Author's note
This book represents, at best, a thumbnail sketch; ceremonial dress and No. 1 Dress (the old 'Blues') have been excluded. It should be emphasized that the information given is that which was authorized in spring 1976. By publication date it is likely that some details of badges, buttons, belts and headwear will have changed. For reasons of space certain supporting Corps have had to be omitted altogether.

I would like to express my thanks to all my colleagues in the Ministry of Defence, in particular Maj Frank Croxford; to the many regimental secretaries and other individuals who have helped in the supply and confirmation of uniform detail; and to Mrs R. Burdett who slaved away over a typewriter for so long. My special thanks are due to the staff of Soldier Magazine who have been most helpful in the supply of illustrations.

Standard Items and Terms

Unless specifically stated otherwise, the following may be assumed for each corps listed:

Officer’s SD: Infantry pattern, with Sam Browne belt. No. 2 Dress cap, khaki with brown chinstrap. Brown gloves and shoes. Light-khaki shirt and tie. Soldiers’ SD: English pattern. Medium-khaki shirt, dark-khaki tie, khaki wool gloves, black boots DMS or shoes. White waistbelt, rectangular brass buckle plate bearing regimental cap plate (for parade).

Buttons: All ‘brass’ (yellow anodized aluminium) except Royal Green Jackets, Royal Irish Rangers and Ghurka regiments (black).

Shoulder Titles: Only cavalry soldiers wear these in SD; officers and soldiers may wear them on shirtsleeve order or barrack jersey.

Jerseys: Standard pattern khaki, with round neck, worn in winter barrack, combat and fatigue dress; in summer the shirt is worn with sleeves rolled to 1 in. above elbows. 1975 dark-green barrack dress trousers are often seen, either with stable belt or dark-green ‘courlene’ working belt with matt black 1937-pattern fittings.

Ranking: Except for WOIs full-colour coats-of-arms, ranks, trade and skill-at-arms badges are white on khaki for all corps except those specified otherwise in text.

pattern are specifically mentioned in the body of the text. Lancer regiments have ‘quarter welts’ to their No. 1 Dress caps, running vertically from the band to the crown welt at front, back, and each side. Scottish regiments do not wear No. 1 or No. 2 Dress caps, having instead a Glengarry or bonnet in regimental colours, the badge worn on the left side; instead of the beret they wear a khaki bonnet with khaki toorie and the badge on the left, usually backed by a piece of regimental tartan. Officers and men of services (e.g., RAMC, RAOC, REME, RAPC, AAC) attached to an infantry or cavalry regiment will often wear some of the ‘tribal items’ of the single-point flaps, inset side pockets with rectangular flap, plain cuff without buttons, single rear vent; longer skirts than either of the Scottish pattern jackets. Highland pattern—As English but three front buttons, front ends of skirts rounded off, two rear vents. Lowland pattern—As Highland with slightly longer skirts.

Private, Grenadier Guards, wearing the Service Dress which replaced the Battle Dress. The red and blue No. 1 Dress cap has a plain brass edging, indicating rank. This is a peculiarity of Foot Guards; so is the ‘Trained Soldier’ badge on the sleeve. On the shoulder strap may be seen the regimental title ‘GG’ below the crest. (MOD)

Caps: The ‘Royal’ pattern No. 1 Dress cap worn by many regiments and corps is dark blue with red band and red crown piping. Only variations from this parent of the other, distinguishing the Service:

1. In cold and wet weather, officers and men of regiments and units of the Household Division and of the Royal Air Force Regiment wear No. 1 Dress, and will wear No. 2 Dress in the field. Artillery regiments and Royal Engineers wear a combination of No. 1 and No. 2 Dress. No. 2 Dress can also be worn by officers and men of other regiments and units, but only with the permission of the senior officer, and it is intended for the use of the officers and men of services (e.g., RAMC, RAOC, REME, RAPC, AAC) attached to an infantry or cavalry regiment.

(working title: Orders of Dress in the British Army)
Service Dress, General

In cavalry regiments the regimental cap badge is customarily worn on a cloth backing on the upper right arm by corporals and above, and below the warrant badge by WOs. Officers of cavalry and artillery usually wear a brown leather crossbelt and pouch with whistle on the chest; officers of engineers, Royal Signals, infantry and supporting services usually wear brown leather Sam Browne waistbelts with a supporting strap over the right shoulder.

