consumer activism, democracy in action, truth in media, truth in medicine, corporation watch, even Islamic activism. The global trend is steeply on the rise. And it is changing to suit the times.

There has been an increasing shift to personal empowerment, whereby ordinary persons create the changes they would like to see in the world. Surprising numbers are emboldened because the level of systemic corruption has become blindingly obvious and almost all voters now know that politicians undemocratically pass laws without their consent. Increasing numbers of people are finding it impossible to acquiesce to repugnant laws that deny human rights. Social justice groups are rediscovering the principles of natural law and the community traditions of common law (defined by the Oxford Dictionary as "that which derives its force and authority from the universal consent and immemorial practice of the community"). Common law movements are gathering around the world, addressing social, political and judicial injustice.

One such movement was started in Australia by Malcolm McClure, who has frequently challenged statute laws successfully. He now conducts seminars and classes around the country which assist and support persons who stand up for their primary human rights. Malcolm McClure refers to his common-law movement as UPMART, a fellowship of "like-minded electors, united in common causes, who uphold, protect and live their inalienable human rights". He emphatically states that under common law, natural law, constitutional law and the tenets of basic human rights, "No statute law can come between you and your primary rights". The movement has found kindred spirits in the thousands who have subsequently been emboldened to stand up for their rights in diverse areas.

Whenever the legislators endeavour to take away and destroy the property of the people or to reduce them to slavery under arbitrary power, they put themselves into a state of war with the people, who are thereupon absolved from any further obedience." - John Locke

Exposing Violations in the Mental Health System

Of all the forms of inequality, injustice in health is the most shocking and the most inhumane.

- Martin Luther King Junior

The repressive mental health laws being put in place around the world reduce accountability and transparency, seemingly empowering the corporate state incarcerate individuals indefinitely in order to force drugs and treatments upon them that can cause permanent brain damage. (10)

Mandatory health screening has recently been introduced in some US states, and activists fear it will also lead to more involuntary drug treatments. (11, 12) Increasingly, where statute laws abound, more health conditions are being included under the 'mental health' umbrella. The result has been a shocking betrayal of trust. Increasingly children and teenagers who once needed treatment merely for a drug or alcohol problem are being funnelled in to the mental health system and often end up on psychiatric drugs for the long term. The Citizens Commission on Human rights (13) and other watchdogs investigate and expose psychiatric violations of human rights. All report a significant increase in complaints of psychiatric abuse.

A seventeen-year-old Australian boy (14) had been smoking marijuana on a regular basis during his final year of school. He was a well-liked, straight-A student. The boy and his mother sought help from staff at a nearby drug and alcohol treatment centre, but they said that pot "won't hurt him". Still concerned, the mother took her son to the local doctor. The GP referred him to a visiting psychiatrist, who then began to prescribe psychiatric drugs to the boy. Within weeks, the psychiatrist placed the boy into the mental health system. Once there, he was heavily drugged. Within two years, the boy was permanently institutionalised and given dozens of shock treatments without his mother's consent. Later he was found to have paddle-shaped electrical burns on his upper abdomen from the shock treatment.

For the past seven years he has been institutionalised and drugged into a stupor with strong psychiatric drugs. Now a man of twenty-four, he remains imprisoned in the mental health system and his general health has deteriorated appallingly. Mostly heavily drugged and in effect unable to communicate, he shakes and trembles between rigid spasms and shuffles unsteadily when on his feet. The remaining time he sleeps stuporously for hours on end. The psychiatric facility has refused to allow outside medical treatment for him. In his GP's opinion, the young man may now be irreparably brain damaged. His mother has now taken common law steps to address her son's psychiatric abuse and to provide the necessary medical measures required to treat the damage done to her son.

Reclaiming Parental Rights

Stories abound of children dying in the care of abusive parents after child welfare authorities had been notified and failed to take action. However, the darker side of government child welfare authorities is rarely publicised.

In one instance, authorities made an eleven-year-old-girl (15) a ward of the court after an oncologist called in the authorities when the family was still deciding whether to consent to chemotherapy. The child had chemo forcibly administered while being confined and guarded in a hospital for two months. A Supreme Court judge ordered this forced treatment on the strength of the oncologist's opinion. However, the doctor could not show any evidence supporting the validity of his treatment. The family made several efforts to stop the forced treatment, which they considered to be medical abuse, but they were unsuccessful in this-despite having spent their savings on legal fees. The child's father joined a common law movement and represented the child's interests in Court himself, where he reinstated his and his wife's parental rights.

Standing Up for Our Health Freedom

The Big Pharma lobby has increasingly infiltrated government policy.(16) Consequently, there have been unprecedented attacks on the use of natural, non-drug-based therapies as well as on their providers. New health care laws give powers of search and seizure to medical boards and health care watchdogs. This might be understandable if the police-state powers were being used to ferret out sleazy or quack doctors and incompetent practitioners. Perhaps not surprisingly, however, (The power of these laws is now arbitrarily used to harass and abuse qualified doctors and other health professionals who practise natural, alternative or integrative health care.(17)

Last year an Australian naturopath was allegedly raided by a government team who searched the practitioner's private belongings. The quiet, elderly, health professional was overwhelmed and devastated by the raid, allegedly conducted by 18 uniformed goons. (18)

More recently, another notable Australian physician who has achieved excellent clinical results treating patients with nutrient supplements and dietary measures was targeted by the medical regulators in his state. He had been officially harassed for several years. But when confronted by the Board's police-type powers, he "voluntarily" consented to his retirement instead of mounting what he anticipated would be a costly and stressful legal action. (19)

The Internet abounds with health freedom activists who are now tracking this official abuse of practitioners. However, Tim Bolen, one such advocate, publicises the increasing numbers of practitioners who successfully stand up to authorities. (20) Though abuses still abound, some success stories are emerging.

One Australian doctor, who successfully incorporates natural medicine into his busy practice, was targeted by his state's medical board on the basis of issues such as a complaint made by an habitual complainant who has been mentioned in Parliament as a person who systematically makes complaints specifically against alternative practitioners. The medical board took up this bogus complaint in an attempt to use its police-type powers to gain entry to the doctor's premises. The board's representatives were stopped on the day because the doctor insisted the board demonstrate a reasonable cause and a proper reason as to its authority to enter his premises. The board was unable to do this. The doctor remains an ardent constitutional law and social justice advocate. (21)

Applying the Common Law for Our Civil Liberties

Since 9/11, law enforcement has acquired the militaristic image of an occupying army with its use of non-lethal weapons and riot paraphernalia. Even in developed countries the police, once employed to uphold community rights and safety, now attempt to use brutality to suppress lawful activities such as the right to dissent. However, as the lyrics go, it appears that growing numbers of ordinary folk are "mad as hell and not gonna take it anymore".

