

Effects

A deck of card is ribbon spread, and the spec is asked to choose one of the card. You then reveal the card to the spec, and tear of the top-left corner of the card, of which you hand to the spec. As for the torned card, you simply lose it back into the deck of card. Return the deck of cards into it's case, and walk up to a curtain-covered window. After a flourish move, you open the curtain to reveal that a torned card is being stucked there on it's front. You move forward to turn over the card, only to be recognize as the same card previously. You ask the spec to match the corner with the one stuck there. But when the spec tries, he/she realizes that the card is actually behind the window pane. You then take the corner from the spec, mumble something magical, and proceed to stick it to the window pane. The spec examines it again, only to find the corner stuck BEHIND the window pane too.

Perparation

Before the performance, choose a card and tear of it's corner(Top left). Stick it on the outside of the window pane you are going to use. As for the torned corner, stick a thin metal behind it, then apply the slightest wax/gum to the edges of the corner, and stick it behind the card.(Position it in such a way where if the corner is being moved diagonally, the torned edges will fit the edges of the card)

Come back to the other side of the window, take another card(doesnt matter), tear of a corner of the opposite side(Top right). Flip it over revealing the back and stick it onto the window pane, hiding the card behind it. Finally, cover the card with the curtains or anything else.

Take another deck of cards, and place the exact same card as the first card. Keep a piece of magnet which is small enough to be concealed within your fingers.

Method

To start, take out the deck of cards and ribbon spread it. Ask the spec to point to one of the card, and slightly pulling it out above the rest. Now, square up the deck, making sure that the chosen card is still protruding from the others. Now, pretend to cut the deck to the spec's card. Instead, hold a firm grip on the first card(pre-defined), and when you pretend to move the top portion, allow the first card to slid down on top of the spec's chosen card. Immediately after performing the false cut, square up the cards again, including the spec's card, and at the same time, take up the first card. Perform this quick and fluently, and it would seem like you have just perform a cut to the chosen card and picked it up.

Show the spec the card, and tear of the corner AS IDENTICAL as the one you've just torn. Give the corner to the spec, and return the torned card to the deck, and into the case.

While holding the case, walk up to the covered card. Pretend to make a whatever-cool-looking move, and while explaining that the torned card has just penetrated both card case and curtain/cover/whatever, open the curtain/cover/whatever to reveal a torned card with it's back facing both you and the spec. Now, here's a special and important move. With the spec standing to your RIGHT, move forward and reach out your RIGHT hand towards the card, pretend to flip the card over, but instead palm the card and bring your right hand casually back to your sides. Misdirect the spec by asking him/her if it's his/her card. Next, have the spec match the torned corner with the card. The spec will eventually realized that the card is actually BEHIND the window, instead of noticing the different jagged edges. While the spec is still being stunned, take out the magnet from your left pocket and conceal it in your left hand's fingers. Now, take the corner from the spec with your right hand. Pretend to transfer it to your left. Hold your fingers closely together as you move your hand towards the card. On contact with the window pane, make a pushing motion from the center of the card to it's corner(Diagonal movement). By doing this, you're actually using the magnet to pull the hidden corner(behind the window) to move into position. The little wax that you used will not be powerful enough to stop the magnet from moving the corner piece. Once you're done, immediately remove your hand from the window. The remaining wax that was on the edges will allow the corner to continue being stuck to window pane after the magnet has been removed. Have the spec inspect the card, and while he/she is doing it, pocket both corner and magnet.