Officers and soldiers may wear No. 1 Dress caps with No. 2 Dress for parades. On other occasions officers will wear either the khaki No. 2 Dress cap or regimental sidehat while soldiers will wear either the sidehat or the beret. Warrant Officers 1st Class (WOIs) will wear officer-pattern hats, gloves, shoes and embellishments.

OFFICERS' BADGES OF RANK

(worn on both shoulders in regimental pattern and colour)

Second Lieutenant, Lieutenant, Captain: Respectively one, two and three stars.

The Parachute Regiment

Facings: Maroon. Bt: Maroon. OSD: CB: Officers and WOIs, as cap badge but dark-bronze, lions face inwards. B: Brass, as cap badge. SSD: CB: As officers, silver. ST: Brass, ‘PARACHUTE’ in arc over ‘REGIMENT’ in arc.

Instead of DPM Temperature or Tropical Combat Dress the regiment wear the Denison Smock—a post-war development of the wartime garment—and Olive Drab Lightweight Trousers. A new smock is planned to replace the Denison, retaining its loose cut, ribbed woollen cuffs and crutch-strap, but in standard DPM camouflage. It will probably be worn with DPM trousers. Before the recent disbandment of the airborne brigade structure, the following distinctions were worn:

- Red, blue, red vertical stripes
- Blue and scarlet

 Officers in this Brigade wear black patent-leather shoulder belts (crimson for Gurkha Engineers) for parades. The belts have silver fittings—a breast badge, a lion’s-head mask (ram’s head for 2nd GR), chains and whistle. The black pouch bears a small silver badge. All fittings for Gurkha Engineers are gold. In No. 2 Dress, Gurkha soldiers may wear the khaki slouch hat with khaki turban and badge on the left side; or the black ‘pill-box’ Kilmarnock toorie according to regiment and frontal badge; or their rifle-green beret. Queen’s Gurkha Officers wear a strip of lace under their shoulder ranking; this is ¼-in. dark-green lace with a ¼-in. red centre stripe flanked by ⅛-in. green and ⅛-in. black stripes. British officers wear either No. 1 or No. 2 Dress caps, the latter with black chinstraps; berets; or side hats with a small badge mounted on a semi-spherical cord boss at the front, rough 1 in.–1 ¼ in. diameter.

2nd King Edward VII's Own Gurkha Rifles (The Sirmoor Rifles)

Facings: Scarlet. DC: Rifle-green, black piping, diced red and black band two squares deep, badge worn on upper red square; officers only. Badge mounted on scarlet boss on all officers’ headgear. SH: Rifle-green body, peak and tip, two buttons, officer’s badge boss top front. Piped tip: black for WOs, three red stripes for c/sigs and sgs, two for cpls, one for l/cpls. Soldier’s cap badge worn on side. Bt: Rifle-green. Cap-badge: Prince of Wales’s plume, scroll and coronet, worn on red backing, silver for officers, black for ORs. Kilmar-nock: Black toorie, dice band as DC; officers wear black badges without backing. Slouch hat badge: Soldiers' style, on piece black and red dice two squares wide by three high, two black squares to front, on left of turban. OSD: Scarlet ⅛/10-in. piping around collar as far as step. B: Black ball, Edwardian crown over entwined ‘ERI’ over crossed kukris, hilts and edges down. ST: Black, ‘2GR’. Ranking black on scarlet backing. Black gloves and Highland shoes. L: Black, left shoulder. Off parade, blackthorn walking stick. SSD: English. Ranking, black on scarlet. B: Semi-raised, as Cap-badge: Two kukris in saltire, hilts and edges down, over ‘6’, the whole ensigned with the crown, all in silver. Kilmarnock: Scarlet toorie. Slouch hat: Badge as above, left. OSD: Side hat, beret and SD cap badge, as above in miniature black boss (approx. 1 in. across). B: Black, with cap badge. In silver on upper arm, cap badge of 14th/20th The King’s Hussars. SSD: English. Ranking, black on rifle-green. ST: Black, ’6GR’. L. Rifle-green and black. Pipers wear a round silver brooch at the shoulder to hold the dark-green scarf, the pierced centre showing the cap badge.