The principles of common law are being applied in many settings. In July 2004, police attempted to herd demonstrators protesting against repression of civil liberties at the Democratic National Convention in Boston into an area enclosed by netting, chain link fence and barbed wire. Many demonstrators said the area looked like a concentration camp. There were 5,000 police, army reservists and feds prowling the vicinity and helicopters circling overhead. By all accounts, the city of Boston was making its debut as a police state. Many demonstrators acquiesced to being herded into the barbed wire enclosure and vocally complained about it afterwards. However, a large number of demonstrators refused to enter the area which the authorities had ironically called the "free speech zone". (22) They powerfully exercised their simple common law right to withhold consent to an injustice. The importance of that event eclipsed the other events of the day.

Routine law enforcement has also taken a more sinister turn. A middle-aged Fijian couple (23) from Sydney's inner west were driving their van to a business meeting early in 2004. The police stopped the van and issued a minor traffic infringement to the husband, who was driving. Moments after the woman took the wheel, the police stopped them again for the same infringement.

The woman explained that the infringement had already been issued once and that, in any case, they intended to go to court to argue the matter. (This kind of police harassment where persons are stopped repeatedly for the same matter is known as "hunting".) A short but polite discussion ensued, during which time police called for back-up. Within minutes, seven police cars had surrounded the couple's van, with 15 officers attending for a minor offence. A few minutes later, an officer smashed the van's semi-open window and two police officers pulled the woman from the van. The beefy young officers descended on her until she fell to the ground. She was left on the roadside with a fractured shoulder and bleeding from glass cuts. Two eyewitnesses corroborated the event. The husband and wife are now taking the first steps toward legal action against the police involved.

A feisty, middle-aged Melbourne woman (24) was stopped in 2003 by a police officer and booked for an alleged minor traffic violation. She told him she was quite prepared to argue the matter of the infringement in court, but took exception to what she regarded as the officer's acting beyond the powers of his jurisdiction. The officer seemed incensed that she had not been intimidated by his display of power. This led to a hunting campaign against the woman, involving at least 17 separate occasions when police stopped her. One officer waylaid her vehicle five times and another one on four occasions. On most occasions, officers reached into her car in an attempt to detain her further, after she had given them the necessary details and was ready to drive away.

Since then, the woman has represented herself at least nine times in court on the matter. Three occasions were in the Supreme Court. The woman had no prior legal training, but used the basic principles of common law that she learned at the UPMART workshops she attended. She brought charges against the police whom she believes harassed her. Her cross-examination of a police officer on the witness stand turned out to be a harrowing experience for him. She maintains an articulate legal argument based on her deeply held belief that she is entitled to exercise her primary rights and is unwilling to acquiesce to injustice.

An inalienable human right is a right that is with you at all times; it is a part of you and cannot be separated/rom you. It is a right that cannot be granted to you by man or governments. Inalienable rights are intrinsic to our existence. Inalienable rights are bestowed by the creator of creation, and cannot be granted by an earthly authority. They who seek permission from a court to live an inalienable human right are seeking permission from persons who are pretending to have the authority over that right.

- Malcolm McClure

Creating Free People Zones

By all accounts, there is a staggering growth in social justice movements which are starting to change the current trend of corporatisation, political oppression and corruption. Increasingly, institutions and corporations are being held to account.

Malcolm McClure's UPMART movement is currently assisting health care consumers to require doctors to provide accurate information about vaccination and other procedures or be liable for damages.

Increasingly, class actions are gathering - on behalf of vaccine-damaged children, children unlawfully taken from their parents, consumers who demand their right to natural treatments, and practitioners who have been harassed by the health authorities.

One UPMART class action, UCAR, sets out to ensure the rights of persons to be represented by the person of their choice-a move intended to make legal representation fair and affordable. (25) Meanwhile, alternative co-operatives are emerging, as well as alternative motor vehicle registration, banking and insurance facilities. There has been an increase in the number of self-sufficient communities that rely on their own resources and legal instruments. It appears that these are ideas whose time has come. Malcolm McClure has been asked to bring his common law tools to other countries including the USA, NewZealand and Thailand.

With the help of a compliant mainstream media, governments continue to create reams of laws that seek to enslave humanity in "Free Trade Zones". Yet a global network of "Free People Zones" is coming into being, where millions of people are joined by the spirit of their collective values. They create their own media, literature, food, conservation projects, healing centres, technology and politics. In the US, over 300 cities and four states have passed resolutions to have the Patriot Act repealed.

Around the world, individuals, fellowships, entire communities and emerging movements have put governments on notice that constitutional laws and human rights will not be violated in their area.

"There is a rising new movement in the world. It is bigger than the movement of the 1960s. Yet it is barely seen by the experts and analysts. They look only at the behaviour of institutions and politicians, not at the underlying forces that eventually burst into visibility." - Tom Hayden, 'Evidence of Things Unseen: The Rise of a New Movement', ZNet, October 23, 2003

The Hidden Face of Terrorism

The Hidden Face of Terrorism

Terrorism does not emerge by accident but is usually sponsored by the state to serve the demands of a powerful elite, as can be seen in the creation of Osama bin Laden's al-Qa'ida.

The following is an edited extract from The Hidden Face of Terrorism: The Dark Side of Social Engineering, From Antiquity to September 11, by Paul David Collins.

In our modern world, discomfoting truths are usually discarded in favour of fictions. One such fiction is the idea that terrorists are disenfranchised dissidents who independently generate the wealth and resources necessary for their heinous acts. Such is the contention of Professor Mark Juergensmeyer. In his article, "Understanding the New Terrorism", he says that modern terrorism "appears pointless since it does not lead directly to any strategic goal" (p. 158). Juergensmeyer arrives at this conclusion because he restricts his examination to the visible perpetrators, whose motives may be, in fact, irrational. However, he does not examine the patrons of terrorism. Given the exceptional subtlety and discretion of terrorism's shadowy sponsors, Professor Juergensmeyer may just be oblivious to their existence. On the other hand, he could simply be parroting his fellow academicians in order to maintain the status quo.

Whatever the case may be, this contention seems to be the overall view held by the orthodoxy of academia. With such a view vigorously promulgated by the arbiters of the dominant national paradigm, few can recognise those shady individuals who stand to profit from terrorist acts.

To understand terrorism, one must discard the view that arbitrarily characterises it as "a resort to violence or a threat of violence on the part of a group seeking to accomplish a purpose against the opposition of constituted authority" (Adler, Mueller & Laufer, p. 309). Such an impotent notion is predicated upon the hopelessly flawed accidentalist perspective of history. It relegates terrorism, which is the product of conscious effort and design, to the realm of circumstantial spontaneity. In other words, a contrived act suddenly becomes an inexplicable social phenomenon.

In November 1989, Father Ignacio Martín-Baró, a social psychologist, delivered a speech in California on "The Psychological Consequences of Political Terror". In his speech, Martín-Baró gave a much more precise definition of terrorism, one that is ignored only at great peril. Noam Chomsky provides a synopsis of this speech (p. 386):

He [Martín-Baró] stressed several relevant points. First, the most significant form of terrorism, by a large measure, is state terrorism--that is, "terrorizing the whole population through systematic actions carried out by the forces of the state". Second, such terrorism is an essential part of a "government-imposed sociopolitical project" designed for the needs of the privileged.

Disturbing though it may be, Martín-Baró's definition is one validated by history. The majority of terrorism throughout history has found its sponsors in the hallowed halls of officialdom, in the entity known as government. Terrorism is surrogate warfare, a manufactured crisis designed to induce social change. Its combatants consciously or unconsciously wage the war on behalf of higher powers with higher agendas. Whether its adherents are aware of it or not, terrorism always serves the ambitions of another.

In his article, "Fake Terror: The Road to Dictatorship", Michael Rivero states that "It's the oldest trick in the book, dating back to Roman times: creating the enemies you need" (p. 1). The strategy is quite simple: individuals create a crisis so that they can then introduce their desired solution. Are there recent, modern examples of state-sponsored terrorism? Unfortunately, the answer to that question seems to be "Yes".

Operation Northwoods

The first example is in 1962. The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Lyman L. Lemnitzer, and his fellow JCS members wanted to remove Castro from Cuba. Exactly what interests Lemnitzer and his fellow warhawks represented are unclear. However, one thing is apparent: these military men considered Castro an impediment to be expunged by means of overt war.

According to James Bamford, former Washington investigative producer for ABC, the Joint Chiefs of Staff planned to engineer several terrorist acts to instigate war (p. 82):

According to secret and long-hidden documents obtained for Body of Secrets, the Joint Chiefs of Staff drew up and approved plans for what may be the most corrupt plan ever created by the US government. In the name of anticommunism, they proposed launching a secret and bloody war of terrorism against their own country in order to trick the American public into supporting an ill-conceived war they intended to launch against Cuba.

Codenamed Operation Northwoods, the plan, which had the written approval of the Chairman and every member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, called for innocent people to be shot on American streets; for boats carrying refugees fleeing Cuba to be sunk on the high seas; for a wave of violent terrorism to be launched in Washington, DC, Miami and elsewhere.

People would be framed for bombings they did not commit; planes would be hijacked. Using phony evidence, all of it would be blamed on Castro, thus giving Lemnitzer and his cabal the excuse, as well as the public and international backing, they needed to launch their war.

Northwoods even called for the military to turn on itself (p. 84):

Among the actions recommended was "a series of well-coordinated incidents to take place in and around" the US Navy Base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. This included dressing "friendly" Cubans in Cuban military uniforms and then have them "start riots near the main gate of the base. Others would pretend to be saboteurs inside the base. Ammunition would be blown up, fires started, aircraft sabotaged, mortars fired at the base with damage to installations".

Operation Northwoods would draw upon history as well, using the 1898 explosion aboard the battleship Maine in Havana harbour as inspiration (p. 84):

"We could blow up a US ship in Guantanamo Bay and blame Cuba," they proposed; "casualty lists in US newspapers would cause a helpful wave of national indignation."

The attempt to create a Cuban terrorist threat makes it clear that the US government has no reservations about using state-sponsored terrorism to achieve its ends.

American Imperialism and the Terrorist Threat

However, it is in the Oklahoma City bombing of 1995 that one sees the tangible enactment of modern-day state-sponsored terrorism. Many Americans have been taught that loners Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols, fuelled by militia-inspired conspiracy theories and white supremacist propaganda, perpetrated one of the worst terrorist acts in American history all by themselves.

What came out of the Oklahoma City bombing? Former Czechoslovakian Communist Party Secretariat member Jan Kozak's "pressure from above" went to work and passed oppressive legislation: the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996. This Act made no one safer and threw the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution into the wastebasket. The pincers clamped down a little bit harder on the American people.

Presently, America finds itself in the midst of a tumultuous conflict because of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the Pentagon and the World Trade Center. This begs the obvious question: was this attack state-sponsored? Remember the earlier contention that the majority of terrorism is state-sponsored. Terrorists just do not have the resources, the money or the expertise without the aid of a government or factions within a government. It is still too early to know all of the facts and details surrounding the events of September 11. However, there is evidence suggesting that the attack was no exception to the rule. The investigation of government complicity begins with an examination of the evidence for government foreknowledge. Warnings were received at the highest levels of government. These and other eye-opening revelations have many people asking why the US government did not move to stop bin Laden and al-Qa'ida. This question can be answered with a question: why move against bin Laden and al-Qa'ida if they are your assets?

The story of the dreaded al-Qa'ida terrorist network begins with Zbigniew Brzezinski, President Carter's National Security Advisor. In his 1997 book, The Grand Chessboard: American Primacy and Geostrategic Objectives, Brzezinski provides readers with the motivation for the creation of a terrorist threat. He begins (p. xii):

The last decade of the twentieth century has witnessed a tectonic shift in world affairs. For the first time ever, a non-Eurasian power has emerged not only as a key arbiter of Eurasian power relations but also as the world's paramount. The defeat and collapse of the Soviet Union was the final step in the rapid ascendance of a Western Hemisphere power, the United States, as the sole and, indeed, the first truly global power ...

Brzezinski celebrates the fact that America is being transformed into a world empire. However, he identifies a distinct threat to America's ascendancy to the position of sole global power: "The attitude of the American public toward the external projection of American power has been much more ambivalent" (p. 24). Apparently, the citizenry's aversion towards imperialistic policies, which Brzezinski euphemistically interprets as ambivalence, is an obstacle to the empire's expansion. After all, there are still plenty of patriots who understand that Brzezinski's expansionistic "geostrategy" is irreconcilable with the tenets of Americanism.