7th Duke of Edinburgh’s Own Gurkha Rifles

Pioneer Sergeant, Royal Highland Fusiliers, in No. 2 Dress, 1967. Tradition requires every infantry battalion Pioneer Sergeant in the Army to wear a full beard and moustache. No other officer or soldier may wear a beard except for special medical reasons. The Glengarry dicing is red, white, and green; the axes badge is outlined red, on a khaki patch. The SD jacket is of Highland pattern, worn with trews in No. 5A (Mackenzie) tartan. The medal ribbons include an early Africa Star, showing that this long-service NCO fought in the early stages of the 1940–43 Africa campaign. (Soldier Magazine)

Chinstrap button, and the buttons spaced in threes, are regimental features.

_A3 Corporal, 10th Gurkha Rifles (Princess Mary’s Own), Tropical Parade Dress_

Heavily starched and creased Olive Drab uniform typical of British troops in the Far East, with regimental cap badge on typical Gurkha Kilmarnock. On the right shoulder would be worn the formation sign of the Singapore garrison, a black cat on yellow, and on the left the crossed white kukris on dark green of the Gurkha Infantry Brigade. The corporal is in the ‘unfix bayonets’ stance during guard mounting parade, in order to present his kukri for inspection. In traditional Rifles fashion, the rifle sling is worn slack.

_B1 Colour Bearer, Royal Hampshire Regiment_

Parade dress for most regiments consists of brightening up the No. 2 Dress with No. 1 Dress cap and various minor ‘tribal items’. Note sword strap wound around hilt, as customary for disembowed officers. The bandolier and the Regimental Colour are in the regimental facing colour, the latter bearing some of the battle-honours awarded during the regiment’s service; usually there are too many for more than a selection to be shown. Together with the Queen’s Colour, this flag embodies the entire history of the regiment; they are always accorded full military honours.

_B2 Sergeant, 5th Royal Inniskilling Dragoon Guards, No. 2 Dress_

This regiment shares with the Royal Irish Rangers the distinction of green No. 2 Dress trousers. The white horse of Hanover on green worn as an arm badge by all this regiment’s NCOs, recalls the origins of the British monarchy in the 18th century. The brassard indicates the Provost Sergeant in charge of Regimental Police.

_B3 Corporal, Royal Hussars, No. 2 Dress_

Crimson trousers and hat are inherited from the 11th Hussars, who also wore a red-brown beret with a 1-in. crimson headband without a badge. After amalgamation with the 10th Hussars the beret lost its headband but acquired the badge illustrated here on the No. 1 Dress hat, worn on a crimson oval-topped patch. This ‘English’-pattern jacket is worn by all soldiers except those of the Scottish Division. As in other cavalry regiments, the NCO wears a regimental badge above his chevrons on the right arm; WOs wear the badge below their warrant badges. The absence of collar badges in No. 2 Dress is unusual among non-Guards regiments.

_C1 Lance Corporal, Royal Military Police_

The red and blue peaked cap may now be replaced by a scarlet beret. The red and black brassard is worn when on duty; the chevron on the lower left sleeve indicates two and a half years’ impeccable service; and the crossed flags indicate a signaller. The new white plastic pistol belt for the Browning automatic has been introduced experimentally as a labour-saving feature.
C2 Company Sergeant Major, Royal Scots
Trews are in Hunting Stewart, No. 8. The blackcock’s feathers are worn in the Glengarry for parades. The red sash is worn by CSMs of infantry and dismounted corps when performing the duty of Orderly Officers, and by sergeants and staff sergeants when acting as Orderly Sergeant. The ’37-pattern belt is worn here. The badge worn below the rank crown on the left cuff indicates a qualified parachutist, but not a fully trained member of the airborne forces. The medals show that this NCO has seen service in Korea (the ‘Butcher’s Apron’ ribbon), Kenya during the Mau Mau campaign, and—from the clasps on his General Service Medal—at least two other post-war trouble-spots. The bronze oakleaf indicates a mention in despatches for distinguished service.