This sense of awareness has been a major obstacle to the foreign policy elites that Brzezinski represents. Thus far, enough patriots know that none of the "Freedom Documents" (i.e., the Constitution, Bill of Rights, etc.) makes concessions for the arbitrary extension of America's authority through brutish military expeditions. As a sovereign nation itself, America is supposed to honour the autonomy of other countries and is not to initiate militaristic campaigns unless she is threatened. Yet, Brzezinski believes that adherence to such principles could provoke worldwide social upheaval (p. 30):

America's withdrawal from the world, or because of the sudden emergence of a successful rival, would produce massive international instability. It would promote global anarchy.

Brzezinski continues further on in hyperbolic fashion (p. 194):

Without sustained and directed American involvement, before long the forces of global disorder could come to dominate the world scene.

In other words, the promotion and practice of representative government amongst other nations would lead to doomsday itself. In such statements, the former National Security Advisor reveals the authoritarian features of his bizarre eschatology. According to Brzezinski's Weltanschauung, those who cherish individual liberties and the sovereignty of their respective nations constitute the "forces of global disorder"; these forces must be defeated or they will invariably cause the apocalypse--so public opinion must be altered. (Brzezinski fails to mention that such a doomsday will only mean the end for him and his elitist comrades.) Brzezinski cites a very interesting historical example (p. 25):

The public supported America's engagement in World War II largely because of the shock effect of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

Ah, an option presents itself! Mass consensus could be facilitated through mass trauma. In fact, the engineering of widespread compliance is an essential constituent in the implementation of Brzezinski's foreign policy. In an exemplary moment of self-incrimination so endemic to elitist tracts, Brzezinski pens a damning confession (p. 211):

Moreover, as America becomes an increasingly multi-cultural society, it may find it more difficult to fashion a consensus on foreign policy issues, except in the circumstance of a truly massive and widely perceived direct external threat.

A readily exploitable menace, whether genuine or promulgated, is the solution.

Brzezinski began the construction of his "direct external threat" years before he wrote The Grand Chessboard. In an interview with the French magazine Le Nouvel Observateur, the former national security adviser made a stunning confession that will change the history books forever (Blum, p. 1):

Q: The former director of the CIA, Robert Gates, stated in his memoirs [From the Shadows] that American intelligence services began to aid the Mujahadeen in Afghanistan six months before the Soviet intervention. In this period you were the national security adviser to President Carter. You therefore played a role in this affair. Is that correct?

Brzezinski: Yes. According to the official version of history, CIA aid to the Mujahadeen began during 1980, that is to say, after the Soviet Army invaded Afghanistan, December 24, 1979. But the reality, secretly guarded until now, is completely otherwise. Indeed, it was July 3, 1979, that President Carter signed the first directive for secret aid to the opponents of the pro-Soviet regime in Kabul. And that very day, I wrote a note to the President in which I explained to him that in my opinion this aid was going to induce a Soviet military intervention.

Q: Despite this risk, you were an advocate of this covert action. But perhaps you yourself desired this Soviet entry into war and looked to provoke it?

B: It isn't quite that. We didn't push the Russians to intervene, but we knowingly increased the probability that they would.

Re-education and the Creation of the Taliban

Having encouraged the Soviets to invade Afghanistan, Brzezinski now had a pretext for radicalising and arming a population that would be used at a future date as a "direct external threat" to the United States. Part of the radicalisation process included the brainwashing of children under the guise of education. The Washington Post's Joe Stephens and David B. Ottaway report (pp. 1-2):

In the twilight of the Cold War, the United States spent millions of dollars to supply Afghan schoolchildren with textbooks filled with violent images and militant Islamic teachings, part of covert attempts to spur resistance to the Soviet occupation.

The "Primers", which were filled with talk of jihad and featured drawings of guns, bullets, soldiers and mines, have served since then as the Afghan school system's core curriculum. Even the Taliban used the American-produced books, though the radical movement scratched out human faces in keeping with its strict fundamentalist code.

Stephens and Ottaway identify the governmental and educational organisations involved in development of the textbooks (p. 4):

Published in the dominant Afghan languages of Dari and Pashtu, the textbooks were developed in the early 1980s under an AID [Agency for International Development] grant to the University of Nebraska-Omaha and its Center for Afghanistan Studies. The agency spent $51 million on the university's education programs in Afghanistan from 1984 to 1994.

Under this project, the images and talk of violence were craftily intermingled with legitimate education (p. 4):

Children were taught to count with illustrations showing tanks, missiles and land mines, agency officials said. They acknowledged that at the time it also suited US interests to stoke hatred of foreign invaders.

An examination of a textbook produced shocking results (p. 5):

An aid-worker in the region reviewed an unrevised 100-page book and counted 43 pages containing violent images or passages.

The writers of the Washington Post story go on to provide a specific example of the material that is nothing less than appalling (pp. 5-6):

One page from the texts of that period shows a resistance fighter with a bandolier and a Kalashnikov slung from his shoulder. The soldier's head is missing.

Above the soldier is a verse from the Koran. Below is a Pashtu tribute to the mujaheddin [sic], who are described as obedient to Allah. Such men will sacrifice their wealth and life itself to impose Islamic law on the government, the text says.

This social engineering project successfully transformed Muslim children into conscienceless killing machines. Many would go on to join al-Qa'ida, the terrorist network headed up by Osama bin Laden. An heir to a Saudi construction fortune, bin Laden went to Afghanistan in 1979 to fight the Soviets. Bin Laden eventually came to head the Maktab al-Khidamar, also known as the MAK. It was through this front organisation that money, arms and fighters were supplied to the Afghan war. However, according to MSNBC's Michael Moran, there is more to the story (p. 2):

What the CIA bio conveniently fails to specify (in its unclassified form, at least) is that the MAK was nurtured by Pakistan's state security services, the Inter-Services Intelligence agency, or ISI, the CIA's primary conduit for conducting the covert war against Moscow's occupation.

Even after the war, bin Laden was on good terms with the CIA (p. 3):

Though he has come to represent all that went wrong with the CIA's reckless strategy there, by the end of the Afghan war in 1989, bin Laden was still viewed by the agency as something of a dilettante--a rich Saudi boy gone to war and welcomed home by the Saudi monarchy he so hated as something of a hero.

Bin Laden would later receive three necessary provisions from factions of government. These essentials would allow him and al-Qa'ida to conduct one of the worst terrorist attacks ever conceived. These constituents were: (1) protection courtesy of highly influential, well-placed shepherds in government; (2) government funding; and (3) government training. Without a beat, individuals in positions of authority delivered.

Both Democrat and Republican administrations protected bin Laden. Undaunted by Osama's attack on the USS Cole and bombings of the embassies, this non-partisan aegis consistently insulated the terrorist and his network. President William Jefferson Clinton, a Democrat, shielded bin Laden and company from the hand of justice in Sudan. Mansoor Ijaz revealed this fact in the December 5, 2001, Los Angeles Times (Ijaz, p. 1):

President Clinton and his national security team ignored several opportunities to capture Osama bin Laden and his terrorist associates, including one as late as last year ...

From 1996 to 1998, I opened unofficial channels between Sudan and the Clinton Administration. I met with officials in both countries, including Clinton, US National Security Advisor Samuel R. "Sandy" Berger and Sudan's President and intelligence chief.

President Omar Hassan Ahmed Bashir, who wanted terrorism sanctions against Sudan lifted, offered the arrest and extradition of bin Laden and detailed intelligence data about the global networks constructed by Egypt's Islamic Jihad, Iran's Hezbollah and the Palestinian Hamas. Among those in the networks were the two hijackers who piloted commercial airliners into the World Trade Center. The silence of the Clinton Administration in responding to these offers was deafening.

Sudan offered Bill Clinton the ideal opportunity to apprehend bin Laden and prevent future terrorist attacks. Instead, the US pressured Sudan to make bin Laden leave, "despite their [the Sudanese] feeling that he could be monitored better in Sudan than elsewhere" (pp. 1-2). It was off to Afghanistan for bin Laden and his merry, marauding band of cut-throats and murderers (p. 2):

Bin Laden left for Afghanistan, taking with him: Ayman Zawahiri, considered by the US to be the chief planner of the September 11 attacks; Mamdouh Mahmud Salim, who traveled frequently to Germany to obtain electronic equipment for al-Qaeda; Wadih El-Hage, bin Laden's personal secretary and roving emissary, now serving a life sentence in the US for his role in the 1998 US Embassy bombings in Tanzania and Kenya; and Fazul Abdullah Mohammed and Saif Adel, also accused of carrying out the embassy attacks. Some of these men are now among the FBI's 22 most-wanted terrorists.

In Afghanistan, the Taliban protected bin Laden and his al-Qa'ida network. There is an odd symmetry revealed through this relationship. Both bin Laden and the Taliban were little more than a creation of the CIA. Selig Harrison, a South Asian expert from the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, made this known at a conference in London. The Times of India records Harrison's revelations (p. 1):

LONDON -- The Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) worked in tandem with Pakistan to create the "monster" that is today Afghanistan's ruling Taliban, a leading US expert on South Asia said here.

"I warned them that we were creating a monster," Selig Harrison from the Woodrow Wilson International Centre [sic] for Scholars said at the conference here last week on "Terrorism and Regional Security: Managing the Challenges in Asia".

To the average American, the Taliban might have been a rogue gallery of maniacs that comprised a fanatical outlaw government and nothing more. However, Harrison makes it clear that the Taliban was a well-coordinated intelligence project (p. 2):

The Taliban are not just recruits from "madrassas" (Muslim theological schools) but are on the payroll of the ISI (Inter-Services Intelligence, the intelligence wing of the Pakistani government).

A Covert Government Agenda

The government had all the means necessary to detect and prevent the September 11 attacks.

Researcher Russ Kick makes a significant statement concerning this point (p. 1):

The US has the Central Intelligence Agency, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the National Security Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the National Reconnaissance Office, the Secret Service, and a host of other intelligence and security agencies. These agencies employ Echelon, which monitors the majority of electronic communication in the world; Carnivore, which intercepts email; Tempest, a technology that can read a computer monitor's display from over a block away; Keyhole satellites that have a resolution of four inches; and other spy technologies, probably most of which we don't know about.

In 2001, the US spent $30 billion on intelligence gathering and an additional $12 billion on counterterrorism. With all these resources, and more, we're supposed to believe that the government didn't have the slightest inkling that terrorists were planning to attack the United States, much less hijack planes and send them careening into major landmarks.

After reviewing the facts, one must consider a more sinister possibility: that certain factions in the United States government created the bin Laden menace and actually desired the attacks. Whether Moran realises it or not, his article, "Bin Laden Comes Home to Roost", reveals evidence that the Agency may have been equipping bin Laden's network for purposes other than fighting the Soviets (p. 4):

The CIA, ever mindful of the need to justify its "mission", had conclusive evidence by the mid-1980s of the deepening crisis of infrastructure within the Soviet Union. The CIA, as its deputy director Robert Gates acknowledged under congressional questioning in 1992, had decided to keep that evidence from President Reagan and his top advisors and instead continued to grossly exaggerate Soviet military and technological capabilities in its annual "Soviet Military Power" report right up to 1990.

Now, a troubling question arises. Given the impending collapse of the Soviet Union and the inexorable demise of communism, bin Laden's involvement in the crusade against the Soviets seems inconsequential. More succinctly, it is irrelevant. Yet, despite his axiomatic obsolescence in the anti-communist campaign, bin Laden continued to receive funds. Since such financing did not represent an investment in the ongoing war with the Soviets, there must have been ulterior motives for maintaining bin

Laden's network.

What was the true agenda that motivated the CIA to support what would later become an international Frankenstein's monster? Former CIA Associate Deputy Director of Operations Theodore Shackley may have already answered this question in his book, The Third Option (p. 17):

Senior intelligence officers like myself, who had experience in paramilitary operations, have always insisted that the United States should also consider the third option: the use of guerrilla warfare, counterinsurgency techniques and covert action to achieve policy goals ... Political warfare is very often the stitch in time that eliminates bloodier and more costly alternatives.

It is possible that the September 11 attack represents a tangible enactment of Shackley's third option. Bin Laden's ties to the intelligence community certainly reinforce such a contention. Were al-Qa'ida and bin Laden considered part of a third option to facilitate political and social change in the United States?

Consider a conversation that took place between former DEA agent Michael Levine and a CIA agent. It suggests that the CIA is ready and willing to use the third option in America. This discourse is recorded in The Triangle of Death (Levine, p. 353):

"How can you be so good at what you do and have so little understanding of what really pulls your strings? Don't you realize that there are factions in your government that want this to happen--an emergency situation too hot for a constitutional government to handle."

"To what end?" I asked.

"A suspension of the Constitution, of course. The legislation is already in place. All perfectly legal. Check it out yourself. It's called FEMA. Federal Emergency Management Agency. 'Turn in your guns, you antigovernment rabble-rousers. And who would be king, Michael?'"

"CIA," I said.