C3 Staff Sergeant, King’s Troop Royal Horse Artillery, Winter Stable Dress
This NCO serving (perhaps for as long as ten years) with this elite ceremonial and display unit wears a stiff-topped khaki SD cap reminiscent of the First World War, a heavy wool jersey, light khaki Bedford-cord breeches and black ‘butcher’ boots. Note white cannon between crown and chevrons. Patches: Royal Stewart (top left), Mackenzie (right) and Leslie tartans.

D1 Captain, Women’s Royal Army Corps, Service Dress
Members of the WRAC are generally attached to corps where their clerical and technical skills are most useful—Royal Corps of Signals, RAOC, RCT, etc.—and some serve with the RMP. The corps is indicated by a single corps collar badge (here, Royal Signals) worn high on the left breast. Only officers wear the gold rose collar badges illustrated. In uniform, black court shoes are worn, matching the gloves and shoulder-bag, and a dark green ‘tab’ replaces the conventional tie. Note green shoulder-strap piping.

D2 Lieutenant, King’s Regiment, Summer Barrack Dress
The unusual side hat, without buttons, peak or flaps as such, recalls that of the 4th/7th Royal Dragoon Guards. Officers of this regiment wear a light blue-grey shirt reminiscent of old Indian Army issue, a memento of Indian service. Officers in many regiments wear brass shoulder titles with shirt-sleeve order and jerseys; soldiers frequently do not. The stable belt, worn by most units, is said to originate in the spare girth carried round the waist by cavalry troopers of a bygone age. This officer wears the new Barrack Dress trousers and traditional ‘veldschoen’.

D3 Lieutenant, Queen Alexandra’s Royal Army Nursing Corps, No. 2 Dress

Similar in design but differing in colour from the WRAC uniform, this costume has red-piped shoulder straps. Officers wear collar badges; NCOs wear dark grey stripes on red backing. In temperate zone grey ward dress, officers wear the traditional red cape and red cuffs; in white tropical ward dress, red shoulder straps only.

E1 Lieutenant Pilot, Army Air Corps, Flying Clothing

Apart from liaison and casualty evacuation, AAC helicopters and light fixed-wing aircraft serve as military observation posts and in ground-support roles with anti-tank guided weapons. The flying clothing is conventional, but note ID disc clipped to breast. ‘Flak jackets’ are issued, but it is rumoured that in view of the danger of ground fire AAC crews prefer to sit on them!

E2 Radio Operator, Light Infantry, Temperate DPM Combat Dress
In practice the radio operator is normally a private, but we have shown here the dark-green on maize-yellow rank chevron worn in the Light Infantry. The Sterling SMG is carried, as the SLR is too bulky for a man burdened by a radio. The DPM combat cap is not worn much by infantry units, who generally prefer to retain ‘tribal’ headgear.

E3 Corporal, 2nd Royal Tank Regiment, Combat Dress
Although issued with DPM Combat Dress, the RTR prefer the black coverall originally issued for servicing duties; it is peculiar to the RTR, other armoured regiments wearing Olive Drab coveralls. Regimental identity is indicated by coloured shoulder strap slides and cravats; here the yellow, red, brown, green slide and yellow cravat identify 2nd RTR. The infantry are nowadays entirely equipped with ’58-pattern webbing in temperate areas and ’44-pattern in the tropics, but in other arms the old ’37-pattern can still be found, as here—note the RTR regimental feature of black webbing.

F1 Gurkha Rifleman, Olive Drab Tropical Combat Dress
The scarlet hat-band identifies the 2nd Gurkha Rifles. The ’44-pattern webbing is suitable for jungle service as it absorbs little moisture. The Armalite carbine, short and light, is suitable for the cramped environment and short combat ranges of such operations.

F2 Infantryman, Tropical DPM Combat Dress (No. 9 Dress)
This light uniform, in the same DPM pattern as for temperate zones but with a shirt-jacket which can be worn inside or over the trousers, is currently replacing the Olive Drab issue worn by figure F1. The bush-hat is of the same design as that of the previous uniform. This soldier carries the General Purpose Machine Gun (GPMG, ‘Jimpy’ to the troops), the belt-fed replacement of the famous Bren LMG; in its light role, as here, it has a folding bipod, but it can be tripod-mounted for sustained fire.