Terrorism in the United States is one of the methods employed to generate the changes desired by Levine's CIA friend. It has provided a pretext for the introduction of draconian laws and measures previously unthinkable. Representative Henry Gonzalez recognised this fact when he made the following comment (Cuddy, p. 164):

The truth of the matter is that you do have those standby provisions, and the statutory emergency plans are there whereby you could, in the name of stopping terrorism, apprehend, invoke the military, and arrest Americans and hold them in detention camps.

Add to the list of "statutory emergency plans" the Patriot Act, passed in response to the September 11 attacks. According to Washington Post staff writer Jim McGee (pp 1-2), this law:

... empowers the government to shift the primary mission of the FBI from solving crimes to gathering domestic intelligence. In addition, the Treasury Department has been charged with building a financial intelligence-gathering system whose data can be accessed by CIA.

Most significantly, the CIA will have the authority for the first time to influence FBI surveillance operations inside the United States and to obtain evidence gathered by federal grand juries and criminal wiretaps.

The Patriot Act is designed to transform America into a surveillance society. Wiretapping has been expanded to invade the privacy of a larger portion of the populace. In the name of fighting terrorism, the prying eyes of the government can now watch those merely deemed "suspicious". Furthermore, wiretaps are no longer just a tool in criminal investigations. Under the Act, they become a means of gathering information on the citizenry. Unfortunately, the surprises do not stop there. The Act also lifts many of the constraints on the CIA's power. McGee writes (p. 4):

The new law also gives the CIA unprecedented access to the most powerful investigative weapon in the federal law enforcement's arsenal: the federal grand jury. The grand juries have nearly unlimited power to gather evidence in secret, including testimony, wiretap transcripts, phone records, business records or medical records ...

The new law permits allow the FBI to give grand jury information to the CIA without a court order, as long as the information concerns foreign intelligence or international terrorism. The information can also be shared widely throughout the national security establishment ...

All of the above points to a very frightening conclusion: there are some factions of government that consider terrorism to be a tool of social engineering. The direction society is being steered by this "tool" is even more frightening.

Terrorism: A Tool of the Ruling Elite

Terrorism is being used to keep the rabble in line on behalf of an elite that wishes to maintain and expand its power. In The Power Elite, sociologist C. Wright Mills introduces these powerful individuals (pp. 3-4):

The power elite is composed of men whose positions enable them to transcend the ordinary environments of ordinary men and women; they are in positions to make decisions having major consequences. Whether they do or do not make such decisions is less important than the fact that they do occupy such pivotal positions: their failure to act, their failure to make decisions, is itself an act that is often of greater consequence than the decisions they do make. For they are in command of the major hierarchies and organisations of modern society. They rule the big corporations. They run the machinery of the state and claim its prerogatives. They direct the military establishment. They occupy the strategic command posts of the social structure, in which are now centered the effective means of the power and the wealth and the celebrity which they enjoy.

Talk of oligarchs might tend to conjure pictures of mediaeval feudal lords. However, a Federal Reserve study points out to elitism being alive, well, and existing in the "Land of the Free", the United States. In his Secrets of the Temple, former Washington Post editor William Greider quotes the study (p. 39):

... 54 percent of the total net financial assets were held by the 2 percent of families with the greatest amount of such assets and 86 percent by the top 10 percent; 55 percent of the families in the sample had zero or negative net worth ...

This concentration of wealth in so few hands certainly suggests that there is a ruling class. It is highly naive to believe that this elite does not wield a great deal of influence over civilisation. In her book, Beyond The Ruling Class: Strategic Elites In Modern Society, Professor Suzanne Keller states (p. 3): The notion of a stratum elevated above the mass of men may prompt approval, indifference, or despair, but regardless of how men feel about it, the fact remains that their lives, fortunes, and fate are and have long been dependent on what a small number of men in high places think and do.

Former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency William Colby recognised the existence of a network of bluebloods. When former Nebraska Senator and Vietnam War hero John W. DeCamp was looking into elites' involvement in child abuse, drug running, gun running, and satanic ritual-murder, Colby warned him of the hidden aristocracy and their power (DeCamp, pp. ix-x):

"What you have to understand, John, is that sometimes there are forces and events too big, too powerful, with so much at stake for other people or institutions, that you cannot do anything about them, no matter how evil or wrong they are and no matter how dedicated or sincere you are or how much evidence you have. That is simply one of the hard facts of life you have to face. You have done your part. You have tried to expose the evil and wrongdoing. It has hurt you terribly. But it has not killed you up to this point. I am telling you, get out of this before it does.

"Sometimes things are just too big for us to deal with, and we have to step aside and let history take its course."

Probably the greatest source of "insider" information comes from Oxford professor (and mentor to former President Bill Clinton) the late Carroll Quigley. After being close to the pro-British, Anglophile faction of the elite, Quigley wrote (p. 950):

There does exist, and has existed for a generation, an international Anglophile network which operates, to some extent, in the way the radical Right believes the Communists act. In fact, this network, which we may identify as the Round Table Groups, has no aversion to cooperating with the Communists, or any other groups, and frequently does so. I know of the operations of this network because I have studied it for twenty years and was permitted for two years, in the early 1960s, to examine its papers and secret records. I have no aversion to it and to many of its aims and have, for much of my life, been close to it and to many of its instruments.

I have objected, both in the past and recently, to a few of its policies (notably to its belief that England was an Atlantic rather than a European Power and must be allied, or even federated, with the United States and must remain isolated from Europe), but in general my chief difference of opinion is that it wishes to remain unknown, and I believe its role in history is significant enough to be known.

Quigley also informs us that the ruling class has a very low opinion of the common people. He voices this elitist sentiment when he refers to the commoners as "the petty bourgeoisie ..." (pp. 1243-1244).

So why is the great mass of human civilisation unaware of the oligarchs' presence among them? In The Architecture of Modern Political Power, Daniel Pouzner explains why (p. 16):

The establishment cloaks itself in cultural camouflage, employing tactics for which it almost seamlessly maintains plausible deniability. Subtle, ubiquitous, often implicit propaganda fosters a broad public acceptance and embrace of the authority of the establishment, and of the establishment's definitions of good and evil, preventing the public from seriously contemplating the reality that the establishment is itself quite often evil by its own definition. The establishment reiterates the mantra that the President of the United States is "the leader of the free world", but a free world has no leader. The President of the United States is simply the most obvious spearhead of the authority of the establishment. He gathers strength at the expense of the world's freedom.