F3 Private, Royal Anglians, Arctic Combat Dress
Part of the British Army is equipped, trained and constantly ready to operate in support of the Norwegian Army on NATO’s northern flank in the Arctic Circle. The white windproof smock and trousers and Canadian ‘mukluks’ are worn over DPM cold-weather dress with quilted thermal liner and cold-weather boots. The snow mittens have sheepskin pads on the back so that the wearer can remove the inevitable ‘dew drop’ from the nose without removing the glove and risking frostbite! The pack is the Bergen Rucksack. Goggles to prevent snow-blindness are issued, and weapons are camouflaged with white tape.

G1 Soldier in infantry role, Northern Ireland Riot Gear
The infantry are not the only corps to serve in this role; artillerymen, cavalrymen, engineers and other corps have all been exposed to this ordeal. The new ‘Combat Helmet Northern Ireland’ illustrated was developed at great speed; the visor is acid-proof, and the wide chinstrap offers better protection from other hazards. Body armour is essential; the inevitable lack of mobility is a price worth paying when soldiers are required to stand steady under a hail of missiles from the mob.

Private, Royal Corps of Transport on security duty in Northern Ireland. The strain placed on the Army's manpower by the requirements of this province has resulted in many units apart from combat infantry serving in the security forces in Ulster. The Fragmentation Vest is seen here in its old configuration; non-slip pads have now been fitted to the shoulders and the pockets have been moved down. The SLR is seen here with a night-sight. (Soldier Magazine)
G2 Ammunition Technician, RAOC, EOD Suit Mk 2
The Explosive Ordnance Disposal suit was rapidly developed due to the need to protect these highly trained specialists. The helmet has a heavy plastic visor and built-in radio communications.

G3 Private, Royal Regiment of Fusiliers, Northern Ireland
In summer the lightweight trousers illustrated are worn with shirt-sleeve order, in place of the heavier DPM suit. This concession to comfort is largely negated by the constant need to wear the fragmentation vest, recently improved by adding non-slip pads to the shoulders, to prevent the rifle-butt slipping off the smooth nylon. The respirator case is worn on the belt, and he carries the riot gun which fires ‘baton rounds’. The distinctive fusilier headgear is rarely worn nowadays; most soldiers, especially patrols in rural areas, go bareheaded to avoid recognition by terrorist observation posts.

H1 Regimental Sergeant Major, The Gordon Highlanders, No. 2 Dress (Parade Order)
The Sam Browne belt is the symbol of appointment of this Warrant Officer 1st Class. The kilt is of ‘Gordon’ tartan—the military tartan devised for the Black Watch but with a yellow overstripe. White parade spats are worn here.

H2 Private, Parachute Regiment, Battle Jumping Order
He wears a post-war development of the cherished Denison Smock, with ribbed woollen cuffs and a camouflage pattern peculiar to airborne forces. The camouflage-net face veil is worn as a cravat. The parachutist’s helmet illustrated is soon to be replaced by a glass-reinforced plastic model. The popular lightweight trousers are worn with short puttees. The main parachute is worn on the back, the reserve on the chest; below this is his fighting equipment in a container. His weapon is carried in a container in the crook of the right arm, and is lowered to hang on a strap during the jump.

H3 Possible Service Dress for the 1980s
For some time studies have been carried out on a parade uniform to replace No. 1 and No. 2 Dress, involving one basic design of hat, jacket and trousers onto which individual regiments can put their ‘tribal items’ such as facing colours, chevron and badge backings, collar, cap and shoulder badges, hat bands, epaulettes, belts, buttons and gloves. This figure shows a possible future configuration for a sergeant of the Light Infantry. The unmatched jacket and trousers would ease provision of uniform and would achieve economies. The regimental facings are worn on the hat band and on detachable shoulder-boards, which latter bear black bugle-horns over ‘LI’. How the Guards, the Irish and the Scottish regiments would be accommodated in this new system has yet to be decided. Surprisingly enough, surveys of soldiers’ opinions on possible new uniforms have revealed little support for the re-introduction of the traditional red coat of the British soldier. Patches: l. t.o.r., Douglas, Cameron of Erracht, and MacDuff tartans.