Generally, an errant public attributes the results of the establishment's meddlesome actions to happenstance, or to motives viewed as essentially innocuous or virtuous. The design is irrefutably evident only in the pattern of results, or by actually showing proof of meddling. The public has been systemically conditioned to ignore such patterns, and to condemn those who draw attention to them (derisively calling them "conspiracy theorists"). Thus, controlling access to and dissemination of information that constitutes proof of meddling suffices in large part to protect the establishment program from exposure. The compartmentalization of the establishment's covert apparatus assures that those exposures which do transpire cause only limited damage.

Bush/Bin Laden Family Links

Are there any ties between the power elites and the current terrorist network? The answer to that question lies with the Bush dynasty. Neither Bush Senior nor Bush Junior can be described as Presidents in the Lincoln tradition. They do not come from lower class backgrounds and modest upbringings. Webster Tarpley and Anton Chaitkin's in-depth investigation of George Senior led them to propose the following in their excellent book, George Bush: The Unauthorized Biography (p. 9):

One of our basic theses is that George Bush [Senior] is, and considers himself to be, an oligarch.

In an article for the London Daily Mail, Peter Allen points out a connection between George W. Bush and Osama's brother, Salem bin Laden (pp. 1-2):

Incredibly, Salem went on to become a business partner of the man who is leading the hunt for his brother. In the 1970s, he and George W. Bush were founders of the Arbusto Energy oil company in Mr Bush's home state of Texas.

As he built his own business empire, Salem bin Laden had an intriguing relationship with the President-to-be. In 1978, he appointed James Bath, a close friend of Mr Bush who served with him in the Air National Guard, as his representative in Houston, Texas. It was in that year that Mr Bath invested $50,000 ... in Mr Bush's company, Arbusto. It was never revealed whether he was investing his own money or somebody else's. There was even speculation that the money might have been from Salem. In the same year, Mr Bath bought Houston Gulf Airport on behalf of the Saudi Arabian multimillionaire.

Three years ago, Mr Bush said the $50,000 investment in Arbusto was the only financial dealing he had with Mr Bath.

The connection between the bin Ladens and the Bush family does not end with Arbusto Energy.

On the BBC's Newsnight program, Greg Palast stated (p. 5):

Young George also received fees as director of a subsidiary of Carlyle Corporation, a little-known private company which has, in just a few years of its founding, become one of America's biggest defence contractors. His father, Bush Senior, is also a paid adviser. And what became embarrassing was the revelation that the bin Ladens held a stake in Carlyle, sold just after September 11.

These business connections may explain why the Bush Administration frustrated the FBI's efforts to investigate Abdullah and Omar bin Laden. Investigations may have demonstrated that Osama was not the "black sheep" of the family. Instead, they may have shown that terrorism was actually the bin Laden family business. This would have associated the Bush family with terrorists, something the current President could not allow to happen.

For neo-conservatives, the portrait of the Bush family as a criminal syndicate with ties to questionable characters is reprehensible. However, this contention can be based upon a major precedent.

Webster Tarpley and Anton Chaitkin's investigation into former President George Herbert Walker Bush's background led to a startling discovery: that "The President's family fortune was largely a result of the Hitler project" (p. 28).

The Bush dynasty's connections with the bin Ladens suggest that the family's collusion with enemies of the United States has never ceased.

A State-sponsored Sociopolitical Project

Re-examining Martín-Baró's previous contention, that terrorism is part and parcel of a "government-imposed sociopolitical project", one is faced with some very disturbing questions.

What will be the results of this "government-imposed sociopolitical project"? Where exactly is all of this state-sponsored terrorism leading?

Quigley provides a fragmentary glimpse of the outcome in Tragedy and Hope. The Oxford professor reveals that a cognitive elite, arbitrarily dubbed "experts", "will replace the democratic voter in control of the political system" (p. 866).

With representation for the masses removed from the picture, what kind of life can the common man expect to live? Quigley (p. 886) declares that this will be a system where the individual's:

... freedom and choice will be controlled within very narrow alternatives by the fact that he will be numbered from birth and followed, as a number, through his educational training, his required military or other public service, his tax contributions, his health and medical requirements, and his final retirement and death benefits.

There you have it. George Orwell's 1984, built al-Qa'ida style!

RICO Action Filed Against Bush and Others in 911 Conspiracy

911 maintenance worker claims government had prior knowledge or actively planned 911

12 Nov 2004

By Greg Szymanski

A maintenance worker on duty at the World Trade Center on 9/11 has filed a federal lawsuit against President George W. Bush and others in government, alleging they had prior knowledge or actively planned the attacks in order to launch wars against Afghanistan and Iraq.

The 237 page civil complaint, filed October 22, 2004, under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania on behalf of William Rodriguez by Philadelphia attorney Phillip J. Berg, claims President Bush and others engaged in racketeering activity in violation of 18 U.S.C. Section 1962c.

The complaint seeks relief for Rodriguez based on 13 counts, including Misprision of a Felony, Misprision of Treason, relief under the Anti Terrorism Act, relief under the War Crimes Act and relief for and from Crimes Against Humanity.

Berg said Tuesday from his Lafayette Hill, Pennsylvania, law office that "once my client, Mr. Rodriguez, has had his day in court, President Bush and the other 55 named defendants will finally be held accountable for the deaths of 2,993 persons from 83 countries.

"My client is enthusiastic, articulate and was a hero on 9/11, rescuing more than 15 people before being one of the last persons to exit the North Tower before it collapsed," said Berg. "He will testify that he distinctly heard explosions prior to the airplanes striking the towers, providing further credibility to the theory that explosives were strategically placed in the buildings in order to bring about their collapse.

"My client will also testify that approximately three weeks prior to 9/11, he saw one of the hijackers walking through the basement area of the Towers."

Berg admits that Rodriguez's complaint will "shock and offend" many Americans, but he urges critics to first read the compelling allegations contained in the RICO complaint posted on his website at www.911forthetruth.com.

Berg, a former Deputy Attorney General of Pennsylvania for 8 years and long-time civil rights activist, previously filed a RICO claim against Bush and his cronies on behalf of 9/11 widow Ellen Mariani. Mariani has recently dropped her suit citing health concerns.

"The official story of what took place on 9/11 is a boldface lie," Berg strongly maintains. "Mr. Rodriguez does not pretend to have complete knowledge of the full and definitive account of how and by who the attacks were carried out. But the information reported by independent investigators and viewed in the light of common sense, as well as the law of physics, demonstrates that the 'Official Story,' examined closely, is not credible.

Berg is alarmed that the government's story contains glaring inconsistencies, implausibilities and inaccuracies. He also contends that the mainstream media has "dropped the ball" and purposely ignored studious analysis because to do so would reveal that the government is lying to us.

Berg claims he has sent out 2,600 press releases regarding the Rodriguez action and to date has not received one phone call from any major media outlet.

"They are basically ignoring the most important story in American history. It's a cover-up at all the highest levels, including the media conglomerates," said Berg. "However, it is interesting that I was recently contacted by Al Jazeera and will be doing an extensive interview on November 27 for an upcoming March 2005 special they are doing on our government's 9/11 cover-up."

Under special pleading rules for a federal RICO action, Berg is allowed to specifically plead facts showing a conspiracy among the defendants in the events before, during and after 9/11.

The detailed complaint shows a web of government conspiracy dating back to the late 1970's when Osama bin Laden was first put on the government payroll as a CIA operative to fight the Soviets in Afghanistan.

Berg claims this web of government deceit and financial backing continues all the way up to days just preceding 9/11 as witnesses will testify and records will reveal that the alleged hijackers were actually on the government payroll. The complaint goes on to say that the defendants deliberately concealed the fact that they had ample warnings of terrorist attacks and failed to act on them in order to carry out a full-blown war on terrorism as a means to justify their neo-conservative political goals.

Regarding 9/11 itself, the Rodriguez action aims to prove the following main points:

- The World Trade Center, as well as WTC Building #7, were destroyed by a controlled demolition, as clearly proven by the laws of physics and that this demolition could have only been an "inside job."

- An unprecedented nationwide "ground stop" order and stand down of NORAD must have had White House approval since it prevented even the military from flying, allowing the 9/11 attacks to proceed without interruption..

- The defendants conspired to and did allow the attacks to happen by delaying military interceptions of the hijacked planes in the following manner:

- Flight 11 (North Tower) and Flight 175 (South Tower) could have been intercepted by fighter jets before collision, but were not due to an ordered "stand down" of NORAD defense systems on the morning in question. Evidence will also show that the flight patterns taken and the manner in which the sophisticated jets were handled could not have been accomplished by untrained, novice pilots with only box cutters. The evidence will further show that Flight 11 and Flight 175's transponders may have been dismantled by government insiders, making them both invisible on radar screens and thus allowing for the airplanes to be guided by a remote control into the WTC by a government system called Global Hawk.

- Flight 77 not only could have been intercepted by fighter jets but was allowed to fly uncontested a full 50 minutes before striking the Pentagon. Evidence will further show that the object that hit the Pentagon was not a commercial airliner but in fact a government guided missile.

- The crash of Flight 93 in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, raises serious additional questions which will show that it was actually shot down by government fighter jets and not brought down due to a terrorist struggle in the cockpit.

- FEMA, which quickly removed the WTC, Pentagon and Flight 93 debris before they could be independently examined, maintains a "Black-Op" shadow government designed to replace the elected government of the United States.

- The "insider trading" on American Airlines and other 9/11 affected stocks was subject to an ongoing cover-up to conceal the identities of those who had actual prior knowledge of the 9/11 attacks.

In Rodriguez's complaint, this "Black-Op" shadow government is referred to as the "Enterprise."

According to Berg, facts will eventually show the Enterprise and the named defendants are now engaged in an orchestrated dismantling of the American government resulting in martial law with those resisters placed in secret internment camps now under construction through the authority granted to FEMA. Camps have supposedly been constructed in 13 different locations under the Bush administration, including locations in Tooley Lake and Avon Lake California.

Since RICO allows for pleadings to show a conspiracy after-the-fact, the Rodriguez action further cites the 11th hour passage of the Patriot Act, Election Fraud in 2000 and 2004 as further evidence of the Enterprise's intentions to legally by-pass the U.S. Constitution and silence its critics.

"I am now on my way to Ohio and will be looking into the legal issues for the initiation of an election's fraud lawsuit there," said Berg. "It's the same people doing the same thing in order to satisfy their neo-conservative agenda.

"Some facts cannot be denied," continues Berg. "Clearly 9/11 was carried out by more than one person. Therefore, by definition there was a conspiracy. It's just a matter of proving who all the players involved really are. What we are arguing is that the true conspirators have abused their enormous power and the trust of the American people to concoct and sell to the world a false conspiracy theory, to justify war and mass murder for economic and political gain. Since the neo-cons, allied with the President, said in almost so many words that they wished for a "New Pearl Harbor," why then should we just categorically dismiss without proper investigation that they actually brought it about by planning 9/11?

"Why has there been no full and transparent investigation? Isn't it shocking that the federal government grabbed up all the evidence- not a trace of Flight 93 and the others - and that no police authority has conducted a true criminal investigation into 3,000 homicides? Instead of due process of law, government officials and the mass media have convicted Osama bin Laden and had names and photos of his 19 accomplices on the internet, literally within hours of the attacks.

"The truth is that there has been no definitive evidence that there were any Arabs on those planes and even less proof concerning the supposed identities of the alleged hijackers."

Berg notes that the recent 9/11 Commission report failed to include statements made by Rodriguez when he recently testified before the Commission. He said they simply rubber-stamped the "Official Story" put out by the government.

"The Commission is a collection of government and intelligence insiders," added Berg. "They failed to even mention the great body of evidence that suggests the "Official Story" cannot be true. From the facts, many contained in this complaint, it out to be obvious that there is a cover-up, but they simply admitted only to bureaucratic mistakes, which no one to date is being held accountable."

Rodriguez, proclaimed a hero in the media for risking his life to save many others after the 9/11 attacks, said he feels a "personal responsibility to find out the truth" no matter what it takes.

"Somebody has to take action to reveal the truth," he said. "If suing President Bush is what I have to do to accomplish that, so be it."

Rodriguez added that the events of 9/11 are directly related to the deaths of thousands of people in two ongoing wars, attacks on Constitutional liberties in the United States, the abuse and torture of detainees around the world and the use by the United States of depleted uranium and other weapons of mass destruction in Iraq.

Berg said he has just completed serving notice on all the defendants listed in the lawsuit and is awaiting an Answer to be filed in federal court.

"I expect them to seek a Motion to Dismiss and block discovery and deposition testimony any way they can," said Berg.

Some of the other defendants in the lawsuit besides President Bush include the President's father, George H. Bush, Gov. Jeb Bush, Neil Mallon Bush, Marvin Bush, Vice President Cheney, Defense Secretary Rumsfeld, Secretary of State Colin Powell, Condoleeza Rice, resigned Attorney General John Ashcroft, Richard Perle and Paul Wolfowitz.
